14 Nowe they alledge alſo theſe places, wherein the faithful do boldlie offer their righteouſnes to the iudgmẽt of God to be examined, & require that ſentence bee giuen of them according to it. Of which ſort are theſe: Iudge me O Lorde according to my righteouſneſſe, & according to my innocencie, which are in me. Againe, Heare my righteouſneſſe, O God: Thou haſt proued my heart, & haſt viſited it in the night, & ther was no wickedneſſe found in me. Againe, The Lorde ſhall render to mee according to my righteouſnes, and he ſhall recompence me according to the cleanneſſe of my hands. Becauſe I haue kept the wayes of the Lord, & haue not wickedly departed from my God. And I ſhal be vnſpotted, & ſhall keepe me from my iniquity. Againe, Iudge me, Lord, becauſe I haue walked in mine innocencie. I haue not ſit with lying men, I will not enter in with them that do wicked things. Deſtroy not my ſoul with the vngodly, my life with mẽ of bloud in whoſe hands are iniquities: whoſe right hãd is filled with gifts. But I haue walked innocently. I haue aboue ſpokẽ of the affiance which the holy ones do ſeem ſimplie to take to thẽſelues of works. As for theſe teſtimonies that we haue here alleaged, they ſhall not much accombre vs if they be vnderſtanded according to their compaſſe, or (as they cõmonly call it) their circumſtãce. Now the ſame is double. For neither would they haue them to be wholy examined that they ſhould be either condẽned or acquited according to ỹ continual courſe of their whole life: but they bring into iudgmẽt a ſpeciall cauſe to be debated. Neither do they claim to themſelues righteouſnes in reſpect of the perfection of God, but by compariſon of naughty & wicked men. Firſt when the iuſtifying of man is entreated of, it is not onely required that he haue a good cauſe in ſome particular matter, but a certain perpetuall agreement of righteouſnes in his whole life. But the holy ones, when they cal vpon the iudgement of God to approue their innocencie, do not offer themſelues free from al guiltines & in euery behalfe faultleſſe: but verily when they haue faſtened their affiance of ſaluation in his goodnes only, yet truſting that he is the reuenger of the pore afflicted againſt right & equity, they commend to him the cauſe wherin the innocẽt are oppreſſed. But when they ſet their aduerſaries with them before the iudgement ſeat of God, they boaſt not of ſuch an innocẽcy as ſhal anſwere to the pureneſ of God if it be ſeuerely ſearched, but becauſe in compariſon of the malice, obſtinacie, ſuttlety & wickednes of their aduerſaries, they knowe that their plainneſſe, righteouſnes, ſimplicity, & cleannes is knowne & pleaſing to God: they feare not to call vpon him to be iudge betweene them ſelues & them. So when Dauid ſaid to Saul: The Lord render to euery man according to his righteouſnes & truth: he meant not that the Lorde ſhould examine by himſelfe and reward euery man according to his deſeruings, but he tooke the Lord to witnesse, how great his innocencie was in comparison of the wickednes of Saul. And Paul himself, when he boasteth with this glorying that he hath a good witnes of conscience, that he hath trauailed with simplicitie and vprightnesse in the Church of God, meaneth not that hee standeth vpon such glorying before God, but being compelled with the slanders of the wicked, he defendeth his faithful and honest dealing, which hee knewe to be pleasing to the mercifull kindnesse of God, against all euill speaking of men whatsoeuer it be. For wee see what hee sayeth in another place, that he knoweth no euill by himselfe, but that hee is not thereby iustified, namely because he knewe that the iudgement of God far surmounteth the bleareied sight of men. Howsoeuer therefore the godly doe defend their innocencie against the hypocrisie of the vngodly, by the witnessing & iudgement of God: yet when they haue to do with God alone, they all crie out with one mouth: If thou marke iniquitie, Lord, Lord who shall abide it? Enter not into iudgement with thy seruants: because euery one that liueth shall not be iustified in thy sight: and distrusting their owne workes, they gladly sing, Thy goodnesse is better than life.

15 There are also other places not vnlike to these before, in which a man may yet tary. Salomon saith, that he which walketh in his vprightnesse, is righteous. Againe, That in the path of righteousnesse is life, and that in the same is not death. After which manner Ezechiel reporteth that he shall liue life that doth iudgement and righteousnes. None of these doe we either deny or darken. But let there come foorth one of the sonnes of Adam with such an vprightnesse. If there be none, either they must perish at the sight of God, or flee to the sanctuarie of mercie. Neither doe we in the meane time deny but that to the faithfull their vprightnes, though it be but halfe & vnperfect, is a step towarde immortalitie. But whence commeth that but because whom the Lord hath taken into the couenant of grace, he searcheth not their works according to their deseruings, but kisseth them with fatherly kindnesse? Wherby we do not only vnderstand that which the schoolemen doe teach, that workes haue their value of the accepting grace. For they meane that works which are otherwise insufficient to purchase righteousnes by the couenant of the lawe, are by the accepting of God auaunced to the value of equalitie. But I say that they being defiled both with other trespassings & with their owne spottes, are of no other value at all, then insomuch as the Lord tenderlie granteth pardon to both: that is to say, giueth free righteousnes to man. Neither are here those prayers of the Apostle seasonablie thrust in place, where he wisheth so great perfectiō to the faithfull, that they may be faultles & vnblamable in the day of the Lord, These wordes in deede the Celestines did in old time turmoile, to affirme a perfection of righteousnes in this life. But, which we thinke to be sufficient, wee answere briefly after Augustine, that all the godlie ought in deede to endeuour toward this marke, that they may one day appeare spotles and faultles before the face of God: but because the best and most excellent manner of this life is nothing but a going forwarde, wee shall then and not till then attaine to this marke, when being vnclothed of this flesh of sinne we shall fully cleaue to the Lorde. Yet will I not stiffelie striue with him which will

The xviii. Chapter.

That of the reward, the righteouſneſſe of workes is ill gathered.

NOwe let vs paſſe ouer to thoſe ſayings which affirme, that God will render to euery man according to his workes: of which ſort are theſe. Euery man ſhall beare away that which he hath done in the bodie, either good or euill. Glorie and honour to him that worketh good: trouble and diſtreſſe vpon euery ſoule of him that worketh euill. And they which haue done good things, ſhall goe into the reſurrection of life: they which haue done euill, into the reſurrection of iudgement. Come yee bleſſed of my father: I haue hungred, and yee gaue mee meate: I haue thirſted, and yee gaue me drinke, &c. And with them let vs alſo ioyne theſe ſayings, which cal eternall life the reward of workes. Of which ſort are theſe. The rendring of ỹ hands of a man ſhalbe reſtored to him. He that feareth the commandement, ſhall be rewarded. Be glad and reioyce, behold, your reward is plentiful in heauen. Euery man ſhall receiue reward according to his labor. Where it is ſaid that God ſhal render to euery man according to his workes, the ſame is eaſily aſſoyled. For that maner of ſpeaking doeth rather ſhewe the order of following, than the cauſe. But it is out of dout, that the Lorde doeth accompliſh our ſaluation by theſe degrees of his mercie, when thoſe whome hee hath choſen hee calleth to him: thoſe whome hee hath called, he iuſtifieth: thoſe whome he hath iuſtified, he glorifieth. Although therfore he do by his only mercie receiue them ỹ be his into life, yet becauſe he bringeth them into the poſſeſſion thereof by the race of good works, that he may fulfill his worke in them by ſuch order as he hath appointed: it is no marueile if it bee ſaid that they be crowned according to their works, by which without doubt they are prepared to receiue the crowne of immortalitie. Yea and after this maner it is fitly ſaide that they worke their owne ſaluation, when in applying themſelues to good workes, they practiſe themſelues towarde eternall life: namely as in another place they are commaunded to worke the meate which periſheth not, when by beleeuing in Chriſt they get to thẽſelues life: and yet it is by and by afterward added: Which the ſonne of man ſhall giue you. Whereby appeareth ỹ the worde of Working is not ſet as contrarie to grace, but is referred to endeuour: and therefore it followeth not, ỹ either ỹ faithful are themſelues authors of their own ſaluation, or that the ſame proceedeth from their works. How then? So ſoone as they are taken into the fellowſhip of Chriſt, by the knowledge of the Goſpel, and the enlightening of the holy Ghoſt, eternall life is begon in them. Now the ſame good worke which God hath begon in them, muſt alſo bee made perfect vntill the day of the Lord Ieſu. And it is made perfect, when reſembling the heauenly father in righteouſnes and holines, they proue themſelues to bee his children

2 There is no cause why we should of the name of rewarde gather an argument that our workes are the cause of saluation. First let this be determined in our hearts, that the kingdome of heauen is not a reward of seruants, but an inheritance of children, which they only shall enioy, that are adopted of the Lord to be his children: & for no other cause, but for this adoptiō. For, the sonne of the bondwoman shal not be heire, but the sonne of the free woman. And in the very same places, in which the holy Ghost promiseth to workes eternal glorie for rewarde, in expressing the inheritance by name, he sheweth that it commeth frō else where. So Christ rehearseth works, which he recompenseth with the rewarding of heauen, when hee calleth the elect to the possession therof: but he therwithall adioyneth that it must be possessed by right of inheritance. So Paul biddeth seruants, which doe their dutie faithfully, to hope for reward of the Lord: but he addeth, of inheritance. We see how they do as it were by expresse words prouide that we impute not eternal blessednes to works, but to the adoption of God. Why therefore doe they therewithal together make mention of workes? This question shalbe made plaine with one example of Scripture. Before the birth of Isaac, there was promised to Abraham a seed in which al the nations of the earth should be blessed: and a multiplying of his seede, which should match the starres of the skie, & the sands of the sea, & other like. In many yeres afterward, Abraham, as he was commanded by the oracle, prepared himselfe to offer vp his sonne in sacrifice. When hee had performed this obedience, hee receiued a promise. I haue sworne by my selfe (saith the Lorde) because thou hast done this thing, & hast not spared thine owne onely begotten sonne, I will blesse thee & multiply thy seede as the starres of the skie, and the sands of the sea: thy seede shal possesse the gates of their enemies, & al the nations of ỹ earth shalbe blessed in thy seede, because thou hast obeyed my voice. What heare wee? Hath Abraham by his obedience deserued the blessing, the promise whereof he had receiued before that the commandement was giuen? Here verily we haue it without circumstances shewed, that the Lorde rewardeth the works of the faithfull with those benefites which hee had alreadie giuen them before that the works were thought of, hauing yet no cause why hee should do good to them but his owne mercie.

The rewarding of workes with saluation doth not argue those workes to be the cause of that saluation, wherewith they are rewarded, more than Abrahams obedience in offering his sonne a cause of that blessing whereof hee had the promise before he obeyed.

3 Yet doth the Lord not deceiue nor mock vs when he saith that he rendreth for reward to workes the same thing which he had before works frely giuen. For, because he wil haue vs to be exercised with good works, to thinke vpon the deliuery or enioying (as I may so call it) of these things which he hath promised, and to runne through them to the blessed hope set before vs in heauen, the fruite of the promises is also rightly assigned to them, to the ripenesse wherof they do not bring vs. The Apostle very fitly expressed both these points, when he said that the Colossians apply themselues to the duties of charitie, for the hope which is laide vp for them in heauen, of which they had before heard by the word of the true speaking Gospel. For when he saieth that they knewe by the Gospel, that there was hope layde vp for them in heauē, he declareth that the same is by Christ only, not vnderpropped with any workes. Wherewith accordeth that saying of Peter, that the godly VVe are not mocked when that is promised to our workes wherein wee are interessed by faith alone.

Col. 1. 4.

1.Peter.1.5 godly are kept by the power of God, through faith, vnto the saluation which is readie to be manifestly shewed at the time appointed for it. When he saith ỳthey labour for it, he signifieth that the faithful must runne all the time of their life, that they may attaine to it. But least we should thinke that the reward which the Lord promiseth vs, is reduced to the measure of merite, he did put foorth a parable, in which he made himself a housholder, which sent Math.12.1. all them that he met, to the trimming of his vineyard, som at the first houre of the day, some at the second, some at the thirde, yea & some also at the 11. At euening he payde to euery one equall wages. The exposition of which parable, that same old writer whatsoeuer he was, whose booke is carried abroad vnder the name of Ambrose of the calling of the Gentiles, hath briefly & truely set our. I wil vse rather his words than mine own. The Lord (saith hee) by the rule of this comparison hath stablished the diuersitie of manyfold calling, belonging to one grace: where without doubt they which being let into the vineyard at the 11. houre, are made equall with them that Lib.1.cap.3. had wrought the whole day, do represent the estate of them, whome for the aduauncing of the excellencie of grace, the tender kindnesse of the Lorde hath rewarded at the waning of the day, & at the ending of their life: not paying wages for their labor, but pouring out the riches of his goodnes vpõ them whom he hath chosen without works, that euen they also which haue swet in great labour, & haue receiued no more than the last, may vnderstãd that they haue receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of workes. Last of all, this also is worthie to be noted in these places, where eternall life is called the rewarde of workes, that it is not simply taken for the communicating which wee haue with God to blessed immortalitie, when hee embraceth vs with fatherly good wil in Christ: but for the possessing or enioying (as they cal it) of blessednes, as also the very wordes of Christ doe sounde, In time to Mat.10.30 come life euerlasting. And in another place, Come & possesse the kingdome, Math.25.34. &c. After this manner Paul calleth adoption, the reuealing of the adoption which shalbe made in the resurrection: & afterwarde expoundeth it the re- Rom.8.18. demption of our bodie. Otherwise as estranging from God is eternal death, so when man is receiued of God into fauour, that hee may enioy the cõmunicating of him & be made one with him, he is receiued from death to life: which is done by the beneficial meane of adoption only. And if, as they are wont, they stifly enforce the reward of workes, wee may turne against them 1.Pet.1.9. that saying of Peter, that eternall life is the reward of faith.

4 Therefore let vs not thinke, that the holy Ghost doth with such promise set forth the worthines of our workes, as if they deserued such reward, For the Scripture leaueth nothing to vs, whereof wee may be aduaunced in the sight of god. But rather it wholly endeuoureth to beat down our arrogancie, to humble vs, to throw vs downe, & altogether to breake vs in peeces. But our weakenesse is so succoured, which otherwise woulde by and by slippe & fall downe, vnlesse it did susteine it selfe with this expectation, and mitigate her tedious grieues with comfort. First how harde it is for a man to forsake and deny not only al his things, but also himself, let euery man consider for himself. And yet with this introduction Christ traineth his scholers, that is, al the godly. Then throughout all their life he so instructeth them vnder the discipline of ỹ crosse, that they may not set their heart either to the desire or confidence of present good things. Briefely hee so handleth them for the most part, that which way soeuer they turne their eies throughout the whole wideneſſe of the world, they haue on euery side nothing but desperation present before them: so that Paul saith, that we are more miserable than all men if our hope be only in this world. That they should not faint in these so great distresses, the Lord is present with them, which putteth thē in mind to lift vp their head higher, to cast their eies further, that they find with him the blessednesse which they see not in the world. This blessednes he calleth, reward, wages, recompence, not weying the merit of workes, but signifying that it is a recompensing to their troubles, sufferings, slanders, &c. Wherefore nothing withstandeth, but that we may after the example of the Scripture, call eternall life a rewarding, because in it the Lorde receiueth his frō labors into rest, from affliction into prosperous and happie state, from sorow into gladnes, from pouertie into flowing wealth, from shame into glorie, and changeth al the euils which they haue suffered for greater good things. So it shal also be no inconuenience, if we think holinesse of life to be a way, not which openeth an entrie into the glorie of the heauenly kingdom, but wherby the elect are led of their God into the disclosing of it: forasmuch as this is his good wil to glorifie them whome he hath sanctified. Onely let vs not imagine a correlation of merit & reward, wherein the Sophisters do fondly sticke fast, because they consider not this end which wee set forth. But how vnorderly is it, when the Lord calleth vs to one ende, for vs to looke to another? Nothing is more euident, than that reward is promised to good works, to relieue the weakneſſe of our flesh with some comfort, not to puffe vp our mindes with glorie. Whosoeuer therefore doeth thereby gather the merite of workes, or doeth in one balance wey worke with reward, he erreth farre from the right marke of God.

Rom.8.30.

5 Wherefore when the Scripture saith that God the iust judge wil one day render to his a crowne of righteousnes, I doe not onely take exception with Augustine, and saye: To whome shoulde he being a iust iudge, render a crowne, if he had not being a mercifull father giuen grace? and how shoulde there be righteousnes, vnleſſe grace went before which iustifieth the vnrighteous? Howe shoulde these due thinges bee rendered, vnleſſe these vndue things were first giuen? But also I adde another thing. How should he impute righteousnes to our works, vnles his tēder mercifulnes did hide the vnrighteousneſſe that is in them? Howe should he iudge them worthie of reward, vnles he did by immeasurable bountifulnes take away that which is worthie of punishment? For he is wont to call eternall life, grace: becauſe it is rendered to the free giftes of God when it is repaied to workes. But the Scripture doth further humble vs, and therewithall raiſe vs vp. For beſides this that it forbiddeth vs to glorie in workes, becauſe they are the free giftes of God, it therewithall teacheth that they are alwaies defiled with some dregs, that they cannot satisfie GOD, if they bee examined by the rule of his iudgement: but least our courage should faint, it teacheth that they please by only pardon. But although Augustine speaketh somewhat otherwise than wee doe: yet that he doth not so disagree in the matter, shall appeare by his his wordes in his thirde booke to Boniface. Where when he had compared two men together, the one of a life euen miraculously holy and perfect, the other honest in deede and of vncorrupt maners, but not so perfect but that much wanteth in him: at the last he concludeth thus. Euen this man which in maners seemeth much inferiour, by reason of the true faith in God whereof he liueth and according to which he accuseth himselfe in all his offences, in all his good workes praiseth God, giuing to himselfe the shame, and to him glorie, and taking from himself both the pardon of sinnes, and the loue of weldoings, when he is to be deliuered out of this life, hee passeth into the fellowship of Christ. Wherefore, but because of faith? Which although it saue no man without workes, (for it is it, which worketh by loue, not a reprobate faith) yet by it also sinnes are released, because the righteous man liueth of faith: but without it euen the same which seeme good workes are turned into sinnes. Here verily he doth plainly confesse that which we so much trauel to proue, that the righteousnesse of good works hangeth hereupon, that they are by pardon allowed of God.

By seruing God we doe eternallie enrich our selues, not that our seruice is worthy as much as once to be regarded, but that his mercie suffereth not his seruants to loose their labors.

6 A verie neere sense to the places aboue recited, haue these: Make to your selues frindes of the Mammon of wickednes, that when you shal faile, they may receiue you into euerlasting tabernacles. Cõmaund the rich men of this world not to be proudly minded, nor to trust in vncertaine richesse but in the liuing God, to doe well, to become rich in good workes, to lay vp in store for themselues a good foundation against the time to come, that they may obtaine eternal life. For good works are compared to the richesse, which wee may enioy in the blessednes of eternal life. I aunswere, that wee shal neuer come to the true vnderstanding of them, vnlesse wee turne our eies to the marke wherunto the holy ghost directeth his words. If it be true which Christ saith that our mind abideth there where our treasure is, as the children of the world are wont to bee earnestly bent to the getting of those things which serue for the delights of this present life: so ỹ faithful must look fith they haue learned that this life shal by & by vanish away like a dreame, that they send those things which they would enioy, thither where they shal haue perfect life. Wee must therefore doe as they doe which purpose to remoue into any place, where they haue chosen to rest their whole life. They send their goods before, and doe not miscontentedly want them for a time because they thinke thẽselues so much more happie, how much more goods they haue where they shal tarie long. If we beleeue that heauen is our countrey, it behoueth vs rather to send away our richesse thither than to keepe them here where we must loose them with sudden remouing But how shall we send them thither? If we communicate to the necessities of the poore: to whome whatsoeuer is giuen, the Lorde accounteth it giuen to himselfe. Whereupon commeth that notable promise, Hee that giueth to the poore, lendeth for gaine to the Lord. Againe, hee that liberally soweth, shall liberally reape. For those things are deliuered into the hande of the Lorde to keep, which are bestowed vpon our brethren by the dutie of charitie. He, as he is a faithful keeper of that which is deliuered to him, wil one day restore it with plentifull gaine. Are then our dutifull doings of so great value with God, that they be as richesse laide vp in store for vs in his hand? Who shall feare so to say, when the scripture doth so oft & plainly witnesse it? But if any man will leap from the meere goodnes of God to the worthines of workes, he shalbe nothing holpen by these testimonies to the stablishing of his errour. For you can gather nothing rightly thereof but the meere inclination of Gods tendernes towarde vs: For as much as to encourage vs to well doing although the seruices which we do to him are not worthie of so much as his only looking vpon them, yet he suffreth none of them to be lost.

7 But they more enforce the words of the Apostle, which when he comforteth the Thessalonians in troubles, teacheth ỹ the same are sent to them, that they may bee accounted worthie of the kingdome of God, for which they suffer. For (saith he) it is righteous with God, to render trouble to them that trouble you: but to you, rest with vs when the Lord Iesus shalbe shewed from heauen. But the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues saith, God is not vnrighteous, that hee shoulde forget your worke, and the loue which you haue shewed in his name, for that you haue ministred to the saints. To the first place I answere, that there is no worthines of merites spoken of: but because God the father willeth that we whome he hath chosen to be his children, should be made like to Christ his first begotten sonne: as it behooued that he should first suffer, and then enter into the glorie appointed for him: so must we also by many tribulations enter into the kingdome of heauen. Therefore when we suffer tribulations for the name of Christ, there are as it were certaine marks printed vpō vs, wherwith God vseth to marke ỹ sheepe of his flocke. After this manner therefore wee are accounted worthie of the kingdome of God, because we beare in our body the marks of our Lord and master which are the signes of the children of God. To this purpose make these sayings. That we beare about in our body the mortification of Iesus Christ that his life may be shewed in vs. That we be fashioned like to his sufferings, that we may come to the likenes of his resurrection from the deade. The reason which is adioyned serueth not to prooue any worthines, but to confirme the hope of the kingdō of God: as if he had said, As it agreeth with the iust iudgement of God, to take vengeance of your enemies for the vexations ỹ they haue done to you: so agreeth it also to giue to you release & rest frō vexations. The other place, which teacheth ỹ it so becōmeth the righteousnes of God not to forget the obediences of them that be his, that it declareth it to be in a maner vnrighteous if he should forget them, hath this meaning: God to quicken our slouthfulnes, hath giuen vs assurance that the labour shal not be vaine which we shall take for his glorie. Let vs alway remember ỹ this promise, as all other should bring vs no profit, vnlesse the free couenant of mercie went before, wherupon the whole assurednes of our saluation should rest. But standing vpon that couenant, wee ought assuredly to trust, there shall also not want reward of the liberalitie of God to our works howsoeuer they be vnworthie. The Apostle to confirm vs in that expectatiō, affirmeth ỹ God is not vnrighteous, but wil stand to his promise once made. Therfore this righteousnes is rather referred to the trueth of gods promise, than to his iustice of rendring due. According to which meaning there is a notable saying of Augustine, which as the holy man sticketh not to rehearse often as notable, so I thinke it not vnworthie that we shoulde continually

This doctrine not shaken by the Apostle, either vvhē he teacheth that afflictions are sent that they vvhich are afflicted may be accounted vvorthie of a kingdom, nor vvhen he denieth that God is so vnrighteous to forget the good vve do for his sake.

1. Cor. 13.
Col. 3. 14.

8 There are also alledged these sayings of Paul. If I haue all faith, so that I remoue mountains out of their place, but haue not charitie, I am nothing. Againe, Nowe there remaine hope, faith and charitie, but the greatest among these is charitie. Againe, Aboue all things haue charitie, which is the bond of perfection. By the first two places our Pharisees affirme that we are rather iustified by charitie than by faith, namely by the cheefer vertue, as they say. But this fonde argument is easily wiped away. For we haue in another place alreadie declared, that those things which are spoken in the first place pertaine nothing to true faith. The other place we also expounde of true faith, than which he saith that Charitie is greater: not that it is more meritorious, but because it is more fruitful, because it extendeth further, because it serueth mo, because it remaineth alway in force, whereas the vse of faith continueth but for a time. If we haue regard to excellencie, the loue of God should worthily haue the cheef place, of which Paul here speaketh not. For he enforceth this thing only, that wee should with mutuall charitie edifie one another in the Lorde, but let vs imagine that charitie doeth euery where excell faith: yet what man of sounde iudgement, yea, or of sounde braine, will gather thereof that it doeth more iustifie? The power of iustifying which faith hath, consisteth not in the worthinesse of the worke. Our iustification standeth vppon the onely mercie of God and the deseruing of Christ, which iustification when faith taketh holde of it, is saide to iustifie. Nowe if you aske your aduersaries in what sense they assigne iustification to charitie, they will aunswere that because it is a duetifull doing acceptable to God, therefore by the deseruing thereof righteousnesse is imputed to vs by the acceptation of the goodnes of God. Here you see how well the argument proceedeth. Wee say that faith iustifieth, not because by the worthinesse of it selfe it deserueth righteousnesse to vs, but because it is an instrument by which wee freely obteine the righteousnesse of Christ. These men, omitting the mercy of God, & passing ouer Christ, (where the summe of righteousnesse standeth) do affirme that wee are iustified by the benefite of charitie because it excelleth aboue faith: euen as if a man shoulde reason that a king is fitter to make a shooe than is a shooemaker, because hee is an infinite way more excellent. This onely argument is a plaine example that all the Sorbonicall schooles doe not so much as tast with the vttermost part of their lippes what the iustification of faith is. But if any wrangler doe yet carpe and aske, why in so small distance of place wee take the name of faith in Paul so diuersely: I haue a weightie cause of this exposition. For sith those gifties which Paul rehearseth are after a certaine manner vnder faith and hope, because they pertain to ỹ knowledge of god, he comprehendeth them all by way of recapitulation vnder the name of faith & hope: as if he should say both prophecie, and tongues, and the grace and knowledge of interpretation tende to this marke to leade vs to the knowledge of God. And wee know God in this life none otherwise but by hope & faith. Therefore when I name faith and hope, I comprehend all these thinges together. And so there remaine these three Hope, Faith, Charity: that is to say, how great diuersitie of giftes soeuer there be, they are all referred to these. Among these the chiefe is charity, &c. Out of the third place they gather, If Charitie be the bonde of perfection, then it is also the bonde of righteousnesse which is nothing else but perfection. First, to speake nothing how Paul there calleth perfection, when the members of the Church wel set in order do cleaue together, and to grant that we are by charity made perfect before God: yet what new thing bring they foorth? For I will alwaie on the contrarie side take exception and say that we neuer come to this perfection vnlesse we fulfill al the partes of charitie, and thereupon I will gather, that sith al men are most far from the fulfilling of charity, therefore all hope of perfection is cut off from them.

9 I will not goe through al the testimonies which at this day the foolish Sorboniستes rashly snatch out of the scriptures, as they first come to hand, and do throw them against vs. For, some of them are so worthy to be laughed at, that I my selfe also can not rehearse them, vnlesse I would worthily be counted fonde. Therefore I will make an end, when I shal haue declared the saying of Christ, wherewith they maruellously please themselues. For, to the lawyer which asked him what was necessarie to saluation, he answered: if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commaundementes. What would we more (say they) when we are commaunded by the author of grace himselfe to get the kingdome of God by the keeping of his commaundements? As though, forsooth it were not certain, that Christ tempered his answeres to them with whom he sawe that he had to doe. Here a doctor of the lawe asketh of the meane to obtaine blessednesse, and not that only, but with doing of what thing men may attaine vnto it. Both the person of him that spake and the question it selfe led the Lord so to answere. The Lawyer being filled with the persuasion of the righteousnes of the law, was blinde in confidence of workes. Againe, he sought nothing else but what were the workes of righteousnesse, by which saluation is gotten. Therefore he is worthily sent to the lawe, in which there is a perfect mirrour of righteousnesse. We also do with a loude voyce pronounce that the commaundementes must be kept, if life be sought in workes. And this doctrine is necessary to be knowen of Christiãs. For how should they flee to Christ if they did not acknowledge that they are fallẽ from the way of life into the headlong downfal of death? But how should they vnderstand how far they haue strayed from the waie of life, vnlesse they first vnderstande what is that way of life? For then they are taught that the sanctuarie to recouer saluation is in Christ, when they see howe great difference there is betweene their life and the righteousnesse of GOD which is contained in the keeping of the lawe. The summe is this, that if saluation be sought in workes, we must keepe the commaundementes by which we are instructed to perfect righteousnesse. But we must not sticke fast here, vnlesse we will faint in our midde course: for none of vs is able to keep the cõmandements. Sith therfore we are excluded from the righteousnesse of the lawe, we must of necessitie resort to another helpe, namely to the faith of Christ. Wherefore as here the Lorde calleth backe the doctour of the law whom he knew to swell with vaine confidence of works, to the law, wherby he may learne that he is a sinner subiect to the dreadfull iudgement of eternall death: so in other places, without making mētion of the law, he comforteth other that are already humbled with such knowledge, with promise of grace, as, Come to me al ye that labour and are loaden, and I will refresh you, and ye shal finde rest for your soules.

Neither is faith by it owne worthinesse of force to make vs righteous, nor good workes to iustifie because euil are to condemne.

10 At the last when they are weary with wresting the Scripture, they fall to subtleties and sophisticall argumentes. They cauill vpon this that faith is in some places called a worke, & therupon they gather that we do wrongfully set faith as contrarie to works. As though forsooth faith in that it is an obeying of the wil of God, doth with her own deseruing procure vnto vs righteousnesse, & not rather because by embracing the mercy of God, it sealeth in our heartes the righteousnesse of Christ offred to vs of it in the preaching of the Gospell. The readers shall pardon me if I doe not tarry vpon confuting of such follies, for they themselues without any assault of other, are sufficiently ouerthrowen with their owne feebleneſſe. But I will by the waie confute one obiection which seemeth to haue some shewe of reason, least it should trouble some that are not so wel practised. Sith cōmon reason teacheth that of contraries is all one rule, and all particular sinnes are imputed to vs for vnrighteousnesse, they say it is meete that to al particular good works be giuen the praise of righteousnesse. They do not satisfie me which answere, that the damnation of men properly proceedeth from onely vnbeliefe, not from particular sinnes. I do indeed agree to them, ỹ vnbeliefe is the fountaine and roote of al euils. For it is the first departing from God, after which do follow the particular trespassings against the law. But wheras they seeme to set one selfe same reason of good and euil workes in weying of righteousnesse or vnrighteousnesse, therin I am compelled to disagree from them. For the righteousnesse of workes is the perfect obedience of the lawe. Therfore thou canst not be righteous by workes, vnlesse thou do follow it as a streight line in the whole continuall course of thy life. From it so soone as thou hast swarued, thou art fallen into vnrighteousnesse Hereby appeareth that righteousnesse commeth not of one or a few workes, but of an vnswaruing & vnwearied obseruing of the will of God. But the rule of iudging vnrighteousnesse is most contrary. For he that hath committed fornication, or hath stollē, is by one offence guilty of death, because he hath offended against the maiestie of God. Therfore these our suttle arguers do stumble, for that they marke not this saying of Iames, that he which sinneth in one, is made guilty of all, because he that hath forbiddē to kill, hath also forbidden to steale, &c. Therefore it ought to seeme no absurditie, when we saie that death is the iust reward of euery sin, because they are euery one worthy of the iust displeasure & vengeance of God. But thou shalt reason foolishly, if on the contrary side thou gather ỹ by one good worke man may be reconciled to God, which with many sinnes deserueth his wrath.

The xix. Chapter.

Of Christian libertie.

The necessitye of handling the question that concerneth Christian libertie.

NOwe we must entreate of Christian libertie: the declaration whereof he must not omitte whose purpose is to comprehende in an abridgement the ſumme of the doctrine of the Goſpel. For it is a thing principally neceſſarie, and without the knowledge whereof conſcience dare in a maner enterpriſe nothing without doubting, they ſtumble and ſtart backe in many things, they alway ſtagger and tremble: but ſpecially it is an appendant of iuſtification, & auaileth not a litle to the vnderſtanding of the ſtrēgth therof. Yea they that earneſtly feare God, ſhal hereby receiue an incompatable fruite of that doctrine which the wicked and Lucianicall men doe pleaſantly taunt with their ſcoffes, becauſe in the ſpirituall darkneſſe wherewith they be taken, euery wanton railing is lawfull for them. Wherefore it ſhall nowe come foorth in fit ſeaſon: and it was profitable to differre to this place the plainer diſcourſing of it, (for we haue alreadie in diuerſe places lightly touched it) becauſe ſo ſoone as any mention is brought in of Chriſtian libertie, then either filthie luſts do boyle, or mad motions do riſe, vnleſſe theſe wanton wits be timely met withal, which do otherwiſe moſt naughtily corrupt the beſt things. For, ſome men by pretence of this libertie, ſhake off all obedience of God, and breake foorth into an vnbridled licentiouſneſſe: and ſome men diſdaine it, thinking that by it all moderation, order & choiſe of thinges is taken away. What ſhoulde wee here doe, being compaſſed in ſuch narrowe ſtraites? Shall wee bidde Chriſtian libertie farewell, and ſo cut off all fit occaſion for ſuch perils? But, as wee haue ſaide, vnleſſe that bee faſt holden, neither Chriſt, nor the trueth of the Goſpel, nor the inward peace of the ſoule is rightly knowen. Rather wee muſt endeuour that ſo neceſſarie a parte of doctrine be not ſuppreſſed, & yet that in the meane time thoſe fonde obiections may be mette with all which are wont to riſe thereupon.

The firſt part of Chriſtian libertie, the freedome from the bondage and tyrannie of the lawe.

2 Chriſtian libertie (as I thinke) conſiſteth in three partes. The firſt, that the conſciences of the faithfull, when the affiance of their iuſtification before God is to be ſought, may raiſe and aduaunce themſelues aboue the lawe, and forget the whole righteouſneſſe of the lawe. For ſith the lawe (as we haue alreadie in another place declared) leaueth no man righteous: either we are excluded from all hope of iuſtification, or wee muſt bee looſed from the lawe, and ſo that there be no regard at all had of works. For whoſo thinketh that he muſt bring ſomewhat beit neuer ſo litle of good workes to obtaine righteouſneſſe, he cannot appoint any ende or meaſure of them, but maketh himſelfe detter to the lawe. Therefore taking away all mention of the lawe, and laying aſide all thinking vpon workes, we muſt embrace the onely mercie of God, when wee entreat of iuſtification: and turning away our ſight from our ſelues, wee muſt beholde Chriſt alone. For there the queſtion is not howe wee bee righteous: but howe although wee be vnrighteous and vnworthie, wee bee taken for worthie. Of which thing if conſciences will attaine any certeintie, they muſt giue no place to the lawe. Neither can any man hereby gather that the lawe is ſuperfluous to the faithfull, whome it doeth not therefore ceaſe to teach, and exhorte, and pricke forwarde to goodneſſe, although before the iudgement ſeate of GOD it hath no place in their conſciences. For theſe two thinges, as they are moſt diuerſe, ſo muſt they be well and diligently diſtinguiſhed of vs. The whole life of Chriſtians ought to bee a certaine meditation of godlineſſe, becauſe they are called into ſanctification. Herein ſtandeth the office of the lawe, that by putting them in minde of their duetie, it ſhoulde ſtirre them vp to the endeuour of holineſſe and innocencie. But when conſciences are carefull howe they may haue God mercifull, what they ſhall aunſwere, and vpon what affiance they ſhall ſtande if they be called to his iudgement, there is not to be reckened what the lawe requireth, but onely Chriſt muſt bee ſet foorth for righteouſneſſe, which paſſeth all perfection of the lawe.

Ephe. 1.4.
2. Theſ. 4.5.

The libertie diſputed of in the Epiſtle to the Galathians.

3 Vppon this point hangeth almoſt all the argument of the Epiſtle to the Galathians. For, that they bee fonde expoſitors which teach that Paul there contendeth onely for the libertie of ceremonies, may bee prooued by the places of the argumentes. Of which ſort are theſe. That Chriſt was made a curſe for vs, that hee might redeeme vs from the curſe of the law, Againe, Stande faſt in the libertie wherewith Chriſt hath made you free, and bee not againe intangled with the yoke of bondage. Beholde, I Paul ſay, if yee be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall nothing profite you. And hee which is circumciſed is detter of the whole lawe. Chriſt is made idle to you whoſoeuer yee bee that are iuſtified by the lawe: yee are fallen away from grace. Wherein truely is conteined ſome higher thing than the libertie of ceremonies. I graunt in deede that Paul there intreateth of ceremonies, becauſe hee contendeth with the falſe Apoſtles, which went about to bring againe into the Chriſtian Church the olde ſhadowes of lawe which were aboliſhed by the comming of Chriſt. But for the diſcuſſing of this queſtion, there were higher places to be diſputed, in which the whole controuerſie ſtoode. Firſt becauſe by thoſe Iewiſh ſhadowes the brightneſſe of the Goſpell was darkened, hee ſheweth that wee haue in Chriſt a full giuing in deede of all thoſe thinges which were ſhadowed by the ceremonies of Moſes. Secondly, becauſe thoſe deceiuers filled the people with a moſte naughtie opinion, namely that this obedience auailed to deſerue the fauour of God: Here hee ſtandeth much vppon this point, that the faithfull ſhoulde not thinke that they can by any workes of the lawe, much leſſe by thoſe litle principles, obteine righteouſneſſe before God. And therewithall hee teacheth, that they are by the croſſe of Chriſt free from the damnation of the lawe, which otherwiſe hangeth ouer all men, that they ſhoulde with full aſſuredneſſe reſt in Chriſt alone. Which place properly pertaineth to this purpoſe. Laſt of all he maintaineth to the conſciences of the faithfull their libertie, that they ſhould not be bound with any religion in things not neceſſarie.

Gal. 4.30.

The ſeconde part of Chriſtian libertie free and by the lawe vnconſtrained obedience.

4 The ſeconde parte, which hangeth vppon that former parte, is that conſciences obey the lawe, not as compelled by the neceſſitie of the lawe: but being free from the yoke of the lawe it ſelfe, of their owne accord they obey the will of God. For becauſe they abide in perpetuall terrors, ſo long as they be vnder the dominion of the lawe, they ſhall neuer be with cheereful readineſſe framed to the obedience of God, vnleſſe they firſt haue this libertie giuen them. By an example wee ſhall both more briefely, and more plainely perceiue what theſe thinges meane. The commaundement of the lawe is, that we loue our God with al our heart, with all our ſoule, with all all our ſtrengths. That this may be done, our ſoule muſt firſt be made voide of all other ſenſe and thought, our heart muſt be cleanſed of all deſires, all our ſtrengths muſt be gathered vp and drawen together to this onely purpoſe. They which haue gone moſt farre before other in the way of the Lord, are yet very farre from this marke. For though they loue God with their minde, and with ſyncere affection of heart, yet they haue ſtil a great part of their heart and ſoule poſſeſſed with the deſires of the fleſh, by which they are drawen back and ſtayed from going forward with haſtie courſe to God. They doe in deede trauaile forward with great endeuour: but the fleſh partly feebleth their ſtrengths, and partly draweth them to it ſelfe. What ſhall they here do, when they feele that they do nothing leſſe than performe the lawe? They will, they couet, they endeuour, but nothing with ſuch perfection as ought to be. If thou looke vpon the lawe, they ſee that whatſoeuer worke they attempt or purpoſe, is accurſed. Neither is there anie cauſe why anie man ſhould deceiue himſelfe with gathering that the work is therefore not altogether euil, becauſe it is vnperfect: and therefore that God doth neuertheleſſe accept that good which is in it. For, the law requiring perfect loue, condemneth all imperfection, vnleſſe the rigour of it be mitigated. Therefore his workes ſhould fall to nought which he woulde haue to ſeeme partly good: and he ſhall find that it is a tranſgreſſion of the law, euen in this becauſe it is vnperfect.

5 Loe, howe all our workes are ſubiect to the curſe of the lawe, if they be meaſured by the rule of the lawe. But howe ſhoulde then vnhappie ſoules chearefully applie themſelues to worke, for which they might not truſt that they could get any thing but curſe? On the other ſide, if being deliuered frō this ſeuere exacting of the lawe, or rather from the whole rigor of the lawe, they heare that they be called of God with fatherly gentleneſſe: they will merily and with great cheerefulnes anſwere his calling and follow his guiding. In a ſumme, they which are bound to the yoke of the lawe, are like to bondſeruants, to whom are appointed by their Lordes certaine taskes of worke for euerie daie. Theſe ſeruants thinke that they haue done nothing, nor dare come into the ſight of their Lordes, vnleſſe they haue performed that full taske of their workes. But children, which are more liberally and more freemanlike handled of their fathers, ſtick not to preſent to them their begonne and halfe vnperfect workes, yea and thoſe hauing ſome fault, truſting that they wil accept their obedience and willingneſſe of minde, although they haue not exactly done ſo much as their good will was to do. So muſt we be as may haue ſure affiance, that our obediences ſhalbe allowed of our moſt kinde father, how litle ſoeuer, and how rude and vnperfect ſoeuer they be. As alſo he aſſureth to vs by the Prophet: I will ſpare them (ſaith he) as the father is wont to ſpare his ſonne that ſerueth him. Where this worde Spare, is ſet for to beare wi hall, or gently to winke at faultes, for aſmuch as he alſo maketh mention of ſeruice. And this affiance is not a litle neceſſary for vs, without which we ſhall goe about all thinges in vaine. For God accounteth himſelfe to be worſhipped with no worke of ours but which is truly done of vs for the worſhipping of him. But howe can that be done among theſe terrors, where it is doubted whether God be offended or worſhipped

The libertie which we haue in the state of grace a special encouragement to striue that we be not ouerruled with sinne. Rom.12.2. Rom.6.12.

6 And that is the cause why the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues, referreth al the good works that are read of in the holy fathers, to faith, and weyeth them onely by faith. Touching this libertie there is a place in the Epistle to the Romanes, where Paul reasoneth that sinne ought not to haue dominion ouer vs, because we are not vnder the lawe, but vnder grace. For when he had exhorted the faithfull that sin should not reigne in their mortall bodies, and that they should not giue their members to be weapons of wickednesse to sin, but should dedicate themselues to God, as they that are aliue from the dead, & their members, weapons of righteousnesse to God: & wheras they might on the other side obiect that they do yet carry with thē the flesh ful of lusts, and that sinne dwelleth in them, he adioyneth that cōfort by the libertie of the law, as if he should say. Though they doe not yet throughly feele sinne destroyed & that righteousnesse yet liueth not in thē, yet there is no cause why they should feare & be discouraged as though he had bin alway displeased with them for the remnants of sinne, forasmuch as they are by grace made free from the law, that their works should not bee examined by the rule of the law. As for them that gather that we may sinne because we are not vnder the law, let them know that this liberty pertaineth nothing to them, the end whereof is to encourage vs to good.

The third parte of christian liberty is freedome of conscience touching the vse of indifferent thinges as cloth, meat, drink, wherein it is vnnecessarie to know how much is permitted vs, least too much strictnesse driue vs to inconuenience.

7 The third part is, that we be bound with no conscience before God of outward things which are by themselues indifferent, but that we may indifferently sometime vse them, and sometime leaue them vnused. And the knowledge of this libertie also is very necessarie for vs, for if it shalbe absent, there shalbe no quiet to our consciences, no end of superstitions. Many at this day do think vs fond to moue disputation about the free eating of flesh, about the free vse of dayes, and garments, & such other small trifles as they in deede thinke them: but there is more weight in them than is commonly thought. For when consciences haue once cast themselues into the snare, they enter into a long and cumbersome way, from whence they can afterward finde no easie way to get out. If a man begin to doubt whether he may occupie linnen in sheetes, shirts, handkerchieses, and napkins, neither wilbe be out of doubt whether he maie vse hempe, and at the last he wil also falin doubt of matters, for he wil wey with himselfe whether he cannot sup without napkins, whether he maie not be without handkerchieses, If any man thinke deintie meat to be vnlawfull, at length he shall not with quietnes before the Lorde eate either brownbread or common meates, when he remembreth that he may yet sustaine his bodie with baser foode. If he doubt of pleasant wine, afterward he will not drinke dead wine with good peace of conscience, last of all he will not be so bolde to touch sweeter and cleanner water than other. Finally, at the length he will come to this point, to thinke it vnlawfull (as the common saying is) to treade vpon a straw lying a crosse. For here is begonne no light strife, but this is in question, whether GOD will haue vs to vse these or those thinges, whose will ought to guide all our counsels and doinges. Hereby some must needes be carried with desperation into a confuse deuouring pitte: some must, despising GOD, and casting away his feare, make themselues away through do-destruction when they haue no ready way: For whosoeuer are entãgled with such doubting, which way soeuer they turne them selues, they see euery where present offence of conscience.

8 I knowe saith Paul) that nothing is common (meaning by common, vnholy) but who so thinketh any thing common, to him it is common. In which wordes he maketh all outward thinges subiect to our liberty, prouided alway that our mindes haue the assurance of the libertie before God. But if anie superstitious opinion cast into vs any doubt, those thinges which of their owne nature were cleane, are defiled to vs. Wherefore he addeth: blessed is he that iudgeth not himselfe in that which he alloweth. But hee that iudgeth, if he eate, is condemned, because he eateth not of faith. And that which is not of faith, is sinne. Among such narrowe straites, who so neuertheless with carelesly venturing on all thinges shew themselues boulder, do they not asmuch turn thẽselues away frõ God? But they which are throughlie pearced with some feare of God, when they themselues also are compelled to doe many thinges against their conscience, are discouraged and doe fall downe with feare. All that are such, do receiue none of the giftes of God with thankesgiuing, by which alone yet Paul testifieth that they all are sanctified to our vse: I mean the thanksgiuing that proceedeth from a hart that acknowledgeth the liberalitie and goodnesse of God in his giftes. For many of them in deede doe vnderstand that those are the benefites of God which they vse, and they praise God in his workes: but sith they are not perswaded that they are giuen to themselues, how shoulde they thanke God as the giuer of them? Thus in a summe we see, whereto this libertie tendeth, namely that we should vse the gifts of God to such vse as he hath giuen them vnto vs, without any scruple of conscience, without any trouble of mind, by which confidence our soules may both haue peace with him, and acknowledge his liberalitie towarde vs. For here are comprehended all ceremonies that are at libertie to be obserued, that our consciences should not be bound with any necessitie to keepe them, but should remember that the vse of them is by Gods benefit subiect to themselues vnto edification.

We can not vvith thankfulnes vnto God enioy the vse of outvvard things, vnlesse the knowledge of our liberty remoue all scruple of conscience and trouble of minde from vs.

Rom. 14. 14

9 But it is diligently to be noted, that Christian libertie is in all the parts of it a spirituall thing, the whole strength whereof consisteth in appeasing feareful consciences before God, if either they be vnquieted, or carefull for the forgiuenesse of sinnes, or if they be pensiue whether our imperfect works and defiled with the faultes of our flesh doe please God, or if they bee troubled about the vse of indifferent thinges. Wherefore they doe wrongfully expounde it, which either doe make it a cloke for their owne desires, that they may abuse the gifts of God to their owne lust, or which do thinke that there is no liberty but that which is vsed before men, and therefore in vsing it haue no regarde of the weake brethren. In the first kind, men do at this day much offend. There is almost no man which may by his abilitie of wealth be sumptuous, which deliteth not in excessiue gorgiousnes, in furniture of banketes, in apparell of body, in building of houses, which hath not a will to excel other in all kind of statelinesse: which doth not maruellously flatter himselfe in his finenes. And all these things are defended vnder the pretence of Christian libertie. They say that they are thinges indifferent,

The vse and abuse of the doctrine vvhich conteyneth Christian libertie.

I graunt

I graunt, so that a man indifferently vse them. But when they are too greedily coueted, when they are proudly boasted, when they are wastfully spent, it is certaine that those thinges which otherwise were of themselues lawful, are by these faultes defiled. This saying of Paul doth very wel put difference betweene thinges indifferent: All thinges are cleane to the cleane: but to the defiled and vnbeleeuing, nothing is cleane, because their minde and conscience is defiled. For why are accursed the rich men, they which haue their comfort, which are satisfied with meat, which doe nowe laugh, which sleepe in beds of iuorie, which ioyne land to land, whose bankets haue Lute, Harpe, taber and wine? Verily both iuorie, and golde, and riches, are the good creatures of God, permitted yea and appointed by the prouidence of God for men to vse. Neither is it any where forbidden either to laugh, or to be satisfied with meate, or to ioyne new possessions to their owne old possessions or of their aunceſters, or to be delited with musicall melodie, or to drink wine. This is true indeede. But when they haue plentie of thinges, to wallowe in delights, to glut themselues, to make their wit and mind drunk with present pleasures & alway to gape for new, these doings are most far from the lawful vse of the gifts of God. Therefore let them take away immeasurable desire, let them take away immeasarable wasting, let them take away vanitie and arrogance, that they may with a pure conscience purely vse the gifts of God, When the minde shall be framed to this sobrietie, they shall haue a rule of the lawfull vse. On the other side let this moderation bee wanting, euen base and common delicates are too much. For this is truelie saide, that oftentimes in frise and course cloth dwelleth a purple heart, and sometime vnder silke and purple, lieth simple humilitie. Let eurie man in his degree so liue either poorelie, or meanlie, or plentifullie, that they all remember that they are fed of God to liue, not to be riotous: & let them thinke, that this is the law of Christian liberty: if they haue learned with Paul to be contented with those thinges which they presently haue: if they can skill both to bee humble and to excell: if they be taught in all places and in all thinges to bee both full and hungrie, to haue plentie and to suffer want.

Vndiscreete and vnseasonable vsing of liberty.

10 Heerein also many men do erre, because as though their libertie should not be sound and safe vnlesse it had men witnesses of it, they doe vndiscreetelie and vnwiselie vse it. By which vnseasonable vsing they many times offende the weake brethren. You may see at this day some, which thinke that their libertie can not stande, vnlesse they take possession of it by eating of flesh on friday. I blame not that they eate: but this false opinion must be driuen out of their mindes. For they ought to thinke that by their libertie they obtaine no newe thing in the sight of men but before GOD, and that it standeth as well in absteining as in vsing. If they vnderstande that it maketh no matter before GOD, whether they eate flesh or egges, whether they weare red or black garmentes, that is enough. The conscience is nowe free, to which the benefite of such libertie was due. Therefore although they doe afterwarde abstaine all their life long from fleth, and weare alway but one colour, yet they are no lesse free. Yea therefore because they are free, they doe with a free conscience abstaine. But they do most hurtfullie offende because they nothing regard the weakenesse of their brethren, which which we ought so to beare with, that wee rashly commit nothing with offence of them. But sometime also it behoooueth that our liberty be set forth before men. And this I graunt. But there is a measure most heedefully to be kept, that we cast not away the care of the weake of whome the Lord hath so earnestly giuen vs charge.

11 I will in this place therefore speake somewhat of offences, in what difference they are to be taken, which are to be auoided, and which to be neglected: whereupon wee may afterwarde determine what place there is for our libertie among men. I like well that common diuision, which teacheth ỹ there is of offences one sort giuen, another taken: for asmuch as it both hath a plaine testimonie of the Scripture, and doth not vnfitly expresse ỹ which it meaneth. If thou do any thing by vnseasonable lightnesse, or wantonnes, or rashnesse, not in order, nor in fit place, whereby the ignorant & weake are offended, that same may be called an offence giuen by thee: because it came to passe by thy fault that such offence was stirred vp. And it is alway called an offence giuen in any thing, the fault whereof came from the doer of the thing it selfe. It is called an offence taken, when a thing which is otherwise not euilly done nor out of time is by euill will or by some wrongfull maliciousnesse of minde drawen to occasion of offence. For in this case was not offence giuen, but these wrongfull construers doe without cause take one. With that first kind of offence none are offended but the weake: but w̃ this second kinde sowre natures & Pharisaicall scornefull heades are offended. Wherefore we shall call the one, the offence of the weake: the other of the Pharisees: and we shall so temper the vse of our libertie, that it ought ro giue place to the ignorance of the weake brethren, but in no wise to the rigorousnesse of the Pharisees. For, what is to be yelded to weakenesse, Paul sheweth in very many places. Beare (saith he) the weake in faith. Againe, Let vs not hereafter iudge one another: but this rather, let there not be laide before our brother any offence or occasion of falling: and many other sayinges to ỹ same entẽt, which are more fit to be read in the place it self, than to be here rehearsed. The summe is, that we which are strong should beare with the weakenes of our brethren, and not please our selues, but euerie one of vs please his neighbour vnto good for edifying. In another place, But see that your liberty be not in any wise an offence to them that are weake. Againe, Eate ye all things that are solde in the shambles, asking no question for conscience: of your conscience (I say) not another mans. Finally be ye such, that ye giue no offence, neither to the Iewes, nor to the Greekes, nor to the Church of GOD. Also in another place, Ye are called, brethren, into libertie: onely giue not your libertie to be an occasion to the flesh, but by charitie serue ye one another. Thus it is. Our libertie is not giuen toward our weake neighbours, whose seruaunts charitie maketh vs in all thinges: but rather, that hauing peace with God in our mindes, wee may also liue peaceably among men. As for the offence of the Pharisees, how much it is to be regarded, we learne by the wordes of the Lorde, whereby he biddeth them to be let alone, because they are blind, and guides of the blinde. The disciples had warned him, that the Pharisees were offended with his sayings: he answered that they were to be neglected, and the offending of them not to be cared for.

Howw farre our libertie extendeth in respect of others vvhome it may offend.

12 But yet still the matter hangeth doutfull, vnlesse wee knowe who are to be taken for weake, and who for Pharisees: which difference being taken away, I see not among offences what vse at all of libertie remaineth, which might neuer be vsed without great daunger. But it seemeth to me that Paul hath most plainly declared both by doctrine and by examples, how far our libertie is either to bee tempered or to bee defended though with offences. When he tooke Timothee into his companie, hee circumcised him: but hee could not be brought to circumcise Titus. Here were diuerse doings, and no change of purpose or of mind: namely in circumcising Timothee, when hee was free from all men, hee made himselfe a seruant to all men: and hee was made to the Iewes, as a Iewe, that hee might winne the Iewes: to them that were vnder the lawe, as if he himselfe were vnder the lawe, that hee might winne them which were vnder the lawe: all things to all men, that he might saue many, as he writeth in another place. Thus wee haue a right moderation of libertie, if it may be indifferently restrained with some profit. What he had respect vnto, when he stoutly refused to circumcise Titus, hee himselfe testifieth, writing thus: But neither was Titus, which was with me, although he was a Grecian compelled to be circumcised, because of the false brethrē which were come in by the way, which had priuily crept in to espie our libertie which we haue in Christ Iesus, that they might bring vs into bondage, to whom we gaue not place by subiection so much as for a time, that the trueth of the Gospell might continue with you. There is also a time when we must of necessity defend our libertie, if the same be in weake consciences endaungered by the vniust exactings of false Apostles. We must in euery thing studie to preserue charitie, and haue regarde to the edifying of our neighbour. All thinges (saith he) are lawfull for me, but not all things are expedient: al things are lawful for me, but al thinges doe not edifie. Let no man seeke that which is his owne, but ỹ which is anothers. There is nothing now plainer by this rule, than that we must vse our liberty, if it may turne to the edifying of our neighbour: but if it be not so expedient for our neighbour, then we must forbeare it. There be some which counterfaite the wisedome of Paul in forbearing of libertie, while they do nothing lesse than apply the same to the duties of charitie. For so that they may prouide for their owne quietnes, they wish all mention of libertie to be buried, whereas it is no lesse behouefull for our neighbours, sometime to vse libertie for their benefit and edification, than in fit place to restrain it for their commodity. But it is the part of a godly man to think, that free power in outward things is therefore granted him, that he may bee the freer to all duties of charitie.

Gal. 2 4.

1. Co. 10. 23.

Intollerable halting couered vvith pretence of not offending the vveake.

13 But whatsoeuer I haue spoken of auoiding of offences, my meaning is that it be referred to meane and indifferent things. For those things that are necessarie to be done, are not to be left vndone for feare of any offence. For as our libertie is to be submitted to charitie, so charitie it selfe likewise ought to be vnder the pureness of faith. Verilie here also ought to be had regarde of charitie, but so farre as to the altars, that is, that for our neighbours sake we offend not God. Their intemperance is not to be allowed, which doe do nothing but with troubleſom turmoiling, and which had rather raſhly to rende all things, than leiſurely to rip them. Neither yet are they to be harkned to, which when they be leaders of men into a thouſand ſorts of vngodlines, yet do fain that they muſt behaue themſelues ſo that they be none offence to their neighbors. As though they doe not in the meane edify the cõſciences of their neighbours to euill, ſpeciallie whereas they ſticke faſt in the ſame mire without anie hope of getting out. And the pleaſant men forſooth, whether their neighbor be to be inſtructed with doctrine or exãple of life, ſay that he muſt be fed with milk, whom they fil with moſt euil & poiſonous opiniõs. Paul reporteth that he fed the Corinthiãs with drinking of milke: but if Popiſh Maſſe had then bene among them, woulde hee haue ſacrificed to giue them the drink of milk? No: For milk is not poiſon. Therfore they lie in ſaying that they feede them whom vnder a ſhew of flattering allurements they cruelly kill. But, granting that ſuch diſſembling is for a time to be allowed, how long yet wil they feede their children with milke? For if they neuer growe bigger, that they may at the leaſt bee able to beare ſome light meat, it is certain that they were neuer brought vp with milk. Ther are two reaſons that mooue me why I do not now more ſharplie contend with them: firſt, becauſe their follies are ſcarcelie worthie to bee confuted, ſith they worthilie ſeeme filthie in the ſight of all men that haue their ſounde wit: ſecondlie, becauſe I haue ſufficientlie done it in peculiar bookes, I will not nowe do a thing alreadie done. Onelie let the readers remember this, that with whatſoeuer offences ſatan & the worlde go about to turn vs away from the ordinances of God, or to ſtay vs from following that which he appointeth, yet wee muſt neuertheleſſe go earneſtly forward: and then, that whatſoeuer dangers hang vpon it, yet is it not at our libertie to ſwarue one haire bredth from the cõmandement of the ſame God, neither is it lawfull by any pretence to attempt any thing but that which he giueth vs leaue. 1. Cor. 3. 2.

The conſciences of faithfull men exempted from humane power.

14 Now therefore ſith faithfull conſciences hauing receiued ſuch prerogatiue of libertie as we haue aboue ſet forth, haue by the benefit of Chriſt obtained this that they be not entangled with anie ſnares of obſeruatiõs in thoſe things in which the Lord willed that they ſhould be at liberty: we cõclude that they are exempt from al power of men. For it is vnmeete, that either Chriſt ſhould loſe the thank of his ſo great liberalitie, or cõſciences their profite. Neither ought we to think it a ſlight matter, which we ſee to haue coſt Chriſt ſo deere: namelie which he valued not with gold or ſiluer, but with his owne bloud: ſo that Paul ſticketh not to ſay, that his death is made void, if we yeeld our ſoules into ſubiection to men. For he trauelleth about nothing els in certaine chapters of the epiſtle to the Galathians, but to ſhew that Chriſt is darkned or rather deſtroied to vs, vnleſſe our conſciences ſtande faſt in their libertie, which verily they haue loſt if they may at the will of men be ſnared with the bondes of lawes and ordinances. But as it is a thing moſt worthy to be knowne, ſo it needeth a longer & plainer declaration. For ſo ſoone as any worde is ſpoken of the abrogating of the ordinances of men, by and by great troubles are raiſed vp partlie by ſeditious men, partlie by ſlaunderers, as though the whole obedience of men were at once taken away and ouerthrowne. 1. Pet. 1. 18 Gal. 5. 1. & 4.

Christians are not therefore according to the outwarde behauiour of their persons priuiledged from subiection to the lawes of men, because their consciences are at liberty before God.

15 Therefore that none of vs may stumble at this stone, first let vs consider, that there are two sorts of gouernment in man: the one spiritual whereby the conscience is framed to godlines and to the worship of God: the other ciuill, whereby man is trained to the duties of humanitie and ciuility which are to be kept among men. They are commonly by not vnfit names called the Spirituall and Temporall iurisdiction, whereby is signified, that the first of these two formes of gouernment pertaineth to the life of the soule, and the latter is occupied in the thinges of this present life: not onely in feeding and clothing, but in setting foorth of lawes whereby a man may spende his life among men holilie, honestly, and soberlie. For, that first kinde hath place in the inwarde minde, this latter kinde ordereth onely the outward behauiours. The one we may call the Spirituall kingdome, the other, the Ciuill kingdome. But these two, as wee haue diuided them, must bee either of them alway seuerally considered by themselues, and when the one is in considering, we must withdrawe and turne away our mindes from the thinking vpon the other. For there are in man as it were two worldes, which both diuers kings and diuers lawes may gouerne. By this putting of difference shall come to passe, that that which the Gospell teacheth of the spiritual libertie, wee shall not wrongfully drawe to the ciuill order, as though Christians were according to the outward gouernment lesse subiect to the lawes of men, because their consciences are at libertie before God: as though they were therefore exempt from all bondage of the flesh, because they are free according to the spirit. Again, because euen in those ordinances which seem to pertaine to the spirituall kingdom, there may be some errour, we must also put difference betweene these, which are to be taken for lawfull as agreeable to the word of God, & on the other side which ought not to haue place among the godly. Of the Ciuil gouernment there shall be elsewhere place to speake. Also of the Ecclesiastical lawes I omitt to speak at this time, because a more full entreating of it shall be fitte for the fourth booke, where we shal speake of the power of the Church. But of this discourse, let this be the conclusion, The question being (as I haue sayde) of it selfe not very darke or entangled, doth for this cause accumber many, because they do not suttlely enough put difference betweene the outward court as they call it, & the court of conscience. Moreouer this encreaseth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the magistrate ought to be obeied, not only for fear of punishment, but for conscience. Whereupon followeth that consciences are also bound by the ciuill lawes. If it were so, all should come to naught which wee both haue spoken and shall speake of the spirituall gouernment. For the loosing of this knot, first it is good to knowe what is conscience. And the definition thereof is to be fetched from the deriuation of the worde. For, as when men do with minde and vnderstanding conceiue the knowledge of thinges, they are thereby saide (Scire) to knowe, whereupon also is deriued the name of Science: Knowledge: so when they haue a feeling of the iudgement of God, as a witnesse ioyned with them, which doth not suffer them to hide their sinnes but that they be drawne accused to the iudgement seate of God, that same feeling is called Conscience. For it is a certaine meane betweene God and man, because it suffereth not man to suppresse in him selfe which he knoweth but pursueth him so farre til it bring him to guiltines. This is it which Paul meaneth, where he saith that conscience doth together witnes with men, when their thoughts do accuse or acquite them in the iudgement of God. A simple knowledge might remaine as enclosed within man. Therfore this feling which presenteth man to the iudgement of God, is as it were a keeper ioyned to man, to marke and espie all his secrets, that nothing may remaine buried in darknesse. Whereupon also commeth that olde Prouerbe, Conscience is a thousande witnesses. And for the same reason Peter hath set the examination of a good conscience for quietnesse of mind, when being perswaded of the grace of Christ, wee doe without feare present our selues before God. And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues, setteth to haue no more conscience of sinne, in steede of, to be deliuered or acquited that sinne may no more accuse vs. Rom.2.15. 1.Pet.3.21. Heb.10.2.

16 Therefore as works haue respect to men, so conscience is referred to God, so that a good conscience is nothing els but the inward purenes of the heart. In which sense Paul writeth that charitie is the fulfilling of the law out of a pure conscience and faith not fained. Afterward also in the same chapter he sheweth how much it differeth from vnderstanding, saying that some had suffred shipwracke from the faith, because they had forsaken good Conscience. For in these words he signifieth it is a liuely affection to worship God, and a syncere endeuour to liue holily and godlily. Sometime in deed it extendeth also to men, as in Luke where the same Paul protesteth that he endeuored himself to walke with a good conscience toward God and men. But this was therefore saide, because the fruites of good conscience do flow and come euen to men. But in speaking properly, it hath respect to God only, as I haue already said. Hereby it commeth to passe that the law is said to binde the conscience, which simply bindeth a man without respect of me, or without hauing any consideration of them. As for example; God commandeth not onely to keepe the minde chaste and pure from all lust, but also forbiddeth al maner of filthinesse of wordes and outward wantonnesse whatsoeuer it be. To the keeping of this lawe my conscience is subiect although there liued not one man in the world. So he that behaueth himselfe intemperately, not onely sinneth in this that he giueth an euil example to the brethren, but also hath his conscience bounde with guiltinesse before God. In things that are of themselues meane, there is another consideration. For wee ought to absteine from them if they breede any offence, but the conscience stil being free. So Paul speaketh of flesh consecrate to Idols. If any (saith hee) moue any doubt, touch it not for conscience sake: I say for conscience, not thine but the others. A faithfull man should sinne, which being first warned should neuertheles eate such flesh. But howsoeuer in respect of his brother, it is necessarie for him to absteine as it is prescribed of God, yet hee ceaseth not to keepe still the libertie of conscience. Thus wee see how this lawe binding the outward worke, leaueth the conscience vnbounde. In vvhat sort the conscience is bound or free. 2.Tit.1.5. Act.24.16. 1.Cor.10.28.

The xx. Chapter.

Of Prayer, vvhich is the cheefe exercise of faith, & vvhereby vve daily receiue the benefites of God.

Of

Our owne emptineſſe & the fulneſs of all riches laid vp in Chriſt should allure vs vnto prayer.

OF theſe thinges that haue beene hitherto ſpoken, wee plainely perceiue how needy and voide man is of all good things, and howe hee wanteth all helpes of ſaluation. Wherefore if hee ſeeke for releefes whereby hee may ſuccour his needineſſe, hee muſt goe out of himſelfe and get themelſe where. This is afterward declared vnto vs, that the Lorde doth of his owne free will and liberally giue himſelfe to vs in his Chriſt, in whome hee offereth vs in ſteede of our miſerie all felicitie, in ſteede of our neede welthineſſe, in whome hee openeth to vs the heauenly treaſures: that our whole faith ſhould behold his beloued ſonne, that vpon him our whole expectation ſhould hang, in him our whole hope ſhould ſtick and reſt. This verily is the ſecret and hidden Philoſophie, which cannot be wrung out with Logicall arguments: but they learne it whoſe eyes God hath opened that they may ſee light in his light. But ſince that wee are taught by faith to acknowlege that whatſoeuer wee haue neede of, whatſoeuer wanteth in vs, the ſame is in God and in our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, namely in whome the Lord willed the whole fulneſſe of his largeſſe to reſt, that from thence we ſhould all drawe as out of a moſt plentifull fountaine: now it remaineth that wee ſeeke in him, and with prayers craue of him that which we haue learned to be in him. Otherwiſe to knowe God to be the Lorde and giuer of all good thinges, which allureth vs to pray to him, and not to go to him and pray to him: ſhould ſo nothing profit vs, that it ſhould be all one as if a man ſhoulde neglect a treaſure ſhewed him buried and digged in the ground. Therfore the Apoſtle, to ſhewe that true faith cannot be idle from calling vpon God, hath ſet this order: that as of the Goſpel ſpringeth faith, ſo by it our heartes are framed to call vpon the name of God. And this is the ſame thing which he had a litle before ſaid, that the Spirit of adoption, which ſealeth in our hearts the witneſſe of the Goſpel, raiſeth vp our ſpirites that they dare ſhewe foorth their deſires to God, ſtirre vp vnſpeakable gronings, & cry with confidence Abba Father. It is meete therefore that this laſt point, becauſe it was before but onely ſpoken of by the way and as it were lightly touched, ſhoulde nowe bee more largely entreated of.

Rom. 8. 26.

By prayer vvee are both enriched vvith grace, and in deſires quieted

2 This therefore we get by the benefit of prayer, that wee attaine to thoſe riches which are laid vp for vs with the heauenlie father. For there is a certaine cõmunicating of mẽ with God, whereby they entring into ỹ ſanctuarie of heauen, do in his own preſence cal to him touching his promiſes: that the ſame thing which they beleeued him affirming onely in word not to be vaine, they may when neede ſo requireth finde in experience. Therfore we ſee that there is nothing ſet forth to vs to be looked for at the hand of the Lord, which we are not alſo commanded to craue with prayers: ſo true it is that by prayer are digged vp the treaſures, which our faith hath looked vpõ being ſhewed to it by the goſpell of the Lord. Now how neceſſarie and how manie waies profitable this exerciſe of prayer is, it can by no words be ſufficiẽtlie declared. Vndoubtedly it is not without cauſe ỹ the heauenly father teſtifieth, that the only fortres of ſaluation is in the calling vpon his name, namely whereby vve call to vs the preſence both of his prouidence, by which he watcheth to take care of our matters: and of his power, by which he ſuſteineth vs being weake and in a manner fainting: and of his goodnes, by which he receiueth vs into fauour being miserably loaden with sinnes: finally whereby we call him all whole, to giue himselfe present to vs. Hereby groweth singular rest and quietnesse to our consciences. For when we haue disclosed to the Lorde the necessitie which distressed vs, wee largely rest though it were but in this onely that none of our euils is hidden from him, whom we are perswaded both to be most wel willing toward vs, and most able to prouide wel for vs.

3 But (wil some man say) did not he know without any to put him in mind of it, both in what part we be distressed, and what is expedient for vs: so that it may seeme after a certaine manner superfluous, that hee should be troubled with our prayers, as though he winked or slept, vntill hee were awaked with our voice? But they which so reason, marke not to what ende the Lorde hath instructed them that be his to pray: for he ordeined it not so much for his owne cause as rather for ours. He willeth in deede, as right it is, that his due be rendred to him, when they acknowledge to come from him whatsoeuer men require or doe perceiue to make for their profite, and doe testifie the same with wishinges. But the profite also of this sacrifice wherewith hee is worshipped, commeth to vs. Therefore howe much more boldly the holy fathers gloriously talked both to themselues and other of the benefites of GOD, so much the more sharpely they were pricked forwarde to pray. The onely example of Elias shall bee enough for vs, which beeing sure of the counsell of God, after that hee not rashly had promised raine to Achab, yet busily prayeth betwene his knees, and sendeth his seruant seuen times to espie it: not for that hee did discredit the oracle of God, but because he knewe that it was his dutie, least his faith should waxe drowsie and sluggish, to lay vp his desires with God. Wherefore although while wee lie senselesse and so dull that wee perceiue not our owne miseries, hee waketh & watcheth for vs; and sometime also helpeth vs vndesired, yet it much behoueth vs, that he be continually called vpon of vs, that our heart may be enflamed with earnest & feruent desire to seeke, loue, & worship him, while we accustome our selues in euery necessitie to flee to him as to our shoote anchare. Againe, that no desire & no wish at al may enter into our mind, wherof we should be ashamed to make him witnesse, while wee learne to present our wishes, yea & to poure out our whole heart before his eyes. Then ỳ we may be framed to receiue al his benefits with true thankfulnes of mind, yea & with outward thanksgiuing, of which wee are put in minde by our prayer ỳ they come to vs from his hand. Moreouer, that when we haue obteined that which we desired, being perswaded that he hath answered to our prayers, we may be therby the more feruently caried to think vpon his kindnes, & therwithal embrace with greater pleasure those things which wee acknowledge to haue ben obteined by praier. Last of al, that verie vse and experience may according to the measure of our weaknes assure our minds of his prouidéce when we vnderstand that he not onely promiseth that he will neuer faile vs, & that he doth of his own accord open vs the entrie to cal to him in the verie point of necessitie, but also hath his hande alway stretched out to helpe them that be his, & that he doth not feede them with words, but defendeth them with present help. For these causes, the most kinde Father, although

It is not a needelesse thing, to pray euen for those things which before we pray we knowe that God is purposed to bestowe.

1. King. 18. 42.

he neuer sleepeth or is sluggish, yet oftentimes maketh a shewe as though hee slept and were sluggish, that so hee may exercise vs, which are otherwise slouthfull and sluggish to come to him, to aske of him, to require him to our owne great benefite. Therefore they do too foolishly, which to call away the mindes of men from prayer, babble that the prouidence of GOD, which maketh for the safekeeping of all things, is in vaine wearied with our callings vppon him: Whereas the Lorde contrariwise not in vaine testifieth that he is nigh to all them that cal vpon his name in the trueth And of none other sorte is that which other doe triflingly say, that it is superfluous to aske those things which the Lorde is of his owne will readie to giue: whereas euen the verie same things which flowe to vs from his owne free liberalitie, he will haue vs acknowledge to bee graunted to our prayers. Which thing that notable sentence of the Psalme doeth testifie, wherewith many like sayings doe accorde. The eyes of the Lorde are vppon the righteous, and his eares vnto their prayers, Which saying so setteth out the prouidence of God bent of his owne accorde to prouide for the safetie of the godly, that yet he omitteth not the exercise of faith, whereby slouthfulnes is wiped from the mindes of men. The eyes of God therefore do walke, that hee may succour the necessitie of the blinde: but hee will againe on our behalfes heare our gronings, that he may the better prooue his loue toward vs. And so both are true, that the watchman of Israel sleepeth not, nor slumbereth, and yet that he sitteth stil as hauing forgotten vs when hee seeth vs dull and dumme.

Psal. 145. 18.

Psal. 34. 16.

Psal. 121. 8.

The first rule of framing rightly our prayers is to voide our cogitations as much as may be from all fleshly & earthlie cares.

4 Nowe, to frame prayer rightly and well, let this be the first rule, that we be no otherwise framed in minde and heart, than becommeth them that enter into talke with God. Which verily wee shall attaine as touching the minde, if the same being free from fleshly cares and thoughtes wherewith it may be called away or withdrawen from the right and pure beholding of God, doe not onely bend it selfe wholy to prayer, but also so much as is possible be lifted vp and caried aboue it selfe. Neither doe I here require a mind so at libertie, that it be pricked and nipped with no care, whereas contrariwise the feruentnesse of prayer must by such carefulnesse be kindled in vs (as we see that the holy seruants of God do sometime declare great tormentes, much more carefulnesses, when they say they vtter to the Lord a bewailing voice out of the deepe depth, and out of the middest of the iawes of death.) But I say that all strange and foraine cares must be driuen away, wherewith the minde it selfe wandring hither and thither is carried about, and being drawen out of heauen is pressed downe to the earth. I meane by this that it must be lifted vp aboue it selfe, that it may not bring into the sight of God any of those things which our blinde and foolish reason is wont to imagine, nor may holde it selfe bound within the compasse of her owne vanitie, but rise vp to purenes worthie for God.

The preparation of the minde vnto prayer is a thing of great both vweight and difficultie.

5 Both these things are specially worthie to be noted, that whosoeuer prepareth himselfe to pray, should therto applye all his senses & endeuours, and not (as men are wont) be diuersly drawen with wandering thoughtes: because there is nothing more contrarie to the reuerence of God, than such lightnesse which is a witnesse of too wanton licentiousnesse and loose from all

all feare. In which thing wee must so much more earnestly labour as we find it more hard. For no man cā be bent so to praie, but that he shal feele many bythoughts to creepe vpon him, either to breake off, or by some bowing and swaruing to hinder the course of his prayer. But here let vs cal to mind, how great an vnworthinesse it is, when God receiueth vs vnto familiar talk with him, to abuse his so great gentlenesse, with mingling holie and prophane things together, when the reuerence of him holdeth not our mindes fast bound vnto him: but as if we talked with some mean man, we do in the midst of our prayer, forsaking him, leape hither and thither. Let vs therefore know that none do rightly and well prepare themselues to prayer, but they whō the maiestie of God pearceth, that they come to it vncombred of earthlie cares and affections. And that is meant by the ceremonie of lifting vp of handes, that men should remember that they bee farre distant from God, vnles they lift vp their senses on high. As also it is said in the Psalm. To thee haue I lifted vp my soule. And the Scripture oftentimes vseth this maner of speech, to lift vp prayer: that they which desire to be heard of God, shoulde not sit still in their dregges. Let this be the summe: that howe much more liberally God dealeth with vs, gently alluring vs to vnload our cares into his bosome, so much lesse excusable are we vnlesse his so excellent and incōparable benefite doe with vs ouerwey all other thinges and drawe vs vnto it selfe, that we may earnestly applie our endeuours and senses to pray: which can not be done vnlesse our minde by strongly wrastling with the hinderances doe rise vp aboue them. An other point we haue set foorth, that we aske no more than God giueth leaue. For though he biddeth vs to poure out our heartes, yet he doth indifferently giue loose reines to foolish & froward affections: and when he promiseth that he will doe according to the wil of the godly, he proceedeth not to so tender bearing with them that he submitteth himselfe to their will. But in both these pointes men doe commonly muche offende. For not onely the most part of men presume without shame, without reuerence, to speake to God for their follies, and shameleslly to present to his throne whatsoeuer liked them in their dreame: but also so great foolishnesse or senseleslie dulnes possesseth them, that they dare thrust into the hearing of God, euen all their most filthie desires, whereof they would greatly be ashamed to make men priuie. Some prophane men haue laughed to scorne, yea and detested this boldnesse, yet the vice it selfe hath alway reigned. And hereby it came to passe that ambitious men haue chosen Iupiter to be their Patrone: couetous men, Mercurie: the desirous of learning, Apollo and Minerua: warriers, Mars: and Lecherous folke, Venus. Like as at this day (as I haue euen nowe touched) men doe in prayers graunt more licence to their vnlawfull desires, than when they sportingly talke with their Egals. But God suffereth not his gentlenesse to be so mocked: but claiming to himselfe his right, maketh our prayers subiect to his authoritie, and restraineth them with a bridle. Therefore we must keepe fast this saying of Iohn. This is our affiance, that if we aske anie thing according to his will, hee heareth vs. But forasmuch as our abilities are farre from beeing sufficient to performe so great perfection, wee must seeke a remedie to helpe vs. As we ought to bende the sight of our minde to God, so the affection of the heart ought also to followe to the same ende. But both doe staie farre beneath it, yea rather doe faint and faile or be carried a contrarie waie. Therfore God to succour this weakenesse, in our prayers giueth the spirite to be our schole-

Rom. 8. 26. maister, to instruct vs what is right, and to gouerne our affections. For, because we know not what we ought to pray as we ought, the spirite commeth to our succour, and maketh intercession for vs with vnspeakeable groninges, not that it indeede either praieth or groneth but stirreth vp in vs affiance, desires, and sighings, which the strength of nature were not able to conceiue. And not without cause Paul calleth them vnspeakable groninges which so the faithfull sende foorth by the guiding of the spirite, because they which are truely exercised in prayers, are not ignorant that they bee so holden in perplexitie with blinde cares, that they scarcely finde what is profitable for them to speake: yea while they goe about to vtter stammering wordes they sticke fast incombred. Whereupon it followeth, that the gift of praying rightly is a singular giste. These thinges are not spoken to this purpose, that we fauouring our owne slouthfulnes should giue ouer the charge of praying to the Spirite of GOD, and lie dull in that careles nes, to which we are too much inclined (as there are heard the wicked sayinges of some, that we must lie negligently gaping to waite vntill he preuent our mindes occupied elsewhere) but rather that we loathing our owne slouthfulnesse and sluggishnesse, should craue such helpe of the Spirite. Neither doeth Paul, when he biddeth vs to pray in Spirite, therefore cease to exhort
2. Cor. 14. 26. vs to wakefulnesse: meaning that the instinct of the Spirit so vseth his force to frame our prayers, that it nothing hindereth or slacketh our owne endeuour: because God will in this behalfe proue how effectually faith moueth our heartes.

A second rule for direction of praier in the sense and feeling of our owne wantes.

6 Let also an other lawe be, that in praying we alway feele our owne want, and that earnestly thinking howe we stande in neede of those thinges that wee aske, we ioyne with our prayer an earnest yea feruent affection to obtaine. For manie doe slightly for manners sake recite prayers after a prescribed forme, as though they rendered a certain taske to God: and although they confesse that this is a necessarie remedie for their euils, because it is to their destruction to be without the helpe of God which they craue: yet it appeareth that they doe this duetie for custome, forasmuch as in the meane time their mindes are cold, and doe not wey what they aske. The generall and confuse feeling indeede of their necessitie leadeth them hereunto: but it doth not stirre them as it were in a present case to aske releefe of their neede. Nowe what thinke wee to bee more hatefull or more detestable to God than this faining, when a man asketh forgiuenesse of sinnes, in the meane time either thinking that he is not a sinner, or not thinking vppon this that hee is a sinner, euen wherewith God himselfe is plainely mocked? But of such peruersenesse (as I haue saide) mankinde is full, that for manners sake they manie times aske many things of God, which they certainly iudge that without his liberality to come to the from some other where, or that they haue them alreadie remaining with them. The fault of some other seemeth to be lighter and yet not tollerable, that they which haue onelie conceiued this principle that we must sacrifice to GOD with prayers, do assemble vp prayers without any musing of minde vppon them. But the godly must principally take heede, that they neuer come into the sight of God to aske any thing, but because they do both boyle with earnest affection of heart, and do therewithall desire to obtaine it of him. Yea, and also though in those things which wee aske onely to the glorie of God, wee seeme not at the first sight to prouide for our owne necessitie, yet the same ought to be asked with no lesse feruentnesse & vehementnes of desire. As, when we pray that his name be halowed, wee must (as I may so speake) feruently hunger & thirst for that hallowing.

7 If any man obiect, that wee are not alway driuen with like necessitie to pray, I graunt the same indeede: and this difference is profitably taught vs of Iames: Is anie man heauie among you? Let him pray. Who so is merie, let him sing. Therefore euen common feeling teacheth vs, that because we are too slothful, therefore, as the matter requireth we are the more sharply pricked forwarde of God to pray earnestly. And this Dauid calleth the fit time, because (as he teacheth in many other places) how much more hardly troubles, discommodities, feares & other kinds of tentations do presse vs, so much freer accesse is open for vs, as though God did call vs vnto him. But yet no lesse true is that saying of Paul, that we must at al times: because how soeuer things prosperously flowe according to our heartes desire, and matter of mirth doeth compasse vs on euery side, yet there is no minute of time wherein our neede doth not exhort vs to pray. If a man haue abundaunce of wine and wheate: yet sith he cannot enioy one morsell of breade but by the continuall grace of God, whole cellers or barnes full shall be no let why hee shoulde not craue daily breade. Nowe if wee call to minde howe many dangers do euery moment hang ouer vs, the verie feare it selfe wil teach vs that we haue no time free from prayer. But this we may better perceiue in spiritual things. For, when shal so many sinnes, wherof wee knowe our selues guiltie, suffer vs to sit stil without care and not in humblewise craue pardon both of the fault and the paine? When do tentations graunt vs truce, so that we neede not to hast vnto help? Moreouer the desire of the kingdome and glorie of God ought so to pluck vs to it selfe, not by fittes but continually, that it should alway be fit time for vs. Therefore not without cause wee are so oft commaunded to pray continually. I doe not yet speake of perseuerance in prayer, whereof mention shalbe made hereafter: but when ỹ scripture warneth vs that we ought to pray continually, it accuseth our slouthfulnes, because wee do not perceiue how necessarie this care & diligence is for vs. By this rule all hypocrisie and craftines of lying to God, is debarred, yea driuen farre away from prayer. God promiseth that he will bee neere to all them that cal vpon him in trueth, and he pronounceth that they shal finde him which seeke him with their whole heart. But they aspire not thither which please themselues in their owne filthinesse. Therefore a right prayer requireth repentance. Whereupon this is commonly said in the Scriptures, that God heareth not wicked doers, and that their praiers are accursed, like as their sacrifices also be: because it is rightfull that they finde the eares of GOD shutte, which doe locke vp their owne heartes, and that they should not finde God easie to bowe, which doe with their owne hardnesse

Although there be no time vvherin prayer needeth not, yet at some time vve see a speciall necessitie thereof, but reape no benefit thereby at any time vvithout a lothing of our owne filthinesse vvhich cannot be in vs but by repentance.

Esa.15.15. prouoke his stiffenesse. In Esay he threateneth after this manner. When yee shall multiplie your prayers, I will not heare you: for your handes are full of bloud. Againe in Ieremie: I haue cried and they haue refused to heare: they Iere.11.7.& 11. shal likewise crie, and I will not heare: because he taketh it for a most high dishonour, that wicked men should boast of his couenant, which doe in all Esa.29.9. their life defile his holy name. Wherefore in Esaie he complaineth that when the Iewes come neere to him with their lippes, their heart is farre from him. He speaketh not this of only prayers, but affirmeth that he abhorreth faining in all the partes of worshipping him. To which purpose maketh that Iam.4.3. saying of Iames. Yee aske, and receiue not: because yee aske ill, that yee may spende it vpon your pleasures. It is true in deede (as we shall againe shewe a litle hereafter) that the prayers of the godly which they powre out, 1.Iohn.3.22. doe not rest vpon their owne worthinesse: yet is not that admonition of Iohn superfluous, if wee aske any thing, we shall receiue it of him, because wee keepe his commaundements: forasmuch as an euill conscience shutteth the gate against vs. Whereupon followeth that none doe rightly pray, nor are heard, but the pure worshippers of God. Therefore whosoeuer prepareth himselfe to pray, let him be lothfull to himselfe in his owne euils, and (which cannot bee done without repentance) let him put on the person and minde of a begger.

8 Hereunto let the third rule be ioyned, that whosoeuer presenteth himselfe before God to pray, should forsake all thinking of his owne glorie, put off all opinion of worthinesse, and finally giue ouer all trust of himselfe, giuing in the abacing of himsele the glorie wholy to God: least if wee take any thing be it neuer so little to our selues, we doe with our owne swelling fall away from his face. Of this submission which throweth downe al height, wee haue often examples in the seruants of God: among whome the holier that euerie one is, so much the more hee is throwne downe when hee commeth into the sight of the Lorde. So Daniel, whome the Lorde himselfe com- Dan.9.18. mended with so great a title of praise, said: We powre not out our prayers before thee in our righteousnesses, but in thy great mercies. Here vs Lord, Lord be merciful to vs: Heare vs, & do these things that we aske, For thine owne sake: because thy name is called vpō ouer the people & ouer thy holy place. Neither doth he by a crooked figure (as men sometime speake) mingle himselfe with the multitude as one of the people, but rather seuerally confesseth his owne guiltinesse and humbly fleeth to the sanctuarie of forgiuenes, as he expresly saith: When I confessed my sins & the sinnes of my people. And this humblenes Dauid also setteth out with his own example, when he saith, Psal.143.2. Enter not into iudgement with thy seruaunt, because in thy sight euery one Esa.74.5. that liueth shal not be iustified. In such manner Esay prayeth: Loe, thou art angrie because we haue sinned, the world is founded in thy wayes, therfore we shalbe saued: And we haue bin all filled with vncleanneſse, & al our righteousnes as a defiled cloth: and we haue all withered away as a leafe, & our iniquities do scatter vs abroad as the wind: and there is none that calleth vpon thy name, that raiseth vp himselfe to take holde of thee: because thou hast hid thy face from vs, & hast made vs to pine away in the hande of our wickednes. Now therefore O Lord, thou art our father, we are clay, thou art our fashioner, & we are the worke of thy hande. Be not angrie O Lord, neither remember wickednes for euer. Behold, look vpon vs, we are al thy people Lo, how they stand vpon no affiance at al, but vpon this only, ỳ thinking vpon this ỳ they be Gods, they despaire not that he will haue care of them. Likewise Ieremie. If our iniquities answere against vs, doe thou for thy names sake. For it is both most truly & most holy writtẽ, of whomsoeuer it be, which being written by an vnknowen author is fathered vpon the Prophet Baruc: A soule heauie & desolate for the greatnes of euil, crooked, & weake, a hungrie soule, & fainting eies giue glorie to thee O Lord. Not according to the righteousnesses of our fathers do we poure out praiers in thy sight, & aske mercie before thy face O Lord our God: but because thou art merciful, haue mercie vpon vs, because we haue sinned before thee. Ier. 14. 7.

9 Finally the beginning & also the preparing of praying rightly, is craning of pardon, with an humble & plaine confession of fault. For neither is it to be hoped, that euen the holiest man maie obtaine anie thing of God, vntil he be freely recõciled to him: neither is it possible that God may be fauourable to any but them whom he pardoneth. Wherefore it is no maruaile if the faithful do with this keie open to themselues the dore to pray. Which we learne out of many places of the Psalmes. For Dauid when he asketh an other thing, saith: Remember not the sinnes of my youth, remember me according to thy mercie for thy goodnesses sake O Lorde. Againe, Looke vpon my affliction, & my labour, & forgiue all my siunes. Where we also see ỳ it is not enough, if we euery seuerall day do call our selues to account for our new sinnes, if we do not also remember those sinnes which might seeme to haue beene long ago forgotten. For, the same Prophet in another place, hauing confessed one hainous offence by this occasion returneth euen to his mothers wombe wherin he had gathered the infection: not to make the fault seeme lesse by the corruption of nature, but that heaping together the sinnes of his whole life, how much more rigorous he is in condemning him selfe, so much more easie he may find God to entreat. But although the holy ones do not alway in expresse words aske forgiuenes of sinnes, yet if wee diligently weigh their praiers which the Scripture rehearseth, we shal easily find ỳ which I say, ỳ they gathered a mind to pray of the only mercy of god, & so alway tooke their beginning at appeasing him: because if euery man examine his owne conscience, so farre is he from being bold to open his eares familiarly with God, that he trembleth at euery comming toward him, except that he standeth vpon trust of mercie & pardon. There is also another speciall confession, where they aske release of paines, that they also praie to haue their sins forgiuen: because it were an absurditie to will that the effect be taken away while the cause abideth. For wee must beware that God be fauourable vnto vs, before that he restitue his fauour with outwarde signes: because both he himselfe will keepe this order, and it should litle profit vs to haue him beneficiall, vnlesse our conscience feeling him appeased shoulde throughly make him louely vnto vs. Which we are also taught by the aunswere of Christ. For whẽ he had decreed to heale the man sick of the Palsey, he said, Thy sinnes are forgiuen thee: lifting vp our mindes thereby to that which is chiefly to be wished, that God first receiue vs into fauour, and then shew ſhew forth the fruite of reconciliation in helping vs. But beſide that ſpeciall confeſſion of preſent giltines, whereby the faithful make ſupplication to obtaine pardon of euery ſpecial fault and peine, that generall preface, which procureth fauour to praiers, is neuer to be omitted, becauſe vnleſſe they be grounded vpon the free mercie of God, they ſhal neuer obtain any thing of God. Whereunto may be referred that ſaying of Iohn: If we confeſſe our ſinnes, he is faithful & righteous to forgiue vs, and cleanſe vs from al iniquitie. For which cauſe it behoued praiers in the time of the law to be hallowed with expiation of bloud, that they might be acceptable, & that ſo the people ſhould be put in mind that they are vnworthie of ſo great a prerogatiue of honor, til being cleanſed from their defilings they ſhould of the only mercie of God conceiue affiance to pray.

1. Iohn. 1. 9.

Praier is fruitles vvhere there is not an vnfained aſpiring vnto godlines, ſuch as Dauid & Ezechiah mention in their praying as vvarranted thereby that they coulde not praie in vain. Pſal. 85. 2. Reg. 20. 2. Pſal. 34. 16. 1. Iohn. 3. Iohn. 9. 21.

10 But whereas the holie ones ſeeme ſometime for the entreating of God to alleadge the helpe of their owne righteouſnes (as when Dauid ſaith: Keepe my ſoule, becauſe I am good. Againe Ezechias: Remember Lorde I beſeech thee, that I haue walked before thee in truth, and haue done good in thine eies) by ſuch formes of ſpeaking they meane nothing elſe than by their verie regeneration to teſtifie themſelues to be the ſeruants & childrē of God, to whom he himſelfe pronounceth that he will be merciful. He teacheth by the Prophet (as we haue alreadie ſeene) that his eies are vpon the righteous, and his eares vnto their praiers. Againe by the Apoſtle, that we ſhall obtaine whatſoeuer we aske, if we keep his commandements. In which ſayings he doth not value prayer by the worthines of workes: but his will is ſo to ſtabliſh their affiance, whoſe own conſcience well aſſureth them of an vnfained vprightnes and innocencie, ſuch as all the faithfull ought to be. For the ſame is taken out of the verie trueth of God, which the blinde man that had his ſight reſtored, ſaith in Iohn, that God heareth not ſinners: if we vnderſtand ſinners after the common vſe of the Scripture, for ſuch as without all deſire of righteouſnes do altogether ſleepe and reſt vpon their ſins: foraſmuch as no heart can euer breake foorth into vnfained calling vpon God which doeth not alſo aſpire to godlineſſe. Therefore with ſuch promiſes accorde the prayers of the holie ones, wherein they make mention of their owne pureneſſe or innocencie that they maie feele that to be giuen them which is to be looked for of all the ſeruantes of God. Againe it is then commonly found that they vſe this kind of praier, when they do in the preſence of the Lorde compare themſelues with their enemies, from whoſe vniuſt dealing they wiſhed themſelues to be deliuered by his hande. In this compariſon it is no maruell if they brought forth their righteouſnes, & ſimplicitie of heart to moue him the rather by the rightfulnes of their cauſe to help them. This therefore we take not away from the godly heart of a good man, but that he may vſe the purenes of his conſcience before the Lord, to ſtrengthen himſelf in the promiſes wherwith the Lord comforteth & vpholdeth his true worſhippers: but our meaning is, ỳ the truſt of obtaining ſtand vpon ỳ only mercy of God, laying away al thinking of their own deſeruing.

The fourth rule of prayer is courage grounded vpon certaine hope

11 The fourth rule is, that beeing ſo throwen downe and ſubdued with true humilitie, we ſhould neuertheles with certaine hope of obtaining bee encouraged to praie. Theſe be things indeede contrarie in ſhew to ioyne with the feeling of the iust vengeance of God sure affiance of fauour: which things do yet very well agree togither, if the onely goodnesse of God raise vs vp beeing oppressed with our owne euils. For, as wee haue before taught that repentance and faith are knit as companions togither with an vnseparable bonde: of which yet the one afraieth vs, the other cheareth vs: so in prayers they must mutuallie meete together. And this agreement Dauid expresseth in fewe wordes: I (saith he) will in the multitude of thy goodnesse enter into thy house: I will worship in the Temple of thy holines with feare. Vnder the goodnes of God he comprehendeth faith, in the meane time not excluding feare: because not onlie his maiestie driueth vs to reuerence, but also our owne vnworthinesse holdeth vs in feare forgetting all pride and assurednes. But I meane not such an affiance which should stroke the minde loosed from all feeling of carefulnesse with a sweete and full quietnesse. For, to rest so peaceably is the doing of them which hauing all things flowing as they would wish it, are touched with no care, are kindled with no desire, do swell with no feare. And it is a verie good spurre to the holie ones to call vpon God, when beeing distressed with their owne necessity, they are vexed with most great vnquietnesse, and are almoste dismaide in them selues, till faith come in fit time to their succours, because in such distresses the goodnesse of God so shineth to them, that they do in deede grone beeing wearied with weight of present euils, they are also in paine & grieued with feare of greater, yet being so vpholdē by it, they both releeue & comfort the hardnes of bearing them, & doe hope for escape & deliuerance. Therefore the praier of a godly mā must arise out of both affections, must also cōtain & shew both: namelie to grone for present euils, and to be carefullie afraid of new, and yet therwithall to fly to God, not doubting that he is ready to reach his helping hand. For God is maruellouslie prouoked to wrath by our distrustfulnesse, if we ask of him the benefits which we hope not to obtaine. Therefore there is nothing more agreeable with the nature of praiers, than ẏ this law be prescribed & appointed to them, that they breake not foorth rashly, but folow faith going before thē. To this principle Christ calleth vs all with this saying: I say vnto you, whatsoeuer things ye require, beleeue that ye shal receiue them, & they shall happē to you. The same also he cōfirmeth in another place. Whatsoeuer ye ask in praier beleeuing, yee shall receiue. Wherwith agreeth James saying, If any need wisdom, let him ask it of him which giueth to all mē freelie, and vpbraideth not: but let him ask in faith not doubting. Wherein setting douting as contrary to fayth, he doth most fitly expresse the nature of it. And no lesse is that to be noted which he addeth, that they obtain nothing which call vpon God in wauering & doubt, and do not determine in their heartes whether they shalbe heard or no. Whom he also compareth to waues which are diuerslie tossed and driuen about of the winde. Whereupon in another place he calleth a right prayer, the prayer of Faith. Againe when God so oft affirmeth that he wil giue to euerie one according to his faith, he signifieth that we obtaine nothing without faith. Finallie it is faith that obteineth whatsoeur is graunted by prayer. This is meant by that notable saying of Paul, which the foolish men doe take no heede vnto. Howe shall any man call vppon him, in whome hee hath not beleeued? But who shall beleeue, and trust to obtein the thing we pray for.

beleeue, vnleſſe he haue heard? But faith commeth of hearing, and hearing of the word of God. For conueying by degrees the beginning of prayer frō faith, he plainly affirmeth that God can not be ſyncerely called vpon of any other, than them to whom by the preaching of the Goſpell his mercifulnes and gentlenesſe hath beene made knowne, and familiarly declared.

It is a thing not abſurd but moſt neceſſarie, that they vvhich call vpon God haue an aſſured confidence in his fauour, and a ſted-faſt feeling of his good vill.

12 This neceſſity our aduerſaries do not thinke vppon. Therefore when we bid the faithful to hold with aſſured confidence of mind that God is fauourable and beareth good wil to them, they think ẏ we ſpeak a moſt great abſurdity. But if they had any vſe of true praier, they woulde truely vnderſtande that God can not be rightly called vpon without that ſtedfaſt feeling of Gods good will. Sith no man can well perceiue the force of faith, but he which by experience feeleth it in his hart: what may a man profit by diſputing with ſuch men which do openly ſhew, that they neuer had any thing but a vain imagination? For of what force, & how neceſſarie is that aſſurednes which we require, is cheefly learned by inuocation. Which who ſo ſeeth not, he bewrayeth ẏ he hath a very dul cōſciēce. Let vs therfore, leauing this kind of blind men, ſtick faſt in that ſaying of Paul, that God can not be called vpon of any other, but them that know his mercie by the goſpell, & are ſurely perſwaded that it is readie for them. For what maner of ſaying ſhould this be? O lord, I am verily in doubt whether thou wilt hear me: but becauſe I am diſtreſſed with carfulnes, I flee to thee, ẏ thou maiſt help me if I be worthy. This was not the wonted manner of all the holy ones, whoſe praiers we read in ẏ ſcriptures. Neither hath the holy ghoſt thus taught vs by the apoſtle which biddeth vs to go to the heauēlie throne with confidence, that we may obtain grace, & when in another place he teacheth that we haue boldnes & acceſſe in cōfidēce by the faith of Chriſt We muſt therfore hold faſt with both handes this aſſurednes to obtain what we ask (ſith both the Lord with his owne voice ſo commandeth vs, & al the holie ones teach it by their exāple) if we will pray with fruit. For, ẏ only praier is pleaſing to God which ſpringeth out of ſuch a preſumption of faith (as I may ſo call it) & is grouded vpon a dreadles certainty of faith. He might haue bin cōtent with the bare name of faith, but he not onlie added confidēce, but alſo furniſhed the ſame with libertie or boldnes, by this mark to put difference betwene vs & vnbeleeuers, which do in deede alſo pray to God as we do, but at aduenture. For which reaſon the whole church praieth in the pſalm: Let thy mercie be vpō vs, as we put our truſt in thee. The ſame condition is alſo ſpoken of in another place by the Prophet: In what day I ſhall crie, this I knowe that God is with me. Againe, In the morning I wil direct my ſelf to thee, & I wil watch. For of theſe words we gather, that praiers are in vain caſt into the aire, vnleſſe hope be adioined, from whence as out of a watchtour we may quietlie waite for the Lord. Wherewith agreeth the order of Pauls exhortation. For before that he moue ẏ faithfull to pray in ſpirite at al times with wakefulneſſe and diligence, he firſt of all biddeth them to take the ſhield of faith, the helmet of ſaluation, and the ſword of the ſpirite, which is the worde of God. Now let the readers here call to remēbrance that which I haue before ſaide, that faith is not ouerthrowne where it is ioined with acknowledging of our miſery, needines, and filthines. For with how heauie weight ſoeuer of euill doinges the faithfull feele themselues to be ouerloden or grieued, and ỹ they be not only voide of all things which may procure fauour with God, but also that they be burdened with many offences which may worthily make him dreadful to them: yet they ceasse not to present themselues, neither doth this feeling make them so afraide but that they still resort to him, for asmuch as there is no other way to come to him. For prayer was not ordained, whereby we should arrogantly aduaunce our selues before God, or esteeme at great value any thing of our owne, but whereby confessing our guiltines, we would bewaile our miseries to him, as children do familiarly open their complaints to their parents. But rather the vnmeasurable heape of our euils ought to be full of spurres or prickes to pricke vs forward to pray. As also the Prophet teacheth vs by his example, saying: Heale my soule, because I haue sinned against thee. I graunt in deede ỹ in such sayinges should be deadly prickings vnlesse God did helpe: but the most good father of his incomparable tender kindnes hath broght remedy in fit season, whereby appeasing all trouble, assuaging all cares, wiping away feares, he might gently allure vs to him, yea, & taking away all doutes (much more all stoppes) hee might make vs an easie way. Psal.64.5.

13 And first when he commandeth vs to pray, he doth by the very same commaundement accuse vs of wicked obstinacy, vnlesse we obey him. Nothing could be more precisely commanded, than that which is in the Psalm: call vpon me in the day of trouble. But forasmuch as among all the duties of godlines, the Scripture commendeth none more often, I neede not to tarry longer vpon this point. Aske (saith our master) & ye shall receiue: knocke, it shalbe opened to you. Howbeit here is also with the commandement ioyned a promise as it is necessarie. For though al men confesse ỹ the commandement ought to be obeyed, yet the most part would flee from God, when he calleth, vnlesse he promised ỹ he would be easie to be entreated, yea & would offer himselfe. These two things being stablished, it is certaine that whosoeuer make delaies ỹ they come not straight to God, are not onely rebellious & disobedient, but also ate proued giltie of infidelitie, because they distrust ỹ promises. Which is so much more to be noted, because hypocrites vnder the colour of humilitie & modesty do aswell proudly despise the commaundement of God, as discredite his gentle calling, yea & defraud him of ỹ chiefe part of his worship. For after that he hath refused sacrifices, in which at that time all holinesse seemed to stand, he declareth that this is the chiefe thing & most precious to him aboue all other, to be called vpon in the day of need. Therefore where he requireth his owne, & encourageth vs to cheerefulnes of obeying, there are none so gay colours of doubting that may excuse vs. Wherefore how many testimonies are commonly found in the scriptures whereby we are commanded to cal vpon God, so many standards are set vp before our eyes to put affiance into vs. It were rashnes to rush into the sight of God, vnlesse he did preuent vs with calling vs. Therefore he openeth vs the way with his owne voyce, saying: I will say to them, Ye are my people: and they shall say to mee, thou art our God. We see howe he preuenteth them that worship him, and willeth them to followe him, and therefore it is not to be feared that this should not be a verie sweete melodie which he tuneth, Nothing should withholde vs frō praier, wherevnto we are both by the authoritie of his commandement bound, and encouraged by the sweet alluremēts of his promises to whom we pray.

Pſal.65.3. tuneth. Specially let this notable title of God come in our minde, whereupon if we ſtay, we ſhal eaſily paſſe ouer all ſtoppes. Thou God that heareſt prayer, euen to thee ſhall all fleſh come. For what is more louely or more alluring, than that God be garniſhed with this title which may aſcertaine vs that nothing is more proper to his nature, than to graunt the deſire of humble ſuters? Hereby the Prophet gathereth that the gate ſtandeth open not onely to a fewe, but to all men: becauſe he ſpeaketh euen to all in this ſaying: Call vpon mee in the day of trouble: I will deliuer thee, and thou ſhalt glorifie me. According to this rule Dauid laieth for himſelfe that a promiſe was giuen him, that he may obtaine what he asketh: Thou Lord haſt reuealed into the care of thy ſeruaunt: therefore thy ſeruaunt hath founde his heart to pray. Whereupon we gather that he was fearefull, ſauing in ſo much as the promiſe had encouraged him. So in another place he armeth himſelfe with this general doctrine. He will do the will of them that feare him. Yea, and this wee may note in the Pſalmes, that as it were breaking his courſe of praying he paſſeth ouer ſometime to the power of God, ſometime to his goodnes, ſometime to the trueth of his promiſes. It might ſeeme that Dauid by vnſeaſonable thruſting in of theſe ſentences, made mangled prayers: but the faithful know by vſe and experience, that feruentnes fainteth vnleſſe they put newe nouriſhmentes vnto it, and therefore in praying the meditation both of the nature of God, and of his worde is not ſuperfluons. And ſo by the example of Dauid, let it not grieue vs to thruſt in ſuch thinges as may refreſh fainting hearts with new liuely ſtrength.

14 And it is wonderfull that with ſo great ſweeteneſſe of promiſes wee are either but coldly or almoſt not at all mooued, that a great parte of men wandring about by compaſſes had rather leauing the fountaine of liuing waters, to digge for themſelues drie pittes, than to embrace the liberalitie of God freely offered them. An inuincible tower is the name of the Lorde, (ſaith Salomon) to it the righteous man ſhall flee, and he ſhalbe ſaued. And Ioel, after that he had prophecied of that horrible deſtruction which was at hand, added this notable ſentence. Whoſoeuer calleth vpon the name of the Lorde, ſhalbe ſafe: which ſentence wee knowe to pertaine properly to the courſe of the Goſpell. Scarcely euerie hundreth man is moued to go forward to meete God. He himſelfe crieth by Eſay: Ye ſhall call vpon mee, and I will heare you, yea, before that ye crie, I will anſwere you. And this ſame honour alſo in another place he vouchſaueth to giue in common to the whole Church, as it belongeth to all the members of Chriſt. He hath cried to me, I will heare him, I am in trouble with him, that I may deliuer him. Neither yet (as I haue alreadie ſaide) is it my purpoſe to recken vp all the places, but to chooſe out the chiefe, by which we may take a taſte howe kindly God allureth vs vnto him, and with howe ſtraite bondes our vnthankfulneſſe is bound, when among ſo ſharpe prickings our ſluggiſhnes ſtill maketh delay. Wherefore let theſe ſayinges alway ſounde in our eares: The Lorde is nie to all them that cal vpon him, that call vpon him in trueth: alſo theſe ſayinges which wee haue alleaged out of Eſaie and Ioel, by which God affirmeth that he is heedefull to heare prayers, yea and is delited as with a ſacrifice of ſweete ſauour, when we caſt our cares vpon him him. This singular fruite wee receiue of the promises of God, when wee make our prayers not doutingly and fearefully: but trusting vpon his worde, whose maiestie would otherwise make vs afraide, wee dare call vpon him by the name of Father, forasmuch as he vouchsafeth to put this most sweete name into our mouthes. It remaineth that we hauing such allurementes shoulde knowe that wee haue thereby matter enough to obtaine our prayers: forasmuch as our prayers stande vppon no merite of our owne, but all their worthines and hope of obtaining are grounded vpon the promises of God, and hang vppon them: so that it needeth none other vnderpropping, nor looketh vpward hither or thither. Therefore we must determine in our mindes, that although wee excell not in like holinesse as is prayed in the holy fathers, prophets and Apostles, yet becawse the commaundement of prayer is common to vs, and faith is also common, if we rest vpon the worde of God, in this right we are fellowes with them. For God (as we haue before shewed) promising that he will bee gentle, and mercifull to all, giueth cause of hope to all euen the most miserable that they shall obtaine what they aske. And therefore the generall formes are to be noted, from which no man (as they say) from the first to the last is excluded: only let there bee present a purenes of hart, misliking of our selues, humilitie, and faith: let not our hypocrisie vnholilie abuse the name of God with deceitfull calling vpon it: the most good father will not put backe them, whome he not only exhorteth to come to him, but also moueth them by all the meanes that he can. Hereupon commeth the maner of praying of Dauid which I haue euen nowe rehearsed. Lo thou haste promised, Lorde, to thy seruaunt: for this cause thy seruant at this day gathereth courage, and hath found what praier he might make before thee. Now therefore O Lord God, thou art God, and thy words shalbe true. Thou hast spoken to thy seruant of these benefits: begin therefore, and doe them. As also in another place, Perfourme to thy seruaant according to thy worde. And al the Israelites together, so oft as they arm themselues with remembrance of the couenaunt, doe sufficiently declare that we should not pray fearefully, whereas the Lord so appointeth. And herein they followed the examples of the fathers, specially of Iacob, which after that hee had confessed that he was vnworthie of so many mercies which he had receiued at the hand of God, yet hee saith that hee is encouraged to require greater things becawse God had promised ẏ he woulde doe them. But whatsoeuer colours the vnbeleeuers do pretend, when they flee not to God so oft as necessitie presseth them, when they seeke not him nor craue his helpe, they do as much defraud him of his due houor as if they made to thẽselues newe Gods, and idols: for by this meane they deny that he is to thẽ ẏ author of al good things. On the other side, there is nothing stronger to deliuer the godly from al dour, than to be armed with this thought, that no stop ought to stay them while they obey the commaundement of God, which pronounceth that nothing is more pleasing to him than obedience. Here againe that which I saide before more clearely appeareth, that a dredles spirite to pray agreeth well with feare, reuerence, and carefulnes: and that it is no absurditie to say that God raiseth vp the ouerthrowne. After this maner those forms of speache agree well togither which in seeming are contrarie. Jeremie and Daniel say that they throwe downe prayers before God. In another place Ieremie saith: Let our prayer fall downe in the sight of God, that hee may haue mercie on the remnant of his people. On the other side, the faithfull are oftentimes said to lift vp prayer. So speaketh Ezechias, requiring the prophet to make intercession for him. And Dauid desireth that his prayer may ascend as incense. For although they beeing persuaded of the fatherly loue of God, cheerfully commit themselues into his faithfull keeping, and doubt not to craue the help which he freely promiseth: yet doth not an idle carelesnesse lift them vp, as though they had cast away shame, but they ascende so vpwarde by degrees of promises, that they still remaine humble suppliants in the abacement of themselues.

15 Here are questions obiected more than one. For the Scripture reporteth that the Lord granted certaine desires which yet brake forth of a mind not quiet nor well framed. Verilie for a iust cause: Ioatham had auowed the inhabitants of Sichem, to the destruction which afterward came vpon them: but yet God kindled with feruentnes of anger & vengeaunce following his execration seemeth to allowe il-tempered violent passions. Such heat also carried Sampson when he said, Strenthen me O God, that I may take vengeance of the vncircumcised. For though there were some peece of good zeale mingled with it: yet a hote, and therefore faultie greedinesse of vengeance did beare rule therein. God graunted it. Wherupon it seemeth that it may be gathered, that although the prayers bee not framed according to the prescribed rule of the word, yet they obtaine their effect. I answere first that a general law is not taken away by singular examples: again, that somtime special motions haue bin put into a fewe men, whereby it came to passe that there was another consideration of them than of the common people. For the answere of Christ is to be noted, when the disciples did vndiscreetly desire to counterfait the example of Elias, that they knewe not with what spirite they were endued. But we must go yet further, and say that the prayers do not alway please God which he granteth: but that, so much as serueth for example that is by clere praise made playne which the scripture teacheth, namely that he succoureth the miserable, heareth the gronings of the which being vniustly troubled doe craue his helpe: that therefore hee executeth his iudgements, when the complaints of the poore rise vp to him, although they be vnworthy to obtaine any thing be it neuer so little For how oft hath hee taking vengeance of the cruelties, robberies, violence, filthy lustes, & other wicked doings of the vngodly, subduing their boldnes & rage, & also ouerthowing their tyrannous power, testified y hee helpeth the vnworthily oppressed, which yet did beat the ayre with praying to an vncertain godhead? And one Psalme plainely teacheth that the prayers want not effect, which yet do not pearce into heauen by faith. For hee gathereth togither those prayers which necessitie wringeth no lesse out of the vnbeleeuers than out of the godly by the verie feeling of nature: to which yet he proueth by the effect, that God is fauourable. Is it because hee doth with such gentleneſſe testify that they be pleasing to him? No. But to enlarge or to set out his mercie by this circumstance, for that euē to vnbeleeuers their praiers are not denied: and then the more to pricke forwarde his true worshippers to pray, when they they see that prophane wailings sometime want not their effect. Yet there is no cause why the faithfull should swarue from the lawe laid vpon them by God, or should enuie the vnbeleeuers, as though they had gotten some great gaine, when they haue obteined their desire. After this manner we haue sayd, that the Lord was bowed with the repentance of Achab, that he might shewe by this example how easie he is to entreate towarde his elect, when true turning is brought to appease him. Therfore in the Psalme he blameth the Iewes, that they hauing by experience proued him so easie to grant their prayers, yet within a litle after returned to the stubbornesse of their nature. Which also plainly appeareth by the historie of the Iudges: namely that so oft as they wept, although their teares were deceitfull, yet they were deliuered out of the hands of their enemies. As therefore the Lorde indifferently bringeth forth his sunne vpon the good and the euill: so doth he also not despise their weepinges, whose cause is righteous and their miseries worthy of helpe. In the meane time he no more heareth these to saluation, than herein ministreth foode to the despisers of his goodnes. The question seemeth to be somewhat harder of Abraham and Samuel: of whome the one being warranted by no word of God, prayed for the Sodomites: the other against a manifest forbidding prayed for Saul. Likewise is it of Ieremie which prayed that the citie might not be destroied. For thogh their requests were denied, yet it seemeth hard to take faith from them. But this solution shal (as I trust) satisfie sober readers: that they beeing instructed with the generall principles, whereby God commandeth them to be mercifull euen also to the vnworthy, were not altogether without faith, although in a speciall case their opinion deceiued them. Augustine writeth wisely in a certaine place. Howe (saith he) do the holy ones pray by faith, to aske of God contrarie to that which he hath decreed? Euen because they pray according to his will: not that hidden and vnchangeable will, but the will which he inspireth into them, that he may heare them after another manner: as he wisely maketh difference. This is well said: because after his incomprehensible counsel he so tempereth the successes of things, ỹ the prayers of the holy ones be not voide which are wrapped both with faith and errour together. Neither yet ought this more to auaile to be an example to followe, than it excuseth the holy ones themselues, whome I denie not to haue passed measure. Wherefore where appeareth no certaine promise, wee must aske of God with a condition adioyned. To which purpose serueth that saying of Dauid. Watch to the iudgement which thou hast commaunded: because he telleth that he was warranted by a spteciall oracle to aske a temporall benefite.

16 This also it is profitable to note, that those thinges which I haue spoken of the foure rules of right prayer, are not so exactly required with extreeme rigor, that God refuseth the prayers in which he shall not finde either perfect faith or perfect repentance together with a feruentnes of zeale and well ordered requestes. We haue said that although prayer be a familiar talke of the godly with God, yet we must keepe a reuerence & modestie, that wee giue not loose reines to all requestes whatsoeuer they be, and that wee desire no more, than God giueth leaue: and then, least the maiestie of God

ſhould growe in contempt with vs, that wee muſt lift our mindes vpwarde to a pure and vndefiled worſhipping of him. This no man hath euer perfourmed with ſuch pureneſſe as it ought to bee. For (to ſpeake nothing of the common ſort) how many complaintes of Dauid do ſauor of vntemperance: not that he meant of purpoſe to quarell with God, or carpe againſt his iudgments: but becauſe he fainting for weakeneſſe, found no other better comfort, than to caſt his ſorrowes into his boſome. Yea and God beareth with our childiſh ſpeech and pardoneth our ignorance, ſo oft as any thing vnaduiſedly eſcapeth vs: as truely without this tender bearing, there ſhoulde be no libertie of praying. But although Dauids minde was to ſubmit himſelfe wholly to the will of God, and he prayed with no leſſe patience than deſire to obtaine: yet there ariſe yea boile out ſometimes troubolous affections, which are much diſagreeing from the firſt rule that wee haue ſet. Specially we may perceiue by the concluſion of the xxxix. Pſame, with howe great vehemencie of ſorrowe that holy man was carried away, that he could not keepe meaſure Ceaſe (ſaith he) from me, till I goe away and be not. A man would ſay that he like a deſperate mā deſireth nothing els but that the hand of God ceaſſing, he might rot in his euils. He ſaieth it not for that hee with an auowed minde runneth into ſuch outrage, or (as the reprobate are wont) would haue GOD to depart from him: but onely he complaineth that the wrath of GOD is too heauie for him to beare. In theſe tentations alſo there fall out oftentimes requeſtes not well framed according to the rule of the worde of God, and in which the holy ones doe not ſufficiently weye what is lawfull and expedient. Whatſouer praiers are ſpotted with theſe faultes, they deſerue to be refuſed: yet if the holie ones doe bewaile, correct themſelues, and by and by come to themſelues again, God pardoneth thē. So they offend alſo in the ſeconde rule, becauſe they are oftentimes driuen to wraſtle with their owne coldeneſſe, and their neede and miſerie doth not ſharpely enough pricke them to praie earneſtly. And oftentimes it happeneth that their mindes do ſlippe aſide, and in a maner wander away into vanitie. Therefore in this behalfe alſo ther is neede of pardon, leaſt our faint, or vnperfect, or broken and wandering prayers haue a deniall. This God hath naturally planted in the mindes of men, that prayers are not perfect but with mindes lifted vpward. Hereuppon came the ceremonie of lifting vp of handes, as we haue before ſaide, which hath beene vſed in all ages and nations, as yet it is in vre. But how many a one is there, which when hee lifteth vp his hands, doth not in his own conſcience find himſelfe dull, becauſe his heart reſteth vpon the grounde? As touching the asking of forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, although none of the faithfull doe ouerpaſſe it, yet they which are truely exerciſed in prayers doe feele that they bring ſcarcelie the tenth part of that ſacrifice, of which Dauid ſpeaketh. An acceptable ſacrifice to God is a troubled ſpirite: a broken and humbled heart O God thou wilt not deſpiſe. So there is alway double pardon to be asked, both becauſe they knowe thēſelues giltie in conſciences of many faults, with feeling whereof they are not yet ſo touched, ỹ they miſlike themſelues ſo much as they ought: and alſo that, ſo much as it is giuen them to profit in repentaunce and in the feare of GOD, they being throwne downe with iuſt ſorrowe for their offences, should pray to escape the punishment of the iudge. Cheefely the feeblenes or imperfection of faith corrupteth the prayers of the faithfull, vnlesse the tender mercie of God did help them. But it is no maruel that God pardoneth this default, which doth oftentimes exercise them ỹ be his with sharpe instructions, as if he should of purpose quench their faith. This is a most hard tentation, when the faithful are compelled to cry: how long wilt thou be angrie vpon the paier of thy seruant? as though the verie prayers made God more angrie. So when Ieremie saieth: The Lord hath shut out my praier, it is no doubt that he was shaken with a violent pang of trouble. Innumerable such examples are commonly found in the scriptures, by which appeareth that the faith of the holy ones was oftentimes mingled & tossed with doubtings, that in beleeuing & hoping they bewrayed yet some vnfaithfulnes: but because they come not so far as it is to be wished, they ought to indeuour so much the more that their faults being amended, they may dayly come neerer to the perfect rule of praying, & in the meane time to feele in how great a depth of euils they be drowned, which euē in the very remedies do get to themselues newe diseases: sith there is no prayer, which the Lorde doth not worthily loth, vnlesse he winke at the spots wherewith they are all besprinkled. I rehearse not these things to this end that the faithful shoulde carelesly pardon themselues any thing, but that in sharply chastising themselues they should trauel to ouercome these stops, & although Satan labour to stop vp al the wayes, that he may keepe them fom praying, yet neuertheless they should breake through, being certeinly perswaded, that although they be not vncumbred of all hinderances, yet their indeuours doe please God, & their prayers are allowed of him, so that they trauaile & bend themselues thitherward, whither they do not by and by attaine.

17 But forasmuch as there is no man worthie to present himselfe to God, and to come into his sight: the heauenly Father himselfe to deliuer vs both from shame & feare which shoulde haue throwne downe all our courages, hath giuen to vs his sonne Iesus Christ our Lorde, to be an aduocate & mediator with him for vs, by whose leading we may boldly come to him, trusting that we haue such an intercessor, nothing shall be denied vs which weaske in his name, as nothing can be denied him of the father. And hereunto must all bee referred whatsoeuer wee haue heretofore taught concerning faith: because as the promise setteth out vnto vs Christ for our Mediator, so vnlesse our hope of obteining stay vpon him, it taketh from it selfe the benefite of praying. For so soone as the terrible maiestie of God commeth in our minde, it is impossible but that we should tremble for feare, and the acknowledging of our owne vnworthinesse should driue vs farre away, till Christ come meane betweene vs and him, which may change the throne of dreadfull glorie into the throne of grace: as also the Apostle teacheth that we may be bolde to appeare with all confidence which shall obtaine mercye & find grace in help comming in fit season. And as there is a law set that we should call vpon God like as there is a promise giuen, that they shalbe heard which call vpon him: so are we peculiarly commaunded to call vpon him in the name of Christ, & we haue a promise set forth, that we shal obtaine that which we shal aske in his name. Hitherto (saith he) yee haue not asked any thing in my name: aske & ye shal receiue. In ỹ day ye shal aske in my name, & whatsoeuer ye aske, I wil do, that the father may be glorified in the sonne. Hereby it is plaine without controuersie, that they which call vpon God in any other name than of Christ, do stubbornly breake his commandements, & regarde his will as nothing, & that they haue no promise to obtaine any thing. For (as Paul saith) all the promises of God are in Christ, yea & Amen, that is to say, they are confirmed & fulfilled.

2. Cor. 1. 20.

No prayer effectual vvhich hath not Christ an aduocate.

18 And the circumstance of the time is diligently to be marked, where Christ commandeth his disciples to flee to intercession to him after that he is gone vp into heauen. In that houre (saith he) ye shal aske in my name. It is certaine that euen from the beginning none were heard that prayed, but by meane of the mediatour. For this reason the Lord had ordeined in the lawe, that the Priest alone entering into the sanctuarie, should beare vppon his shoulders the names of the tribes of Israel, and as many precious stones before his brest: but the people shoulde stande a farre off in the porch, and from thence shoulde ioyne their prayers with the priest. Yea and the sacrifice auailed hereto, that the prayers shoulde bee made sure and of force. Therefore that shadowish ceremonie of the lawe taught that wee are all shut out from the face of God, and that therefore wee neede a Mediatour, which may appeare in our name, and may beare vs vpon his shoulders, and hold vs fast bound to his brest, that wee may be heard in his person: then by sprinkeling of bloud our prayers are cleansed, which (as we haue alreadie saide) are neuer voide of filthinesse. And we see that the holy ones, when they desired to obteine any thing, grounded their hope vpon sacrifices, because they knewe them to bee the stablishinges of all requestes. Let him remember thy offering (saieth Dauid) and make thy burnt offering fatte. Herevpon is gathered ỹ God hath bin from the beginning appeased by the intercession of Christ, to receiue the praiers of the godlie. Why then doth Christ appoint a newe heire, when his Disciples shall beginne to praie in his name, but because this grace, as it is at this day more glorious, so deserueth more commendation with vs. And in this same sense he had saide a litle before. Hitherto yee haue not asked any thing in my name, nowe aske. Not that they vnderstoode nothing at all of the office of the Mediator (whereas all the Iewes were instructed in the principles) but because they had not yet clearely knowen that Christ by his ascending into heauen should be a surer patrone of the Church than hee was before. Therefore to comfort their griefe of his absence with some speciall fruite, hee claimeth to him selfe the office of an aduocate, and teacheth that they haue hitherto wanted the chiefe benefite, which it shall bee graunted them to enioye, when beeing ayded by his mediation, they shall more freelie call vppon GOD: as the Apostle saith that his newe waie is dedicate in his bloode. And so muche lesse excusable is our frowardnesse, vnlesse wee doe with both armes (as the saying is) embrace so inestimable a benefite, which is properly appoynted for vs.

Exod. 28. 9. & 10. 21

Heb. 10. 20

The intercession of Christ withstandeth not but that vve maie be 19 Nowe whereas he is the onelie way, and the onelie entrie by which it is graunted vs to come in vnto God: who so do swarue from this waie and forsake this entrie, for the there remaineth no waie nor entry to God: there is nothing left in his throne but wrath, iudgement, and terrour. Finally sith the Father hath marked him for our head, and guide, they which do in anie wise swarue or go away from him, do labour as much as in them lieth to race out and disfigure the marke which God hath imprinted. So Christ is set to be the onlie Mediator, by whose intercession the Father may be made to vs fauourable and easie to be entreated. Howbeit in the meane time the holy ones haue their intercessions left to them, whereby they doe mutually commende the safetie one of an other to God, of which the Apostle maketh mention: but those be such as hang vpon that one onelie intercession: so farre is it off, that they minish anie thing of it. For as they spring out of the affection of loue, wherewith we embrace one an other, as the members of one body: so they are also referred to the vnitie of the head. Sith therefore they also are made in the name of Christ, what doe they else but testifie that no man can be holpen by any prayers at al, but with the intercession of Christ? And as Christ with his intercession withstandeth not, but that in the Church we maie with praiers be aduocates one for another: so let this remaine certaine, that al the intercessors of the whole Church ought to be directed to that onlie one. Yea and for this cause we ought specially to beware of vnthankefulnes, because God pardoning our vnworthines, doth not only giue leaue to euery one of vs to praie for himself, but also admitteth vs to be entreaters one of another. For, where God appointeth aduocates for his Church which deserue worthily to be reiected if they praie priuatly euerie one for himselfe: what a pride were it to abuse this libertie to darken the honour of Christ?

aduocates one for another: so that we knowe that the force of our mutual prayers dependeth wholly vpon him without whō it were in vain to intreat either for others or for our selues.

1.Tit.2.1.

10 Nowe it is a meere trifling, which the Sophisters babble, that Christ is the Mediatour of redemption, but the faithfull are Mediatours of intercession. As though Christ hauing performed a Mediation for a time, hath giuen to his seruantes that eternall Mediatourshippe which shal neuer die. Full curteously forsooth they handle him, that cut awaie so litle a portion of honour from him. But the Scripture saith farre otherwise, with the simplicitie whereof a godly man ought to be contented, leauing these deceiuers. For where Iohn saith, that if anie do sinne, we haue an aduocate with the Father, Christ Iesus: doth he meane that he was once in old time a patrone for vs, and not rather assigneth to him an euerlasting intercessiō? How saie we to this that Paul also affirmeth, that he sitteth at the right hand of God the father and maketh intercession for vs? And when in an other place he calleth him the onlie Mediatour of God and men: meaneth he not of praiers, of which he had a litle before made mention? For when he had before saide that intercession must be made for all men: for proofe of that saying, he by and by addeth, that of all men there is one God and one Mediatour. And none otherwise doeth Augustine expounde it, when he saith thus: Christian men doe mutually commende themselues in their praiers. But he for whom none maketh intercession, but he for all, he is the onelie and true Mediatour. Paul the Apostle, though he were a principal member vnder the heade (yet because he was a member of the bodie of Christ, and knewe that the greatest and truest priest of the Church entred, not by a figure, into the inwarde places of the vaile, to the holie of holie places, Christ the onlie mediator not onlie of redemption but intercession also.

Neither doth he make himselfe a Mediatour betweene the people and God, but praieth that all the members of the body of Christ should mutually pray for him: because the members are carefull one for another: and if one member suffer, the other suffer with it, And that so the mutuall prayers one for an other of all the members yet trauailing in earth, may ascende to the heade which is gone before into heauen, in whome is appeasement for our sinnes. For if Paul were a Mediatour, the other Apostles should also be Mediatours: and if there were many Mediatours, then neither should Paules owne reason stande fast, in which he had saide, Ephe.4.3. For there is one God, one Mediatour of one GOD and mee, the man Christ, in whom we also are one if wee keepe the vnitie of faith in the bonde of peace. Againe in another place. But if thou seeke for a Priest, In Psal 94. he is aboue the heauens, where he maketh intercession for thee, which in earth died for thee. Yet doe we not dreame that he falleth downe at the fathers knees and in humble wise entreateth for vs: but we vnderstand with the Apostle, that he so appeareth before the face of GOD, that the vertue of his death auaileth to be a perpetuall intercession for vs: yet so that being entred into the sanctuarie of heauen, vnto the end of the ages of the world he alone carrieth to God the praiers of the people abiding a farre off in the porch.

No Saint hath entrie vnto God but by Christ: and therfore we cannot without intrie vnto him, make them our intercessors.

21 As touching the Saintes, which being dead in the flesh doe liue in Christ, if we giue any prayer at all to them, let vs not dreame that they themselues haue anie other way of asking, than Christ which onlie is the waie, or that their praiers be acceptable to God in anie other name. Therefore sith the Scripture calleth vs backe from al to Christ onelie: sith the heauenly fathers wil is to gather together all in him: it was a point of too much dulnesse, I will not say madnesse, so to desire to make for our selues an entrie by them, that we should be led away from him without whom euen they them selues haue no entrie open. But, that this hath beene vsually done in certaine ages past, & that it is at this day done whereseoeuer Papistry reigneth, who can denie? Their merites are from time to time thrust in, to obteine the good will of God: and for the most part, Christ being passed ouer, God is praied to by their names. Is not this, I beseech you, to conuey awaie to them the office of that onlie intercession, which we haue affirmed to belong to Christ alone? Againe, what Angell or Diuell euer reuciled to any man anie one syllable of this their intercession which these men faine? For in the Scripture is nothing of it. What is the reason therefore of inuenting it? Truelie when the witte of man so seeketh for it selfe succoures, wherewith we are not certified by the word of God, it plainlie bewraieth his owne distrustfulnes. If we appeale to all their consciences that are delighted with the intercession of saints, we shall finde that the same cómeth from no other ground, but because they are grieued with carefulnesse, as though Christ were in this behalfe either too weake or too rigorous. By which doutfulnesse first they dishonor Christ, and robbe him of the title of only Mediatour, which as it is giuen him of the Father for a singular prerogatiue, so ought not also to be conueyed away to any other. And in this verie doing they darken the glorie of his birth, they make voide his crosse, finally whatsoeuer he hath done or suffered they spoile and defraud of the due praise thereof: for all tend to this end that he may be in deede and be accompted the only Mediator. And therewith they cast away the goodnesse of God, which gaue himselfe to be their Father. For he is not their father, vnles they acknowledge Christ to be their brother. Which they vtterly denie vnlesse they thinke that he beareth a brotherly affection toward them, than which there can nothing be more kinde or tender. Wherefore the Scripture offereth only him to vs, sendeth vs to him, and stayeth vs in him. He (saith Ambrose) is our mouth, by which we speake to the Father: our eye, by which wee see the Father: our right hand, by which we offer vs to the father, otherwise than by whose intercession neither we nor al the Saints haue any thing with God. If they answere that the common prayers which they make in Churches, are ended with this conclusion adioyned, Through Christ our Lorde: this is a trifling shift: becaufe the intercession of Christ is no lesse prophaned when it is mingled with the prayers and merites of dead men, than if it were vtterly omitted and only dead men were in our mouth. Againe, in all their Letanies, Hymnes, & Proses, where no honour is left vngiuen to dead saints, there is no mention of Christ. Lib. de Isa. & anima.

22 But their foolish dulnesse proceeded so farre, that here we haue the nature of superstition expressed, which when it hath once shaken off the bridle, is wont to make no end of running astray. For after that men once begun to looke to the intercession of Saints, by litle and litle there was giuen to euery one his special doing, that according to the diuersitie of businesse, sometime one & sometime another should be called vpon to be intercessor: then they tooke to themselues euery one his peculiar Saint, into whose faith they committed themselues as it were to the keeping of safegarding Gods. And not only (wherewith the Prophet in the old time reproched Israel) gods were set vp according to the number of Cities, but euen to the number of persons. But sith the Saints referre their desires to the onely will of God, & behold it and rest vppon it: he thinketh foolishly, and fleshly, yea and slaunderously of them, which assigneth to them any other prayer, than whereby they pray for the comming of the kingdom of God: from which that is most farre distant which they faine to them, that euery one is with priuate affection more partially bent to his owne worshippers. At length many abstained not from horrible sacriledge, in calling nowe vpon them not as helpers but as principall rulers of their saluation. Loe whereunto foolish men do fall when they wander out of their true standing, that is, the worde of God. I speake not of the grosser monstruousnesses of vngodlinesse, wherin although they be abhominable to God, Angels, and men, they are not yet ashamed nor wearie of them. They falling downe before the image or picture of Barbara, Catherine, and such other, doe mumble Paser noster, Our father. This madnes the Pastors doe so not care to heale or restraine, that being allured with the sweete sauour of gaine they allowe it with reioysing at it. But although they turne from themselues the blame of so hainous an offence, yet by what coulour will they defende this that Ley or Medard are prayed How farre superstition hath gon in prayer vnto Saints. Iere. 2, 28. & 11, 13.

vnto,to looke downe vpon and helpe their ſeruantes from heauen? that the holy Virgin is prayed vnto, to commaund her ſonne to doe that which they aske?In the olde time it was forbidden in the Councell at Carthage, that at the altar no direct prayer ſhoulde be made to Sainctes. And it is likely that when the holy men could not altogether ſuppreſſe the force of the naughty cuſtome, yet they added at leaſt this reſtraint that the publike prayers ſhould not be corrupted with this forme: Saint Peter praye for vs. But how much further hath their diueliſh importunacie ranged, which ſticke not to giue away to dead men that which properly belongeth onely to God and Chriſt?

Vaine labouring to ground the interceſſion of Saincts vpon Scripture.

23 But whereas they trauel to bring to paſſe that ſuch interceſſion may ſeeme to be grounded vpon the authoritie of Scripture,therein they labour in vaine. We reade oftentimes(ſay they) of the prayers of Angels: and not that onely:but it is ſaide that the prayers of the faithfull are by their hands caried into the ſight of God But if they liſt to compare holy men departed out of this preſent life,to angels:they ſhould proue that they are miniſtring ſpirits,to whom is committed the miniſterie to looke to our ſafetie,to whom the charge is giuen to keepe vs in all our wayes,to go about vs, to admoniſh and counſell vs,to watch for vs: all which thinges are giuen to Angels, but not to them. How wrongfully they wrap vp dead holy men with Angels,appeareth largely by ſo many diuers offices,whereby the ſcripture putteth difference betweene ſome and other ſome. No man dare execute the office of an aduocate before an earthly iudge,vnleſſe he be admitted, from whence then haue wormes ſo great libertie,to thruſt vnto God thoſe for patrons to whome it is not read that the office is enioyned? Gods will was to appoint the Angels to looke vnto our ſafetie,wherefore they doe both frequent holy aſſemblies,and the Church is a ſtage to them, wherein they wonder at the diuerſe and manifold wiſedome of God. Who ſo conuey away to other that which is peculiar to them,verily they confound and peruert the order ſet by God,which ought to haue ben inuiolable. With like hanſomneſſe they proceede in alleaging other teſtimonies. God ſaid to Ieremie: If Moſes and Samuel ſhould ſtand before me,my ſoule is not to this people. How (ſay they) could he haue ſpoken thus of dead men,vnleſſe he knew that they made interceſſion for the liuing? But I on the contrarie ſide gather thus, that ſith it thereby appeareth that neither Moſes nor Samuel made interceſſion for the people of Iſrael, there was then no interceſſion at all of dead mē. For which of the Saints is to be thought to be careful for the ſafetie of the people, whē Moſes ceaſſeth, which in this behalfe farre paſſed all other when he liued. But if they follow ſuch ſleight ſuttleties, to ſay that the dead make interceſſiō for the liuing,becauſe the Lord ſaid, If they ſhould make interceſſiō: I will much more colourablie reaſon in this manner:In the extreme neceſſitie of the people Moſes made not interceſſion, of whom it is ſaid, if he ſhall make interceſſion,Therefore it is likely that none other maketh interceſſion,ſith they are al ſo farre from the gentleneſſe,goodnes,and fatherly carefulneſſe of Moſes. This forſooth they get with cauilling,that they be worſted with the ſame weapons,wherewith they thought themſelues gaily fenſed. But it is verie fonde that a ſimple ſentence ſhoulde ſo bee wreſted, becauſe the the Lord pronounceth onely that he will not spare the offences of the people, although they had seene Moses to be their patrone, or Samuel, to whose prayers he had shewed him selfe so tender. Which sense is most clearly gathered out of a like place of Ezechiel. It (saith the Lorde) these three men were in the citie, Noe, Daniel, and Iob, they shall not deliuer their sonnes and daughters in their righteousnes: but they shall deliuer onely their owne soules. Where it is no doubt that he meant if two of them should happen to reuiue againe, for the third was then aliue, namely Daniel, who (as it is knowen) did in the first florishing of his youth shew an incomparable example of godlinesse: let vs then leaue them whom the Scripture plainely sheweth to haue ended their course. Therefore Paul, when he speaketh of Dauid, teacheth not that he doth with praiers helpe his posterity, but only that he serued his owne time. Eze. 14. 14. Act. 13. 36.

24 They answere againe: shal we then take from them al praier of charitie, which in the whole course of their life breathed nothing but charity & mercie? Verilie as I will not curiously search what they doe, or what they muse vpō: so it is not likely that they are caried about hither & thither with diuerse & particular requests: but rather that they do with a staied and vnmoued will, long for the kingdom of God, which standeth no lesse in the destruction of the wicked, than in the saluation of the godlie. If this be true, it is no doubt that their charitie is conteined in the communiō of the bodie of Christ, & extēdeth no further, than the nature of that communion beareth. But now though I graunt that they praie in this manner for vs, yet they do not therefore depart from their owne quietnesse, to be diuersly drawen into earthly cares: and much lesse must we therefore by and by call vpon them. Neither doth it thereby followe that they must so doe, because men which liue in earth may commend one another in their praiers. For this doing serueth for nourishing of charity among them, when they doe as it were parte and mutually take vpon them their necessities among themselues. And this they do by the commandement of the Lord, and are not without a promise, which two things, haue alway the chiefe place in prayer. All such considerations are farre from the dead, whome when the Lord hath conueyed frō our companie, he hath left to vs no enterchange of doinges with them, nor to them with vs, so farre as we may gather by coniectures. But if any man allege, that it is impossible but that they must keepe the same charitie toward vs, as they be ioyned in one faith with vs: yet who hath reueiled that they haue so long eares to reach to our voices? & so pearcing eyes to watch our necessities? They prate in their shadowes I wot not what of ỹ brightnesse of the countenance of God extending his beames vpon them, in which as in a mirror they may from on high behold the matters of men beneath. But to affirme that, specially with such boldnesse as they dare, what is it else but to giue about by the drunken dreames of our owne braine, without his word to pearce & breake in to the hidden iudgements of God, & to tread the Scripture vnder feete which so oft pronounceth that the wisedome of the flesh is enemie to the wisedome of God, which wholly condemneth the vanitie of our natural wit, which willeth all our reason to be throwen downe, and the only will of God to be looked vnto of vs. A third argument for intercession of Saintes answeared. Ecc. 9. 5. & 6. Rom. 8. 6.

A fourth argument.

25 The other testimonies of Scripture which they bring to defend their lie, they most naughtily wrest. But Iacob (saide they) praieth that his name and the name of his Fathers Abraham & Isaac be called vpon ouer his posteritie. Gen.48.16. First let vs see what forme of calling vppon this is among the Israelites. For they cal not vpō their Fathers, to help them: but they beseech God to remember his seruants Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Therefore their example maketh nothing for them that speake to the Saintes themselues. But because those blockes (such is their dulnes) neither vnderstand what it is to call vpon the name of Iacob, nor why it is to be called vpon, it is no maruell if in the verie forme also they so childishly stumble. This maner of speach is not seldome found in the Scriptures. Esa.4.1. For Esaie saieth that the name of the men is called vpon ouer the women, when they haue them as their husbāds ynder whose charge & defence they liue. Therefore the calling vpon of the name of Abraham vpon the Israelites, standeth in this when they conuey their pedegree from him, & do with solemne memorie honor him for their author & parent. Neither doth Iacob this because he is careful for the enlarging of the renoume of his name: but for asmuch as he knew that the whole blessednesse of his posteritie consisted in the inheritaunce of the couenant which God had made with him: he wisheth that ỹ which he seeth should be the chiefe of all good things to them, that they be accounted in his kinred: For, that is nothing els but to conuey to them the succession of the couenant. They againe when they bring such remembrance into their prayers, do not flee to the intercessions of dead men: but do put the Lord in mind of his couenant, wherby the most kinde father hath promised ỹ he wil be fauorable and beneficiall to them, for Abraham, Isaac, and Iacobs sake. How litle the holy ones did otherwise leane vpon the merits of their father, the common saying of the Church in the Prophet testifieth, Thou art our Father, & Abraham knewe vs not, and Israel was ignorant of vs. Thou Lord art our Father & our redeemer. Esa.63.16. And when they say thus, they adde therewithall, Returne O Lord for thy seruants sakes: yet thinking vpon no intercession, but bending their mind to the benefite of the couenant. But nowe sith we haue the Lord Iesus, in whose hand the eternall couenant of mercie is not onelie made, but also confirmed to vs: whose name should we rather vse in our praiers? And because these good masters wil haue the Patriarches to be by these wordes made intercessours, I would faine knowe of them why in so great a route Abraham the Father of the Church hath no place at al among them. Out of what sinke they fetch their aduocates, it is not vnknowen. Let them answere me, how fit it is that Abraham, whom God preferred aboue al other, & whō he aduanced to the highest degree of honor, should be neglected & suppressed. Verily when it was euident that such vse was vnknowen to the old Church, they thought good for hiding of the newnesse to speak nothing of the olde Fathers: as though the diuersitie of names excused the new and forged manner. But whereas some obiect that God is praied vnto, to haue mercie on the people for Dauids sake, it doth so nothing at all make for defence of their error, that it is a most strong prose for the confutation thereof. For if we consider what person Dauid did beare: he is seuered from al the assembly of ỹ Saintes, that God should stablish the couenant which he hath made made in his hand. So both the couenant is rather considered than the man and vnder a figure the onely intercession of Christ is affirmed. For it is certaine that that which belonged only to Dauid, in so much as he was the image of Christ, accordeth not with any other.

16 But this forsooth mooueth some, that it is often times red that the praiers of Saintes haue beene heard. Why so? Euen because they praied. They trusted in thee (saith the Prophet) & they were saued: they cried, and they were not confounded. Therefore let vs also pray as they did, ỹ we may be hard as they were. But these men, otherwise than they ought, do wrongfullie reason, that none shalbe heard but they that haue once beene heard. How much better doth Iames say? Elias (saith he) was a man like to vs: and he prayed with praier that it should not rain, & it rained not vpon the earth in three yeres & sixe moneths. Againe he praied, & the heauen gaue raine, & the earth gaue her fruite. What? doth he gather any singular prerogatiue of Elias, to which we ought to flee? No. But he teacheth what is the continuall strength of godly & pure praier, to exhort vs likewise to pray. For wee do niggardlie construe the readines & gentlenesse of God in hearing them, vnlesse we be by such experiences cõfirmed into a more sure affiance of his promises, in which he promiseth that his eare shalbe enclined not to one, or two, nor yet to a fewe, but to alỹ call vpon his name. And so much lesse excusable is this foolishnes, because they seeme as it were of set purpose to despise so many admonitions of Scripture. Dauid was oft deliuered by the power of God Was it ỹ he should draw ỹ power to himself, ỹ we should be deliuered by his help? He himself affirmeth farre otherwise: The righteous looke for me, til thou render to me. Againe, The righteous shall see, & they shal reioyce, & trust in the Lord. Behold, this poore man hath cried to God, and he hath answered him: There be in the Psalmes many such praiers, in which to craue that which he requireth, he moueth god by this maner, that the righteous be not made ashamed, but manie by his example be raised vp to hope wel. Let vs now be contented with this one example. Therefore euery holie one shall pray to thee in fit time. Which place I haue so much the more willinglie rehearsed, because the lewd babblers which do let out to hire the seruice of their waged tongue haue not beene ashamed to alleage it to prooue the intercession of the dead. As though Dauid meant anie thing else, than to shewe the fruit that shall come of the mercifulnes and gentlenes of God, when he shall be heard. And in this kinde we must learne, that the experience of the grace of God, as well towarde our selues as other, is no slender helpe to confirme the credite of his promises. I haue vnrehearsed many places, where Dauid setteth before himselfe the benefits of God for matter of confidence, because the readers of the Psalms shal commonly find them without seeking. This selfe same thing had Iacob before taught by his owne example: I am vnworthie of all thy mercies, and of the trueth which thou hast performed to thy seruant. I with my staffe haue passed ouer this Iordane, & now I come forth with two bandes. Hee alleageth in deede the promise, but not alone: but he also ioyneth the effect, that he may the more courageously in time to come trust that God will be the same toward him. For he is not like to mortall men, which are wearie of their liberalitie, or whose abilitie

After that he hath giuen to God the praises of his saluation, he addeth ẏ he is a true speaker: because vnlesse he were continuallie like him selfe, there could not be gathered of his benefites a sufficiently strong reason of affiãce and calling vpon him But when we knowe that so oft as he helpeth vs, hee sheweth an example and proofe of his goodnes, we neede not to fear that our hope shall be put to shame or disapoint vs,

The directing of prayers vnto Saints departed is the offering of iniury vnto God, & of disgrace vnto Christes intercession, vvhich by the mutuall praiers of Saintes as yet liuing is not preiudiced.

27 Let this be the summe. Whereas the scripture setteth out this vntovs for the cheefe point in the worshippinp of God, (as refusing all sacrifices, he requireth of vs this dutie of godlines) prayer is not without manifest sacriledge directed to other. Wherfore also it is saide in the Psalme. If we stretch forth our hands to a strange God, shal not God require these things? Again, whereas God will not bee called vpon, but of Fayth, and expresly commandeth prayers to be framed according to the rule of his word: finallie whereas Faith founded vpõ the word, is the mother of right praier: so soon as we swarue from the word, our prayer must needs be corrupted. But it is already shewed, ẏ if the whole scripture be sought, this honor is therin challenged to God only. As touching the office of intercession, we haue also shewed ẏ it is peculiar to Christe, and ẏ there is no praier acceptable to God, but which ẏ mediator halloweth. And though the faithful do one for another offer praiers to God for their brethrẽ, we haue shewed that this abateth nothing frõ the only intercession of Christ: because they altogether standing vpon it do commend both themselues and other to God. Moreouer we haue taught ẏ this is vnfitly drawn to dead men, to whom we neuer read ẏ it hath bin cõmanded that they should pray for vs. The scripture doth oftentimes exhort vs to mutuall doings of this dutie one for another: but of dead men there is not so much as one syllable: yea and Iames ioyning these two thinges together, that we should confesse ourselues among our selues, and mutually pray one for another, doth secretely exclude dead men. Therefore to condemne this errour, this one reason sufficeth, that the beginning of praying rightly, springeth out of faith, and that Faith commeth of the hearing of the word of God, where is no mention of the fained intercession, because superstition hath rashlie gotten to it selfe patrons which were not giuen thẽ of God. For whereas the Scripture is full of many formes of prayer, there is no example found of this patronship, without which in the papacy they beleue ẏ there is no praier. Moreouer it is certaine that this superstitiõ hath grown of distrustfulnes either because they were not content with Christ to be their intercessor, or haue altogether robbed him of his praise. And this latter point is easilie prooued by their shamelesnes: because they haue no other stronger argument to proue that we haue need of the intercession of Saints, than when they obiect that we are vnworthie of familiar accesse to God. Which we in deede grant to be most true: but thereupon we gather, that they leaue nothing to Christe, which esteeme his intercession nothing woorth, vnlesse there be adioyned George, Hypolite, or such other visors.

Iam.5.8.

The kindes of prayer.

28 But although prayer properlie signifieth only wishes and petitions: yet there is so great affinity betwene petition & thanksgiuing, that they may be fitly fitly comprehended both vnder one name. For, these speciall sortes which Paul rehearseth, fall vnder the first part of this diuision. With asking & craving wee powre forth our desires before GOD, requiring as well those thinges that seeme to spread abroade his glorie and set foorth his name, as the benefits ỹ are profitable to our vse. With giuing of thankes, we doe with due praise magnifie his good doings toward vs, acknowledging to bee receyued of his liberalitie whatsoeuer good things do come to vs. Therefore Dauid comprehended these two partes togither, saying: Call vpon mee in the day of necessitie: I will deliuer thee, & thou shalt glorifie me. The Scripture not in vaine commandeth vs to vse both. For we haue said in another place, ỹ our nedines is so great, & the experience it self crieth out ỹ we are on euery side pinched & pressed with so many & so great distresses, ỹ all haue cause enough why they should both sigh to God, & in humble wise call vpon him. For though they be free from aduersities, yet the giltines of their wicked doings, & their innumerable assaults of tentations ought to pricke forward the most holy to aske remedie. But in the sacrifice of praise & thanksgiuing there can be no interruption without hainous sinne, forasmuch as God cesseth not to heape vpon diuerse men diuerse benefites to driue vs though we be slack and slowe, to thankfulnes. Finally so great and so plenteous largesse of his benefits doeth in a manner ouerwhelme vs: there are so many and so great miracles of his seene on euerie side which way soeuer thou turne thee, ỹ we neuer want ground and matter of prayse & thanksgiuing. And, that these things may be somewhat plainelier declared: sith all our hopes and wealth stand in God (which we haue before sufficiently proued) ỹ neither we nor all our things can be in prosperitie but by his blessing: we must continually commit our selues and all our things to him. Then, whatsoeuer we purpose, speake, or do, let vs purpose, speake, & do vnder his hand & wil, finally vnder the hope of his help. For, all are pronounced accursed of God, which deuise or determine any purposes vpon trust of themselues or of any other, which without his willl, & without calling vpon him do enterprise or attempt to begin any thing. And whereas we haue diuerse times alreadie said, that hee is duely honoured when he is acknowledged the authour of all good thinges: therupon followeth that all those thinges are so to be receiued at his hande, that we yeld continuall thanks for them: & that there is no other right way for vs to vse his benefits, which flow & proceed from his liberalitie to no other end, but ỹ we should be continually busied in confessing his praise & giuing of thankes. For Paul, when he testifieth that they are sanctified by the word & prayer, doth therewithall signifie that they are not holy & cleane to vs without ỹ word & praier, vnderstanding by ỹ word, faith by figure. Therefore Dauid saith verie wel, when hauing receiued ỹ liberalitie of the Lord, he declareth that there is giuen him into his mouth a new song: whereby verily he signifieth that it is a malitious silence, if we passe ouer any of his benefits without praise: sith he so oft giueth vs matter to say good of him, as he doth good to vs. As also Esey setting out the singular grace of God, exhorteth the faithfull to a newe & vnwonted song. In which sense Dauid saith in another place, Lord open thou my lippes, and my mouth shall shewe foorth thy praise. Likewise Ezechias and Ionas testifie that this shalbe to them the end of their

of their deliuerance, to celebrate the goodnes of God with songs in the temple. This same lawe Dauid prescribeth to all the godly. What shall I repay to the Lorde (saith he) for all the things that he hath bestowed vpon me? I will take the cup of saluations, and will call vpon the name of the Lord. And the same lawe the Church followeth in another Psalme, Saue vs our God, that we may confesse to thy name and glorie in thy praise. Again, he hath looked vnto the prayer of the solitarie, and he hath not despised their prayers. This shalbe written to the generation that shall followe, and the people created shal praise the Lord, that they may declare his name in him and his prayse in Hierusalem. Yea so oft as the faithful beseech God to doe for his names sake: as they professe themselues vnworthy to obtaine any thing in their owne name, so thy bind themselues to giue thankes, and they promise that this shalbe to them the right vse of the bountifulnes of God that they shalbe publishers of it. So Osee speaking of the redemption to come of the Church, saith: Take away iniquitie O God, and lift vp good: and we will pay the calues of lippes. And the benefits of God do not onely claime to themselues the prayse of the tongue, but also do naturally procure loue. I haue loued (saith Dauid) because the Lord hath heard the voyce of my prayer. Againe, in an other place, rehearsing the helpes which he had felt, he saith: I wil loue thee O God my strength, Neither shall the prayses euer please God, which shall not flow out of this sweetenes of loue. Yea and also we must holde fast this saying of Paul, that all prayers are wrongful and faultie to which is not adioyned giuing of thankes. For thus he saith, in all prayer and beseeching with thanksgiuing let your petitions, be knowen with God. For sith testines, tediousnes, impatience, bitternes of griefe, and feare do moue many in praying to murmure, he commandeth that our affections be so tempered, that the faithful ere they haue obtained that which they desire, should neuertheless cheerefully blesse God. If this knot ought to haue place in things in a maner contrarie, with so much more holy band doeth God bind vs to sing his praises, so oft as he maketh vs to enioy our requestes. But as wee haue taught that our prayers are hallowed by the intercession of Christ, which otherwise should be vncleane: so the Apostle, where he commaundeth vs to offer a sacrifice of praise by Christ, putteth in mind ỹ we haue not a mouth cleane enough to praise the name of God, vnlesse the priesthoode of Christ become the meane. Whereupon we gather that men haue beene monstrously bewitched in the papacie, where the greater part marueileth ỹ Christ is called an aduocate. This is ỹ cause why Paul commandeth both to pray and to giue thanks without ceasing: namely for that he willeth that with so great continuing as may be, at euerie time in euerie place, in all matters and businesses, the prayers of al men should be lifted vp to God, which may both looke for all things at his hand & yeld to him the praise of all thinges, as he offereth vs continuall matter to praise and pray.

Order for assiduitie of prayer both priuate and publique in the Church.

29 But this continuall diligence of praying, although it spetially concerne the proper and priuate prayers of euery man, yet somewhat also pertaineth to the publike prayers of the Church. But those can neither be continuall, nor ought otherwise to be done than according to the politike order ỹ shall by common consent be agreed vpon among all. I grant the same in deede, deede. For therfore certaine houres are set & appointed, as indifferent with God, so necessary for the vses of men, that the commoditie of all men may be prouided for, & all things (according to the saying of Paul) may be cõli- 1.Cor.15.40.

ly and orderly done in the Church. But this maketh nothing to the contrarie but that euerie Church ought both from time to time to stirre vp it selfe to often vse of prayers, & when it is admonished by any greater necessity, to be feruent with more earnest endeuour. As for perseuerance which hath a great affinitie with continuall diligence, thete shall be a fitte place to speak of it about the end. Nowe these make nothing for the much babling which Christe willed that we should be forbidden. For he forbiddeth not to continue long, nor oft, nor with much affection in prayers, but that we shoulde not trust that we may wring anie thing out of God, by dulling his eares with Math.6.7.
much babling talke, as if he were to be perswaded after the maner of men. For we know that Hypocrites, because they do not consider that they haue to doe with God, doe no lesse make a pompous shewe in their prayers than in a triumph. For, the Pharisee which thanked God that he was not like to other men, without doubt reioyced at himselfe in the eyes of men, as if hee would by prayer seek to get a fame of holinesse. Hereupon came that much babling, which at this day vpon a like cause is vsed in the papacie: while some do vainlie spend the time in repeating the same prayers, & other some do set out themselues among the people with a long heape of words. Sith this babling childishlie mocketh God, it is no maruel that it is forbidden out of the Church, to the end that nothing shoulde there be vsed but earnest and proceeding from the bottome of the heart. Of a neere kind and like to this corruption is there another, which Christ condemneth with this, namely that hypocrites for boasting sake doe seeke to haue manie witnesses, and do rather occupie the market place to pray in, than their praiers shoulde want the praise of the worlde. But whereas we haue already shewed that this is the marke that prayer shooteth at, that our mindes may be carried vpward to God, both to confession of praise and to crauing of help: thereby we may vnderstand that the cheefe duties thereof doe stande in the minde and the heart, or rather that praier it self is properly an affectiõ of the inward hart, which is powred forth & laid open before God the searcher of harts. Wher- Math.6.6.
fore (as it is alreadie said) the heauenly schoolemaster, when he minded to set out the best rule of praying, commanded vs to go into our chamber, and there the doore being shut to pray to our father which is in secret, that our Father which is in secrete may heare vs. For when he hath drawne them away from the example of hypocrits, which with ambitious boasting shew of praiers sought the fauor of men, he therwithal addeth what is better, namelie to enter into our chamber, and there to pray the doore being shutte. In which words (as I expound them) he willed vs to seeke solitary being, which may help vs to descend and to enter throughly with our whole thought into our heart, promising to the affections of our heart that God shal be nere vs whose temples our bodies ought to be. For he meant not to denie but that it is expedient also to pray in other places: but he shewerh that praier is a certain secret thing, which both is cheefly placed in the soule, & requireth the quiet therof far from al troubles of cares. Not without cause ther-

1.Tim.2.8 hands. Finallie, thus it is to be holden, that whoſoeuer refuſeth to pray in the holy aſſembly of the godly, he knoweth not what it is to pray apart, or in ſolitarines, or at home. Again, that he that neglecteth to pray alone or priuatlie how diligẽtly ſoeuer he haũt publike aſſemblies, doth ther make but vain praiers: becauſe he giueth more to the opinion of mẽ than to ỹ ſecret iudgment of God. In the meane time, that the common praiers of the Churche ſhould not grow into contempt, God in olde time garniſhed them with glo-

For, by this ſaying he both taught that the chiefe part of the worſhipping of him is the dutie of praier: and that to the end that the faithfull ſhoulde with one conſent exerciſe thẽſelues in it, the temple was ſet vp as a ſtandard for thẽ.
Pſal.65.2 There was alſo added a notable promiſe: There abideth for thee, O God, praiſe in Sion: & to thee the vowe ſhalbe paide. By which words the Prophet telleth vs, that the prayers of the Church are neuer void: becauſe the Lord alway miniſtreth to his people matter to ſing vpon with ioy. But although the ſhadowes of the lawe are ceaſed: yet becauſe the Lordes will was by this ceremonie to nouriſh among vs alſo the vnity of faith, it is no doubt that the ſame promiſe belongeth to vs, which both Chriſte hath ſtabliſhed with his owne mouth, and Paul teacheth that it is of force for euer.

Churches ordeined to be houſes of praier.

30 Now as the Lord by his word commandeth the faithfull to vſe common praier: ſo there muſt be cõmon temples appointed for the vſing of thẽ: where who ſo refuſe to cõmunicate their praier with ỹ people of God, there is no cauſe why they ſhould abuſe this pretence, that they enter into their Mat.18.20 chamber that they may obey the cõmandemẽt of the Lord. For he that promiſeth that he will do whatſoeuer two or three ſhall ask being gathered together in his name, teſtifieth that he deſpiſeth not praiers openly made: ſo that boaſting and ſeeking of glorie of men be abſent, ſo that vnfained and true affection be preſent which dwelleth in the ſecret of the heart. If this be the right vſe of temples (as truely it is) wee muſt again beware that neither (as they haue begun in certain ages paſt to be accounted) we take them for the proper dwelling places of God from whence he may more nerelie bend his eare vnto vs: nor faine to them I wote not what ſecrete holineſſe, which may make our praier more holy before God. For ſith we our ſelues be the true temples of God we muſt pray in our ſelues if we wil cal vpon God in his owne holie temple. As for that groſſeneſſe, let vs which haue a commaundement to call vpon the Lorde in Spirite and trueth without difference of

There was in deede a Temple in old time by the commaundement of God for offring of praiers and ſacrifices: but ỹ was at ſuch time as the truth lay hid figured vnder ſuch ſhadows, which being now liuely expreſſed vnto vs doth not ſuffer vs to ſticke in any materiall temple. Neither was the temple giuen to the Iewes themselues with this condition, that they should inclose the presence of God, within the walles thereof, but whereby they might be exercised to beholde the image of the true temple. Therefore they, which in any part thought that God dwelleth in temples made with handes, were sharpely rebuked of Esay and Stephen.

The sound of the voyce without the inwarde feeling of the hart in prayer auaileth not.

31 Here moreouer it is more than euident, that neither voyce nor song, if they be vsed in prayer, haue any force, or do any whit profite before God, vnlesse they proceede from the deepe affection of the heart. But rather they prouoke his wrath against vs, if they come onely from the lippes and out of the throte: forasmuch as that is to abuse his holy name, and to make a mockerie of his maiestie: as we gather out of the wordes of Esay, which although they extende further, yet pertaine also to reproue this fault. This people (saith he) commeth neere to me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lippes: but their heart is farre from mee: and they haue feared me with the commaundement and doctrine of men. Therefore beholde I will make in this people a miracle great and to be wondered at. For, wisdome shall perish from their wise men, and the prudence of the Elders shall vanish away. Neyther yet doe wee here condemne voice or singing, but rather do highly commende them, so that they accompanie the affection of the minde. For so they exercise the minde and holde it intentiue in thinking vpon God: which as it is slipperie and rolling, easily slacketh and is diuersely drawen vnlesse it be stayed with diuerse helpes. Moreouer whereas the glorie of God ought after a certaine manner to shine in all the partes of our bodie, it specially behoueth that the tongue be applied and auowed to this seruice both in singing and in speaking which is properly created to shewe foorth and display the praise of God: But the cheefe vse of the tongue is in publike prayers, which are made in the assemblie of the godly: which tende to this ende, that we may al with one common voyce, and as it were with one mouth together glorifie God whome we worshippe with one spirite and one faith: and that openly, that all men mutually, euerie one of his brother, may receiue the cõfession of Faith, to the example whereof they may bee both allured and stirred.

The vse of singing in the Church.

32 As for the vse of singing in Churches (that I may touch this also by the way) it is certaine that it is not only most auncient: but that it was also in vse among the Apostles, wee may gather by these words of Paul, I wil sing in Spirite, I will sing also in minde. Againe to the Colossians, Teaching and admonishing you, mutually in hymnes, Psalmes, and spirituall songes, singing with grace in your heartes to the Lorde. For in the first place hee teacheth that we should sing with voyce and heart: in the other hee commendeth spirituall songes, wherewith the godly doe mutually edifie themselues. Yet that it was not vniuersall, Augustine testifieth, which reporteth that in the time of Ambrose the Church of Millian first began to sing, when while Iustina the mother of Valentinian cruelly raged against the true faith, the people more vsed watchinges than they were wont: and that afterward the other westerne Churches followed. For he had a litle before sayde that this manner came from the Easterne Churches. He telleth also in his seconde cond booke of Retractations that it was in his time receiued in Africa. One Hilarie (saith he) a ruler did in euerie place whereſoeuer he could, with malicious blaming raile at the manner which then began to be at Carthage, that the hymnes at the altar ſhould be pronounced out of the booke of Pſalmes, either before the oblation, or when that which had ben offered was diſtributed to the people. Him I anſwered at the commaundement of my brethren. And truly if ſong be tempered to that grauitie which becommeth the preſence of God and Angels, it both procureth dignitie and grace to the holy actions, and much auaileth to ſtirre vp the mindes to true affection and feruentnes of praying. But we muſt diligently beware that our eares be not more heedefully bent to the note, than our mindes to the ſpirituall ſenſe of the wordes. With which perill Auguſtine in a certrine place ſaith that he was ſo mooued, that hee ſometime wiſhed that the manner which Athanaſius kept ſhould be eſtabliſhed, which commanded that the reader ſhould ſound his words with ſo ſmal a bowing of his voyce, that it ſhould be liker to one ỹ readeth than to one that ſingeth. But when he remembred howe much profite he himſelf had receiued by ſinging, he inclined to the other ſide. Therefore vſing this moderation, there is no doubt that it is a moſt holy and profitable ordinance. As on the other ſide what ſonges ſo euer are framed onely to ſweeteneſſe and delight of the eares, they both become not the maieſtie of the Church, and cannot but highly deſpleaſe God.

Confeſſ. lib. 10. cap. 33.

Publique prayer in vvhat tongue and vvith vvhat geſture to be made.

33 Whereby it alſo plainely appeareth that common prayers are to bee ſpoken not in Greeke among Latine men, not in Latine among Frenchmen or Engliſhmen (as it hath heretofore beene ech where commonly done) but in ỹ peoples mother tongue, which cõmonly may be vnderſtod of the whole aſſemblie: foraſmuch as it ought to be done to the edifying of the whole Church, which receiue no fruite at all of a ſound not vnderſtanded. But they which haue no regarde neither of charitie nor of humanitie, ſhould at leaſt haue beene ſomewhat mooued with the authoritie of Paul, whoſe words are nothing doubtfull. If thou bleſſe (ſaith he) in ſpirit, how ſhall he that filleth the place of an vnlearned man anſwere Amen to thy bleſſing, ſith he knoweth not what thou ſayſt? For thou in deede giueſt thankes, but the other is not edified. Who therefore can ſufficiently wonder at the vnbridled licentiouſnes of the Papiſtes, which, the Apoſtle ſo openly crying out againſt it, feare not to roare out in a ſtrãge tongue moſt babling praiers, in which they themſelues ſometime vnderſtande not one ſyllable, nor would haue otherfolkes to vnderſtand it? But Paul teacheth that wee ought to do otherwiſe. How then? I will pray (ſaith he) with ſpirite, I will pray alſo with mind: I will ſing with ſpirit: I wil ſing alſo with minde: ſignifying by the name of ſpirite, the ſinguler gift of tongues, which many beeing endued with, abuſed it, when they ſeuered it from the mind, that is, from vnderſtanding. But this we muſt altogether thinke, that it is by no meane poſsible, neither in publike nor in priuate prayer, but that the tongue without the heart muſt highly diſpleaſe God. Moreouer we muſt think that the mind ought to be kindled with feruentnes of thought, that it may far ſurmount all that the tongue may expreſſe with vtterance. Finally that the tongue is not neceſſarie at all for priuate prayer, but ſo farre as the inward feeling either is not able to ſuffice

to enkindle it self, or the vehemencie of inkindling violently carieth ỹ worke of the tongue with it. For though verie good prayers sometime be without voice, yet oftentimes betideth, that when the affection of the minde is fervent, both the tongue breaketh foorth into voice, and the other members into gesturing without excessiue shewe. Hereupon came the muttering of Hanne, & such a like thing al the holy ones alway feele in themselues, when they burst out into broken & vnperfect voices. As for the gestures of the bodie which are wont to be vsed in prayer (as kneeling & vncouering of the head) they are exercises by which we endeuour to rise vp to a greater reuerencing of God. 1.Sam.1.13.

34 Nowe wee must learne not onely a more certaine rule, but also the verie forme of praying: namely the same, which the heauenly father hath taught vs by his beloued sonne: wherein wee may acknowledge his vnmeasurable goodnesse & kindnesse. For beside this he warneth and exhorteth vs to seeke him in al our necessitie (as children are wont to flie to their fathers defence, so oft as they be troubled with any distresse) because hee sawe that he did not sufficiently perceiue this, howe slender our pouertie was, what were meete to be asked, and what were for our profite: he prouided also for this our ignorance, and what our capacitie wanted, he supplied & furnished of his owne. For he hath prescribed to vs a forme wherin he hath as in a Table set out whatsoeuer we may desire of him, whatsoeuer vaileth for our profite, and whatsoeuer is necessarie to aske. Of which his gentlenesse wee receiue a great fruite of comfort that we vnderstande that we aske no inconuenient thing, no vnseming or vnfit thing, finally nothing that is not acceptable to him, sith we aske in a maner after his owne mouth. When Plato saw the follie of men in making requests to God, which being graunted, it many times befell much to their owne hurt: he pronounced that this is the best maner of praying taken out of the olde Poete, King Iuppiter giue vnto vs the best things both when we aske them, and when wee doe not aske them, but commaund euil things to be away from vs euen when we aske them. And verily the heathen man is wise in this, that he iudgeth howe perillous it is to aske of the Lord that which our owne desire moueth vs: and therewithal he bewrayeth our vnhappie case, that wee cannot once open our mouthes before God without danger, vnlesse the spirite do instruct vs to a right rule of praying. And in so much greater estimation this priuilege is worthie to bee had of vs, sith the onely begotten sonne of God ministreth wordes into our mouth which may deliuer our mind from all doubting. A prescript forme of prayer deliuered by Christ. Mat.6.9. Luk.11.9. Alcib.vel de voto. Rom.8.26.

35 This whether you cal it forme or rule of praying is made of fixe petitions. For, the cause why I agree not to them that diuide it into seuen partes, is this, that by putting in this aduersatiue word (But) it seemeth that the Euangelist meant to ioyne these two peeces together, as if he had said: Suffer vs not to be oppressed with tentation, but rather helpe our weaknes, & deliuer vs, that we faint not. The old writers also think on our side, so that nowe that which is in Matthew added in the seuenth place, is by way of declaratiõ to be ioyned to the fixt petition. But although the whole prayer is such that in euery part of it regard is specially to be had of the glorie of God, yet the three first petitions are peculiarly appointed to Gods glory, which alone we The diuision of the Lords prayer into partes. Aug. in Enchi. ad Laur. ca. 116. Chrys. aut. oper. imperf.

ought in them to looke vnto without any respect (as they say) of our owne profite. The other three haue care of vs, and are properly assigned to aske those things that are for our profit. And when we pray that the name of god be hallowed: because God will prooue whether hee be loued and honoured of vs freely or for hope of rewarde, we must then thinke nothing of our own commoditie, but his glorie must be set before vs, which alone wee must beholde with fixed eyes: and no otherwise ought wee to bee minded in the other prayers of this sort. And euen this turneth to our great profite, that when it is sanctified as wee praye, it is also likewise made our sanctification. But our eyes (as it is saide) must winke and after a certaine manner bee blinde at such profite, so as they may not once looke at it: that if all hope of our priuate benefite were cut off, yet wee shoulde not cease to wish and pray for this sanctification and other things which pertaine to the glorie of God. As it is seene in the examples of Moses and Paul, to whome it was not greeuous to turne away their mindes and eyes from themselues, & with vehement and inflamed zeale to wish their owne destruction, that though it were with their owne losse they might auaunce the glorie & kingdome of God. On the other side when wee pray that our daily breade bee giuen vs: although wee wishe that which is for our owne commoditie, yet here also wee ought cheefely to seeke the glorie of God, so that wee should not aske it vnlesse it might turne to his glorie. Nowe let vs come to the declaring of the payer it selfe.

Rom.9.3.

Our Father which art in heauen.

A comfort vnto Christians that they may call God their father.

36 First in the verie entrie wee meete with this which wee saide before that all prayer ought none otherwise to be offered of vs to God than in the name of Christ, as it can by no other name be made acceptable vnto him. For since wee call him father, truely wee alledge for vs the name of Christ. For by what boldnesse might any man call God, Father? who shoulde burst foorth into so great rashnesse, to take to himselfe the honour of the Sonne of God, vnlesse we were adopted the children of grace in Christ? Which being the true Sonne, is giuen of him to vs to be our brother: that that which he hath proper by nature, may by the benefite of adoption be made ours, if we doe with sure faith embrace so great bountifulnesse. As Iohn sayth, that power is giuen to them which beleeue in ỹ name of the only begotten sonne of God, that they also may be made the children of God. Therefore he both calleth himselfe our Father, and will be so called of vs, by this sweetenesse of name deliuering vs from all distrust, sith there can no where be founde any greater affection of loue than in a father. Therefore hee could by no surer example testifie his vnmeasurable deare loue towarde vs than by this that wee are named the sonnes of God. But his loue is so much greater & more excellent towarde vs than all loue of our parentes, as hee passeth all men in goodnesse and mercie: that if al the fathers that are in the earth, hauing shaken off all feeling of fatherly naturalnesse, woulde forsake their children, yet hee will neuer faile vs, because hee cannot denie himselfe. For wee haue his promise, If you being euill can giue good giftes to your children, how howe much more can your Father which is in heauen? Againe in the Prophet, Can a mother forget her children? Though she forget them, yet I will not forget thee. If we be his childrē: then as a child cannot giue himself into the tuition of a stranger & forein man, vnlesse he cōplaine either of the crueltie or pouertie of his father: so we cannot seek succours from els where thā from him alone, vnlesse we reproch him with pouertie and want of ability, or with crueltie or too extreame rigorousnesse. Esa. 39. 15.

37 Neither let vs alleadge that we are worthily made feareful with conscience of sinnes, which may make a Father be he neuer so merciful & kind, daily to be displeased. For if among men the sonne can with no better aduocate pleade his cause to his Father, and by no better meane get & recouer his fauour being lost, than if he himselfe humbly and lowly, acknowledging his fault, do beseech his fathers mercie (for then the fatherly bowels cā not hide thēselues but must be moued at such praiers) what shall that father of mercies do, and the God of al comfort? shal not he rather heare the teares and groninges of his children intreating for themselues (specially sith hee doth cal and exhort vs to doe so) than anie other intercessions whatsoeuer they be to the succour whereof they doe so fearefully flee, not without some shewe of despaire, because they distrust of the kindnes and mercifulnesse of their father? This ouerflowing plentie of fatherlie kindnes he depainteth & setteth out vnto vs in the parable, where the Father louingly embraceth the sonne that had estranged himselfe from him, that had riotously wasted his substance, that had euery waie grieuously offended against him: and he tarieth not til he do with words craue pardon, but he himselfe preuenteth him, knoweth him a farre off returning, of his own will goeth to meete him, comforteth him and receiueth him into fauour. For, setting out in a man this example of so great gentlenes, he minded to teach vs how much more plentifull kindnes we ought to looke for at his hande, who is not onely a Father, but also the best and most mercifull of all Fathers, howsoeuer we be vnkind, rebellious and naughty childrē: so that yet we cast our selues vpon his mercie. And that he might make it to be more assuredly beleeued, that he is such a Father to vs, if we be Christians: he willed not onlie to be called Father, but also by expresse name Our Father: as if we might thus talke with him, O Father which hast so great naturall kindenesse toward thy children, so great easinesse to pardon, wee thy children call to thee and praie to thee, beeing assured and fully perswaded, that thou bearest no other affection to vs than fatherly, howsoeuer we be vnworthie of such a father. But because the small capacities of our heart conceiue not so great vnmeasurablenesse of fauour, not onlie Christ is to vs a pledge and earnest of our adoption, but also he giueth vs the Spirit for witnesse of the same adoption, through whom we maie with a free and lowd voice crie Abba, Father. So oft therefore as anie delay shall withstand vs, let vs remember to aske of him, that correcting our fearfulnesse he will set before vs that Spirit of couragiousnes to be our guide to praie boldlie. Luk. 15. 20. Gal. 4. 6.

What the name of a father doeth import & teach.

2. Cor. 1. 3.

38 Whereas we are not so taught that euery one should seuerally cal him his owne father, but rather that we should al in common together call him Our Father: thereby we are put in minde, how great affection of brotherly

When we call God our Father the holy felowshippe which vvee haue one vvith another u commended and vve admonished to praie for others not onlie for our selues.

loue ought to be among vs, which are altogether by one same right of mercy and liberality, the children of such a Father. For we al haue one common Father, from whom commeth whatsoeuer good thing may betide vnto vs: there ought to be nothing seuerall among vs, which wee are not readie with great cheerefulnesse of minde to communicate one to another, so much as neede requireth. Nowe if we be so desirous, as we ought to be, to reach our hand and help one to another, there is nothing wherein we may more profit our brethren, than to commende them to the care and prouidence of the most good father, who being well pleased and fauoring, nothing at all can be wanted. And verily euen this same we owe to our Father. For as he that truly & hartily loueth any Father of household, doth also embrace his whole household, with loue and good will: likewise what loue and affection we beare to this heauenlie Father, we must shew toward his people, his household & his inheritance, which he hath so honored, that he hath called it the fulnesse of his onelie begotten Sonne. Let a Christian man therefore frame his praiers by this rule, that they be common, and maie comprehende all them that be brethren in Christ with him: and not onelie those whom he presently seeth and knoweth to be such, but al men that liue vpon earth: of whom, what God hath determined, it is out of our knowledge: sauing that it is no lesse godly than naturall to wish the best to them, & hope the best of them. Howbeit we ought with a certain singular affection to beare a speciall inclination to the of the household of faith, whom the Apostle hath in euery thing peculiarly commended vnto vs. In a summe, All our praiers ought to be so made, that they haue respect to that communitie which our Lord hath stablished in his kingdome and his house.

Gal. 6. 10.

The conteiuing of praier in common u no hinderin e to the priuat & particular commēding of our owne or our brethrens necessities vnto God.

39 Yet this withstandeth not, but that we maie specially praie both for our selues and for certaine other: so that yet our minde depart not from hauing an eie to this communitie, nor once swarue from it, but apply al things vnto it. For though they be singularly spoken in forme, yet because they are directed to that marke, they cease not to be common. Al this maie be easily vnderstoode by a like example. The commaundement of God is general, to relieue the neede of al poore: and yet they obey this commandement which to this end doe helpe their pouerty whom they knowe or see to be in neede, although they passe ouer many whō they see to be pressed with no lesse necessitie: either because they can not knowe all, or be not able to help al. After this maner they also do not against the wil of God, which hauing regard vnto & thinking vpon this common fellowship of the Church, do make such particular praiers, by which they do with a cōmon mind in particular words, commend to God themselues or other, whose necessitie God willed to bee more neerely knowen to them. Howbeit al thinges are not like in praier & in bestowing of goods. For, the liberality of giuing cānot be vsed but toward them whose need we haue perceiued: but with praiers we may help euen thē that are most strange & most vnknowē to vs, by how great a space of ground soeuer they be distant from vs. This is done by the general forme of prayer, wherein all the children of God are contained, among whom they also are. Hereto we may apply ẏ which Paul exhorteth the faithful of his time, ẏ they lift vp euery where pure hands without strife: because whē he warneth thē ẏ strife ſtrife ſhutteth the gate againſt prayers, he willeth them with one minde to lay their petitions in common together.

40 It is added, that he is in heauen. Wherupon it is not by and by to be gathered that he is bound faſt incloſed & compaſſed with the circle of heauen, as within certaine barres. For Salomon alſo confeſſeth that the heauens of heauens cannot containe him. And he himſelfe ſaith by the Prophet that heauen is his ſeate, and the earth his footeſtoole. Whereby verily he ſignifieth that he is not limitted in any certaine coaſt, but is ſpred abroad through out all things. But becauſe our minde (ſuch is the groſſenеſſe of it,) coulde not otherwiſe conceiue his vnſpeakable glory, it is ſignified to vs by the heauen, than which there can nothing come vnder our ſight more ample or fuller of maieſtie. Sith therefore whereſoeuer our ſenſes comprehende any thing, there they vſe to faſten it: God is ſet out of all place, that when we wil ſeeke him we ſhould be raiſed vp aboue al ſenſe both of body & ſoule. Againe by this maner of ſpeaking he is lifted vp aboue all chaunce of corruption & change: finally it is ſignified that hee comprehendeth and conteineth the whole worlde & gouerneth it with his power. Wherefore this is all one as if he had ben called of infinite greatnes or height, of incomprehenſible ſubſtãce, of vnmeaſurable power, of euerlaſting immortalitie. But while we haue this, we muſt lift vp our mind higher when God is ſpoken of, that we dreame not any earthly or fleſhly thing of him, that we meaſure him not by our ſmal proportions, nor draw his wil to the rule of our affections. And therwithal is to be raiſed vp our affiance in him, by whoſe prouidence & power we vnderſtand heauen & earth to be gouerned. Let this be the ſumme, that vnder the name of father is ſet before vs that God which hath in his owne image appeared to vs, ỳ he may be called vpon with aſſured faith: & that the familiar name of Father is not only applied to ſtabliſh affiance, but alſo auaileth to holde faſt our mindes ỳ they be not drawen to doubtful or fained Gods, but ſhould from the only begotten ſonne climbe vp to the only father of Angels & of the Church: then, that becauſe his ſeate is placed in heauen, wee are by the gouernance of the world put in mind that not without cauſe wee come to him which with preſent eare commeth of his own wil to meete vs. Who ſo come to God (ſaith ỳ Apoſtle) they muſt firſt beleeue that there is a God then ỳ he is a rewarder to all them that ſeeke him. Both theſe things Chriſt affirmeth to be proper to his father, ỳ our faith may be ſtaied in him: then, that we may be certeinly perſwaded that hee is not careleſſe of our ſafetie: becauſe he vouchſafeth euen to vs to extend his prouidence. With which introductions Paul prepareth vs to pray rightly. For before that he biddeth our petitions to be opened before God he ſaith thus. Be ye carefull for nothing, the Lord is at hand. Whereby appeareth that they doubtfully & with perplexitie toſſe their prayers in their mind which haue not this well ſetled in them, that the eye of God is vpon the righteous.

The hallowing of the name of god which is the firſt petition both in that which he teacheth & that which he worketh, earneſtly to be longed for and craued in prayer.

41 The firſt petition is, That the name of God be hallowed, the neede whereof is ioyned with our great ſhame. For what is more ſhamefull than that the glorie of God ſhoulde be partly by our vnthankfulneſſe, partly by our malicioufines darkned: and (ſo much as in it lieth) by our boldneſſe and furious ſtubborneſſe, vtterly blotted out? Though al the wicked would burſt themselues with their wilfulnesse full of sacriledge, yet the holinesse of the name of God gloriously shineth. And not without cause the Prophet crieth out, As thy name O God, so is thy praise into all the ends of the earth. For wheresoeuer the name of God is knowē, it cannot be but that his strengths, power, goodnes, wisedome, righteousnes, mercie, & trueth must shewe forth themselues, which may drawe vs into admiration of him, and stirre vs vp to publish his praise. Sith therefore the holinesse of God is so shamefully taken from him in earth, if we be not able to rescue it, we be at the least commaunded to take care of it in our prayers. The summe is, that we wish the honour to be giuen to God which he is worthie to haue, that men neuer speake or thinke of him without most high reuerence: whereunto is contrarie the vnholy abusing, which hath alway beene too common in the worlde, as at this day also it rangeth abroad. And hereupon commeth the necessitie of this petition, which if there liued in vs any godlines, though it were but a little, ought to haue beene superfluous. But if the name of God haue his holinesse safe, when being seuered from all other, it breatheth out nothing but glorie, here wee are commaunded not onely to pray that God will deliuer that holy name from all contempt and dishonour, but also that hee will subdue all mankinde to the reuerence of it. Nowe whereas GOD discloseth himselfe to vs, partly by doctrine, and partly by workes, hee is no otherwise sanctified of vs, than if wee giue to him in both behalfes that which is his, and so embrace whatsoeuer shal come from him: and that his seueritie haue no lesse praise among vs than his mercifulnesse, forasmuch as hee hath in the manifolde diuersitie of his workes imprinted markes of his glorie which may worthily drawe out of all tongues a confession of his praise. So shall it come to passe that the Scripture shall haue full authoritie with vs, and that no successe shall hinder the blessing which God deserueth in ỹ whole course of the gouerning of the worlde. Againe, the petition also tendeth to this purpose, that all vngodlinesse which defileth this holy name, may bee destroyed and taken away: that whatsoeuer thinges doe darken and diminish this sanctifying, as well slaunders as mockings, may be driuen away: and when God subdueth all sacriledges, his glory may thereby more and more shine abroad.

The partes and processe of the kingdome of God amongest men: vvhich is the second petition.

42 The seconde petition is, that The kingdome of God may come: which although it conteine no newe thing, is yet not without cause seuered from the first: because if we consider our owne drowsines in a thing greatest of all other, it is profitable that the thing which ought of it selfe to haue beene most well knowen, be with many wordes oft beaten into vs. Therefore after that wee haue beene commaunded to pray to God to bring into subiection, and at length vtterly to destroye whatsoeuer spotteth his holy name: now is added a like and in a manner the same request, that his kingdome come. But although wee haue alreadie set foorth the definition of his kingdome, yet I nowe breefly rehearse, that God reigneth when men as well with forsaking of themselues as with despising of the worlde and of the earthly life, doe so yelde themselues to his righteousnesse, that they aspire to the heauenly life. Therfore there are two parts of this kingdom: the one that God correct with the power of his Spirit al corrupt desires of the flesh, which which doe by multitudes make warre against him: the other, that he frame al our senses to the obedience of his gouernement, Therfore none do keepe right order in this prayer, but they which beginne at themselues, that is to say, that they be cleansed from all corruptions which trouble the quiet state of the kingdome of God, and infect the pureneſſe thereof. Now because the worde of God is like a kingly sceptер, wee are here commanded to pray that he will subdue the mindes and heartes of all men to willing obedience of it. Which is done, when with the secret instinct of his Spirite hee vttereth the effectuall force of his worde, that it may be aduanced in such degree as it is worthie. Afterward we must come downe to the wicked which do obstinatly and with desperate rage resist his authoritie. God therefore setteth vp his kingdome by humbling the whole world: but that in diuerse maners: because he tameth the wantonnesses of some, and of other some he breaketh the vntamed pride. This is daylie to be wished that it be done, that it may please God to gather to himselfe Churches out of all the coastes of the worlde, to enlarge and encrease them in number, to enrich them with his giftes, to stablish right order in them: on the other side to ouerthrowe all the enemies of pure doctrine and religion, to scatter abroade their counsels, to cast downe their enterprises. Whereby appeareth that the endeuour of dailie proceeding is not in vaine commaunded vs: because the matters of men are neuer in so good case, that filthinesse being shaken awaie and cleansed, full pureneſſe florisheth and is in liuely force. But the fulneſſe of it is differred vnto the last comming of Christ, when Paul teacheth that God shall be all in all. And so this praier ought to withdrawe vs from all the corrupt ones of the world, which do seuer vs from God that his kingdome shoulde not florish in vs, and also to kindle our endeuour to mortifie the flesh, finally to instruct vs to the bearing of the crosse: forasmuch as God wil in this wise haue his kingdome spread abroad. Neither ought we to take it miscontentedly that the outward man be destroyed, so that the inward man be renewed. For this is the nature of the kingdome of God, when wee submit our selues to the righteousneſſe thereof, to make vs partakers of his glorie. This is done when brightly setting foorth his light and trueth with alwaie new encreases, whereby the darkneſſe and lies of Satan and his kingdome, maie vanish away, be destroied and perish, he defendeth them that be his, with the help of his Spirite, directeth them to vprightneſſe, and strengtheneth them to continuance: but ouerthroweth the wicked conspiracies of his enemies shaketh abroad their treasons and deceites, preuenteth their malice, and beateth downe their stubbornneſſe, till at length he kill Antichrist with the Spirit of his mouth and destroie all vngodlineſſe with the brightneſſe of his comming. 1. Cor. 15. 28.

43 The third petition is, That the will of God be done in earth as it is in heauen. Which although it hangeth vpon his kingdome, and cannot be seuered from it, is not in vaine added seuerally, for our grosseneſſe, which doeth not easily or by and by conceiue what it is that GOD reigne in the worlde. It shall therefore be no absurditie if this be taken by way of plainer exposition: that God shall then be king in the worlde when all things shall submit themselues to his will. Nowe here is not meant of his secrete will, where-whereby he gouerneth all things & directeth them to their end. For though Saran & men are troublesomly carried against him, yet he can by his incõprehensible counsel not only turne aside their violẽt motions, but also drive them into order that he maie do by them that which he hath purposed. But heere is spoken of an other will of God, namely that, whereunto answereth willing obedience: and therefore the heauen is by name compared with the earth: becausse the Angels, as it is saide in the Psalme, do willingly obey God & are diligently bent to do his commandements. We are therefore commanded to wish that as in heauen nothing is done but by the becke of God, & the Angels are quietly framed to all vprightnesse: so the earth, all stubbornnesse & peruersnesse being quenched, may be subiect to such gouernement. And when we require this, we renounce the desires of our owne flesh: becausse whosoeuer doth not resigne and yeld his affections to God, he doth as much as in him lieth set himselfe against him, forasmuch as nothing commeth out of vs but faultie. And we are againe by this praier framed to the forsaking of our selues, that God maie gouern vs after his wil: & not that onlie, but that he may also create in vs new mindes, & new hearts, our old being brought to nought: that we maie feele in our selues none other motion of desire than a mere consent with his will: summarily that we maie will nothing of our selues, but that his Spirite maie gouerne our heartes, by whom inwardly teaching vs we maie learne to loue those things that please him, & to hate those things that displease him. Wherupon this also followeth, that whatsoeuer affections fight against his will, he maie make them vaine and void. Loe here be the first three chiefe points of this praier, in asking whereof wee ought to haue the onelie glorie of God before our eies, leauing the respect of our selues, and hauing no regard to anie of our owne profit, which although it come hereof largely vnto vs, yet wee ought not here to seeke it. But albeit al these things, though we neither thinke of them, nor wish them, nor aske them, must neuertheless come to passe in their due time, yet wee must wish them and require them. And this to doe is no small profit for our trauaile, that we maie so testifie and professe our selues to be the seruantes and children of God, as much as in vs lieth endeuouring and being truelie and throughly giuen to set foorth his honour, which is due to him beeing both a Lorde and a Father. Who so therefore do not with affection and zeale of auauncing the glorie of God, pray that the name of God bee hallowed, that his kingdome come, that his will be done, they are not to be accounted among the children and seruauntes of God: and as all these things shalbe done against their willes, so they shall turne to their confusion and destruction.

Psal.103.20.

The sense of the fourth petition wherein our corporal & earthlie necessities are cõmended vnto God.

44 Nowe followeth the seconde parte of the prayer, in which we come downe to our owne commodities: not that bidding fare well to the glorie of God (which as Paul witnesseth, is to be regarded euen in meate & drinke) we shoulde seeke onelie what is profitable for our selues: but we haue alreadie giuen warning that there is this difference, that God peculiarly claiming three petitions to himselfe doeth drawe vs to himselfe wholly, that he may in this wise proue our godlinesse. Then he graunteth vs also to haue an eye to our owne commodities, but with this condition, that wee aske

nothing

nothing for ourselues but to this end that whatsoeuer benefits he bestoweth vpon vs, they may set foorth his glory: forasmuch as nothing is more rightfull than that we liue and die to him. But in this petition we aske of God generally all thinges which the vse of the bodie needeth vnder the elements of this world, not only wherewith we may bee fed & clothed, but also what soeuer he forseeth to be profitable for vs, that we may eat our bred in peace. By which prayer breefely we yeelde our selues into his care, and commit vs to his prouidence, that he may feede, cherish, and preserue vs. For the most good Father disdaineth not to receiue also our bodie into his faithful safegard and keeping, to exercise our Faith in these small things, when we look for all things at his hands euen to a crumme of bread and a droppe of water. For whereas it is come to passe I wote not howe by our iniquitie, that we be moued and vexed with greater care of the flesh than of the soule: many which dare trust to God for their soule, are yet careful for their flesh, are yet in doubt what they shall eate, and wherewith they shall be clothed: and if they haue not plentie of wine, wheate, and oile aforehande, they tremble for feare. So much more doe we esteeme the shadowe of this life which lasteth but a moment, than that euerlasting immortalitie. But who so trusting to God haue once cast away that carefulnesse for the prouision of the flesh, do also by and by looke for saluation and euerlasting life at his hande, which are greater thinges. It is therefore no small exercise of Faith, to hope for those thinges of God, which otherwise do so much holde vs in care: & we haue not smaly profited, whē we haue put off this vnbeleeuingnes which sticketh fast within the bones almost of all men. As for that which some do beare teach of trāsubstantiall bread, it seemeth but smally to agree with the meaning of Christ: yea but if wee did not euen in this fraile life giue to God the office of a nourishing Father, our praier should be vnperfect. The reason which they bring is too much prophane: that it is not meete that the children of God, which ought to be spirituall, should not onely cast their minde to earthly cares, but also wrappe God therein with them. As though his blessing and fatherlie fauour doth not also appeare in the sustenance of our life, or as though it were written in vaine that godlinesse hath promises not onelie of the life to come, but also of this present life. But although the foregiuenesse of sinnes is of much greater value than the sustenances of the body, yet Christ hath set the inferior thing in the first place, to the entent to lift vs vp by degrees to the other two petitions which do properly belong to the heauenlie life, wherein he had regard to our grossenesse. We are commaunded to aske Our breade, that we should be content with the quantity which our heauenly father vouchsafeth to giue to vs, & should not seek for gaine by vnlawfull crafty meanes. In the meane time we must learne that it is made Ours by Title of gifte, because neither our diligence, nor our trauaile, nor our handes (as it is sayde in Moses) doe by them selues get vs any thing, vnlesse the blessing of God be present: yea the plenty of bread should nothing at all profite vs, vnlesse it were by God turned into nourishment. And therefore this liberalitie of GOD is no lesse necessarie for the riche than for the poore: because hauing their cellars and their barnes full, they shoulde yet faint for drines and emptinesse, vnlesse they did by his grace

1. Tim. 4 8

enioy their bread. The worde This Day, or euery day as it is in the other Euangelist, and also the adiectiue Dailie, do bridle the too much greedines of fraile things, wherewith we are wont to burne out of measure, & whereunto are ioyned other euils: sith if we haue plentifull abundance, we do gloriously powre it out vpon pleasure, delights, bosting, and other kinds of riotous excesse. Therefore we are commaunded to ask only so much as is enough for our necessity, & as it were from day to day, with this affiance, that when our heauenly Father hath fedde vs this day, hee will also not fail vs to morrowe. Therefore how great plenty of things soeuer do flowe vnto vs, yea when our barnes be stuffed and our cellars full: yet we ought alway to aske our dayly bread: because we must certainlie beleeue that all substance is nothing, but insomuch as the Lorde doth by powring out of his blessing with continuall encrease make it fruitful: & that the very same substance that is in our hand, is not our owne, but insomuch as hee doth euerie houre giue vs a portion & graunt vs the vse of it. This whereas the pride of men doth most hardlie suffer it selfe to be perswaded: the Lord testifieth that he hath shewed a singular example therof for all ages, when he fed his people with Manna in the wildernesse, to teach vs that man liueth not in bread onelie, but rather in the worde that commeth out of his mouth. Whereby is declared, that it is his power alone by which our life and strengthes are susteined, although he do minister it vnto vs vnder bodilie instruments. As hee is wont also to teach vs by the contrarie example, when he so oft as hee will, breaketh the strength and (as he calleth it) the staffe of bread, that men eating may pine with hunger, and drinking may be dried vp with thirst. But whoso not being contented with daily bread, but with vnbrideled greedinesse are gaping for endlesse store, or whoso being full with their aboundance, and careless by reason of the heape of their riches, doe neuertheless sue to God with this prayer, they doe nothing else but mocke him. For, the first sort of such men aske that which they would not obtaine, yea that which they most of all abhorre, that is, to haue onely dailie bread, and so much as in them lieth they dissemblingly hide from God the affection of their couetousnesse: whereas true prayer ought to powre out before him the verie whole minde it selfe, and whatsoeuer inwardlye lieth hidden. But the other sorte do aske that which they looke not for at his hande, namelie that which they thinke that they haue with themselues. In this that it is called Ours the bountifulnes of God (as we haue saide) so much more appeareth, which maketh that ours that is by no right due to vs. Yet that exposition is not to be reiected which I haue also touched, that by our bread is meant that which is earned with rightfull & harmelesse trauaile, and not gotten with deceites and extortions: because that is alway other mens which we get to our selues with any ill doing. Whereas we pray that it be giuen vs, thereby is signified that it is the onely and free gift of God, from whence soeuer it come to vs, yea when it shall most of all seeme to be gotten by our owne pollicie and trauaile, and earned with our owne hands: forasmuch as it commeth to passe by his onlie blessing that our labours prosper well.

Mat. 3. 4.

Leuit. 26. 26.

The fift petition wherein our sins

45 Now followeth, Forgiue vs our dettes: in which petition and the next next following, Christ hath briefely conteined whatsoeuer maketh for the heauenly life: as in these two partes aboue standeth the spirituall couenant which God hath made for the saluation of his Church, I will write my lawes in their hearts, and I will be merciful to their iniquitie. Here Christ beginneth the forgiuenesse of sinnes: after this, he will by and by adioyne the second grace, that God defend vs with the power of his Spirit, & sustaine vs w his help, that we may stand vnouercome against al tentations. And sinnes he calleth debtes, because we are debound to pay the penaltie of them, & were by no meanes able to satisfie it, vnlesse we were acquited by this forgiuenes. Which pardon is of his free mercie, when he himselfe liberally wypeth out these dettes, taking no payment of vs, but with his owne mercie satisfying himselfe in Christ, which hath once giuen himselfe for recompence. Therefore whoso trust that God shalbe satisfied by their owne or other mennes merites, and that with such satisfactions the forgiuenesse of sinnes is recompensed and redeemed, they haue no parte of communicating of this free forgiuenesse: and when they call vppon God in this manner, they doe nothing but subscribe to their owne accusation, yea and seale their owne condemnation with their owne witnesse. For they confesse themselues debters, vnlesse they be acquited by the benefit of forgiuenesse, which yet they do not receiue, but rather refuse, when they thrust vnto God their owne merites and satisfactions. For, so they do not beseech his mercie, but do appeale to his iudgement. As for them that dreame of a perfection in themselues, which taketh away neede to craue pardon, let them haue such disciples whome the itching of their eares driueth to errours: so that it be certaine that so many disciples as they get, are taken away from Christe: forasmuch as he instructing all to confesse their guiltinesse, receiueth none but sinners: not for that he cherisheth sinnes with flatteringes, but because he knew that the faithfull are neuer throughly vnclothed of the vices of their flesh, but that they alway remaine subiect to the iudgement of God. It is in deede to be wished, yea and to be earnestly endeuoured, that we hauing performed al the partes of our durie may truely reioyce before God that we are cleane from all spot: but forasmuch as it pleaseth God by litle and litle to make againe his image in vs, that there alway remaineth some infection in our flesh, the remedie ought not to haue bene despised. If Christ by the authoritie giuen to him of his Father, commaundeth vs throughout the whole course of our life, to flee to crauing of pardon of our guiltinesse: who shall be able to suffer these newe masters, which goe about with this imagined ghost of perfect innocencie, to dasell the eyes of the simple, to make them to trust y they may be made free from al fault? Which, as Iohn witnesseth, is nothing else but to make God a lier. And with all one worke these lewd men by cancelling one article do teare in sunder & by y meane doe weaken from the verie foundation the whole couenant of God, wherein we haue shewed y our saluation is conteined: so as they be not only robbers of God, because they seuer those things so conioyned, but also wicked and cruell because they ouerwhelme poore soules with dispaire: and traitours to themselues and other, that be like them, because they bring themselues into a slothfulnesse directly contrarie to the mercie of God. But whereas, some obiect, that in are confessed to be debtes, our imperfections acknowledged during the terme of this present life, a profession made of our owne willingnesse to veide out our heartes of all reuengeful cogitations towards them that haue priuately iniuried vs.

Iere. 31. 33. and 33. 8. Rom. 3 29.

1. Iohn. 1. 10.

in wishing the comming of the kindome of God, wee doe also aske the put-ting away of sinne: that is too childish, because in ỳ first table of this praier is set forth vnto vs most high perfectiõ, but in this part is set forth our weakenesse. So these two things do fitly agree together, that in a spring toward the marke we despise not the remedies which our necessitie requireth. Finally, we pray that we may be forgiuen as wee our selues doe forgiue our debters, that is, as we do forgiue and pardon all of whomesoeuer wee haue beene in any thing offended, either vniustly handled in deede, or reprochfully vsed in word. Not that it lyeth in vs to pardon the guiltines of the fault & offence which pertaineth to God alone: but this is our forgiuing, of our owne willingnesse to lay away out of our mind wrath, hatred, and desire of reuengement, and with voluntarie forgetfulnesse to treade vnder foote the remembrance of iniuries. Wherefore we may not aske forgiuenesse of sinnes at the hande of God, if we do not also forgiue their offences towarde vs which either do or haue done vs wrong. But if wee keepe any hatreds in our heartes, and purpose any reuengementes, and imagine by what occasion wee may hurt, yea, and if we do not endeuour to come into fauour againe with our enemies, and to deserue well of them with all kinde of friendly doinges, & to winne them vnto vs: we do by this prayer beseech God that he doe not forgiue vs. For we require that he graunt to vs the same forgiuenesse which we graunt to other. But this is to pray that he graunt it not to vs, vnlesse wee graunt it to them. Whoso therefore be such, what doe they obtaine by their prayer but a more grieuous iudgement? Last of al it is to be noted, ỳ this cõdition ỳ he forgiue vs as we forgiue our debters, is not therefore added for ỳ we deserue his forgiuenesse by the forgiuenesse which we graunt to other, as if that cause of forgiuenesse to vs were there expressed: but by this worde partly the Lordes will was to comfort the weakenesse of our Faith, for he added this as a signe whereby we may be assured that he hath as surely graunted to vs forgiuenesse of our sinnes, as we surely know in our conscience that we haue graunted the same to other, if our mind be voide and cleansed of all hatred, enuie, and reuengement, and partly by this as it were by a marke, he wipeth them out of the number of his children that they may not bee bolde to call vpon him as their Father, which being headlong hasty to reuenge, & hardly entreated to pardon, do vse stiffely continuing enmities, and do cherish in themselues the same displeasure towarde other which they pray to be turned from themselues. Which is also in Luke expresly spoken in the wordes of Christ.

Esay 43.29.

The sixt petition of aide & succour against the power of those meanes which prouoking vnto euill we are not able of our selues to withstand.

46 The sixt petition (as we haue saide) answereth to the promise of engrauing the lawe of God in our heartes. But because we do not without continuall warrefare and harde and great striuinges obey to God, wee doe here pray to be furnished with such weapons and defended with such succor, that wee maie be able to get the victorie: whereby wee are warned that we stand in neede not onelie of the grace of the Spirit, which may soften, bowe, & direct our heartes to the obedience of God, but also of his helpe, whereby hee may make vs inuincible against both all the traiterous entrappinges and violent conflictes of Satan. But now of tentations there are manie and diuerse sortes. For, both the peruerse thoughtes of minde prouoking vs to or the deuil ſtirreth vp, are tentations: and alſo thoſe things which of their owne nature are not euill, yet by the craft of the deuill are made tentatiõs, when they are ſo ſet before our eyes, ỹ by the occaſion of them we be drawn away or do ſwarue from God. And theſe tentations are either on the right hand or on the left. On the right hande, as riches, power, honours, which 2.Theſ.3.5

commonlie do with their gliſtering and ſhewe of good ſo daſell the ſight of men, and catche them with the baited hooke of their flatteringes, that being entrapped with ſuch deceites, or dronk with ſuch ſweteneſſe, they may forget their God. On the left hand, as pouertie, reproches, deſpiſings, troubles, and ſuch other: that they being grieued with the bitternes & hardnes thereof may be vtterlie diſcouraged, caſt away faith and hope, and finally be altogether eſtraunged from God. To theſe tentations of both ſortes, which fight with vs either being kindled in vs by our own luſt, or being ſet againſt vs by the craft of Satan, we pray to our heauẽly Father that he ſuffer vs not to yeelde: but rather that hee vpholde vs and raiſe vs vp with his hande, that being ſtrong by his ſtrength, we may ſtand faſt againſt all the aſſaultes of the malicious enimie, whatſoeuer thoughtes he put into our minde: then, that whatſoeuer is ſet before vs on either ſide, we may turne it to good, that we neither be puffed vp with proſperitie, nor throwne downe with aduerſi-tie. Neither yet doe wee heare require that we may feele no tentations

But God tempteth after one manner, and Satan after another: Satan, to deſtroy, damne, confounde, and throwe downe headlong: but God, that by prouing them that be his he may haue a trial of their vnfainedneſſe, and by exerciſing them may confirme their ſtrength, to mortify, purge by fire, and ſeare their fleſh, which vnleſſe it were in this wiſe reſtrained, would waxe he is armed to deſtroy vs. This therefore is our requeſt, that we may not bee ouercome or ouerwhelmed with any tentations, but may by the power of the Lord ſtande ſtrong againſt al contrarie powers wherewith we are aſ-ſailed: which is, not to yeeld vs vãquiſhed to tentations, that being receiued into his keeping & charge, and being ſafe by his protection: we may endure vnouercome ouer ſinne, death, the gates of hel, and the whole kingdome of the deuil: which is to be deliuered from euil. Where it is alſo to be diligently marked, that it is aboue our ſtrength to matche with the deuill ſo greate a warrier, & to beare his force and violence. Otherwiſe we ſhould but vainely or as it were in mockage ask that which we had alreadie in our ſelues. Surely, they which prepare them to ſuch a battle with truſt of them ſelues, doe

not

not ſufficiently vnderſtand with how fierce and well armed an enimy they haue to doe. Now wee pray to be deliuered from his power, as out of the mouth of a mad and raging lyon, whereas we ſhould be torn in peeces with his teeth and pawes, and ſwallowed with his throte, vnleſſe the Lord do deliuer vs out of the middeſt of death: yet therewithal knowing this that if the Lorde ſhall ſtande by vs, and fight for vs when we are ouerthrowne, we ſhal in his ſtrength ſhewe ſtrength. Let other truſt as they liſt to their owne abilities and ſtrengths of freewill, which they thinke that they haue of them ſelues: but let it ſuffice vs that we ſtand and are ſtrong by the only ſtrength of God But this prayer conteineth more than at the firſt ſight it beareth in ſhewe. For if the ſpirite of God be our ſtrength to fight out our combat with Satan, we ſhall not be able to get the victorie vntill we being filled with that Spirite ſhall haue put off all the weakeneſſe of our fleſh. When therefore we pray to be deliuered from Satan and the Deuill, we pray to be from time to time enriched with newe encreaſes of the grace of God, till being fully ſtuffed with them we may triumph ouer all euill. It ſeemeth harde and rough to ſome, that we craue of God that he lead vs not into tentation, foraſmuch as it is contrary to his nature to tempt, as Iames witneſſeth. But this queſtion is already partly aſſoiled, where we ſaid that our owne luſt is properly the cauſe of all the tentations wherewith wee are ouercome, & therefore worthilie beareth the blame thereof. Neither doth Iames meane any thing elſe, but that the faultes are without cauſe and wrongfully layde vpon God, which we are driuen to impute to our ſelues, becauſe we know our ſelues in our conſcience guilty of them. But this withſtandeth not but that God may when it pleaſeth him make vs bond to Satan, caſt vs away into a reprobate ſenſe, and to filthy luſtes, and ſo leade vs into tentation by his iudgement which is righteous in deede but yet oftentimes ſecret: foraſmuch as the cauſe of it is often hid from men, which is yet certainly known with him. Whereupon is gathered that this is no vnfit manner of ſpeaking, if wee bee perſwaded that he doth not without cauſe ſo oft threaten, that when the reprobate ſhall be ſtriken with blindneſſe and hardning of heart, theſe ſhall be ſure tokens of his vengeance.

Iames. 1. 13.

That vvhich is added in the Lordes praier, concerning his kingdome powuer & glorie to vvhom vve pray, giueth vs both boldneſſe to aske & great truſt to obtaine that vve pray for.

47 Theſe three petitions, wherewith we do peculiarlie commend vs & our thinges to God, doe euidently ſhew this which we haue before ſaid, that the praiers of Chriſtians ought to be common and to tend to the common edifying of the Church, and to the encreaſe of the communion of the faithfull. For ther doth not euery man pray to haue any thing priuatly giuen, but all in common together do pray for Our bread, for forgiueneſſe of ſins, that we may not be led into tentation, that we may be deliuered from euil. There is furthermore adioyned a cauſe why wee haue both ſo greate boldneſſe to aske, and ſo great truſt to obtaine: which although it be not in the latine copies, yet it agreeth more fitly in this place than that it ſhould ſeeme worthy to be omitted, namely that his is the kingdome, and the power and the glorie for euer. This is the perfect and quiet reſt of our ſoule. For if our praiers were to be commended to God by their own worthineſſe, who ſhould be ſo bolde, as once to open his mouth before him? Now howſoeuer we bee moſte miſerable, howſoeuer moſt vnworthie of all men, howſoeuer voide of all com-commendation: yet we shall neuer want cause to pray, & neuer be destitute of confidence: forasmuch as our father cannot haue his kingdome, power, and glory taken away from him. At the end is added Amen, whereby is expressed our feruentnes of desire to obteine these things that we haue asked of God, and our hope is confirmed that al such things are alreadie obteined & shal surely be giuen vs because they are promised of God, which can not deceiue. And this agreeth with that manner of prayer which we haue here before rehearsed, Doe it Lorde for thy names sake, not for our sakes or our righteousnes: whereby the holy ones do not only expresse the ende of their praiers, but also confesse that they are vnworthy to obtein vnlesse God fetch the cause from himselfe, and that their trust to speed commeth of the onely nature of God.

The perfection of the Lords prayer, and the danger of presuming to craue thinges vvithout the compasse thereof.

48 Thus haue wee whatsoeuer we ought yea or in any wise may aske of God, set foorth in this forme & as it were a rule of praying taught by ỹ best scholemaister Christe, whom the Lord hath set ouer vs to be our teacher, and whome alone he hath willed to be harkened vnto. For he both alway hath beene his eternall wisedome, and being made man is giuen to men the Angell of great counsell. And this prayer is in all pointes, so fully perfect, that whatsoeuer foreine or strange thing is added which cannot be referred to it, it is vngodly and vnworthy to be allowed of God. For in this summe he hath set foorth, what is meete for him, what is pleasing to him, what is necessary for vs: finally what he will graunt. Wherefore who so dare go further, and to aske any thing of God beside these, first they will adde of their owne to the wisedome of God (which can not be done without mad blasphemie) then they holde not themselues vnder the will of GOD, but despising it doe with greedinesse wander further: finally they shal neuer obtaine any thing, forasmuch as they pray without faith. And there is no doubt ỹ all such prayers are made without faith, because here wanteth the worde of GOD, vpon which vnlesse faith be grounded, it can in no wise stand. But they which forsaking the maisters rule, doe followe their owne desires, are not onely without the worde of God, but also so much as they be able with their whole endeuour, are against it. Therefore Tertullian no lesse fitly than truly hath called this a lawfull prayer, secretely signifying that all other are lawlesse and vnlawfull.

De fuga in persecut.

Our requestes vvhen vve pray are not tied to the vvords and syllables, but to those thinges vvhich are conteined vvithin the compasse of the Lords prayer.

49 We would not haue these things so taken as though we were so bound with this forme of prayer, that we may not change a worde or a syllable. For there are echwhere read many praiers in the Scriptures, farre differing from this in wordes, yet written by the same Spirit, and which are at this day profitable to be vsed of vs. Many are cõtinually put into ỹ mouthes of the faithfull by the same Spirit, which in likenesse of wordes doe not so much agree. This onely is our meaning in so teaching, that no man should seeke, looke for, or aske any other thing at all than that which is summarily comprehended in this prayer, & which though it most differ in words yet differeth not in sense. Like as it is certaine that all the prayers which are founde in the Scriptures, & which do come out of godly hearts, are applied to this, so verily none can any where be found, which may match, much lesse passe, the perfectnesse of this prayer. Here is nothing left out, that might be thought vpon to the prayſes of God, nothing that ought to come into ỹ mind of man for his owne profits: and the ſame ſo fully that all hope is worthily taken away from all men to attempt to make any better. In a ſumme, let vs remember that this is the doctrine of the wiſdome of God, which hath taught what he willed, and willed what was needfull.

The neceſſity of prayer and of ſet times for that purpoſe.

50 But although we haue aboue ſayd, that we ought alway to breath vpward with mindes lifted vp to God, and pray without ceaſing: yet foraſmuch as ſuch is our weakeneſſe, as needeth to be vpholden with many helps: ſuch is our dulneſſe, as needeth to be pricked forwarde with many ſpurres: it is good that euerie one of vs appoint to himſelfe priuatly certain houres which may not paſſe away without prayer, and which may haue the whole affections of our minde throughly buſied to that purpoſe: as, when we riſe in the morning, before that we goe to our dayes worke, when we ſitte downe to meate, when we haue beene fedde by the bleſſing of God, when we take vs to reſt. Onely let this not be a ſuperſtitious obſeruing of houres, by which, as paying a taske to God, we may thinke our ſelues diſcharged for the other houres: but a training of our weakeneſſe, whereby it may ſo be exerciſed and from time to time ſtirred vp. Specially we ought carefully to looke that ſo oft as either we our ſelues are in diſtreſſe, or wee ſee other to be in diſtreſſe with any hardneſſe of aduerſitie, we runne ſtreight way to him, not with feet but with heartes: then, that we ſuffer not any proſperitie of our owne or other mens, to paſſe but that we teſtifie that we acknowledge it to be his with prayſe and thankeſgiuing. Finally, this is diligently to be obſerued in all prayer, that we go not about to binde God to certaine circumſtances, nor to appoint to him, what he ſhal doe, at what time, in what place, and in what maner: as by this prayer we are taught to make to him no lawe, nor to appoint to him any condition, but to leaue to his wil that thoſe thinges which he will do, he may doe in what maner, at what time, & in what place it pleaſeth him. Wherefore ere we make any prayer for our ſelues, we firſt pray that his will be done: where we doe alreadie ſubmitte our will to his: with which when it is reſtrained as with a bridle put vpon it, it may not preſume to bring GOD into rule, but make him the iudge and gouernour of all her deſires.

Conſtancie and patience in prayer needefull.

51 If we do with mindes framed to this obedience, ſuffer our ſelues to be ruled with the lawes of Gods prouidence, we ſhal eaſily learn to continue in prayer, and with longing deſires patiently to waite for the Lorde: being aſſured that although he appeare not, yet he is alway preſent with vs, and will when he ſeeth his time declare howe not deafe eares he gaue to the prayer, which in the eyes of men ſeemed to be deſpiſed. And this ſhalbe a moſt preſent comfort, that we faint not & fall downe by deſpaire, if at any time God doe not anſwere at our firſt requeſtes. Like as they are wont to do, which while they are caried with their ſodaine heate, doe ſo cal vpon GOD, that if he come not to them at their firſt bruntes and bring them preſent helpe, they by and by imagine him to be angry and hatefully bent againſt them, and caſting away all hope of obteining do ceaſe to cal vpon him. But rather differring our hope with a well tempered euenneſſe of minde, let vs goe forward in that perſeuerance which is ſo much commended to vs in Scriptures.

For

For in the Psalmes we may oftentimes see how Dauid & other faithful men, when they seeme in a manner wearied with praying, did beate the aire, because they threwe away their wordes to God that hearde them not, and yet they cease not from praying: because the worde of God hath not his full authoritie maintained, vnlesse the credite thereof be set aboue all successes of things. Moreouer let vs not tempt God and prouoke him against vs being wearied with our importunacie, which many vse to doe, which doe nothing but indent with God vpon a certaine condition, and binde him to the laws of their couenanting, as though he were seruant to their desires: which if he do not presently obey, they disdaine, they chafe, they carp against him, they murmure, they turmoile. Therefore to such oftentimes in his furor he being angrie graunteth that, which to other in his mercie he being fauourable denieth. An example hereof are the children of Israel, for whome it had beene better not to haue beene heard of the Lorde, than with flesh to eate vp his wrath. Num. 11. 18

Our praiers not fruitelesse though the fruite thereof be not alwayes sensible.

52 But if yet at length after long looking for it our sense do not perceiue what we haue preuailed with praying, and feeleth no fruite thereof: yet our faith shal assure vs of that, which cannot be perceiued by sense, namely that wee haue obteined that which was expedient for vs, forasmuch as the Lord doeth so oft and so certainely take vpon him that hee will haue care of our greeues, after that they haue beene once laide in his bosome. And so he will make vs to possesse aboundance in pouertie, comfort in affliction. For howsoeuer all other things do faile vs, yet God will neuer faile vs, which suffreth the waiting and patience of them that be his to be disappointed. Hee alone shall suffice vs in steede of all thinges, forasmuch as hee conteineth in himselfe all good things, which hee shall one day disclose vnto vs at the day of iudgement when hee shall plainly shewe foorth his kingdome. Beside this although God grant to vs, yet hee doeth not alway aunswere according to the expresse forme of our request, but holding vs after outwarde seeming in suspense, yet by a meane vnknowen hee sheweth that our prayers were not vaine. This is meant by the words of Iohn, If wee knowe that he heareth vs when we aske any thing of him, we know that we haue the petitions which we aske of him. This seemeth a weake superfluousnesse of words: but it is a singularly profitable declaration, namely that God euen when he doth not follow our desires, is yet gentle and fauourable to our prayers, that the hope which resteth vpon his worde may neuer disapoint vs But with this patience the faithfull doe so farre neede to bee susteined, that they shoulde not long stand vnlesse they did stay vpon it. For the Lord doeth by no light trials prooue them that be his, and not tenderly doeth exercise them: but oftentimes driueth them into the greatest extremities, and when they are driuen thither hee suffereth them long to sticke fast in the mire, ere hee giue them any taste of his sweetenesse: and, as Hanna sayeth, hee slayeth, and quickeneth: hee leadeth downe to the helles, and bringeth backe againe. What coulde they heere doe but bee discouraged, and fall headlong into dispaire: vnlesse when they are in distresse and desolate and alreadie halfe deade, this thought did raise them vp, that God doeth looke vpon them, and that there shall be at hande an ende of their euils? But 1. Iohn. 5. 15 1. Sam. 2. 6 howsoeuer they ſtand faſt vpon the aſſuredneſ of that hope, they ceaſe not in the meane time to pray: becauſe if there be not in prayer a ſtedfaſtnes of continuance, we nothing preuaile with praying.

The xxj. Chapter.

Of the eternall Election, vvhereby God hath predeſtinate ſome to ſaluation, and other ſome to deſtruction.

The neceſſitie of knowing the trueth in the queſtion of predeſtination that God may be glorified, our mindes both humbled & confirmed, & the danger of curious vvading therein beyond the bounds of ſcripture.

BVt nowe whereas the couenant of life is not equally preached to al men, and with them to whome it is preached it doth not either equally or continually find like place: in this diuerſitie the wonderous deapth of the iudgement of God appeareth. For neither is it any doubt but that this diuerſitie alſo ſerueth the free choiſe of Gods eternal election. If it be euident that it is wrought by the wil of God that ſaluation is freely offered to ſome, & other ſome are debarred from comming to it: here by & by ariſe great & hard queſtions which cannot otherwiſe be diſcuſſed, than if the godly mindes haue certainly ſtabliſhed which they ought to holde concerning election & Predeſtination. This is (as many thinke) a comberſome queſtion: becauſe they thinke nothing to bee leſſe reaſonable than of the common multitude of men ſome bee foreordeined to ſaluation, other ſome to deſtruction. But howe they wrongfully encomber themſelues, ſhall afterwarde bee euident by the framing of the matter together. Beſide that in the verie ſame darkneſſe which maketh men afraide, not only the profitablenes of this doctrin, but alſo the moſt ſweete fruite ſheweth foorth it ſelfe. Wee ſhall neuer bee clearly perſwaded as wee ought to bee, that our ſaluation floweth out of the fountaine of the free mercie of God, til his eternall election bee knowen to vs, which by this compariſon brightly ſetteth foorth the grace of God, that he doeth not without difference adopt all into the hope of ſaluation, but giueth to ſome that which he denieth to other. How much the ignorance of this principle diminiſheth of the glorie of God, howe much it withdraweth from the true humilitie, it is plaine to ſee. But Paul denieth that that which is ſo neceſſarie to be knowen, is poſſible to be knowen, vnleſſe God leauing altogether the reſpect of woorkes doe chooſe them whome hee hath determined with himſelfe. In this time (ſaieth he) the remnantes were ſaued according to the free election. If by Grace, then not of workes: foraſmuch as Grace ſhould then not be Grace. If of works, then not of grace: foraſmuch as worke ſhould now not be worke. If we muſt be brought backe to the beginning of election, that it may be certaine that ſaluation commeth to vs from no other where than from the mere liberalitie of god: they which will haue this principle quenched, do niggardly ſo much as in thē lyeth darken that which ought glorioufly and with full mouth to haue beene publiſhed, and they plucke vp the verie roote of humilitie. Paul, where the ſaluation of the remnant of the people is aſcribed to free election, cleerely teſtifieth that onely then it is knowen that God doth by his meere good pleaſure ſaue whome he will, and not render rewarde which cannot bee done. They which ſhut the gates, that none may be bolde to come to the taſting of this doctrine, do no lesse wrong to men than to God: because neither shal any other thing suffice to humble vs as we ought to be, neither shall we otherwise feele from our heart howe much we are bounde to God. Neither yet is there any other where the vpholding staie of sound affiance, as Christ himselfe teacheth, which to deliuer vs from all feare, and to make vs vnuanquishable among so manie dangers, ambushes, & deadly battels, promiseth that whatsoeuer he hath receiued of his Father to keepe, shalbe safe. Whereof we gather that they shall with continuall trembling be miserable, whosoeuer they be that knowe not themselues to be the proper possession of God: and therefore that they do verie ill prouide both for themselues and for all § faithful, which being blind at these three profits which we haue touched, wold wish the whole foundatiō of our saluatiō to be quite taken from among vs. Moreouer, hereby the Church appeareth vnto vs, which otherwise (as Bernarde rightly teacheth) were not possible to be found, nor to be knowen among creatures: because both waies in maruelous wise it lieth hidde within the bosome of blessed predestinatiō, & within the Masse of miserable dānation. But ere I enter into the matter it self, I must before hande in two sortes speak to two sorts of men. That the intreating of predestinatiō, wheras of it self it is somwhat combersome, is made verie doubtful yea & dangerous, the curiousnes of men is the cause: which can by no stops be restrained frō wandring into forbidden compasses, & climbing vp on high: which, if it may, wil leaue to God no secret which it wil not search and turn ouer. Into this boldnesse and importunacie forasmuch as we commonly see many to run headlong, & among those some that are otherwise not euil mē: here is fit occasion to warne them what is in this behalf the due measure of their duetie. First therfore let thē remēber, that when they enquire vpon Predestinatiō, they pearce into the secret closets of the wisedome of God: whereinto if any man do careleslie and boldly breake in, he shall both not attaine wherewith to satisfie his curiousnesse, and he shall enter into a maze whereof he shall finde no waie to get out againe. For neither is it meete that man shoulde freely search those thinges which God hath willed to bee hidden in himselfe, and to turne ouer from verie eternitie the height of wisedome, which hee willed to be honored and not be conceiued, that by it also he might be maruellous vnto vs. Those secrets of his wil which he hath determined to be opened vnto vs, he hath disclosed in his word: and he hath determined, so far as he foresaw to pertaine to vs and to be profitable for vs.

Iohn.10.29.

Ser.in Cant.78.

Gods vvoorde the onelie safe vvaie to vvalke in, & the light to direct our vvalking in matters of so great hardnesse as this is.

2 We are come (saith Augustine) into the waie of Faith, let vs stedfastly holde it. It bringeth into the Kinges chamber, in which all the treasures of knowledge and wisedome are hidden. For, the Lord himselfe Christ did not enuie his excellent and most chosen disciples, when hee saide, I haue manie thinges to be said to you,, but ye cannot beare them now. We must walke, we must profit, we must increase, that our harts may be able to conceiue those thinges which now we cānot conceiue. If the last day find vs profiting, there we shall learne that which here we could not. If this thought be of force with vs, that the word of the Lord is the onely way, that maie leade vs to search whatsoeuer is lawfull to be learned of him, that it is the only light, which maie giue vs light to see whatsoeuer wee ought to see of him: it shall easilie holde backe and restraine vs from all rashnesse. For wee shall knowe that so soone as we be gone out of the boundes of the worlde, we run out of the waie, and in darkenesse, in which race wee must needes oftentimes straie, slippe, and stumble. First therefore let this be before our eyes, that to couet any other knowledge of Predestination than that which is set foorth by the worde of God, is a point of no lesse madnesse than if a man haue a will to go by an vnpasseable waie, or to see in darkenesse. Neither let vs bee ashamed, to be ignorant of somwhat in it wherein there is some learned ignorãce. But rather let vs willingly abstein from the searching of that knowledge, whereof the excessiue coueting is both fooliſh & perillous, yea & deadly. But if the wantonnesse of wit prouoke vs, it shal be profitable alway to set this against it, wherby it may be beaten backe, that as too much of honie is not good, so the searching of glorie doth not turne vnto glorie to the curious. For there is good cause why we should be frayed awaie from that boldnes, which can do nothing but throw vs downe headlong into ruine.

Pro. 25. 27.

The doctrine of predestination not vtterly to be shunned and buried in silence.

3 There be other which when they haue a will to remedy this euill, doe commaund all mention of Predestination to bee in a manner buried, at the least they teach men to flee from euerie manner of questioning thereof as from a rock. Although the moderatiõ of these men be herein worthily to be praised that they iudge that mysteries shold be tasted of with such sobrigty: yet becausse they descẽd too much beneath the mean: they litle preuail with ỹ wit of man, which doth not lightly suffer it selfe to be restrained. Therfore, that in this behalf also we may keep a right end, we must return to the word of the Lord, in which we haue a sure rule of vnderstanding. For the scripture is the schole of the holie Ghost, in which as nothing is left out which is both necessarie & profitable to be knowen, so nothing is taught but that which is behouefull to learne. Whatsoeuer therfore is vttered in the Scripture concerning predestination, wee must beware that we debarre not the faithfull from it, least we should seem either enuiously to defraud them of the benefit of their God, or to blame & accuse the holy Ghost who hath published those things which it is in anie wise profitable to be suppressed. Let vs (I say) giue leaue to a Christian man, to open his minde and his eares to all the sainges of God which are directed to him, so that it be done with this temperance, that so soone as the Lorde hath closed his holy mouth, hee maie also foreclose to himselfe all the way to enquire further. This shalbe the best bonde of sobrietie, if not onely in learning we alway followe the Lorde going before vs, but also when hee maketh an ende of teaching, wee cease to will to learne. Neither is the danger which they feare of so great importance, that we ought therfore to turne away our minds from the oracles of God. Notable is the saying of Salomon, that the glorie of God is to conceale a worde. But sith both godlinesse and common reason teacheth that this is not generally meant of euerie thing, wee must seeke a difference, least brutish ignoraunce should please vs vnder colour of modestie and sobrietie. That difference is in fewe wordes plainely set out by Moses. To the Lorde our God (saith he) belong his secretes: but to vs and to our children hee hath disclosed these things. For we see how he commendeth to the people the study of the doctrine of the law, only by reason of the decree of God, because it pleased God to publish it: and how hee withholdeth the people within those bounds, by this only reason, because it is not lawful for mortal men to thrust themselues into the secretes of God.

4 Prophane men (I grant) do in the matter of Predestination sodainly catch holde of somewhat which they may carpe, or cauil, or barke, or scoffe at. But if their waiwardnes do fray vs away from it, the chiefe articles of the faith must be kept secrete, of which there is almost none which they or such as they be do leaue vntouched with blasphemie. A frowarde wit will no lesse proudly outrage when he heareth that in the essence of God there are three persons, than if hee heare that God foresawe what shoulde become of man when he created him. Neither will they absteine from laughing, when they shall vnderstande that there is litle more than fiue thousande yeares passed since the creation of the world: for they will aske why the power of God was so long idle and asleepe. Finally there can be nothing brought forth, which they wil not scoffe at. For the restraining of these sacrileges, must wee holde our peace of the Godhead of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost? or must wee passe ouer in silence the creation of the world? Yea but the trueth of God is both in this behalfe and euery where mightier than that it neede to feare the euil speaking of the wicked: as Augustine strongly mainteineth in his worke of the good of Perseuerance. For we see that the false Apostles coulde not by defaming & slandering the true doctrine of Paul, make him to be ashamed of it. But whereas they say that this whole disputation is perillous also for godly minds, because it maketh against exhortations, because it shaketh faith, because it troubleth the hearer it selfe: this is vaine. Augustine sticketh not to confesse that for these causes he was wont to be blamed, for that he did too freely preach Predestination: but, as he had in readines wherewithall, he largely confuteth them. But we, because many & diuerse absurdities are thrust into this place, had rather to reserue euery one to be wiped away in place fit for it. Only this I desire generally to obteine of them, ỹ those things which the lord hath laid vp in secret, we may not search: those things which he hath brought openly abroad, we may not neglect: least either on ỹ one part we be condemned of vaine curiositie, or on the other part, of vnthankfulnes. For, this also is verie wel said of Augustine, that wee may safely follow the scripture, which as with a motherly pace goeth stoupingly, least it should forsake our weaknes. But whoso are so ware & so fearefull that they would haue Predestination to be buried, least it should trouble weake soules: with what colour, I beseech you, will they couer their arrogancie, when they indirectly accuse God of fooliſh vnaduisednesse, as though he foresawe not the danger, which they thinke themselues to haue wisely met with? Whosoeuer therefore trauelleth to bring the doctrine of Predestination into misliking, he openly saith euil of God: as though somewhat had vnaduisedly slipped from him which is hurtfull to the Church.

Predestination not therefore to be concealed because prophane mẽ carp, or barke, or scoffe at it, as they doe also at other parts of Christian doctrine which are not for that cause to be ouerpast.

Cap. 15. vsque ad 20.

De bono perseuer. cap. 14.

Lib. 5. de Gen. ad lit.

The doctrine of predestination obscured by such as make Gods foreknowledge, the cause thereof: what knowledge is and what predestination, examples of both.

5 Predestination whereby God adopteth some into the hope of life, & iudgeth some to eternal death, no man that would be accompted godly dare simply deny: But they wrap it vp with many cauillatiõs, specially they which make foreknowledge the cause of it. We in deede do say that they be both in God, but wee say that the one is wrongfully made subiect to the other.

When we giue foreknowledge to God, we meane that all things alway haue beene and perpetually do remaine vnder his eyes, so that to his knowledge there is nothing to come or past, but all thinges are present, and so present that he doeth not imagine onely by conceiued formes (as those thinges are present to vs, whereof our minde holdeth fast the remembrance) but hee truely beholdeth and seeth them as set before him. And this foreknowledge extendeth to the whole compasse of the world and to al creatures. Predestination we cal the eternal decree of God, whereby he had it determined with himselfe what hee willed to become of euery man. For all are not created to like estate: but to some eternall life, and to some eternall damnation is foreappointed. Therefore as euery man is created to the one or other end, so we say that he is predestinate either to life or to death. But this predestination God hath not only testified in euery seuerall person, but hath shewed an example thereof in the whole issue of Abraham, whereby might plainly appeare that it lieth in his wil what shalbe the estate of euery nation. When Deut. 32.8 the Highest diuided the nations, and seuered the children of Adam, his part was the people of Israel, the cord of his inheritance. The separation is before the eyes of all men: in the person of Abraham as in a drie stocke one people is peculiarly chosen, all other being refused: but the cause appeareth not, sauing that Moses, to cut off all occasion of glorying from posteritie, teacheth that they excell only by the free loue of God. For he assigneth this Deut. 4.37 to be the cause of their deliuerance, for that God loued the fathers, & chose their seede after them. More plainly in another Chapter: Hee was pleased Deut. 7.8 Deut. 10.14 in you to choose you, not because you passed other nations in number, but because he loued you. The same admonition is often repeated with him, Behold, to the Lorde thy God belongeth the heauen, the earth, and whatsoeuer things are in it: and hee hath pleased himselfe onely in your Fathers, and hath loued them, and hath chosen you their seede. Againe in another Deut. 23.5 Psal. 47.5 place sanctification is commaunded them, because they are chosen to bee a peculiar people. And againe in another place, Loue is affirmed to bee the cause of protection. Which also the faithfull do declare with one voice, saying: He hath chosen for vs our inheritance, the glory of Iacob, whom he hath loued. For they do all impute to free loue all the gifts wherewith they were garnished of God: not only because they knew that they themselues had obtained them by no deseruings, but also that euen the holy Patriarch was not endued with such vertue, that he could purchase to himselfe and his posteritie so great a prerogatiue of honor. And, the more strongly to tread downe al pride, he vpbraided them ỳ they haue deserued no such thing, forasmuch as they are a stubborne and hard-necked people. And oftentimes the Pro-Deut. 9.6 phets doe hatefully and as by way of reproche cast the Iewes in the teeth with this election, because they had fowly departed from it. Whatsoeuer it be, now let thē come forth which wil bind the election of God either to the worthines of men, or to the merites of workes. When they see one nation to be preferred before al other, & when they heare that God was led with no respect to be more fauourably bent to a few & vnnoble, yea and froward & disobedient men: will they quarell with him, because his will was to shewe such an example of mercy? But they shall neither with their pratling voices him-hinder his work, nor with throwing stones of tauntes into heauen shal hit or hurt his righteousnesse, but rather they fall backe vpon their owne heads. Moreouer the Israelites are called backe to this principle of the free couenant, when either thanks are to be giuen to God, or their hope to be raised vp against the time to come. He made vs, & not we our selues (saith the Prophet) his people & the sheepe of his pastures. The negatiue is not superfluous, which is added to exclude vs, that they may knowe that of all the good things wherewith they excell, God is not onely the author, but fetched the cause thereof from himselfe, because there was nothing in them worthie of so great honor. Also he biddeth them to be contented with the meere good pleasure of God, in these wordes. The seede of Abraham are his seruauntes: the children of Iacob his elect. And after ỹ he hath rehearsed the continuall benefits of God as fruites of the election, at length he concluded, that he dealt so liberally because he remẽbred his couenant. With which doctrine agreeth the song of the whole Church, Thy right hande and the light of thy countenance gaue the land to our fathers, because thou wast pleased in them. But it is to be noted, that where mention is made of the land, it is a visible signe of the secret seuering wherein the adoption is contained. To the same thankefulnesse Dauid in another place exhorteth the people, saying, Blessed is the nation whose God the Lord is, the people which he hath chosen for an inheritaunce to himselfe. And Samuel encourageth them to good hope, saying, The Lorde will not forsake you, for his owne great names sake, because it pleased him to create you for a people to himselfe. Likewise Dauid when his faith is assailed, armeth himselfe to fight, saying, Blessed is he whom thou hast chosen, he shall dwell in thy courtes. But forasmuch as the election hidden in God was stablished as well by the first deliuerance as by the second, and other meane benefits: in Esay the word of Electing is transferred to this, God shall haue mercie on Iacob, and he shall yet choose out of Israel: because he signifying the time to come, saith that the gathering together of the remnant of the people which he seemed to haue forsaken, shall be a signe of the stable and stedfast election, which once seemed to haue bene fallen away. When also it is said in another place, I haue chosen thee & haue not cast thee away: he setteth out the continual course of the notable liberalitie of his fatherly good wil. And yet more plainly the Angel saith in Zacherie, God shall yet choose Ierusalem: as though in hardly chasting it, he had reiected it: or as though the exile were an interrupting of the election: which yet remaineth inuiolable, although the signes thereof do not alway appeare.

6 There is to be added a second degree more narrowly restrained, or in which was seene a more speciall grace of God: when of the same kinred of Abraham God refused some, & other som by nourishing them in the church he shewed that he retained among his children. Ismael had at the beginning obtained egall degree with his brother Isaac, because the spirituall couenant had beene no lesse sealed in him by the signe of Circumcision. He is cut off, and then Esau at the last an innumerable multitude and almost Israel. In Isaac was the seede called: the same calling endured in Iacob. A like exãple God shewed in reiecting Saul; which thing is also gloriously set forth

Of election and Predestination both generall and speciall.

Psal.78.69. in the Psalm, He hath put backe the tribe of Ioseph, & the tribe of Ephraim he hath not chosen, but he hath chosen the tribe of Iuda. Which the holy historie diuerse times repeateth, that the wonderfull secret of the grace may the better appeare in this change Ismael, Esau, and such other, (I graunt) fell from the adoption by their own fault & guiltines: because there was a condition adioyned, that they should faithfully keep the couenant of God, which they falsely brake. But this was yet a singuler benefit of God, that he vouchsaued to preferre them aboue the other Gentiles: as it is said in the Psalme, Psal. 47.20. He hath not so done to other nations, nor hath opened his iudgementes to them. But here I haue not without cause said that there be two degrees to be noted: because now in the choosing of the whole nation God shewed ỹ he is in his own meere liberalitie bound to no lawes: but he is free, so that equal portion of grace is not to be required at his hand: the vnequalitie whereof sheweth that it is truely of free gift. Therefore Malachie amplifieth the vnthankfulnesse of Israel, because they beeing not onelie chosen out of all mankinde, but also seuered out of a holy house to be a peculiar people, doe vnfaithfully and wickedly despise God so beneficiall a Father. Was not Esau the brother of Iacob? (saith he) and yet Iacob I loued, but Esau I hated. Mal. 1.2. For, God taketh it for confessed, that when either of them was borne of a holy Father, and successour of the couenant, finally a branch of the holie roote: nowe the children of Iacob were more than commonly bond, which were taken into that dignitie. But when Esau the first begotten being refused, their Father which was by nature inferior was made the heire, hee proueth them doublely vnthankfull, and complaineth that they were not holden with that double bond.

Election outwarde and inwarde, in the generall body of men outwardly elected sundry, which inwardly are not elected in the spirite.

7 Although it be alreadie sufficiently euident, that God doth by his secret counsell freely choose whom he will, reiecting other, yet his free election is hitherto but halfe shewed, till we come to all particular persons, to whom God not onely offereth saluation, but so assigneth it, that the certaintie of the effect thereof is not in suspense or doubtfull. For, these are accounted in that onely seede, whereof Paul maketh mention. For although the adoption was left in the hand of Abraham, yet because manie of his posteritie were cut off as rotten members: that the election maie be effectuall and truely stedfast, we must needes ascend to the head, in whom the heauenlie Father hath bound togither his elect one with another, and hath knit them to himselfe with a knot impossible to be loosed. So in the adoption of the kinred of Abraham, shined the liberall fauour of God, which he denied to other men: yet in the members of Christ, appeareth a much more excellent strength of grace, because they being graffed into their head do neuer fall away from saluation. Therefore Paul doth fitly reason out of the place of Malachie which I euen now alleaged: that where God with making a couenant of eternall life calleth any people to himselfe, there is in part a speciall maner of election, that he doth not choose all effectually with common grace. Whereas it is saide, I haue loued Iacob, this pertaineth to the whole issue of the Patriarch, which the Prophet there setteth in cõparison against the posteritie of Esau. Yet this withstandeth not but ỹ in the person of one mã was set foorth to vs an example of the election, which cannot slippe away, but must must come to the marke that it tendeth to. These Paul doth not vainly note to be called remnãts: because experience teacheth that of a great multitude many slide and vanish away, so that oftentimes there remaineth but a small portion. But why the generall election of a people is not alway firm and stedfast, there is a reason offring it selfe in readinesse: because with whome God couenanteth he doth not by and by giue to them the spirit of regeneration by the power whereof they may continue in the couenant to the end: but the outward changing without the inwarde effectualnesse of grace, which might be of force to holde them in, is a certaine meane thing betweene the forsaking of whole mankinde, and the election of a small number of the godly. The whole people of Israell was called the inheritaunce of God, of whom yet there were many strangers. But because God had not for nothing made couenant with them that he would be their father and redeemer, he rather hath respect to his owne free fauour than to the vnfaithfull falling away of many: by whome also his trueth was not abolished: because where he reserued any remnãt, it appeared that his calling was without repẽtãce. For whereas God did from time to time choose vnto himselfe a Church rather out of the children of Abraham, than out of the prophane nations, hee had regarde to his couenant, which beeing broken of the whole multitude he restrained to a fewe, that it should not vtterly fall away. Finally the common adoption of the seede of Abraham was a certain visible image of a greater benefite, which God hath vouchsafed to graunt to fewe out of many. This is the reason why Paul so diligently putteth difference betwene ỹ childrẽ of Abrahã according to the flesh, & his spirituall childrẽ which were called after the example of Isaac. Not that it was a vaine and vnfruitefull thing simply to be the childe of Abraham (which might not be said without dishonour of the couenant) but because the vnchangeable councel of God, wherby he hath predestinate whome he woulde, is by it selfe effectuall onely to this latter lotte vnto saluation. But I warne the readers that they bring not a foreconceiued iudgement on either side, till it appeare by the places of scripture brought foorth what is to bee thought. That therefore which the Scripture cleerely sheweth, we say ỹ God by eternall and vnchangeable counsell hath once appointed whome in time to come he would take to saluation, and on the other side whome he woulde condemne to destruction. This counsell as touching the elect, wee say to bee grounded vppon his free mercie without any respect of the worthinesse of man, but whome hee appointeth to damnation, to them by his iust in deed and irreprehensible, but also incomprehensible iudgement, the entry of life is foreclosed. Now in the elect we set vocation, to be the testimony of election: and the iustification to be an other signe of the manifest shewing of it, til they come to glorie wherin is the fulfilling of it. But as by vocation and electiõ God maketh his elect: so by shutting out the reprobate either from the knowledge of his name or from the sanctification of his spirite, he doth as it were by these marks open what iudgement abideth for them. I will here passe ouer many fained inuentions, which fooliſh men haue forged to ouerthrow predestination. For they need no confutation, which so soon as they are brought forth, do largly bewraie their owne falsenesse. I will tary onely vppon those, which either are in controuersie among the learned, or which may bring any hardnesse to the simple, or which vngodlinesse with faire seeming shew pretendeth, to scoffe at the righteousnesse of God.

The xxii. Chapter.

A confirmation of the doctrine by testimonies of the Scripture.

God vvas not moued vvith the foresight of mans merites to predestinate, neither is to be grudged at for preferring some, and passing by others, vvhome particularlie and freelie he hath chosen.

ALL these thinges which we haue set are not without controuersie among many, specially the free election of the faithfull: which yet can not bee weakened. For the common sorte doe thinke that GOD, as hee foreseeth that euerie mans deseruing shall bee, so maketh difference betweene men: that therefore whome hee foreknoweth that they shall be not vnworthy of his grace, them he adopteth into place of children: and whose natures he espieth that they will bee bent to wickednesse and vngodlinesse, them he appointeth to the damnation of death. So by cloking it with the veile of foreknowledge they doe not onely darken election, but faine that it hath beginning from elsewhere. And this opinion receiued of the common sort is not the opinion of the common sort alone: for in all ages it hath had great maintainers. Which I doe plainlie confesse, to the entent that no man shoulde trust that it shall much hurt our cause if their names be obiected against vs. For, the trueth of GOD herein is more certaine, than that it may bee shaken: more cleare, than that it may bee darkened with the authoritie of men. But some other neither exercised in the scripture, nor worthy of any voice, doe raile at this doctrine with greater maliciousnesse, than that their forward pride ought to be suffered. Because God choosing some after his owne will, leaueth other some, they picke a quarrell against him. But if the thing it selfe be knowne for true, what shall they preuaile with brawling against God? We teach nothing but that which is approued by experience, that it was alway at libertie for GOD, to bestow his grace to whome hee will. I will not enquire whereby the posteritie of Abraham excelled other, but by that vouchsafing, whereof there is founde no cause elsewhere than in GOD. Lette them aunswere why they bee men rather than oxen or Asses. When it was in the hande of God to make them dogges, he fashioned them after his owne image. Will they giue leaue to bruit beasts to quarrel with god for their estate, as though the differéce were vnrighteous? Truly it is no more righteous, y they should enioy the prerogatiue which they haue obteined by no deseruings, than for God diuerslie to deale abroad his benefites according to the measure of his own iudgement. If they skip ouer to persons, where the inequalitie is more hateful to thē, at the least at the example of Christ, they ought to be afraide to prate so boldly of so high a mystery. He is conceiued of the seed of Dauid, a mortal mā: by what vertues wil they say that he deserued to be in the very wombe made the heade of Angelles, the only begotten sonne of God, the image and glorie of the Father, the light, righteousnesse, and saluation of the worlde? This thing Augustine wisely noted, that in the very heade of the Church is a most cleare mirror of free election, least it should trouble vs in the members: and that he was not by righteously liuing made the sonne of of God, but ỹ he had so great honour freely giuen him, that he might afterwarde make other partakers of his giftes. Here if any man aske why other were not the same that he was, or why all we are so farre distant from him, why al we be corrupt & he pure nes: such a mā shal bewray not only his madnesse, but therewithall also his shamelesnesse. But if they go forward to labor to take from God the free power to chose & refuse, let them also take away that which is giuen to Christ. Now it is worth the trauaile to consider what the scripture pronounceth of euerie one. Paul verily, when he teacheth that we were chosen in Christ, taketh away all respect of our owne worthinesse. For it is all one as if he had said: because in the whole seede of Adam the heauenly father found nothing worthie of his election, he turned his eyes vnto his Christ, to choose as it were members out of his body them whome he would take into the fellowship of life. Let this reason then be of force among the faithful, that we were therefore adopted in Christe into the heauenly inheritance, because in ourselues we were not able to receiue so great excellencie. Which also he touched in another place, when he exhorteth ỹ Colossians to giuing of thanks, for this that they were by God made fit to be partakers of the estate of the holy. If election go before this grace of God that we be made fit to obtaine the glorie of the life to come: what shal God himselfe now finde in vs whereby he may be moued to elect vs? My meaning shall yet be more openly expressed by another saying of his. He hath chosen vs (saith he) ere the foundations of the world were laid, according to ỹ good pleasure of his will, that we might be holy, and vnspotted, and vnreprouable in his sight: where he setteth the good pleasure of God against all our deseruings whatsoeuer they be.

Col. 1. 12.

Eph. 1. 4.

3 That the proofe may be more strong, it is worth the labour to note al the partes of that place, which being coupled togither do leaue no doubt. Where he nameth the elect, it is no doubt that he speaketh to the faithful, as he also by and by afterward affirmeth. Wherefore they doe with too foule a glose abuse that name, which wrest it to the age wherein the gospell was first published. Where he saith that they were elect before the beginning of the world, he taketh away al respect of worthines. For what reason of difference is there betweene them which yet were not, and those which afterwarde should in Adam be egall? Now if they be elect in Christ, it followeth that not onely euery man is seuered without himselfe, but also one of them from another, forasmuch as we see that not all are the members of Christe. That which is added, that they were elect that they might be holy, plainely confuteth the errour which deriueth election from foreknowledge, forasmuch as Paul cryeth out against it and sayeth that whatsoeuer vertue appeareth in men, it is the effect of election. Now if a higher cause be sought, Paul answereth, that God hath so predestinate, yea and that according to the good pleasure of his will. In which wordes he ouerthroweth whatsoeuer meanes of their election men do imagine in themselues. For he also teacheth that whatsoeuer things God giueth toward spiritual life, they flowe out of this one fountaine, because GOD hath chosen whom he would, and ere they were borne he had seuerally laide vp for them the grace which he vouchsaued to giue them.

2. Tim. 1. 9.

3 But whereſoeuer this pleaſure of God reigneth, there no workes come to be conſidered. He doth not here in deede purſue the compariſon of contraries, but it is to be vnderſtanded ſuch as he himſelfe declareth. Hee hath called vs (ſaith he) with a holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his purpoſe and the grace which is giuen of Chriſte before the times of the world. And we haue already ſhewed that al doubt is taken away in this which followeth, that we might be holy and vnſpotted. For if thou ſay, becauſe he foreſawe that we ſhould be holy, therefore he choſe vs, thou ſhalt peruert the order of Paul. Thus therefore thou maiſt ſafely gather. If he choſe vs ỳ we might be holy: then he choſe vs, not becauſe he foreſawe ỳ we would be ſuch. For theſe two thinges are contrarie the one to the other: that the godly haue it of election that they be holy, and that they come to it by meane of workes. Neither is their cauillation here any thing worth to which they commonly flee, that the Lord doth not render the grace of election to any works going before, but yet graunteth it to works to come. For when it is ſaid that the faithfull were choſen, that they might be holy: therwithall is ſignified that the holineſſe which was to come in them tooke beginning at election. And how ſhall this ſaying agree together, that thoſe things which are deriued from election gaue cauſe to election? The ſame thing which he ſaid he ſeemeth afterward to confirme more ſtrongly, where he ſaith, According to the purpoſe of his will which he had purpoſed in him ſelfe. For, to ſay that God purpoſed in himſelfe, is as much in effect as if it had bene ſaid, that without himſelf he conſidered nothing whereof hee had any regard in decreeing. Therefore he by and by addeth, ỳ the whole ſumme of our election tendeth to this end, ỳ we ſhould be to the prayſe of the grace of God. Truly the grace of God deſerueth not to be praiſed alone in our election, vnleſſe our election be free. But free it ſhal not be, if God in electing his, do conſider what ſhalbe the works of euerie one. Therfore we find that that which Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples, hath place vniuerſally among all the faithfull, Ye haue not choſen me, but I haue choſen you. Where hee not onely excludeth deſeruings paſt, but alſo ſignifieth that they had nothing in themſelues why they ſhould be choſen, if hee had not preuented them with his mercie. Like as this ſaying of Paul is alſo to be vnderſtoode: Who firſt gaue to him, & ſhall receiue recompence? For he meaneth to ſhewe that ỳ goodneſſe of God ſo preuenteth men, that it findeth nothing in them neyther paſt nor to come, whereby he may be wonne to be fauourable to them.

Ephe. 1. 5.

Iohn 15. 16.

Rom. 11 35.

Speciall & free election proued out of Saint Paul to the Romanes.

Rom. 9. 6.

4 Now to the Romanes, where he fetcheth this queſtion further off, and followeth it more largely, he denieth that all they are Iſraelites, which are iſſued of Iſrael: becauſe although by right of inheritance they were all bleſſed, yet the ſucceſſion did not egally paſſe to them al. The beginning of this diſputation proceeded of the pride & deceitful glorying of the Iewiſh people. For when they claimed to themſelues the name of the Church, they would haue the credit of the Goſpell to hang vpon their will: as the Papiſtes at this day would gladly with this fained colour thruſt themſelues into the place of God. Paul, although he grant ỳ the offſpring of Abraham is holy by reaſon of the couenant, yet affirmeth ỳ the moſt part of them are ſtrangers in it: & ỳ not only becauſe they ſwarue out of kind, ſo that of lawfull children they they become bastardes, but because the especiall election of God standeth aboue & reineth in the highest top, which alone maketh the adoptiō therof sure. If their owne godlinesse stablished some in the hope of saluation, and their owne falling away alone disherited other some: Paul verilie shoulde both fondly and vnconuenientlie lift vp the readers euen to the secret election. Now if the will of God (the cause whereof neither appeareth nor is to be sought, without himselfe) maketh the one sort differing from the other, so that not all the children of Israel be true Israelites, it is vainly fained that euerie mans estate hath beginning in himselfe. Then hee further followeth the matter vnder the example of Iacob & Esau. For when they both were the sonnes of Abraham, both together enclosed in one mothers wombe, it was a mōster like change that the honour of first birth was remoued to Iacob, by which change Paul affirmeth that there was testified the election of ỹ one, and the reprobation of the other. The originall and cause of it is enquired, which the teachers of foreknowledge will haue to be set out in the vertues, & vices of men. For this is an easy short way with them, that God shewed in the person of Iacob, that hee chooseth the worthy of his grace: and in the person of Esau, he refuseth them whom he foreseeth to be vnworthy. Thus they say boldly. But whar saith Paul? when they were not yet born, and had not done any good or euill, that according to election the purpose of God might abide, not of workes, but of him that calleth, it is said: The elder shall serue the yonger: as it is written, Iacob I haue loued, but Esau I haue hated. If foreknowledge were of any force in this difference of the brethren, then verily mention were vnfitlie made of the time. Let vs graunt that Iacob was chosen, because he had worthines gotten by works to come: to what purpose should Paul say that he was not yet borne? And this now should be vnaduisedlie added, that he had yet done no good: because this shall bee readie answere, that nothing is hidden from God, & that so the godlines of Iacob was present before him. If works do win grace, they shoulde then worthily haue had their price before that Iacob was borne as if he had bene growne to full age. But the Apostle goeth forward in vndoing this knot, and teacheth that the adoption of Iacob was not made of workes, but of the calling of God. In workes he enterlaceth not the time to come or time past: & then he directly setteth them against the calling of god, meaning by stablishing of the one expresly to ouerthrowe the other: as if he had said that it is to be considered what hath pleased God, not what men haue brought of themselues. Last of all it is certain that by the words of election and Purpose, all causes whatsoeuer men are wont to faine elsewhere than in the secrete counsell of God, are quite remoued from this matter. Rom. 9. 11.

The doctrine is so cleare and the example so plaine vvhich S. Paule produceth, that there is no place at all left to cauil.

5 What colour will they bring to darken these thinges, who in election assigne some place to workes either past or to come? For this is vtterlie to mocke out that which the Apostle affirmeth, that the difference of the brethren hangeth not vpon any consideration of workes, but vpon the meere calling of God, because it was put betweene them when they were not yet born. Neither had he beene ignorant of this their suttletie, if it had had any soundnes in it: but because he very wel knew, ỹ God can foresee no goodnes in man, but ỹ which he hath first determined by the benefit of his election to giue giue him: hee fleeth not to that vnorderlie order, to set good workes before the cause of themselues. Thus haue we by the wordes of the Apostle ỳ the saluation of the faithfull is founded vpon the will of the onely election of God: and that the same fauour is not gotten hy works, but commeth of free calling. We haue also as it were an image of that thing set before vs. Esau & Iacob are brethren, issuing both of the same parentes, encloſed yet both in one wombe, not yet brought out into the worlde. In them all thinges are egall, yet of them the iudgement of God is diuers. For he taketh the one & forsaketh the other. There was nothing but the onelie first birth, by right whereof the one excelled the other. But this also being passed ouer, ỳ thing is giuen to the yonger which is denied in the elder. Yea, and in other also God seemeth alway as of set purpose to haue despised first birth, to cut off from the flesh all matter of glorying. Refusing Ismael, he cast his minde to Isaac. Plucking backe Manasse, he more honoured Ephraim.

Their election vvhome S. Paule speaketh of, vvas not onely to an earthlie inheritance but an heauenlie.

6 If any man interrupt me with saying that wee must not by these inferiour & smal benefites determine of the summe of the life to come, that he which hath bin aduanced to the honor of first birth, should therfore be reckoned to bee adopted into the inheritance of heauen: (for there bee some which spare not Paul himself, as though in alleaging these testimonies hee had wrested the scripture to a strãge sense:) I answere as I haue done herebefore, ỳ the apostle neither slipped by vnaduisednes, nor wilfullie abused ỳ testimonies of the scripture. But he saw (which they cãnot abide to cõsider) ỳ God minded by an earthly signe to declare the spirituall election of Iacob, which otherwise was hidden in his inaccessible throne. For vnlesse we refer the first birth graunted to him vnto the world to come, it should be a vaine & fond forme of blessing whereby he obtained nothing but manifolde miseries, discommodities, griefefull banishment, and many bitternesse of sorrow and cares. Therefore when Paul saw without douting, that God by outward blessing testified the blessing which he had in his kingdome prepared spirituall and neuer decaying for his seruant: he douted not for proofe of this spirituall blessing, to fetch an argument from that outward blessing. This also we must remember that to the land of Canaan was adioyned the pledge of the heauenlie dwelling: so that it ought not at all to be douted that Iacob was graffed with the Angels into the body of Christ, that he might bee partaker of the same life. Iacob therefore is chosen, when Esau is reiected: and by the predestination of God is made different from him from whome he differed not in any deseruings. If you ask a cause, the apostle rendreth this, becausе it is said to Moses, I will haue mercie vpon whome I will haue mercie, and I will vouchsafe to graunt mercie to whom soeuer I will vouchsafe to graunt mercy. And what I beseech you meaneth this? Verily, the Lorde himself most plainlie pronounceth that mẽ haue in thẽselues no cause why he should do good to them, but he fetcheth the cause from his owne mercy only: & therfore ỳ the saluation of his is his owne worke. When God setteth thy saluation in himselfe alone, why wilt thou descend to thy selfe? When he appointeth to thee his mercie alone, why wilt thou runne to thine owne deseruings? When he holdeth thy thought wholly in his mercifulues alone, why wilt thou turne part to the beholding of thine owne workes? Therfore we must needs come to that lesser people, which Paul in an other place said to haue beene foreknowen to God: not in such sort as these men imagine, to foreknowe out of an idle watchtoure the thinges that hee worketh not: but in such sense as it is oft read. For truly when Peter saith in Luke, that Christ was by the determined coūsel & foreknowledge of God appointed to death: he doth not bring God as a looker on but the author of our saluation. So the same Peter also, where he sayth that the faithful to whom he wrote were chosen according to the foreknowledge of GOD, properly expresseth that secret Predestination whereby God hath marked for his children whom he would. And ỹ word Purpose, which he ioyneth for a diuers word, expressing all one thing, forasmuch as it doth euery where signifie a stedfast determination as they commonly cal it, vndoubtedly teacheth that God when he is author of our saluation goeth not out of himselfe. In which sense he sayth in the same Chapter that Christ was the lamb foreknowen before the creation of the worlde. For what is more fonde or trifling, than to say that God from on high did stand looking whence saluation should come to mankind? Therfore in Paul the foreknowen people is asmuch as a smal portion mingled with the multitude which falsly pretendeth ỹ name of God. In an other place also Paul to beate down their boasting which being but couered with a visor, do take vpon themselues the chief preeminence among the godly before the world, saith that God knoweth who be his. Finally by that saying Paul pointeth vnto vs two sorts of people: the one, of the whole kinred of Abraham: the other, seuerally chosen out of it, and which being laid vp vnder the eyes of God, is hidden from the sight of men. And it is no doubt that he tooke this out of Moses, which affirmeth ỹ God will be mercifull to whom he wil (although he there spake of the elect people, whose estate in outward seeming was equall) as if he should haue said, ỹ in the common adoption is included with him a speciall grace toward some, as it were a more holy treasure: and that the common couenaunt withstandeth not but that the same smal number may be exempt in degree: and he willing to make himselfe the free disposer and ruler of this thing, precisely denieth that he wil be merciful to one rather than to an other, for any other reason, but for that it so pleaseth him: because when mercy cōmeth to him that seeketh it, though hee in deede suffer not a deniall, yet he either preuenteth or partly getteth to himselfe the fauour whereof God claimeth to himselfe the prayse.

7 Now let the souereigne Iudge & master pronounce of the whole matter. When he saw so great hardnes in his hearers, that he did in a maner wast his wordes without fruit among the multitude: to remedy this offence, hee crieth out, Whatsoeuer my Father giueth me, it shall come to me. For this is the will of my Father, that whatsoeuer my Father hath giuen me, I shal not loose any thing of it. Note that the beginning is taken at the Fathers gifte, that we may be deliuered into the faithfull keeping and defence of Christ. Here some man peraduenture will turne a circle about, and will take exception, saying that they onely are accounted in the proper possession of the Father, whose yeelding hath beene voluntarie by faith. But Christ standeth onely vpon that point, that although the fallinges away of great multitudes doe shake the whole worlde, yet the counsell of GOD shalbe stedfaste and stande ſtand faſter than the heauens themſelues, that his election may neuer fayle. They are ſaid to haue beene the elect of the Father, before that he gaue to them his onely begotten Sonne. They aske whether it were by nature: yea rather, them which were ſtrangers he made his owne by drawing them to him. There is a greater clearenesſe in the words of Chriſt thā can by ſhifting be couered with any darkeneſſe. No man (ſaith he) can come to mee, vnleſſe my Father drawe him. But who ſo hath heard and learned of my Father, he commeth to mee. If all gnerally without difference ſhould bow their knee before Chriſt, then the election were common: but nowe in the fewneſſe of the beleeuers appeareth a manifeſt diuerſitie. Therefore after that Chriſt had affirmed that the diſciples which were giuen him, were the peculiar poſſeſsiō of God the Father, within a litle after he added, I pray not for the world, but for thoſe whō thou haſt giuen me, becauſe they are thine. Wherby is proued that the whole world belongeth not to the Creator of it, ſauing that grace deliuereth a few from the wrath of God, and from eternal death, which otherwiſe ſhould haue periſhed: but the worlde it ſelfe is left in his owne deſtruction to which it was appointed. In the meane time although Chriſt put himſelfe meane betweene, yet he claimeth to himſelfe the power of chooſing in common with the Father. I ſpeake not (ſaith he) of all: I know whom I haue choſen. If any man aske from whence he hath choſen them, he anſwereth in an other place, Out of the world, which he excludeth out of his prayers when he commendeth his diſciples to his Father. This is to be holden, that when he affirmeth ẏ he knoweth whō he hath choſen, there is ſignified ſome ſpeciall ſorte in the generall kinde of men: then, that the ſame ſpeciall ſorte is made to differ not by the qualitie of their owne vertues, but by the heauenly decree. Whereupon followeth that many excell by their owne force or diligence, when Chriſte maketh himſelfe the author of election. For when in another place he reckoneth Iudas among the electe, whereas he was a deuill, this is referred onely to the office of Apoſtleſhippe which although it be a cleare mirrour of the fauour of God (as Paul ſo oftentimes acknowledgeth in his owne perſon,) yet it conteineth not in it ſelfe the hope of eternall ſaluation. Iudas therefore, when he did vnfaithfully beare the office of an Apoſtle, might bee worſe than the deuill: but of thoſe whome Chriſte hath once grafted into his body, he will ſuffer none to periſh: becauſe in preſeruing their ſaluation he will performe that which he hath promiſed, that is, he will ſtretch forth the power of God which is greater than all. For whereas he ſayth in an other place. Father, of thoſe whom thou haſt giuen mee, I haue loſt none but the ſonne of perdition: although it be an abuſiue ſpeeche by figure, yet it hath no doubtfull meaning. The ſumme is that God maketh them his children by free adoption whom he wil haue to be his children: and that the inward cauſe thereof is in himſelfe: becauſe he is content with his owne ſecrete good pleaſure.

8 But Ambroſe, Origene, and Hierome thought that GOD diſtributeth his grace among men, as he foreſeeth that euerie man will vſe it well: Yea and Auguſtine was once in the ſame opinion. But when he had better profited in knowledge of the Scripture, hee not onely reuoked it as euidently falſe, falſe, but alſo ſtrongly confuted it: yea and after his reuoking of it, in reproouing the Pelagians for that they continued in the ſame errour, ſaith: Who cannot maruel that the Apoſtle knewe not this moſt ſuttle ſenſe? For when he had ſet out a thing to be wondred at of theſe brethren, while they were not yet borne, and afterwarde obiected a queſtion againſt himſelfe, ſaying: what then? Is there vniuſtice with God? Here was fit place for him to aunſwere, that God foreſawe the merites of them both: yet he ſaith not this, but flyeth to the iudgements and mercie of God. And in another place, when he had taken away all merites before election, Here (ſaith hee) is confuted their vaine reaſoning which defend the foreknowledge of God againſt the grace of God, & therefore ſay that wee are choſen before the making of the world becauſe God foreknewe that we would be good, not that he himſelfe would make vs good. He ſaith not this, which ſaith, Ye haue not choſen mee, but I haue choſen you. For if he had therefore choſen vs, becauſe hee foreknewe that we would be good: he ſhould therewithal alſo haue foreknowen ỹ we would chooſe him: and ſo foorth as followeth to that effect. Let the teſtimonie of Auguſtine be of force among them that willingly reſt in the authoritie of the Fathers. Howbeit Auguſtine ſuffreth not himſelfe to bee ſeuered from the reſt: but by clere teſtimonies ſheweth that this diſagreement is falſe with the malice whereof the Pelagians burdened him. For in the xix. Chapter of his booke of the predeſtinatiõ of Saints, he alleageth out of Ambroſe, Chriſt calleth whome he hath mercy on. Againe, if he had willed, of the vndeuout he might haue made deuout. But God calleth whom he vouchſaueth, & whom he wil he maketh religious. If I liſted to knit together a whole volume out of Auguſtine, I could redily ſhewe to the readers that I neede no other words but his: But I wil not load them with tediouſnes. But go to, let vs imagine that they ſpeake not at all: but let vs giue heede to the matter it ſelfe. A hard queſtion was moued, whether God did righteouſly in this that he vouchſaued to graunt his grace but to ſome: Of which queſtion Paul might haue vncombred himſelf with one word if he had alleadged ỹ reſpect of works. Why therfore doth he it not, but rather continueth on a diſcourſe which abideth in the ſame hardnes? Why, but becauſe he ought not? For the Holy ghoſt which ſpake by his mouth, had not the diſeaſe of forgetfulneſſe. Therefore without any circumſtances he anſwereth, that God therefore fauoureth, his elect, becauſe he wil: therefore hath mercie, becauſe he wil. For this Oracle of God, I wil haue mercie vpon whome I wil haue mercie, and I will ſhew mercie to whom I will ſhew mercie, is as much in effect as if it had bin ſaid, that God is moued to mercie by no other reaſon but becauſe hee wil haue mercie. Therefore this ſaying of Auguſtine remaineth true, that the grace of God doth not find men fit to be choſen, but maketh them.

9 Neither do we any thing paſſe vpon the ſuttletie of Thomas, that the foreknowing of deſeruings, is not in deede the cauſe of Predeſtination on the behalfe of the act of him that doeth predeſtinate, but on our behalfe it may after a certaine manner bee ſo called, that is, according to the particular weying of Predeſtination: as when it is ſaide that God predeſtinateth glorie to man by deſeruinges, becauſe hee hath decreed to giue to him grace by which hee may deſerue glorie. haue vs to looke vnto nothing but his meere goodneſſe, if any man ſhall couet here to ſee any more, it ſhalbee a wrongfull greedineſſe. If wee luſted to ſtriue in ſuttletie, wee want not wherewith to beate backe this ſilly ſuttletie of Thomas. Hee affirmeth that to the elect glorie is after a certaine manner predeſtinate by deſeruinges, becauſe the Lorde doeth after a certaine manner predeſtinate to them the grace, by which they may deſerue glorie. What if I aunſwere on the contrarie ſide and ſaye that predeſtination vnto grace, ſerueth election vnto life, and is as it were a waiting maide after it? that grace is predeſtinate to them, to whom the poſſeſſion of glorie hath beene long agoe appointed: becauſe it pleaſeth the Lorde to bring his children from election into iuſtification? For thereupon it ſhall follow that the predeſtination of glorie was rather the cauſe of the Predeſtination of grace, than contrariwiſe. But away with theſe ſtriuinges as things ſuperfluous for ſuch as ſhall thinke that there is wiſedom enough for them in the worde of God. For this was in olde time truely written of an Eccleſiaſticall writer, that they which aſſigne the election of God to merites are more wiſe than they ought to be.

There is no repugnance betweene Gods calling of all & calling effectually but choſen only.

10 Some doe obiect that God ſhoulde bee contrarie to himſelfe if hee ſhoulde vniuerſally call all men to him, and receiue but a fewe elect. So by their opinion the vniuerſalneſſe of the promiſe taketh away the difference of ſpeciall grace. And thus certaine ſober men ſpeake, not ſo much to oppreſſe the trueth, as to debarre crabbed queſtions, and to bridle the curioſitie of many. Their will is praiſeworthie, but their counſell is not to bee allowed: becauſe dallying by ſhiftes is neuer excuſable. But their obiecting of it which do more railingly inueigh againſt it, is verily too fonde a cauillation, or too ſhameful an error. How the ſcripture maketh theſe two to agree together, that by outward preaching all men are called to Repentance and faith, and yet not to all men is giuen the Spirite of Repentance and faith, I haue in an other place alreadie declared, and by & by ſome what of it muſt be repeated againe. Now that which they require I denie to them, ſith it is two wayes falſe. For, he that threatneth that while it raineth vppon one citie, there ſhall be drought vpon an other: Hee that pronounceth that there ſhall in an other place be famine of doctrine, bindeth not himſelf with a certaine lawe to call all men egallie. And hee which forbidding Paul to ſpeake in Aſia, and turning him from Bithinia draweth him into Macedonia, ſheweth that it is in his own power to diſtribute this treaſure to whomſoeuer it ſhall pleaſe him. Yet more plainely hee ſheweth by Eſay, how he peculiarly directeth to the elect the promiſes of ſaluation: for hee ſayeth of them onely, and not of all mankind indifferently, that they ſhalbe his Diſciples. Whereby it is certaine that the doctrine of ſaluation is wrongfully ſet open in common to all men to profite effectually, which is ſaide to bee ſeuerally layde vp onely for the children of the Church. Let this ſuffice at this preſent, that although the voyce of the Goſpell ſpeake generally to all, yet the gifte of faith is rare. Eſay aſſigneth the cauſe, for that the arme of the Lorde is not open to all men. If hee had ſaide that the Goſpel is maliciouſly and frowardly deſpiſed, becauſe many doe ſtubbornely refuſe to heare: peraduenture this colour touching vniuerſall calling ſhoulde preuaile. Neither is it the purpose of the Prophet to diminish the fault of men, whē he teacheth that the fountaine of blindnes is, that God vouchsafeth not to open his arme to them: onelie he giueth warning, that becausē faith is a singular gift, the eares are beaten in vaine with outward doctrine. But I would fain know of these doctors, whether onely preaching, or faith, make the children of God. Certainely when it is saide in the first chapter of Iohn, Whosoeuer beleeue in the only begotten Sonne of God, are themselues also made the children of God, there is not in that place a cōfused heap iumbled vp together: but a speciall order is giuen to the faithfull, which are borne not of bloude, not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. But (saye they) there is a mutuall consent of faith with the worde, namely whersoeuer is faith. But it is no new thing that seede fall among thornes or in stony places: not onely becausē the greater part appeareth indeede obstinate against God, but also becausē not all men haue eyes and eares. How then shal it agree that God calleth to him them who he knoweth will not come? Let Augustine answeare for me. Wilt thou dispute with me? Maruaile with me, & cry out, O depth. Let vs both agree in feare, least we perish in error. Moreouer if election (as Paul witnesseth) bee the mother of faith, I turne backe the argument vpon their owne heade, that faith is therefore not generall, becausē election is special. For by the orderly hanging together of causes & effectes, it is easily gathered that where Paul saith, that we are full of al spirituall blessing, as God had chosen vs before the creation of the world: therfore these riches are not common to al, becausē God hath chosen only whō he would. This is the reason why in another place he cōmendeth the faith of the elect, least it should be thought that any man doth by his owne motion get faith to himselfe: but that this glorie maie remaine with God, that they are freely enlightned of him, whom he had chosen before. For Bernarde sayth rightly, Friends doe seuerally heare, to whom he also saith, Feare not thou small flocke: for to you it is giuen to know the mysterie of the kingdome of heauen. Who be these? euen they whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate to be fashioned like to the image of his Sonne. A great & secret counsell is made knowen. The Lorde knewe who be his: but that which was knowē to God is made manifest to men: neither doth he vouchsafe to make any other partakers of so great a mystery, but those selfe same men whom he hath foreknowen and predestinate to be his. A litle after he concludeth. The mercy of God is from eternity euen to eternitie vpon them ỹ feare him: frō eternity, by reason of predestinatiō: to eternitie, by reason of blessed making: the one without beginning, the other without ending. But what neede I to cite Bernarde for witnesse, when we heare of the masters owne mouth, that none doe see but they which are of God? By which words he signifieth, that all they which are not begotten againe of god, doe dasell at the brightnesse of his countenance. And to election faith indeede is fitly ioyned, so that it keepe the second degree. Which order the wordes of Christ do cleerely expresse in an other place, This is the will of my Father, that I lose not ỹ which he hath giuen. For this is his will, that whosoeuer beleeueth in the Sonne, shall not perish. If he would haue all saued, he would appoint ouer them his Sonne to be their keeper, and would graffe them all into his bodie with the holy bond of faith. Nowe it is certaine that faith is a ſingular pledge of his fatherly loue, laide vp for his children whom he hath adopted. Therefore Chriſt in an other place ſaith that the ſheep follow the ſhepheard, becauſe they know his voyce: but they followe not a ſtranger, becauſe they knowe not the voyce of ſtrangers. Whence commeth this difference, but becauſe their eares are boared by God? For no man maketh himſelfe a ſheepe: but hee is made one by the heauenly grace. For which cauſe alſo the Lorde teacheth that our ſafetie ſhall alway be certaine and free from daunger, becauſe it is kept by the inuincible power of God. Wherefore he concludeth that the vnbeleeuers are not of his ſheepe: namely becauſe they are not of the number of them, whom God hath promiſed by Eſaie that they ſhalbe his diſciples. Nowe becauſe in the teſtimonies which I haue alleaged is expreſſed perſeuerance, they doe therewithall teſtifie the vnmoueable ſtedfaſtneſſe of election.

Rom. 9. 13.

The grounde of reprobation the vvill of God to reiect & not mens deſeruing to be reiected.

11 Now let vs ſpeak of the reprobate, whom the Apoſtle ioyneth there together. For as Iacob, hauing yet with good workes deſerued nothing, is taken into grace: ſo Eſau, beeing yet defiled with no wicked doing, is hated. If we turne our eyes to workes, we do wrong to the Apoſtle, as though he ſawe not the ſame thing which we cleerely ſee. It is prooued that hee ſawe it not, foraſmuch as he expreſly enforceth this pointe, that when they had not yet done any good or euill, the one was choſen, and the other refuſed, to prooue that the foundation of the predeſtination of GOD is not in workes. Againe when he moued the obiection, whether God be vnrighteous, he allegeth not that which had ben the moſt certaine and plaine defence of his righteouſneſſe, namely that God reduced to Eſau according to his euilneſſe: but he was content with an other ſolution, that the reprobate are ſtirred vp to this ende, that the glorie of God may be ſet forth by them. Laſt of all he adioyneth a concluding ſentence, that God hath mercie vpon whome he will, and hardeneth whom he will. See you not how he impureth both to the onely will of God? Therefore if we can not declare a reaſon why he vouchſafeth to grant mercie to them that be his, but becauſe it ſo pleaſeth him: neither alſo ſhall we haue any other cauſe in reiecting of other, than his owne will For when it is ſaid that God hardeneth, or ſheweth mercie to whome he will, men are thereby warned to ſeeke no cauſe elſe where than in his will.

The xxiij. Chapter.

A Confutation of the ſlanders vvherevvith this doctrine hath alvvay beene vvrongfully burdened.

BVt when the witte of man heareth theſe things, the frowardneſſe thereof cannot be reſtreined, but that by and by as at the bloudy blaſt of a trũpet ſounding to battaile, it diuerſly and exceſſiuely turmoileth. And many in deede, as though they would driue away the malice from GOD, doe ſo graunt election, that they denie that any man is reprobate: but they do too ignorantly and childiſhly: foraſmuch as election it ſelfe could not ſtand vnleſſe it were ſet contrarie to reprobation: God is ſaid to feuer them whom he adopteth adopteth vnto saluation: should be more than fooleshly said that other do either by chaunce or by their owne endeuour obtaine that which onely election giueth to a fewe. Therefore whom God passeth ouer, hee reiecteth: & for none other cause, but for that he will exclude them from the inheritance which he doth predestinate to his children. Neither is the waiwardnesse of men tolerable, if it suffer not it selfe to bee bridled with the worde of God, where the incomprehensible counsell of God is entreated of, which the Angels themselues doe worship. But wee haue alreadie heard, ỳ hardening is no lesse in the hand & wil of God than mercie. Neither doth Paul (as these men do that I haue spoken of) busily labor to excuse God with a lying defence: but only he teacheth that it is not lawfull for the thing formed to quarel with him that formed it. Now who so doe not admit that any are reiected of god, how wil they vncumber themselues from that saying of Christ Euery tree which my father hath not planted, shalbe plucked vp by the roote They plainly heare that all they are adiudged and auowed to destruction, whome the heauenly Father hath not vouchsaued to plant as holy trees in his grounde. If they denie this to be a signe of reprobation, then is there nothing so cleare ỳ it may be proued to them. But if they cease not to wrangle, let the sobrietie of faith be contented with this admonition of Paul, that there is no cause to quarel with God, if he willing on the one side to shew his wrath and to make his power knowen do with dumme sufferance, and lenitie beare with the vessels of wrath prepared to destruction: & on the other side he make knowen the richesse of his glorie toward the vessels of mercie which he hath prepared to glorie. Let the Readers marke, how Paul to cut off occasion from whisperings & backbitings, giueth the cheefe rule to the wrath & power of God: because it is vniust that those deepe iudgementes which swallow vp al our senses, should be made subiect to our determinatiõ. Our aduersaries aunswere is verie trifling, that God doth not vtterly reiect them whom he suffereth in lenitie, but abideth with a mind hanging in suspence toward them, if peraduenture they may repent. As though Paul giueth to God a patience, to look for their turning, whom he saith to be made to destruction. For Augustine saith rightly where he expoundeth this place, where power is ioyned to sufferance, God doth not suffer, but gouerne with his power. They further say also that it is not for nothing said that the vessels of wrath are prepared to destruction: but, ỳ God hath prepared the vessels of mercie: because by this meane he ascribeth & chalengeth the praise of saluation to God, but the blame of destruction he casteth vppon them which by their owne will doe bring it vppon themselues. But although I graunt to them that Paul by the diuerse manner of speaking did soften the roughnesse of the first parte of the sentence, yet is it not meete to assigne the preparing vnto destruction to any other thing than to the secrete counsell of God: which also is affirmed a litle before in the rest of the text. That God stirred vp Pharao: Then that hee hardeneth whome he will. Wherevpon followeth that the hidden counsell of God is the cause of hardening. This at the least I get which Augustine sayeth, that when God of Wolues maketh sheepe, hee doeth with a mightier grace reforme them, that their hardnes may be tamed: and therefore God for this cause doth not conuert the obſtinate, becauſe he doth not ſhew foorth in them the mightier grace, which he wanteth not if he would ſhew it forth.

There is no ſtriuing againſt God in this cauſe.

2 Theſe ſayings in deede ſhould be ſufficient for the godly and ſober, & them which remember themſelues to be men. But forasmuch as theſe venemous dogges do caſt vp not only one ſort of venime againſt God, we will as the matter ſhal ſerue, anſwere to euery one particularly. Fooliſh men do diuerſe wayes quarell with God, as though they had him ſubiect to their accuſations. Firſt therefore they aske, by what right the Lorde is angrie with his creatures, of whome he hath not ben firſt prouoked by any offence: for to condemne to deſtruction whom he will, agreeth rather with the wilfulnes of a tyrant, than the lawful ſentence of a iudge. Therefore they ſay that there is cauſe why men ſhould charge God, if by his bare will, without their own deſeruing, they be predeſtinate to eternall death. If ſuch thoughts do at any time come into the mind of the godly, to breake their violent aſſaultes they ſhalbe ſufficiently armed with this, although they had no more, if they conſider howe great wickedneſſe it is, euen ſo much as to inquire of the cauſes of the will of God: ſith of all things that are, it is the cauſe, & worthily ſo ought to be. For if it haue any cauſe, then ſomewhat muſt go before it, whereto it muſt be as it were bounde: which it is vnlawfull once to imagine For, the will of God is ſo the higheſt rule of righteouſneſſe, that whatſoeuer he willeth, euen for this that he willeth it, it ought to bee taken for righteous, When therefore it is asked, why the Lord did it: it is to be aunſwered, becauſe he willed it. But if thou goe further in asking why hee willed it, thou askeſt ſome greater & higher thing than the wil of God: which cannot be found. Let therefore the raſhneſſe of man reſtraine it ſelfe, & not ſeeke that which is not, leaſt peraduenture it may not finde that which is. With this bridle (I ſay) he ſhal be well withholden whoſoeuer hee be that will diſpute of the ſecretes of God with reuerence. As for the boldneſſe of the wicked, which dread not openly to ſpeake euil of God: againſt it the Lorde with his own righteouſneſſe, without any our defence ſhall ſufficiently defende himſelfe, when he ſhall take all ſhifting from their conſciences, and holde them faſt conuinced, and condemne them. Neither doe wee yet thruſt in the fained deuiſe of abſolute power, which as it is prophane, ſo worthily ought to be abhorred of vs. We faine not God lawleſſe, who is a lawe to himſelfe: becauſe (as Plato ſaith) men ſtand in neede of lawes, who are troubled with vnlawfull luſtes: but the will of God is not onelie pure from all fault, but alſo is the higheſt rule of perfection, yea and the lawe of all lawes. But we denie that he is ſubiect to yelde accompt, We denie alſo that we are meete iudges, which woulde pronounce of this cauſe after our owne ſenſe. Wherefore if we attempt further than we lawfully may, let that threatning of the Pſalme bring vs in feare, that God ſhal ouercome ſo oft as he is iudged of anie mortall man.

This is taken out of Auguſtin. li 1. de Genti. contr. Mani. cap. 3.

Pſa. 51. 6.

The truth hath ſufficient to ſtop their mouthes, vvho aske vvhy God ſhould forc-appoint ſome vnto death, vvhen they not being couldnot deſerue the death vvhereunto they vvere appointed.

3 So can God in keeping ſilence, put his enemies to ſilence. But, that we may not ſuffer them freely to ſcorne his holy name, he deliuereth to vs out of his worde weapons againſt them. Wherefore if any man aſſaile vs with ſuch words: why God hath from the beginning predeſtinate ſome to death, which when they were not, coulde not yet deſerue the iudgement of death:

we in steede of aunswere maie againe on our side aske of them, what they thinke that God oweth to man, if he will iudge him by his owne nature. In such sort as we be all corrupted with sinne, we cannot but be hatefull to god: and that not by tyrannous crueltie, but by most vpright reason of iustice. If all they whom the Lorde doeth predestinate to death, are by the estate of nature subiect to the iudgement of death: of what vniustice against themselues, I beseech you, may they complaine? Let al the sonnes of Adam come: Let them striue and dispute with their creator, for that by his eternall prouidence they were before their generation condemned to euerlasting miserie. What shall they bee able once to mutter against this defence, when God on the other side shall call them to reknowledging of themselues? If they be all taken out of a corrupt masse, it is no marueile if they be subiect to damnation. Let them not therefore accuse God of vniustice, if by his eternall iudgement they be appointed to death, to which they themselues doe feele whether they will or no, that they are willingly led of their owne nature. Whereby appeareth how wrongfull is the desire of their murmuring, because they do of set purpose hide the cause of damnation which they are compelled to acknowledge in themselues, that the laying of the blame vpon God may acquite thē. But though I do a hūdred times confesse, as it is most true, y god is the author of it, yet they do not by & by wipe away the giltines which being engrauen in their consciences from time with oft recourse, presenteth it selfe to their eies.

God not vniust though men be cōdamned for that corruption vvherunto they vvere foreappointed.

4 Againe they except & say: were they not before predestinate by the ordinance of God to the same corruption which is nowe alleadged for the cause of damnation? When therefore they perish in their corruption, they do nothing but suffer the punishment of that miserie into which by his predestination Adam fell and drewe his posteritie headlong with him. Is not he therefore vniust, which doth so cruelly mocke his creatures? I graunt indeed that all the children of Adam fell by the will of God into that miserie of state wherein they be nowe bounde: and this is it that I saide at the beginning, that at length we must alway returne to the determination of the will of God, the cause whereof is hidden in himselfe. But it followeth not by and by that God is subiect to this slander. For we will with Paul answere them in this manner, O man, what art thou that contendest with God? doeth the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou formed me so? Hath not the potter power to make of the same lumpe one vessel to honor, and another to dishonor? They will say that the righteousnesse of God is so not truely defended, but that we seeke a shift, such as they are wont to haue that want a iust excuse. For what else seemeth here to be said, than that God hath a power which cannot be hindered from doing anie thing whatsoeuer it be as he will himselfe? But it is farre otherwise. For, what stronger reason can be brought than when wee are commaunded to thinke what a one God is? For howe shoulde he commit any vniustice, which is iudge of the worlde? If it properly pertaine to the nature of God to doe iudgement, then he naturally loueth righteousnesse, and abhorreth vnrighteousnesse. Wherefore the Apostle did not, as though he were ouertaken, looke about for holes to hide him: but shewed that the reason of the righteousnes of God is higher than that either it is to be measured by the measure of man, or may be comprehended by the slender capacitie of the wit of man. The Apostle in deede confesseth that there is such depth in the iudgemẽts of God, wherwith the mindes of men should be swalowed, if they endeuoured to pearce into it. But he teacheth also how hainous wrong it is, to binde the works of God to such a lawe, that so soone as we vnderstand not the reason of them, wee may be bolde to disalow them It is a knowen saying of Salomon (which yet fewe do rightly vnderstand) The great creator of al rendreth reward to ỹ foole, and reward to transgressors. For he crieth out concerning the greatnes of God: in whose wil it is to punish fooles and transgressors, although hee doe not vouchsaue to let them haue his spirite. And monstrous is the madnesse of men, when they so couet to make that which is vnmeasurable, subiect to the smal measure of their reason. The Angels which stoode still in their vprightnesse, Paul calleth elect. If their stedfastnes was grounded vppon the good pleasure of God, the falling away of the other proueth that they were forsaken: Of which thing there can no other cause be alledged than reprobation, which is hidden in the secret counsel of God.

Pro.26.10.

1.Tim.5.22.

A reason of the vvil of God in reiection of the vvicked, vve neither can find neither should search.

5 Go to: let there now be present some Manichee, or Celestine, a slanderer of the prouidence of God: I say with Paul that there ought no reason to be rendred thereof: because with the greatnesse of it, it farre surmounteth our vnderstanding. What marueile? or what absurditie is it? Would he haue the power of God so limitted, that it may be able to worke no more, than his mind is able to conceiue? I say with Augustine, that they are created of the Lord, whome he without douting foreknewe that they shoulde goe into destruction: and that it was so done because he so willed: but why he willed, it is not our part to aske a reason of it, who cannot comprehend it: neither is it meete that the wil of God should come downe into controuersie among vs, of which so oft as mention is made, vnder the name of it is named ỹ higheſt rule of righteousnes. Why therfore is any question mooued of vnrighteousnesse where righteousnesse clearly appeareth? Neither let vs be ashamed, after the example of Paul, so to stop the mouthes of the wicked, and from time to time so oft as they shalbe bolde to barke against it, to repeate this, Who be ye miserable men, that lay an accusation to Gods charge, and doe therefore lay it to his charge, because he doth not temper the greatnesse of his workes to your dulnesse? As though they were therefore wrongfull, because they are hidden from flesh The vnmeasurableness of the iudgements of God is by cleare experiences knowne vnto you. Yee knowe that they are called the deepe bottomlesse depth. Now aske of the narrowe capacities of your wit, whether they comprehend that which God hath decreed with himselfe. What good doth it you therefore with mad searching to plunge your selues into the bottomlesse depth, which reason it selfe teacheth you that it shall be to your destruction? Why are ye not at the leaste restrained with some fear of ỹ which both the historie of Iob and the books of the Prophets do report of the incomprehensible wisedome, and terrible power of God. If thy minde be vnquieted, let it not greeue thee to embrace the counsell of Augustine. Thou being a man lookest for an aunswere at my hande: and I also am a man. Therefore let vs both heare him that sayeth:

Psal.36.

Aug.de verb. apo.serm.20.

O man,

O man, what art thou? Better is a faithfull ignorance than rash knowledge. Seeke merites: thou shalt finde nothing but paine. O depth, Peter denieth: the Theefe beleeueth. O depth: Seekest thou a reason? I will tremble at the depth. Reason thou, I will wonder, dispute thou, I will beleeue: I see depth, but I reach not the bottome. Paul rested, because he found wondering. Hee calleth the iudgementes of God vnsearchable: & art thou come to search them? He saith that his wayes are impossible to be traced out: and doest thou trace them? with proceeding further wee shall nothing profite: For neither we shall satisfie their way wanton curiousnesse, neither doeth the Lorde neede any other defence, than which he hath vsed by his spirite, which spake by the mouth of Paul: and we forget to speake well, when wee cease to speake with God.

6 Their other obiection also ariseth out of vngodlinesse, which yet tendeth not so directly to the accusing of God as to the excusing of the sinner. Howbeit the sinner which is condemned of God cannot bee iustified without dishonour of the iudge. Thus therefore prophane tongues doe barke against God, saying: why should God impute those things for sinne to men, whereof he hath by his predestination layde necessitie vpon men? For, what should they do? Should they wrastle with his decrees? But so should they do it in vaine, sith they cannot doe it at all. Therefore they are not rightfully punished for those thinges, whereof the cheefe cause is in Gods predestination. Here I will absteine from that defence, whereunto the Ecclesiastical writers do commonly flee, namely that the foreknowledge of God withstādeth not but that man may be accounted the sinner: because God foreseeth the euils of man, not his own. For so the cauillation would not stay here, but will rather presse vs further with saying that God might if hee had woulde, haue prouided remedie for those euils which he foresaw; & that sith he hath not so done, he hath of determined purpose created men to that ende that he should so behaue himself in earth: and if by the prouidence of God, man was created to this cōditiō, that he should do all those things that he doth: then he is not to be blamed for that which he cannot auoid, and which he enterprised by the will of God. Therfore let vs see howe this knot ought to be well loosed. First of all this ought to bee holden certaine among all men which Solomon saith, that God hath created all thinges for himselfe, and the wicked man to an euill day. Behold, when the despising of all things is in the hand of God, when in his power remaineth the rule of safetie and death: he so ordereth them by his counsell and beck, that among men there are borne some adiudged euen from their mothers wombe to death, which with their destruction may glorify his name. If any man aunswere, that there is no necessity layde vpon them by the prouidence of God, but rather that hee created them in such estate, because he foresawe their peruersnes to come: he neither saith nothing at all, nor altogether. The old writers are wont in deed sometimes to vse this solution: but as it were doutingly. But the schole men rest vpon it, as though nothing could be obiected against it. In deede I will willingly graunt, that foreknowledge alone bringeth no necessity to creatures, although al men do not so agree: for there be some that wil haue it also to be the cause of thinges. But it seemeth to mee that Valla, a man other-otherwise not much practised in holy writings, sawe both more deepely and more wisely, which shewed that this contention is superfluous: because both life and death are rather the doings of Gods wil than of his foreknowlegde. If God did but foresee the successes of men, and did not also dispose and order them by his wil, then this question should not without cause be moued, whether his foreseeing any thing availed to the necessitie of them. But sith he doth none otherwise foresee the thinges that shall come to passe, than because hee hath decreed that they shoulde so come to passe: it it vaine to moue controuersie about foreknowledge, where it is certaine that al things doe happen rather by ordinance and commaundement.

Necessity of sinning neither excuseth the sinner, nor chargeth God iustlie with iniustice for condemning them that so sin.

Pro. 16. 4.

God did not onely foresee, but dispose the fall of man, and in him the ruine of his posteritie.

7 They say that this is not written in expresse words, that it was decreed of God, that Adam shoulde perish by his falling away. As though the same God, whome the scripture reporteth to do whatsoeuer he will, created the noblest of all his creatures to an vncertaine end. They say he had freewill, ỳ he might shape to himself his own fortune: and that God decreed nothing, but to handle him according to his deseruing. If so colde a deuise bee receiued, where shalbe that almightinesse of God, whereby he gouerneth all things according to his secrete counsell, which hangeth vpon non other thing than it selfe? But predestination, whether they will or no, sheweth him selfe in Adams posterity. For it came not to passe naturally that all men should loose saluation by the fault of one parent. What hindreth them to confesse of one man, that which against their wills they confesse of al mankind? For why should they loose their labour with dallying shifts? The scripture crieth out that all men were in the person of one man made bound to eternal death. Sith this cannot be imputed to nature, it is plaine that it proceeded from the wondrous councell of God. But it is too much absurditie that these good Patrones of the righteousnes of God doe so stumble at a straw, & leape ouer great beames. Againe I aske: how came it to passe, ỳ the fall of Adam did wrap vp in eternall death so many nations with their children beeing infants without remedy, but because it so pleased God? Heere their tongues which are otherwise so pratling, must of necessity be dumme. It is a terrible decree, I grant: yet no man shall be able to deny, but that God foreknow what ende man should haue, ere hee created him, and therefore foreknowe it because he had so ordeined by his decree. If any man here inueigh against the foreknowledge of God, he rashly & vndiscreetly stũbleth. For, what matter is there, I beseech you, why the heauenly iudge should be accused for that he was not ignorant of that which was to come? Therefore if there be anie either iust or colourable complaint, it toucheth predestinatiõ. Neither ought it to seeme an absurditie which I say, that God foresawe not onelie the fall of the first man, and in him the ruine of his posteritie, but also disposed it after his owne will. For as it belongeth to his wisedome, to foreknow all things that shalbe: so it belongeth to his power, to rule and gouerne all things with his hande. And this question Augustine verie well discusseth, as he doth other, saying. Wee most holsomely confesse that which we most rightly beleeue, that the God and Lorde of all thinges, which created all things verie good, & foreknewe that euill things shoulde spring out of good, and knewe that it more pertained to his almightie good-goodnesse euen of euil things do well, than not to suffer them to be euill: that he so ordered the life of Angels and men, that in it he might first shewe what free will could do, and then what the benefit of his grace and iudgement of iustice could do.

8 Here they runne to the distinction of will and permission, by which they will haue it graunted that the wicked do perish, God onely permitting but not willing it. But why should we say that he permitteth it, but because he so willeth? Howbeit it is not likely that man by himselfe, by the only permission of God, without any his ordinance, brought destruction to himselfe: as though God appointed not, of what condition he would haue the chiefe of his creatures to be. I therefore wil not doubt to confesse simply with Augustine, that the will of God is a necessitie of things, and that what hee willeth, it must of necessitie come to passe: as those things shall truely come to passe which he hath foreseene. Nowe if for excuse of themselues and of the vngodly, either the Pelagians, or Manichees, or Anabaptists, or Epicurians (for with these foure sects we haue to do in this question) shall obiect against vs necessitie wherewith they be bound by the predestination of God: they bring nothing fit to the purpose. For if predestination be nothing else but a dispensation of righteousnes of GOD, which is hidden in deede, but yet without fault: Forasmuch as it is certaine that they were not vnworthie to be predestinate to that estate, it is also as certaine that the destruction is most righteous which they enter into by predestination. Moreouer their destruction so hangeth vpon the predestination of God, that both cause and matter thereof is found in themselues. For the first man fell, because the Lord so iudged it to be expedient: why he so iudged, is vnknowen to vs: yet it is certaine that he so iudged for no other reason but because he sawe that thereby the glorie of his name should be worthily set foorth. When thou heareſt mention of the glorie of God, there thinke of his righteousnesse: For it must be righteous that deserueth praise. Man therefore falleth, the prouidence of God so ordeining it: but he falleth by his owne fault. The Lord had a little before pronounced, that all the things which he had made were very good. Whence therefore commeth that peruersenesse to man, to fall away from his God? Least it should be thought to be of creation, the Lorde with his commendation allowed that which came from himselfe. Therefore by his owne euilnesse he corrupted the nature which he had receiued pure of the Lorde, and by his fall he drewe his whole posteritie with him into destruction. Wherefore let vs rather beholde an euident cause of damnation in the corrupted nature of mankind, which is neerer to vs, than search for a hidden and vtterly incomprehensible cause thereof in the predestination of GOD. Neither let it grieue vs so farre to submitte our wit to the vnmeasurable wisedome of God, that it may yeelde in many secrets of his. For, of those thinges which it is neither graunted nor lawful to knowe, the ignorance is well learned: the coueting of knowledge is a kind of madnesse.

The wicked do sinne & perish not by Gods permission onely, but by his vvill and appointment.

De Gen. ad lite. lib. 6. cap. 15.

Gen. 1. 31.

9 Some man perhaps will say, that I haue not yet brought enough to subdue that wicked excuse. But I verily confesse that it can neuer be brought to passe, but that vngodlinesse will alway grudge and murmure against it: yet

The iudgement of God in punishing men for that vvherof he hath Laide a neceſſitie vpon them is righteous, but the reaſon howvit is righteous is vnknowen to vs: vvho should rather bevvaile iniquitie in our ſelues, than ſeeke the cauſe thereof in God.

yet I think that I haue ſpoken ſo much as might ſuffice to take away not only all reaſon but alſo al colour of gainesaying. The reprobate would bee thought excuſable in ſinning, becauſe they cannot eſcape the neceſſitie of ſinning: ſpecially ſith ſuch neceſſitie is caſt vpon them by the ordinance of God. But we denie that they are thereby well excuſed, becauſe the ordinance of God, by which they complaine that they are deſtinate to deſtruction, hath his righteouſneſſe, vnknowen in deede to vs, but yet moſt certaine. Whereupon we conclude, that they beare no euil which is not laide vppon them by the moſt righteous iudgement of God. Then, we teach that they do ouerthwartly, which to ſeeke out the beginning of their damnation, doe bend their eyes to the ſecret cloſets of the counſel of God, and winke at the corruption of nature, frō whence their damnation ſpringeth. And this withſtandeth that they can not impute it to God, for that he witneſſeth of his owne creation. For although man is creat by the eternal prouidence of God to that calamitie, whereunto he is ſubiect: yet the matter thereof he tooke of himſelfe, not of God, foraſmuch as he is by no other meane ſo loſt, but becauſe he went out of kinde from the pure creation of God into a corrupt & vnpure peruerſeneſſe.

God not to be charged as a partiall accepter of perſons.

10 Now the aduerſaries of Gods predeſtination doe ſlander it alſo with a third abſurditie. For when we impute it to nothing elſe but to the choiſe of the will of God, that they are made free from the vniuerſal deſtruction, whō he maketh heires of his kingdome, thereby they gather that there is with him accepting of perſons, which the Scripture euerie where denieth: and therefore, that either the Scripture diſagreeth with it ſelfe, or that in the election of God there is reſpect of deſeruings. Firſt, the Scripture in another ſenſe denieth, that God is an accepter of perſons, than as they iudge it. For by the name of perſon, it ſignifieth not a man, but thoſe things which beeing ſeene with eyes in man are wont to procure either fauour, grace, and dignitie, or hatred, contempt, and ſhame: as, richeſſe, wealth, power, nobilitie, office, countrey, excellencie of beautie, and ſuch other: on the other ſide, pouertie, neede, baſeneſſe, vileneſſe, contempt, and ſuch other. So Peter & Paul do teach that the Lord is not an accepter of perſons, becauſe he putteth not difference betweene the Iew and the Grecian, to refuſe the one and embrace the other for only reſpect of nation. So Iames vſeth the ſame wordes when he mindeth to affirme, that God in his iudgement nothing regardeth richeſſe. But Paul in another place ſpeaketh thus of God, that in iudging hee hath no conſideration of freedome or bondage. Wherefore there ſhalbe no contrarietie if we ſhall ſay that God according to the will of his good pleaſure without any deſeruing chooſeth to his ſonnes whome he will, reiecting and refuſing other. But the matter may thus be opened, that men may bee more fully ſatisfied. They aske how it commeth to paſſe, ỹ of two betweene whome no deſeruing putteth any difference, God in his electing paſſeth ouer the one and taketh the other. I on the other ſide doe aske them, whether they thinke that in him that is taken there is any thing that may make the minde of God to encline toward him. If they confeſſe (as they needes muſt) that there is nothing, it ſhal followe that God looketh not vpon man, but from his owne goodneſſe fetcheth a cauſe why to doe good to him.

Whereas

Whereas therfore God chooseth one man, refusing an other, this commeth not of respect of mā, but of his mercie alone, which ought to haue liberty to shewe forth and vtter it selfe where and when it pleaseth him. For we haue in another place also shewed, that there were not from the beginning many called noble, or wise, or honourable, that God might humble the pride of flesh: so farre is it off, that his fauour was bound to persons. Aug. ad Bon. lib. 1. cap. 7. 1. Cor. 1. 26.

11 Wherfore many do falslie and wickedly accuse God of partial vnrighteousnesse, for that he doth not in his predestination keepe one selfe course toward all men. If (say they) he finde all guiltie, let him equally punish all: if he finde them vnguiltie, let him withhold the rigor of his iudgement frō al. But so they deal with him, as if either mercy were forbidden him, or whē he would haue mercie he be compelled altogether to giue ouer his iudgemēt. What is it that they require? if al be gilty, that all may together suffer al one paine. We graunt the giltines to be common, but we say y the mercy of God helpeth some. Let it helpe all, say they. But wee answere, that it is rightfull that he should also in punishing shewe himselfe a rightful iudge. When they suffer not this: what do they els but either go about to spoil God of his power to haue mercy, or at least to graunt it him vppon this condition, that he vtterlie giue ouer his iudgement. Wherefore these sayings of Augustine do very well agree together. Sith in the first man the whole masse of mankinde fell into condemnation, these vessels that are made of it to honor, are not the vessels of their owne righteousnesse, but of the mercie of God: and whereas other are made to dishonour, the same is not to be imputed to vnrightfulnesse but to iudgement, &c. That to those whome he refuseth, God rendreth due paine: to those whome hee calleth, hee giueth vndeserued grace: that they are deliuered from all accusation, after the manner of a creditour, in whose power it is, to forgiue to the one, & aske of the other. Therfore the Lorde also may giue grace to whom he will, because he is merciful: and giue it not to all, because hee is a iust iudge. Hee may by giuing to some that which they do not deserue, shewe his free grace: & by not giuing to all, declare what all deserue. For whereas Paul writeth that God enclosed all vnder sinne, that he might haue mercy vpon all, it is therewithall to be added that he is detter to no man: because no man first gaue to him, that hee may require like of him.

God finding all guiltie is not parciall in condemning any, but in saueing some mercifull.

Rom. 11. 32.

12 This also they often say, to ouerthrowe predestination, that while it standeth, all carefulnesse and endeuour of well doing falleth away. For who (say they) shal heare that either life or death is certainly appointed for him by the eternall decree of God, but that it will by and by come into his mind that it maketh no matter how he behaue himself, sith the predestination of GOD can by his worke bee nothing hindred or furthered? So shall all men dissolutely throwe foorth themselues, and after a desperate manner runne headlong whither their lust shall carry them. And verily they saye not altogether falslie, for ther be many swine, which with filthy blasphemies defile the doctrine of predestination. and by this pretence also do mock out all admonishments and rebukings, saying, God knoweth what he hath once determined to doe with vs: if he haue decreed our saluation, hee will bring vs to it at the time appointed: if he haue predestinate our death, we shoulde trauaile in vaine to the contrary. But the ſcripture, when it teacheth with how much greater reuerence & religiouſneſſe we ought to think of ſo great a myſterie, doth both inſtruct the godlie to farre other ſenſe, and wel cõfute theſe mens outrage. For it doth not ſpeake of predeſtination to this ende, that we ſhould be encouraged to boldneſſe, and with vnlawful raſhneſſe attempt to ſearch the vnattained ſecretes of God: but rather that being humbled and abaſed we ſhould learn to tremble at his iudgement, & reuerently to looke vp to his mercy. To this marke the faithfull will leuel themſelues. As for that filthy groning of ſwine, it is well confuted of Paul. They ſay that they go careleſly forwarde in vices: becauſe if they be of the number of the elect, their vices ſhall nothing hinder them, but that they ſhall at length be brought to life. But Paul telleth that we be to this end, that we ſhould leade a holy and faultleſſe life. If the mark that electiõ is directed vnto be holines of life, it ought more to awake & ſtirre vs vp cheerefully to practiſe that holineſſe, than to ſerue for a cloking of ſlouthfulnes. For how greatly do theſe thinges differ the one from the other? to ceaſe frõ wel doing, becauſe election ſufficeth to ſaluation: and that the appointed ende of election is that we ſhould apply our ſelues to the endeuour of good doings. Away therfore with ſuch ſacriledges which do wrongfully miſturne the whole order of election. Where they ſtretch their blaſphemies further, when they ſay that he which is reprobate of God, ſhall looſe his labour if he go about to make himſelf alloweable to him with innocency and honeſty of life: therein they are taken with a moſt ſhameleſſe lye. For, whence coulde ſuch endeuour come but of election? For whoſoeuer be of the number of the reprobate, as they are veſſels made to diſhonour, ſo they ceaſe not with continuall wicked doings to prouoke the wrath of God againſt themſelues, and by euident tokens to confirme the iudgement of God which is already pronounced vppon them: ſo far be they from ſtriuing with him in vaine.

It doth not ouerthrow exhortations vnto vertue & godlineſſe.

13 But other do malicioußlie & ſhamefullie ſlander this doctrine, as though it did ouerthrow all exhortations to godly liuing. For which matter in olde time Auguſtine was burdened with a great malice. Which hee wiped away with his booke of correption and grace written to Valentine, the reading whereof will appeaſe all godlie and tractable men: yet I will touch a fewe thinges, which (as I truſt) ſhall ſatisfie them that be honeſt and not contentious. Wee haue already ſeene howe open and loude a preacher of the free election Paul was: was hee therefore colde in admoniſhing and exhorting? Let theſe good zealous men compare their earneſtneſſe with his, and it ſhalbe founde in them iſe in compariſon of his incredible heate. And truely this principle taketh away al doubtes, that we are not called to vncleanneſs, but that euery man ſhould poſſeſſe his veſſell in honour, &c. Againe, that we are the handy worke of God created to good workes, which he hath prepared that we ſhould walke in them. Summarily, they that are euen but meanly exerciſed in Paul, ſhall without long declaration eaſily perceiue how fitly he maketh theſe things to agree, which they faine to diſagree. Chriſt commandeth ỹ men beleeue in him: Yet is his definitiue ſentence neither falſe nor contrary to this commandement, where hee ſayth: No man can come to mee, but he to whome it is giuen of my father. Let preaching therefore haue his course, which may bring men to faith, and with continuall profiting holde them fast in perseuerance. Neither yet let the knowledge of predestination be hindered, ỳ they which obey may not be proude as of their owne, but may glorie in the Lord. Christ not for nothing saith: Who so hath eares of hearing, let him heare. Therefore when we exhorte and preache, they that haue eares doe willingly obey: but who so lacke eares, in them is fulfilled that which is written, That hearing they heare not. But why (saith Augustine) should some haue, and othersome not haue? Who hath knowen the minde of the Lord? Must that therfore be denied which is open, because that cannot be comprehended which is hidden? These sayings I haue faithfully reported out of Augustine: but because peradue̅ture his words shal haue more authoritie than mine, goe to, let vs bring foorth the verie wordes that are read in himselfe. If when this is heard, many are turned into dulnesse and sluggishnesse, and beeing inclined from labour to lust doe go after their desires: ought that therefore to be accompted false which is spoken of ỳ foreknowledge of God? If God haue foreknowen ỳ they shalbe good, shal they not be good, in how great euilnesse soeuer they now liue? and if hee haue foreknowen that they will be euill, shal they not be euill in how great goodnes soeuer they be now seene? shal therfore those things which are truly spoke̅ of the foreknowledge of God, be for such causes either to be denied or to be left vnspoken off? namely then when if they be not spoken of, men goe into errors? The rule (saith he) to keepe truth vnspoken of, is one thing, & the necessitie to speake trueth is an other. As for the causes of leauing trueth vnspoken, it were long to search them out all: of which yet this is one, that they be not made worse which vnderstand it not, while we mean to make them more learned that vnderstande it, who when we speak any such thing are in deede not made more learned, nor yet are made worse. But whe̅ a true thing is in such case, that when we speak it, he is made worse that cannot conceiue it: and when we speake it not, he is made worse that can conceiue it: what thinke we now to be done? Is not the trueth rather to be spoken, that he may conceiue it, that can conceiue it: than to keepe it vnspoken, that not onely neither of them may conceiue it, but also he that more vnderstandeth may be ỳ worse? whereas if he did heare and conceiue it, by him also many should learne. And we will not say that which, as the Scripture witnesseth, we lawfully might haue spoken. For we feare forsooth least when we speake, he be offended that can not conceiue it: but we feare not least while we hold our peace, he ỳ can conceiue truth be deceiued with falshoode. Which sentence he at the last shortly knitting vp, more plainely also confirmeth. Wherefore if the Apostles, and they which followed them, the doctors of the Church did both, namely both godlily preach of the eternall election of God, and holde the faithfull in awe vnder the discipline of godly life: why do these our aduersaries being confuted with inuincible violence of trueth, thinke that they say well in saying that that which is spoken of predestination is not to be preached to the people although it be true. Yea it must in any wise be preached, ỳ he which hath eares to heare may heare. But who hath eares if he hath not receiued them from him that promiseth that he will giue them? Truely let him that receiueth not, refuse it: so that yet hee he which receiueth it, do take and drinke, do drinke and liue. For as godlines is to be preached, that God may be rightly worshipped: so is also predestination, that he which hath eares to heare of the grace of God, may glorie in God and not in himselfe.

Vndiscrete deliuering of the doctrine vvhich concerneth predestination.

14 And yet that holy man, as he had a singular desire to edifie, so tempereth the manner of teaching the trueth, that offence be wisely auoyded so far as it lawfully may be. For he sheweth that those things which are truly said, may also be conueniently sayd. If any man do thus preach to the people. If ye beleeue not, the cause is for that ye are already predestinate of God to destruction: such a man doth not only cherish slothfulnes, but also maintain wickednes. If any man also stretch his saying to ỹ time to come, and say that they which heare shall not beleeue, because they are reprobate: this shalbe rather a cursing than a teaching. Such therefore Augustine not vnworthily biddeth to depart from the Church, as fooliſh teachers, and vnlucky and ill prophecying Prophets. In an other place he truely affirmeth that it is to be holden that a man then profiteth with rebuking, when hee hath mercy and helpeth which maketh to profite whom he will, euen without rebuking. But why some thus and some otherwise? God forbid that, that we should say that the power of iudging belongeth rather to the clay than to the potter. Againe afterwarde. When men by rebuking either come or returne into the way of righteousnes, who worketh saluation in their hearts, but hee, which when any whosoeuer he be planteth and watereth, giueth the increase, whom when he will saue, no freewill of man resisteth? It is therfore not to be doubted that the wils of men cannot resist ỹ wil of God (which both in heauen and earth hath done whatsoeuer he would, and which hath also done those thinges that are to come) but that he may do what he will, forasmuch as euen of the verie wils of men he doeth what he will. Againe, when he will leade men to him, doeth he binde them with corporall bondes? Hee inwardly worketh, inwardly holdeth hearts, inwardly moueth hearts, and draweth them with their willes which he himselfe hath made in them. But, that which hee by and by addeth ought in no wise to be omitted: that because wee knowe not who belongeth or not belongeth to the number of the predestinate, we ought so to be affectioned that we would all men to be saued. So shall it come to passe, that whomsoeuer we find, we shall trauell to make him partaker of peace. But our peace shall rest vpon the children of peace. Therefore for our part, we must applie holsome and sharpe rebuking to all men like a medicine, that they perish not, nor destroy other, but it shalbe the worke of God to make it profitable to them whom he hath forknowen and predestinate.

The xxiiii. Chapter.

That election is stablished by the calling of God, but that the reprobate doe bring vpon themselues the iust destruction vvhereunto they are appointed.

Gods effectuall and inward calling of some vvhose election is thereby sealed.

BVT, that the matter may more plainely appeare, we must intreate both of the calling of the elect, and of the blinding and hardening of the wicked. Of the first of these I haue alreadie spoken somewhat, when I confuted their errour, which thinke that the generalnesse of the promises extendeth egal-egally to all mankind. But this election which otherwise God hath hidden with himselfe he doeth not without choise at length disclose by his calling, which a man may therefore call the testifying of it. For, whome hee hath foreknowen, them he hath also foreappointed to be fashioned like the image of his sonne: whom he hath foreappointed, them he hath also called: whome he hath called, them he hath also iustified, that in time to come he may glorifie them. When the Lorde hath by electing alreadie adopted his into the number of his children: yet wee see how they enter not into possession of so great a benefite, but when they be called: on the other side, how being called they do now enioy a certaine communicating of his election. For which reason Paul calleth the spirit which they receiue, both the spirit of adoptiō, & the seale, & earnest of the inheritance to come: namely because it doeth with the testimonie thereof stablish and seale to their hearts the assurednes of the adoption to come. For though the preaching of the Gospel spring out of the fountaine of election: yet becausse it is also common to the reprobate, therefore it could not by it selfe be a sure proofe thereof. But God effectually teacheth his elect, that he may bring them to faith: as wee haue before alleadged out of the wordes of Christ, Who so is of God, he and none other seeth the Father. Againe, I haue shewed thy name to the men whome thou hast giuen me: Whereas he saith in another place, no man can come to me, vnlesse my Father draw him. Which place Augustine wisely weyeth, whose wordes are these. If (as Truth saith) euery one that hath learned, commeth: whosoeuer commeth not, certainly neither hath he learned. It doeth not therefore followe that he which can come, also commeth, vnlesse hee haue both willed and done it. But euery one that hath learned of the Father, not only can come, but also commeth, when nowe there is present both the profite of comming, and the affection of willing, and the effect of doing. Also in another place more plainly. What is this else, Euery one that hath heard of the father, and hath learned, commeth to me, but there is none that heareth and learneth of the father and commeth not to mee? For if euery one which hath heard of the father and learned, commeth: truely euery one that commeth not, hath not heard of the father, nor learned: for if he had heard and learned, he woulde come. This schoole is farre from the senses of the flesh, in which schoole the father is heard and teacheth, that men may come to the sonne. And a little after. This grace which is secretely giuen to the heartes of men, is receiued of no hard heart: for it is therefore giuē, that the hardnesse of the heart may first bee taken away. When therefore the father is heard within, he taketh away the stonie heart, and giueth a fleshly heart. For so he maketh the children of promise and vessels of mercy, which he hath prepared to glorie. Why therefore doth he not teach all, that they may come to Christ, but becausse all whome he teacheth, by mercie he teacheth: whom he doth not teach, by indgement he doeth not teach? becausse he hath mercie vpon whom he will, and hardeneth whome he will. Therefore God assigneth them for children to himselfe, and appointeth himselfe father to them, whome he hath chosen. Nowe by calling he bringeth them into the housholde, and vniteth himselfe to them, that they may bee one together. But, when calling is ioyned to election, in that manner the Scripture sufficiently signifieth that in it nothing is to bee required but the mercie of God. For if we aske, whom hee calleth & for what reason hee answereth, whome he had elected. But when we come once to election, there the only mercie of God appeareth on euery side. And here that saying of Paul truely hath place, It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth but of God that hath mercie. Neither yet that same so as they commonly take it, which part it betweene the grace of God, & the willing and running of man. For they expounde it, that the desire and indeuour of man haue in deede no force of themselues, vnlesse they be prospered by the grace of god: but when they are holpen by his blessing, then they affirme that they haue also their partes in obteining saluation. Whose cauillation I had rather confute with Augustines words than mine owne: If the Apostle meant nothing else but that it is not of him only that willeth or runneth, vnlesse the Lorde be there present mercifull: we may contrariwise turne it against them and say that it is not of only mercie, vnlesse there be present willing & running. But if this be openly wicked, let vs not doubt that the Apostle giueth all to the mercie of the Lorde, and leaueth nothing to our willes or endeuours. To this effect speaketh that holy man. And I set not a straw by that nice subtletie, that they say that Paul would not haue so said vnlesse there had bene some indeuour and some will in vs. For he did not consider what was in man: but when he sawe that some did assigne part of saluation to the endeuour of men, he simply condemned their error in the first part of the sentence, & in the second he chalenged the whole summe of saluation of the mercie of God. And what other thing doe the Prophets trauel about but continually to preach the free calling of God?

Rom. 9.16.

Enchir. ad Laur. ca. 31.

It is of Gods most free & vndeserued fauour, that wee are effectually called to saluation.

2 Moreouer the verie nature also & dispensation of calling doth clearly shewe it, which consisteth not in the onely preaching of the worde, but also in the inlightening of the Spirite. To whome God offereth his worde, is shewed vs in the Prophet: I am found of them that sought me not: I haue openly appeared to them that did not aske for me. To a people which hath not called vpon my name I haue saide, Loe I am present. And least the Iewes should thinke that this kindnesse belonged only to the Gentiles, hee doeth also put them in remembrance from whence hee tooke their Father Abraham, when hee vouchsafed to ioyne him to himselfe, namely from meere idolatrie, in which he was drowned with all his. When hee first shineth with the light of his worde to men not deseruing it, he therein sheweth an example plaine enough of his free goodnesse. Here therefore the vnmeasurable goodnesse of God sheweth forth it selfe, but not vnto saluation to all: because for the reprobate there abideth a more greeuous iudgement, for that they refuse the testimonie of the wil of God. And God also, to set forth his glorie, withdraweth from them the effectual force of his spirite. Therefore this inward calling is a pledge of saluation, which cannot deceiue vs. For which purpose maketh that saying of John, Thereby wee knowe that we are his children, by the spirite which he hath giuen vs. And least flesh should glorie, that it did at the least aunswere to him when hee called and of his owne will offered himselfe, hee affirmeth that it hath no eares to heare, ny eyes to see, but which hee hath made: and that hee ma-both them, not according to euery mans thankefulnes, but according to his owne election. Of which thing you haue a notable example in Luke, where both Iewes and Gentiles in common together heard the preaching of Paul & Barnabas. Whereas they were at ẏ time al taught with one selfsame word, it is saide that they beleeued which were ordained to euerlasting life. With what face may we deny that the calling is free, in which euẽ to the very last part election reigneth alone? Act. 13. 14

3 But here we must beware of two errors: because many make man a worker together with God, that he by his consent may make the election to be of force: so by their opinion, the will of man is aboue the counsell of God. As though the Scripture did teach, that it is onely giuen vs that we may beleeue, and not rather faith it selfe. Other some, although they do not so weaken the grace of the holy Ghost: yet being led by I wot not what reason, hãg election vpon faith as though it were doubtfull, yea and vneffectual vntill it be confirmed by faith. It is in deed certain that it is confirmed, as toward vs: and we haue already shewed ẏ the secret counsell of God beginneth to shine out, which was before hidden: so that by this word you vnderstand nothing elle, than that it is approued which was vnknowẽ, & is as it were sealed with a seale. But it is falsely said, that election is then and not till then effectuall, when we haue embraced the gospell, & ẏ therof it taketh liuely strength. We must indeede from thence fetch the certaintie of it: Because if we attempt to reach vnto the eternall ordinance of God, that deepe bottomlesse depth will swallowe vs vp. But when God hath opened it vnto vs, we must climbe vp higher, least the effect should drowne the cause. For what greater absurditie or shameful vniustice is there, thã that when the Scripture teacheth that wee are enlightened as God hath chosen vs, our eyes should be so daseled with this light, that they should refuse to looke vpon election? Yet in the meane time I deny not, that to the end we may be certaine of our saluation, we must beginne at the word, and that our affiance ought therwith to be contented, that we may call vpon God by the name of Father. For some quite contrary to right order, ẏ they may be certified of the counsell of God (which is heere vnto vs, in our mouth & in our heart) do couet to flie aboue the cloudes. Therefore that rashnesse is to be restreined with sobrietie of faith, that it may suffice vs that God in his outward word is a witnesse of his hidden grace: to that the conduit pipe out of which there floweth water largely for vs to drinke, do not hinder but that the springhead may haue his due honour. Deut. 30. 14

We are not vvorkers vvith God of our owne election, neither doeth it hang in suspense vpon our faith.

4 Therefore as they do wrongfully, which hang the strength of election vpon the faith of the gospel, by which faith we feele that election pertaineth to vs: so we shall kepe the best order, if in seking the certainty of our electiõ, we sticke fast in these latter signes, which are sure witnessings of it. Satã doth with no tentation either more greeuously, or more dangerously astonish the faithfull, than when disquieting them with doubt of their election, he doth also moue them with a peruerse desire to seeke it out of the waie. I call it seeking out of the waye, when a wretched man enterpriseth to breake into the hidden secretes of the wisedome of God, & to pearce euen to the highest eternity to vnderstand what is determined of himselfe at the iudgement

The certaintie of our election to be searched not in the bosome of God but in our selues according to that light which hee hath giuen vs in his vvorde.

ſeate of God. For then he throweth himſelfe headlong to be ſwallowed vp into the depth of the vnmeaſurable deuouring pit: then he wrappeth himſelf with innumerable ſnares and ſuch as he cannot winde out of: then he ouerwhelmeth himſelfe with the bottomleſſe depth of blinde darkneſſe. For ſo is it rightfull that the fooliſhneſſe of the witte of man be puniſhed with ſo horrible ruine, when he attempteth of his own force to riſe vp to the height of the wiſedom of God. And ſo much more deadly is this tentation, as there is none to which we are commonly all more bent. For there is moſt rarely any man to be found, whoſe mind is not ſomtime ſtriken with this thought, Whence haſt thou ſaluation, but of the election of GOD? And of Election what reuelation haſt thou? which thought, if it haue once taken place in any man, either perpetually vexeth the miſerable man with terrible torméts, or vtterly diſmayeth him. Truely I would haue no ſurer argument than this experience to prooue, howe wrongfully ſuch men imagine of predeſtination. For the minde can be infected with no errour more peſtilent, than that which plucketh downe and thruſteth the conſcience from her peace and quietneſſe towarde God. Therefore if we feare ſhipwracke, wee muſt diligently beware of this rocke, which is neuer ſtriken vpon without deſtruction. And though the diſputing of predeſtination be eſteemed like a dangerous ſea, yet in paſſing through it there is founde a ſafe and quiet yea and pleaſant ſayling, vnleſſe a man doe wilfully couet to be in daunger. For as they doe drowne themſelues in the deadly bottomleſſe depth, which to be certified of their election doe enquire of the ſecret Counſell of God without his worde: ſo they which doe rightly and orderly ſearch it in ſuch ſort as it is contained in the worde, receiue thereof a ſingular fruite of comfort. Let this therefore be our way to ſearch it, that wee beginne at the calling of God, and ende in the ſame. Howbeit this withſtandeth not, but that the faithfull may thinke that the benefits which they daily receiue at the hand of GOD, doe deſcende from that ſecrete adoption: as they ſay in Eſaie, Eſa. 25. Thou haſt done maruels, thy thoughts are olde, true, and faithfull: forasmuch as by that adoption as by a toké, the Lords will is to confirme ſo much as is lawfull to be knowen of his counſell. But leaſt anie man ſhoulde thinke this a weake teſtimonie, let vs conſider how much both cleareneſſe and certainety it bringeth vs. Of which thing Bernarde ſpeaketh fitly. For after that he had ſpoken of the reprobate, he ſaith: The purpoſe of God ſtandeth the ſentence of peace ſtandeth vpon thé that feare him, both couering their euils, and rewarding their good thinges: ſo as to them after a marueilous manner not onely good thinges, but alſo euil do worke together vnto good. Who ſhal accuſe the elect of God? It ſufficeth me to all righteouſneſſe, to haue him alone merciful, to whom alone I haue ſinned. Al ỹ he hath decreed not to impute to me, is ſo as if it neuer had bene. And a litle after: O place of true reſt, & to which not vnworthily I may giue the name of a bedchamber, in which GOD is ſeene not as troubled with wrath, nor as withholden with care: but his will is prooued in him good, and well pleaſing, and perfect. This ſight doth not make afraide, but calmeth: doth not ſtirre vp vnquiet curiouſneſſe, but appeaſeth it: doth not weary the ſenſes, but quieteth them: Here is quiet truely taken, God being appeaſed, appeaſeth al things and to behold him quiet, is to be quiet.

5 First, if wee seeke a fatherly kindnesse and fauourable minde of God, we must turne our eyes to Christ, in whome alone the soule of the father resteth. If we seeke saluation, life, and the immortalitie of the heauenly kingdom, we must then also flee to no other: forasmuch as he alone is both the fountaine of life, & author of saluation, & heire of the kingdom of Heauen. Now whereto serueth election, but that being adopted of the heauenly father into the degree of children, we may by his fauour obtaine saluation & immortalitie? Howsoeuer in seeking thou tosse it and shake it, yet thou shalt finde that the vttermost marke of it extendeth no further. Therefore whom God hath taken to his children, it is not said that hee hath chosen them in themselues, but in his Christ: because he could not loue them but in him, nor giue them the honour of the inheritance of his kingdome, vnlesse they had first bene made partakers of him. If we be chosen in him, we shal not find in our selues the certaintie of our election: no, nor yet in God the father, if wee imagine him naked without the sonne. Christ therefore is the mirror, in whome we both must, and without deceite may behold our election. For sith it is he into whose body the Father hath appointed to graffe all them whom from eternitie he hath willed to be his, that he may take for his children so many as hee reknowledgeth among his members: we haue a witnesse plaine and sure inough, that wee are written in the booke of life, if wee communicate with Christ. And that sure communion of himselfe hee gaue vs, when by the preaching of the Gospell hee testified that he was giuen to vs of the father, that hee with all his good thinges shoulde bee ours. Wee are saide to put on him, and to growe together into him, that wee may liue: because he liueth. So oft is this doctrine repeated, The Father spared not his onely begotten sonne, that whosoeuer beleeueth in him, may not perish. But he that beleeueth in him, is saide to haue passed from death into life. In which sense he calleth himselfe the bread of life, which whoso eateth, hee shal not die for euer. He (I say) hath beene a witnesse to vs, that they shal be receiued of the heauenly father in place of his children, of whome hee hath beene receiued by faith. If wee couete any more than to bee accompted among the children and heires of God, then we may climbe aboue Christ. If this be our vttermost marke: how much be wee mad in seeking without him that which wee haue alreadie obteyned in him, and which may bee found in him alone? Moreouer sith he is the eternall wisedome, the vnchangeable trueth, and fast setled counsell of the father: it is not to be feared least that which he declareth to vs in his worde, should vary any thing bee it neuer so litle from that will of the Father which we seeke: but rather he faithfully openeth it vnto vs, such as it was from the beginning, & euer shal be. The practise of this doctrine ought also to be in vre in prayers. For though the faith of election doth incourage vs to call vpon God: yet when we make our prayers, it were vnorderly done to thrust it into the presence of God, or to couenant with this condition. Lorde, if I bee elected, heare me: forasmuch as hee willeth vs to be content with his promises, and no where else to seeke whether he will be intreatable to vs or no. This wisedome shall deliuer vs from many snares, if wee can skilfully apply that to a right vse which hath beene

6 There is alſo for ſtabliſhing of our affiance an other ſtay of election, which we haue ſaide to be ioyned with our calling. For, whome Chriſt taketh being enlightened with the knowledge of his name into the boſome of his Church, them he is ſaide to receiue into the faith and protection. And whomeſoeuer hee receiueth, they are ſaide to bee committed to him of the father,& deliuered to his truſt,that they may be kept into eternal life. What meane we? Chriſt crieth out with a loude voice, that ſo many as the Father willeth to be ſaued,he hath deliuered them into his protection. Therefore if we liſt to knowe whether God hath care of our ſafetie,let vs ſeeke whether he hath committed vs to Chriſt,whome he hath made the onely Sauiour of all his. Nowe if we doubt whether we be receiued of Chriſt into his Faith & keeping,he preuenteth our doubting, when hee voluntarily offereth himſelfe to be our ſheepeheard,and pronounceth that wee ſhall be in the number of his ſheepe if we heare his voyce. Let vs therefore embrace Chriſt, being liberally ſet open for vs, and comming to meete vs, hee ſhall number vs in his flocke,and ſhall keepe vs incloſed within his folde. But there entreth into vs a carefulneſſe of our ſtate to come. For as Paul teacheth that they are called,which were before choſen: ſo Chriſt ſheweth that many are called,but fewe are choſen. Yea and alſo Paul himſelfe in an other place diſhorteth vs from carefulneſſe: Let him that ſtandeth (ſaith he) loooke that hee fall not. Againe, Art thou graffed into the people of God? Be not proud, but feare: for God is able to cut thee off againe that he may graffe other. Finally we are ſufficiently taught by experience it ſelfe, that calling and faith are of ſmall value, vnleſſe there be adioyned continuance which happeneth not all men. But Chriſt hath deliuered vs from this care: for verily theſe promiſes haue reſpect to the time to come. All that my father giueth mee, ſhall come to me: and him that ſhal come to me, I wil not caſt him out of dores. Againe, this is the will of him that ſent me, the Father, that I looſe nothing of all thinges that hee hath giuen mee, but may raiſe them vp againe in the laſt day. Againe, My ſheepe heare my voice, and they followe mee: I knowe them, and I giue them eternal life, and they ſhall not periſh for euer, neither ſhall any man take them out of my hande. The father which gaue them to me, is greater than al: & no man can take them out of the hand of my father. Now when he pronounceth, euery tree which my father hath not planted, ſhall be plucked vp by the root: he ſignifieth on the contrarie ſide, that they can neuer be plucked from ſaluation, which haue roote in God. Wherewith agreeth that ſaying of Iohn, If they had beene of vs, they had not at all gone out from vs. Hereupon alſo commeth that noble glorying of Paul againſt life and death, preſent thinges and thinges to come: which glorying muſt needes be grounded vpon the gifte of continuance. Neither is it any doubt that he directeth this ſaying to al the faithfull. In another place the ſame Paul ſaith, He that hath begonne in you a good worke, ſhall ende it euen vntill the day of Chriſt. As alſo Dauid, when his faith fainted, leaned vppon this ſtay: Thou ſhalt not forſake the worke of thy handes. And nowe neither is this doubtful, that Chriſt when he prayeth for al the faithful, asketh

the same thing for thē which he asketh for Peter, that their faith may neuer faint. Wherby we gather, that they are out of dāger of falling away, because the sonne of God, asking stedfast continuance for their godlinesse, suffered no deniall. What would Christ haue vs to learne hereby, but that we shoulde trust that we shal perpetually be safe, because we are once made his? Luke.22,32.

7 But it daily happeneth, that they which seemed to be Christes, do againe reuolt from him & fall. Yea and in the very same place where he affirmeth that none had perished of them which were giuen him of the Father, yet he excepteth the sonne of perdition. That is true indeede: but this is also as certaine, that such did neuer cleaue to Christ with ỳ affiance of heart with which I say that the assuredness of our election is stablished. They went out from vs (saith Iohn) but they were not of vs. For if they had been of vs, they had stil taried with vs. Neither do I denie that they haue like signes of calling as the elect haue: but I do not graunt that they haue that sure stablishment of election which I bid the faithful to fetch out of the word of the Gospel. Wherefore let not such examples moue vs but that wee quietly rest vpon the promise of the Lord, where he pronounceth, that al they are giuē to him of the Father, which receiue him with true faith, of whom sith he is their keeper & Pastor, none shal perish. Of Iudas we shall speake hereafter. Paul doth not counsel Christians from assurednes altogither, but from careless and loose assuredness of the flesh, which draweth with it, pride, presumption, & disdaine of other, and quencheth humilitie & the reuerence of God, and bringeth forgetfulnesse of grace receiued. For he speaketh to the Gentiles, whom he teacheth, that they ought not proudly and vngently to reproch the Iewes for this, that the Iewes being disherited, they were set in their stead. Feare also he requireth not wherwith they should be dismaied & stagger, but which framing vs to the humbler receiuing of the grace of god, should abate nothing of the affiance thereof, as we haue saide in another place. Beside that he doth not there speake to euerie man particularly, but to the sects themselues generally. For whē the church was diuided into two parts, & enuie bred dissention, Paul putteth the Gentiles in mind that their being supplied into the place of the peculiar and holy people, ought to be to them a cause of feare & modestie. And among them there were manie puffed vp with glorie, whose vaine boasting it was profitable to beat downe. But we haue in another place shewed, that our hope is extended to the time to come euen beyond death, and that nothing is more contrary to the nature of it, than to doubt what shal become of vs. They which fall from Christ were in trueth neuer Christians in whom a modest humble, & religious feare of falling doeth not take away assurednes of consuming hir. Ioh.16.12. 1.Ioh.2.19. Ioh.3,16.& 6,39

8 That saying of Christ, of many being called but fewe chosen, is verie ill taken after that maner. There shalbe nothing doutful if we hold fast that which ought to be cleare by the thinges aboue spoken, that there are two sortes of calling. For there is an vniuersall calling whereby through the outward preaching of the word, God calleth altogether to him, euen them also to whom he setteth it forth vnto the sauor of death, & vnto matter of more grieuous condemnation. The other is a speciall calling which for the most part he vouchsafeth to giue only to the faithful, when by the inward enlightening of his spirit he maketh ỳ the word preached is setled in their hearts. Yet sometime he maketh them also partakers of it whom hee enlightened with but Calling general and speciall.

but for a time, & afterward by the deseruing of their vnthankfulnesse forsaketh them, and striketh them with greater blindnesse. Now when the Lorde saw the gospell to be published farre and wide, and to be despised of many, but to be had in due price of fewe: he describeth to vs God vnder the person of a king, which preparing a solemne feast sendeth his messengers round about to bid a great multitude to be his gestes, and yet can get but a few, because euery one alleageth lets for his excuse, so that at length he is compelled vpon their refusal, to cal out of the high waies euery one that he meeteth. Hitherto euery man seeth that the parable must be vnderstood of the outward calling. He addeth afterward that God doth like a good maker of a feast, which goeth about the tables, to cheere his gueſtes. If he finde any not clothed with a wedding garment, he will not suffer him with his vncleanlinesse to dishonor the solemnitie of the feast. This parte of the parable, I graunt, is to be vnderstoode of them which enter into the Church by the profession of faith, but are not clothed with the sanctification of Christ. Such dishonors and as it were botches of his Church, the Lord wil not suffer for euer: but, as their filthinesse deserueth he wil cast them out. Therefore fewe are chosen out of a great number of them that are called, but yet not with that calling by which we say that the faithfull ought to iudge their election. For, that generall calling is also common to the wicked: but this speciall calling bringeth with it the spirite of regeneration, which is the earnest and seale of the inheritance to come, wherewith our heartes are sealed vp against the day of the Lorde. In a summe sith hypocrites boast of godlinesse as well as the true worshippers of God, Christ pronounceth that at length they shalbe cast out of the place which they wrongfully possesse: as it is said in the Psalme, Lorde, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle? The innocent in handes, and the man of a pure heart. Againe, in another place. This is the generation of them that seeke God, of them that seeke the face of the God of Iacob. And so doth the Spirit exhort the faithful to sufferance, that they take it not grieuously that the Israelites be mingled with them in the Church: for at length their visor shalbe plucked from them and they shalbe cast out without shame.

The fal of Iudas, and the error of Gregorie about the certaintie of our election.

9 The same reason is of the exception euen now alleaged, where Christ saith y none perished but the sonne of perdition. It is in deede an vnproper speech, but yet not darke. For he was not accounted amomg the sheepe of Christ, for that he was one in deede, but because he kept the place of one. And where in another place the lord affirmeth that he was chosen with the Apostles, that is spoken only in respect of the ministerie. Twelue (saith hee) haue I chosen, and one of them is a Diuel: that is, he had chosen him to the office of an Apostle. But when he speaketh of choosing to saluation, hee denieth him farre away from the number of the chosen, saying: I speake not of all: I knowe whome I haue chosen. If a man do in both places confounde the worde of Choosing, he shall miserably entangle himselfe: if hee make difference, nothing is more plaine. Therefore Gregorie teacheth verie ill & pestilently when he saith that wee know onely our calling, but are vncertaine of our election: whereby hee mooueth all men to feare and trembling: vsing also this reason, but because we know what we be to day, but what wee shalbe we know not. But in that place he sufficiently declareth, how he stũbled at this blocke. For, because he hanged election vpon the merites of workes, he had matter enough and more to discourage the mindes of men: but he could not strengthen them, which did not remoue them from themselues to the affiance of the goodnesse of God. Hereof the faithfull haue some tast of that which we haue determined at the beginning that predestination if it be rightly thought vpõ, bringeth not a shaking of faith, but rather the best strengthning of it. And yet I deny not, ỳ the holy ghost framed his talke to the smal measure of our sense. As when he saith, In the secret of my people they shal not be, & in the roule of my seruants they shal not bee written. As though God did begin to write in the booke of life, them whom he reckeneth in the number of his: whereas yet we know: euen by the witnes of Christ, that the names of the childrẽ of God are from the beginning written in the booke of life. But in these words is only expressed the casting away of them which seemed the chiefe among the elect: as it is saide in the Psalme. Let them be blotted out of the booke of life, and let them not bee written with the righteous, Eze. 13. 9. Phil. 4. 3. Psal. 69. 29.

10 But the elect are neither immediatly from the wombe, nor all at one time, by calling gathered together into the flock of Christ, but as it pleaseth God to distribute his grace to them. But ere they be gathered together to that chiefe shepheard, they are scattered abroade and stray in the common desert, & differ nothing from other, sauing that they be defended by the singular mercie of God, from falling into the extreeme headlong downefal of death. Therefore if you looke vpon themselues, you shall see the ofspring of Adam, which sauoreth of the common corruption of the whole masse. That they be not carried into extreeme & despeired vngodlines, this commeth not to passe by any goodnesse naturally planted in them, but because the eye of God watcheth, & his hande is stretched out to their saluation. For they that dreame that from their verie natiuitie there is planted in their hearts, I wote not what seede of election, by the vertue whereof they are alway enclined to godlinesse and to the feare of God, they both are not holpen to proue it by the authoritie of Scripture, & also are confuted by experience it selfe. They doe in deede bring forth a fewe examples to prooue that the elect euen before their enlightning, were not vtterly strangers frõ religion: that Paul in his being a Pharisee liued vnreproueable, that Cornelius was by almes and prayers accepted of God: and such other. Of Paul, we graunt to them: of Cornelius, we say that they are deceiued. For it appeareth that he was then alreadie enlightned and regenerate, so that hee wanted nothing but the cleere reueiling of the Gospell. But what will they wring out by these few examples? that all the elect are alway endued with ỳ spirite of godlinesse? No more than if a man by shewing the vprightnesse of Aristides, Socrates, Zenocrates, Scipio, Curius, Camillus, and other, shoulde thereof gather that all they that are left in blindnesse of idolatrie, were desirous followers of holinesse and honestie. Yea and the Scripture in more places than one, openly crieth out against them. For, the state which Paul describeth of the Ephesians before their regeneratiõ, sheweth not one graine of this seede. Ye were (saith he) dead with defaultes and sinnes, in which which ye walked according to ỹ time of this world, according to the prince of the aire, which now worketh in the obstinate children: among whom we all also were sometime conuersant in the lustes of our flesh, doing those thinges that liked our flesh and minde. And we were by nature the children of wrath, as other also were. Againe, remember that ye were somtime without hope, and lacked God in the worlde. Againe, Ye were sometime darkenesse: but now ye are light in the Lorde, walke as the children of light. But peraduenture they will haue these things to be referred to the ignorance of the true God, wherwith they deny not that the elect are holden, before that they be called. Albeit this were a shameleſſe cauilling, sith he therof concludeth, that they ought nowe no more either to lie or to steale: yet what will they answere to other places? as is that place to the Corinthians, wher whē he had pronounced that neither whoremongers, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor weaklings, nor buggerers, nor theeues, nor couetous men, shalbe heires of the kingdome of God: he by & by addeth that they were wrapped in the same hainous offences before that they knewe Christ: but nowe that they are both washed by his bloud & made free by his spirit. Again an other place to the Romaines. As ye haue giuen your members bonde to vncleanesse, and to iniquitie vnto iniquitie, now yeeld them in bondage to righteousnes. For what fruite had you of these thinges in which yee are nowe worthily ashamed, &c.

In men before God cal them, ther is no bud of righteousnes termed by some the seede of election.

11 What maner of seede of election, I pray you, did then budde in thē, which being manifoldly defiled in al their life, as it were with desperat wickednes, wallowed in the most abhominable & accursed sinne of all? If hee would haue spoken after their opinion, he should haue shewed howe muche they were bond to the bountifulnesse of God, by which they had beene preserued from sliding into so great filthinesse. So Peter also should haue exhorted his to thankefulnesse for the perpetual seede of election. But he contrariwise putteth them in minde that the time past sufficed to make an ende of the lustes of the Gentiles. What if we come to examples? what budde of righteousnesse was there in Rahab the harlot, before faith? in Manasse, when Hierusalem was dipped and in a manner drowned in the bloude of the Prophets? in the Theefe, which among his last gaspings began to thinke of repentance? Away therefore with these argumentes, which silly curious men do rashly deuise to themselues without the Scripture. But let that abide certaine with vs, which the scripture hath, that al haue strayed like lost sheepe, euerie one hath swarued into his owne way, ỹ is, perdition. Out of this gulfe of perdition; whom the Lord hath determined once to pluck foorth, them he differreth til his fit time: only he preserueth them, that they sal not vnto vnpardonable blasphemie.

The meanes whereby reprobates come to their endes: some debarred of the power of hearing the worde, some by the light thereof blinded.

12 As the Lorde by the effectualnesse of his calling towarde the electe, maketh perfect the saluation, where vnto hee had by eternall counsell appointed them: so he hath his iudgementes against the reprobate, whereby he executeth his counsell of them. Whom therefore hee hath created vnto the shame of life, and destruction of death, that they shoulde bee instruments of his wrath, and examples of his seueritie: from them, that they may come to their ende, sometime he taketh away the power to heare his word, and sometime by the preaching of it he more blindeth and amaseth them. Of the first maner, whereas there be innumerable examples, let vs choose out one more cleare & notable than all the rest. There passed away about foure thousand yeares afore Christ, in which he hid from all the Gentiles the light of his health bringing doctrine. If any man answere that he therefore made them not to enioy so great a benefit because he iudged them vnworthie, they which come after shall not be proued any more worthie. Of which thing, beside the experience, Malachie is a substantiall witnes, which reprouing infidelitie mingled with grosse blasphemies, yet declareth ỳ there shal come a redeemer. Why therefore is he rather giuen to these than to those? He shall trouble himselfe in vaine, that shal here search for a cause higher than the secret and vnsearchable counsel of God. Neither is it to bee feared least any scholler of Porphyrie, should freely gnawe at the righteousnesse of God while wee aunswere nothing in defence of it. For when wee say that none perish vndeseruing, & that it is of the free bountifulnesse of God that some be deliuered, there is largely enough said for the setting foorth of his glory, so that it needeth not our shifting. The soueraigne iudge therefore maketh a way for his predestination, when whome hee hath once reiected, them being depriued of the communicating of his light hee leaueth in blindnesse, Of the other maner there are both daily examples, and also many contained in the Scripture. One selfesame preaching is commonly made to a hundred, twentie receiue it with readie obedience of faith: the rest doe either set naught by it, or scorne it, or hisse it out, or abhorre it. If any man answere that this diuersitie proceedeth of their malice and peruersnesse, he shall not yet satisfy vs: because the others wit also shoulde bee possessed with the same malice, vnlesse God did amende it with his goodnesse. Therefore we shall still be encombred, vnlesse wee call to minde that which Paul saith, Who maketh thee to differ? Whereby he signifieth that some excell other some, not by their owne vertue, but by the onely grace of God. Mal.4.2. 1.Cor.4.7.

13 Why therefore doth he in graunting grace to those passe ouer these? Of those Luke sheweth a cause, Because they are ordeined to life. Of these, what shall we thinke, but because they are the vessels of wrath vnto dishonor? Wherefore let it not grieue vs to say with Augustine. God (saith hee) might turne the will of the euil into good, because he is almightie. He might in deede. Why therefore doeth he not? because hee woulde not. Why hee would not, is in himselfe. For we ought to bee no more wise than we ought to be. And that is much better, than to shift with Chrysostome, and say that hee draweth him that is willing and reacheth his hand, that the difference may not seeme to stande in the iudgement of God, but in the onely will of men. Truely it so standeth not in the proper motion of man, that euen the godly and they that feare God haue neede of a singular instruction of the spirite. Lidia the purpleseller feared God, & yet it behoued that her heart shoulde be opened, that shee might harken to the doctrine of Paul, and profite in it. This is not spoken of one woman alone, but that wee shoulde knowe that the profiting of euery man in godlinesse is the secrete worke of the spirite. This verilie cannot bee brought in question, that the Lorde sendeth his worde to many, whose blindnesse hee will haue to be more enforced. For, to what what purpose doth he bid so many commaundements to be carried to Pharao? was it because he hoped that with often repeated messages he would be appeased? No, but before he began, he foreknewe and foretolde the ende. Exod.21. Ezec.2.3.& 12.2 Go (saith hee to Moses) and declare to him my will: but I will harden his heart, that he obey not. So when he stirreth vp Ezechiel, he warneth him aforehande that he sendeth him to a rebellious and stubborne people: to the end that he should not be afraide if he perceiue himself to sing to deafe men. Iere.1.10. Esay 6.9. So hee foretelleth to Ieremie, that his doctrine should become a fire, to destroy and wast the people like stubble. But the prophecie of Esaie yet more enforceth it. For he is thus sent of the Lorde: Go and saye to the children of Israell: With hearing heare ye, and vnderstand not: With seeing see ye, and knowe not. Make obstinate the heart of this people, and make heauie their eares, and ouerplaister their eyes: least peraduenture they may see with their eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstande with their heart, that being turned they may be healed. Behold he directeth his voice to them, but that they may waxe more deaf: he lighteth a light, but that they may be made more blinde: hee sheweth foorth doctrine, but that they may be made more dull: he layeth to them a remedie, but not that they may be healed. Iohn.12.39. And Iohn alleaging this prophecie, affirmeth that the Iewes could not beleeue the doctrine of Christ, because this curse of God lay vpon them. Neither can this also be in controuersie, that whom God wil not haue to be enlightened, to them he deliuered his doctrine wrapped vp in darke speeches, that they may nothing profite thereby but to bee thrust into greater dulnesse. Christ also testifieth, that he doth therefore expound onely to the Apostles the parables in which he had spoken to ỹ multitude, because to them it was giuen to know the mysteries of the kingdome of God, but to the common people not so. Matt.13.11. What meaneth the Lorde (wilt thou say) in teaching them, of whome he prouideth that he may not be vnderstanded? Consider whence is the fault, and thou wilt cease to aske. For in the worde howe great darkenesse soeuer there be, yet there is alway light enough to conuince the conscience of the wicked.

The difference betweene one sort and another hangeth vpon the secrete counsell and will of God whereof there is no higher cause then his will. Act.13.48. De Gen. ad lite. lib.2.cap.10. Ho. de conuers. Paul. Act.16.14.

14 Now remaineth for vs to see, why the Lorde doeth that which it is plaine that he doth. If it be aunswered that it is so done because men haue so deserued by their vngodlinesse, wickednesse, & vnthankfulnes: the same shall in deede be well and truely saide: But because there appeareth not yet the reason of this diuersitie, why when some are bowed to obedience, other some continue hardened, in searching it we must needes goe to that which Paul hath noted out of Moses, namely that God hath raysed them vp from the beginning, that he might shewe his name in the whole earth. Rom.9.17. Wherasthere fore the reprobate do not obey the word of God opened vnto them, that shalbe well imputed to the malice and peruersenesse of their heart, so that this be therewithall added, that they are therefore giuen into this peruersnesse, because by the righteous but yet vnsearchable iudgement of GOD they are raised vp to set forth his glorie with their damnation. 1.Sam.2.25. Likewise whē it is said of the sonnes of Hely, that they harkened not to holsome warnings, because the Lord willed to kill them: it is not denied that the stubbornesse proceeded of their owne naughtinesse: but it is therewithall touched why they they were left in stubbornesse, when the Lorde might haue softened their heartes, namely becauſe his vnchaungeable decree had once appointed them to deſtruction. To the ſame purpoſe ſerueth that ſaying of Iohn, When he had done ſo great ſignes, no man beleeued in him: that the word of Eſay might be fulfilled, Lorde, who hath beleeued our ſaying? For though he do not excuſe the ſtifnecked from blame, yet he is content with that reaſon, that the grace of God is vnſauorie to men, till the holie ghoſt bring taſt. And Chriſt alleaging the prophecie of Eſaie. They ſhal all be taught of God, tendeth to no other ende but to prooue that the Iewes are reprobate and ſtrangers from the Church, becauſe they are vnapt to learne: and he bringeth no other cauſe therof, but for that the promiſe of God doth not pertain to them. Which thing this ſaying of Paul confirmeth, that Chriſt which to the Iewes is an offence, and to the Gentils fooliſhneſſe, is to the called the ſtrength and wiſedome of God. For when he hath tolde what commonly happeneth ſo oft as the Goſpel is preached, namelie ỳ ſome it maketh more obſtinate, and of ſome it is diſpiſed, hee ſaith that it is had in price of them onely which are called. Hee had in deede a litle before named them beleeuers, but hee meant not to take away the due degree from the grace of God which goeth before faith, but rather hee addeth this ſeconde ſaying by way of Correction, that they which had embraſed the Goſpell ſhoulde giue the praiſe of their faith to the calling of god: As alſo a litle after he teacheth that they are choſen of God. When the vngodlie heare theſe thinges, they crie out that God with inordinate power abuſeth his poore creatures for a ſport to his crueltie. But we which know that all men are ſo many waies endangered to the iudgement ſeate of God, that being asked of a thouſande thinges they can not ſatisfie in one, doe confeſſe that the reprobate ſuffer nothing which agreeth not with the moſt iuſt iudgement of God. Whereas we do not clearelie attaine the reaſon therof, let vs not be diſcontent to be ignorant of ſomewhat, where the wiſedome of God lifteth vp it ſelfe into ſo great height.

15 But foraſmuch as there are a few places of ſcripture wont to bee obiected, in which God ſeemeth to denie that it is done by his ordinance that the wicked doe periſh, but by this that, he crying out againſt it, they wilfully bring death vpon themſelues: let vs briefelie declaring theſe places, ſhew ỳ they make nothing againſt the ſentence aboue ſet. There is brought foorth a place of Ezechiell, that God will not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he may be turned and liue. If they will extende this to all mankinde: why doth he not moue manie to repentance, whoſe mindes are more pliable to obedience, than theirs which at his daily allurements waxe harder and harder? With the Sodomites (as Chriſt witneſſeth) the preaching of the goſpel and miracles would haue brought forth more fruite than in Iurie. How commeth it to paſſe therefore, if God will all to be ſaued, that hee openeth not the gate of repentance to thoſe miſerable men that woulde haue beene more readie to receiue grace? Herby we ſee that the place is violently wreſted, if the wil of GOD, whereof the Prophet maketh mention, be ſette againſt his eternal counſel, wherby he hath ſeuered the elect from the reprobate. Nowe if we ſeeke for the true naturall meaning of the Prophete: his purpose is to bring hope of pardon to the penitent. And this is the som, that it is not to be douted but that God is readie to forgiue so sone as the sinner turneth. Therefore he willeth not his death, in so much as hee willeth his repentaunce. But experience teacheth that he so willeth them to repent whō he generally calleth to him, that yet he toucheth not al their heartes. Yet is it therefore to be saide that he dealeth deceitfully, because although the outwarde voyce doe but make them vnexcusable which heare and doe not obay it, yet it is truely accounted the testimonie of the grace of God, by which testimonie he reconcileth men to himselfe. Therefore let vs holde this for the meaning of the Prophet, that the death of a sinner pleaseth not God: that the godly may haue affiaunce, that so soone as they shalbe touched with repentaunce, there is pardon readie for them with GOD. and the wicked may feele that their fault is doubled, because they answere not to so great mercifull kindenesse and gentlenes of God. The mercy of God therefore will alway meete tepentance, but to whom repentance is giuen, both all the Prophetes, and Apostles, and Ezechiell himselfe doe plainely teache. Secondly there is alleaged a place of Paul, where he saith that God willeth al mē to be saued, which although it haue a diuerse meaning frō the other, yet in some thing they agree together. I aunswere, first that by the rest of the text it is made plaine howe he willeth. For Paul coupleth together, that he willeth them to be saued, and to come to the acknowledging of the truth. If they will haue this to be determined, by the eternall counsell of GOD that they receiue the doctrine of saluation, what meaneth that saying of Moses, What nation is so noble, that God commeth neare to it as hee doth to thee? Howe came it to passe that GOD restrained from many peoples the light of the Gospell, which other enioyed? Howe came it to passe that the pure knowledge of godlinesse neuer came to some, and some scarcelye tasted so much as any darke principles of it? Hereof it shall nowe bee easie to gather, whereto Paul tendeth. He had commaunded Timothee to make solemne prayers in the Church for kinges and princes. But when it seemeth somewhat an absurditie that prayers should be made to GOD for a kinde of men in a manner despeired (because they were not onely strangers from the body of Christe, but also endeuored with all their forces to oppresse his kingdome) hee added, that the same is acceptable to GOD which willeth all men to be saued. Whereby verilie hee signifieth nothing else but that he hath stopped vp the way vnto saluation to no degree of mē but rather that he hath so poured out his mercie that he willeth no man to be voyde of it. The other sentences doe not declare what God hath by his secrete iudgement determined of all men: but doe shewe that there is pardon readie for all sinners which doe onely turne themselues to require it. For if they more stiffely stande vpon this that it is sayde that he wil haue mercie vpon all, I will on the contrarie side aunswere them with that which is written in an other place. That our God is in heauen where hee doeth whatsoeuer he will. This worde therefore must so be expounded that it may agree with the other, I will haue mercy vpon whom I will haue mercy, and I will shewe mercy to whom I will shew mercy. He that chooseth out them whome he wil haue mercie on, doth not giue it to all. But sith it clearely appeareth peareth that in that place is spoken not of all particular men, but of degrees of men, we will make no longer disputing about it. Howbeit it is also to bee noted, that Paul doth not affirme what God doth alway & euery where & in all men: but leaueth it to him at his libertie at length to make kinges & magistrates partakers of the heauenly doctrine, although by reason of their blindenesse they doe nowe rage against it. They seeme to presse vs more strongly with obiecting the place of Peter, that God willeth none to perish, but receiueth al to repentance. But the vndoing of this knot doth by and by offer it selfe in the second word, because the will to receiue can not bee vnderstanded to be any other than that which is euery where taught. Truely the turning is in the hande of God: whether he will turne all or no, let himselfe be asked, when he promiseth that he will giue to a certaine fewe men a fleshly heart, leauing to othersome a stonye heart. It is true in deede, that vnlesse we were ready to receiue them which cal vpon his mercy, this saying should be false. Turne to me, & I will turne to you. But I say that none of all mortall men doth come to God but he ỹ is preuented of God: And if repentance were in the will of man, Paul would not say, If peraduenture he giue them repentance. Yea vnlesse the same God which with worde exhorteth al men to repentance, did with secret mouing of his spirite bring the chosen to it. Ieremie would not say, Turne me, Lord, and I shalbe turned: for when thou hast turned me, I haue repented.

16 But (thou wilt say) if it be so, there shalbe small truth in the promises of the Gospell, which when they testifie of the wil of GOD, affirme that he willeth that which is against his inuiolable decree. Not so. For howsoeuer the promises of saluation be vniuersall, yet they nothing disagree with the predestination of the reprobate, so that we direct our mindes to the effect of them. We knowe that then and not till then the promises are effectuall to vs, when we receiue them by faith, on the other side when faith is made voide, the promise is therewithall abolished. If this be the nature of them, let vs then see whether these thinges disagree together: that it is said that God hath from eternitie ordeined whome he will embrace with loue, and vpon whome he will exercise wrath: and that he promiseth saluation to all without difference. Truely I say that they agree verie well. For in so promising he meaneth nothing else than that his mercie is set open for all which doe couet and craue it: which thing none doe but they whome he hath enlightned. And them he enlightneth, whom he hath predestinate to saluation. They (I say) haue the trueth of the promises sure and vnshaken, so as it can not be sayde that there is any disagreement betweene the eternall election of God, & the testimonie of his grace which he offreth to the faithfull. But why nameth he all? verily that the consciences of the godly may the more safely rest, when they vnderstande that there is no difference of sinners, so that faith be present: and that the wicked may not cauill for their excuse, that they want a sanctuary wherunto they may withdraw themselues from the bondage of sinne, when with their owne vnthankfulnes they refuse it being offered them. Therfore when the mercy of God is by the Gospel offred to both sorts, it is faith, that is to say the enlightning of God, which maketh difference between the godly and vngodly, so as ỹ one sort feeleth the

I graunt that Chriſt there ſpeaketh not only in the perſon of man,but alſo reprocheth them that in all ages they haue refuſed his grace. But we muſt define that will of God which is entreated of.For neither is it vnknowen,how diligently God endeuored to keep ſtill that people, & with how great ſtiffeneſſe they euen from the firſt to the laſt being giuen to their wandering deſires refuſed to be gathered together: but it followeth not therof that the counſel of God was made voyde by the malice of men. They anſwere and ſay that nothing leſſe agreeth with the nature of GOD than to haue a double wil in him. Which I grant to them,ſo that they fitly expounde it. Now when many things are alleadged on both partes, let this be our conclusion, to tremble with Paul at so great depth, and if wanton tongs shal be busie, that wee be not ashamed of this his crying out, O man, what art thou that striuest with God? For Augustine truely affirmeth that they do peruersly which measure the righteousnes of God by the measure of the righteousnes of man. Rom. 9. 20. De prædest. & gratia. ca. 2.

The xxv. Chapter.

Of the last Resurrection.

The vse and necessitie of meditating continually vpon the resurrection of the dead.

ALthough Christ the sonne of righteousnesse, hauing ouercome death, shining by the Gospell, giueth vs the light of life (as Paul witnesseth) whereby also it is said that by beleeuing we haue passed from death into life, being now not foreners and strangers, but citizens with the Saints, and of the housholde of God, which hath made vs to sit with the onely begotten sonne himselfe in heauenly places, that nothing may be wanting to perfect felicitie: yet least it shoulde be greeuous vnto vs to be exercised vnder this harde warfare, as though wee had no fruite of the victorie which Christ hath gotten, wee must hold fast that which is in another place taught of the nature of hope. For, because we hope for those things which appeare not, & (as it is saide in another place) faith is a demonstration of things inuisible: so long as we are inclosed in the prison of the flesh, wee are wayfaring from the Lord For which reason the same Paul saith in another place that we are deade, and that our life is hidden with Christ in God, and that when hee which is our life, shall appeare, then shal we also appeare with him in glorie. This therefore is our condition, that with liuing soberly and iustly & godlily in this worlde, wee looke for the blessed hope, and the comming of the glorie of the great God, and of our Sauiour Iesus Christ. Here wee neede a singular patience, that we be not wearied and either turne back our course or forsake our standing. Therefore whatsoeuer hath beene hitherto set out concerning our saluation, requireth mindes lifted vp to heauen, that wee may loue Christ whome wee haue not seene, and beleeuing in him may reioice with vnspeakeable and glorious ioyfulnesse till wee receiue the ende of our faith, as Peter telleth vs. After which manner, Paul saith that the faith and charitie of the godly hath respect to the hope which is laide vp in heauen. When wee thus with our eyes fastened vpon Christ doe hang of heauen, and nothing withholdeth them in earth from carrying vs to the promised blessednesse: then is that truely fulfilled, Our heart is where our treasure is. Hereupon commeth that faith is so rare in the worlde, because nothing is more harde to our dulnesse than through innumerable steppes to climbe vp aboue them with endeuouring forwarde to the price of our heauenly calling. To the great heape of miseries wherewith wee bee almost ouerwhelmed, are added the mockinges of vngodly men, wherewith our simplicitie is rayled at, when voluntarilie forsaking the allurementes of present good thinges, wee seeme to followe the blessednesse hidden from vs, as it were a fleeing shadowe. Finally aboue and beneath vs, before vs and behinde vs, violent tentations beſeege vs, to the ſuſteining of the feare whereof our courages ſhoulde bee farre too weake, vnleſſe being vncumbred of earthly thinges they were faſt bounde to the heauenly life, which in ſeeming is farre from vs. Wherefore onely hee hath ſoundly profited in the Goſpell, which is enured to a continuall meditation of the bleſſed reſurrection.

The felicitie or ſoueraigne good of man, and the chere ful trauail vvhich he ſhould vndertake for the attaining thereunto.

2 Of the ſoueraigne ende of good thinges, the Philoſophers haue in olde time curiouſly diſputed, and alſo ſtriued among themſelues: yet none except Plato, acknowledged the ſoueraigne good of man to bee his conioyning with God. But what manner of conioyning that was, he could not perceiue ſo much as with any ſmall taſt, and no maruel, ſith hee had neuer learned of the holy bond thereof. To vs the only & perfect felicitie is knowen euen in this earthly waifaring: but, ſuch as daily more and more inkindleth our hearts with deſire of it, till the full enioying may ſatisfie vs. Therefore I ſaide that none receiue fruite of the benefits of Chriſt, but they that lift vp their mindes to the reſurrection. For, Paul ſetteth vp this mark to the faithfull, toward which he ſaith that he endeuoureth, and forgetteth all thinges till he come to it. And ſo much the more cheerfully ought we to trauaile towarde it, leaſt if this worlde witholde vs, wee ſuffer greeuous puniſhment for our ſlouthfulneſſe. Wherefore in an other place he marketh the faithfull with this marke, that their conuerſation is in heauen, from whence alſo they looke for their Sauiour. And that their courages ſhoulde not faint in this race, hee ioyneth all creatures companions with them. For, becauſe euery where are ſeene deformed ruines, hee ſaith that all things in heauen & earth do endeuour to the renewing. For ſith Adam by his fall diſſolued the perfect order of nature to the creatures, their bondage is painfull & greeuous, whereunto they are ſubiect by reaſon of the ſinne of man, not for that they are indued with any feeling, but for that they naturally couet the perfect eſtate from which they are fallen. Therefore Paul ſaith that they grone, and are as in paine of childe bearing, that wee to whome are giuen the firſt fruites of the Spirite, may be aſhamed to pine away in our corruption, and not at the leaſt to followe the dead elements, which beare paine of anothers ſinne. And the more to pricke vs forwarde, hee calleth the laſt comming of Chriſt our redemption. It is true in deede that all the parts of our redemption are alreadie fulfilled: But becauſe Chriſt hath once beene offered for ſinnes, he ſhalbe ſeene againe without ſinne vnto ſaluation. With what miſeries ſoeuer we be preſſed, let this redemption ſuſteine vs euen vntil the performance of it.

1. Cor. 15. 14.

3 The verie weight of the thing it ſelfe ſhall whet our endeuour. For neither doeth Paul without cauſe affirme that the whole Goſpel is voide & deceitfull, vnleſſe the dead doe riſe againe: becauſe our ſtate ſhoulde bee more miſerable than the ſtate of all men, namely ſith wee lying open to the hatreds and reproches of many, are euery houre in daunger, yea and are as ſheepe appointed to the ſlaughter: and therefore the authoritie thereof ſhould fall away not onely in one part, but alſo in the whole ſum which both our adoption and the effect of our ſaluation conteineth. And ſo let vs bee heedfully bent to the moſt earneſt thing of all, that no continuance of time may make vs wearie. For which purpose I haue differred to this place y which I had breeflie to entreate of it, that the readers may learne, when they haue receiued Christ the authour of their saluation, to rise vp higher, & may knowe that he is clothed with heauenlie immortalitie and glorie, that the whole bodie may be made like fashioned to the heade, as also the holie ghost oftentimes setteth foorth in his person an example of the resurrectiō. It is a thing hard to bee beleeued, that bodies when they haue beene consumed with rottennesse, shall at their appointed time rise vp againe. Therfore where manie of the Philosophers haue affirmed soules to be immortal the resurrection of the fleth hath beene allowed of fewe: wherein although there was no excuse, yet we are thereby put in minde, that it is too harde a thing to draw mans senses to beleeue it. That faith may ouercome so greate a stoppe, the scripture ministreth two helpes: the one is in the likenesse of Christ, the other is the almightinesse of God Nowe so oft as the resurrection is thought of, let the image of Christe come into our mindes: which in the nature that hee tooke of vs, so ranne out the race of mortall life, that nowe hauing obtained immortalitie, he is to vs a pledge of the resurrection to come. For in the miseries wherewith wee are besieged, wee carie about his mortifying in our flesh, that his life may be openlie shewed in vs. And we may not seuer him from vs, neither can wee possiblie, but that hee must be torne in sunder. 2.Cor.4.10.

Whereupon commeth that argument of Paul, If the dead do not rise againe, then neither is Christe risen againe, because verilie he taketh that principle for confessed, that Christe was not made subiect to death, nor obtained victorie of death by rising againe, priuatelie for himselfe: but, that that was begun in the heade which must needes be fulfilled in all the members, according to the degree and order of euerie one. 1.Cor.15.13.

For it were not right that they should in all pointes be made egal with him. It is saide in the Psalme. Thou shalt not suffer thy meeke one to see corruption although a portion of this trust pertaine to vs according to the measure of gift, yet the full effect hath not appeared but in Christ, which beeing free from all rotting hath receiued againe his bodie whole. Nowe least the fellowship of blessed resurrection with Christe shoulde bee doubtfull to vs, that we may be cōtented with this pledge, Paul expreslie affirmeth that he therfore sitteth in heauen, and shall come at the last day a iudge, that hee may make our base and vile bodie like fashioned to the glorious bodie. In an other place also hee teacheth, that God raised not vp his sonne from death to the intent to shewe a token of his power: but to stretch out the same effectuall force of the spirite toward vs which are faithful: whom he therefore calleth life, while he liueth in vs, because he was giuen to this ende that hee should make aliue that which is mortall in vs. I knit vp in a briefe abridgmēt those things which might both be more largelie handled, and are worthie to be more gorgeouslie set out: and yet I trust that the godlie readers shal in few words find matter enough which may suffice to edify their faith. Christ therefore is risen againe, that hee might haue vs companions of the life to come. Hee was raised vp of the father, in so much as hee was the heade of the Church, from which he doth in no wise suffer himselfe to be plucked away. Hee was raised vp by the power of the Spirite, which is common to vs Phil.3.21.

vnto the office of quickening. Finally he was raiſed vp, that he ſhould be reſurrection and life. But as we haue ſaide that in this mirrour, there is to be ſeene of vs a liuely image of the reſurrection, ſo let it be to vs a ſure ſubſtance to ſtay our minde, ſo that yet we be not lothfull or wearie of long tarrying: becauſe it is not our part to meaſure the ſeaſons of times by our will, but patiently to reſt, till God at his owne fit time repaire his kingdome.

1. Cor. 15 To which purpoſe ſeemeth that exhortation of Paul: The firſt fruites is Chriſt: and then they that are Chriſtes, euerie one in his order. But that no queſtion ſhould be moued of the reſurrection of Chriſt, vpon which the reſurrection of vs al is founded, we ſee by how manie and how diuerſe meanes hee hath made it approued by witneſſe to vs. Fine noſed men will laugh at the hiſtorie which the Euangeliſts rehearſe, as at a childiſh mockery For of what importance ſhall the meſſage be which fearefull ſilly women bring, and afterward the diſciples confirme being in a manner aſtoniſhed? Why did not Chriſt rather ſet vp the triumphing enſignes of his victorie in the midſt of the temple & the market place? Why came he not forth terrible into the ſight of Pilate? Why doth he not alſo proue himſelf to the prieſtes, & to whole Ieruſalem that he is riſen vp aliue again? As for the witneſſes which hee choſe, prophane men will ſcarcely grant them to be ſufficient. I anſwere that although in theſe beginnings the weakeneſſe thereof was contemptible, yet al this was gouerned by the wonderful prouidence of God: that partly the loue of Chriſt and zeale of godlineſſe, and partly their owne hardnes of beleefe ſhould carrie them in haſt to the ſepulchre which had lately been diſmaied for feare, that they might not only be ſeeing witneſſes of the thing, but alſo ſhould heare of the Angels that which they ſawe with their eyes. Howe ſhall we ſuſpect their credite, who thought it to be a fable which they had heard of the women, til they were brought to the preſent ſight of the thing it ſelf? As for al the people and the Ruler himſelf, after ỹ they had byn

Matt 27.66. and 28.11. largely cõuinced, it is no maruel if as wel the ſight of Chriſt, as other ſignes, was not graunted them. The ſepulchre was ſealed vp, the watchmen watched it, the thirde daie the bodie was not founde, The ſouldiers corrupted with mony ſcatered a rumor that his diſciples had ſtolen him awaie, As though they had had power to gather a band together, or had armure, or were practiſed men to enterpriſe any ſuch feate. If the ſoldiers had not courage enough to driue them away, why did they not purſue thẽ, that with the helpe of the people they might haue taken ſome of them? Pilate therefore with his ring truely ſealed the reſurrection of Chriſt: & the watchmẽ which were ſet at the ſepulchre both in their holding their peace & in their lying,

Luke. 24.6. were made publiſhers of the ſame reſurrection. In the meane time the voice of Angels ſounded, He is riſen, he is not here. The heauenly gliſtering plainly ſhewed that they were not men but Angels. Afterward, if there remained any doubting, Chriſt himſelf tooke it away. The diſciples ſaw him ofter than once, and alſo felt his feet and his hands, and their hardnes of beleuing not a litle profited to the ſtrengthening of our faith He diſputeth among them of the myſteries of the kingdome of God, and at the laſt in their ſightes beholding him, he aſcended into heauen. And not onely this ſight was ſhewed brethren. Nowe when he sent the holy Ghost, hee shewed a sure proofe not onely of life, but also of the souereigne power: as hee had saide before, It is profitable for you that I go: otherwise the holy Ghost shal not come. But now Paul was ouerthrowen by the way, not by the strength of a dead man, but he felt him whome he persecuted to haue most high power. To Stephen hee appeared for another ende, namely that with assuredneſse of life hee might ouercome the feare of death. To discredit so many authentike witnesses, is not onely a parte of distrustfulneſse, but also of frowarde and furious stubbornneſse. 1.Cor.15.6. Iohn.16. Act.9.4. Act.7.55.

4 This which wee haue saide, that in prouing the resurrection our senses must be directed to the infinite power of God, Paul briefely teacheth, that he may make (saith he) our vile bodie like fashioned to ỹ body of his brightneſse, according to the working of his power, by which hee may subdue all things to himselfe. Wherefore nothing is more vnmeete, than here to haue respect what may naturally be done, where an ineſtimable miracle is set before vs, which with the greatneſse thereof swalloweth vp our senses. Yea, Paul by setting forth an example of nature, reproueth their dulnes which denie the resurrection. Thou foole (saith he) that which thou sowest is not quickened vnleſse it first dye, &c. He saith that in seed is seene a forme of the resurrection, because out of rottenneſse groweth corne. Neither were it so hard a thing to beleeue, if we were as heedefull as we ought to be to the miracles which throughout al the coasts of the worlde doe offer themselues to our eyes. But let vs remember that none is truely perswaded of the resurrection to come, but he which being rauished into admiration, giueth to the power of God his glorie. Esay lifted vp with this affiance, crieth out, Thy dead shal liue, my carcase shal rise againe. Awake ye, & praise, ye dwellers of the dust. In despaired case he lifteth vp himselfe to God the author of life, in whose hand are the ends of death, as it is said in the Psalme. Iob also being liker to a carrion than to a man, trusting vpon the power of God sticketh not as though he were whole & sound to lift vp himselfe to that day, saying, I knowe that my redeemer liueth: and in the last day hee shall rise vpon the dust (namely to shewe forth his power therein) and I shall againe be compassed with my skinne, & in my flesh I shal see God, I shal see him, and none other. For albeit that some do suttlely wrest these places, as though they ought not to be vnderstand of the resurrection, yet they strengthen ỹ which they couet to ouerthrowe: because the holy men in their euils seeke comfort from no where elſe, than from the likeneſse of the resurrection. Which better appeareth by the place of Ezechiel. For when the Iewes beleeued not the promise of their returne, and obiected that it was no more likely that a way shoulde bee made open for them, than that dead men shoulde come out of their graue: there was a vision shewed to the Prophet, a field full of drie bones: those the Lorde commaunded to take againe flesh and sinewes. Although vnder that figure he raiseth vp the people to hope of returne: yet the matter of hoping hee gathereth of the resurrection: as it is to vs an examplar of the deliuerances which the faithfull doe feele in this worlde. So Christ when hee had taught that the voyce of the Gospell giueth life: because the Iewes receiued not this, he by and by saide

2. Tim. 4. 8. foorth. Therefore after this example of Paul, let vs alreadie cheerefully triumph in the middest of battels, because hee which hath promised life to come, is mightie to keepe that which is left with him: and so let vs glorie that a crowne of righteousnesse is layde vp for vs, which the iust iudge shall deliuer vs. So shall it come to passe, that whatsoeuer greeues we suffer, they shalbe to vs a shewing of the life to come, because it agreeth with the nature of God to render affliction to the wicked which afflict vs: but to vs which are vniustly afflicted, rest at the appearing of Christ with the Angels of his power, in a flame of fire. But that is to bee holden which he addeth by & by afterward, that he shall come that he may be glorified in his saints, and bee made wonderfull in al them that haue beleeued, because the Gospell hath beene beleeued.

The Sadducees & others denying the resurrection of the dead refuted.

5 But although the mindes of men ought to haue been continually occupied in this studie: yet as though they would of set purpose destroy all remembrance of the resurrection, they haue called death the vttermost bond of al things and the destruction of man. For verily Salomon speaketh of the

Mar. 12. 18. Luke. 20. 27. Act. 2. 8. ages this brutish senseless errour hath beene common in the worlde, yea and hath broken into the Church it selfe: for the Sadducees haue presumed to professe openly that there is no resurrection, yea & that soules are mortal. But that this grosse ignorance should not helpe to excuse any man, the infidels euen by verie instinct of nature haue alway had an image of the resurrection before their eyes. For to what purpose serued that holy & inuiolable manner of burying, but to be an earnest of newe life? Neither may it bee answered that this spring of errour: because the religiousnesse of burial was alway in vre among the holy Fathers, and God willed the same manner to remaine among the Gentiles, that an image of the resurrection set before them might awake their drowsines. But although that ceremonie wāted his vse of profiting, yet it is profitable for vs if we wisely marke the ende of it, because it is no slender confutation of vnbeleef, that altogether professed that which no man beleeued. But Satan hath not onely astonished the senses of men, so that they haue buried with the bodies the remembrance of the resurrection, but also hath practised to corrupt this parte of doctrine with diuerse fained inuentions, that at length it might vtterly die. I passe ouer how in Pauls time Satan began to pinch at it: but in a litle after there followed ỹ Millenaries, which limitted the raigne of Christ to a thousand yeares. This error is so childish, ỹ it needeth not or is not worthie of any confutatiō. Neither doth ỹ Reuelation make on their side, by which it is certaine that they Reue. 20. 4. colored their error: for as much as in the place where he mētioneth ỹ number of a thousand, he entreateth not of the eternal blessednes of the church, but only of the diuerse troubles which were to come vpon the church while it yet trauelled in earth. But the whole Scripture cryeth out that there shall bee no ende of the blessednesse of the electe, nor of the punishment of the the reprobate. Now of all things which both are hidden from our sight and do farre passe the capacitie of our minde, either wee must fetch the credite out of the certaine oracles of God, or we must vtterly cast it awaie. They which assigne to the children of God a thousand yeres to enioy the inheritance of the life to come, do not marke how great a dishonor they doe both to Christ and his kingdom. For if they shal not be clothed with immortalitie: then neither is Christ himselfe, to whose glory they shalbe newly fashioned, receiued into the immortal glorie. If their blessednesse shal haue any end: then the kingdom of Christ, vpon the stedfastnes whereof it standeth, endureth but for a time. Finally, either they are most vnskilfull of all matter concerning God, or they go about with crooked maliciousnes to ouerthrow the whole grace of God & power of Christ, the fulfilling wherof is no otherwise perfect, but when sinne being blotted out & death swallowed vp, eternal life is fully restored. But very blind men may see how fondly they plaie the fooles: which feare that they shoulde ascribe to God too great cruelty if the reprobate be condemned to euerlasting paines. The Lorde forsooth shall doe wrong, if he deny his kingdome to them which haue by their vnthankefulnesse made themselues vnworthy of it. But (saye they) their sinnes endure but for a time. I graunt: but the maiestie, yea and the righteousnes of God which they haue offended by sinning, is eternal. Worthily therefore the remembrance of iniquitie dieth not: But so the pain exceedeth the measure of the fault. This is a blasphemie not to be suffred, whē the maiesty of God is so litle set by, when the despising thereof is esteemed at no greater value than the destruction of one soule. But let vs leaue these trifles, least contrary to that which we haue before saide, we may seeme to iudge their dotages worthy of confutation.

Their error vvho haue thought that mā is vtterly extinguished by death and that the souls shall as vvell bee raised againe as the bodies.

6 Beside these, there haue bin two other doting errors brought in by mē peruersly curious. The one sort thought, as though the whole man died, that the soules shall rise againe with the bodies. The other forasmuch as they graunt that the soules be immortall spirites, saie that they shalbe clothed with new bodies: whereby they denie the resurrection of the flesh. Of the first sort, because I haue touched somwhat in speaking of the creation of man, it shalbe enough for me to warne the readers againe, howe beastly an error it is to make of a spirit fashioned after the image of God, a vanishing blast which doth nothing but quicke the body in this fraile life, and to bring the temple of the holy Ghost to nothing. Finally, to spoile that parte of vs wherein diuineneſse chiefly shineth & markes of immortalitie appeare, to spoile it (I say) of this gift: so that the estate of the body should be better and more excellent thā the estate of the soule. The scripture teacheth far otherwise, which compareth the bodie to a cotage, out of which it sayeth that we remoue when we die, because it esteemeth vs by that part which maketh vs differing from bruite beastes. So Peter being nigh to death, sayth that the time is come, when he must lay away his tent, And Paul speaking of the faithfull, after that he hath said: That when our earthly house shalbe dissolued, there is a building for vs in heauen, adioyneth that wee are wayfaring from the Lorde so long as wee abide in the bodie, but do desire the presence of God in the absence of the bodie. If the soules doe not ouerliue the bodies, what is it that hath God present when it is seuered from the body? But the Apostle taketh away all doubting, when he teacheth that wee are ioyned in fellowship to the spirites of the righteous. By which wordes he sheweth, that we are ioyned in fellowship to the holy fathers, which euen beeing dead do keepe the same godlinesse with vs, so that we cannot be the members of Christ vnlesse we growe together with them. Vnlesse also the soules being vnclothed of the bodies, did keepe still their substance and were able to receiue blessed glorie, Christ would not haue saide to the theefe: This day thou shalt be with me in paradise. Hauing so cleare testimonies, let vs not doubt after the exãple of Christ when we are dying, to cõmend our soules to God, or after the example of Stephen, to commit them to Christ to keep, which not vnworthily is called a faithfull shepheard and Bishop of them. To enquire of their meane state, is neither lawful nor expedient. Manie do much comber themselues with disputing what place they keepe, and whether they do now enioy the heauenly glorie or no. But it is folly & rashnes, to search deepelier of vnknowen thinges, than God doeth giue vs leaue to knowe. When the Scripture hath said that Christ is present with them, and receiueth them into paradise that they maie enioye comfort, on the other side that the soules of the reprobate doe suffer such paines as they haue deserued: it goeth no further. What teacher or maister shall nowe open to vs that which God hath hidden? Of the place, the question is no lesse fonde & vain: forasmuch as we know that there is not the same dimensiõ of the soule which is of the bodie. Whereas the blessed gathering together of holy spirites is called the bosome of Abraham, it is enough for vs after this wayfaring to be receiued of the common father of the faithful, that he maie communicate with vs the fruite of his faith. In the meane time sith the Scripture euery where biddeth vs to hang vpon the expectation of Christs comming, and differreth the crowne of glorie til then: let vs bee content with these bondes appointed vs of God: namely, that the soules of the godlie hauing ended the labour of their warfare do go into a blessed rest, where with happie ioyfulnesse they looke for the enioying of the promised glorie: and that so al things are holden in suspense til Christ the redemer appeare. As for the reprobate, it is no doubt that they haue the same estate which Iude assigneth to the diuels, to be holden bound with chains, til they be drawen to the punishment whereunto they are condemned.

Their errour which haue imagined that wee shall in the day of the resurrection receiue not the same bodies which die but others for them.

7 No lesse monstrous is their error, which imagine that soules shall not receiue againe the same bodies wherwith they are now clothed, but shal haue newe and other bodies. And the reason of the Manichees was verye trifling, that is, that it is not meete that flesh which is vncleane should rise againe. As though there were no vncleanesse of soules, which yet they debarred not from the hope of euerlasting life. It was therefore all one as if they should say that that which is infected with the filth of sinne cannot be cleansed by God. For I now passe ouer that dotage, that flesh was naturally vncleane, because it was create of the Diuel: Onely I shewe that whatsoeuer is now in vs vnworthie of heauen, it hindereth not the resurrection. And first wheras Paul biddeth the faithful to cleanse themselues from al defiling of the flesh and of the Spirite, thereuppon followeth the iudgement which he in an other place pronounceth, ỹ euerie man shall receiue by his bodie either good or euill. Wherewith agreeth that which he writeth to the Corinthians, That the life of Iesus Christ may be opẽly shewed in our mortall flesh. For which reason in an other place hee doth no lesse praye that God preserue the bodies whole vnto the day of Christ, than the soules and spirites. And no maruel, because it were a most great absurditie that the bodies which God hath dedicate to bee temples to himselfe, should fall awaye into rottennesse without hope of rising again. What say we to this, that they are also the members of Christ? that GOD commaundeth all the partes of them to be sanctified to himselfe? that hee willeth his name to bee praysed with tongues, pure handes to be lifted vp to him, sacrifices to bee offered? What madnesse is it therefore that that parte to which the heauenly iudge hath vouchsafed to grant so great honour, should be brought from a mortal man into dust without any hope of restoring? Likewise when Paul exhorteth vs to suffer the Lord as wel in bodie as in soule, because both be long to God, verily he suffereth not that which he calengeth to God as holy, to bee adiudged to eternall rottennesse. Neither is there a plainer determination of the Scripture for any thing, than for the rising againe of this flesh which we beare. This corruptible (saith Paul) must put on vncorruption, and this mortall must put on immortalitie. If God did make new bodies, where is this changing of qualitie? If it had ben said ỹ we must be renued, the doutful speech paraduenture mought haue giuen occasion to their cauillation. But now when pointing with his finger to the bodies wherewith we are clothed, he promiseth to them vncorruption, he plainely enough denieth anye newe bodies to be made. Yea he could not (saith Tertullian) speake more plainely, vnlesse he had holden his owne skinne in his hande. And they can by no cauillation escape from this, that where in an other place he saith ỹ Christ shalbe the iudge of the worlde, he alleageth this testimonie of Esaie, I liue (saith the Lord) euerie knee shal bow to me: forasmuch as he plainely pronounceth that they to whõ he speaketh shalbe subiect to yeld an accoũt of their life, which could not agree, if new bodies should be brought before the iudgement seate Now in the wordes of Daniel there is no doutfulnesse: And manie of them that sleep in the earth of dust, shal awake, some to eternal life, and some to reproches and to euerlasting contempt: sith he fetcheth not new matter out of the foure elements to make mẽ, but calleth dead men out of their graues. And this very plain reasõ teacheth. For if mortality which toke beginning at the fal of mã, be accidentall: then the repairing which Christ brought, pertaineth to the same bodye which beganne to bee mortall. And truely, wheras the Athenians laughed when Paul affirmed the resurrection, thereupon we may gather what maner of resurrectiõ he preached: and that same laughing not smally auaileth to strengthen our faith. The saying of Christ also is worthy to be noted: Feare not them which kill the body, & can not kil the soule: but feare him which can throwe both the soule and the body into hell fire. For there is no cause to feare, vnlesse the body which we now beare be subiect to punishment. And no lesse playne is an other saying of the same Christ. The houre commeth, when all they that are in graues, shal heare the voyce of the sonne of God, & shall come forth:

forth: they that haue done good, into the resurrection of life: but they ỳ haue done euill, into the resurrection of indgement. Shal we say that soule, rest in the graues, that they lying there may heare Christ? and not rather that at his commaundement the bodies shal returne into the liuelines which they had lost? Moreouer if we shall haue new bodies giuen vs, where is the like fashioning of the head & the members? Christ rose again: was it with forging to himselfe a newe body? No, but as hee had saide before, Destroy this temple, & in three daies I will build it vp: he tooke againe the same body which he had before borne mortall. For he had not much profited vs, if a newe body being put in place the olde body had beene destroyed which was offred vp for a sacrifice of satisfactory cleansing. We must also hold fast that fellowshippe which the Apostle preacheth: That we rise againe, because Christe hath risen againe: for nothing is lesse probable than that our flesh in which we beare about the mortifiyng of Christ, should be depriued of ỳ resurrection of Christ. Which verily appeared by a notable example, when at the rising againe of Christ many bodies of the Saintes came out of the graues. For it cannot be denied that this was a foreshewing, or rather an earnest of the last resurrection which wee hope for: such as was before in Enoch and Elias, whom Tertullian calleth New possessors of the resurrection: because they being in body & soule deliuered from corruption, were receiued into the keeping of God.

Candidati, men clothed in white, as were among the Romanes they that were suters or newly elected into office.

8 I am ashamed in so cleare a matter to spend so many wordes: but the readers shal contentedly beare this trouble with me, that no hole may be open for frowarde and bolde wittes to deceiue the simple. The fleeing spirits with whom I now dispute, bring forth a fained inuention of their own brain that at the resurrection there shalbe a creation of new bodies. What reason moueth them to thinke so, but because it seemeth to them incredible, that a carion consumed with so long rottennesse should returne into his auncient state? Therefore onely vnbeliefe is the mother of this opinion. But vs on the other side ỳ Spirit of God ech where in the Scripture exhorteth to hope for the resurrectiõ of our flesh. For this reason baptisme (as Paul witnesseth) is to vs a seale of the resurrectiõ to come: and likewise the holy Supper alloureth vs to the trust thereof, when we receiue with our mouth the signes of spirituall grace. And truely the whole exhortation of Paul, that wee giue our members to be weapons vnto the obedience of righteousnesse, shoulde be cold vnlesse that were ioyned which he addeth afterwarde. He that hath raised vp Christ from the dead, shall quicken also your mortall bodies. For, what should it profitte to applye our feete, handes, eyes, and tongues vnto the seruice of GOD, vnlesse they were partakers of the fruite and reward? Which thing Paul plainely confirmeth with his owne wordes, saying: The bodie not to fornication, but to the Lorde: and the Lorde to the bodie. And hee that hath raised vp Christe, shall also raise vp vs by his power. More plaine are those wordes which followe: that our bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost and the members of Christ. In the meane time we see howe he ioyneth the resurrection with chastitie and holinesse, as a litle after he saieth that the price of redemption pertaineth also to the bodies. Nowe it were not reasonable that the body of Paul, in whiche hee should loose the rewarde of the crowne. Whereupon also came that glorying. We looke for the redeemer from heauen, which shal make our vile body like fashioned to the bodie of his brightnes. And if this be true, that wee Phil.3.21.

must by many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God, no reason suffreth to debarre the bodies from this entrie which God both exerciseth vnder the standerde of the crosse, and honoureth with the praise of victorie. Act.14.22.
Therefore of this matter there arose among the saints no doubting, but that they hoped to be companions of Christ, which remoueth into his own person all the afflictions wherewith we are prooued, to teache that they bring life. Yea and vnder the lawe he exercised the holy fathers in this faith with an outward ceremony. For to what purpose serued the vsage of burying, as we haue alreadie shewed, but that they should knowe that there is newe life prepared for the bodies that are layd vp? Hereunto also tended the spices & other signes of immortalitie, wherewith vnder the law the darknes of faith was holpen euen as it was by the sacrifices. Neither was that maner bredde by superstition, forasmuch as we see that the Spirite doeth no lesse diligently rehearse burials than the chiefe mysteries of faith. And Christ commendeth Matth.26.10.
that worke as a speciall worke, truely for none other reason but because it lifteth vp our eyes from beholding of ỹ graue which corrupteth & destroyeth all, to the sight of the renuing. Moreouer the so diligent obseruing of the ceremonie which is praised in the Fathers, sufficiently prooueth that it was to them a rare and pretious helpe of faith. For neither would Abraham haue so carefully prouided for the burying place of his wife, vnlesse there had Gen.23.4.& 19.
bene set before his eyes a religion and a profite hyer than the world, namely that garnishing the dead body of his wife with the signes of the resurrection he might confirme both his owne faith and the faith of his houshold. But a clearer proofe of this thing appeareth in the example of Iacob, which Gen.47.30.
to testifie to his posteritie that the hope of the promised lande was not euen by death fallen out of his minde, commaunded his bones to be carried thither. I beseech you, if he was to be clothed with a newe body, shoulde hee not haue giuen a fond commaundement concerning dust that shoulde bee brought to nothing? Wherefore if the authoritie of the Scripture bee of any force with vs, there can be required of no doctrine either a more cleare or more certaine proofe. For this euen children vnderstand by the wordes of Resurrection, and raising vp againe. For neither can we call it the Resurrection of that which is nowe first created, neither shoulde that saying of Iohn.6.39.
Christ stand fast, Whatsoeuer the Father hath giuen mee, it shall not perish but I will raise it vp in the last day. To the same purpose serueth the worde of Sleeping, which pertaineth onely to the bodies. Whereupon also burying places were called Cœmeteria, Sleeping places. Nowe it remaineth that I speake somewhat of the manner of the resurrection. I vse this word, because Paul calling it a mysterie, exhorteth vs to sobrietie, and bridleth the libertie 1.Cor.15.51.
to dispute like Philosophers freely and suttlely of it. First we must hold, as we haue saide, that wee shall rise againe in the same flesh which wee beare, as touching the substance, but the qualitie shalbe other. As when the same flesh of Christ which had bene offred for sacrifice, was raised vp againe, yet it excelled celled in other qualities as if it had bene altogether another flesh. Which thing Paul declareth by familiar examples. For as there is all one substance of the flesh of a man,& of a beast,but not all one qualitie: as all starres haue like matter,but not like brightnes:so he teacheth that though we shal keepe still the substance of our body,yet there shalbe a change, that the state of it may be much more excellent. The bodie therefore, that we may be raised vp againe,shall not perish nor vanish away:but putting of corruption,it shall put on vncorruption.But forasmuch as God hath all the elements ready at his beck,no hardinesse shall hinder him,but ỹ he may cõmand both ỹ earth and waters and fire,to render that which seemeth to be consumed by them.

Esa.26.21. Which also Esay testifieth though not without a figure,where he saith, Behold,the Lord shall go foorth of his place,that he may visite the iniquitie of the earth:and the earth shall discouer her bloude, & shall no more hide her dead.But there is to be noted a difference betweene them ỹ haue bin deade

1.Cor.15.51. long before,and those whome that day shal finde aliue.For we shall not all sleepe(as Paul saith) but we shal al be chaunged:that is to say,it shal not be of necessitie that there be a distance of time betwene death & the beginning of the second life:because in a moment of time,& in the twinckling of an eye the sound of the trumpet shall pearce,to raise vp the dead vncorruptible,& with a soudaine change to fashion againe the liuing into the same glorie.So

1.Thes.4.15. in another place he comforteth the faithfull which must die: because they which shall then remaine aliue shall not go before the dead, but rather they shall first rise againe which haue slept in Christ. If any obiect that saying of the Apostle,that it is appointed to all mortall men once to die,it is easye to answere it with saying that when the state of nature is changed,it is a kinde

Heb.9.27. of death,and is fitly so called.And therfore these things agree well togither, that all shall be renued by death when they shall put of their mortall body:& yet that it is not necessarie that there be a seuering of the body and the soule where there shall be a souden changing.

Howe it commeth to passe that the wicked are so raised from the dead, as well as the iust and righteous.

9 But here ariseth a harder question:by what right the resurrection which is the singular benefit of Christ is common also to the wicked and the accursed of God.We knowe that all were in Adam condemned to ỹ death.Christe came the resurrection & life.Came he to giue life to all mandind vniuersally without choise?But what is more against reason than that,that they shoulde by their obstinate blindnesse obtaine that which the godly worshippers of God do obtaine by onely faith?Yet this remaineth certaine,that there shall

Iohn 11.25. be one resurrection of iudgement,and another resurrection of life,and that Matth.25.31. Christ shall come to seuer the Lambes from the goates.I aunswere, that this ought not to seeme strange,the likenesse wherof we see in daily experience. Wee see that in Adam wee were depriued of the inheritaunce of the whole world,and that we are by no lesse iust reason debarred from common foode, than from the eating of the tree of life. Whence then commeth it to passe, that God doth not onely make his sunne to rise vpon the good & euill, but

Matt.5.45. also as touching the vses of this present life,his inestimable liberalitie continually floweth foorth to them with large plentiousnesse?Hereby verily wee knowe that those things which properly belong to Christ and his members, do also outerflowe to the wicked, not that it is their rightfull possession,but that

that they may be made the more inexcusable. So the wicked do oftetimes finde God beneficiall, by more than meane prooues, yea such as sometime doe darken al the blessings of the godlie, but yet doe turne to their greater damnation. If anie man obiect, that the resurrection is not fitly compared to fading and earthly benefite: heere also I aunswere that so soone as they were estranged from God the fountaine of life, they deserued the death of ỹ Diuell, whereby they shoulde be vtterly destroyed: Yet by the marueilous counsel of God there was founde a meane state that out of life they might liue in death. No more absurditie ought it to seeme, if the resurrection happen to the wicked, which draweth them against their willes to the iudgement seate of Christ, whome now they refuse to heare for their maister and teacher. For it were a small paine to be consumed away with death, if they were not to suffer punishment for their obstinacie, brought before ỹ iudge, whose vengeance they haue without ende and measure prouoked against themselues. But although wee must holde that which wee haue saide, and which that notable confession of Paul before Felix containeth, that he looketh for the resurrection of the righteous & wicked: yet the Scripture often times setteth foorth election togither with the heauenly glorie to the only children of God: Because Christ properlie came not to the destruction, but to the saluation of the worlde. Therefore in the Creede there is made mention of the blessed life only. Act.24.15

The incomprehensible excellencie of that eternal blessednes whereof we haue here a tast giuen vs, and looke for the perfect fruition hereafter in the world to come.

10 But forasmuch as the prophecie of death swallowed vp by victorie, shal then and not till then be fulfilled: let vs alway haue in minde the eternall felicitie, the ende of the resurrection: of the excellencie whereof, if all things were spoken which the tongs of men were able to speake, yet scarcely the smalest parcell thereof should be expressed. For howsoeuer we truely heare that the kingdome of God shalbe stuffed full with brightnesse, ioy, felicitie, and glorie: yet those things that are spoken of are most fatre remooued from our sense, and remaine as it were wrapped in darke speaches, vntill that day come when he himselfe shall giue to vs his glory to be seen face to face. We knowe (saith Iohn) that we are the children of God, but it hath not yet appeared. But when we shalbe like to him, then we shal see him such as he is. Wherefore the Prophets, because they could by no words expresse the spirituall blessednesse in it selfe, did in a manner grosly portray it out vnder bodily thinges. But forasmuch as the feruentnesse of desire muste with some tast of that sweetenesse be kindled in vs, let vs chiefely continue in this thought, that if God do as a certaine fountain which cannot be drawen drie, containe in him the fulnesse of all good things, nothing is beyond him to be coueted of them that tende toward the soueraign good & the full perfection of felicitie: as we are taught in manie places. Abraham, I am thy reward exceeding great. With which saying accordeth Dauid. The Lorde is my portion, the lot hath verie well fallen to mee. Againe in another place, I shalbe satisfied with thy countenance. But Peter pronounceth that the faithfull are called to this ende, that they may bee made partakers of the nature of God. How so; because he shalbe glorified in all his saintes, and shalbe made wonderfull in them that haue beleeued, If the Lorde will enterparten his glory, power, & righteousnesse with his elect, yea & wil giue him. 1.Cor.15.54. 1.Iohn.3.2. Ose.13.14. Gen.15.2. Psal.16.6. Psal.17.15. 2.Pet.1.4.

himselfe to them to be enioyed, and (which is better) will after a certaine manner grow into one with them: let vs remember that vnder this benefite is contained all kinde of felicitie. And when we haue much profited in this meditation, let vs reknowledge that wee yet stay beneath at the bottome of the rootes, if the conceiuing of our minde be compared with the highnesse of this mysterie. Wherefore in this behalfe wee must keepe sobrietie, least with how much greater boldnes we shal fly vp on hie being vnmindful of our owne small measure, so much more the brightnesse of the heauenlye glorie ouerwhelme vs. We feele also howe the vnmeasurable gredinesse to knowe more than is lawfull, tickleth vs: from whence both trifling & hurtfull questions doe spring from time to time: trifling I call those of which there can no profite be gathered. But this seconde kinde is worse, because they which giue themselues to them, doe entangle themselues with pernicious speculations, and therefore I call them hurtfull. That which the Scriptures doe teach, ought to be out of all dout with vs: namely that as God diuersly distributing his gifres to the Saintes in this world, doeth vnequally enlighten them, so the measure of glorie shal not be equall in heauen where God shall crowne his giftes. For neither doth this belong indifferently to all whiche Paul saith. Ye are my glorie and crowne in the day of Christ: nor also that saying of Christ to the Apostles: Ye shall sit iudging the twelue tribes of Israel. But Paul (which knew that as God enricheth the holy ones with spirituall giftes in earth, so hee beautifieth them with glorie in heauen) douteth not that there is a peculiar crowne layde vp for him according to the rate of his labours. And Christ to set foorth to the Apostles the dignitie of the office which they did beare, telleth them that the fruite thereof is laide vp for them in heauen. So Daniel also saieth, But the wise shall shine as the brightnesse of the firmament, and they which iustifie many, as Starres to the worldes ende and for euer. And if a man heedefully consider the Scriprures, they doe not onely promise eternall life to the faithfull, but also speciall rewarde to euery one. Whereupon commeth that saying of Paul, The Lorde render to him in that day. Which the promise of Christ confirmeth, Ye shall receiue a hundred folde in the eternall life. Finally, as Christ beginneth in this worlde the glorie of his bodie with manifolde diuersitie of gift, and encreaseth it by degrees: so he shall also make it perfect in heauen.

Curious questions concerning the differens degrees of blessednes.

11 But as all the godly will receiue this with one consent, because it is sufficiently testified by the worde of God: so on the other side leauing crabbed questions, which they shall know to be a hinderance to them, they will not passe their appointed boundes. As for my part, I doe not only priuately forbeare superfluous searching of vnprofitable things, but I also thinke that I ought to beware that I do not with aunswering nourish the lightnesse of other. Men hungrie of vaine knowledge doe aske howe great shalbe the distance betweene the Prophetes and the Apostles, and againe betweene the Apostles and the Martyrs: howe many degrees Virgins differ from maried folkes: finally, they leaue no corner of heauen vnsearched. Then it commeth to their mindes to enquire to what purpose serueth the repairing of the worlde, sith the children of GOD shall neede nothing of all this this so great and incomparable plenty: but shalbe like to the Angels, whose not eating is a signe of the eternall blessednesse. But I answere that in the very sight there shalbe so great pleasantnesse, so great sweetnesse in the onely knowledge without any vse, that this felicity shall farre passe all the helpes wherewith we be now holpen. Let vs imagine our selues to be set in the most wealthie coast of the worlde, and where we shal want no pleasure: yet who is there whom his sickenesse do not sometime hinder and not suffer to vse the benefites of God? Who is there whose course his owne intemperance doth not oft breake in sunder? Whereupon followeth that a cleare enioying and pure from all fault, although there be no vse of corruptible life, is the perfection of felicitie. Some go further & aske whether drosse & other corruptions in metalles, be not farre from restoring and are contraie to it. Which though in some respectes I graunt them, yet I looke with Paul for the repairing of these faults which tooke their beginning at sinne, toward which repairing they grone and are in trauaile. Yet they proceede further, and aske what better estate is prepared for man, sith the blessing of issue shal then be at an ende. This knot is also easie to bee loosed. Whereas the Scripture so honorably setteth out that kinde of blessing, that is referred to the encreases wherewith God continually draweth forward the order of nature her marke: but in the perfection it is knowen that there is an other maner. But sith the vnware are easily taken with allurementes, and then the maze draweth them in deeplier, & at length when euery mans deuises please himselfe there is no end of striuing: therefore let this be a short way for vs, to bee contented with the glasse & darke speech vntill we shall see face to face. For fewe of a great multitude care which way they may go to heauen: but all do before their time couet to know what is done there. All being commonly sluggish and slowe to enter into battailes, do already paint out to themselues imagined triumphes. Rom.8.22.

12 Now because no description can match the grieuousnes of the vengeance of God vpon the reprobate, their tormentes and paines are figured to vs by bodily thinges, namely by darkenesse, weeping, gnashing of teeth, vnquenchable fire, and a worme endlesselie gnawing the hearte. For by such manners of speech it is certaine that the holy Ghost meant to trouble al our senses with horrour: as when it is saide that there is prepared from eternitie a deepe Hell, that the nourishmentes thereof are fire and much woode: that the blast of the Lorde, as a streame of brimstone, doth set it on fire. As by such thinges we must be holpen after a certaine manner to conceiue the miserable state of the wicked, so we ought chiefly to fasten our thought vpon this howe wretched a thing it is to be estranged from the fellowshippe of God: and not that onely, but also to feele the maiestie of God so bent against thee, that thou canst not escape but be fast strained of it. For first his displeasure is like a most violent fire, with touching wherof al things are deuoured and swallowed vp. Then, all creatures so serue him to execute his iudgement, that they to whom the Lord shall so shewe his wrath, shal feele the heauen, earth, sea, and beasts, as it were with cruell indignatiō enflamed against them and armed to their destruction. Wherefore it is no smal thing that the Apostle pronounceth, when he saith that the vnbeleuing shall shall suffer eternall punishment by dying from the face of the Lord, & from the glorie of his power. And so oft as the Prophets do cast vs in feare with bodily figures, although they speake nothing excessiuely for our dulnes, yet they adde foreshewinges of the iudgement to come, in the Sunne and the Moone and the whole frame of the worlde. Wherefore the vnhappy consciences do find no rest, from being vexed and tossed with a terrible whirlewinde, from feeling themselues to be torne in peeces by God being angerly bent against them, from being pearced and launced with deadly stings, from trembling at the lightning of God, & being brooised with the weight of his hande: so that it is much more ease to enter into all bottomlesse depthes and deuouring pittes, than to stand one moment in those terrours. What & how great then is this, to be pressed with euerlasting and neuer ceassing siege of him? Of which thing the 90. Psalme containeth a notable sentence: that although with only sight he scatter abroade al mortal men and bring them to nought, yet his worshippers, how much more fearefull they are in the world, so much more he enforceth them and pricketh them forward loden with the crosse, vntill he be all in all.

THE FOVRTH BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, which intreateth of the outwarde meanes or helps, whereby God alloureth vs into the felloshippe of Christe and holdeth vs therein.

The first Chapter.

Of the trut Church with vvhich vve ought to keepe vnitie, because it is the mother of all the godly.

The summe of the former booke, and the drift of this vvhich concerneth the Church.

THat by Faith of the Gospel Christ is become ours, and we be made partakers of the saluation brought by him & of eternal blessednes, is already declared in ỹ last book. But because our rudenes, & slouthfulnes, yea and vanity of wit, do need outward helps wherby Faith in vs may both be engẽdred, and grow & encrease in proceeding toward the mark wherunto it tẽdeth: God hath also added thẽ therby to prouide for our weaknes. And ỹ the Preaching of the Gospel might florish, he hath left this treasure with ỹ church. He hath appointed Pastors & teachers, by whose mouth he might teach them ỹ be his: he hath furnished thẽ with autority, finally he hath left nothing vndone that might auaile to the holy consent of faith and right order. First of all he hath ordeined Sacraments, which we feele by experience to be more than profitable helpes to nourish & confirme Faith. For because beeing enclosed in the prison of our flesh, wee do not yet attaine to the degree of Angels, God applying himself to our capacity according to his wonderful prouidence, hath appointed a meane whereby we being farre distant from him might come vnto him. Wherefore the order of teaching requireth that now we entreat of the Church, and of the gouernment, orders & power of it, & then of the Sacraments, & lastly of the ciuil order: & therewithal that we call away the godly readers from those corruptions wherwith Satan in the Papacie hath depraued al things that God hath appointed for our saluation. I will begin at the Church, into whose bosome God will haue his children to be gathered together, not only that they should by her helpe & ministerie be nourished while they are infants & yong children, but also be ruled by her motherly care til they growe to riper age, & at length come to the marke of faith. For it is not lawful that those things be seuered which God hath conioyned, that to whome hee is a Father, the Church bee also their mother: and that not only vnder the law, but also since the comming of Christ, as Paul witnesseth, which teacheth that we are the children of the new and heauenly Hierusalem. Mat. 10. 9. Gal. 8. 26.

3 In the Creede, where we professe that wee beleeue the Church, that is not spoken only of the visible Church whereof we nowe entreat, but of all the elect of God, in whose number they are also comprehended that are departed by death. And therefore this word Beleeue is there set, because oftentimes there can no other difference be noted betweene the children of God and the vngodly, betweene his peculiar flocke and sauage beastes. For whereas many do interlace this word, In, that is without probable reason. I graunt indeed that it is the more commonly vsed, and also wanteth not the consenting testimonie of antiquitie, forasmuch as euen the Nicen Creede, as it is reported in the Ecclesiasticall historie, addeth the preposition, In. But therewithall wee may marke by the writings of the auncient Fathers, that it was receiued without controuersie to say, that they beleeued the Church and not in the Church. For Augustine, and that ancient writer whatsoeuer he was, whose worke remaineth vnder the name of Cyprian concerning the exposition of the Creede, doe not onely so speake themselues, but also doe expresly note that it shoulde be an vnproper manner of speaking if the preposition were adioyned, & they confirme their opinion with no trifling reason. For we therefore testifie that we beleeue in God because vpon him as a true speaker our mind reposeth it selfe, and in him our confidence resteth which coulde not so conueniently bee spoken to say in the Church no more than it coulde be saide, I beleeue in the forgiueneſſe of sinnes, or in the resurrection of the flesh. Therefore although I would not striue about wordes, yet I had rather followe the proprietie of speaking that shoulde bee fittest to expresse the matter, than curiously to seeke for formes of speach whereby the matter may without cause be darkened. But the end is, that wee shoulde knowe that although the diuel attempt all meanes to ouerthrow the grace of Christ, and though the enemies of God bee carried with violent rage to the same intent: yet it cannot be extinguished, nor the bloud of Christ bee made barren, but that it will bring foorth some fruite. And so is both the secrete election of God and his inwarde calling to be considered: because hee alone knoweth who be his, and holdeth them inclosed vnder a seale as Paul tearmeth it: saying that they beare his tokens whereby they may bee seue- Ephe. 1. 13.

ſeuerallie knowne from the reprobate. But becauſe a ſmall and contemptible number lieth hid vnder a huge multitude, and a fewe graines of wheate are couered with a heape of chaffe, to God onlie is to be left the knowledge of his Church, the foundation whereof is his ſecrete election. But it is not ſufficient to conceiue in thought and minde the multitude of the elect, vnleſſe we thinke vpon ſuch an vnitie of the Church into which wee be truelie perſwaded that we our ſelues be ingraffed. For vnleſſe we be vnder our head Chriſt vnited together with all the reſt of his members, there abideth for vs no hope of the inheritance to come. It is therefore called Catholike or vniuerſall, becauſe we cannot finde two or three Churches but that Chriſt muſt be torne in ſunder, which cannot be done. But all the elect of God are ſo knit together in Chriſte, that as they hang vppon one heade, ſo they may growe together as it were into one body, cleauing together with ſuch a cõpacting of ioints as the members of one ſelf bodie: being truelie made one, which with one hope, Faith, Charitie, with one ſelfe Spirite of God doe liue together beeing called not onelie into one inheritance of eternall life, but alſo into one partaking of one God and Chriſte. Wherefore although the ſorow-full deſolation that on eche ſide preſenteth it ſelfe in ſight, crieth out that there is nothing left of the Church, yet let vs knowe that Chriſtes death is fruiteſull and that God meruellouſlie as it were in ſecrete corners preſer-ueth his Church. As it was ſaid to Elias, I haue kept to my ſelfe ſeuen thouſand men that haue not bowed their knee before Baal.

1. Reg. 19. 18.

The article of the Creede touching the Church, concerneth after a ſort the viſible Church, vnto which the communion of Saints being added containeth foure ſpeciall ſtaies of faith.

3 Albeit this article of the Creede doth in ſome reſpect belong to the outwarde Church, that euerie one of vs ſhoulde holde himſelfe in brotherly conſent with all the children of God, ſhoulde yeede vnto the Church that authoritie which it deſerueth, finallie ſhould ſo behaue himſelfe as a Sheepe of the flocke. And therefore is adioyned the communion of Saintes.
Which parcell, although commonly the olde writers doe leaue it out, yet is it not to be neglected: becauſe it verie well expreſſeth the qualitie of the Church: as if it had beene ſaide that the ſaintes are gathered together into the fellowſhippe of Chriſt with this condition, that whatſoeuer benefites God beſtoweth vppon them, they ſhoulde continually communicate them one to another. Whereby yet the diuerſitie of graces is not taken away.
as we know that the giftes of the holie ghoſt are diuerſly diſtributed: neither is the order of ciuil gouernment diſturbed, by which it is lawfull for euer-ry man priuately to enioy his own poſſeſſions, as it is neceſſarie, that for preſeruation of peace among men, they ſhould haue among themſelues peculiar & diuided properties of things. But there is a cõmunitie affirmed ſuch as Luke deſcribeth, that of the multitude of the beleeuers there was one hart & one ſoul: & Paul when he exhorteth the Epheſians to be one body, one ſpirit as they be called in one hope. For it is not poſſible, if they be truly perſwaded ỹ God is the cõmon father, & Chriſt the common head to thẽ al, but ỹ being conioined among thẽſelues with brotherly loue, they ſhould continually cõmunicate thoſe things that they haue. Nowe it much behoueth vs to knowe what profite thereupon returneth vnto vs. For wee beleeue the Church to this ende, that wee may be certainly perſwaded that we are the members of it. For by this meane, our ſaluation reſteth vppon ſure ſounde ſtaies,

that

that it, although the whole frame of the worlde be ſhaken, cannot come to ruine and fall downe. Firſt it ſtandeth with Gods election, neither can it varie or faile but together with his eternall Prouidence. Then, it is after a certaine maner ioyned with the ſtedfaſtneſſe of Chriſt, which will no more ſuffer his faithfull to be plucked from him, than his own members to be rent and torne in peeces. Beſide that, we are aſſured that trueth ſhal alway abide with vs, ſo long as we are holden in the boſome of the Church. Laſt of al that we feele that theſe promiſes belong to vs, there ſhalbe ſaluation in Syon, God ſhall for euer abide in Hieruſalem, that it may not at any time be moued. So much can the partaking of the Church doe, that it holdeth vs in the fellowſhippe of God. Alſo in the very worde Communion is much comforte: becauſe while it remaineth certaine, that whatſoeuer the Lord giueth to his and our members, belongeth to vs, our hope is by all their good things confirmed. But in ſuch ſort to embrace the vnitie of the Church, it is not needfull (as wee haue alreadie ſaide) to ſee the Church it ſelfe with our eyes, or feele it with our handes: but rather by this that it conſiſteth in Faith, we are admoniſhed that wee ought no leſſe to thinke it to bee, when it paſſeth our vnderſtanding, than if it openly appeared. Neither is our faith therefore the worſe, becauſe it conceiueth it vnknowen: foraſmuch as wee are not herein commanded to diſcerne the reprobate from the elect (which is the office of God onely, and not ours) but to determine aſſuredly in our minds, that all they that by the merciful kindeneſſe of God the father through the effectuall woorking of the holie Ghoſt, are come into the partaking of Chriſt, are ſeuered into the peculiar right and proper poſſeſſion of Chriſt: and that, foraſmuch as we be in the number of thoſe, wee are partakers of ſo great a grace.

The Church the mother of the faithfull.

4 But ſith it is now our purpoſe to entreate of the viſible Church, let vs learne euen by this one title of Mother, how much the knowledge therof is profitable, yea neceſſary for vs: foraſmuch as there is no other entry into life, vnles ſhe conceiue vs in her wombe, vnles ſhe bring vs forth, vnleſſe ſhe feede vs with her breaſtes, finally vnleſſe ſhee keepe vs vnder her cuſtodie and gouernaunce, vntill ſuch time as being vnclothed of mortall fleſhe we ſhalbe like vnto Angels. For our weakeneſſe ſuffereth vs not to be diſmiſſed from ſchoole, till we haue been ſcholers throughout the whole courſe of our life. Beſide that out of her boſome there is no forgiuenes of ſinnes, and no ſaluation to be hoped for, as witneſſeth Eſaie & Ioel, with whom agreeth Ezechiel whē he declareth that they ſhal not be in the number of Gods people whom he putteth away from the heauenly life. As on the contrary ſide, they are ſaid to write their names among the citizens of Hieruſalem, that turne themſelues to the following of true godlineſſe. After which manner it is alſo ſaid in an other Pſame: Remember me, Lorde, in the good will of thy people: viſite me in thy ſaluation that I may ſee the benefites of thy elect, that I may be merry in the mirth of thy people, that I may reioyce with thy inheritance. In which words the fatherly fauour of God, & the peculiar teſtimony of the Spirituall life is reſtrained to his flocke, ſo that the departing from the Church is alway damnable.

place. Paul writeth that Christ, that he might fulfill all thinges, gaue some Apostles, some Prophetes, some Euangelistes, and some Pastors and teachers, to the restoring of the holie ones, into the work of ministerie, vnto the edification of the bodie of Christ, vntill we al come into the vnitie of Faith, and of the acknowledging of the sonne of God, vnto a perfect man, and to the measure of the full growen age of Christ. We see howe God, which was able to make them that be his perfect in a moment, yet will not haue them growe into manly age but by the bringing vp of the Church. Wee see the meane expressed, for that vnto the Pastors is enioyned the preaching of the heauenly doctrine. We see howe all, not one excepted, are brought into one rule, that they shoulde with milde Spirite and willing to learne, yeelde themselues to the teachers appointed for that vse. And by this marke Esaie had long before set out the kingdome of Christ, where hee sayeth: My spirite which is in thee, and the wordes that I haue put in thy mouth shal neuer depart, neither out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed and thy childrens children. Whereupon followeth that they are worthie to perish with famine and pining hunger, whosoeuer they be that refuse the spirituall meate of the soule reached vnto them of God by the handes of the Church.

Esa. 59. 21.

GOD doeth breath faith into vs, but by the instrument of his Gospell, as Paul sayeth that faith is by hearing. As also with God remaineth his power to saue, but (as the same Paul witnesseth) he vttereth and displayeth the same in the preaching of the Gospell. For this reason in old time he willed that there should be made holy assemblies to the sanctuarie, that doctrine vttered by the mouth of the Priest should nourish the consent of faith. And to no other ende those glorious titles haue respect, where the temple is called the rest of God, and the sanctuarie his house, where he is saide to sit betweene the Cherubines, but to bring estimation, loue, reuerence and dignitie to the ministerie of the heauenlie doctrine, which otherwise the sight of a mortall and despised man woulde not a litle diminish. Therefore that we should knowe, that out of earthen vesselles is brought foorth vnto vs inestimable treasure, God himselfe commeth forth, and in as much as he is author of this degree, so he will haue himself to be acknowledged present in his institution. Therefore after that he hath forbidden his to giue themselues to iudgement by flying of birdes, to southsayings, magicall artes, necromancy and other superstitions, he immediatly addeth that he will giue them that which ought to suffice in steede of all, that is to say, that they shal neuer be destitute of Prophetes. But like as he sent not the olde people to Angels, but raised vp teachers out of the earth, which might truely perform the office of Angels: so at this day also his wil is to teach vs by men. And as in the olde time he was not content with the onelie lawe, but added Priests for expositors, at whose lippes the people should enquire for the true meaning thereof: so at this day he not only willeth vs to be heedfully bent to reading, but also appointeth maisters ouer vs, by whose trauaile we may be holpen: whereof commeth double profite. For on the one part by a very good triall it prouethour obedience, where we heare his ministers speaking euen as it were himselfe. On the other side it also prouideth for our weakenesse, while after the manner of men hee had rather speake vnto vnto vs by interpreters to allure vs vnto him, than with thundring driue vs away from him. And truely how expedient this familiar manner of teaching is for vs, all the godly doe feele by the feare wherewith the maiestie of God doth worthily astonish them. But they that thinke that the authoritie of the doctrine is abaced by the contempt of the men that are called to teach, doe bewray their vnthankefulnesse, because among so many excellent giftes wherewith God hath garnished mankind: this is a singular prerogatiue, that he vouchsaueth to consecrate the mouthes and tongues of men to himself, that his owne voice should sound in them. Wherefore on our behalues let vs not bee greeued obediently to embrace the doctrine of saluation set foorth by his commandement & by his owne mouth: because although the power of God is not bound to outward meanes, yet hee hath bound vs to the ordinarie maner of teaching: which while phrentike men refuse to keepe, they wrappe themselues in many deadly snares. Either pride, or disdainefulnes, or enuie moueth many to perswade themselues that they can sufficiétly profite by their own priuate reading and studie, and so to despise publik assemblies, and to accompt preaching superfluous. But sith they do as much as in them is loose or breake in sunder the holy bonde of vnitie, no man escapeth the due punishment of this diuorce, but hee bewitcheth himselfe with pestilent errours & most wicked dotages. Wherefore, that the pure simplicitie of faith may flourish among vs, let vs not be greued to vse this exercise of godlinesse, which God by his institution hath shewed to be necessarie for vs and so earnestly commendeth. But there was neuer yet found any euen of the most wanton dogges which would say that we ought to stoppe our eares against God: But in all ages the Prophets and godly teachers haue had a harde strife against the wicked, whose stubbornesse can neuer come vnder this yoke, to be taught by the mouth of the ministerie of men. Which is as much as to blotte out the face of God which shineth vnto vs in doctrine. For in olde time the faithfull were commanded to seeke the face of God in the Sanctuarie, and the same is so oft repeated in the law for no other cause, but for that the doctrine of the law and the exhortations of the Prophets were to them a liuely image of God: as Paul affirmeth that in his preaching shineth the glorie of God in the face of Christ. How much the more detestable are the Apostates, which greedily seeke to diuide Churches, as though they did driue sheepe from their foldes and cast them into the mouthes of wolues. But we must holde that which he hath alleaged out of Paul, that the Church is no otherwise buylded but by outwarde preaching, and that the holy ones are holden together with no other bonde but when with learning and profiting with one consent they keepe the order appointed by God to the Church. To this ende principally, as I haue saide, the faithfull in olde time vnder the lawe were commaunded to resort to the sanctuarie. Because when Moses speaketh of the dwelling place of God, he doeth therewithall call it the place of name, where God hath set the memorie of his name. Whereby he plainly teacheth that without the doctrine of godlinesse there is no vse thereof. And it is not doubtfull but that for the same reason Dauid with great bitternesse of Spirite complaineth that hee is by the tyrannous cruelte of his enemies kepte from entring into the Tabernacle. It seemeth commonly to manie a childish lamentation, because it shoulde be but a verie small losse, and also no great pleasure shoulde be forgone thereby, to want the entrie of the temple; so that there were enough of other delightfull thinges. But he bewaileth ỳ with this one griefe, anguish and sorrowe, he is fretted and vexed and in a manner wasted. For nothing is of greater estimation with the faithfull, than this help whereby God by degrees lifteth vp his on high. For this is also to be noted, ỳ God in the mirror of his doctrine alway so shewed himself to the holie Fathers, that the knowledge was spirituall. Wherfore the temple is called not only his face, but also (to take away all superstition) his footestoole. And this is that happie meeting into vnity of faith, while frō the higheſt euē to the loweſt al do aspire to the head. All the temples that euer the gentiles vpō any other purpose builded to God, were but a mere prophaning of his worship: whereunto though not with like groseneſſe, yet somwhat the Iewes fell. Whereof Steuen out of the mouth of Esay reprocheth them where he saith, that God dwelleth not in temples made with handes, &c. Because onely God doeth by his worde sanctify to himselfe temples to the lawfull vse. And if wee rashly attempt anie thing without his commaundement, by and by to an euill beginning doe cleaue new deuises by which the euil is spread abroad without measure. Yet Xerxes, when by the counsell of the Magitians hee burned vp or plucked downe all the temples of Greece, vndiscreetely said, that the Gods to whom all thinges ought to be freelie open were enclosed within wals and tiles. As though it were not in the power of God, to the entent he might be neere vs, after a certaine manner to descende vnto vs, and yet neither to chaunge place, nor to fasten vs to earthly meanes: but rather by certaine Chariots to carrie vs vp to his Heauenlye glorie, which with the immeasurable greatneſſe thereof filleth all thinges, yea and in heigth surmounteth the heauens.

6 Nowe forasmuch as at this time there hath beene great strife about the effectualneſſe of the ministerie, while some exceſſiuely amplifie the dignitie thereof: and some other affirme that that which is properly belonging to the holy Ghost is wrongfully giuen away to mortall man, if wee thinke that ministers and teachers do pearce to the mindes and hearts, to amende as well the blindneſſe of the mindes as the hardneſſe of hearts: it is meete that we giue a right determination of this controuerſie. All that they contende on both partes shall easily be accorded by expresly noting the places where God the author of preaching ioyning his spirit with it promiseth fruit thereof: or againe, when seuering himselfe from outward helpes he chalengeth to himself alone as wel the beginnings of faith as the whole course ther of. It was the office of the second Elias (as Malachie witneſſeth) to enlighten the mindes, and to turne the hearts of Fathers to the children, and vnbeleeuers to the wisedome of the righteous. Christ pronounceth that hee sendeth the Apostles, that they should bring fruite of their labor. But what that fruite is Peter shortly defineth, saying that we be regenerate with incorruptible seede. And therefore Paul glorieth that hee by the Gospell begate the Corinthians, and that they were the seale of his Apostleship: yea that hee was not a literall minister, such as did onely beate the eares with with ſound of voyce, but that there was giuen him an effectualneſſe of Spirit, that his doctrine ſhould not be vnprofitable. In which meaning alſo in another place he ſayeth, that his Goſpell was not in worde onelie, but in power. He affirmeth alſo that the Galathians by hearing receiued the Spirit offaith Finally in manie places he maketh himſelfe not onely a worker together with God, but alſo aſſigneth himſelfe the office of giuing ſaluation. Truely he neuer brought foorth all theſe thinges to this entent to giue vnto himſelfe any thing were it neuer ſo little ſeuerally from God: as in an other place he thortly declareth, ſaying, our labour was not vnprofitable in the Lorde, according to his power mightily working in me. Againe in an other place, he that was mightie in Peter towarde the circumciſion, was alſo mightie in me towarde the Gentiles. But how he leaueth nothing ſeuerally to the miniſters, appeareth by other places, as: he that planteth is nothing, and he that watereth is nothing, but God that giueth the encreaſe. Againe: I haue laboured more than al: not I, but the grace of God that was with me. And truely we muſt holde faſt thoſe ſayinges, where God aſcribing to himſelfe the enlightening of the mind, and the renewing of the heart, teacheth that it is a robberie of God if man take vpon himſelfe anie part of either of them. In the meane time if any man offer himſelfe to the miniſters whom God ordeineth, willing to learne, hee ſhall knowe by the fruite, that this maner of teaching not in vaine pleaſed God, and that this yoke of modeſtie was not in vaine laid vpon the faithfull.

2.Cor.3.6. 1.Cor.2.4. Gal 3.2. 1.Cor.3.9. 1.Theſſ.3.5. Gal.2.8. 1.Cor.3.7.

The Scripture ſpeaketh both of a viſible Church & of a Church vvhich is inuiſible.

7 But as for the Church viſible and which is within the compaſſe of our knowledge, what iudgement is meete to be giuen thereof, I thinke it already appeare euidently by that which we haue before ſaide. For we haue ſaid, that the holy Scripture ſpeaketh of the Church after two ſortes. Sometime, when it nameth the Church, it meaneth that Church which is indeede before God, into which none are receiued but they that are both by grace of adoption the children of God, and by ſanctification of the Spirite the true members of Chriſt. And then trulie it comprehendeth not onlie the holie ones that dwell in earth, but alſo all the elect that haue beene ſince the beginning of the worlde But oftentimes vnder the name of the Church it ſignifieth the vniuerſal multitude of men ſcattered abrode in the world, which profeſſe that they worſhip one God and Chriſt, by Baptiſme enter into his faith, by partaking of the ſupper teſtifie their vnitie in true doctrine & charitie, haue an agreement in the worde of the Lorde, and for the preaching thereof do keepe the miniſterie ordeined by Chriſt. In this Church there be mingled many hypocrites which haue nothing of Chriſt but the name and outwarde ſhewe: there be manie ambitious, couetous, enuious, euil ſpeakers, ſome of vncleane life: which be ſuffred for a time, either becauſe they cannot by lawfull order of iudgement be conuinced, or becauſe there is not alway in vre that ſeueritie of diſcipline that ought to be. Therefore as we muſt needes beleeue that the Church which is inuiſible to vs, is to be ſeene with the eyes of GOD onelie: ſo are wee commaunded to regarde this Church which is called a Church in reſpect of men, and to keepe the communion of it.

2.Tim.2.19

8 Therefore ſo much as behoued vs to knowe it, the Lorde hath ſet it

Properly truely and infallible

God alone knoweth who are his.

out by certaine markes and as it were signes vnto vs. This is indeede the singular prerogatiue of God himselfe, to knowe who be his, as wee haue alreadie alleadged out of Paul. And truely that the rashnesse of men should not creepe so farre, it is prouided by the very successe of thinges dailie putting vs in minde, how farre his secret iudgements doe surmount our vnderstanding. For euen they that seemed most desperate, and accounted vtterly past hope, are by his goodnesse called backe into the wale: and they that semed to stand fast in comparison of other, doe oftentimes fall. Therfore ac-

Hom. in Ioan. 45 cording to the secret predestination of God (as Augustine saieth) there bee manie sheepe without, and many wolues within. For he knoweth them, and hath them marked that knowe neither him nor themselues. But of those that openly beare his badge, his onelie eies do see who be both holy without faining, and who will continue euen to the end, which is the verie chief point of saluation. Yet on the other side, forasmuch as he foresawe it to be some deale expedient, that we should knowe who were to be accounted his children, he hath in this part applied himselfe to our capacitie. And because the certaintie of faith was not necessarie, hee hath put in place thereof a certaine iudgement of charitie: whereby we shoulde acknowledge for members of the Church those that both with confession of faith, and with example of life, and with partaking of sacramentes, doe professe the same God and Christ with vs. But as for the knowledge of the bodie thereof, how much more that he knewe it to be necessarie for our saluation, with so much the more certaine markes he hath set it out.

One waye to knowe what Church is true, & another who bee true members of the Church.
Matt. 18. 20.

9 Loe hereupon groweth & ariseth vnto vs, a face of the Church visible to our eyes. For wheresoeuer we see the word of God to be purely preached and heard, and the sacraments to be ministred according to the institution of Christ, there it is in no wise to be douted that there is som church of God: forasmuch as his promise cannot deceiue, Whersoeuer two or three are gathered together in my name, there I am in the mids of them But that we may euidently vnderstand the summe of this matter, we must proceede by these as it were degrees: that is to say, ỳ the vniuersall Church is a multitude gathered together out of all nations whatsoeuer they be, which being sundered & seuerally scattered by distances of places, yet doth agree in one trueth of godly doctrine, & is bound together with the bond of one selfe religion: And that so vnder this are comprehended all particular Churches, which are in all townes and streets according to the order of mens necessitie, so that euery one of them may rightfully haue the name & authoritie of a Church: And that all particular men which by profession of godlines are reckoned among such Churches, although they be in deede strangers from the Church, yet do after a certaine maner belong vnto it, til by publike iudgment they bee banished out of it. Howbeit there is somewhat a diuers maner in iudging of priuate men and of Churches. For it maie fall in experience, that such men as wee shall thinke not to be altogether worthie of the company of the godly, yet we must vse like brethren & account thē among the faithfull, for the common consent of the Church, whereby they are suffered and borne withall in the bodie of Christ. Wee doe not by our testimonie allow such to be membes of the Church: but we leaue them the place that they haue among the people of God, till it be by orderly right of lawe taken away from them. But of the very multitude we muſt otherwiſe think: which if it hath & honoreth the miniſterie of the word, & the adminiſtration of Sacraments, it deſerueth without dout to be eſteemed and iudged a Church: becauſe it is certaine that thoſe things are not without fruit. So wee do alſo preſerue to the vniuerſall Church her vnitie, which diueliſh ſpirites haue alway trauailed to cut in ſunder: neither doe wee defraude of their authoritie thoſe lawfull aſſemblies which are diſpoſed according to the fitneſſe of places.

that

The face, communion & reuerence of the Church, and howe it is termed the piller of truth.

10 We haue ſet for ſignes to diſcerne the Church by, the preaching of the worde, & the obſeruing of the Sacraments. For thoſe can be no where but they muſt bring foorth fruite, and bee proſpered with the bleſſing of God. I do not ſay, that whereſoeuer the word is preached, there by and by ſpringeth vp fruite: but I ſaye that no where it is receiued and hath a ſtayed ſeate, but that it bringeth foorth the effectualneſſe therof. Where the preaching of the Goſpel is reuerently heard, and the Sacramentes are not neglected, howſoeuer it be, there for that time appeareth a not deceitfull & not doutfull face of the Church, whereof no man may vnpuniſhed either deſpiſe the authoritie, or refuſe the admonitions, or reſiſt ỹ counſels, or mocke at the corrections: much leſſe to departe from it, and to breake in ſunder the vnitie of it. For the Lorde ſo highly eſteemeth the Communion of his Church, that he counteth him for a traiterous runaway and forſaker of Religion, whoſoeuer ſhall ſtubbornely eſtrange himſelfe from any Chriſtian fellowſhip, ſo that it be ſuch a one as hath the true miniſterie of the Worde and Sacramentes. He ſo commendeth the Churches authoritie, that when it is violate, he iudgeth his owne diminiſhed. Neither is it of ſmall importance, that the Church is called the piller and ſtrong ſtay of trueth and the houſe of God. By which wordes Paul ſignifieth, that to the end the trueth of God ſhoulde not decay in the worlde, the Church is a faithfull keeper thereof: becauſe Gods will was to haue the preaching of his word kept pure and to ſhewe himſelfe vnto vs a father of houſholde by her miniſterie and labour, while ſhe feedeth vs with ſpirituall nouriſhmentes, and procureth all things that make for our ſaluation. It is alſo no ſlender praiſe, that it is ſaide that ſhe is choſen and ſeuered by Chriſt to be his ſpouſe, that ſhoulde be without wrinkle and ſpot, the body and fulneſſe of him. Whereupon followeth, that departing from the Church is a denying of God & of Chriſte. Therefore ſo much the more we muſt beware of ſo wicked diſagreement. For while we goe about, ſo much as in vs lieth, to procure the ruine of gods trueth, wee are worthie that he ſhould ſende downe his lightning with the whole violent force of his wrath to deſtroy vs. Neither can there be imagined any fault more hainous, than with wicked breach of faith to defile the marriage that the onely begotten ſonne of God hath vouchſafed to contract with vs.

1. Tim. 3. 15.

Epheſ. 1. 23

Satan laboreth either to aboliſh, or to bring in contempt the markes of the true church, vvherupon a double miſchiefe groweth, that either the true Church is deſpiſed, or the falſe reuerenced.

11 Wherefore let vs diligently keepe theſe markes imprinted in our mindes, and let vs eſteeme them according to the Lordes will. For there is nothing that Satan more endeuoureth thē to take away, & aboliſh the one of theſe, or both: ſometime that when theſe markes are raſed and blotted out out, he may take away the true and naturall distinction of the church: sometime that when they are brought in contempt, he may with open falling away plucke vs from the Church. By his craft it is brought about, that in certaine ages past, the pure preaching of the worde hath vanished away: and nowe he doth with a great importunacie trauaile to ouerthrowe the ministerie, which yet Christ hath so stablished in the Church, that when it is taken away, the edification of the Church perisheth. But nowe, howe daungerous, yea howe deadly a tentation is it when it doth but come in our minde to depart from that congregation wherein are seene the signes and tokens by which the Lord thought his Church sufficiently described? We see howe great heede is to be taken on both sides. For, that we should not be deceiued vnder the title of the Church, euery congregation ỳ pretendeth the name of the Church must be examined by that maner of trial, as by a touchstone, If it haue in the word and Sacraments the order appointed by the Lorde, it will not deceiue vs: let vs boldly yelde vnto it the honour due to Churches. But contrariwise if it boast it selfe without the word and Sacramentes, wee must no lesse with fearefull conscience beware of such deceits, than on the other side we must flee rashnesse and pride.

Where the signes of a true Church are, from that societie wee may not seuer our selues, and cease to haue communion, though in doctrine and administration of Sacraments there be some faults.

12 Where as we say that the pure ministerie of the worde and the pure vsage in celebrating the Sacraments, is a sufficient pledge & earnest, so that we may safely embrace as the Church any fellowship wherein both these shalbe: this extendeth so farre, that it is neuer to be cast off, so long as it shal continue in those, although it swarme full of many other faultes. Yea & ther may some faultinesse creep into it, in the administration either of doctrine, or of the Sacraments, which ought not to estraunge vs from the Communion of it. For all the articles of true doctrine be not of one sort. Some bee so necessarie to be knowen, that they ought to be certain and vndouted to all men, as the proper principles of Religion: of which sort are, That there is one GOD, That Christ is God, and the sonne of God: that our saluation consisteth in the mercy of God: and such like. There bee other that beeing in controuersie betweene Churches, yet doe nor breake the vnitie of faith. For those Churches that disagree about this one point, if without lust of contention, without stubbornesse of affirming, the one thinke that soules when they departe from the bodies doe flee vp into heauen, and the other Church dare determine nothing of the place, but yet certainly holdeth that they liue to the Lorde: the wordes of the Apostle are: Let all vs that bee perfect thinke all one thing: but if ye thinke any thing otherwise, this the Lorde shall also reueale vnto you. Doeth hee not sufficiently shewe that diuersitie of opinions about these matters, that be not so necessarie, ought to bee no ground of disagreement among Christians? It is in deede a principall point, that we agree in all thinges. But for as muche as there is no man that is not wrapped with some little clowd of ignorance, either wee must leaue no Church at al, or we must pardon a being deceiued in such chings as may be vnknowen without violating the summe of religion, and without losse of saluation. But I meane not here to defend any errours be they neuer so litle, so as I woulde thinke that they shoulde bee cherished with flattering & winking at them: but I say that wee ought not

rashly for euery light dissension forsake the Church, in which at least that Doctrine is reteined safe & vncorrupted, wherin standeth the safetie of godlines, and the vse of Sacraments is kept as it was institute by the Lord. In the meane time if we endeuour to amend that which displeaseth vs, we do therin according to our duetie. And hereunto belongeth that saying of Paul: If any thing better be reuealed to him that sitteth, let the first hold his peace. 1.Cor.14.30.
Whereby it is euident, that all the members of the Church are euerie one charged with endeuour to publike edification, according to the measure of his grace, so that it be done comely and according to order: that is, that wee neither do forsake the communion of the Church, nor abiding in it, do trouble the peace and well ordered discipline thereof.

13 But in bearing with the imperfection of life, our gentle tenderneſſe ought to go much further. For herein is a very slipperie easinesse to fall: and herein with no small deuises doth Satan lay wayt for vs. For there haue ben alway some, which filled with false persuasion of perfect holinesse as though they were alreadie made certaine aerie spirits, despised the company of all men, in whome they sawe remaining any thing of the nature of man. Such in olde time were the Cathary, and they that were as mad as they, the Donatistes. Such at this day are some of the Anabaptistes, which would seeme to haue profited aboue the rest. Some there be that offende more by an vndiscreet zeale of righteousnesse, than by that mad pride. For when they see among them to whome the Gospell is preached, the fruite of life not agreeably aunswering to the doctrine thereof, they by and by iudge that there is no Church. It is indeede a most iust displeasure, and such a one wherunto in this most miserable age of the worlde, wee giue too much occasion. Neither may we excuse our accursed slouthfulnesse, which the Lorde will not suffer vnpunished: as euen alreadie he beginneth with grieuous scourges to chastise it. Wo therefore to vs, which with so dissolute licentiousnesse of wicked dooings, make that weake consciences be wounded by reason of vs. But in this againe they offende whome I haue spoken of, because they cannot measure their being displeased. For where ỹ Lord requireth clemencie, they leauing it, do giue themselues wholly to immesurable rigorousnes. For, because they thinke ỹ there is no Church where there is no sound purenesse & vprightnesse of life, for hatred of sinnes they depart from the lawfull Church, while they thinke that they swarue from a company of wicked men. They alleage that the Church of Christ is holy. But that they may also vnderstand that it is mingled of good and euill men, let them heare this parable out of the mouth of Christ, wherein it is compared to a nette, in which fishes of all kindes are gathered togither: and are not chosen out till they be laide abroade vpon the shoare. Let them heare that it is like vnto a corne fielde, which being sowen with good graine, is by the enimies fraude scattered with tares, of which it is not cleansed vntill the croppe be brought into the barne floore. Finally, let them heare that it is like vnto a floore, wherein the wheat is so gathered togither, that it lieth hidden vnder the chaffe, till being cleansed with fanne and syue it be at length laide vp in the grainer. If the Lorde pronounce that the Church shall euen to the day of iudgement bee troubled with this euill, to bee burdened with Imperfection in the liues & corruption in the maners of some mē must not cause vs to leaue the fellowship of the Church.

mingling of euill men: they doe in vaine seeke for a Church sprinkled with no spotte.

The state of the Church of Corinth in the Apostles owne times.

14 For they cry out that it is an intollerable thing, that the pestilence of vices so rangeth abroad. What if the saying of the Apostle doe heare also answere them? Among the Corinthians not onely a fewe had gone out of the way, but the infection had in a maner possessed the whole body: There was not onely one kinde of sinne, but many: neither were they light offences, but certeine horrible outragious doings: it was not onely corruption of manners, but also of doctrine. What in this case saith the holy Apostle, that is to say, the instrument of the holy ghost, by whose testimonie the Church standeth and falleth? Doeth he require a diuision from them? Doeth he banish them out of the kingdome of Christ? Doeth hee strike them with the extremest thunderbolt of curse? He not onely doeth none of all these things: but he both acknowledgeth and reporteth it a Church of Christ and fellowship of saintes. If there remaine a Church among the Corinthians, where contentions, sectes, and enuious partakings do broile: where quarels & brawlings be in vre, with a greedinesse of hauing, where that wicked doing is openly allowed, which were abhominable among the very Gentiles: where Paules name is vniustlie railed at, whome they ought to haue honoured as their father: where some scorne at the resurrection of the deade, with ruine whereof the whole Gospell falleth: where the gracious giftes of God serue to ambition, and not to charitie: where many thinges are vncomlie and vnorderlie done: and if therefore there still remaine a Church, because the ministerie of the worde and of the Sacramentes is there not refused, who dare take away the name of the Church from them that cannot be charged with the tenth part of these faultes? They that with so great preciseneſſe deale so cruelly against the Churches of this present time: what (I pray you) woulde they haue done to the Galathians, which were almoste vtter forsakers of the Gospell, among whome yet the same apostle founde Churches?

Gal.1.

One thing to shun the priuate company of a wicked man, and another for hatred thereof to forsake the fellowship of the Church.

1.Cor.5.2.

15 They obiect also, howe that Paul grieuously rebuketh the Corinthians for suffering in their company a man that was a hainous sinner, and then he setteth a generall sentence wherein he pronounceth, that it is vnlawfull euen to eate bread with a man of reprochfull life. Heere they crie out: If it bee not lawfull to eate common breade, howe may it be lawfull to eate with them the bread of the Lorde? I confesse in deede that it is a great dishonour, if hogges and dogges haue place among the children of God: it is also a much more dishonour if the holy body of Christ bee giuen foorth to them. And truely if they be well ordered Churches, they will not suffer wicked men in their bosome, and will not without choise admitte both worthy and vnworthy togither to that holy banket. But forasmuch as the Pastors doe not alway so diligentlie watche, yea and sometime are more tender in bearing with men than they ought to bee, or are hindered so that they cannot vse that seueritie that they woulde: it commeth to passe that euen they that are openly euill, are not alway thrust out of the company of the holie ones. This I graunt to bee a fault: neither will I diminish it, sith Paule doeth so sharply rebuke it in the Corinthians. But although the Church bee slacke in her duety, it shall not bee therefore immediimmediatly in the power of euery priuate man, to take vpon himselfe the iudgement to seuer him. I doe in deede not deny that it is the doing of a godly man to withdrawe himselfe from al priuate companie of euill men, to entangle himselfe in no willing familiaritie with them. But it is one thing to flee the company of euil men, and an other thing for hatred of them to forsake the communion of the Church. But where as they thinke it sacriledge to be partakers of the Lordes bread with them, they are therin much more rigorous than Paul is. For where he exhorteth vs to a holy and pure partaking, he requireth not that one should examine an other, or euery mā the whole Church, but that they should ech one proue himselfe. If it were vnlawfull to communicate with an vnworthy man, then truely Paul would bid vs to looke circumspectly whether there were any in the multitude, by whose vncleanneſſe we might be defiled. Nowe when he requireth onely of euerie man the proofe of themselues, he sheweth that it nothing hurteth vs if anie vnworthie doe thrust themselues in among vs. And nothing else is meant by this which he sayeth afterward. He that eateth vnworthily, eateth and drinketh iudgement to himselfe. He doth not say, to other, but to himself, And rightfully. For it ought not to stand in the choise of euery particular mā, who be to be receiued, & who to be reiected. The knowledge hereof belongeth to the whole Church, which knowledge can not be had without lawfull order, as hereafter shall be sayde more at large. Therefore it shoulde be vnrighteous, that any priuate man should be defiled with the vnworthineſſe of an other, whom he neither can nor ought to keepe backe from cōming to it.

1. Cor. 11. 29

16 But although by this vndiscret zeale of righteousneſſe this tentation doth sometime also enter into good mē: yet this we shal find that too much preciseneſſe groweth rather of pride, disdainefulneſſe, and false opinion of holineſſe, than of true holineſſe and true zeale thereof. Therefore they that are bolder than other, and as it were standerd bearers to make any departing from the Church, for the most part doe it vpon no other cause, but in despising of all men to boast themselues to be better than other. Therefore Augustine saith well and wisely: When godly order and manner of Ecclesiasticall discipline ought principally to haue regard vnto the vnity of Spirite in the bond of peace: which the Apostle commaunded to be kept by bearing one with an other: and which being not kept, the medicine of reuenge is proued to be not only superfluous, but also pernicious, and therefore now to be no medicine at all: those euill children, which not for hatred of other mens iniquities, but for affectiō of their own contentions, do greedily labour either wholy ro drawe or at leaſt to diuide the weake common people entangled with the boasting of their name, swelling with pryde madde with stubbornneſſe, traiterous with sclaunders, troubleſome with seditions, leaſt they should seeme to want the light of trueth, do pretende a shadow of rigorous seueritie: and those thinges that are in the holy Scriptures commanded to be done with a gentler kind of healing, sauing the sinceritie of loue, & keeping the vnity of peace, to correct ỹ faults of brethren, they abuse it to sacriledge of schisme, and to occasion of cutting off. But to godly and quiet men hee giueth this counsell, that they mercifully correct that that which they can, and that which they can not, patiently beare, & grone and mourne with loue, vntil God either amend and correct them, or at the harueſt roote vp the tares, and fanne out the chaffe. Let the godly trauail to fortifie themſelues with theſe armures, leaſt while they ſeeme to thēſelues ſtrong and couragious reuengers of righteouſneſſe, they departe from the kingdome of heauen, which is the onely kingdome of righteouſneſſe. For ſith it is Gods will to haue the communion of his Church to be kept in this outward fellowſhip: he that for hatred of euil men doth breake the token of that fellowſhip, entreth into a waie wherby is a ſlipperie falling frō the cō-munion of Saints. Let them thinke that in a great multitude there be many truly holy & innocent before the eies of the Lorde, whom they ſee not. Let them thinke that euen of them that be deſeaſed there be many that do not pleaſe or flatter themſelues in their faultes, but being now & then awaked with earneſt feare of GOD do aſpire to a greater vprightneſſe. Let them thinke that iudgement ought not to be giuen of a man by one deede: foraſ-much as the holieſt do ſometime fal away with a moſt gpeeuous fal. Let thē think that to gather a Church there lieth more weight both in the miniſte-rie of the word and in the partaking of the holy myſteries, than that all that force ſhould vaniſh away by the fault of ſome wicked men. Laſt of al let thē conſider, that in iudging the Church, the iudgement of God is of greater value than the iudgement of man.

The Church in ſuch ſort holy that neither it can be at anie time alto-gether pure and faultleſſe, nor be-ing faultie ceaſeth thereby to be a Church.

17 Where alſo they pretende ỳ the Church is not without cauſe called holy, it is meet to weigh with what holines it excelleth: leaſt if we wil admit no Church but ſuch a one as is in al points perfect, we leaue no Church at all: It is true in deede which Paul ſaith, ỳ Chriſt gaue himſelf for the Church to ſāctifie it: that he clenſed it with the lauer of water with the word of life, to make her vnto himſelf a glorious ſpouſe hauing no ſpot, or wrinckle, &c. Yet this is alſo nothing leſſe true, that the Lord daily worketh in ſmothing her wrinkles & wiping away her ſpots. Whereupon followeth that her holi-nes is not yet fully finiſhed. Therefore the Church is ſo holy, that it daylie profiteth & is not yet perfect: daily proceedeth, and is not yet come to the mark of holines: as alſo in an other place ſhalbe more largly declared. Whet as therefore the Prophets prophecie that there ſhal be a holy Hieruſalem, through which ſtraungers ſhall not paſſe: and a holy temple whereinto vn-cleane men ſhall not enter: let vs not ſo take it, as if there were no ſpot in ỳ members of the church: but for that with their whole endeuour they aſpire to holines and ſounde pureneſſe, by the goodneſſe of God cleanneſſe is aſ-ſcribed to them, which they haue not yet fully obtained. And although of-tentimes there be but rare tokens of ſuch ſanctificatiō among men: yet wee muſt determine that there hath ben no time ſince the creatiō of the worlde wherin the Lord hath not had his church, & that there ſhal alſo be no time to the verie ende of the worlde, wherein hee ſhall not haue it. For all be it immediatly from the beginning the whole kind of men is corrupt and defi-led by the ſinne of Adam: yet out of this, as it were a polluted maſſe, God alway ſanctifieth ſome veſſelles vnto honour, that there ſhoulde bee no age without feeling of his mercy. Which he hath teſtified by certaine promiſes, as theſe: I haue ordained a teſtament to my elect. I haue ſworne to Dauid my ſeruaunt, ſeruant, I will for euer continue thy ſeede: I wil builde thy ſeate in generation and generation. Againe, theſe things ſaith the Lord which giueth the Sunne for the light of the day, the Moone & ſtars for the light of the night. If theſe lawes ſhall faile before me, then the ſeede of Iſrael ſhall alſo faile. Pſal. 132. 13. Hier. 31. 35.

18 Hereof Chriſt himſelfe, the Apoſtles, and in manner all the Prophets haue giuen vs example. Horrible are thoſe deſcriptions wherein Eſay, Hieremie, Ioel, Abacuc, and the other doe lament the ſickneſſes of the Church of Hieruſalem. In the common people, in the magiſtrate, in the Prieſtes all thinges were ſo corrupt, that Eſay doubteth not to match Hieruſalem with Sodom and Gomorrha. Religion was partly deſpiſed, partly defiled: in their maners, are commonly reported theftes, extortions, breaches of faith, murthers and like miſcheeues. Yet therefore the Prophets did neither erect to themſelues new Churches, nor builde vp newe altars on which they might haue ſeueral ſacrifices: but of whatſoeuer maner men they were, yet becauſe they conſidered, that God had left his worde with them, and ordayned ceremonies whereby he was there worſhipped, in the middeſt of the aſſembly of the wicked they held vp pure handes vnto him. Truely if they had thought that they did gather any infection thereby, they woulde rather haue died a hundred times than haue ſuffred themſelues to be drawen thereunto. Therefore nothing withheld them from departing, but deſire to the keeping of vnitie. But if the Prophets thought is againſt conſcience, to eſtraunge themſelues from the Church for many and great wicked doings, not of one or two men, but in maner of the whole people: then we take too much vpon vs, if we dare by and by departe from the communion of that Church, where not al mens maners do ſatisfie either our iudgement, yea or the Chriſtian profeſſion. The corruptions of the Church in the prophets times 19 Nowe what manner world was there in the time of Chriſt and the Apoſtles? And yet that deſperate vngodlines of the Phariſees, and the diſſolute licentiouſnes of liuing, which then eche where reigned, coulde not hinder, but that they vſed the ſame ceremonies with the people, and aſſembled with the reſt into one temple to the publike exerciſes of religion. Whereof came that, but becauſe they knewe that the fellowſhippe of euill men did not defile them, which with a pure conſcience did communicate at the ſame ceremonies? If any man be litle mooued with the Prophetes and Apoſtles, let him yet obey ỹ authoritie of Chriſt. Therefore Cyprian wel ſaith though there be ſeene tares or vncleane veſſels in the Church, yet there is no cauſe why we ſhould departe from the Church: we muſt onely labour that we may bee wheate: we muſt vſe diligence and indeuour as much as we may that we may be a golden or ſiluer veſſell. But to breake the earthen veſſels, is the onely worke of the Lorde, to whome alſo is giuen an iron rodde. And let no man chalenge to himſelfe that which is properly belonging to ỹ Sonne onely, to be able alone to fanne the floore, and cleanſe the chaffe, and ſeuer all the tares by mans iudgement. This is a proude obſtinacie, and preſumption full of ſacrilege, which a peruerſe furor taketh to it ſelfe, &c. Therefore let both theſe thinges remaine certainely fixed. Firſt that he The Church of Ieruſalem in the dayes of Chriſt & his Apoſtles. Lib. 3. epi. 5.

hath no excuſe, that of his owne will forſaketh the outward communion of the Church, Where the worde of God is preached and the ſacramentes miniſtred: then that the faults of a fewe or of many are no hinderance, but that we may therin rightly profeſſe our faith by ỹ Ceremonies inſtitute by God: becauſe a godly conſcience is not hurt by ỹ vnworthines of any other either paſtor or priuat man, and the myſteries are to a holy & vpright man neuertheles pure & holſome becauſe they are together handled of vncleane mẽ.

Anabaptiſticall affectation of puritie.

20 Their preciſeneſſe and diſdainfulneſſe proceedeth yet further: becauſe they acknowledge no Church but ſuch a one as is pure from all ſpots be they neuer ſo ſmall: yea they are angrie with good teachers, for that in exhorting the faithfull to go forward, they teach them all their life long to grone vnder the burden of vices, and to flee vnto pardon. For they prate that by this meane men be led from perfection. I graunt in deede, that in earneſt calling vpon perfection we ought not ſlowely or coldly to trauell, much leſſe to be idle, but to fill our mindes with confidence thereof while we be yet in our courſe, I ſay, it is a diueliſh inuention. Therfore in the Creede the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is aptly ioyned next after the Church. For none doe attaine it, but only they that are citizens & of the houſhold of the Church as it is read in the Prophet. Therefore the building of the heauenly Hieruſalem ought to goe before, wherein afterward this mercifulnes of God may haue place, ỹ whatſoeuer come vnto it, their iniquitie may be taken away. I ſay that it ought firſt to be builded, not for that there can be any church without the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, but becauſe the Lorde hath not promiſed his mercie but in the communion of Saints. Therefore the firſt entrie for vs into the Church and kingdome of God, is the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, without which wee haue no couenant or conioyning with God. For thus hee ſayth by the Prophet, In that day I will ſtrike you a couenant with the beaſt of the fielde, with the foule of the aire, and with the vermine of the earth. I will breake the ſworde of warre from out of the earth, and I will make men to ſleepe without feare. I will eſpouſe you vnto me for euer. I wil eſpouſe you (I ſay) in righteouſnes, in iudgement, in mercie, & in compaſſions. We ſee how by his mercie the Lorde reconcileth vs to himſelfe. And ſo in another place, when hee foreſaith ỹ the people ſhall be gathered together againe, whom he had ſcattered abroade in his wrath, hee ſaith, I will clenſe them from all wickedneſſe wherewith they haue ſinned ngainſt me. Wherefore by the ſigne of waſhing we enter into the fellowſhippe of the Church, whereby we may bee taught that there is no entrie open for vs into the houſhold of God, vnleſſe our filthines be firſt wiped away with his goodnes.

By remiſſion of ſinnes men not onely receiued into but alſo kept and continued in the Church of Chriſt.

21 But by the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes the Lord doth not onelie receiue & adopt vs once into the Church, but by the ſame he alſo preſerueth & maintaineth vs ſtill in it. For to what purpoſe were it, to haue ſuch a pardon granted vs, as ſhoulde ſerue for no vſe? But euery one of the godly is a witneſſe to himſelfe that the mercie of God ſhould be vain and mocking, if it ſhoulde be graunted onely but once: becauſe there is none that is not in his owne conſcience priuy throughout his whole life of many weakneſſes, which neede the mercy of God. And truely not in vaine God promiſeth this grace peculiarlie to them of his owne houſholde: and not in vaine he commaundeth deth the ſame meſſage of reconciliation to be daily offered vnto thē. Therefore as throughout all our life wee carrie about vs the remnantes of ſinne, vnleſſe we be ſuſteined with the continuall grace of the Lorde in forgiuing our ſinnes, we ſhall ſcarcely abide one moment in the Church. But the Lord hath called his vnto eternall ſaluation. Therfore they ought to thinke that there is pardon alwaies readie for their ſinnes. Wherefore we ought to hold aſſuredly, that by ỹ liberality of God by meane of Chriſts deſeruing through the Sanctification of the Spirite, Sinnes hath beene and are dayly pardoned to vs which be called and graffed into the body of the Church.

The keyes cõmitted to the Church not for remiſſion of ſinnes to bee vvarranted as vvel vnto faithfull men vvhen they ſinne, as vnto ſinners vvhen they firſt become faithfull.

22 To deale this benefite vnto vs, the keyes were giuen to the Church. For when Chriſt gaue the Apoſtles commaundement, and deliuered them power to forgiue ſinnes, he meant not this onely, that they ſhoulde looſe them from ſins that were from vngodlines conuerted to the faith of Chriſt: but rather that they ſhould continually execute this office among the faithfull. Which thing Paul teacheth, when he writeth that the embaſſage of reconciliation was left with the miniſters of the Church, whereby thy ſhould oftentimes in Chriſtes name exhort the people to reconcile themſelues to God. Therefore in the cõmunion of Saints, by the miniſterie of the Church itſelfe, ſinnes are continually forgiuen vs, when the Prieſtes or Biſhops, to whom that office is committed, doe with the promiſes of the Goſpell confirme godly conſciences in hope of pardon and forgiuenes: and that as well publikely as priuately, according as neceſſitie requireth. For there be verie many, which for their weakeneſſe do neede a ſingular atonement. And Paul reporteth that not onely in common preaching, but alſo in houſes he had teſtified the Faith in Chriſt, and ſeuerally admoniſhed euery one of the doctrine of ſaluation. Therefore we haue here three thinges to be noted. Firſt that with how great holineſſe ſoeuer the children of God doe excell, yet they be alway in this eſtate, ſo long as they dwell in a mortall bodie, that without forgiueneſſe of ſinnes they cannot ſtande before God. Secondly, that this benefite is ſo proper to the Church. that we cannot otherwiſe enioy it, but if we abide in the Communion thereof. Thirdly, that it is diſtributed vnto vs by the miniſters and Paſtors, either by preaching of the Goſpell, or by miniſtring of the Sacramentes: and that in this behalfe principally appeareth the power of the keyes, which the Lorde hath giuen to the fellowſhip of the faithfull. Wherefore let euery one of vs thinke this to bee his duetie, no where elſe to ſeeke forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, than where the Lorde hath ſet it. Of publike reconciliation which belongeth to diſcipline wee ſhal ſpeake in place fit for it.

Act. 20. 20.

The error of Nouatians & Anabaptiſts, vvho, as of baptiſme did make men Angels, denie pardon vnto ſinners that are baptiſed.

23 But foraſmuch as thoſe phrentike ſpirites that I haue ſpoken of, doe goe about to pluck away from the Church this only anchor of ſaluation, cõſciences are the more ſtrongly to be confirmed againſt a ſo peſtilent opiniõ, The Nouatians in old time troubled the Church with this doctrine: but not much vnlike to the Nonatians our age alſo hath many of the Anabaptiſtes which fall to the ſame dotages. For they faine that the people of God are in Baptiſme regenerate into a pure and Angelike life, that is corrupted with no filthineſſe of the fleſh. But if any man offende after baptiſme, they leaue vnto him nothing but the vnappeaſable iudgement of G O D. Briefely they grant no hope of pardon to a ſinner fallen after grace receiued: becauſe they acknowledge no other forgiuenesse of sinnes but that whereby wee bee first regenerate. But although there bee no lie more clearely confuted by the Scripture: yet because these men finde some whome they may deceiue (as also in olde time Nouatus had many followers) let vs shortly shewe howe mad they be to their owne and others destruction. First, whereas by the commaundement of the Lorde, the holy ones doe daily repeat this prayer, forgiue vs our dettes: truely they doe confesse themselues detters. Neither doe they craue it in vaine because the Lord hath alway appointed no other thing to be asked, than that which he himselfe woulde giue. Yea, whereas he hath testified that the whole prayer shall bee heard of his father, yet hee hath also sealed this absolution with a peculiar promise. What wil we more? The Lord requireth of the holy ones al their life long a confession of sinnes, yea and that continuall, and promiseth pardon. What boldnesse is it, either to exempt them from sinne, or if they haue stumbled, vtterly to exclude them from grace? Nowe whom doeth hee will vs to forgiue seuentie times seuen times? not to our brethren? To what ende did hee commaund it, but that we shoulde followe his clemencie: He forgiueth therefore, not once or twise: but as often as being striken downe with the acknowledging of sinnes they sigh vnto him.

24 But (that we may beginne in a manner at the verie swadling cloutes of the Church) the Patriarches were circumcised, being allured into partaking of the couenant, hauing vndoubtedly by their fathers diligence beene taught righteousnes and innocencie, when they conspired to murther their brother: this was a mischeeuous acte, to be abhorred euen of the most desperat theeues. At the last being meekned with the monitions of Iudas, they solde him: this was also an intollerable haynousnesse. Simeon and Leui, with wicked reuenge, and such as was also condemned by their owne fathers iudgement, vsed crueltie against the Sichemites. Ruben with moste vncleane lust defiled his fathers bed. Iudas when hee would giue himselfe to fornication against the lawe of nature, went in to his sonnes wife. And yet so farre are they from being wiped out of the chosen people, that they be rather raised vp to be heades of it. But what did Dauid? when hee was a gouernour of iustice, with how great wickednesse did hee by shedding of innocent bloud open the way to his blinde lust? Hee was alreadie regenerate and among the regenerate garnished with notable praises of the Lord: neuertheless hee committed that haynous offence, which is horrible euen among the Gentiles: and yet he obteyned pardon. And (that wee may not tarie vpon single examples) howe many promises there are in the lawe and the Prophets of Gods mercie towarde the Israelites, so oft it is proued that the Lorde sheweth himselfe appeaseable to the offences of his people. For what doth Moses promise to come to passe, when the people being fallen in to Apostasie shall returne vnto the Lorde? He shall bring thee backe out of captiuitie, and shall haue mercie on thee, and shall gather thee together out of the peoples to whome thou hast beene dispersed. If thou be scattered euen to the borders of the heauen, I will from thence againe gather thee together.

Deut.30.3.

25 But I will not beginne a recitall that should neuer be ended. For the Pro-

Prophetes are full of such promises, which doe yet offer mercie to the people couered with infinite wicked doings. What offéce is there more hainous than rebellion? for it is called a diuorce betweene God and the Church. But this is ouercome by the goodnesse of God. What man is there (sayth he by Ieremie) that if his wife giue foorth her body in common to adulterers, cã abide to returne into fauour with her? but with thy fornications al the waies are polluted, O Iuda, the earth hath beene filled with thy filthie loues. But returne vnto me, and I wil receiue thee. Returne thou turne away, I wil not turne away my face from thee: because I am holy, & am not angry for euer. And truely he can be no otherwise minded, which affirmeth that he willeth not the death of a sinner, but rather ỹ he should be conuerted & liue. Therfore when Salomon did dedicate the temple, he appointed it also to this vse, that the prayers made for obtaining pardon of sinnes should be heard from thence. If (saide he) thy sonnes shall sinne (for there is no man that sinneth not) and thou being angry shalt deliuer them to their enemies, and they shall repent in their heart, and being turned shall entreate thee in their captiuitie, saying, we haue sinned, we haue done wickedly, and shal pray toward the lande which thou hast giuen to their fathers, and toward this holy temple: thou shalt heare their praiers in heauen, and shalt be made merciful to thy people that hath sinned against thee, and to al their wickednesses wherwith they haue offended thee. And not vainly the Lord ordained in the law daily Sacrifices for sinnes. For if the Lord had not foreseene that his people should be troubled with continuall diseases of sins, he would neuer haue appointed these remedies for them.

26 Was this benefite taken away from the faithfull, by the comming of Christ, wherein the fulnes of grace was shewed forth, so that they dare not now pray for pardon of sinnes? that if they offend the Lord they maie not obtaine anie mercie? What shall this be else, but to saie that Christ came to the destruction of them that be his, & not to their saluation, if that mercifulnesse of God in pardoning sinnes which in the old testament was continually ready for the holie ones, be now said to be vtterly taken awaie? But if we beleue the Scriptures which expresly crie out, ỹ in Christ only the grace and kindnes of the Lord fully appeared, that the plentifulnes of mercy was powred out, that the reconciliation of God and men was fulfilled: let vs not doubt that there floweth vnto vs a more boũtiful mercifulnes of the heauẽlie father, than that it is cut off or shortned. And hereof there want not exãples. Peter which had heard that he should be denied before the Angels of God that confessed not the name of Christ before men, denied him thrise in one night, and that not without execration: yet he was not put awaie from pardon. They that liued inordinately among the Thessalonians are so chastised, that yet they be gently called to repentance. Euen Simon the Magician himselfe is not cast in desperation, but he is rather commaunded to hope well, when Peter counselleth him to flee to prayer.

27 Yea most hainous sinnes haue sometime possessed whole Churches, out of which Paul rather gently vnwrapped them, than pronounced them accursed. The falling away of the Galathians was no meane offence. The Corinthians were so much lesse excusable than they, as they abounded in mo mo and thoſe nothing lighter ſinnes: yet neither of them are excluded from the mercie of God. Yea euen they that had ſinned aboue the reſt in vncleaneſſe, fornication & vnchaſtity, are namely called to repentãce. For the couenant of the Lord remaineth and ſhall remaine for euer inuiolable, which he ſolemnly made with Chriſt the true Salomon and his members, in theſe words: If his ſonnes ſhal forſake my law, & ſhall not walke in my iudgements, if they ſhall defile my righteouſneſſes, and not keepe my commandements, I wil viſit their iniquities with a rod, and their ſins with ſtripes: But my mercie I will not take away from him. Finally by the verie order of the Creed we be taught, that there remaineth in the Church of Chriſt cõtinual pardon of ſinnes: for that when the Church is as it were ſtabliſhed, yet forgiuenes of ſinnes is adioyned.

Sinne after baptiſme not onely through ignorance but voluntarily committed, yet pardonable Leui. 4.

28 Some that be ſomwhat wiſer, when they ſee the doctrine of Nouatus to be confuted with ſo great plainneſſe of Scripture, make not euerie ſinne vnpardonable, but wilfull tranſgreſſing of the law, into which a man wittingly and willingly falleth. Nowe they that ſay ſo, do vouchſafe to graunt pardon to no ſinne, but where a man hath erred by ignorance. But whereas the Lorde in the lawe commandeth one ſort of Sacrifices to be offred for cleanſing of the wilfull ſinnes of the faithful, and other to redeeme their ignorances: how great lewdneſſe ſhal it be to greaunt no cleanſing to wilful ſinne? I ſay that there is nothing plainer, than that the only Sacrifice of Chriſt auaileth to forgiue the wilful ſins of the holy ones: foraſmuch as the Lord hath teſtified the ſame by carnall Sacrifices as by ſignes. Againe who can excuſe Dauid by ignorance, whom it is euident to haue bin ſo wel inſtructed in the lawe? Did Dauid not know how great was the fault of adultry and manſlaughter, which daily puniſhed the ſame in other? Did brotherſlaughter ſeeme to the Patriarkes a lawful thing? Had the Corinthians ſo ill profited? they thought that wantonneſſe, vncleannes, whoredome, hatreds, & contentions pleaſed God? Did Peter being ſo diligently admoniſhed not know how great a matter it was to forſweare his maiſter? Therefore let vs not with our owne enuiouſneſſe ſtop vp the way againſt the mercie of God that ſo gently vttereth it ſelfe.

In vvhat ſenſe the fathers doe ſometimes teache that repentance is no more iterable than baptiſme.

29 Truely I am not ignorant that the olde writers expounded thoſe ſins that are daily forgiuen to the faithfull, to be the light offences that creep in by weakeneſſe of the fleſhe: and that they thought that the ſolemne repentance which was then required for hainous miſdeedes might no more bee iterate than Baptiſme. Which ſaying is not ſo to bee taken, as though they would either throwe them down headlong into deſperation that after their firſt repentaunce had fallen againe, or extenuate thoſe other ſinnes as though they were ſmall in the ſight of GOD. For they knewe that the holy ones doe oftentimes ſtagger by infidelitie, that ſuperfluous othes doe ſometimes fall from them, that they nowe and then are chafed vnto anger, yea that they breake out euen into manifeſt railinges, and beſide theſe bee troubled with other euilles which the Lorde not ſlenderly abhorreth: but they ſo called them, to put a difference betweene them and publike crimes that with great offence came to the knowledge of the Church. But whereas they did ſo hardly pardon them that had committed anie thing worthie of Eccleſiaſticall correction, they did not this therefore, becauſe they thought that ſuch ſhoulde hardly haue pardon with the Lorde: but by this ſeueritie they meant to make other afraide that they ſhoulde not raſhly runne into wicked doings, by the deſeruing whereof they might be eſtranged from the Communion of the Church: howbeit truely the worde of the Lorde which herein ought to be the only rule vnto vs, appointeth a greater moderation. For it teacheth that the rigor of diſcipline is ſo far to be extended, that hee that ought cheefly to be prouided for be not ſwallowed vp with heauines: as we haue before declared more at large.

The ii. Chapter.

A compariſon of the falſe Church with the true Church.

OF how great value the miniſterie of the worde and Sacraments ought to be with vs, and how farre the reuerence of it ought to proceede, that it be vnto vs a perpetuall token whereby to diſcerne the Church, it hath bene alreadie declared. That is to ſay, whereſoeuer that miniſterie abideth whole and vncorrupted, there the faults or diſeaſes of maners are no impediment but that it may beare the name of a Church. Then, that the very miniſtery it ſelfe is by ſmall errors not ſo corrupted, but that it may be eſteemed lawful. Moreouer we haue ſhewed that the errours that ought ſo to be pardoned are thoſe whereby the principall doctrine of religion is not hurt, whereby thoſe cheefe pointes of religion that ought to bee agreably holden among the faithfull are not deſtroyed, & in the Sacrament, thoſe that doe not abolish nor impaire the lawfull inſtitution of him that ordained them. But ſo ſoone as lying is broken into the cheefe tower of religion, ſo ſoone as the ſumme of neceſſarie doctrine is peruerted, and the vſe of the Sacramentes falleth: truely the deſtruction of the Church followeth: like as a mans life is at an ende, when his throate is thruſt through or his heart deadly wounded. And this is clearely prooued by the wordes of Paul, when hee teacheth that the foundation of the Church is laide vppon the doctrine of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Chriſt himſelfe being the head corner ſtone. If the foundation of the Church bee the doctrine of the Prophetes and Apoſtles, by which the faithfull are commaunded to repoſe their ſaluation in onely Chriſt: then take away that doctrine, and howe ſhall the building ſtande any longer? Therefore the Church muſt needes fall downe where that ſumme of religion falleth which is onely able to vpholde it. Againe, if the true Church bee the piller and ſtaye of the trueth, it is certaine, that there is no Church, where lying and falſhoode haue vſurped the dominion.

Some faults do corrupt and ſome deſtroy the church.

Eph. 2. 20.

1. Tim. 3. 15.

2 Sith it is in ſuch caſe vnder the Papiſtrie, wee may vnderſtande howe much of the Church is there remaining. In ſteede of the miniſterie of the word, there reigneth a peruerſe gouernement and made of lies mingled together, which partly quencheth & partly choaketh the pure light: Into the place of the Lordes Supper is entred a moſt filthie ſacriledge: the forme of wor-worshipping God is deformed with a manifolde and intolerable heap of superstitions: the doctrine, without which Christianitie cannot stand, is altogether buried and driuen out: the publike assemblies are the scholes of idolatrie and vngodlinesse. Therefore there is no peril least in departing from a damnable partaking of so many mischieues, we be plucked frō the Church of Christ. The communion of the Church was not ordeined to this ende that it should be a bond whereby we should be intangled with idolatrie, vngodlinesse, ignorance of God, and other kindes of euils: but rather whereby we should be fast holden in the feare of God and obedience of trueth. They do in deede gloriously set out their Church vnto vs, that there should seeme to be no other Church in the world: and afterward, as though the victorie were gotten, they decree that all the Schismatikes that dare withdrawe themselues from the obedience of that Church that they paint out: & that all be heretikes that dare once mutter against the doctrine thereof. But by what proues do they confirme that they haue ȳ true Church? They alledge out of the auncient Chronicles, what in olde time was in Italie, in Fraunce, in Spaine. They say that they fetch their beginning from those holy men that with sounde doctrine founded and raised vp Churches, and stablished the same doctrine and edifying of the Church with their bloud. And that so the Church hath been among them so consecrate both with spirituall giftes, and with the bloud of martyrs, and preserued with continual succession of Bishops, that it might not fall away. They rehearse how much Ireneus, Tertullian, Origen, Augustine, and other esteemed this succession. But howe trifling these thinges bee, and howe they bee but verie mockeries, I will make them verie easie to vnderstand that wil be content a litle to weigh them with mee. Truely I woulde also exhort themselues earnestly to take heede hereunto, if I did trust that I might any thing preuaile with them by teaching, But for as much as they, leauing all regarde of trueth, doe bende themselues to this onely purpose, by all the wayes that they can, to defende their owne cause, I will onely speake a fewe things whereby good men and those that loue the trueth, may winde themselues out of their suttle cauillations. First I aske of them, why they doe not alleadge Aphrike, and Ægypt, & all Asia? Euen because in all those countries this holy succession of Bishops hath ceased, by meane whereof they boast that they haue preserued Churches. They come therefore to this point to say, that they therefore haue a true Church, because since it first began to be, it hath not beene destitute of Bishops: for in perpetuall course they haue succeeded one another. But what if I cast Greece in their way? Therefore I aske againe of them, why they say that the Church is lost among the Grecians, among whome that succession of Bishops was neuer interrupted, which in their opinion is the onely keeper and preseruer of the Church. They make the Grecians Schismatikes, but by what right? because in departing from the Apostolike sea, they haue lost their priuiledge. What? Do not they much more deserue to loose it that depart from Christ himselfe? It followeth therefore, that the pretence of succession is but vaine, vnlesse the posteritie do keepe fast and abide in the trueth of Christ, which they haue receiued of their fathers frō hand to hand.

3 Therefore the Romaniſtes at this day do alleage nothing elſe but that which it appeareth that the Iewes in old time alleaged when they were by the Prophets of the Lorde reproued of blindneſſe, vngodlineſſe and idolatry. For they glorioufly boaſted of the temple, Ceremonies & prieſthoods, by which things, by great reaſon as they thinke they meaſured the Church. So in ſteede of the Church, they ſhew certaine outwarde viſors, that oftentimes are farre from the Church, and without which the Church may very well ſtand. Therefore we neede to confute them with no other argument, than that wherewith Hieremie fought againſt the fooliſh preſumptuouſnes of the Iewes: that is, that they ſhould not boaſt in lying wordes, ſaying, The temple of the Lorde, the temple of the Lorde, it is the temple of the Lord. Foraſmuch as the Lord dweth no where acknowledge any thing for his, but where his word is hearde and reuerently obſerued. So when the glory of God did ſit betweene the Cherubins in the Sanctuarie, & he had promiſed them that that ſhould be his ſtedfaſt ſeate: yet when the Prieſts once corrupted the worſhipping of him with peruerſe ſuperſtitions, he remoued elſe where, & left the place without any holineſſe. If the ſame temple which ſeemed to be holily appointed to the perpetuall dwelling of God, might be forſaken of God and become vnholy: there is no cauſe why theſe men ſhoulde faine to vs that God is ſo bound to perſons or places, and ſo faſt tied to outward obſeruations, that he muſt needes abide with them that haue only the title and ſhewe of the Church. And this is it about which Paul contendeth in the Epiſtle to the Romanes, from the 9. chapter to the 12. For this did ſore trouble weake conſciences, that the Iewes when they ſeemed to be the people of God, did not onely refuſe the doctrine of the Goſpel, but alſo perſecute it. Therefore after that he hath ſet out the doctrine, hee remoueth this doubt, & denieth that thoſe Iewes being enemies of the trueth are the Church, howſoeuer they wanted nothing that otherwiſe might be required to the outward forme of the Church. And therefore he denieth it, becauſe they embraced not Chriſt. But ſomewhat more expreſſely in the Epiſtle to the Galathians: wherein comparing Iſmael with Iſaac, he ſayeth that many hold place in the Church, to whom the inheritance belongeth not, becauſe they are not begotten of the free mother. From whence alſo he deſcendeth to the compariſon of two Hieruſalems. Becauſe as the lawe was giuen in the mount Sina, but the Goſpell came out of Hieruſalem. So many being ſeruilely borne & brought vp do without douting boaſt themſelues to be the children of God and of the Church, yea they proudly deſpiſe the naturall children of God, when themſelues be but baſtards. On the other ſide alſo, when we heare that it was once pronounced from heauen: Caſt out the bond woman and her ſonne, let vs, ſtanding vpon this inuiolable decree, boldly deſpiſe their vnſauorie boaſtinges. For if they be proud by reaſon of outward profeſſion, Iſmael was alſo circumciſed: if they contende by antiquitie, hee was the firſt begotten, and yet we ſee that he is put away. If the cauſe be demaunded, Paul aſſigneth it, for that none are accounted children, but they that are begotten of the pure lawfull ſeede of doctrine. According to this reaſon God denieth that he is bounde to wicked prieſtes by this that he couenanted with their Father Leui that he ſhould be his Angel or interpreter:

The Church amongſt the Iewes vainelie meaſured by outwarde things, as the glory of the temple, the pompe of ceremonies, the ſucceſſion of Prieſtes.

yea, he turneth against themselues their false boasting, wherwith they were wont to rise vp against the Prophets, that the dignitie of Priesthood was to be had in singular estimation. This he willingly admitteth, & with the same condition he debateth with them, because he is ready to keepe his couenant, but when they do not mutually performe their parte to him, they deserue to be reiected. Loe what succession auaileth, vnlesse therewithall be also ioyned an imitation and euenly continuing course: euē to this effect, y the successors, so soone as they be proued to haue swarued from their originall, be depriued of all honor. Vnlesse perhaps because Caiphas succeeded many godly Bishops (yea there was euen from Aaron to him a continual vnbroken course of succession) therefore that same mischieuous assembly was worthie the name of the Church. But this were not tolerable euen in earthly dominions, that the tyrannie of Caligula, Nero, Heliogabalus and suche other, should be called a true state of Common weale, for that they succeeded the Brutes, Scipions, & Camilles. But specially in the gouernment of the Church there is nothing more fonde, than leauing the Doctrine to set the succession in the Persons only. But neither did the holie Doctors whom they falsely thrust in vnto vs, meane any thing lesse, than to proue that precisely as it were by right of inheritance Churches be there where Bishops are successiuely placed one after another. But where as it was then out of controuersie, that from the very beginning to that age nothing was changed in Doctrine, they alleadged that which might suffice to make an end of all newe errours, that is, that by those was that doctrine oppugned, which had beene euen from the Apostles constantly and with one agreeing consent retained. There is therefore no cause, why they should any longer goe forward to deceiue by pretending a false colour vnder the name of y church which we doe reuerently esteeme as becommeth vs: but when they come to the definition of it, not onely water (as the common saying is) cleaueth vnto them, but they sticke fast in their owne myre because they put a stinking harlot in place of the holie spouse of Christ. That this putting in of a changeling should not deceiue vs, beside other admonitions, let vs remember this also of Augustine. For speaking of the Church, he saith: It is it that is sometime darkned, & couered with multitude of offences as with a cloud: somtime in calmenesse of time appeareth quiet & free: sometime is hidden and troubled with waues of tribulations and temptations. He bringeth forth examples, that oftentimes the strongest pillers either valiantly suffered banishment for the faith, or were hidden in the whole world.

Like pretenses vsed by Romanists to dazell the eyes of the simple and to vphold the estimation of their Church.

4 In like maner the Romanistes do vexe vs, and make afraide the ignorant with the name of the Church, whereas they be the deadly enemies of Christ. Therefore although they pretend the temple, the priesthood & the other such outward shewes, this vaine glistering wherewith the eies of the simple be daseled ought nothing to moue vs to graunt thar there is a church where the Worde of God doth not appeare. For this is the perpetual marke wherewith God hath marked them y be his. He that is of the trueth (saith he) heareth my voyce. Againe, I am that good shepeheard, and I know my sheepe, & am knowen of them. My sheepe heare my voice, & I know them, & they follow me. And a litle before he had said, that the sheep follow their shepeshepheard, because they knew his voyce: but they follow not a stranger, but runne away from him because they knew not the voyce of strangers. Why are we therefore wilfully mad in iudging the Church, whereas Christ hath marked it with an vndoutful signe, which wheresoeuer it is seene can not deceiue, but ỳ it certainely sheweth the Church to be there: but where it is not, there remaineth nothing ỳ can giue a true signification of the Church, For Paul rehearseth that the church was builded, not vpon the iudgements of mẽ, not vpon priesthodes, but vpon the doctrine of the Apostles & Prophets. But rather Hierusalem is to be seuerally knowen frõ Babylon, and the Church of Christ from the conspiracie of Satan, by ỳ difference wherewith Christ hath made thẽ different one from the other. He that is of God (saith he) heareth the wordes of God. Ye therefore heare not, because ye are not of God. In a sum, forasmuch as the church is the kingdome of Christ, and he reigneth not but by his word, can it be now doutfull to any man, but ỳ those be the wordes of lying, by which Christes kingdome is fained to be without his scepter, that is to say without his holy word?

5 But now wheras they accuse vs of Schisme & heresie, because we both preach a contrarie doctrin to them, and obey not their lawes, and haue our assemblies to praiers, to Baptisme, to the ministratiõ of the Supper, & other holy doings, seuerally from thẽ: it is indeede a very sore accusation, but such as needeth not a long or laborsome defence. They are called heretikes and schismatikes, which making a diuision, do breake in sunder the communion of the Church. And this communion is holdẽ together with true bondes, ỳ is to say, the agreement of true doctrine, and brotherly charity. Wherupon Augustine putteth this difference betweene heretikes & schismatikes, that heretiks indeede do with false doctrines corrupt the purenes of faith, but the schismatikes sometime euen where ther is like faith, do break ỳ bond of fellowshippe. But this is also to be noted, that this conioyning of charitye so hangeth vpon the vnitie of Faith, that faith ought to be the beginning therof, the end, & finally the only rule. Let vs therfore remẽber that so oft as the vnitie of the church is commended vnto vs, this is required, that while our minds agree in Christ, our wils also may be ioined together with mutual wel willing in Christ. Therfore Paul, when he exhorteth vs to that wel willing, taketh for his foundation that there is one God, one Faith, & one baptisme. Yea whereſoeuer he teacheth vs to be of one minde, and of one will, hee by & by addeth in Christ, or according to Christ: meaning that it is a factious companie of the wicked, & not agreement of the faithfull which is without the worde of the Lorde.

The vndeuidable vnitie of the Church: the grõd and bond vvherof is truth.

6 Cyprian also following Paul deriueth the whole fountaine of the agrement of the Church, from the only bishoprik of Christ. He afterward addeth the Church is but one, which spredeth abroad more largely into a multitude with encrease of frutefulnesse: like as there be many sunne beames, but one light: and many braunches of a tree, but one body grounded vpon a fast roote: And when manie streames do flow from one fountaine, although the number seeme to be scattered abroad by largenes of ouerflowing plentie, yet the vnity abideth in the originall. Take away a beame of the sunne from the body, the vnitie can suffer no diuision. Breake a braunch from the tree, the the broken branch can not ſpring. Cut of the ſtreame from the ſpring head being cut of it drieth vp. So alſo the church being ouerſpred with the light of the Lord, is extended ouer the whole world: yet there is but one light that is ſpred euery where. Nothing could be ſaid more fitly to expreſſe that vndiuidable knitting together, which al the members of Chriſt haue one with another. We ſe how he continually calleth vs backe to the verie head. Wherupon he pronounceth that hereſies & ſchiſmes do ariſe hereof, that men do not returne to the original of trueth, nor do ſeke ẏ hed, nor kepe the doctrin of the heauenly maſter. Now let them go & cry ẏ wee be heretiks that haue departed from their church: ſith there hath b. n no cauſe of our eſtranging from thē but this one, that they can in no wiſe abide the pure profeſſing of the truth: but I tell not how they haue driuen vs out with curſings & cruell execrations. Which very ſelfe doing doth abundantly enough acquite vs, vnleſſe they will alſo condemne the Apoſtles for Schiſmatikes, with whome we haue al one cauſe. Chriſt (I ſay) did foreſay to his Apoſtles, that the time ſhould come when they ſhould be caſt out of the Synagogues for his names ſake. And thoſe Synagogues of which he ſpeaketh, were then accounted lawful Churches. Sith therefore it is euident that we be caſt out, & wee bee ready to ſhew that the ſame is done for the names ſake of Chriſt, truely the cauſe ought firſt to be inquired of, before that any thing be determined vpō vs, either one way or other. Howbeit, if they wil, I am content to diſcharg them of this point. For it is enough for me, that it behoued that we ſhoulde depart from them, that we might come to Chriſt.

The Church, and the defection of the Church of Iſrael.

7 But it ſhall appeare yet more certainly in what eſtimation we ought to haue al the churches whom the tyranny of that Romiſh idol hath poſſeſſed, if it be compared with the olde church of the Iſraelites, as it is deſcribed in the Prophetes. There was then a true Church among the Iewes and Iſraelites, when they continued in the lawes of the couenant, for they obtained thoſe thinges by the benefit of God, wherupon the church conſiſteth. They had the truth of doctrine in the lawe: the miniſterie thereof was among the Prieſtes and the Prophetes: with the ſigne of circumciſion they entred into religion: by other Sacramentes they were exerciſed to the confirmation of Faith. It is no doubt that thoſe titles wherewith the Lord hath honored his Church, fitly pertained to their fellowſhip. After that, forſaking the lawe of the Lord, they went out of kind to idolatrie & ſuperſtition, they partly loſte that prerogatiue. For who dare take away the name of the church frō thē, with whom God hath left the preaching of his word and obſeruation of his myſteries? Againe, who dare cal that the Church without any exception, where the word of the Lord is openly and freely troden vnder foote? where the miniſtery thereof, the chiefe ſinewe, yea the very ſoule of the Church is deſtroyed?

What was remaining of the church in Iuda & Iſrael when they were fallen to Idolatrie.

8 What then? wil ſome mā ſay: was there therfore no parcel of a Church remaining amōg the Iewes after that they fel away to idolatrie? The anſwer is eaſie. Frſt I ſay that in the very falling away there were certaine degrees. For wee will not ſay that there was all one fall of Iuda, and Iſrael, at ſuche time as they both firſt ſwarued from the pure worſhipping of God. When Ieroboam firſt made calues, againſt the open prohibition of GOD, and did dedicate dedicate an vnlawfull place for worshipping, he did vtterly corrupt religiō. The Iewes did first defile themselues with wicked and superstitious maners before that they wrongfully changed the order in the outward forme of religion. For although vnder Rechabeam they had alreadie gotten them many peruerse Ceremonies: yet because there tarried at Hierusalem both the Doctrine of the Law, and the Priesthood, & the ceremonious vsages in such sort as God had ordained them, the godly had there a tollerable state of Church. Among the Israelites vnto ỹ raigne of Achab, there was no amendment of things, and from thence forth they fell from worse to worse. They that succeeded afterward, to the verie destruction of the kingdome, partly were like vnto him, & partly (when they minded to be somewhat better than he) they followed the example of Iarobeam: but they al euery one were wicked and idolaters. In Iewry there were now & then diuerse chaunges, while some kings peruerted the worshipping of God with false & forged superstitions, some other restored religion that was decayed: vntill the verie priests themselues defiled the Temple of God with prophane and abhominable vsages.

The Church of Rome more corrupt than the Church of Israell vnder Jeroboam.

9 Nowe let the Papistes if they can how much soeuer they extenuate their owne faults, deny that among them the state of religion is as corrupt and defiled as it was in the kingdom of Israel vnder Iarobeam. But they haue a grosser idolatrie: and in doctrine they are not one drop purer: vnlesse peraduenture euen in it also they be more vnpure. God, yea all men that are endued but with a meane iudgement, shal be witnesses with me, & the thing it selfe also declareth, how herein I tell nothing more than trueth. Nowe when they will driue vs to the communion of the Church, they require two things of vs: first, that wee shoulde communicate with all their prayers, sacraments, and Ceremonies: then that whatsoeuer honor, power and iurisdiction Christe giueth to his Church, wee shoulde giue the same to their Church. As to the first point, I graunt that all the Prophets that were at Hierusalem, when thinges were there verie much corrupted, did neither seuerally sacrifice, nor had assēblies to pray seuerall from other men. For they had a commaundement of God, whereby they were commaunded to come together into Salomons temple: they knewe that the Leuiticall priestes, howe soeuer they were vnworthy of that honour, yet because they were ordeined by the Lord ministers of the holy ceremonies, and were not as then deposed, did yet still rightfully possesse that place. But (which is the cheef point of this question) they were compelled to no superstitious worshipping, yea they tooke in hand to do nothing but that which was ordeined by God. But among these men, I meane the Papists, what like thing is there? For wee can scarcely haue any meeting together with them, wherein we shall not defile our selues with open idolatrie. Truely the principall bonde of their communion is in the Masse, which we abhorre as the greatest sacriledge. And whether we do this rightfully or wrongfully, shall be seene in another place. At this present it is enough to shewe that in this behalfe wee are in other case than ỹ Prophets were, which although they were present at the ceremonies of the wicked, were not compelled to beholde or vse any ceremonies but such as were institute by God. And, if they will needes haue an example altogither gether like, let vs take it our of the kingdome of Israel. After the ordinance of Ieroboam Circumcision remained, the sacrifices were offered, the Lawe

1. Kin. 12. 31. was accounted holy, the same God was called vpon whome they had receiued of their fathers: but for the forged and forbidden formes of worshipping, God dissallowed and condemned all that was there done. Shewe mee one Prophet, or any one godly man that once worshipped or sacrificed in Bethell. For they knewe they coulde not doe it, but that they shoulde defile themselues with some sacriledge. Wee haue then thus much, that the communion of the Church ought not so farre to be of force with the godly, that if it should degenerate to prophane and filthie vsages, they shoulde foorthwith of necessitie follow it.

A Church degenerated and made prophane is no such Church as wee ought of necessity to haue communion with and fellowship.

10 But about the other point we contend yet more earnestly. For if the Church be so considered to be such, whose iudgement we ought to reuerence, whose authoritie to regard, whose monitions to obey, with whose chastisements to be moued, whose communion in all things wee ought religiously to obserue: then we cannot graunt them a Church, but that wee must of necessitie be bound to subiection & obedience vnto it. Yet we wil willingly graunt them that which the Prophets graunted to the Iewes & Israelites of their time: when things were there in as good, yea or in better state. But we see how eche where they cry out, ỹ their assemblies are vnholy, to which it is no more lawfull to consent than it is to deny God. And truely if those were Churches, it followeth therefore that in Israel Helias, Micheas and such other: In Iurie, Esay, Ieremy, Osee and other of that sort, whome the Prophets, priestes and people of that time hated & detested worse than any
1. Tim. 3. 15. vncircumcised men, were straungers from the Church of God. If those were Churches, then the Church was not the piller of trueth, but the stay of lying: not the tabernacle of the liuing God, but the receptacle of idols. Therfore it was needefull for them to depart from the consent of those assemblies, which was nothing else but a wicked conspiracie against God. In like manner if anie man acknowledge the assemblies at these dayes beeing defiled with idolatrie, superstition and wicked doctrine, to bee such in whose full communion a Christian man ought to continue euen to the consent of doctrine, he shall greatly erre. For if they bee Churches, then they haue the power of the keyes. But the keyes are vnseperably knit with the worde, which is from thence quite driuen away. Againe, if they be Churches, then the promise of Christe is of force among them, whatsoeuer yee binde, &c.
Mat. 16. 19. and 18. 18. Iohn. 20. 23. But they contrariwise doe banish from their communion all such as doe professe themselues not fainedly the seruants of Christe. Therefore either the promise of Christ is vaine, or at least in this respect they are not Churches. Finally in steede of the ministery of the worde they haue schooles of vngodlinesse, and a sinke of all kindes of errours. Therefore either in this respect they are not Churches, or three shal remaine no token whereby the lawfull assemblies of the faithfull may bee seuerally knowen from the meetings of Turkes.

The steps of a Church remaining as of old in the corrupt state of Israel, so at this day amongest the Romanistes.

11 But as in the olde time there yet remained among the Iewes certain peculiar prerogatiues of the Churche, so at this day also wee take not from the Papistes such steppes as is pleased the Lorde to haue remaining among them them after the disputation of the Church. The Lorde had once made his couenant with the Iewes. That same rather being vpholden by the stedfastnesse of itself did continue with striuing against their vngodlinesse, thā was preserued by them. Therefore (such was the assuredneſse and constancie of Gods goodnes) there remained the couenant of the Lord, neither could his faithfulnes be blotted out by their vnfaithfulneſſe: neither could Circumcision be so prophaned with their vncleane hands, but that it stil was ỹ signe and sacrament of that couenant. Whereupon the children that were borne of them, the Lord called his own, which vnles it were by speciall blessing, belonged nothing to him. So when he hath left his couenant in France, Italie: Germanie, Spaine, Englande: since those prouinces haue beene oppressed with the tyranny of Antichrist, yet that his couenant might remayne inuiolable, first he there preserued Baptisme, the testimonie of his couenaunt, which being consecrat by his own mouth retaineth her own force notwithstanding the vngodlines of mā: then, with his prouidence he hath wrought that there should remaine other remnantes, least the Church should be vterly destroyed. And as oftentimes buildinges are so pulled downe, that the foundations & ruines remaine: so he hath not suffered his church either to be ouerthrowē by Antichrist from the very foundation, or to be laid euen with the ground (howsoeuer to punish the vnthankfulnes of men that had despised his worde, he suffereth horrible shaking and dissipation to chance) but euen after the verye wasting hee willed that the building halfe pulled downe should yet remaine.

12 Whereas therfore we will not simply graunt to the Papists the title of the Church, we do not therfore deny that there be churches among thē: but only wee contend of the true & lawfull ordering of the Church: which is required in the communion both of the sacraments which are the signes of profession, but also specially of doctrine. Daniel and Paul foretolde that Antichrist should sitte in the temple of God. With vs wee account the Byshoppe of Rome the captaine and standarde bearer of that wicked and abhominable kingdome. Whereas his seate is placed in the temple of GOD, thereby is meant that his kingdome shalbe such as can not abolish the name of Christ nor of his church. Hereby therefore appeareth, thar wee doe not deny but that euē vnder his tyranny remain churches, but such as he hath prophaned with vngodlineſſe full of sacrilege, such as he hath afflicted with outragious dominion, such as he hath corrupted & in manner killed with euill and damnable doctrines, as with poisoned drinkes: such wherin Christ lieth halfe buried, the Gospel ouerwhelmed, godlineſſe banished, the worshipping of God in a manner abolished: such finally wherein all thinges are so troubled, that therein rather appeareth the face of Babylon than of the holie citie of God. In a summe, I say that they be Churches, in respecte that the Lord there maruelously preserueth the remnauntes of his people howsoeuer they were dispearsed and scattered abroade, in respecte that there remaine some tokens of the Church, specially these tokens, the effectualneſſe whereof neither the craft of the deuill, nor the maliciousneſſe of man can destroy. But on the other side because these markes are blotted out, which in this discourse we ought principally to haue respect vnto, I say that euerie euerie one of their assemblies & the whole body wanteth the lawful forme of a Church.

The Church of Rome not simplie a Church nor vterly no Church, but a Church prophaned and vnlawfully ordered.

Dan.9.27. 2.Thes.2.4.

The iii. Chapter.

Of the teachers and ministers of the church, and of their election and office.

The reasons vvhy God vvould haue his church to bee gouerned by men.

NOwe it is meete that we speake of the order, by which it was the Lords will to haue this Church gouerned. For although in his Church hee onely must rule and reigne, yea and beare preeminence or excell in it, and this gouernment to be vsed or executed by his onely word: yet because he dwelleth not among vs in visible presence, so that he can presently with his owne mouth declare his will vnto vs, we haue saide that in this he vseth the ministerie of men, and as it were the trauaile of deputies, not in transferring his right and honour vnto them, but onely that by their mouth hee might doe his owne worke, like as a workeman to doe his worke vseth his instrument. I am compelled to repeate againe those thinges that I haue alredie declared. He might in deede doe it either by himselfe without anie other helpe or instrument, or also by meane of Angelles: but there are many causes why he had rather doe it by men. For by this meane first he declareth his good will towarde vs, when he taketh out of men them that shal doe his message in the worlde, that shalbe the interpreters of his secret wil, finally that shall represent his owne person. And so by experience hee proueth that it is not vaine that commonly hee calleth vs his temples, when out of the mouthes of men: as out of his sanctuarie, hee giueth aunsweres to men. Secondly, this is the best and most profitable exercise to humilitie, when he accustometh vs to obey his worde, howesoeuer it he preached by men like vnto vs, yea sometime our inferiours in dignitie. If hee himselfe speake frō heauen, it were no marueile if his holy Oracles were without delay reuerently receiued with the eares and mindes of all men. For who would not dreede his power being in presence? who would not be throwen downe at the first sight of so great maiestie? who woulde not be confounded with that infinite brightnesse? But when some sillie man risen out of the dust speaketh in the name of GOD, here with very good testimonie we declare our godlinesse and reuerent obedience towarde God himselfe, if to his minister we yeelde our selues willing to learne, which yet in nothing excelleth vs. Therefore for this cause also hee hath hidden the treasure of his heauenly wisedome in brickle and earthen vessels, that he might haue the certainer proofe howe much he is esteemed of vs. Moreouer there was no thing fitter for the cherishing of mutuall charitie, than that men should bee bounde together one to an other with this bond, when one is made a pastor to teach the rest, and they ỹ are commanded to be schoolers receiue all one doctrine at one mouth. For if euerie man were able enough to serue himselfe, and needeth not the helpe of an other: such is the pride of mans nature, that euerie one would despise other, and shoulde againe be despised of them. Therefore the Lorde hath bounde his Churche with that knotte, which he foresaw to be the strongest knotte to holde vnitie together, when he hath left with men the doctrine of saluation, and of eternall life, that by their their handes he might communicate it to the reſt. Hereunto Paul had reſpect when he wrote to the Epheſians, One body one ſpirit, as alſo ye be called in one hope of your calling. One Lorde, one faith, one Baptiſme: One God, and the father of all, which is aboue all, and by all, and in vs all. But vnto euery one of vs grace is giuen according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. Wherefore he ſaith: When hee was gone vp on high, he ledde captiuitie captiue, he gaue giftes to men. Hee that went downe is the ſelfe ſame he, that went vp, that he might fulfill all thinges. And the ſame hath giuen ſome to be Apoſtles, and ſome Prophetes, and ſome Euangeliſtes, & other ſome Paſtors and teachers, vnto the reſtoring of the holy ones, to the worke of miniſtration, to the edifying of the body of Chriſt, vntill we come all into the vnitie of faith, and of the knowledge of the ſonne of GOD, into a perfect man, into the meaſure of full growne age: that wee be no more children that may bee carried about with euery winde of doctrine: but following trueth in charitie, let vs in all thinges growe into him that is the heade, euen Chriſt, in whome the whole bodie conioyned and compacted together by all the ioynt of ſubminiſtration, according to the working in meaſure of euerie parte, maketh encreaſe of the body, vnto the edifying of it ſelfe by charitie. Epheſ. 4. 4.

2 By theſe words he ſheweth, that that miniſterie of men, which God vſeth in gouerning his Church is the cheef ſinew, wherby the faithful cleaue together in one body: and alſo he ſheweth that the Church can not otherwiſe be preſerued ſafe, but if it be vpholdé by theſe ſtaies, in which it pleaſed the Lorde to repoſe the ſaluation of it. Chriſt (ſaith he) is gone vp on high, that he might fulfill all thinges. This is the manner of fulfilling, that by his miniſters, to whome he hath committed that office, & hath giuen the grace to execute that worke, he diſpoſeth and diſtributeth his giftes to the church, yea and after a certaine manner giueth himſelf preſent, with extending the power of his ſpirite in this inſtitution, that it ſhould not be vaine or idle. So is the reſtoring of the holy ones performed: ſo is the body of Chriſte edified ſo doe we by all thinges growe into him that is the head, and do grow together among our ſelues: ſo are we all brought into the vnitie of Chriſte, if prophecie flouriſh among vs, if we receiue the Apoſtles, if we refuſe not the doctrine miniſtred vnto vs. Therefore he goeth about the diſſipation, or rather the ruine and deſtruction of the Church, whoſoeuer he be that either endeuoureth to aboliſh this order of whom we ſpeak, & this kind of gouernment, or miniſheth the eſtimation of it as a thing not ſo neceſſary. For neither the light & heate of the ſun, nor meat and drinke are ſo neceſſary to nouriſh & ſuſteine this preſent life, as the office of Apoſtles and paſtors is neceſſary to preſerue the Church in earth. They ouerthrowe the Church that impaire the auetritie of mans miniſterie in the Church. Epheſ. 4. 10. Epheſ. 4. 12.

3 Therfore I haue aboue admoniſhed, that God hath oftentimes with ſuch titles as he could, commended the dignitie thereof vnto vs, that wee ſhould haue it in moſt hygh honor and price, as the moſt excellent thing of all. He teſtifieth that hee giueth to men a ſingular benefite, in raiſing them vp teachers, where hee commaundeth the Prophet to crie out that faire are the feete, and bleſſed is the comming of them that bring tidinges of peace: and when hee calleth the Apoſtles the light of the worlde, and ſalte of the earth. The honor and neceſſity of church miniſterie. Eſay. 52. 7 Mat. 5. 13. & 14.

Luk.10.16. earth. Neither could this office be more honourably aduaunced, than it was when he sayde: He that heareth you, heareth me. He that despiseth you, despiseth me. But there is no place more plain, than in Paul in his seconde Epistle to the Corinthians, where he as it were of purpose entreateth of this matter. He affirmeth therfore, that there is nothing in the church more excellent or glorious than the ministerie of the Gospell, forasmuch as it is the administration of the spirite, and of righteousnesse, & of eternall life. These and like sayings serue to this purpose, that that order of gouerning and preseruing the Church by ministers, which the Lord hath stablished for euer, should not growe out of estimation among vs, and so at length by very contempt grow out of vse. And how great is the necessity thereof, hee hath declared not onely by wordes, but also by examples. When his wil was to shine more fully to Cornelius with the light of his trueth, hee sent an Angell from heauen to send Peter vnto him. When his will was to call Paul to the knowledge of himselfe, and to engraffe him into the Church, he spake not to him with his own voice, but sent him to a man, of whom he should receiue both the doctrine of saluation, and the sanctification of baptisme. If it bee not done without cause, that an angell, which is the interpreter of God, do himselfe abstaine from declaring the will of God, but commaundeth that a man be sent for, to declare it: and not without cause that Christ the onely schoolmaister of the faithfull committeth Paul to the scholing of a man, yea euen that same Paul whome he had determined to take vp into the third heauen, and to vouchsafe to graunt him miraculous reuelation of thinges vnspeakable: who is there nowe that dare despise that ministerie, or passe it ouer as a thing superfluous, the vse whereof it hath pleased God to make approoued by such examples?

Apostles, Prophets, Euangelists, appointed to haue extraordinarie, pastors and teachers to haue ordinarie gouernment of the Church. Ephe.4.12. Mark.16.15. Rom.15.19. & 20.

4 They that haue rule of the gouernment of the Church according to the institution of Christ, are named of Paul first Apostles, then Prophetes, thirdly Euangelistes, fourthly Pastors, last of all teachers. Of which, the two last alone haue ordinarie office in the Church: the other three the Lorde raised vp at the beginning of his kingdome, and sometime yet also raiseth vp, as the necessitie of times requireth. What is the Apostles office, appeareth by that commandement: goe, preache the Gospell to euerie creature. There are not certaine boundes appointed vnto them: but the whole world is assigned them, to be brought into the obedience of Christe: that in spreading the Gospell among all nations whersoeuer they shall bee able, they may eche where raise vp his kingdome. Therefore Paul, when hee went about to prooue his Apostleshippe, rehearseth that he hath gotten to Christ not some one citie, but hath farre and wide spread abroade the Gospell: and that he hath not layde his handes to an other mans foundation, but planted Churches where the name of the Lorde hadde neuer beene heard of. Therfore the Apostles were sent to bring backe the world from falling away, vnto true obedience of GOD, and eche where to stablish his kingdome by preaching of the Gospell: or (if you like that better) as the first builders of the Church, to lay the foundations thereof in all the worlde. Prophets he calleth, not all expositors of Gods will, whatsoeuer they bee, but those that by singular reuelation excelled, such as at this time either bee none, or are or are leſſe notable. By Euangeliſtes I vnderſtand thoſe, which when in dignitie they were leſſe than the Apoſtles, yet in office were next vnto them, yea and occupied their roomes. Such were Luke, Timothie, Titus, and other like: and peraduenture alſo the ſeuentie Diſciples, whome Chriſt appointed in the ſecond place after the Apoſtles. According to this expoſition (which ſeemeth to me agreable both with the words and meaning of Paul) thoſe three offices were not ordained in the Church to this ende that they ſhould be perpetuall, but onely to ſerue for that time wherin Churches were to be erected, where were none before, or at leaſt to bee remooued from Moſes to Chriſt. Albeit I denie not, but that afterwarde alſo the Lord hath ſometime raiſed vp Apoſtles, or at leaſt in their places Euangeliſts, as it hath beene done in our time. For it was needefull to haue ſuch, to bring backe the Church from the falling away of Antichriſt. Yet the office it ſelfe I do nevertheleſſe cal extraordinarie, becauſe it hath no place in the Churches alreadie well ſet in order. Next after theſe are Paſtors and Teachers, whome the Church may neuer lacke: betweene whome I thinke that there is this difference, that the teachers are not appointed to beare rule of diſcipline, nor for the miniſtration of Sacraments, nor admoniſhmentes or exhortations, but only to expound the Scripture, that pure and ſounde doctrine may bee kept among the faithfull. But the office of Paſtor conteinerh al theſe things within it

Luke.10.1.

5 Nowe we haue, which were thoſe miniſteries in the Church that continued but for a time, and which were thoſe that were ordeined to endure perpetually. If we ioyne the Euangeliſtes with the Apoſtles, wee ſhall haue remaining two couples after a certeine manner aunſwering the one to the other. For as our teachers are like to the olde Prophets, in ſuch ſorte are our Paſtors like to the Apoſtles. The office of Prophets was more excellent, by reaſon of the ſingular gift that they had of reuelation: but the office of teachers hath in a manner like order, and altogether the ſame end. So thoſe twelue whom the Lord did chooſe, that they ſhoulde publiſh abroade to the world the new preaching of the Goſpel, in degree and dignitie went before the reſt. For although by the meaning and propertie of the word, all the miniſters of the Church may be rightly called Apoſtles, becauſe they are ſent of the Lord, and are his meſſengers: yet becauſe it was much behoueful, that there ſhould be a certaine knowledge had of the ſending of them ỳ ſhoulde bring a thing newe and vnheard of, it was neceſſarie that thoſe twelue (to whoſe number Paul was afterwarde added) ſhoulde be garniſhed with ſome peculiar title aboue the reſt. Paul himſelfe in deede in one place giueth this name to Andronicus and Iunias, whom he ſaith to haue beene notable among the Apoſtles: but when hee meaneth to ſpeake properly hee referreth it to none other but to that principal degree. And this is the common vſe of the Scripture. Yet the Paſtors (ſauing that eche of them doe gouerne ſeuerall Churches appointed to them) haue all one charge with the Apoſtles. Now what manner of thing this is, let vs yet heare it more plainly.

6 The Lorde when hee ſent the Apoſtles, gaue them commaundement (as we ſaide euen nowe) to preache the Goſpel, and to baptiſe them that beleeue vnto forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Hee had before commaunded, that they and vvhich Pastors ought to performe to their seueral flockes, consisteth in preaching the vvorde and ministring of the sacraments.

1.Cor.4.1 should distribute the holy signes of his bodie and bloud, as he had done. Loe here is a holy, inuiolable and perpetuall law laide vppon them that succede in the Apostles place, whereby they receiue commandement to preach the Gospel, & minister the Sacraments. Wherupon we gather, that they which neglect both these things, doe falsely say that they beare the person of the Apostles. But what of the Pastors? Paul speaketh not of himselfe only, but of them all, when hee saith: let a man so esteeme vs as the ministers of Christ, and distributers of the mysteries of God. Againe in another place, a

Tit.1.9 Bishop must be a fast holder of that faithfull worde which is according to doctrine: that he may be able to exhort by sound doctrine, and to conuince the gainsayers. Out of those and like places, which are eche where to bee found, we may gather, that also in the office of the Apostles these bee the two principall partes, to preach the Gospel, and to minister the Sacraments. As for the order of teaching, it consisteth not only in publike Sermons, but belongeth also to priuate admonitions. So Paul calleth the Ephesians to

Act.20.20 witnes that he hath not fled from doing of any of those things that were for their profit, but that he preached and taught them both openly & in euerie house, testifying both to the Iewes and Grecians, repentance and faith in

Act.20.31 Christ. Againe a little after: that hee hath not ceased with teares to admonish euery one of them. Neither yet belongeth it to my purpose at this present to expresse all the qualities of a good Pastor, but only to point out what they professe that call themselues Pastors: that is, that they are so made rulers of the Church, not that they should haue an idle dignitie, but that they should with the doctrine of Christ instruct the people to true godlinesse, minister the holy mysteries, and preserue and exercise vpright discipline. For Eze.13.17 whosoeuer be set to be watchmen in the Church, the Lorde declareth vnto them, that if any by their negligence perish through ignorance, hee will require the bloud at their hands. That also pertaineth to them al, which Paul

1.Cor.9.16. saith of himselfe: woe to mee vnlesse I preach the Gospel, forasmuch as the distributing thereof is committed to me. Finally, what the Apostles performed to the whole worlde, the same ought euery Pastor to performe to his flocke, to which he is appointed.

How farre foorth men are tyed vnto seuerall charges.

7 Albeit when we assigne to euery one their seuerall Churches, yet in the meane while we do not denie but that he which is bound to one Church may helpe other Churches, if any troublesome thing doe happen that requireth his presence, or if he be asked counsel of any darke matter. But forasmuch as for the keeping of the peace of the Church, this policie is necessarie, that there be set foorth to euery man what hee shoulde doe, least all be confusedly disordered, runne about without calling, or rashly runne altogether into one place, and least such as are more carefull for their own commoditie than for the edification of the Church, shoulde at their owne will leaue their Churches vacant: this ordering ought commonly to bee kept so neere as may bee, that euery man contented with his owne bounds should not breake into another mans charge. And this is no inuention of man,

Act.14.22 but the ordinance of GOD himselfe. For wee reade that Paul and Barnabas created Priestes in al the seuerall Churches of Listra, Antioche, Iconium: and in euery towne. So in one place he speaketh of the Bishoppes of Philippes, and in another place of Archippus Bishop of the Colossians. And there remaineth a notable Sermon of his in Luke, to the Priestes of the Church of Ephesus. Whosoeuer therefore shall take vpon him the gouernement and charge of the Church, let him knowe that hee is bounde to this law of Gods calling: not that as bounde to the foyle (as the Lawyers tearme it) that is, made bounde and fastened vnto it, he may not once mooue his foote from thence, if the common profite do so require, so that it be done well and orderly: but he that is called into one place ought not himselfe to thinke of remooving, nor seeke to be deliuered as hee shall thinke to be good for his commoditie. Then, if it be expedient that any bee remooued to an other place, yet he ought not to attempt it of his owne priuate aduise, but to tarie for publike authoritie.

Phil. 1.1. Col. 4.17. Act. 20.28

8 But whereas I haue without difference called them Bishoppes, and Priests, and Pastors, and ministers, that rule Churches: I did that according to the vsage of the Scripture, which indifferently vseth these wordes. For whosoeuer doe execute the ministerie of the worde, to them he giueth the title of Bishops. So in Paul, where Titus is commanded to appoint Priestes in euerie towne, it is immediatly added. For a Bishop must be vnreproueable, &c. So in an other place he saluteth many Bishops in one church. And in the Acts it is rehearsed, that he called together the Priests of Ephesus, whom he himselfe in his owne sermon calleth Bishops. Here now it is to be noted, ỹ hitherto we haue recited none but those offices that stand in the ministery of the worde: neither doth Paul make mention of anie other in that fourth chapter which we haue alleadged. But in the Epistle to the Romanes, and in the first Epistle to the Corinthiãs, he reckoneth vp other offices, as powers, the gift of healing, interpretation, gouernment, caring for the poore. Of the which I omitted those that endured but for a time, because it is to no profitable purpose to tary vpon them. But there are two that do perpetually abide, that is to say, gouernment and care of the poore. Gouernours I thinke were the Elders chosen out of the people, that shoulde together with the Bishoppes, haue rule of the iudgement of manners, and the vsing of discipline. For a man cannot otherwise expound that which he saith: let him that ruleth doe it with carefulnesse. Therefore at the beginning euery Church had their Senate, gathered of godly, graue and holie men: which had that same iurisdiction in correcting of vices, whereof we shall speake hereafter And that this was the order of more than one age, experience it selfe declareth. Therefore this office of gouernment is also necessary for al ages.

With officers appointed for teaching, elders ioyned to gouerne the Church.

Tit. 1.5 Phil. 1.1. Act. 20.7.

Rom. 12.7. 1. Cor. 12.28

Rom 2.8.

9 The care of the poore was committed to the Deacons. Howbeit to the Romanes, there are set two kindes. Let him that giueth (saith Paul in that place) doe it in simplicitie: let him that hath mercy, doe it in cheerefulnesse. Forasmuch as it is certain ỹ he speaketh of the publike offices of the church, it must needes bee that there were two seuerall degrees. Vnlesse my iudgement deceiue mee, in the first point he meaneth Deacons, that distributed the almes: in the other he speaketh of them that had giuen themselues to looking to the poore and sicke: of which sort were the widowes of whom he maketh mention to Timothie. For women coulde execute no other pubpublike office, but to giue themselues to the seruice of the poore. If we grant this, (as we must needs graunt it) then there shalbe two sortes of Deacons: of which one sort shall serue in distributing the thinges of the poore, the other in looking to the poore of the Church themselues. But although the verie worde Diaconia, Deaconrie extendeth further: yet the Scripture specially calleth them Deacons, to whom the Church hath giuen the charge to distribute the almes, and to take care of the poore, and hath appointed them as it were stewardes of the common treasurie of the poore: whose beginning, institution and office, is described of Luke in the Actes. For when a murmuring was raised by the Grecians: for that in the ministerie of ỹ poore their widowes were neglected, the Apostles excusing themselues with saying that they could not serue both offices, both the preaching of the word and the ministring at tables, required of the multitude, that there might be chosen seuen honest men, to whom they might cõmit that doing. Loe what manner of Deacons the Apostolike Church had, and what Deacons it were meete for vs to haue according to their example.

Order & seemlinesse especiallie required in church gouernment.

10 Now whereas in the holy assemblie al thinges are to be done in order and comely, there is nothing wherein that ought to be more diligently obserued, than in stablishing the order of gouernment: because there is no where greater perill if any thing bee done vnorderly. Therefore to the end that vnquiet and troublesome men (which otherwise would happen) should rashly thrust in themselues to teach or to rule, it is expresly prouided, that no man should without calling take vpõ him a publike office in the church. Therefore that a man may be iudged a true minister of the Church, first he must be orderly called then hee must answere his vocation, that is to saie, take vpon him and execute the dueties enioyned him. This wee may oftentimes marke in Paul: which when he meaneth to approoue his Apostleship, in a manner alway with his faithfulnesse in executing his office he alleageth his calling. If so great a minister of Christ dare not take vpon himselfe the authoritie that he should bee heard in the Church, but because hee both is appointed thereunto by the commaundement of the Lorde, and also faithfully performeth that which is committed vnto him: how great shamefulnesse shall it be, if any man wanting both or either of these, shal chalenge such honour to himselfe? But because wee haue aboue touched the necessitie of executing the office, nowe let vs entreate onelie of the calling.

Inwarde and outwarde calling of men to execute the ministerie of the Church.

11 The discourse thereof standeth in foure pointes: that we shoulde knowe, what manner of ministers, howe, and by whom ministers ought to bee institute, and with what vsage or what ceremonie they are to be admitted. I speake of the outward and solemne calling, which belongeth to publike order of the Church: as for that secrete calling, whereof euery minister is priuie in his owne conscience before God, and hath not the Church witnesse of it, I omitte it. It is a good witnesse of our heart, that not by any ambition, nor couetousnesse, nor any other greedie desire, but with pure feare of God and zeale to edifie the Churche, wee receiue the office offered vnto vs. That indeede is (as I haue saide) necessarie for euerie one of vs, if we will approoue our ministerie allowable before God. Neuertheless hee is rightly called in preſence of the Church, that commeth vnto it with an euil conſcience, ſo that his wickednesse be not open. They are wont alſo to ſay that euen priuate men are called to the miniſterie, whome they ſee to bee meete and able to execute it: becauſe verily learning ioyned with godlines and with the other qualities of a good Paſtor, is a certaine preparation to the verie office. For whom the Lord hath appointed to ſo great an office, he firſt furniſheth them with thoſe armours that are required to fulfill it, that they ſhould not come emptie and vnprepared vnto it. Whereupon Paul alſo to the Corinthians, when hee meant to diſpute of the verie offices, firſt rehearſed the gifts which they ought to haue that execute the offices. But becauſe this is the firſt of thoſe foure pointes that I haue propounded, let vs now go forward vnto it. 1.Cor.12.7.

12 What manner of Biſhops it is meete to chooſe, Paul doeth largely declare in two places, but the ſumme commeth to this effect, that none are to be choſen, but they that are of ſo ſound doctrine, and of holy life, and not notable in any vice, which might both take away credite from them, & procure ſlaunder to the miniſterie. Of Deacons and Elders there is altogether like conſideration. It is alway to be looked vnto, that they bee not vnable or vnfit to beare the burden that is layde vppon them, that is to ſay, that they may bee furniſhed with thoſe powers that are neceſſarie to the fulfilling of their office. So when Chriſt was about to ſende his Apoſtles, hee garniſhed them with thoſe weapons and inſtruments which they could not want. And Paul when he had painted out the image of a good and true Biſhop, warneth Timothie, that hee woulde not defile himſelfe with chooſing any man that differeth from it. I referre this worde Howe, not to the Ceremonie of chooſing, but to the reuerent feare that is to be kept in the chooſing. Hereupon come the faſtinges and praiers, which Luke reciteth that the faithfull vſed when they made Prieſtes. For wheras they vnderſtood that they meddled with a moſt earneſt matter, they durſt attempt nothing, but with greate reuerence and carefulnes. But they cheefely applied themſelues to prayers, whereby they might craue of God the ſpirite of counſell and diſcretion.

Of vvhat qualitie & vvith vvhat reuerence miniſters ſhould be choſen.

Tit.1.9.
2.Tim.3.1.
Luk.21.15. & 24.49. Mar.16.15 Act.1.8.
1.Tim.5.22.

13 The third thing that we haue ſet in our diuiſion was, by whom miniſters are to be choſen. Of this thing no certeine rule can be gathered out of the inſtitution of Apoſtles, which had ſome difference from the common calling of the reſt. For becauſe it was an extraordinarie miniſterie, that it might be made diſcernable by ſome more notable marke, it behooued that they which ſhould execute it, ſhould be called and appointed by the Lordes owne mouth. They therefore tooke in hand their doing, being furniſhed by no mans election, but by the onely commaundement of God and of Chriſt. Hereupon commeth that when the apoſtles would put an other in the place of Iudas, they durſt not certainly name any one man, but they brought forth two, that the Lorde ſhoulde declare by lot, whether of them hee woulde haue to ſucceede. After this manner alſo it is meete to take this, that Paul denieth that he was create Apoſtle of men or by man, but by Chriſt & God the father. That firſt point, that is to ſay of men, hee had common with all the godly miniſters of the worde. For no man coulde rightly take vppon him that execution, but he that were called of God. But the other point was proper & singular to himselfe. Therefore when he glorieth of this, hee doth not only boast that he hath that which belongeth to a true and lawfull Pastor, but also bringeth foorth the signes of his Apostleship. For when there were some among the Galathians, which trauelling to diminish his authoritie, made him some meane disciple, put in office vnder them by the principall Apostles: he, to defend in safetie the dignitie of his preaching, which he knewe to be shot at by those suttle deuises, needed to shewe himselfe in all points nothing inferiour to the other Apostles. Therefore he affirmeth that he was chosen, not by the iudgement of men, like some comon Bishop, but by the mouth and manifest Oracle of the Lord himselfe.

Apoſtles elected of God himſelf.

Gal.1.12

Bishops lawfully called by men.

14 But no man that is sober wil denie, that it is according to the order of lawfull calling, that Bishops shoulde be appointed by men: forasmuch as there are so many testimonies of the Scripture for proofe thereof. Neither doeth that saying of Paul make to the contrarie, as it is saide, that hee was not sent of men, nor by men: forasmuch as he speaketh not there of the ordinarie chooſing of ministers, but chalengeth to himselfe that which was speciall to the Apostles. Howbeit God also so appointed Paul by himselfe by singular prerogatiue, that in the meane time hee vsed the discipline of Ecclesiasticall calling. For Luke reporteth it thus, when the Apostles were fasting and praying, the Holy Ghost said: Separate vnto me Paul and Barnabas to the worke to which I haue seuerally chosen them. To what purpose serued that separation and putting on of handes, sith the Holy Ghost hath testified his owne election, but that the discipline of the Church in appointing ministers by men, might be preserued? Therefore the Lord could by no plainer example approue such order, than he did when hauing first declared that he had ordeined Paul Apostle for the Gentiles, yet he willeth him to be appointed by the Church. Which thing we may see in the chooſing of Mathias. For, because the office of Apostleship was of so great importance, that they durst not by their owne iudgement chooſe any one man into that degree, they did set two men in the middest, vpon the one of whome the lot shoulde fall: that so both the election might haue an open testimonie from heauen, and yet the policie of the Church shoulde not bee passed ouer.

Gal. 1.1.

Act. 13.2.

Act. 1.23.

Whether a minister of the Church may be made by the authoritie of one man or no.

15 Now it is demaunded whether the minister ought to bee chosen of the whole Church, or onely of the other of the same office, and of the Elders that haue the rule of discipline, or whether he may be made by the authoritie of one man. They that giue this authoritie to one man, alleage that which Paul saith to Titus: Therefore I haue left thee in Creta, that thou shouldest appoint in euery towne Priests. Againe to Timothie: lay not handes quickly vpon any man. But they are deceiued if they thinke, that either Timothie at Ephesus, or Titus in Creta, vsed a kingly power, that either of them should dispose al things at his own wil. For they were aboue the rest, only to goe before the people with good & holsome counsels: not that they onely, excluding all other, should do what they listed. And that I may not seeme to faine any thing, I will make it plaine by a like example. For Luke rehearseth that Paul and Barnabas appointed priests in diuers Churches: but hee also expresseth the order or manner howe, when hee sayeth that is was done by

voices ordeining Prieſtes (ſaith he) by lifting vp of hands in euery Church. Therefore they two did create them: but the whole multitude, as the Grecians manner was in elections, did by holding vp their handes, declare whom they woulde haue. Euen in like manner the Romaine hiſtories do oftentimes ſay, that the Conſul which kept the aſſemblies, created new officers, for none other cauſe but for that he receiued the voices and gouerned the people in the election. Truely it is not likely that Paul graunted more to Timothee and Titus than he tooke to himſelfe. But we ſee that he was wont to create Biſhops by voyces of the people. Therefore the places aboue are ſo to be vnderſtanded, that they miniſh nothing of the common right & libertie of the Church. Therefore Cyprian ſaith well, when he affirmeth that it commeth from the authoritie of God, that the Prieſt ſhould be choſen in preſence of the people before the eyes of all men, and ſhould by publike iudgement and teſtimonie be allowed for worthy and meet. For we ſee that this was by the commaundement of the Lorde obſerued in the Leuiticall Prieſts, that before their conſecration they ſhould be brought into the ſight of the people. And no otherwiſe is Mathias added to the felowſhip of the Apoſtles: and no otherwiſe the ſeuen Deacons were created: but the people ſeeing & allowing it. Theſe examples (ſaith Cyprian) doe ſhew, that the ordering of a Prieſt ought not to be done, but in the knowledge of the people ſtanding by: that the ordering may be iuſt and lawfull, which hath byn examined by the witneſſe of al. We are therefore come thus farre, that this is by the word of God a lawfull calling of a miniſter, when they that ſeem meete are created by the conſent & allowance of the people, and that other paſtors ought to beare rule of the election, that nothing be done amiſſe of the multitude either by lightneſſe, or by euil affections, or by diſorder.

Leui. 8. 6. Num. 20. 26 Act. 1. 15. & 6. 2

16 Now remaineth the forme of ordering, to which we aſſigned the laſt place in the calling. It is euident that the Apoſtles vſed no other ceremony when they admitted any man to the miniſtery, but the laying on of hands. And I thinke that this vſage came from the manner of the Hebrues, which did as it were preſent vnto God by laying on of hands that which they wold haue bleſſed and hallowed. So when Iacob was about to bleſſe Ephraim and Manaſſe, he layed his hands vpon their heads. Which thing our Lord followed, when he prayed ouer the infants. In the ſame meaning (as I thinke) the Iewes by the ordinance of the lawe, layde handes vpon the Sacrifices. Wherefore the Apoſtles by laying on of handes did ſignifie that they offered him to God, whom they admitted into the miniſterie. Albeit they vſed it alſo vpon them, to whom they applied the viſible graces of the Spirite. Howſoeuer it be, this was the ſolemne vſage, ſo oft as they called any man to the miniſterie of the Church. So they conſecrated Paſtors and teachers, and ſo alſo Deacons. But although there be no certaine commaundement concerning the laying on of handes, yet becauſe wee ſee that it was continually vſed among the Apoſtles, their ſo diligent obſeruing of it ought to be to vs in ſteede of a commaundement. And truely it is profitable, that by ſuch a ſigne, both the dignitie of the miniſterie ſhoulde be commended to the people, and alſo that he which is ordered ſhould bee admoniſhed, that he is not nowe at his owne libertie, but made bonde to God and the Church.

The forme of ordaining miniſters in the Church by laying on of handes.

Gen. 48. 14. Matt. 19. 15. Act. 19. 6.

Moreouer it ſhall not be a vaine ſigne, if it be reſtored to the naturall beginning of it. For if the Spirit of God, hath ordeined nothing in the Church in vaine, we muſt thinke that this Ceremonie, ſith it proceeded from him, is not vnprofitable, ſo that it be not turned into a ſuperſtitious abuſe. Laſt of al this is to be holden, that not the whole multitude did lay their handes vpon the miniſters, but the Paſtors onely. Howbeit it is vncertaine whether many did alway lay on their handes or no. But it is euident that that was done in the Deacons, in Paul and Barnabas, and a fewe other. But Paul himſelfe in an other place reporteth, that he, and not many other, did lay his hands vpon Timothee. I admoniſh thee (ſaith he) that thou raiſe vp the grace which is in thee by laying on of my handes. For, as for that which in the other Epiſtle is ſpoken of the laying on of the handes of the degree of Prieſts, I doe not ſo take it, as though Paul did ſpeake of the company of the Elders, but I vnderſtand by that worde the verie ordinance it ſelfe: as if he had ſaide: Make that the Grace, which thou haſt receiued by laying on of hands when I did create thee a prieſt, may not be voyde.

The iiij. Chapter.

Of the ſtate of the olde Church, and of the maner of gouerning that was in vſe before the Papacie.

The miniſters of the auncient Church of Chriſt Presbiters or Prieſtes & Deacons out of the order of Presbyters Paſtors and teachers choſen.

HItherto we haue intreated of the order of gouerning the Church, as it hath beene deliuered vs out of the pure worde of God, and of the miniſteries, as they were inſtituted by Chriſt. Nowe that all theſe thinges may be more clearely and familiarly opened, and alſo be better faſtened in our mindes: it ſhalbe profitable in theſe thinges to conſider the forme of the olde Church, which ſhal repreſent to our eyes a certaine image of Gods inſtitution. For although the Biſhops of thoſe times did ſet foorth manie Canons, wherein they ſeemed to expreſſe more than was expreſſed in the holy Scripture: yet they with ſuch heedefulneſſe framed all their order after the onelie rule of Gods worde, that a man may eaſily ſee that in this behalfe they had in a manner nothing diſagreeing from the worde of God. But although there might be ſomwhat wanting in their ordinances, yet becauſe they with ſyncere zeale endeuoured to preſerue Gods inſtitution, and they ſwarued not much from it, it ſhalbe very profitable here ſhortly to gather what manner of obſeruation they had. As we haue declared that there are three ſortes of miniſters commended vnto vs in the Scripture: ſo al the miniſters that the olde Church had, it deuided into three Orders. For out of the order of Elders were partly choſen Paſtors and teachers: the reſt of them had the rule of the iudgement & correction of manners. To the Deacons was committed the care of the poore, & the diſtributing of the almes. As for the Readers and Acoluthes, were not names of certaine offices: but thoſe whom they called Clerkes, they trayned from their youth vpwarde in certain exerciſes to ſerue the church, that they might the better vnderſtand to what purpoſe they were appointed, & might in time come the better prepared to their office: as I ſhal by & by ſhew more at large. Therefore Hierome, when when he had appointed fiue orders of the Church, reckeneth vp Biſhopes, Prieſts, Deacons, Beleeuers, and Cathecumeni to the reſt of the Cleargy & monkes he giueth no proper place. In Eſa. cap. 6

2 Therefore to whom the office of teaching was enioyned, all them they named Prieſtes. In euerie cyty they choſe out of their own number one man, to whom they ſpecially gaue the title of Biſhop: that diſſentions ſhould not grow of equalitie, as it is wont to come to paſſe. Yet the Biſhop was not ſo aboue the reſt in honor and dignitie, that he had a dominion ouer his fellowes. But what office the conſul had in the Senat, to propound of matters, to aske opinions, to go before the other with counſelling, moniſhing, & exhorting, to gouerne the whole action with his authoritie, and to put in execution that which is decreed by common counſell the ſame office had the Biſhop in the aſſembly of the Prieſts. And the olde writers themſelues cõfeſſe, that the ſame was by mens conſent brought in for the neceſſitie of the times. Therefore Hierome vpon the Epiſtle to Titus ſaith, The ſame was a Prieſt which was a Biſhop. And before that by the inſtinction of the Diuell, there were diſſentions in religion, & it was ſaid among the people, I am of Paul, I am of Cephas: Churches were gouerned by common counſell of Elders. Afterward, that the ſeedes of diſſentions might be plucked vp, all the care was committed to one man. As therefore the Prieſts do know, that by cuſtome of the Church they are ſubiect to him that is ſet ouer thẽ: ſo let the Biſhops know, that they are aboue the Prieſts, rather by cuſtome, than by the truth of the Lords diſpoſing, and that they ought to gouerne the church in common together. But in an other place he teacheth, howe auncient an inſtitution it was. For he ſaith that at Alexandria, from Marke the Euangeliſt euen to Heraclas and Dionyſius, the prieſtes did alway chooſe out one of themſelues, & ſet him in a higher degre, whom they named a Biſhop. Therfore euery cytie had a company of prieſts which were paſtors & Teachers. For they all did execute amõg the people that office of teaching, exhorting & correcting, which Paul appointeth to the Biſhops: and that they might leaue ſeede after them, they trauailed in teaching the younger men, that had profeſſed thẽſelues ſouldiours in the holy warfare. To euerie city there was appointed a certaine countrey, that ſhoulde take their Prieſtes from thence, and be accounted as it were into the body of that Church. Euerie company (as I haue before ſayd) only for preſeruation of policy and peace were vnder one Biſhop: which was ſo aboue the reſt in dignitie, that he was ſubiect to the aſſemblie of his brethren. If the compaſſe of ground ỹ was vnder his Biſhoprike were ſo great, that he could not ſuffice to ſerue al ỹ offices of a Biſhop in euery place of it, in the countrey it ſelf there were in certaine places appointed prieſtes which in ſmall matters ſhoulde execute his authoritie. Them they called countrey biſhops, becauſe in the countrey they repreſented the Biſhop.

A colledge or companie of prieſtes in euery citie, to teach, exhort, and correct the people: out of that companie for auoiding of diſſentions one choſen to be a Biſhop, the honor and dignity vvhich a Biſhop ſo choſen had aboue the reſt, the Countrey furniſhed vvith prieſts fro the citie, thoſe prieſtes vnder the Biſhops authority, the compaſſe of ground committed to the care of one biſhop, tearmed his Biſhopricke, in the primitiue church. Epi. ad Eua.

Tit. 1.

3 But, ſo much as belongeth to the office, whereof we now ſpeake, as well the biſhops as the prieſts were bound to apply the diſtributing of the word and Sacraments. For it was ordained onely at Alexandria, (becauſe Arrius had there troubled the Church), that the prieſt ſhould not preach to the people, as Socrates ſaith in the 9. booke of the Tripartite hiſtory. Which yet

Hierome

Hierom confeſſeth that he miſliketh not. Truely it ſhould be counted monſtrous, if any man had giuen out himſelf for a biſhop, that had not alſo in very deede ſhewed himſelfe a true Biſhop. Therefore ſuch was the ſeuerity of thoſe times, that all miniſters were driuen to the fulfilling of ſuch office, as the Lord requireth of them. Neither do I reheaſe the maner of one age alone. For euen in Gregories time, when the Church was now almoſt decaied (certainely it was much degenerate from the auncient purenes) it had not ben tollerable ỹ any Biſhop ſhould abſtain from preaching. The prieſt (ſaith he in one place) dieth if there be no ſoũd heard of him: becauſe he asketh againſt himſelfe the wrath of the ſecret iudge, if he go without ſound of preaching. And in an other place: When Paul teſtifieth that he is cleane frõ the bloud of all: in this ſaying we be conuinced, we be bounde, we be ſhewed to be gilty, which are called prieſts, which beſide the euils that we haue of our owne, adde alſo the deathes of other: becauſe we kill ſo many as wee being lukewarme & ſilent do daily ſee to go to death. He calleth himſelfe & other ſilent, becauſe they were les diligent in their worke than they ought to be. When he ſpareth not thẽ, ỹ did halfe performe their duety: what think you he would haue done, if a man had altogether ſit idle? Therefore this was a great while holden in the Church, that the chiefe duty of the biſhop was to feede Gods people with the word, or both publikely & priuatly to edifie the Church with ſound doctrine.

Act. 20. 16.

For preſeruing of diſcipline, Archbiſhops and Patriarches ordained by them who neuer meant to forge another forme of ruling the Church, than God hath appointed in his word.

4 But whereas euery prouince had among their biſhops one Archbiſhop: alſo where in the Nicene Synod there were ordained Patriarches, whiche ſhould in degree & dignity be aboue the Archbiſhops, that pertained to the preſeruing of diſcipline. Howbeit in this diſcourſe, that which was moſt rarely vſed may not be omitted. For this cauſe therefore chiefely theſe degrees were ordained, that if any thing happened in any church, ỹ couldo not well be ended by a few, might be referred to a prouinciall Synode. If the greatneſſe or difficulty of the matter required a greater diſcuſſing, the Patriarches were alſo called to it with the Synods, from whõ there might be no appeale but to a general Counſell. The gouernmẽt ſo ordered many called a Hierarchie, by a name (as I thinke) vnproper, & truly vnuſed in the ſcriptures. For the holy Ghoſt willed to prouide, that no man, ſhould dreame of a principality or dominion whẽ the gouernment of the church is ſpoken of. But, if leauing the word we loke vpon the thing, we ſhal find that the olde biſhops ment to forge no forme of ruling the church, differing from that which the Lorde appointed by his worde.

The office of Deacons the ſame vnder the apoſtles & in the primitiue Church: the occaſion of making Subdeacons and Archdeacons.

5 Neither was the order of the Deacons at that time any other thã it was vnder the Apoſtles. For they receiued the daily offeringes of the Faithfull, and the yearely reuenues of the church, to beſtow them vpon true vſes, that is to ſay, to diſtribute them to feede partly the miniſters, & partly the poore: but by the apointment of the biſhop, to whom alſo they yearely rendered accountes of their diſtribution. For whereas the Canons doe euery where make the biſhop diſtributer of al the goods of the church, it is not ſo to be vnderſtanded, as though he did by himſelfe diſcharge that care: but becauſe it was his parte to appoint to the Deacon, who ſhould be receiued into the common almes of the Church, and of that which remained, to whome it should be giuen,& howe much to euery one: because he had an ouerseeing whether the deacon did faithfully execute that which belõged to his office. For thus it is reade in the canons which they ascribe to the Apostles: Wee commaund that the Byshoppe haue the goods of the Church in his owne power. For if he be put in trust with the soules of men, which are more precious, much more it is meete that hee haue charge of mony: so that by his power all thinges may be distributed to the pore by the Elders & Deacons: that they may be all ministred with fear and carefulnes. And in the councel of Antioche it is decreed, that the byshoppes shoulde be restrained that meddle with the goods of the Church, without the knowledge of the Elders and Deacons. But of that point wee neede to make no longer disputation, sithe it is euident by many epistles of Gregorie, that euen at that time, when otherwise the ordinances of the Church were much corrupted, yet this obseruation continued, that the Deacons should vnder the Byshop be the stewards of the poore. As for Subdeacons, it is likely that at the beginning they were ioyned to the Deacons, that they should vse their seruice about the poore: but that difference was by little and little confounded. But Archdeacons began then to be created, when the plentie of the goods, required a newe and more exact manner of disposing them: Albeit Hierome doth say, that it was euen in his age. In their charge was the summe of their reuenewes, possessions, & store, and the collection of the daily offerings. Whereupon Gregory declareth to the Archdeacon of Salon, that he should be holden guilty if any of the goods of the Church, perished either by his fraude or negligence. But whereas it was giuen to them to read the gospell to the people, and to exhort them to prayer: and whereas they were admitted to deliuer the cup in the holie supper, that was rather done to garnish their office, that they shoulde execute it with the more reuerence, when by such signes they were admonished that it was no prophane bailiwike that they exercised, but a spirituall function and dedicate to God.

Epi.10.lib.1.

6 Hereby also wee may iudge what vse there was, and what manner of distribution of the Church goods. Ech where both in the decrees of the Synodes, and among the olde writers it is to bee founde, that whatsoeuer the Church possesseth either in lands or in mony, is the patrimony of the poore. Therefore oftentimes there this song is sung to the Byshops and Deacons, that they should remember, that they meddle not with their own goods, but the goods appointed to the necessitie of the poore: which if they vnfaithfully suppresse or wast, they shalbe guilty of bloud. Wherby they are admonished, with great fear and reuerence, as in the sight of God, without respect of persons, to distribute them to whome they be due. Hereupon also come those graue protestations in Chrysostome, Ambrose, Augustine, & other like byshops, whereby they affirme their owne vprightnesse to the people. But sith it is equitie, and established by the law of the Lord, that they which employ their seruice to the Church, should bee fed with the common charges of the Church, and also many priestes in that age, consecrating their patrimonies to God, were willingly made poore: the distributing was such, that neither the ministers wanted sustenance, nor the poore were neglected. But yet in the mean time it was prouided, that the ministers themselues, which ought to giue example of honeſt ſparing to other, ſhould not haue ſo much, whereby they might abuſe it to riotous exceſſe or deliciouſnes, but onely wherewith to ſuſtein their owne neede. For thoſe of the Cleargie (ſaith Hierome) which are able to liue of the goods of their parentes, if they take that which is the poores, do commit ſacriledge, and by ſuch abuſe they eate and drinke to themſelues damnation.

Church goods diuided into foure parts: one aſſigned to the maintenãce of the Cleargy, the reſt to other vſes.

7 Firſt the miniſtration was free and voluntarie, whereas the Byſhops and Deacons were of their own will faithfull, and vprightneſſe of conſcience and innocencie of life were to them in ſteede of the Lawes. Afterward when euill examples grew of the greedines or peruerſe affections of ſome, to correct thoſe faultes, the canons were made, which diuided the reuenues of the Church into foure parts: of which they aſſigned one part to them of ỹ Clergy, the ſecond to the poore, the third to the maintenance and reparation of Churches, and other holy buildinges, the fourth to the poore as well ſtrangers as of their owne countrie. For whereas the other canons, giue this laſt part to the Byſhop, that varieth nothing from my abouesaide diuiſion. For they meane not that that part ſhould be his own, that either he himſelfe alone ſhould deuoure it, or powre it out, vpon whom or what he liſt, but that it ſhould ſuffice to maintaine the Hoſpitalitie which Paul requireth of that order. And ſo doe Gelaſius and Gregory expound it. For Gelaſius bringeth no other reaſon why the byſhop ſhould chalenge any thing to himſelf, but that he might giue it priſoners and ſtraungers. And Gregory ſpeaketh yet more plainely. It is the maner (ſaith hee) of the ſea Apoſtolike, to giue commaundement to the Biſhop when he is ordered, that of al the reuenue that ariſeth, there be made foure portions: that is to ſay, the one to the Byſhop & his Family for Hoſpitalitie, and entertainment: the ſecond to the Clergy: the third to the poore: the fourth to the repairing of Churches. Therefore it was lawfull for the Byſhop to take nothing to his owne vſe, but ſo much as were enough for moderate and meane foode and clothing. If any began to exceed either in riotous expenſe, or in oſtentation & pompe, he was by & by repreſſed by his fellowes, and if he obeyed not, he was put from his dignitie.

Ad Nepot.

8 As for that which they beſtowed vpon garniſhing of holy thinges, at the firſt it was verie litle. Afterwarde when the Church became ſomewhat richer, yet in that behalfe they ſtill kept a meane. And yet all the mony that was beſtowed thereupon, remained ſafe for the poore, if any greater neceſſity happened. So when famine poſſeſſed the prouince of Hieruſalem, and the neede could not otherwiſe be relieued, Cyrillus ſold the veſſels and garmentes and ſpent them vpon ſuſtenance of the poore. Likewiſe Acatius biſhop of Amida, when a great multitude of the Perſians, in a manner ſtarued for hunger, called together the Clergie, and when hee had made that notable oration, Our God needeth neither diſhes nor cuppes, becauſe he neither eateth nor drinketh, he molt the veſſels, to make thereof both meat and ranſome for men in miſery. Hierom alſo, when he inueyeth againſt the too much gorgeouſnes of temples, doth with honour make mention of Exuperius Byſhop of Tholoſa in his time, which carried the Lords bodie in a wicker basket, and his bloud in glaſſe, but ſuffred no pore man to be hungrie. That which I euen now ſaide of Acatius, Ambroſe rehearſeth of himſelfe. For when the Arrians char-charged him, for that he had broken the holy vessels to ransom prisoners, he vsed this most godly excuse: He ỳ sent the Apostles without gold, gathered Churches together without gold. The church hath gold, not to keepe it, but to bestow it, and to giue relefe in necessities. What neede is to keepe that which helpeth not? Do we not know, how much gold & siluer the Assyrians tooke out of the temple of the Lord? Doth not the priest better to melt thē for the sustenaunce of the poore, if other reliefes do faile, than an enimy a robber of God to beare them away? Wil not the Lorde saye: Why hast thou suffered so many needy to dy for hunger? & verily thou hadst gold whereof thou mightst haue ministred them sustenance. Why were so many led away captiue, & not ransomed? why were so many slaine by the enimy? It had ben better that thou shouldest saue the vessels of liuing men, than of mettalles. To these thinges thou shalt not be able to aunswere. For what wouldest thou saye? I feared least Gods temple should want garnishing. He woulde answere: Sacramentes require not golde: neither do those thinges please with gold ỳ are not bought with gold. The ransoming of prisoners is a garnishing of Sacramentes. In summe, wee see that it is most true which the same man saieth in an other place, that whatsoeuer the Church then possessed was the store of the needie. Againe: that a Bishop hath nothing that is not the poores.

Lib.5.epist. 31.&33.

9 These that we haue rehearsed were the ministeries of the old Church. For the other of which the Ecclesiasticall wryters make mention, were rather certaine exercises and preparations, than appointed offices. For those holy men, that they might leaue a store for the church after them, receiued into their charge, gouernance & discipline, young men which with the consent and authoritie of their parentes, professed thēselues souldiours of the spirituall warfare: and they so framed thē from their tender age, that they should not come vnskilfull & raw to the executing of their office. But all they that were instructed with such beginnings, were called Clerkes. I would in deede that some other proper name had rather been giuen them. For this name grew in error, or of corrupt affection: for asmuch as Peter calleth the whole church the Cleargie, that is to say, the Lords inheritāce, But the institution it selfe was verie holy & profitable, that they which woulde consecrate themselues & their seruice to the Church, should be so brought vp vnder the keeping of the bishop, ỳ none should minister to the Churche, but he that were wel informed aforehand, & that had from his very youth both sucked holy doctrine, & by seuere discipline put in a certayne continuing qualitie of grauity & holye life, & were estranged from worldly cares, and were accustomed to spiritual cares & studies, But as young souldiours are by certain counterfait skirmishes instructed to learne true and earnest fight, so there were also certaine rudimentes, whereby they were exercised while they were Clerkes, before that they were promoted to the verye offices. Therefore first they committed to the Clerkes the charge to open and shut the churche, & they named them Ostiarii dorekepers. Afterward they called them Acoluthi, tolowers, which waited vpon the Bishop in his houshold seruices, and did continually accompany him, first for honors sake, and then that no suspition should arise of thē. Moreouer that by litle & litle they might become knowen to the people,and get to themſelues commendation:alſo that they might learne to abide the ſight of all men , and to ſpeake before all men:that being made prieſtes,when they came foorth to teache, they ſhould not be abaſhed with ſhame:therefore place was appointed thē to reade in the pulpit.After this maner they were promoted by degrees,to ſhewe proofe euerie one of their diligence in all their ſeuerall exerciſes, till they were made Subdeacons.This only is my meaning,that thoſe were rather groſſe beginnings,than ſuch offices as were accounted among the true miniſters of the Church.

The care vvhich the olde church had in making choiſe of fit men for church offices. Their order not al vvaies one & the ſame concerning the perſons by vvhome church miniſters vvere made.

10 Wheras we ſaid ẏ the firſt & ſecond point in the calling of miniſters, are,what maner of men they ought to choſe,& how great a religious carefulnes they ought to vſe in that matter:therein the olde Church hath followed the preſcribed order of Paul,& the examples of the Apoſtles. For they were wont to come together to choſe the paſtors with moſt great reuerēce & careful calling vpon the name of God.Beſide this they had a forme of examination, whereby they tried the life & doctrine of them that were to bee choſen by ẏ rule of Paul.Only they ſomwhat offended herein with to great ſeueritie,becauſe they would require more in a Biſhop than Paul required, & ſpecially in proceſſe of time they required vnmaried life.But in the other points their obſeruation was agreeing with Paules deſcription. But in this which we made the third point,that is to ſay , who ought to inſtitute miniſters,they kept not alway one order.In olde time, none was receiued into ẏ company of Clearkes,without the conſent of all the people:inſomuch that Cyprian laboureth earneſtly to excuſe that he appointed one Aurelius to be a Reader without asking aduiſe of the Church,becauſe that was don beſide the cuſtome,though not without reaſon.For this he ſaith before: In ordering of Clerkes,dere brethren,we are wont firſt to aske you aduiſe,and by common counſel to weigh the maners and deſeruings of euery one.But becauſe in theſe leſſer exerciſes there was not muche peril:becauſe they were choſen to a long proofe,& not to a great office,therefore the conſent of the people therin ceſſed ro be asked.Afterwarde in the other degrees alſo, except the Biſhoprike,the people commonly left the iudgement & choiſe of them to the Biſhop and the prieſtes,that they ſhoulde examine who were meete & worthie:ſauing peraduenture when new prieſtes were appointed for paroches :for then it behoued that the multitude of that place namely ſhould conſent.Neither is it any maruel,that the people in this behalfe was litle carefull in keeping their owne right: For no man was made a Subdeacon,that had not ſhewed a long proofe of himſelfe in his being a Clerke,vnder that ſeueritie of diſcipline,which then was vſed.After that hee had ben tried in that degree,hee was made a Deacon. From thence he came to the honor of preſthood if he had behaued himſelfe faithfully . So no man was promoted,of whom there had not beene in deede a triall had many years before the eies of the people.And there were many canons to puniſh their faultes:ſo ẏ the Church could not be troubled with euil prieſts or Deacons, vnles it neglected the remedies.Howbeit in the prieſts alſo there was alway required the conſent of them of the ſame citie:which the verie firſt canon teſtifieth in the 67.diſtinction,which is fathered vpō Anacletus. Finally,all the admissions into orders were therfore done at certaine appointed times of the yeare, that no mã should priuily creepe in without the consent of the faithful, or should with too much easines be promoted without witnesses.

11 In choosing of Byshops the people had the libertie long preserued, ỹ none shoulde bee thrust in that were not accepted of all. This therefore was forbidden in the councell at Antioch, that none shoulde be thrust in to them against their will. Which thing also Leo the first doth diligently confirme. Hereupon came these sayings: Let him bee chosen, whome the Cleargy, and the people, or the greater number shall require. Againe: Let him that shall beare rule ouer all, be chosen of all. For it must needes be, that he that is made a ruler being vnknowen and not examined, is thrust in by violence. Againe, Let him be chosen, that is both chosen by the Clerkes, and desired by the people: and let him be consecrate by them of that Prouince, with the iudgement of the Metropolitane. The holy Fathers tooke so great heede that this libertie of the people should by no mean be diminished, that when the generall Synode gathered together at Constantinople did order Nectarius, they would not do it without the allowance of the Cleargy and people, as they testified by their epistle to the Synode of Rome. Therefore when any Bishop did appoint a successor to himselfe, it was not otherwise stablished vnlesse the whole people did confirme it. Whereof you haue not onely an example, but also the very forme in Augustine in the naming of Eradius. And Theodorite, when hee rehearseth that Peter was named by Athanasius to bee his successor, by and by addeth, that the order of Priestes confirmed it, and the magistrate, and nobilitie, and the people approued it with their allowing showte.

Epistola. 10. Theod. lib. 4. cap. 20.

12 I graunt in deede that this also was by very good reason stablished in the Councell at Laodicia, that the Election should not bee left to multitudes. For it scarcely happeneth at any time, that so many heads should wel order any thing with one meaning: and commonly this is true, that the vncertaine communaltie is diuided into contrarie affections. But for this perill there was vsed a very good remedie. For first the Clerkes onely did choose: whom they had chosen they presented to the Magistrate, or to the Senate and cheese men of the people. They, after consultation hadde, if they thought the election good, confirmed it: if not, they did choose an other, whom they did rather allowe. Then the matter was moued to the multitude, which although they were not bounde to those foreiudgementes, yet thereby they could the lesse be disordered. Or if they began at the multitude: that was don only to learn whome they did cheefly desire. When the desires of the people were heard, then they of the Cleargy did chose him. So neither was it lawful for the Clergy to appoint whome they listed, neither were they bound to obey the foolish desires of the people. Leo appointeth this order in another place, when he saith: There are to be looked for, both the desires of the citizens, the peoples testimonies, the iudgement of the honourable, and the election of the clearkes. Againe, Let there be holden the testimonie of the honourable, the subscription of the clearks, the consent of the order & communalty. No reason (sayth he) suffreth it to be otherwise done. And nothing else meaneth that decree of the Synode at Laodicia, but that the Cleargy and and cheefe of the people, should not suffer themselues to be carried away by the vndiscrete multitude: but rather that with their wisedome and grauitie they should represse the peoples fooliſh affections, if at any time need should so require.

How long it continued in vse that the Cleargy, the cheefe rulers, and the people had all to doe in the election of byshops.

13 This order of chooſing was yet in force in the time of Gregory: and it is likely that it endured long after. There remaine many Epiſtles of his, that giue euident testimonie of this matter. For so oft as he hath to doe with the creating of any new biſhop, he vseth to write to the clergy, to the order, and to the people, & somtime also to the ruler, according as the gouernmẽt of the city is appointed. But if by reason of the disordered state of ỹ church, he committeth to any Byſhop adioyning the charge of ouerseeing in the election, yet he alway requireth a solemn decree strengthened with the subscriptions of all. Yea and when there was one Constantius create Byſhop at Milaine, and that many of the Milaneis were by reason of the inuasion of the barbarous nations fled to Genua: he thought that the election coulde not otherwise be lawfull, vnleſſe they also were called together & gaue their assẽt. Yea there are not yet fiue hundred yeares past, since Pope Nicholas decreed thus of the election of the byſhop of Rome: that the cardinal biſhops should beginne, then that they shoulde ioyne to them the reſt of the cleargy, last of all that the election should be confirmed by the consent of the people. And in the ende he reciteth that decree of Leo, which I euen nowe alledged, and commaundeth it from thence foorth to bee in force. But if the malice of wicked men shall so preuail, that the clearks to make a true election be compelled to depart out of the citie: yet he commaundeth that some of the people be present with them. As for the Emperors consent, so farre as I can perceiue, was required onely in two churches, that is, Rome and Constantinople: becauſe there were the two seates of the Empire. For whereas Ambroſe was sent to Milaine with a power from Valentinian to gouern the election of the new Biſhop: that was extraordinarily done, by reason of greeuous factiõ wherewith the citizens then boyled among themselues. But at Rome in olde time the Emperours authority was of so greate force in creating of the Byſhop: that Gregory sayeth, that hee was set by his commaundement in the gouernment of the Church: when yet by solemne vsage hee was desired by the people. This was the manner, that when the cleargy and the people had appointed any biſhop, the cleargy should forthwith moue it to ỹ emperor, ỹ he should either by his alowance confirme ỹ election, or by disalowance vndo it. Neither are the decrees that Gratian gathereth together, repugnant to this custome: wherein is nothing elſe said, but that it is in no wiſe to be suffered, that taking away the canonicall election, a king should appoint a Byſhop after his owne luſt: and that the Metropolitan should consecrate none that were so promoted by violent powers. For it is one thing to spoile the Church of her right, that all should be transferred to the luſt of one man: & another thing to graunt this honour to a king or an Emperour, that by his authoritie he may confirme a lawfull election.

14 Now it followeth, that we entreat with what forme the miniſters of ỹ Church were admitted into their office after election: this the Latines called Ordination or Conſecration: the Greekes haue called it Cheirotonia, liſting vp of handes, and somerime also Cheirothesia, laying on of handes. Howbeit Cheirotonia is properly called that kinde of election, where mens consentes are declared by holding vp of their hands. There remaineth a decree of the Nicene councell, that the Matropolitane should meete togethet with al the Bishops of the prouince to order him which is chosen. But if some of them be hindered either by length of the way, or by sickenes, or by any necessitie, that yet three at the least should meete: & that they that are absent shoulde by letters testifie their consent. And this Canon, when with discontinuance it grewe out of vse, was afterward renued with many Synodes. But all, or at least so many as had no excuse, were therefore commaunded to be present, that they might haue the grauer triall of the learning & manners, of him that was to be ordered: for the matter was not done without trial. And it appeareth by Cyprians words, that in the old time they were wont not to be called after the election, but to be present at the election: & to this end that they should be as it were gouernors, that nothing shoulde be troublesomely done in the multitude. For where hee saide, that the people haue power either to choose worthie Priests, or to refuse vnworthie, within a litle after he addeth: Wherefore according to the tradition of God & of the Apostles, it is to be diligently kept & holden (which is yet holden with vs also & in a maner throughout al prouinces) that for the right celebration of orderings, all the Bishops adioyning of the same prouince should come together to ỹ people for which a gouernor is ordered, & that the bishop be chosen in presence of the people. But when they were sometime slowly gathered together, and there was peril least some would abuse that delay to occasion of ambitious suing: it was thought ỹ it should be enough if after the election made, they should meete & after allowance vpon lawful examination consecrate him. Epi. 4. lib. 1.

15 When this was ech where done without exception, by litle and litle a diuerse manner grewe in vse, that they which were chosen should resort to the Metropolitane citie to fetch their ordering. Which came to passe rather by ambition, & by deprauation of the first institution, than by any good reason. And not long after, when the authoritie of the sea of Rome was now increased, there came in place yet a worse custome, that the Bishops almost of all Italie should fetch their consecration from thence. Which we may note out of the Epistles of Gregorie. Only a few cities, which did not so easily giue place, had their ancient right preserued: as there is an example had of Milaine. Peraduenture the only Metropolitane cities kept their priuiledge. For al the Bishops of ỹ Prouince were wont to come together to ỹ chief citie to consecrate the Archbishop. But the Ceremonie was laying on of hands. For I read of no other Ceremonies vsed: sauing that in the solemne assembly the Bishops had a certaine apparel whereby they might bee distinctly knowen from other Priests. They ordered also Priests & Deacons with onely laying on of hands. But euerie Bishop with the companie of priests ordered his own Priestes. But although they did all the same thing: yet becawse the Bishop went before, and it was all done as it were by his guiding, therefore the ordering was called his. Whereupon the old writers haue oft this saying: that a Priest differeth from a Bishop in no other thing, but beeause hee hath not the power of ordering.

The beginning of the custome for Bishops chosen to repaire to their metropolitan for consecration: the corrupt vse of cõming to Rome for it: the rites and ceremonies there in vsed. Lib. 2. Epist. 69. 46.

The v. Chapter,

That the olde forme of gouernement is vtterly ouerthrowen by the tyrannie of the Papacie.

The corruption of the Church of Rome in choosing Bishops without regard of maners, learning, or as much as yeares of discretion,

NOw it is good to set before mens eyes the order of gouerning the church that the sea of Rome and all the champions thereof doe keepe at this day, and the whole image of that Hierarchie which they continually haue in their mouth, and to compare it with that order of the first & old Church which we haue described: that by the comparison it may appeare what maner of Church they haue, which vse this onely title to charge or rather to ouerwhelme vs. But it is best to begin at Calling, that we see both who, and what manner of men, and by what order they be called to this ministerie. And then afterwarde we shall consider how faithfully they execute their office. We will giue the first place to Bishops: to whome I woulde to God this might be an honor, to haue the first place in this discourse. But the matter it selfe doeth not suffer mee, once to touch this thing bee it neuer so lightly, without their great shame. And yet I will remember, in what kind of writing I am now occupied: and will not suffer my talke, which ought to be framed onely to simple doctrine, to flowe abroad beyond due bondes. But let some one of them that haue not vtterly lost all shame, answere me, what maner of bishops are at this day commonly chosen. Truely it is now growen too much out of vse, to haue any examination had of their learning: but if there bee had any respect of learning, they choose some lawyer that can rather brawle in a court, than preach in a Church. This is certaine, that these hundred yeres there hath scarcely beene euery hundreth man chosen that vnderstood any thing of holy doctrine. I doe not therefore spare the former ages, for that they were much better, but because we haue now onely the present Church in question. If iudgement be had of their manners, wee shall finde that there haue beene fewe or almost none, whom the olde Canons woulde not haue iudged vnworthie. He that was not a dronkard, was a whoremonger: hee that was also cleane from this wickednesse, was either a dycer, or a hunter, or dissolute in some part of his life. For there be lighter faults, which by the olde Canons doe exclude a man from being a Bishop. But this is a most great absurditie, that verie children scarcely tenne yeres olde, are by the Popes graunt made Bishops. They are growen to such shamelesnes and sensles dulnes, that they dreaded not that extreme yea and monstrous wicked doing, which is vtterly abhorring from the verie sense of nature. Hereby appeareth how religious their elections were, where the negligence was so careleſſe.

Both magistrates and people vtterly excluded in the Church of Rome from medling in the election of Bishops: the pretense vnder which they are excluded.

2 Nowe in election, all that right of the people is taken awaye. Their desirings, their assentings, their subscribinges, and all such thinges are vanished: the whole power is transferred to the Canons onely. They bestowe the Bishopricke vpon whom they will, and afterwarde bring him foorth into the sight of the people, but to bee worshipped, not to bee examined. But Leo cryeth on the otherside, that no reason suffereth it, and hee pronounceth ceth that it is a violent impoſition. Cyprian, when he teſtifieth that it proceedeth from the lawe of God that it ſhoulde not bee done but by the conſent of the people, ſheweth that the contrarie maner is repugnant to the worde of God. The decrees of ſo many Synodes doe moſt ſeuerely forbid it to bee otherwiſe done: and if it be done, they cõmand it to be voide. If theſe things be true, there now remaineth in the Papacie no Canonical election, neither by Gods law nor by the Eccleſiaſticall law. But although there were no other euil, yet how ſhall they be able to excuſe this that they haue ſo ſpoyled the Church of her right? But (ſay they) the corruption of times ſo required, that becauſe in appointing of biſhops, hatreds and affections more preuailed with the people and the Magiſtrates, than right and ſounde iudgement, therefore the rule thereof ſhoulde be giuen to a few. Admit verily that this were the extreme remedie of a miſchiefe in diſpaired caſe. But ſith the medicine it ſelfe hath appeared more hurtfull than the very diſeaſe, why is not this new euil alſo remedied? But (ſay they) it is exactly preſcribed to the Canons, what they ought to follow in the election. But do we doubt, but that the people in olde time did vnderſtand that they were bound to moſt holie lawes, whẽ they ſaw that they had a rule ſet them by the word of God, when they came together to chooſe a biſhop? For that onelie voice of God, wherby he deſcribeth the true image of a biſhop, ought worthilie to be of more value than infinite thouſands of Canons. But neuertheleſſe the people, corrupted with a moſt euil affection, had no regarde of the lawe or of equitie. So at this day though there be verie good lawes written, yet they remaine buried in papers. Yet for the moſt part it is vſed in mens maners, yee and allowed as though it were done by good reaſon, that dronkardes, whoremongers, dicers, are commonly promoted to this honor: (It is but litle that I ſay) that biſhoprikes are the rewards of adulteries and bawderies. For whẽ they are giuen but to hunters and falconers, it is to be thought to be gaily wel beſtowed Any way to excuſe ſo hainous indignity, it is too much wicked. The people (ſay I) had in old time a very good Canon to whom Gods worde preſcribed, that a biſhop ought to be vnreproueable, a teacher, no fighter, &c. 1. Tim. 3. 1. Why therefore is the charge of chooſing remoued from the people to theſe men? Becauſe forſoth the word of God was not heard among the tumults & ſeditious partakings of the people. And why ſhould it not at this day be remoued againe frõ theſe men, which not only do breake all lawes, but caſting awaie al ſhame, do wantonly, couetouſly, ambitiouſly, mingle and confound Gods and mens matters together?

3 But they lie, when they ſaie, that this was deuiſed for a remedie. We oftẽ read that in old time Churches were in tumultes at the chooſing of biſhops: yet neuer anie mã durſt think of taking away the authoritie frõ the people. For they had other waies whereby they might either preuent theſe faultes, or amend them if they were alreadie cõmitted. But I wil tell what it is. When the people began to be negligent in making the elections, and did caſt that care vpon the Prieſts as litle belonging to them, they abuſed this occaſion to vſurpe a tyrannie to themſelues, which afterward they ſtabliſhed by new Canons ſet forth. As for their ordering, it is nothing elſe but a meere mockage. For the ſhew of examination that they there ſet out is ſo vaine and hungry, that it wanteth euen al colour. Therefore whereas in some places Princes haue by couenant obteined of the byshops of Rome, that they themselues might name byshops, therin the church suffered no new losse: because the election was taken away, onely from the Canons, which had by no right violently taken it, or verily stolen it. Truly this is a most foule example, that out of the court are sent byshops to possesse Churches: and it should be the worke of godly Princes to absteine from such corruption. For it is a wicked spoiling of the church, when there is thrust vnto any people a byshop, whom they haue not desired, or at least with free voice allowed. But that vnorderly manner which hath long ago bin in the Churches, gaue occasion to Princes to take the presentation of byshops into their owne hands. For they had rather it ỹ should be their gift, than those mens, to whom it nothing more belonged, and which did no lesse wrongfully abuse it.

What occaſiõ the Romain clergie hath taken to defraude the Churche of her right in elections, and paines to get into their owne hands that which they ſaw ſo groſely abuſed.

The abuses of the Churche of Rome in making Priests and Deacons.

4 Loe here is a noble calling, by reason whereof the byshops boast themselues to be the successors of the Apostles. But they say that the authoritie to create priests belongeth to them only. But in this they most leawdly corrupt the olde institution: because they doe not by their ordering create Priests to rule & feede the people, but Sacrificers to Sacrifice. Likewise when they cõsecrate Deacons, they do nothing of their true & proper office, but they ordaine them only to certain Ceremonies about the chalice & the paten. But in the Synode at Chalcedon, it is cõtrariwise decreed, that the orderings should not be absolutely giuen, that is to say, but that a place should be therewithal assigned to them that are ordered, where they shal exercise their office. This decree is for two causes very profitable. First, that the Church shoulde not be burdened with superfluous charges, nor that that shoulde be spent vpon idle men which should be giuen to the poore: Secondly, that they which be ordered, should thinke that they be not promoted to an honour, but that there is an office committed vnto them, to the execution wherof they are bounde by solemne protestation. But the Romishe maisters (which thinke that there is nothing in religion to bee cared for, but their bellie) first doe expounde title to be the reuenue that may suffice to sustaine them, whether it be by their owne liuelyhoode or by benefice. Therefore when they order a Deacon or a Priest, without taking care where they ought to minister, they giue them the order, if they bee riche enough to find themselues. But what man can admit this, that the title which the decree of the Counsell requireth, should be the yearely reueuue for their sustenance? But nowe because the later Canons condemned the bishoppes with penalty to finde them whom they had ordered without sufficient title, by this meanto restraine their too much easie admitting: there hath beene also a suttletie deuised to mocke out this penaltie For he that is ordered, naming any title whatsoeuer it be, promiseth that he wilbe content therewith: by this shift he is driuen from his action for his finding. I passe ouer a thousand fraudes that are herein vsed: that when some doe falsely name vaine titles of benefices, whereupon they can not make fiue shillings by yeare: other some vnder secret couenãt do borow benefices, which they promise that they wil by & by restore againe, but sometime thy restore not at all. And such other mysteries.

5 But

5 But although theſe groſſer abuſes were taken away, is not this alway an abſurditie, to appoint a Prieſt to whome you aſſigne no place? Alſo they order no man but to ſacrifice. But the true ordinance of a Prieſt is, to be called to the gouernment of the Church: and a Deacon to be called to the gathering of the almes: they doe in deede with many pompes ſhadowe their doing, that in the verie ſhew it may haue a reuerence among the ſimple. But among men that haue their ſounde wit, what can theſe diſguiſings auaile, if there be no ſound ſtuffe or trueth vnderneath them? For they vſe ceremonies about it, either fetched out of lewiſhneſſe, or fained of thē ſelues: which it were better to forbeare. But of true examination, (for I nothing paſſe vpon that ſhadowe which they retaine) of the peoples conſent, and of other things neceſſarie, they make no mention. I call a ſhadowe their fooliſh geſturings meete to be laughed at, framed to a fonde and cold counterfaiting of antiquitie. The biſhops haue their deputies which before the ordering may enquire of their learning. But what? whether they cā read their maſſes, whether they can decline a cōmon nowne, that they ſhal light vpō in reading, coniugate a verb, or do know the ſignification of one word, for it is not neceſſarie that they be cunning enough to conſtrue a verſe. And yet they be not put back frō Prieſthood which faile euen in the childiſh rudiments, ſo ỹ they bring any mony or commendation of fauor. Of like ſort it is, that when they are brought to the altar to be ordered, it is asked thriſe in a tongue not vnderſtanded, whether they be worthie of that honour. One anſwereth which neuer ſaw them: (but becauſe nothing ſhould want of the forme, hee hath that part in the play) They are worthie. What may a man blame in theſe reuerend fathers, but that which mocking in ſo open Sacrileges, they do without ſhame laugh to ſcorne both God & men? But becauſe they are in long poſſeſſion thereof, they thinke that now it is lawful for them. For whoſoeuer dare once open his mouth againſt theſe ſo euident & ſo hainous wicked doings, he is forthwith haled by them to puniſhment of death, as though it were one that had in old time diſcloſed abroad the holye myſteries of Ceres. Would they do this if they thought that there were any God?

6 Now howe much do they behaue themſelues better in beſtowing of benefices: which thing was once ioyned with the ordering, but nowe it is altogether ſeparate? There is among them a diuerſe manner. For the Biſhops onely do not conferre benefices: and in thoſe whereof they are ſaide to haue the conferring, they haue not the ful right, but other haue the preſentation, and they reteine only the title of collation for honors ſake. There are alſo nominations out of ſcholes, and reſignations, either ſimple, or made for cauſe of exchange, commendatorie writings, preuentions, and what ſoeuer is of that ſort. But they alſo behaue themſelues that none of them can reproche an other with any thing. So I affirme, that ſcarcely euery hundreth benefice, is beſtowed at this day in the papacie without Simonie, as the old writers defined Simonie. I doe not ſay that they all buy them with readie monie: but ſhewe me one of twentie that commeth to a benefice without ſome by commendation, ſome either kinred or alliance promoteth, and ſome the authoritie of their parentes: ſome by doing of pleaſures doe get themſelues fauor. Finally benefices are giuen to this ende, not to prouide for the Churches, but for them that receiue them. Therefore they cal them benefices, by which wordes they do sufficiently declare, that they make no other account of them, but as the beneficiall giftes of Princes, whereby they either get the fauour of their souldiers or reward their seruices. I omit how these rewardes are bestowed vpon barbars, cookes, moile keepers, and such dreggish men. And now iudiciall courts doe ring of no matters more, than about benefices: so that a man may say that they are nothing else but a pray cast afore dogges to hunt after. Is this tollerable euen to be heard of, that they should be called Pastors, which haue broken into the possession of a Church as into a ferme of their enemie? that haue gotten it by brawling in the lawe? that haue bought it for money? that haue deserued it by filthie seruices: which being children yet scantly able to speake, haue receiued it, as by inheritance from their vncles and kinsmen, and some bastards from their fathers?

Many churches committed to one mans charge vnable to order one.

7 Would euer the licentiousnesse of the people, though they had beene neuer so corrupt & lawlesse, haue gone so farre? But this is also mote monstruous, that one man, (I will not say what manner of man, but truely such a one as cannot gouerne himselfe) is set to gouerne fiue or sixe Churches. A man may see in these dayes in Princes courts, yong men that haue three abbaties, two Bishoprickes, one Archbishoprike, But there bee commonly Canons with fiue, sixe or seuen benefices, whereof they haue no care at all, but in receiuing the reuenues. I wil not obiect, that it is echewhere cried out against by the worde of God, which hath long agoe ceased to be of any estimation at all among them. I wil not obiect, that there haue bene many most seuere penal ordinances in many Councels made against this wickednesse: for those also they boldly despise as oft as they list. But I say that both are monstrous wicked doings, which are vtterly against God and nature & the gouernment of the Church, that one robber shal oppresse many Churches at once, and that he should be called a Pastor, which cannot be present with his flocke though he would: and yet (such is their shamefulnesse) they couer such abhominable filthinesse with the name of the Church to deliuer them selues from al blame. But also (and God will) in these lewdnesses is contrined that holy succession, by the merite wherof they boast that it is wrought that the Church may not perish.

Monkes in the church of Rome made priestes and stil continuing Monkes contrarie to the ancient both customes and Canons, yet when they are made, not discharging the dutie of priestie nesther.

Epi. 11. li. 3.

8 Nowe (which is the second marke in iudging a lawful Pastor) let vs see how faithfully they exercise their office. Of the Priestes that bee there created, some be Monkes, some be (as they call them) Secular. The first of these two companies was vnknowen to the old Church: and it is so against the profession of Monkes, to haue such a place in the Church, that in olde time when they were chosen out of Monasteries into the clergie, they ceased to be Monkes. And Gregorie, whose time had much dregges, yet suffred not this confusion to be made. For hee willeth that they bee put out of the cleargie that be made Abbots, for that no man can rightly be togethet both a Monke and a clearke: sith the one is a hinderance to the other. Nowe if I aske, howe hee well fulfilleth his office, whome the Canons declare to bee vnmeet, what I pray you, will they aunswere? They will forsooth alleadge vnto mee those vntimely borne decrees of Innocent and Boniface, whereby Monkes are ſo receiued into the honour and power of Prieſthood, that they might ſtill abide in their Monaſteries. But what reaſon is this, that euerie vnlearned aſſe, ſo ſoone as he hath once poſſeſſed the ſea of Rome, maie with one worde ouerthrow all antiquitie? But of this matter we ſhall ſpeake hereafter. Let this ſuffice for this time, that in the purer Church it was holden for a great abſurdity, if a Monke did execute the office of Prieſthoode. For Hierome ſaieth that he doth not execute the office of a Prieſt, while he is conuerſant among Monkes: and maketh himſelfe one of the common people to be ruled by the Prieſtes. But, although we graunt them this, what do they of their dutie? Of the mendicants ſome doe preach, all the other Monkes either ſing or mumble vp maſſes in their dennes. As though either Chriſt willed, or the nature of the office ſuffereth Prieſts to be made to this purpoſe. Whereas the Scripture plainly teſtifieth, that it is the prieſtes office to rule his owne Church, is it not a wicked prophanation, to turne an other way, yea vtterly to change the holie inſtitution of God? For when they are ordered, they are expreſſly forbidden to doe the thinges that God commandeth al prieſts. For this ſong is ſong to them: let a Monke content with his cloiſter, not preſume to miniſter the Sacramentes, not to execute anie thing belonging to publike office. Let them denie, if they can, that it is an open mockerie of God, that any prieſt ſhould be made to this purpoſe, to abſteine from his true and naturall office: and that he which hath the name may not haue the thing. Act. 20. 23.

9 I come to the ſecular prieſts: which are partly beneficed men, (as they cal them) that is to ſay, haue benefices whereupon to liue: and partly doe let out their daily labour to hire, in maſſing, or ſinging, and liue as it were of a ſtipend gathered thereupon. Benefices haue either care of ſoules, as biſhoprikes and cure of paroches: or they be the ſtipends of deintie men, that get their liuing with ſinging, as prebendes, Canonſhips, perſonages, and dignities, chaplainſhips and ſuch other. Howbeit, ſince thinges are now turned vpſide downe, Abbacies and priories are giuen to verie boyes, by priuiledge, that is to ſay by common and vſuall cuſtome. As concerning the hirelings, that get their liuing from day to day, what ſhould they doe otherwiſe than they do? that is in ſeruile and ſhamefull maner to giue out them ſelues for gaine, ſpecially ſith there is ſo great a multitude as nowe the worlde ſwarmeth with. Therefore when they dare not beg openly, or foraſmuch as they thinke they ſhoulde but litle profite that way, they goe about like hungrie dogges, and with their importunacie, as with barking, they enforce out of men againſt their willes ſomewhat to thruſt into their belly. Here if I would go about to expreſſe in words, how great a diſhonor it is to the Church, that the honor and office of prieſthood is come to this point, I ſhoulde haue no ende. Therefore it is not meete that the readers ſhould looke for at my hande ſuch a long declaration as may be proportional to ſo hainous indignitie. Briefelie I ſay, if it be the office of prieſthood, (as the word of God preſcribeth, and the auncient canons require) to feede the Church, and to gouerne the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt: all ſuch ſacrificers as haue none other worke or wages, but in making a market of maſſes, are not onely idle in their office, but alſo haue no office at all to exerciſe. For there is no 1. Cor. 4. 21.

The abuſes of the Churche of Rome in the office of her ſecular prieſts.

place assigned them to teach: they haue no flocke to gouerne: Finally there is nothing left to them, but the altar, whereupon to sacrifice Christ: which is not to offer to God, but to diuels, as we shal see in another place.

Other idle sorts of priestes neither gouerning the Church nor distributing at all the word or Sacraments.

10 I doe not here touch the outward faultes, but only the inwarde euil, which sticketh fast by the roote in their institution. I will adde a saying, which wil sound ill in their eares: but because it is true, I must speake it: that in the same degree are to be accounted Canons, Deanes, Chaplaines, Prouostes, and all they that are fedde with idle benefices. For what seruice can they do to the Church? For they haue put from themselues the preaching of the worde, the care of discipline, and ministration of Sacraments, as too much troublesome burdens. What then haue they remaining, whereby they may boast themselues to be true priestes? Singing forsooth, and a pompe of Ceremonies. But what is that to the purpose? If they alleage custome, if vse, if prescription of long time: I againe on the other side do laie vnto them the definition of Christ, whereby he hath expressed vnto vs both true priestes, and what they ought to haue that wil be accounted such. But if they cannot beare so harde a lawe, to submit themselues to Christes rule: at the least let them suffer this matter to be determined by the authoritie of the Primitiue church. But their case shalbe neuer the better, if their state be iudged by the olde Canons. They that haue degenerate into Canons, should haue beene priestes, as they were in olde time, that should rule the Church in common with the Bishop, and be as it were his companions in the office of Pastor. Those Chapter dignities as they call them, doe nothing at all belong to the gouerning of the Church: much lesse, chapleinships, and the other dregges of like names. What account then shall we make of them al? Truely both the worde of Christ, and the vsage of the Church excludeth them from the honour of priesthood. Yet they stiffely holde that they be priestes: but wee must plucke off their visour: so shall we finde that their whole profession is most strange and farre remoued from that office of priests, both which the Apostles describe vnto vs, and which was required in the primitiue church. Therefore all such orders, with what titles soeuer they be notified, sith they be newe, being verily neither vpholden by the institution of God, nor by the auncient vsage of the Church, ought to haue no place in the description of the spiritual gouernment, which the Church hath receiued consecrate with the Lordes owne mouth. Or (if they wil rather haue me to speake more simply and grossely) for as much as chaplaines, Canons, Deanes, Prouostes, & other idle bellies of the same sort, doe not so much as with their litle finger touch any smal parcel of that office, which is necessarily required in priests, it is not to be suffered, that in wrongfully taking a false honour vpon themselues, they should breake the holy institution of Christ.

Abuses in the office of Bishops and persons in parishes belonging to the Church of Rome.

11 There remaine Bishops, and persons of Paroches: who I would to God they did striue to reteine their office. For wee woulde willingly graunt vnto them, that they haue a godlie and excellent office, if they did execute it. But when they will be accounted Pastors, while they forsake the Churches committed to them, and cast the care of them vpon other, they doe as if it were the Pastors office to doe nothing. If an vsurer that neuer stirred his foote out of the citie, woulde professe himselfe a plowman, or a keeper of a vineyarde: if a ſouldiour that had beene continually in the battaile and in the campe, and had neuer ſeene iudicial court or bookes, would boaſt himſelfe for a lawyer, who could abide ſuch ſtinking follies? But theſe men doe ſomewhat more abſurdly, that wil ſeeme and be called lawful Paſtors of the Church, and yet will not be ſo. For how many a one is there, that doeth ſo much, as in ſhewe, exerciſe the gouernement of his Church? Manie doe all their life lõg deuoure the reuenues of churches, to which they neuer come ſo much as to looke vpon them. Some other do once by yeare either come themſelues, or ſende their ſteward, that nothing ſhould bee loſte in the letting to farme. When this corruption firſt crept in, they that woulde enioye this kinde of vacation, exempted themſelues by priuileges: nowe it is a rare example, to haue one reſident in his owne Church. For they eſteeme them none otherwiſe than farmes ouer which they ſet their vicars as bailifes or farmers. But this very natural reaſon reiecteth, that he ſhoulde be paſtor of a flocke, that neuer ſawe one ſheepe thereof.

13 It appeareth that euen in the time of Gregorie, there were certaine ſeedes to this miſchiefe, that the rulers of Churches, began to be negligent in teaching: for he doeth in one place greeuouſly complaine of it. The world (ſaieth he) is ful of prieſtes, but yet in the harueſt there are ſeldome wormen founde: becauſe in deede we take vpon vs the office of prieſt, but wee fulfill not the worke of the office. Againe, becauſe they haue not the bowels of charitie, they will ſeeme Lordes: they acknowledge not themſelues to bee fathers. They change the place of humilitie into the aduaunceing of lordlineſſe. Againe, but what doe we, O paſtours, which receiue the rewarde, and are nõ workemen? We are fallen to outwarde buſineſſe, and wee take in hande one thing, and performe an other. We leaue the miniſtery of preaching: and to our puniſhment, as I ſee, we are called Biſhops, that keepe the name of honour and not of vertue. Sith he vſeth ſo great ſharpeneſſe of wordes againſt them, which were but leſſe continuing and leſſe diligent in their office. What I pray you, woulde he ſay, if he ſawe of the Biſhops almoſt none, or truely verie few, and of the reſt ſcarcely euery hundreth man once in all his life to go vp into a pulpit? For men be come to ſuch madneſſe, that it is commonly counted a thing too baſe for the dignitie of a Biſhoppe, to make a ſermon to the people. In the time of Bernard, thinges were ſomwhat more decaied: but we ſee alſo with how ſharpe chidinges he inueieth againſt the whole order: which yet it is likely to haue beene then much purer than it is nowe.

Hom. 17. Negligence of Biſhoppes and paſtors in the office of preaching the vvorde.

13 But if a man do well weigh & examine this outward forme of eccleſiaſtical gouernment that is at this day vnder the papacy, he ſhal finde that there is no theeuiſh corner wherin robbers do more licentiouſly range without lawe and meaſure. Truely all thinges are there ſo vnlike the inſtitution of Chriſt, yea ſo contrarie to it, they are ſo degenerate from the auncièt ordinances and maners of the Church, they are ſo repugnant to nature and reaſon, that there can be no greater iniurie done to Chriſt, than when they pretende his name to the defence of ſo diſordered gouernment. Wee (ſaye they) are the pillers of the church, the chiefe Biſhoppes of religion, the vicars of Chriſt, the heades of the faithfull: becauſe the power of the apoſtles is by is by succeſſion come vnto vs. They are alway bragging of theſe follies, as though they talked vnto ſtockes. But ſo oft as they ſhall boaſt of this, I wyll aske of them againe, what they haue common with the Apoſtles. For wee ſpeake not of any inheritably deſcending honour that may be giuen to men euen while they lie ſleeping: but of the office of preaching, which they ſo much flee from. Likwiſe when we affirme that their kingdome is the tyranny of Antichriſt, by & by they aunſwere, that it is that reuerende Hierarchie, ſo oft praiſed of notable and holy men. As though the holye fathers, when they commended the Eccleſiaſticall Hierarchie or ſpirituall gouernement, as it was deliuered them from hande to hande from the Apoſtles, did dreame of this miſhapen and waſt diſordered heape, where the Biſhoppes are for the moſt part, either rude aſſes, which know not the verie firſt & cõmon principles of faith, or ſometime children yet new come frõ the nourſe: & if any be learneder (which yet is a rare example) they thinke a biſhoprike to be nothing els but a title of glorioufneſſe and magnificence: where the perſons of Churches thinke no more of feeding the flocke, than a ſhoemaker doth of plowing: where al things are cõfounded with more than babylonical diſperſing, that there remaineth no more any one ſteppe whol of that ordinance of the Fathers.

14 What if we deſcende to their maners? where ſhalbe that light of the world, which Chriſt requireth? where is the ſalt of the earth? where is that holineſſe, which may be as a perpetuall rule to iudge by? There is no degree of men at this day more ill ſpoken of for riot, wantonneſſe, deintines, finally all kinde of luſtes. There are of no degree men either fitter, or cunninger maiſters of all deceit, fraude, treaſon, and breach of faith: there is no where ſo great cunning or boldneſſe to doe hurt. I paſſe ouer their diſdainfulneſſe, pride, extortion, crueltie. I paſſe ouer the diſſolute licentiouſneſſe in all the partes of their life. In ſuffering whereof the world is ſo wearied, ỹ it is not to be feared, ỹ I ſhould ſeeme to enforce any thing too much. This one thing I ſay, which they themſelues ſhal not be able to deny: that of biſhops there is almoſt none, of the Parſons of paroches not the hundreth man: but if iudgement ſhould be giuen of his maners according to the old Canons, hee ſhould be either to be excomunicate: or at leaſt to be put from his office. I ſeeme to ſay ſomewhat incredible: ſo farre is that auncient diſcipline growen out of vſe, that commanded an exacter trial to be had of the maners of the clergy: but the trueth is ſo. Now let them goe, that fight vnder the ſtanderd & guiding of the ſea of Rome, and let them boaſt among themſelues of the order of prieſthood. As for the order ỹ they haue, truely it is euident, ỹ it is neither of Chriſt, nor of his Apoſtles, nor of the fathers, nor of the olde Church.

What Deacons doe in the church of Rome.

15 Now let the Deacons come forth, & ỹ moſt holy diſtributing that they haue of the goods of the Church. Howbeit they doe not nowe create their Deacons to that purpoſe, for they enioyne thẽ nothing els but to miniſter at the altar, to read & ſing the Goſpel, & do I wote not what trifles. Nothing of the almes, nothing of the care of the poore, nothing of all that function which they in olde time executed. I ſpeake of the verie inſtitution. For if we haue reſpect what they do, in deede it is not to them an office, but onely a ſteppe toward prieſthood. In one thing, they that keepe the Deacons place at the maſſe, do repreſent a voide image of antiquitie. For they receiue the offrings before the conſecration. This was the auncient maner, that before the communion of the Supper, the faithfull did kiſſe one another, and offer their almes at the altar: ſo firſt by a ſigne, and afterwarde by very liberalitie they ſhewed their charitie. The Deacon, that was the poore mans ſtewarde, receiued that which was giuen, to diſtribute it. Now of thoſe almes, there commeth no more to the poore, than if they were throwen into the ſea. Therefore they mocke the Church with this lying Deaconrie. Truely therein they haue nothing like, neither to the inſtitution of the Apoſtles, nor to the auncient vſage. But the very diſtribution of the goods they haue conueyed another way: & haue ſo framed it, ỹ nothing can be deuiſed more vnorderly. For as theeues, when they haue cut mens throtes, doe diuide the pray among them: ſo theſe, after the quenching of the light of Gods worde, as though the Church were ſlaine, do thinke that whatſoeuer was dedicate to holy vſes is layde for pray and ſpoile. Therefore making a diuiſion, euery one hath ſnatched to himſelfe as much as he could.

The ſpoile they haue made of Churchgoods, and the iniurie they doe thereby to the poore.

16 Here all theſe old orders, that wee haue declared, are not only troubled, but vtterly wiped out and raſed. The Byſhops and prieſtes of Cities, which being made rich by this pray, were turned into Canons, haue made hauocke of the cheefe part among them. But it appeareth that the partition was vnorderly, becauſe to this day they ſtriue about the bounds. Whatſoeuer it be, by this diuiſion it is prouided, that not one halfpeny of the goods of the Church ſhould come to the poore, whoſe had bene the halfe part at leaſt. For the Canons do giue them the fourth part by name: and the other fourth part they doe therefore appoint to the byſhops, that they ſhould beſtowe it vpon hoſpitalitie, and other duties of Charitie, I ſpeak not what the clearkes ought to doe with their portion, and to what vſe they ought to beſtowe it. For we haue ſufficiently declared, that the reſt which is appointed for temples, buildings and other expenſes, ought to be open for the pore in neceſſitie. I pray you, if they had one ſparke of the fear of God in their hart would they abide this burden of conſcience, that all that they eate, & wherwith they be clothed, commeth of theft, yea of ſacriledge? But ſith they are litle moued with the iudgemẽt of God, they ſhould at leaſt think, that thoſe be men endued with wit and reaſon, to whome they woulde perſwade, that they haue ſo goodly & wel framed orders in their Church, as they are wont to boaſt. Let them aunſwere mee ſhortly, whether deaconrie be a licence to ſteale and robbe. If they deny this, they ſhall alſo bee compelled to confeſſe, that they haue no deaconrie left: for as much as among them, all the diſpoſition of the goods of the Church is openly turned into a ſpoiling full of ſacriledge.

The preteníe vvhich they haue as if the kingdom of Chriſt, vvere by theſe meanes made more glorious.

17 But here they vſe a verie faire colour. For they ſay, that the dignity of the Church is by that magnificence not vncomlily vpholden. And they haue of their ſect ſome ſo ſhameleſſe, ỹ they dare openly boaſt, that ſo onely are fulfilled thoſe prophecies, whereby the olde Prophets deſcribe ỹ glorioufneſſe of the kingdome of Chriſt, when that kingly gorgeouſnes is ſeene in ỹ prieſtly order. Not in vain (ſay they) God hath promiſed theſe thinges to his his Church. Kinges shall come, they shal worship in thy sight, they shal bring thee giftes. Arise, arise, cloth thee with thy strength, O Syon: cloth thee with the garments of thy glory, O Hierusalem: Al shal come from Saba, bringing golde and incense, and speaking praise to the Lorde. All the cattell of Cedar shall be gathered together to thee. If I should tary long vpon confuting this leawdnesse, I feare least I shoulde seeme fond. Therefore I will not lose wordes in vaine. But I aske: if any Iewe would abuse these testimonies, what solution would they giue? Verily they would reprehende his dulnesse, for that he transferred those things to the flesh and the worlde, that are spiritually spoken of the spirituall kingdome of Christ. For wee knowe, that the Prophets, vnder the image of earthly thinges, did paint out vnto vs the heauenly glory of God, that ought to shine in the Church. For the Church had neuer lesse abundaunce of these blessings, which their words expresse, than in the time of the Apostles: and yet all confesse, that the force of the kindogme of Christ then cheefly florished abroade. What then meane these sayinges? Whatsoeuer is any where precious, high, excellent, it ought to bee made subiect to the Lorde. Whereas it is namely spoken of kinges, that they shall submit their scepters to Christe, that they shall throw down their crownes before his feete, that they shal dedicate their goods to the Church: when (will they say) was it better and more fully performed, than when Theodosius, casting away his purple robe, leauing the ornaments of the empire, as some one of the common people: submitted himselfe before God and the Church, to solemne penance? thé when he & other like godly princes bestowed their endeuors and their cares to preserue pure doctrine in the church, and to cherish & defend sound teachers? But how priests at that time exceeded not in superfluous riches, that onely sentence of the Synode at Aquileia, where Ambrose was cheefe, sufficiently declareth: Glorious is pouerty in the Priestes of the Lorde. Truely the Byshops had at that time some riches, wherewith they might haue set out the churches honor, if they had thought those to be the true ornaments of the Church. But when they knew ỹ there was nothing more against the office of Pastors, than to glister & shew themselues proudly with deintinesse of fare, with gorgeousnes of garments, with great traine of seruaunts, with stately palaces, they followed and kept the humblenes and modestie, yea the very pouertie which Christe holilie appointed among his ministers.

How far their bestowing of Church goods differeth from that which either the Apostles or the ancient fathers vsed.

18 But that wee may not bee too long in this point, let vs againe gather into a short summe, how farre that dispensation or dislipation of the goods of the Church, that is nowe vsed, differeth from the true deaconrie, which both the worde of God commendeth vnto vs, and the ancient church obserued. As for that which is bestowed vpon the garnishing of temples, I say it is ill bestowed, if that measure be not vsed, which both the very nature of holy thinges appointeth, that the Apostles and other holy fathers haue prescribed both by doctrine and examples. But what like thing is there seene at this day in the temples? whatsoeuer is framed, I will not say after that auncient sparing, but to any honest meane it is reiected. Nothing at all pleaseth, but that which sauoureth of riot and the corruption of times. In the meane time they are so farre from hauing due care of the liuely temples, that that they would rather ſuffer many thouſands of the poore to periſh for hũger, than they would breake the leaſt chalice or cruit, to relieue their nede. And that I may not pronounce of my ſelf any thing more greeuouſly againſt them, this only I would haue the godly readers to thinke vpon: if it ſhoulde happen that ſame Exuperius biſhop of Tholoſa, whom we euen now rehearſed, or Acatius, or Ambroſe, or any ſuch to be raiſeed from death, what they would ſay. Truely they woulde not allow that in ſo great neceſſitie of the poore, riches in a manner ſuperfluous ſhould be turned another way. Admit I ſpeak nothing how theſe vſes vpon which they be beſtowed, (although there were no poore) are many waies hurtfull, but in no behalfe profitable. But I leaue to ſpeake of men. Theſe goods are dedicate to Chriſt: therefore they are to be diſpoſed after his will. But they ſhall in vaine ſaye, that this part is beſtowed vpon Chriſt, which they haue waſted otherwiſe thã he commanded. Howbeit, to confeſſe the truth, there is not much of the ordinary reuenue of the Church abated for theſe expenſes. For there are no biſhoprikes ſo welthy, no abaties ſo fatte, finally neither ſo many, nor ſo large benefices ỳ may ſerue to fil the gluttony of prieſts. But while they ſeeke to ſpare themſelues, they perſwade the people by ſuperſtitiõ, to turne ỳ which ſhould be beſtowed vpon the poore, to builde temples to ſet vp images, to buy iewels, to get coſtly garmentes. So with this gulfe are the daylie almes conſumed.

19 Of the reuenue, that they receiue of their landes and poſſeſſion, what elſe ſhall I ſay, but that which I haue alraedye ſaide, and which is before all mens eies? We ſee with what faithfulnes they which are called biſhops and Abbots do diſpoſe the greateſt part. What madnes is it, to ſeeke here for an eccleſiaſtical order? Was it meete that they, whoſe life ought to haue beene a ſingular example of frugalitie, modeſtie, continence, and humilitie, ſhould contende with the royaltie of princes in number of goods, in gorgiouſneſſe of houſes, in daintineſſe of apparel and fare? And how much was this contrarie to their office, that they, whom the eternal and inuiolable commandement of GOD forbiddeth to be deſirous of filthie gaine, and biddeth to be content with ſimple liuing, ſhould not only laye handes vpon townes and caſtels, but alſo violently enter vpon the greateſt lordſhipps, finally poſſeſſe forceably verie empires? If they deſpiſe the word of GOD: what wyll they aunſwere to thoſe auncient decrees of the Synodes: whereby it is decreed that the biſhop ſhould haue a ſmal lodging not far from the Church, meane fare and houſholde ſtuffe? what will they ſaye to that praiſe of the Synode at Aquileia: where pouertie is reported glorious in the Prieſtes of the Lorde? For perhappes they will vtterly refuſe as too much rigorous, that which Hierome aduiſeth Nepotianus, that poore men and ſtraungers: and among them Chriſte as a gueſt, may knowe his table. But that whiche hee by and by addeth, they will be aſhamed to denye that it is the glorye of a biſhoppe to prouide for the goods of the poore: that it is the ſhame of all prieſtes to ſtudie for their owne riches. But they can not receiue this, but they muſt all condemne themſelues of ſhame. But it is not needefull in this place to ſpeake more hardly againſt them, ſith my meaning was nothing elſe, but to ſhewe, that among them the lawefull order of deaconrie is long ago taken away: that they may no more glory of this title to the cõmẽdation of their Church: which I thinke I haue already ſufficiently ſhewed.

The vi. Chapter.

Of the Supremacy of the Sea of Rome.

The ſupremacie of the ſea of Rome neither deriued from Chriſtes inſtitution, nor from the vſe of the olde Church.

HItherto we haue rehearſed thoſe orders of the Church, which were in the gouernment of the olde Church: but afterward corrupted in times, and from thenceforth more and more abuſed, doe nowe in the Popiſhe Church retaine only their name, and in deed are nothing elſe but viſours: that by compariſon the godly reader might iudge, what manner of Church the Romaniſtes haue, for whoſe ſake they make vs ſchiſmatikes, becauſe we haue departed from it. But as for the heade and toppe of the whole order, that is to ſay, the ſupremacie of the ſea of Rome, whereby they trauaile to prooue that they only haue the catholike Church, wee haue not yet touched it: becauſe it tooke beginning neither from the inſtitution of Chriſte, not frõ the vſe of the olde church, as thoſe former parts did: which we haue ſhewed to haue ſo proceeded from antiquitie, ỹ by wickednes of times they are vtterly degenerate, and haue put on altogether a newe forme. And yet they go about to perſwade the worlde, that this is the chiefe & in a manner only bonde of the vnitie of the church, if we cleaue to the ſea of Rome, and continue in the obedience thereof. They reſt (I ſay) principally vpon this ſtay, when they will take away the Church from vs, and claime it to themſelues, for ỹ they kepe the head, vpon which the vnity of the Church hangeth, and without which the church muſt needes fall a ſunder and be broken in peeces. For thus they thinke, that the Church is as it were a maimed and headleſſe body, vnleſſe it be ſubiect to the ſea of Rome, as to her heade. Therfore when they talke of their Hierarchie, they alway take their beginning at this principle: that the biſhop of Rome (as the vicar of Chriſt, which is the head of the Church) is in his ſteede Preſident of the vniuerſall Church: and that otherwiſe the Church is not well ordered, vnleſſe that Sea doe holde the ſupremacy aboue al other. Therfore this alſo is to be examined of what ſort it is: that we may omit nothing that pertaineth to a iuſt gouernment of the Church.

The high prieſtes authoritie amõgſt the Iewes no proofe for the ſouereigne dignitie of Rome.

2 Let this therefore be the principall point of the queſtion: Whether it be neceſſary for the true forme of Hierarchie (as they call it) or eccleſiaſticall order, that one Sea ſhoulde be aboue the reſt both in dignitie and in power, that it may be the head of the whole body. But we make the church ſubiect to too vniuſt lawes, if we lay this neceſſity vpon it, without the word of God. Therefore if the aduerſaries will proue ỹ which they require, they muſt firſt ſhew that this diſpoſition was ordeined by Chriſt. For this purpoſe they alledg out of the law the high prieſthood, alſo the high iudgemẽt, which God did inſtitute at Hieruſalem. But it is eaſie to giue a ſolution, and that manye waies, if one way doe not ſatisfie them. Frſt no reaſon compelleth to extende that to the whole world, which was profitable in one nation: yea rather, the order of one nation and of the whole world ſhall be farre different.

Becauſe

Becauſe the Iewes were on ech ſide compaſſed with idolaters: ỹ they ſhould not be diuerſly drawne with varietie of religions, God appointed the place of worſhiping him in the middeſt part of the lande: there hee ordeined ouer them one heade By ſhoppe, whom they ſhould haue al regard vnto, that they might bee the better kept together in vnitie. Nowe when religion is ſpred abroade into the whole worlde, who doeth not ſee that it is altogether an abſurditie, that the gouernment of the Eaſt & Weſt be giuen to one man? For it is in effect as much as if a man ſhoulde affirme that the whole worlde ought to be gouerned by one ruler, becauſe one peece of lande hath no mo rulers but one. But there is yet another reaſon, why that ought not to be made an example to be followed. No man is ignorant that the high byſhop was a figure of Chriſt. Now, ſince the priſthood is remooued, that right muſt alſo bee remoued. But to whome is it remooued? Truely, not to the Pope (as he himſelfe is ſo bolde ſhameleſly to boaſt) when he draweth this title to himſelfe: but to Chriſt, which as he alone ſuſteineth this office, without any vicar or ſucceſſor, ſo hee reſigneth the honor to none other. For the Prieſthoode conſiſteth not in doctrine onely, but in the appeaſing of God, which Chriſt hath fully wrought by his death, & in that intercеſſion which he now vſeth with his father. Heb. 7. 12.

3 There is therefore no cauſe why they ſhoulde binde vs by this example, as by a perpetuall rule, which wee haue ſeene to bee enduring but for a time. Out of the newe Teſtament they haue nothing to bring foorth for proofe of their opinion, but that it was ſayde to one: Thou art Peter, and vpon this ſtone I will builde my Church. Againe, Peter, Loueſt thou mee? Feede my ſheepe. But admitting that theſe bee ſtrong proofes, they muſt firſt ſhewe, that hee which is commaunded to feeede the flocke of Chriſte, hath power committed to him ouer all Churches: and that to binde and to looſe is nothing elſe but to bee ruler of all the worlde. But as Peter had receiued the commaundement of the Lord, ſo hee exhorteth all other prieſts to feede the Church. Heereby we may gather, that by this ſaying of Chriſt, there was either nothing giuen to Peter more than to the reſt, or that Peter did egally cõmunicate with other the power that he had receiued. But, that we ſtriue not vainely, wee haue in another place a cleare expoſition out of the mouth of Chriſte, what is to binde and looſe: that is to ſay, to reteine and to forgiue ſinnes. But the manner of binding and loſing, both the whole Scripture eche where ſheweth, and Paul very well declareth, when hee ſaith that the miniſters of the Goſpell, haue commaundement to reconcile men to GOD, and alſo haue power to puniſhe them that refuſe this benefite.

Thinges in the newe teſtament ſpoken to Peter, prooue not the power vvhich the Byſhop of Rome challengeth.

4 Howe ſhamefully they wreſt thoſe places, that make mention of binding and looſing, I both haue already ſhortly touched, and a little after I ſhall haue occaſion to declare more at large. Nowe it is good to ſee onely, what they gather of that famous aunſwere of Chriſt to Peter. Hee promiſed him the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: he ſayde that whatſoeuer hee bounde in earth, ſhoulde bee bounde in heauen. If we agree vpon the word keyes, and the manner of binding, all contention ſhall by and by ceaſe. For the Pope him ſelfe will gladly giue ouer the charge inioyned to the A-

VVhat keyes Chriſt gaue vnto Peter.

Poſtles, which beeing full of trauell and greefe, ſhould ſhake from him his Pleaſures, without gaine. For as much as the heauens are opened vnto vs by the doctrine of the Goſpell, it is with a very fit metaphore expreſſed by the name of keyes. Now men are bounde and looſed in no other wiſe, but when faith reconcileth ſome to God, and there own vnbeleef bindeth other ſome. If the Pope did take this onely vpon him: I think there wil be no man that woulde either enuy it or ſtriue about it. But becauſe this ſucceſſion being trauelſome and nothing gainefull pleaſeth not the Pope, heereupon groweth the beginning of the contention, what Chriſt promiſed to Peter. Therefore I gather by the very matter ir ſelfe, that there is nothing meant, but the dignitie of the office of an apoſtle, which cannot be ſeuered from the charge. For if that definition which I haue rehearſed, bee receiued (which cannot but ſhameleſly be reiected) here is nothing giuen to Peter, that was not alſo common to his other fellowes: becauſe otherwiſe there ſhoulde not onely wrong be done to the perſons, but ỹ very maieſtie of doctrine ſhoulde halt. They cry out on the other ſide: what auaileth it, I pray you, to run vpon this rock? For they ſhall not prooue, but as the preaching of one ſame goſpel was enioined to al the apoſtles, ſo they were alſo al alike furniſhed with power to binde & looſe. Chriſte (ſay they) appointed Peter Prince of the whole church, when he promiſed that he would giue him the keyes. But ỹ which he thẽ promiſed to one, in anothet place he gaue it alſo to all the reſt, & deliuered it as it were into their hands. If the ſame power were granted to al, which was promiſed to one, wherein ſhal he be aboue his fellows? Herein (ſay they) he excelleth, becauſe he receiued it both in common together with them, and ſeuerally by himſelf, which was not giuen to the other, but in common. What if I aunſwere with Cyprian and Auguſtine, that Chriſte did it not for this purpoſe, to prefer one man before other, but ſo to ſet out the vnitie of ỹ Church. For thus ſaith Cyprian, that God in the perſon of one gaue the keies to all, to ſignify the vnitie of all: and that the reſt were the ſame thing that Peter was, endued with like partaking both of honour & power: but ỹ the beginning is taken at vnitie, that the church of Chriſte may bee ſhewed to bee one. Auguſtine ſaith: If there were not in Peter a myſterie of the church, the Lorde woulde not ſay to him, I will giue thee the keyes. For if this was ſaide to Peter, the Church hath them not: but if the church haue them, then Peter, when he receiued the keyes, betokened the whole church. And in an other place. When they were all asked, onely Peter anſwered, thou art Chriſt: and it is ſayd to him, I wil giue thee the keies, as though he alone had receiued the power of binding and looſing: whereas both he being one ſaide that one for all, & he receiued the other with al, as bearing the perſon of vnitie. Therefore one for all, becauſe there is vnitie in all.

cleaue also together among our selues. He (say they) aboue the rest: because he hath the name peculiarly. In deede I do willingly graunt this honour to Peter, that in the building of the Church he be placed among the first, or (if they wil haue this also) the first of all the faithfull: but I wil not suffer them to gather thereupon, that he should haue a Supremacie ouer the rest. For what manner of gathering is this? Hee excelleth other in feruentnesse of zeale, in learning, & courage: therfore he hath power ouer them. As though we might not with better colour gather, that Andrewe is in degree before Peter, because he went before him in time, & brought him to Christ. But I passe ouer this. Let Peter truely haue the first place, yet there is great difference betweene the honour of degree & power. We see that the Apostles cõmonly graunted this to Peter, that he should speake in assemblies, & after a certaine manner go before them with propounding, exhorting, & admonishing: but of his power we read nothing at all. Iohn. 1. 40. & 42

6 Howbeit wee bee not yet come to dispute of that point: onely at this present I would prooue, that they doe too fondly reason, when by the onely name of Peter they woulde build an Empire ouer the whole Church. For those old follies wherewith they went about to deceiue at the beginning, are not worthie to be rehearsed, much lesse to be confuted, that the Church was builded vpon Peter, because it was said vpon this rocke, &c. But some of the Fathers haue so expounded it. But when the whole Scripture crieth out to the contrarie, to what purpose is their authoritie alleadged against God? Yea, why do we striue about the meaning of these wordes, as though it were darke or doubtfull, when nothing can bee more plainly nor more certainly spoken? Peter had confessed in his own and his brethrens name that Christ is the sonne of God. Vpon this rocke Christ buildeth his Church: because it is (as Paul saith) the onely foundation, beside which there can be laid none other. Neither do I here therefore refuse the authoritie of the Fathers, because I want their testimonies, if I lifted to alleadge them: but (as I haue said) I wil not with contending about so cleare a matter trouble the readers in vaine, specially sith this point hath beene long agoe diligently enough handled and declared by men of our side. Vpon vvhat rock Christ hath builded his Church. Mat. 16. 16. 1. Cor. 3. 11.

7 And yet in deede no man can better assoyle this question, than the Scripture it selfe, if we compare all the places, where it teacheth, what office & power Peter had among the Apostles, howe he behaued himselfe, and howe he was accepted of them. Runne ouer all that remaineth written, you shall finde nothing else, but that hee was one of the xii. equall with the rest and their fellowe, but not their Lorde. Hee doeth in deede propound to the councell, if any thing bee to be done, and giueth warning what is meete to be done: but therewithall hee heareth other, and doeth not onely graunt them place to speake their minde, but leaueth the iudgement to them: when they had determined, he followed and obeyed. When he writeth to the Pastors, he doth not commaund them by authoritie, as Superior: but hee maketh them his companions, and gently exhorteth them, as equals are wont to doe. When hee was accused for that hee had gone in to the Gentiles, although it were without cause, yet he answered and purged himselfe. When hee was commaunded by his fellowes, to goe with Iohn into Samaria, hee The vvhole course of Peters dealings sheevve him to haue beene a fellovv vvith the rest of the Apostles, & not a Lord ouer them. Act. 15. 5. 1. Pet. 5. 1. Act. 11. 3. Act. 8. 24.

refuſed nor. Whereas the Apoſtles did ſend him, they did thereby declare that they helde him not for their ſuperior. Whereas hee obeyed and tooke vppon him the embaſſage committed to him, hee did thereby confeſſe that hee had a fellowſhip with them, and not an authoritie ouer them. If none of theſe things were, yet the onely Epiſtle to the Galathians may eaſily take all doubting from vs: where almoſt in two whole Chapters together Paul trauelleth to prooue nothing elſe, but that hee himſelfe was equall to Peter in honour of Apoſtleſhip. Then hee rehearſeth that hee came to Peter, not to profeſſe ſubiection, but only to make their conſent of doctrine approoued by teſtimonie to all men: and that Peter himſelfe required no ſuch thing, but gaue him his right hande of fellowſhip, to worke in common together in the Lordes vineyarde: and that there was no leſſer grace giuen to him among the Gentiles, than to Peter among the Iewes: Finally that when Peter dealt not verie faithfully, hee was corrected by him, and obeyed his reprouing. All theſe thinges doe make plaine, either that there was an equalitie betweene Paul and Peter, or at leaſt that Peter had no more power ouer the reſt, than they had ouer him. And (as I haue alreadie ſaide) Paul of purpoſe laboureth about this, that none ſhoulde preferre before him in the Apoſtleſhip either Peter, or Iohn, which were fellowes, not Lordes.

Gal. 1. 18. & 2. 8.

If Peter were the Prince of the Apoſtles, it followeth not hereupon that the whole worlde ſhould be ſubiect to the Biſhop of Rome.

8 But, to graunt them that which they require concerning Peter, that is, that hee was the Prince of the Apoſtles, and excelled the reſt in dignitie: yet there is no cauſe why they ſhould of a ſingular example make an vniuerſall rule, and drawe to perpetuitie that which hath beene once done: ſith there is a farre differing reaſon. One was cheefe among the Apoſtles: forſooth, becauſe they were fewe in number. If one were the cheefe of twelue men, ſhall it therefore follow that one ought to be made ruler of a hundred thouſand men? It is no maruell that twelue had one among them y ſhoulde rule them all. For nature beareth this, and the witte of men requireth this, that in euery aſſembly, although they be al equall in power, yet there be one as a gouernour, whome the reſt may haue regarde vnto. There is no court without a Conſull: no ſeſſion of iudges without a Pretor, or Propounder, no companie without a Ruler, no fellowſhip without a Maiſter. So ſhoulde it bee no abſurditie, if we confeſſed that the Apoſtles gaue to Peter ſuch a ſupremacie. But that which is of force among fewe, is not by and by to bee drawen to the whole worlde, to the ruling whereof no one man is ſufficient. But (ſay they) this hath place no leſſe in the whole vniuerſalitie of nature, than in all the partes, that there be one ſoueraigne heade of all. And hereof (and God will) they fetch a proofe from Cranes and Bees, which alway chooſe to themſelues one guide, not many. I allowe in deede the examples which they bring foorth: but do Bees reſort together out of all the worlde to chooſe them one king? euery ſeuerall king is content with his owne hyue. So among Cranes, euery heard hath their owne king. What elſe ſhall they proue hereby, but that euery Church ought to haue their owne ſeuerall Biſhop appointed them? Then they cal vs to ciuil examples. They alleage that ſaying of Homer, It is not good to haue many gouernours: and ſuch things as in like ſenſe are read in prophane writers to the commendation tion of Monarchie. The answeare is easie. For Monarchie is not praised of Vlysses in Homere, or of anie other, in this meaning, as though one ought to be Emperour of the whole world: but they meane to shew that one kingdome cannot hold two kings: and that power (as he calleth it) can abide no companion.

9 But let it be as they will, that it is good and profitable that the whole world be holden vnder Monarchy, which yet is a very great absurdity: but let it be so: yet I will not therfore graunt that the same should take place in the gouernment of the Church. For the Church hath Christ her only head, vnder whose dominion we all cleaue together, according to that order & that forme of pollicie which he hath prescribed. Therfore they do a great wrong to Christ, when by that pretence they will haue one man to be ruler of the vniuersal church, because it cānot be without a head. For Christ is the head of whom the whole body coupled & knit together in euery ioynt, wherwith one ministreth to an other, according to the working of euerie member in the measure thereof, maketh increase of the bodie. See you not, how he setteth al men without exception in the body, & leaueth the honor & name of head to Christ alone? See you not how he giueth to euery member a certain measure, and a determined & limited function: whereby both the perfectiō of the grace & the soueraigne power of gouernāce may remain with Christ only? Neither am I ignorāt what they are wont to cauil, whē this is obiected against them: they say that Christ is properly called the only head, because he alone raigneth by his own authoritie & in his owne name: but that this nothing withstandeth, but that there may be vnder him another ministerial head (as they terme it) that may be his vicegerent in earth. But by this cauillation they preuaile nothing, vnles they first shew that this ministery was ordained by Christ. For the Apostle teacheth, that the whole ministratiō is dispersed through the members, & that the power floweth frō the one heauenly head. Or if they wil haue it any plainer spoken, sith the Scripture testifieth that Christ is the head, & claimeth that honour to him alone, it ought not to be transferred to any other, but whom Christ himselfe hath made his vicar. But that is not only no where read, but also maie be largely confuted by many places.

No head of the vvhole Church but one Iesu Christ.

Ephe. 4. 15.

Ephe. 1. 22. & 4. 15. & 5. 13. Col. 1. 18. & 2. 10.

Ephe. 4 10.

10 Paul somtimes depainteth vnto vs a liuely image of the Church. Of one head he maketh there no mention. But rather by his description we may gather, that it is disagreeing from the institution of Christ. Christ at his ascending tooke from vs the visible presence of himselfe: yet he went vp to fulfill all thinges. Now therefore the Church hath him yet present, and alway shal haue. When Paul goeth about to shew the meane whereby hee presenteth himselfe, he calleth vs backe to the ministeries which he vseth. The Lorde (saith he) is in vs all, according to the measure of grace that hee hath giuen to euery member. Therfore he hath appointed some Apostles, some pastors, some Euangelistes, other some Teachers, &c. Why doth he not say, that he hath set one ouer all, to be his vicegerent For the place required that principally, and it could by no meanes haue bin omitted, if it had bin true. Christ (saith he) is with vs. How? by the ministery of men, whom he hath appointed to gouerne the Church. Why not rather by the ministeriall head, to whom he hath committed his ſteede? He nameth vnitie: but in God, and in the faith of Chriſt. He aſſigneth to men nothing but common miniſterie, and to euery one a particular meaſure. In that commẽdation of vnity, after that he had ſaid that there is one body, one ſpirit, one hope of calling, one God, one Faith, one Baptiſme, why hath he not alſo immediatly added one chiefe biſhop, that may hold the Church together in vnity? For nothing could haue beene more fitly ſpoken, if it had beene true. Let that place be diligently weighed. It is no doubt but that he meant there altogether to repreſent the holie and ſpirituall gouernment of the Church, which they that came after called Hierarchie. As for Monarchie among miniſters, he not only nameth none, but alſo ſheweth that there is none. It is alſo no doubt but ỳ he meant to expreſſe the manner of conioyning, wherby the faithfull cleaue together with Chriſt their head. There he not onely ſpeaketh of no miniſterial head, but appointeth to euery of the members a particular working according to the meaſure of grace diſtributed to euery one. Neither is there any reaſon why they ſhould ſuttlety diſpute of the cõpariſon of the heauenly & earthly Hierarchie. For it is not ſafe to know beyond meaſure of it. And in framing this gouernment we muſt folow no other figure, than the Lord himſelf hath painted out in his word.

The Apostles knevv no monarchie in the ministeriall gouernmēt of the Church.

Ephe. 4. 7. & 11.

If Peter had a ſupremacie not onelie to be confirmed vnto him but alſo conueied vnto others, the title of the biſhop of Rome is not hereby proued.

11 Now although I graunt them an other thing, which they ſhall neuer win by proofe before ſober men, that the ſupremacie of the Church was ſo ſtabliſhed in Peter, that it ſhoulde alway remaine by perpetuall ſucceſſion: yet howe will they prooue, that his ſeate was ſo placed at Rome, that whoſoeuer is Biſhop of that Church, ſhould be ſet ouer the whole worlde? By what right do they binde this dignitie to the place, which is giuen without mention of place? Peter (ſay they) liued and died at Rome, What did Chriſt himſelfe? Did not he, while he liued, exerciſe his Biſhoprike, and in dying fulfill the office of Prieſthood, at Hieruſalem? The Prince of Paſtors, the ſoueraigne Biſhop, the heade of the Church, could not purchaſe honor to the place: and could Peter, that was farre inferior to him? Are not theſe follies more than childiſh? Chriſt gaue the honor of ſupremacie to Peter: Peter ſate at Rome, therefore he there placed the ſea of ſupremacie. By this reaſon the Iſraelites in old time might haue ſet the ſeate of Supremacie in the deſert, where Moſes the chiefe Teacher and Prince of Prophets executed his miniſterie and died.

Deut. 34.5.

A vaine ſurmiſe that the ſupremacie of the Church belonging ſometime to Antioch was by the Lords commandement thence tranſlated to Rome.

12. quæſt. 1. cap.

12 Let vs ſee how trimly they reaſon. Peter (ſay they) had the Supremacy among the Apoſtles: therfore the church where he ſate ought to haue that priuiledge. But where ſate he firſt? At Antioch, ſay they. Therefore the Church of Antioch doth rightly claime to it ſelfe the ſupremacie. They cõfeſſe that it was in old time the firſt: but they ſay, that in remouing thence he remoued to Rome the honour that hee brought with him. For there is an Epiſtle vnder the name of Pope Marcellus to the biſhoppes of Antioche, where he ſayeth thus: Peters ſeate was at the beginning with you, which afterward by the Lordes commaundement was remoued hither. So the Church of Antioche, which was once the chiefe, hath giuen place to the ſea of Rome, But by what Oracle had that good man learned, that the Lord ſo commanded? For if this cauſe be to be determined by the law, it is neceſſary that that they aunſwere, whether they wil haue this priuiledge to be perſonal, or real, or mixt. For it muſt be one of theſe three. If they ſay that it is perſonall, then it belongeth nothing to the place. If they ſay that it is reall, then when it is once giuen to the place, it is not take away by reaſon either of the death or departure of the perſon. It remaineth therefore that they muſt ſay it is mixt: but then that place ſhall be not ſimply to be conſidered, vnleſſe the perſon do alſo agree Let them chooſe which ſoeuer they will, I will by and by inferre and eaſily proue, that Rome can by no meane take the ſupremacie vpon it ſelfe.

If the firſt place be granted to the Church of Rome, vvhy the ſecond vnto Alexandria before either Antioch, or Epheſus, or Ieruſalem.

13 But be it, that as (they triflingly ſay) the ſupremacie was remoued frō Antioch to Rome: yet why did not Antioch keep the ſecond place? For if Rome haue therefore the firſt place, becauſe Peter ſate there to the end of his life: to whome ſhall the ſecond place rather be graunted, than where he had his firſt ſeate? How came it to paſſe then, that Alexandria went before Antioche? How agreeth it, that the Church of one diſciple ſhould be aboue the ſeat of Peter? If honor be due to euery Church, according to the worthines of the founder, what ſhal we ſay alſo of the other Churches? Paul nameth three, that ſeemed to be pillers, Iames, Peter, & Iohn. If the firſt place were giuen to the ſea of Rome in the honor of Peter: do not the ſeas of Epheſus, & Hieruſalem, where Iohn & James ſate, deſerue the ſecond & third place? But among the Patriarches Hieruſalem had the laſt place: Epheſus could not ſit ſo much as in the vttermoſt corner. And other Churches were left out both all thoſe that Paul founded, & thoſe that the other Apoſtles were rulers of. The ſeate of Mark, which was but one of their diſciples, obtained the honour. Therefore they muſt either confeſſe that that was a prepoſterous order, or they muſt graunt vs that this is not a perpetuall rule, that there be due to euery Church the ſame degree of honour which the founder had.

Gal.2.9.

Peters ſitting at Rome ſcarce vvorthie of credit.

14 Howbeit, as for that which they report of Peters ſitting in the Church of Rome, I ſee not what credite it ought to haue. Truely that which is in Euſebius, that he ruled there fiue & twentie yeres, is verie eaſily confuted. For it is euident by the firſt & ſecond Chapter to the Galathians, that about twentie yeres after the death of Chriſt, he was at Hieruſalem, and that then he went to Antioch: where how long he was, is vncertaine. Gregorie reckeneth ſeuen yeares, and Euſebius twentie and fiue. But from the death of Chriſt, to the ende of Neroes Empire, (in whoſe time they ſay that hee was ſlaine) there ſhalbe founde but thirtie and ſeuen yeares. For the Lorde ſuffered vnder Tiberius, the eighteenth yeare of his Empire. If you rebate twentie yeares, during the which Paul is witneſſe that Peter dwelt at Hieruſalem, there will remaine but ſeuenteene yeres at the moſt, which muſt now be diuided betweene two Biſhoprikes. If he taried long at Antioch hee could not ſit at Rome, but a verie litle while. Which thing wee may yet alſo more plainly proue. Paul wrote to the Romanes, when he was in his iourney going to Hieruſalem, where he was taken and from thence brought to Rome. It is not likely that this Epiſtle was written foure yeares before that hee came to Rome. Therein is yet no mention of Peter, which ſhould not haue bin left out, if Peter had ruled that church. Yea & in the end alſo, whē he rehearſeth a great nnmber of the godly, whom he biddeth to be ſaluted, where verily he gathereth together all thoſe that he knewe, he yet ſayth vtterly nothing of Peter. Neither is it needefull here to make a long or curious demonſtration to men of ſound iudgement: for the matter it ſelfe, and the whole argumẽt of the Epiſtle crieth out, that he ſhould not haue ouerpaſſed Peter, if he had beene at Rome.

As Peters gouerning the church of Rome is hardly proued, ſo his ſucceſſor in gouernement is not agreed vpon: his deedes & death at Rome vncertaine: his being Bishop of Rome and that ſo long moſt improbable.

15 Then Paul was brought priſoner to Rome. Luke reporteth that hee was receiued of the brethren, of Peter he ſayeth nothing. Hee wrote from thence to many Churches: and in ſome places alſo hee writeth ſalutations in the names of certaine: but he doeth not in one worde ſhewe that Peter was there at that time. Who, I pray you ſhal thinke it likely, that hee coulde haue paſſed him ouer with ſilence, if he had beene preſent? Yea to the Philippians, where he ſaid that hee had none that ſo faithfully looked vnto the worke of the Lord, as Timothie, hee complained that they did all ſeeke their own. And to the ſame Timothie he maketh a more grieuous complaint, that none was with him at his firſt defence, but all forſooke him: where therefore was Peter then? For if they ſay that he was then at Rome, how great a ſhame doth Paul charge him with, that hee was a forſaker of the Goſpel? For hee ſpeaketh of the beleeuers: becauſe he addeth, God impute it not vnto them. How long therefore, and in what time did Peter keepe that ſeate? But it is a conſtant opinion of writers, that hee gouerned that Church euen to his death. But among the writers themſelues it is not certain who was his ſucceſſor, becauſe ſome ſay Linus, and other ſome ſay Clement. And they tell many fond fables, of the diſputation had betweene him and Simon the Magician. And Auguſtine ſticketh not to confeſſe, when hee entreateth of ſuperſtitions, that by reaſon of an opinion raſhly conceiued, there was a cuſtome growen in vſe at Rome, that they ſhould not faſt that day that Peter got the victorie of Simon the Magician. Finally the doings of that time are ſo entangled with diuerſitie of opinions, that we ought not raſhly to beleeue where we finde any thing written. And yet by reaſon of this conſent of writers, I ſtriue not againſt this, that he died there: but yet that he was Biſhop there, & ſpecially a long time, I cannot be perſwaded, neither do I much paſſe vpõ that alſo: for as much as Paul teſtifieth that Peters Apoſtleſhip did peculiarly belong to the Iewes, and his owne to vs. Therefore that that fellowſhip which they couenanted betweene themſelues, may be confirmed with vs, or rather that the ordinance of the holy Ghoſt may ſtand in force amõg vs, we ought to haue reſpect rather to the Apoſtleſhip of Paul & Peter. For the holy ghoſt ſo diuided the prouinces betweene them that he appointed Peter to the Iewes, and Paul to vs. Now therefore let the Romaniſtes go & ſeeke their ſupremacie elſe where than in the word of God, where it is found not to be grounded.

Auguſt. ad Sanar.

Three cauſes why the fathers did attribute ſo much to the Church of Rome.

16 Nowe let vs come to the olde Church, that it may alſo bee made to appeare plainly that our aduerſaries doe no leſſe cauſeleſly, and falſely boaſt of the conſent thereof, than they doe of the witneſſe of the worde of God. When therefore they bragge of that principle of theirs, that the vnitie of the Church cannot otherwiſe bee kept together, but if there bee one ſupreme head in earth, to whom al the members may obey, and that therfore the Lord gaue the ſupremacie to Peter, and from thence forth to the ſea of Rome by right of ſucceſſion, that the ſame ſhould remaine in it to the ende: they affirme, that this hath beene alway obſerued from the beginning. But forasmuch as they wrongfully wreſt manie teſtimonies, I will firſt ſay this aforehand, that I denie not but that the writers doe eche where giue great honor to the church of Rome, and do ſpeak reuerently of it. Which I thinke to be done ſpecially for three cauſes. For that ſame opiniõ, which I wote not how was growen in force, that it was founded and ordeined by the miniſterie of Peter, much auailed to procure fauour & eſtimation vnto it. Therefore in the Eaſt parts it was for honors ſake called the ſea Apoſtolike. Secondly, when the head of the Empire was there, & that therefore it was likely, that in that place were men more excellent both in learning & wiſedom, & skil, & experience of many things, than any where elſe there was worthily conſideration had thereof, that both the honor of the citie, & alſo the other more excellent gifts of God ſhould not ſeeme to be deſpiſed. There was beſide theſe alſo a third thing, ỳ when the Churches of the Eaſt, and of Grecia, yea & of Affrica, were in tumults among themſelues with diſagreements of opinions, the Church of Rome was quieter & leſſe ful of troubles than the reſt. So came it to paſſe, that the godly & holie Biſhops, being driuen out of their ſeates, did oftentimes flee thither as into ſanctuarie or certaine hauen. For as the Weſterne men are of leſſe ſharpneſſe & ſwiftneſſe of wit, than the Aſians or Affricans be, ſo much are they leſſe deſirous of alteratiõs. This therefore added much authoritie to the Church of Rome, that in thoſe doubtfull times it was not ſo troubled as the reſt, and did hold the doctrine once deliuered them, faſter than all the reſt as we ſhall by and by better declare. For theſe three cauſes (I ſay) it was had in no ſmal honor, and commended with manie notable teſtimonies of the old writers.

Rome

17 But when our aduerſaries will thereupon gather that it hath a ſupremacy & ſoueraign power ouer other churches, they do too much amiſſe, as I haue alreadie ſaid. And that the ſame may the better appeare, I will firſt briefly ſhewe what the olde fathers thought of this vnitie which they enforce ſo earneſtly. Hierome writing to Nepotianus, after that he had recited many examples of vnitie, at the laſt deſcended to the Hierarchie of the Church. Eche Biſhop of euery ſeueral church, eche Archprieſt, eche Archdeacon, & all the eccleſiaſticall order, do reſt vpon their own rulers. Here a Romaine Prieſt ſpeaketh, he commendeth vnitie in the eccleſiaſtical order, why doth he not rehearſe that al Churches are knit together with one head as with one bond? Nothing could haue more fitly ſerued the matter that he had in hand: & it cannot be ſaid that it was for forgetfulnes, that he omitted it: for he would haue done nothing more willingly if the matter had ſuffred him. He ſaw therefore without doubt, that that is the true reaſon of vnitie which Cyprian excellently well deſcribeth in theſe words: The bithoprike is one, wherof eche hath a part wholly: & the Church is one, which is with encreaſe of fruitfulneſſe more largely extended into a multitude. Like as there are many ſunbeames & one light: and many branches of a tree, but one body grounded on a faſt holding roote: and like as from one fountaine flowe many ſtreams, & thogh the multitude ſeme to be diuerſly ſpred abroad with largenes of ouerflowing plenty, yet the vnitie is kept whole in the originall:

The fathers of the Church confeſſing the Churches vnitie neuer deemed that the Biſhop of Romes ſupremacie ſhould bee the bonde to make it one.

so the Church also being ouerspread with the light of the Lorde, extendeth her beames abroad throughout the whole world, yet is it but one that is ech where poured forth, and the vnitie of the body is not seuered: she spreadeth her brāches ouer the whole world, she sendeth out her ouerflowing streams: yet is there but one head and one beginning, &c. Afterward: The spouse of Christ cannot be an adultresse: she knoweth one onely house, she kepeth the holinesse of one only chamber with chast shamefastnesse. You see how hee maketh the vniuersal bishoprike to be Christes only, which comprehendeth the whole Church vnder him: and saith that all they that execute the office of bishop vnder this head, haue their partes thereof wholly. Where is the supremacie of the sea of Rome, if the whole bishoprike remaine with Christ onely, and ech bishop hath his part thereof wholly? These thinges therfore make to this purpose, that the reader may vnderstande by the way, that the olde fathers were vtterly ignorant of that principle, which the Romanistes do take for confessed & vndoubted, concerning the vnity of an earthly head in the Hierarchie of the Church.

The vij. Chapter.

Of the beginning and encreasing of the Papacie of Rome, vntil it aduanced it selfe to this height, vvhereby both the libertie of the Church hath bin oppressed, and all the right gouernment thereof ouerthrowen.

Sundry auncient Councels vvherein the Bishop of Rome had not the chiefest place.

AS concerning the auncientnesse of the supremacie of the sea of Rome, there is nothing had of more antiquitie to stablishe it, than the decree of the Nicene Synode, wherein the bishoppe of Rome both hath the first place among the Patriarches giuen vnto him, and is commanded to looke vnto the Churches adioyning to the citie. When the Councel maketh such diuision betweene him and the other Patriarches, that it assigneth to euery one their boundes: truely, it doeth not appoint him the head of all, but maketh him one of the chiefe. There were present Vitus and Vincentius in the name of Iulius, which then gouerned the church of Rome: to thē was giuen the fourth place. I beseech you, if Iulius were acknowledged the head of the Church, should his Legates bee thrust into the fourth seate? Should Athanasius be chiefe in the Councell, where principally the image of the Hierarchicall order ought to be seene? In the Synode at Ephesus it appeareth, that Celestinus which was then bishop of Rome, vsed a crooked suttle meane to prouide for the dignitie of his seate. For when hee sent his deputies thither, he committed his stede to Cyrillus of Alexandria, which shoulde notwithstanding otherwise haue beene the chiefe. To what purpose was that same committing, but that his name might by what meane soeuer abide in the first place? For his Legates sate in a lower place, and were asked their opinion among the rest, and subscribed in their order: in the meane time the Patriarch of Alexandria ioyned Celestines name with his own. What shal I say of the second councel at Ephesus: where when Leo Legates were present, yet Dioscorus Patriarch of Alexandria sate the chiefe as by his owne right? They will take exception that it was no vpright councel, by which both the holy man Flauianus was condemned, and Eutyches acquited acquited, and his vngodlines allowed. But when the Synod was gathered, when the bishops toke their places in order, verely the legates of the bishop of Rome sate there among the rest none otherwise than in a holy and lawfull Councel. Yet they striued not for the first place, but yeelded it to another: which they woulde neuer haue done, if they had thought it to be theirs of right. For the bishops of Rome were neuer ashamed to éter into the greatest contentions for their honors: & for this only cause oftentimes to vexe and trouble the Church with many & hurtful strifes. But because Leo saw that it should be a to much vnreasonable requeſt, if he should seek to get the chiefe place for his Legates, therefore he surceſſed it.

2 Then folowed the Councel of Chalcedon, in which by the grant of the Emperour the Legates of the Church of Rome sate in the chiefe place. But Leo himselfe confesseth ỹ this was an extraordinary priuilege. For when hee made petition for it to the Emperour Marcianus, and Pulcheria ỹ Empreſſe, he did not affirme ỹ it was due to him, but only pretended, that the Eastern Bishops, which sate as chiefe in the councel at Epheſus, troubled all thinges and ill abused their power. Wheras therfore it was needeful to haue a graue gouernor, & it was not likly that they should be meet for it, which had once ben so light and disordered: therfore he praied, that by teason of the default & vnfitnes of other, the office of gouerning might be remoued to him. Truly that which is gotten by singular priuilege and beside order, is not by common law. Where this only is pretended, that there needeth some newe gouernour, because the former gouernours had behaued themselues il, it is euident that it neither was so before, nor ought to continue so for euer, but is don onely in respect of present dãger. The bishop of Rome therfore had the first place in the Councel at Chalcedon: not because it was due to his sea, but because the Synode was at that time destitute of a graue and fit gouernour, while they that ought to haue ben the chiefe, did through their own intemperance & corrupt affection, thrust themselues out of place. And this that I say, Leos succeſſour did in deede proue. For when he sent his Legates to the fift Synode at Constantinople, which was holden long time after, he brauled not for the first seat, but easily suffered Menna the patriarch of Constantinople to sit as chiefe. So in the councell at Carthage, at which Auguſtine was present, we see that not the Legates of the sea of Rome. but Aurelius Archbishop of that place sate as chiefe: when yet the contention was about the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome. Yea there was also a generall councell holden in Italie it selfe, at which the bishop of Rome was not present. Ambroſe was chiefe there, which was in verie great authoritie with the Emperour, there was no mention made of the bishop of Rome. Therefore at that time it came to passe by the dignity of Ambroſe, that the sea of Millain was more noble than the sea of Rome.

The chiefeſt place in the councel of Chalcedon graunted by the Emperour at requeſt vpon ſpecial occaſion for that time to the Bishop of Rome, vvhich place in Synodes aftervvards held other bishops had as before.

3 As concerning the title of supremacy, & other titles of pride, whereupon it now marueilously boasteth it selfe, it is not hard to iudge, when & in what sort they crept in. Cyprian oftentimes maketh mention of Cornelius. He letteth him out with no other name, but by the name of brother, or felowe Bishop, or felow in office. But when he writeth to Stephen the succeſſor of Cornelius, he doth not only make him egal with himselfe & the rest, but also speaketh keth more hardly to him, charging him sometime with arrogancy, sometime with ignorance. Since Cyprian we haue with al the Church of Africa iudged of that matter. The Councell at Carthage did forbid that any should be called Prince of priestes, or chiefe Bishop, but only bishop of the chiefe sea. But if a man turne ouer the antienter monuments, hee shall finde that the Byshop of Rome at that time was content with the common name of brother. Certainly so long as the face of the Church continued true & pure, al these names of pride, wherewith since ỳ time the sea of Rome hath begun to waxe outragious, were vtterly vnheard of: it was not knowen, what was the highest bishop & the only head of the church in earth. But if the bishop of Rome had ben so bolde to haue taken such a thing vpon him, there were stout & wise men that would haue by & by repressed his folly. Hierome forasmuch as he was a priest at Rome, was not ill willing to set out the dignitie of his owne Church, so much as the matter & state of his time suffred: yet we see how he also bringeth it downe into fellowship with the rest. If authoritie (saieth he) be sought for, the world is greater than a city. Why doest thou alleage to me the custome of one city? Why doest thou defend smalnes of number, out of which hath growen pride, against the lawes of the church? Whersoeuer there be a bishop, either at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Constantinople, or at Rhegium, he is of the same merite and of the same priesthood. The power of riches or basenes of pouertie maketh not a bishop higher or lower.

Cap.47.

Ep.ad Euang.

4 About the title of vniuersal bishop the contentiō first begā in the time of Gregory, which was occasioned by the ambition of Iohn bishop of Constantinople. For he (which thing neuer any man before had attempted) woulde haue made himselfe vniuersal bishop. In that contention Gregorie doth not alleage that the right is rakē away which was due to himselfe: but stoutly crieth out against it, that it is a prophane name, yea ful of sacrilege, yea the forwarner of Antichrist. The whole Church (saith he) falleth downe from her state, if he fall which is called vniuersal. In an other place: It is very sorrowful, to suffer patiently, that our brother & fellow bishop, despising all other, should only be named bishop. But in this his pride what els is betokened but the times of Antichrist nere at hand? becaufe verely he foloweth him, ỳ despising the felowship of Angels, went about to climbe vp to the top of singularity. In an other place he writeth to Eulolius of Alexandria, and Anastasius of Antioche. None of my predecessors at any time woulde vse that prophane word: for if one be called vniuersall Patriarch, the name of patriarches is abated from the rest. But farre may this be from a christian minde, that any should haue a will to take that vpon him, whereby he may in any part, be it neuer so litle, diminish the honor of his brethren. To consent in this wicked word is nothing els but to leese the faith. It is one thing (saith he) ỳ we owe to the preseruing of the vnity of faith, & an other thing that we owe to the keeping downe of pride. But I say it boldly, because whosoeuer calleth himselfe or desireth to be called vniuersal bishop, he doth in his proude aduancing run before antichrist, because he doth with shewing himself proud preferre himselfe aboue the rest. Againe to Anastasius bishop of Alexandria: I haue said ỳ he can not haue peace with vs, vnlesse he amended the aduancing of the superstitious and proud word, which the first apostata hath inuented.

And

And (to speake nothing of the wrong done to your honour) if one be called vniuersall byshop, the vniuersall Church falleth when that vniuersall one falleth. But whereas he writeth, that this honour was offred to Leo in the Synode at Chalcedon, it hath no colour of truth. For neither is there any such thing red in the actes of that Synode. And Leo himselfe, which with many Epistles impugneth the decree there made in honour of the sea of Constantinople, without doubt would not haue passed ouer this argument, which had beene most to be liked of all other, if it had beene true, that hee refused that which was giuen him: & beeing a man otherwise too much desirous of honor, he would not haue omitted that which made for his praise. Therefore Gregory was deceiued in this, that hee thought that that title was offered to the sea of Rome by the Synode at Chalcedon: to speake nothing, howe fond it is, that hee both testifieth it to haue proceeded from the holy Synode, & also at the same time called it wicked, prophane, abhominable, proude, and full of sacriledge, yea deuised by the deuill, and published by the crier of Antichriste. And yet he addeth that his predecessor refused it, least all Priestes should be depriued of their due honor, when any thing were priuately giuen to one. In another place: no man at any time hath willed to be called by that word. No man hath taken to himselfe that presumptuous name: least if hee should in the degree of bishoprike take to himselfe a glory of singularity, he should seeme to haue denied the same to all his brethren. Lib.4.Epist.79. Lib.7.Epist.79.

5 Now I come to the iurisdiction, which the bishoppe of Rome affirmeth that he hath ouer all Churches. I knowe howe great contentions haue bene in olde time about this matter: For there hath bene no time wherein the sea of Rome hath not couered to get an Empire ouer other Churches. And in this place it shall not be out of season, to search by what meanes it grewe then by litle & little to some power. I do not yet speak of that infinite empire, which it hath not so long ago taken by force to it self: for we will differre that to a place conuenient. But heere it is good to shewe briefly, howe in olde time and by what meanes it hath aduanced it selfe, to take to it selfe any power ouer other Churches. When the Churches of the East were diuided & troubled with the factions of the Arriane vnder the Emperours Constantius and Constans the sonnes of Constantine the Great, and Athanasius the cheefe defendour there of the true fayth was driuen out of his seat: such calamity compelled him to come to Rome, that with the authority of the sea of Rome, hee might both after a sort represse the rage of his enimies, and confirme the godly that were in distresse. He was honourably receiued of Iulius then Byshop, and obtained that the Byshops of the West tooke vppon them the defence of his cause. Therefore when the godly stoode in great neede of forraine aid, and sawe that there was verie good succour for them in the church of Rome, they willingly gaue vnto it the most authoritie ỳ they could. But all ỳ was nothing else, but ỳ the communion thereof should be highly esteemed and it should be counted a great shame to be excommunicate of it. Afterward euil & wicked men also added much vnto it. For, to escape lawful iudgements, they fled to this sanctuary. Therfore if any priest were condemned by his Byshop, or any byshop by the Synode of his prouince, they by and by appealed to Rome. And the byshops of Rome receiued such appellations

The grounde whereupon the soueraignty of the Bishop of Rome did first take roote was his intermedling in those causes, and his readinesse to aid those persons, which being bad were readie any where to seeke maintenance.

more greedily than was meet: becauſe it ſeemed to be a forme of extraordinary power, ſo to entermeddle with matters far & wide about them. So when Eutyches was condemned by Flauianus biſhop of Conſtantinople, he complained to Leo that he had wrong done vnto him. Leo without delay, no leſſe vndiſcreetely than ſoudenly, tooke in hand the defence of an euill cauſe: he grieuouſlie inueyed againſt Flauianus, as though hee had, without hearing the cauſe, condemned an innocent: and by this his ambition he cauſed that the vngodlineſſe of Eutyches was for a certaine ſpace of time ſtrengthened. In Affrica it is euident that this oftentimes chaunced. For ſo ſoone as any lewde man had taken a foile in ordinarie iudgement, he by and by flewe to Rome, and charged his countrimen with many ſlaunderous reports: and the ſea of Rome was alway ready to entermeddle. Which lewdneſſe compelled the biſhops of Affrica to make a lawe, that none vnder paine of excommunication ſhould appeale beyond the ſea.

In conſecrating of Byſhops, the powuer of the Byſhop of Rome no other but the ſame vvhich in other places others had. Lib.2.Epiſt. 68.and 70.

6 But whatſoeuer it were, let vs ſee what authoritie or power the ſea of Rome then had. Eccleſiaſticall power is conteined in theſe foure pointes, ordering of byſhops, ſummoning of Councels, hearing of appeales or iuriſdiction, chaſtiſing admonitions or cenſures. All the old Synodes commaunde byſhops to be conſecrate by their owne Metropolitanes: and they neuer bid the biſhop of Rome to be called vnto it, but in his owne Patriarchie. But by little and little it grewe in vſe, that all the Byſhops of Italie came to Rome to fetch their conſecration, except the Metropolitans, which ſuffered not them ſelues to be brought into ſuch bondage: but when any Metropolitane was to bee conſecrate, the biſhoppe of Rome ſent thither one of his prieſtes, which ſhould only be preſent, but not preſident. Of which thing there is an example in Gregory: at the conſecration of Conſtantius biſhop of Millain after the death of Laurence. Howbeit I doe not thinke that that was a verie auncient inſtitution: but when at the beginning for honor & good wils ſake they ſent one to another their Legates, to be witneſſes of the conſecration, and to teſtify their communion with them, afterward that which was voluntary, began to bee holden for neceſſary. Howſoeuer it bee, it is euident that in olde time the byſhop of Rome had not the power of conſecrating, but in the prouince of his owne Patriarchie, that is to ſay in the Churches adioyning to the citie, as the canon of the Nicene Synode ſaith. To the Conſecration was annexed the ſending of a Synodicall Epiſtle, in which he was nothing aboue the reſt. For the Patriarches were wont immediatly after their conſecration, by ſolemne writing to declare their faith, whereby they profeſſed y they ſubſcribed to the holy & catholike councels. So rendring an account of their faith, they did approue themſelues one to another. If the Byſhop of Rome had receiued of other, and not himſelfe giuen this confeſſion, hee had thereby bin acknowledged ſuperiour but when he was no leſſe bound to giue it, than to require it of other, and to be ſubiect to the common lawe: truely that was a token of fellowſhip, not of dominion. Of this thing there is an example in Gregories Epiſtle to Anaſtaſius and to Cyriacus of Conſtantinople, and in other places to all the Patriarches togither.

Lib.1. Epiſt. 25. Lib.6.epi.169. Lib.1. Epiſt. 24.

The Biſhop of Rome as vvell cenſured by others as others by him.

7 Then follow admonitions or cenſures; which as in old time y biſhops of Rome yſed toward other, ſo they did againe ſuffer them of other. Irenæus grie-greeuously reproued Victor, because he vndiscretly for a thing of no value, troubled the church with a pernitious dissention. Victor obeyed, & spurned not against it. Such a liberty was then in vre among the holy bishops, ỳ they vsed a brotherly authority toward the bishop of Rome, in admonishing and chastising him if he at any time offended. He againe, whē occasion required did admonish other of their duety: & if there were any fault, rebuked it. For Cyprian, when he exhorteth Stephen to admonish the bishoppes of France, fetcheth not his argument from the greater power, but from the common right that priestes haue among themselues. I beseech you, if Stephen hadde then ben ruler ouer Fraunce, would not Cyprian haue said: Restraine them, because they be thine? but he saith farre otherwise. This (saith he) the brotherly fellowship, wherwith we be bound one to an other requireth that we should admonish one an other. And we see also with how great sharpnes of words he being otherwise a man of a milde nature inueyeth against Stephen himselfe, when he thinketh him to be too insolent. Therefore in this behalfe also there appeareth not yet, that the bishop of Rome had any iurisdiction ouer them that were not of his owne prouince.

Epi. 13. li. 3 Ad pomp. Contr. Epist. Stephani.

8 As concerning the calling together of Synodes, this was the office of euery Metropolitane, at certaine appointed times to assemble a prouinciall Synode. There the bishop of Rome had no authoritie. But a general Counsell the Emperor only might summon. For if any of the bishops had attēpted it, not only they ỳ were out of his prouince, would not haue obeied his calling, but also there would by & by haue risen an vprore. Therefore the Emperor indifferently warned them al to be present. Socrates in deed reporteth, that Iulius did expostulate with the bishops of the East, because they called him not to the Synode of Antioch, wheras it was forbidden by the Canons, that any thing should be decreed without the knowledge of the bishop of Rome. But who doth not see that this is to be vnderstāded of such decrees as bind the whole vniuersall Church? Now it is no maruel, if thus much be granted both to the antiquitie & honor of the citie, & to the dignitie of the sea, that there should be no general decree made of religion, in the absence of the bishop of Rome, if he refuse not to be present. But what is this to the dominion ouer the whole Church? For we deny not, that he was one of the chiefe: but we wil not graunt, that which the Romanistes now affirme, that he had a dominion ouer all.

General Councels sommoned onely by the Emperour: prouincial as wel by other bishops in their territories as by the bishop of Rome.

Tripar. hist. lib. 4.

9 Now remaineth the fourth kind of power, which standeth in appeales. It is euident that he hath the chiefe power, to whose iudgement seate appellation is made. Many oftentimes appealed to the bishop of Rome, and he himselfe also went about to draw the hearing of causes to himself: but he was alway laughed to scorne, when he passed his owne boundes. I will speake no thing of the East & of Grecia: but it is certaine that the bishops of Fraunce stoutly withstoode him, when hee seemed to take to himselfe an empire ouer them. In Affrica there was long debate about that matter. For where at the Melenitane Councell, at which Augustine was presente, they were excommunicate that appealed beyonde the sea, the bishoppe of Rome trauailed to bring to passe, that that decree might be amended. He sent his legates to shew that that priuilege was giuen to him by the Nicene Councel.

The bishop of Rome misliked and vvithstoode for ouerreaching his boundes and receiuing appeales vvhich should not by order haue ben brought vnto him.

The

The Legates brough forth the actes of the Nicene Councell, which they had fetched out of the ſtorehouſe of their own Church. The Affricans withſtood it, and denied that the biſhop of Rome ought to be credited in their owne cauſe: and ſaied that therefore they would ſende to Conſtantinople, & into other cities of Grecia, where copies were to be had that were leſſe ſuſpicious. It was founde, that therein was no ſuch thing written, as the Romans had pretended. So was that decree confirmed, which toke the chiefe hearing of cauſes from the biſhop of Rome: In which doing the lewd ſhameleſnes of the biſhop of Rome himſelfe appeared. For when he guilefully did thruſt in the Synode at Sardos in ſteede of the Nicene Synode, he was ſhamfully taken in a manifeſt falſehood. But yet greater & more ſhameleſſe was their wickednes, that added a forged Epiſtle to the Councel, wherin I wote not what byſhop of Carthage, condemning the arrogance of Aurelius his predeceſſour, for that he was ſo bold to withdraw himſelfe from the obedience of the ſea Apoſtolike, and yeelding himſelfe and his Church, humbly craueth pardon. Theſe be the goodly monumentes of antiquitie, wherupō the maieſtie of the ſea of Rome is founded, while they ſo childiſhly lie, vnder the pretence of antiquity, ỹ very blinde men may finde it out by groping. Aurelius (ſaieth he) puffed vp with diueliſh boldneſſe and ſtubbornneſſe, rebelled againſt Chriſt, and ſaint Peter, & therfore to be condemned with curſe. What ſaid Auguſtine? But what ſaid ſo many fathers that were preſent at the Mileuitane Councell? But what neede is it to ſpende many wordes in confuting that fooliſh writing, which the Romaniſtes themſelues, if they haue any face left, can not looke vpon without great ſhame? So Gratian, I cannot tell whether of malice or of ignorance, where he rehearſed that decree that they ſhould be excommunicate that appell beyond the ſea, addeth an exception: Vnleſſe paraduenture they appel to the ſea of Rome. What may a mā do to theſe beaſts, which are ſo void of common reaſon, ỹ they except ỹ only thing out of the law, for whoſe cauſe euery man ſeeth ỹ the lawe was made? For the Councel when it condemneth appelles beyond the ſea, forbiddeth only this, that none ſhould appel to Rome. Here the good expoſitor excepteth Rome out of the common lawe.

2. queſt, c. 4

The Biſhop of Rome appointed and others ioyned with him by Conſtātin to heare an appeal made by a biſhop of carthage: and in the ſame cauſe the byſhop of Orleance appointed by the ſame Emperour to heare an appeale made from the Biſhop of Rome.
Aug. ep. 16. 2.

10 But (to determine this queſtion at once) one hiſtory ſhal make plaine what maner of iuriſdictiō the biſhop of Rome had in olde time. Donate of the blackhouſes had accuſed Cecilian biſhop of Carthage. The man accuſed was condemned, his cauſe not heard. For whē he knew that the biſhops had cōſpired againſt him, he would not appeare. Then the matter came to the Emperour Conſtantine. He, foraſmuch as he willed to haue the matter ended by eccleſiaſtical iudgement, committed the hearing of it to Melciades byſhoppe of Rome. To whome he adioyned fellowe commiſſioners, many byſhops of Italie, Fraunce, and Spayne. If that belonged to the ordinary iuriſdiction of the ſea of Rome, to heare an appelle in an eccleſiaſtical cauſe: why doth he ſuffer other to be ioyned with him at the wil of the Emperour? Yea why did he himſelfe take the iudgement vpō him rather by the Emperours commaundement, than by his owne office? But let vs heare what hapned afterward. There Cecilian got the victory. Donat of the blacke houſes was condemned for ſclaunder: he appelled: Conſtantine cōmitted the iudgement of of the appeale to the bishop of Orleance. He sate as iudge, to pronounce what he thought, after ỹ bishop of Rome. If the sea of Rome hath the cheefe power without appellation: why doth Melciades suffer himselfe to receiue so great a shame, that the bishop of Orleance should be preferred aboue him? And what Emperour doth this? euen Constantine of whome they boast that he emploied not only al his endeuor, but in a maner al the riches of the empire to increse the dignitie of their sea. We see therefore nowe, howe farre the byshoppe of Rome was at that time by all meanes from that supreme dominion, which he affirmeth to be giuen vnto him by Christ ouer all Churches, and which hee lyingly saith that hee hath in all ages possessed by the consent of the whole worlde.

11 I knowe howe many epistles there bee, howe many writings and decrees, wherein the byshops do giue much, and boldly challenge much vnto it. But this also al men that haue but a very litle wit & learning do know, that the most part of those are so vnsauorie, that by the first tast of them a man may soone find out of what shop they came. For what man of sound wit and sober, will thinke that that goodly interpretation is Anacletus his owne, which is in Gratian reported vnder the name of Anacletus: that is, that Cephas is a heade? The Romanistes doe at this day abuse for defence of their see, many such trifles, which Gratian hath patched together without iudgement: and yet still in so great light they will sell such smokes, wherewith in olde time they were wont to mocke out the ignorant in darkenesse. But I wil not bestowe much labour in confuting those thinges, which do openly confute themselues by reason of their vnsauory follie. I graunt that there remaine also true epistles of the old bishops, wherein they set forth the honor of their sea with glorious titles, of which sort are some epistles of Leo. For that man, as he was learned and eloquent, so was he also aboue measure desirous of glorie and dominion: but whether the Churches then beleeued his testimony when hee so aduaunced him selfe, that in deede is it that is in controuersie. But it appeareth that many offended with his ambition, did also withstande his greedie desire. Sometimes he appointed in his steed the byshop of Thessalonica throughout Grecia and other Countries adioyning: sometime hee appointed the byshop of Orleance, or some other throughout Fraunce. So he appointed Hormisdas byshop of Hispalis to be his vicar in Spain: but euery where he excepteth, that he giueth out such appointmentes vpon this condition, that the Metropolitans may haue their auncient priuiledges remaining safe and whole. But Leo himselfe declareth, that this is one of their priuiledges, that if any doubt happen about any matter, the Metropolitane shoulde first be asked his aduise. Therefore those appointments of vicars in his steede were vpon this condition, that neither any byshop should be letted in his ordinary iurisdiction, nor any Metropolitan in being iudge of Appeales, nor any prouincial Councel in ordering of their Churches. What was this else but to absteine from all iurisdiction: but to entermedle to the appeasing of discordes, onely so farre as the Lawe and nature of the communion of the Church suffereth?

Forged helps to bolster out the Romish supremacie, the ambitious humor of Leo, vvhose power notvvithstanding vvas not such as the sea of Rome nowv chalengeth. Dist. 11. cap. Sacrosanct.

Epist. 86.

The calamitie of other places in Gregories time exalted the dignity of the church of Rome, but vvithout ouerthrovving the ordinarie iurisdiction vvhich others had.

12 In Gregories time that auncient order was already much chaunged. For when the Empire was shaken, and torne in peeces, when Fraunce and Spaine

Spaine were afflicted with many ouerthrowes receiued, Slauonia wasted, Italy vexed, and Affrica in a manner destroied with continuall calamities, that in so great a shaking of ciuill affaires, at least the integritie of faith might remaine, or yet not vtterly perish, all the bishops from ech part did the rather ioyne themselues to the bishop of Rome. Thereby it came to passe, that not onely the dignitie, but also the power of that sea greatly encreased. Howebeit I doe not so much passe by what meanes it was brought about. Truely it appeareth that it was then greater than in the ages before. And yet it then greatly differed from beeing an vnbridled dominion, that one man might beare rule ouer other after his owne will. But the sea of Rome had this reuerence, that it might with her authoritie subdue & represse the lewde and obstinate that could not by the other bishops be kept within their duetie. For Gregory doth oftentimes diligently testify this, that hee doth no lesse faithfully preserue to other men their rightes, than he requireth his own of them. Neither doe I (saith he) pricked on by ambition, plucke from any man that which is his right: but I desire in all thinges to honour my brethren. There is no saying in his writings wherin he doth more proudly boast of the largenesse of his Supremacie, than this: I knowe not what by shop is not subiect to the sea Apostolike when he is founde in fault. But hee by and by adioyneth. Where fault requireth, not all according to the order of humilitie are equall. Hee giueth to himselfe power to correct them that haue offended: if all doe their duetie, he maketh himselfe equall with the rest. But he himselfe giueth himselfe this power: and they assented to it that woulde: and other that liked it not, might freely gainsay it, which it is well knowne that the most part of them did. Beside that he speaketh there of the Primate of Constantinople: which when hee was condemned by the prouinciall Synode, refused the whole iudgement. His fellowe bishoppes informed the Emperour of this stubbornnesse of him. The Emperour willed Gregory to bee iudge of the cause. We see therfore that he both attempteth nothing, wherby hee may breake the ordinary iurisdiction, and the same thing that hee doth for the helping of other, he doth not but by the commandement of the Emperour.

Gregory howe far vnlike the Romaine bishops at this day?

13 This therefore was then all the power of the byshop of Rome, to set himselfe against obstinate & vntamed heads, whether needed any extraordinary remedy: & that to helpe and not to hinder other bishops. Therefore he taketh no more to himselfe ouer al other, than in another place he granteth to all other ouer himselfe, when he confesseth that he is ready to be corrected of all, to bee amended of all. So in another place hee doth in deede commaunde the Byshoppe of Aquileia to come to Rome, to plead his cause in a controuersie of faith that was risen betweene him and other: but hee doth not commaunde him of his own power, but because the Emperor had so commaunded. Neither doeth hee giue warning that hee alone shall bee iudge, but promised that hee will assemble a Synode by whome the whole matter may be iudged. But although there was yet such moderation, that the power of the sea of Rome had her certaine boundes, which it might not passe, & the bishop of Rome himselfe was no more aboue than vnder other: yet it appeareth howe much Gregory misliked such state. For hee nowe and then then complaineth, that vnder color of bishopricke he was brought backe to the world: and that he was more entangled with earthly cares, than euer he had serued them while he was a lay man: that he was in that honor oppressed with tumult of worldly affaires. In another place: so great burdens (saith he) of busines do hold me downe, that my mind can nothing at all be raised vp to things aboue. I am shaken with many waues of causes: and after those leisures of rest I am tossed with tempestes of troublesome life, so that I may rightly say, I am come into the depth of the sea, & the tempest hath drowned me. Hereby gather, what he would haue saide, if he had happened to be in these times. Although he fulfilled not the office of a Pastor, yet hee was doing it. He absteyned from the gouernement of the ciuil Empire, and confessed himselfe to bee subiect to the Emperour as other were. Hee did not thrust himselfe into the cure of other Churches, but being compelled by necessitie. And yet he thinketh himself to be in a maze, because hee cannot apply himselfe altogether only to the office of a bishop. Lib.1.epist.7. & 15.

14 At that time the bishop of Constantinople striued with the bishop of Rome for the Supremacie, as it is alreadie said. For after that the seate of the Empire was stablished at Constantinople, the maiestie of the Empire seemed to require that that Church also should haue the second place of honor after the Church of Rome. And truely at the beginning, nothing more auailed to cause the Supremacie to be giuen to Rome, but because the head of the Empire was there at that time. There is in Gratian a writing vnder ỹ name of Pope Lucius, where he saith, that cities were no otherwise diuided, where Metropolitanes & Primates ought to sit, than by the reason of the ciuil gouernment that was before. There is also an other vnder the name of Pope Clement, where he saith, the Patriarches were ordeined in those cities that had had the cheefe Flamines in them. Which, although it be false, yet is taken out of a trueth. For it is certaine, that to the end there should be made as litle change as might be, the prouinces were diuided according to ỹ state of things ỹ then were: & that Primates & Metropolitanes were set in those cities that excelled the other in honors & power. Therefore in the Counsel at Taurinum it was decreed, that those Cities which in the ciuil gouernment were the cheefe cities of euery prouince, should be the cheefe seas of Bishops. And if it happened the honor of the ciuil gouernment to be remoued from one citie to another, that then the right of the Metropolitane citie should therewithal be remoued thither. But Innocentius bishop of Rome, when he saw the auncient dignitie of his citie to growe in decay, after that the seat of the Empire was remoued to Constantinople, fearing the abacement of his sea, made a contrarie law: wherein he denieth it to be necessarie that the ecclesiasticall mother cities should be changed as the Imperial mother cities change. But the authoritie of a Synode ought of right to be preferred aboue one mans sentence. Also we ought to suspect Innocentius himselfe in his owne cause. Howsoeuer it be, yet by his owne prouiso hee sheweth, that from the beginning it was so ordered, that the Metropolitane cities shoulde be disposed according to the outward order of the Empire.

15 According to this auncient ordinance, it was decreede in the first councel at Constantinople, that the Bishop of the citie shoulde haue the priuiledges leges of honour next after the bishop of Rome, because it was a newe Rome. But a long time after, when a like decree was made at Chalcedon, Leo stoutly cryed out against it. And hee not onely gaue himselfe leaue to esteeme as nothing that which sixe hundred Bishops or moe had decreede: but also bitterly taunted them, for that they tooke from other seas that honour which they were so bolde to giue to the Church of Constantinople. I beseech you, what other thing coulde moove a man to trouble the worlde for so small a matter, but meere ambition? Hee sayeth that that ought to bee inuiolable, which the Nicene Synode hath once decreed. As though forsooth the Christian faith were endangered, if one Church bee preferred before an other: or as though Patriarchies were there diuided to any other ende, but for policies. But wee knowe that policie receiueth, yea requireth diuerse changes, according to the diuersitie of times. Therefore it is fonde that Leo pretendeth, that the honour, which by the authoritie of the Nicene Synode was giuen to the sea of Alexandria, ought not to be giuen to the sea of Constantinople. For common reason telleth this, that it was such a decree, as might be taken away according to the respect of times. Yea none of the bishops of the East withstoode it, whome that thing most of all concerned. Truely Proterius was present, whome they had made bishop of Alexandria in the place of Dioscorus. There were present other Patriarches, whose honour was diminished. It was their parte to withstand it, not Leos which remained safe in his owne place. But when all they holde their peace, yea assent vnto it, and onely the bishop of Rome resisteth: it is easie to iudge, what moueth him: that is, he foresawe that which not long after happened, that it woulde come to passe, that, the glorie of olde Rome decaying, Constantinople not contented with the seconde place, woulde striue with Rome for the supremacie. And yet with his crying out hee did not so much preuaile, but that the decree of the councell was confirmed. Therefore his successours, when they sawe themselues ouercome, quietly gaue ouer that stiffenesse: for they suffered that hee should bee accounted the second Patriarch.

Socrat. hist. trip. lib. 9. ca. 13. Decret. 22. dist.

16 But within a litle after, Iohn which in Gregories time ruled the church of Constantinople, brake foorth so farre that he called himselfe the vniuersall Patriarch. Here Gregorie, least hee should in a verie good cause faile to defende his owne sea, did constantly set himselfe against him. And truely both the pride and madnesse of Iohn was intollerable, which desired to make the boundes of his bishoprike equall with the bondes of the Empire. And yet Gregorie doth not claime to himselfe, that which he denieth to an other: but abhorreth that name as wicked, and vngodly, and abhominable, whosoeuer take it vpon him. Yea and also in one place hee is angrie with Eulogius bishop of Alexandria, which had honoured him with such a title. Beholde (saith he) in the preface of the Epistle which he directed to my self that haue forbidden it, yee haue cared to imprint the worde of proude calling, in naming mee vniuersall Pope, which, I pray that your holinesse will no more doe, because that is withdrawen from you, which is giuen to another more than reason requireth. I count it no honour, wherein I see the honour of my brethren to be diminished. For my honour is the honour of the vniuerfall Church, and the founde ſtrength of my brethren. But if your holines cal mee the vniuerſall Pope, it denieth it ſelfe to be that which it confeſſeth me to be wholly. Truely Gregorie ſtoode in a good and honeſt cauſe. But Iohn holpen by the fauour of Maurice the Emperour, could neuer bee remooued from his purpoſe Cyriacus alſo his ſucceſſor neuer ſuffered himſelfe to be intreated in that behalfe.

17 At the laſt Phocas, which when Maurice was ſlaine, was ſet in his place (I wote not for what cauſe being more friendly to the Romanes, but becauſe he was there crowned without ſtrife) granted to Boniface the third that which Gregorie neuer required, that Rome ſhould bee the head of all Churches. After this manner was the controuerſie ended. And yet this benefite of the Emperour, coulde not ſo muche haue profited the ſea of Rome, vnleſſe other things alſo had afterward happened. For Grecia and all Aſia were within a little after cut off from the communion of Rome. France ſo much reuerenced him, that it obeied no further than it liſted. But it was then firſt brought into bondage when Pipine vſurped the kingdome. For when Zacharie Biſhop of Rome had beene his helper to the breache of his faith, and to robberie, that thruſting out the lawfull king, he might violently enter vpon the kingdome as laid open for a pray: he receiued this reward that the ſea of Rome ſhould haue iuriſdiction ouer the Churches of France: As robbers are wonted in parting to diuide the cõmon ſpoile: ſo theſe good men ordered the matter betweene themſelues, that Pipine ſhould haue the earthly and ciuill dominion, ſpoiling the true king: and Zacharie ſhould bee made head of all biſhops and haue the ſpirituall power: which, when at the beginning it was weake: (as it is wont to bee in new thinges) was afterward confirmed by the authoritie of Charles, in manner for a like cauſe. For hee was alſo indebted to the Biſhop of Rome, for that by his endeuour hee had attained to the honour of the Empire. But although it bee credible. that Churches ech where were before that time much deformed, yet it is certaine that the olde forme of the Church was then firſt vtterly defaced in France and Germanie. There remaine yet in the recordes of the court of Paris breefe notes of theſe times, which, where they intreate of the matters of the Church, make mention of the couenant both of Pipine and of Charles with the biſhop of Rome. Thereby we may gather that then was an alteration made of the old ſtate.

18 Since that time, when thinges did ech where daily fall from worſe to worſe, the tyrannie of the ſea of Rome was nowe and then alſo ſtabliſhed and increaſed, and that partly by the ignorance, and partly by the ſlouthfulneſſe of the biſhops. For when one man tooke all thinges vpon him, and without meaſure proceeded more and more to aduaunce himſelfe againſt lawe and right: the biſhops did not with ſuch zeale as they ought, endeuour themſelues to reſtraine his luſt, & though they wanted not courage, yet they were deſtitute of true learning and knowledge: ſo that they were nothing fit to attempt ſo great a matter. Therefore we ſee what and howe Monſtrous an vnholy defiling of all holy thinges, and a ſcattering abroade of the whole order of the Church, was in Bernardes time. He complaineth that there reſort by heapes to Rome out of all the worlde, ambitious men, couetous, Simonians,robbers of God,keepers of concubines,committers of inceſt,& all ſuch monſters,to obtaine or retaine eccleſiaſticall honours by the Apoſtolike authoritie:and that fraude and vndermining, and violence were growē in force.He ſaith that that maner of iudging which then was vſed,was abhominable,and vnſeemely,not onely for the Church,, but alſo for a iudiciall court.He crieth out that the Church is ful of ambitious men:and that there is none that more dreadeth to commit miſchieuous acts,than robbers do in their caue,when they diuide the ſpoiles of waifaring men. Fewe (ſaith he) do look vnto the mouth of the lawgiuer,but vnto his hands But not without cauſe. For thoſe hands do all the Popes buſineſſe. What a thing is this, that they are bought of the ſpoiles of Churches,that ſay to thee, oh well done, well done? The life of the poore is ſowen in the ſtreets of the rich:ſiluer gliſtereth in the mire:men run to it from all places:not the poore,but the ſtrāger taketh it vp,or he peraduēture that runneth faſteſt before. But this maner,or rather this death,came not of thee,I would to God it might ende in thee. Amōg theſe things thou a Paſtor goeſt forwatd compaſſed with much and precious aray.If I durſt ſay it,theſe are rather the Paſtors of diuels,than of ſheepe.Forſooth Peter did thus,Paul played thus. Thy court is more accuſtomed to receiue men good than to make them good.For the ill doe not there profit,but the good do decay.Now as for the abuſes of appeales that he rehearſeth,no godly man can reade them without great horror. At the laſt he thus concludeth of that vnbridled greedineſſe of the ſea of Rome in the vſurping of iuriſdiction:I ſpeake the murmour and common complaint of the Churches. They crie out that they bee mangled and diſmembred. There are either none or few that do not either bewail or feare this plague. Askeſt thou what plague? The Abbots are plucked from the biſhops,the biſhops from the Archbiſhops, &c. It is marueilous if this may bee excuſed. In ſo doing ye prooue that ye haue fulneſſe of power, but not of righteouſneſſe. Ye doe this,becauſe ye can do it:but whether ye alſo ought to doe it, is a queſtion. Ye are ſet to preſerue.not to enuie to euery man his honour & his owne degree.Theſe fewe things of many I liſted to rehearſe, partly that the readers may ſee,howe ſore the Church was then decaied, and partly that they may know in how great ſorrow and mourning this calamity held all the godlie.

The vſurped powver eccleſiaſticall vvhich the biſhop of Rome holdeth and doth exerciſe at this day.

19 But nowe, albeit that we graunt to the Biſhop of Rome at this daie that preeminence and largeneſſe of iuriſdiction, which that ſea had in the meane times, as in the times of Leo and of Gregorie : what is that to the preſent ſtate of the Papacie? I doe not yet ſpeake of the earthly dominion, nor of the ciuil power thereof, which wee will afterward conſider in place fit for it: but the verie ſpirituall gouernemeut that they boaſt of, what hath it like to the ſtate of thoſe times ? For they define the Pope none otherwiſe than the Supreme head of the Church in earth, and the vniuerſall biſhop of the whole worlde. And the biſhops themſelues, when they ſpeake of their owne authoritie, doe with great ſtoutneſſe of coountenance,pronounce that to them belongeth the power to commaunde, and other are bound to the neceſſitie to obey, that ſo all their decrees are to be holden as confirmed with the diuine voice of Peter : that the prouinciall Synodes, are without force, because they want the presence of the Pope: that they may order clerkes of any Church that they will: and may call them to their sea that haue beene ordered elsse where. Innumerable of that sorte are in Gratians pack, which I do not now rehearse, least I should be too tedious to ỹ Readers. But this is the summe of them, that onely the Bishop of Rome hath the Supreme hearing and determining of all ecclesiastical causes, whether it be in iudging and defining of doctrines, or in making of lawes, or in stablishing of discipline, or in executing of iudgements: It were also long and superfluous to rehearse the priuileges that they take to themselues in reseruations, as they call them. But (which is most intollerable of all other) they leaue no iudgement in earth to restraine and bridle their outragious lust, if they abuse so immeasurable power. It is lawful for no man (say they) to reuoke the iudgement of that sea, because of the Supremacie of the Church of Rome. Againe, The iudge shalbe iudged neither by the emperor, nor by kings, nor by all the Clergie, nor of the people. That is in deede too imperiously don, that one man maketh himselfe iudge of all men, and suffereth himself to obey the iudgement of no man. But what if he vse tyrannie ouer the people of God? if he scatter abroad and wast the kingdome of Christ? if he trouble the whole Church? if he turne the office of Pastor into roberie? Yea though he be neuer so mischieuous, he saith that he is not bound to yeld accompt. For these be the sayings of the bishops: Gods will was to determine the causes of other men by men, but hee hath without question reserued the bishop of this sea to his owne iudgement. Againe. The doings of subiects are iudged of vs but ours of God only.

Decret. 17. quæsti. 3. ca. Nemini. Innoc. 9. quæsti. 3. ca nemo. Sym. 9. quæ. 3. cap. Aliorum. Anther. Ibid. c. facta.

10 And that such decrees might haue the more weight, they haue falsly thrust in the names of the old bishops, as though things had been so ordeined from the beginning: whereas it is most certeine, that it is newe & lately forged whatsoeuer the bishop of Rome giueth to himselfe more than wee haue rehearsed to be giuen him by the auncient Councels. Yea, they are come to so great shamelesnesse, that they haue set forth a writing vnder the name of Anastasius Patriarch of Constantinople, wherein hee testifieth that it was decreed by the olde rules, that nothing should be done euen in the furthest prouinces, that were not first mooued to the sea of Rome. Beside this, that it is certaine that this is most vaine, what man shall thinke it likely, that such a commendation of the sea of Rome proceeded from the aduersarie and enuier of honour and dignitie thereof? But verily it behoued that these Antichristes should be carried on to so great madnesse and blindnes, that their lewdnesse might be plaine for all men to see, at least so many as wil open their eyes. But the decretall epistles heaped together by Gregorie the ninth, againe the Clementines, and Extrauagants of Martine, doe yet more openly and with fuller mouth eche where breath foorth their outragious fiercenesse, and as it were the tyrannie of barbarous kinges. But these be the oracles, by which the Romanists will haue their papacie to be weyed. Hereupon arose those notable principles, which at this day haue euery where in the papacie the force of oracles: that the Pope cannot erre: that the Pope is aboue the Councels: that the Pope is the vniuersall Bishop of all bishops, and the supreme head of the Church in earth: I passe ouer the much absurder follies, which the fooliſh Canoniſts babble in their ſchooles to which yet the Romiſh diuines do not only assent, but doe also clap their hands at them, to flatter their idol.

The forgeries vsed in the Papacie to make the vvorlde beleeue that they claime at this day no more than they haue had in auncient times. Ibid. ca Ant.

The Popes vſurpation not onely against the iudgement of all antiquitie, against the mind of Gregorie, but euen repugnant to all humanitie.

21 I will not deale with them by extremitie of right. Some other man would against this their ſo great inſolencie ſet the saying of Cyprian, Which he vſed among the Biſhops, at whoſe councell he ſate as cheefe. None of vs calleth himſelfe Biſhop of Biſhops, or with tyrannous feare compelleth his fellowe biſhops to neceſſitie to obey. Hee woulde obiect that, which a litle afterwarde was decreede at Carthage, That none ſhoulde bee called Prince, Prieſt, or cheefe biſhop. Hee woulde gather many teſtimonies out of Hiſtories, Canons out of Synodes, and many ſentences out of the bookes of olde writers, by which the biſhop of Rome ſhould be brought downe into the fellowſhip of the reſt. But I paſſe ouer all theſe, leaſt I ſhoulde ſeeme too preciſely to preſſe them But let the beſt patrones of the ſea of Rome aunſwere mee, with what face they dare defende the title of vniuerſall Biſhop, which they ſee ſo oft to bee condemned with curſe by Gregorie. If Gregories teſtimonie ought to bee of force, they doe thereby declare that Antichriſt is there biſhop, becauſe they make him vniuerſall. The name alſo of heade was no more vſuall. For thus hee sayeth in one place: Peter is the chiefe member in the bodie, Iohn, Andrew, and Iames the heades of particular peoples: yet they all are members of the Churche vnder one heade: yea the holie ones before the lawe, the holie ones vnder the lawe, and the holie ones vnder grace, are ſet among members, altogether making vp the bodie of the Lorde: and no man euer willed to haue himſelfe called vniuerſall. But whereas the Biſhop of Rome taketh vpon himſelfe the power of commaunding, that thing ſmally agreeth with that which Gregorie saieth in an other place. For whereas Eulolius biſhop of Alexandria, had saide that hee was commaunded by him, hee aunſweared in this wiſe, I pray yee, take away this worde of commanding from my hearing. For I know what I am, and what ye be. In place, yee be to me brethren: in manners ye be to me fathers. Therefore I commaunded not, but I cared to tell you thoſe thinges that I thought profitable. Whereas he ſo extendeth his iuriſdiction without ende, he doeth therein great and hainous wrong, not onely to the other biſhops, but alſo to all particular Churches, which he ſo teareth and plucketh in peeces, that hee may builde his ſeate of their ruines. But whereas hee exempteth himſelfe from all iudgementes, and will ſo raigne after the manner of tyrants, that he accounteth his owne onely luſt for lawe, that verily is ſo hainous, and ſo farre from eccleſiaſticall order, that it may in no wiſe bee borne: for it vterly abhorreth not onely from all feeling of godlineſſe, but alſo from all humanitie.

The ſtate of Rome an hundred times more corrupt now than in the dayes of Gregorie or Bernard.

22 But that I be not compelled to goe through and examine all thinges particularly, I doe againe appeale to them, that will at this day be accompted the beſt and moſt faithfull patrones of the ſea of Rome, whether they be not aſhamed to defende the preſent ſtate of the Papacie: which it is certain to be an hundred times more corrupt, than it was in the time of Gregorie and Bernard: which ſtate yet did then ſo muche diſpleaſe thoſe holie men men. Gregorie eche where complaineth, that hee is too much diuerſly drawen away with foraine buſines: that he is vnder the colour of biſhoprike brought backe to the world: wherin he ſerueth ſo many cares of the worlde as he neuer remembreth that he ſerued when he was a laie man: that he is preſſed downe with tumult of worldly affaires, that his mind is nothing raiſed vp to things aboue, that he is ſhaken with many waues of cauſes, & toſſed with tempeſtes of troubleſome life: ſo that he maie worthily ſaie, I am come into the depth of the ſea. Truely among thoſe earthly buſineſſes, he might yet teache the people with Sermons, priuately admoniſhe and correct ſuch as it behoued, order the Church, giue counſell to his fellow biſhops and exhort them to their dutie: beſide theſe things there remained ſome time to write: and yet he lamenteth his calamitie, that hee is drowned in the deepeſt ſea. If the gouernment of that time was a ſea: what is to bee ſaide of the papacie at this time? For what likeneſſe haue they together? Here be no preachings, no care of diſcipline, no zeale to the Churches, no ſpiritual doing, finally nothing but the worlde. Yet this maze is praiſed, as though there could nothing be founde more orderly and better framed. But what complaints doeth Bernarde poure out, what groanes doth he vtter, when he looketh vpon the faultes of his age: What then would he doe, if he beheld this our age of iron, and worſe if any be worſe than iron? What obſtinate wickedneſſe is this, not onely ſtifly to defend as holy and diuine, that which all the holy men haue with one mouth condemned: but alſo to abuſe their teſtimonie to the defence of the papacie, which it is certaine that they neuer knewe of? Howbeit of Bernardes time I confeſſe, that then the corruption of all thinges was ſo great, that it was not much vnlike our time. But they are without all ſhame, that fetch any pretence for it, out of that meane age, that is the time of Leo, Gregorie, and ſuch other. For they doe like as if one, to ſtahliſh the Monarchie of Emperors, would praiſe the old ſtate of the Empire of Rome: that is, would borrow the praiſes of libertie, to ſet forth the honor of tyrannie.

Lib. 1. epi. 5. 7 & 25. & alibi.

23 Finally, although all theſe thinges were graunted them: yet there ariſeth of freſh a newe ſtrife for them, when we deny that there is a Church at Rome, in which ſuch benefites may be reſident: when we denie that there is a biſhop, which may beare theſe priuileges of dignitie. Admit therefore all thoſe things to be true, (which yet we haue already wrung from them) that Peter was by the mouth of Chriſt appointed head of the vniuerſall Church: and that he left the honour that was giuen him, in the ſea of Rome: that the ſame was ſtabliſhed by the authoritie of the auncient Church, and confirmed with long continuance: that the Supreme power hath beene alway by one conſent giuen of all men to the biſhop of Rome, that he hath beene the iudge of all both cauſes and men, and himſelfe ſubiect to the iudgement of none: let them haue alſo more, if they will: yet I anſweare in one worde, that none of theſe things auaile, vnleſſe there be at Rome a Church and a biſhop. This they muſt needes graunt me, that it cannot be the mother of Churches, which is not it ſelfe a Church: that he cannot be chief of biſhops, which is not himſelfe a biſhop. Will they therefore haue the ſea Apoſtolike at Rome? Then let them ſhew me a true and lawfull Apoſtleſhip. Will they haue the chiefe Bishop? Then let them shewe me a Bishop. But what? where will they shewe vs any face of a Church? They name one indeede, and haue it oft in their mouth. Truely the Church is known by her certain markes: and bishoprike is a name of office. I speake not here of the people: but of the gouernment it selfe, which ought continually to shine in the Church. Where is the ministerie in their Church, such as Christes institution requireth? Let vs call to remembrance that which hath before beene spoken of the office of Priestes and of a bishop. If wee shall bring the office of Cardinals to be tried by that rule, wee shall confesse that they are nothing lesse than Priests. As for the chiefe bishop himselfe, I woulde faine knowe what one thing at all he hath bishoplike. First it is the principall point in the office of a bishop, to teach the people with the word of God: another and the next point to that is, to minister the Sacraments: the third is to admonish and exhort, yea and to correct them that offend, and to hold the people together in holy discipline. What of these thinges doth he? yea, what doth he faine himselfe to doe? Let them tel therefore, by what meane they would haue him to be counted a bishop, that doth not with his little finger, no not once so much as in outward shewe, touch any parte of a bishops office.

In the Bishop of Rome al things contrarie vnto that which should be in a Bishop.

24 It is not so of a bishop as it is of a king. For a king although he doe not execute that which belongeth to a king, doeth neuertheles reteine the honor and title. But in iudging of a bishop respect is had to Christes commaundement, which alway ought to be of force in the Church. Therfore let the Romanists loose me this knot. I deny that their high bishop is the chiefe of bishops, forasmuch as he is no bishop. They must needes proue this last point to be false, if they will haue the victorie in the first. But how saie they to this, that he not onely hath no propertie of a bishop, but rather al things contrarie? But here, O God, whereat shall I beginne? at his learning, or at his maners? What shall I saie, or what shall I leaue vnsaide? where shall I make an ende? This I saie: that whereas the worlde is at this day, stuffed with so many peruerse and wicked doctrines, full of so manie kindes of superstitions, blinded with so many errors drowned in so great idolatrie: there is none of these any where, that hath not either flowed from thence: or at least beene there confirmed. Neither is there anie other cause, why the bishops are carried with so great rage against the doctrine of the Gospel newly springing vp againe, why they bende all their strengthes to oppresse it, why they kindle vp kings and princes to crueltie, but because they see that their whole kingdome decayeth and falleth downe, so soone as the Gospel of Christ commeth in place. Leo was cruell: Clement was bloudie: Paul is a fierce murtherer. But nature hath not so much moued them to fight against the trueth, as for that this was their onelie meane to maintain their power. Therefore sith they cannot be safe, till they haue driuen away Christ, they trauaile in this cause, as if they did fight for their religion and countries, & for their owne liues. What then? Shal that be to vs the sea Apostolike, where we see nothing but horrible Apostasie? Shal he be Christes vicar, which by persecuting the Gospel with furious enterprises, doth openly professe himselfe to be Antichrist? Shall hee bee Peters successour, that rangeth with ſworde and fire, to deſtroy all that euer Peter hath builded? Shal he be head of the church that cutting of and diſmembring the church from Chriſt the only true head therof, doth in it ſelfe plucke and teare it in peeces. Admit verely that in the olde time Rome was the mother of al Churches: yet ſince it hath begunne to be the ſeate of Antichriſt, it hath ceaſed to be ỹ which it was.

25 We ſeeme to be to much euil ſpeakers and railers, when we call the biſhop of Rome Antichriſt. But they that ſo thinke, do not vnderſtãde that they accuſe Paul of immodeſtie, after whom we ſo ſpeake, yea out of whoſe mouth we ſo ſpeake. And leaſt any man obiect, that we do wrongfully wreſt againſt the biſhoppe of Rome, theſe wordes of Paul that are ſpoken to an other entent, I wil briefely ſhewe, that they can not be otherwiſe vnderſtanded, but of the Papacie. Paul writeth, that Antichriſt ſhall ſitte in the temple of God. In an other place alſo the holy Ghoſt deſcribing his image in the perſon of Antiochus, ſheweth that his kingdome ſhal conſiſt in hautines of ſpeech, and blaſpheminges of God. Hereupon we gather, that it is rather a tyranny ouer ſoules, than ouer bodies, that is raiſed vp againſt the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt, Then, that it is ſuch, as doeth not aboliſh the name of Chriſt and the Church: but rather ſhould abuſe the pretence of Chriſte, and lurke vnder the title of the Church, as vnder a diſguiſed viſour. But although all the hereſies and ſects that haue ben from the beginning, belong to the kingdome of Antichriſt: yet wheras Paul propheçieth, that there ſhal come a departing, by this deſcription he ſignifieth, that that ſeate of abhomination ſhall then be raiſed vp, when a certaine vniuerſall departing ſhall poſſeſſe the Church: howſoeuer many members of the Church here and there continue in the true vnitie of faith. But where he addeth, that in his time he began in a myſterie to ſet vp the worke of iniquitie, which he would afterward ſhewe openly: thereby we vnderſtand, that this calamity was neither to be brought in by one man, nor to be ended in one man. Now wheras he doth ſet out Antichriſt by this marke, ỹ he ſhould plucke away from God his due honor, to take it to himſelfe: this is the chiefe token that we ought to follow in ſeeking out of Antichriſt, ſpecially where ſuch pride proceedeth euen to the publike diſſipation of the church. Sith therefore it is certaine ỹ the biſhop of Rome hath ſhamleſſely conueyed away to himſelfe that which was the chief proper thing to God alone and Chriſt, it is not to be doubted but that he is the captaine and ſtanderdbearer of the wicked & abhominable kingdome.

The Pope Antichriſt.

2. Theſ. 1. 4. Dan 7, 25.

26 Now let the Romaniſts go, & obiect antiquitie againſt vs: As if in ſo great alteration of al things, the honor of the ſea might ſtand wher there is no ſea. Euſebius telleth, how GOD, that there might be place for his vengeance, remoued the Church that was at Hieruſalem to Pella. That which we heare to haue beene once done, might be ofter done. Therefore ſo to binde the honor of ſupremacie to a place, that hee which is in deede the moſt hatefull enemie of Chriſte, the higheſt aduerſarie of the Goſpell, the greateſt waſter and deſtroyer of the Church, the moſt cruell ſlaughterman and butcher of the ſaintes, ſhould neuertheleſſe bee accounted the vicar of Chriſt, the ſucceſſor of Peter, the chiefe biſhop of the Church, only becauſe hee

he occupieth the sea that was once the chiefest of all: that verely is to much to be scorned & fooliſh. I ſpeake not, how great difference there is betweene the popes chauncery, and a wel framed order of the Church, Howbeit this one thing may wel take away all doubt of this queſtion. For no man ỹ hath his right wit, wil thinke the biſhoprike encloſed in lead & bulles: much leſſe in that ſchoole of fraudes and deceites, in which things the Popes ſpirituall gouernment conſiſteth. Therefore it was very well ſaid by a certaine man, that that church of Rome which is boſted of, is long ago turned into a court, which only is now ſene at Rome. Neither do I here accuſe the faults of men: but I ſhewe that the papacie it ſelfe is directly coõtrary to the true order of a Church.

The atheiſme of Popes.

27 But if we come to the perſons of men, it is well enough knowẽ what maner of vicars of Chriſt we ſhal finde. Iulius forſooth, and Leo, & Clement and Paul, ſhalbe pillers of the chriſtian faith, & the chiefe expoſitors of religion, which neuer knew any other thing of Chriſt, thã that which he had learned in Lucians ſchoole. But why doe I recken vp three or foure Popes? as though it were doutful, what manner of forme of religion the popes with their whole college of Cardinals haue ſince long agoe profeſſed, and at this day do profeſſe. For firſt this is the principal article of that ſecret Diuinitie that reigneth among them, That there is no God: the ſeconde, That all thinges that are written and taught concerning Chriſt, are lies & deceits: the thirde, That the doctrine of the life to come, and of the laſt reſurrection are meere fables, They doe not all thinke ſo: and fewe of them ſpeake ſo. I graũt. But this hath long ago begun to be the ordinary religiõ of popes. Whereas this is very well knowen to all that knowe Rome, yet the Romiſhe Diuines ceaſe not to boſt, that by Chriſtes priuilege it is prouided, that the pope can not erre, becauſe it was ſaide to Peter: I haue praied for thee, that thy faith ſhould not faint. What, I pray you, win they by mocking ſo ſhameleſſely, but that the whole world may vnderſtand, that they are come to that extremity of wickedneſſe, that they neither feare God, nor ſtand in awe of men?

The fall of Iohn the xxii.

28 But let vs imagine, that the vngodlines of thoſe popes whom I haue ſpokẽ of, is hidden, becauſe they haue neither publiſhed it by preaching, nor by writings: but only haue bewraied it at their table, and in their chamber, or at leaſt within wales of houſes. But if they wil haue this priuilege to bee of force, which they pretende, they muſt needes wipe Iohn the xxii. out of the number of popes, who openly affirmed that ſoules are mortal, and that they die together with the bodies vntill the day of reſurrection, And that you may perceiue that the whole ſea with her principall ſtayes was then wholly fallen: none of all the Cardinals: withſtood ſo great a madneſſe, but the ſchoole of Pariſe moued the king of Fraunce to compell him to recante it. The king forbad his ſubiectes to communicate with him, vnleſſe hee did out of hand repent: and the ſame, as the manner is, he proclaimed by a heralde. The Pope compelled by this neceſſitie, abiured his errour. This exãple maketh ỹ I neede not to diſpute any more with my aduerſaries about this that they ſay, that the ſea of Rome & the biſhops therof, can not erre in the faith, becauſe it was ſaide to Peter, I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith may not faint. Truely, hee fell with so foule a kinde of fall from the right faith, that he is a notable example to them that come after, that they are not all Peters which succeede after Peter in the byshopricke. Howbeit this is also of it selfe so childish, that it needeth no answere. For if they will drawe to Peters successors whatsoeuer was spoken to Peter, it shall followe that they are all Satans, forasmuch as the Lorde saide this also to Peter: Go behinde, thou Satan, because thou art an offence to mee. For it shall be as easy Math. 16. 23.

for vs to turne backe this latter saying against them, as it shal be for them to obiect the other against vs.

29 But I list not to striue with them in playing the foole. Therefore I returne thither from whence I made digression. So to binde the place, and Christ, and the holy Ghoste, and the Church togither, that whosoeuer sit in that place, although he be the deuil, yet he must be iudged ỹ vicar of Christ and the head of the Church, because it was once the seat of Peter: I say this is not onely wicked and slaunderous to Christe, but also too great an absurditie and against common reason. It is alreadie long ago since the byshops of Rome are either without all religion, or the greatest enimies of Religion. Therefore they are no more made the vicars of Christ, by reason of ỹ seate which they occupy, than an idoll, when it is set in the temple of God, is to be taken for God. Now if their manners be to be indged vppon, let the Popes 2. Thes. 2. 4.
themselues aunswere for themselues: what one thing at all there is in them, wherein they may be knowne for bishops. First, whereas there is such lifeat Rome, they not onely winking at it, but also as it were with secrete countenance allowing it, this is vtterly vnmeete for byshops, whose duety is with seuerity of discipline to restraine the licentiousnesse of the people. But I will not be so rigorous against them, to charge them with other mens faults. But whereas they themselues, with their owne household, with almost the whole college of Cardinals, with the whole flock of their cleargy, are so giuen forth to all wickednesse, filthinesse, vncleannesse, to all kindes of lewde & mischieuous doings, that they resemble rather monsters than men: therein truely they bewray themselues to be nothing lesse than bishops. And yet they need not to feare least I should further disclose their filthinesse. For both I am werie to haue to doe in so stinking mire, and I must fauour chaste eares, & I think that I haue already enough and more prooued that which I went about: that is, that although Rome had in olde time beene the heade of Churches, yet at this day she is not worthy to be iudged one of the smallest toes of the Churches feete.

30 As concerning the Cardinals, (as they call them) I can not tell howe it is come to passe, that they be so soudenly risen vp to so great dignitie. This name in Gregories time belonged to bishops onely. For so oft as hee maketh mention of Cardinals, hee meaneth it not of them of the Churche of Rome, but of any other: so ỹ briefely, a Cardinall Priest is nothing else but a byshop. In the writers before that age I find not this name at all. But I see that they were then lesse than byshops, whome they be nowe farre aboue. This saying of Augustine is well knowen: Although according to the names of honour, which the vse of the church hath alreadie obtained, bishoprick is greater than priesthood, yet in many things Augustine is lesse than Hierome.

The rising of Cardinals.

Heere

Heere in deede hee maketh difference betweene a prieſte of the Church of Rome and other: but he indifferently ſetteth them al behinde the byſhoppes. And that was ſo long obſerued, that in the Councell at Carthage, when there were preſent two Legates of the ſea of Rome, the one a byſhop, the other a Prieſt, the prieſt was thruſt backe into the laſt place. But not to followe too olde examples, there remaineth a Councell holden vnder Gregory at Rome at which the Prieſts ſate in the loweſt place, & ſubſcribed ſeuerally by themſelues, as for the Deacons, they had no place at all in ſubſcribing. And truely they had then no office, but to be preſent and vnder the biſhop at miniſtring of doctrine & of the ſacraments Now the caſe is ſo chaunged, that they are become the couſins of kings & emperors. And it is no doubt but ỹ they grew vp by little and litle together with their head, till they were aduanced to this high top of dignity. But this alſo I thought good to touch ſhortly by the way that the readers might the better vnderſtand, that the Sea of Rome, ſuch as it is at this day, doth much differ from that auncient one, vnder pretence whereof, it doth now maintaine and defend it ſelfe. But of what ſort ſoeuer they were in olde time, foraſmuch as they haue nowe nothing of the true & lawfull office in the Church, they retaine onely a deceitfull colour & vaine viſour: yea foraſmuch as they haue all thinges vtterly contrarie, it was neceſſarie that that ſhoulde happen to them, which Gregorie writeth ſo oft. I ſay it (ſaith he) weeping: I giue warning of it, groning: that ſith the order of prieſtood is fallen within, it ſhall alſo not be able to ſtand long without. But rather it behoued that this ſhould be fulfilled in them which Malachie ſayth of ſuch: Ye haue gone backe out of the way, & haue made manie to ſtumble in the law. Therefore ye haue made void the couenant of Leui, ſaith the Lorde. Therefore behold, I haue giuen you out of eſtimation, and vile to all the people. Now I leaue it to all the godly to thinke of what ſort is that ſupreme height of the Hierarchie of Rome, whereunto the Papiſtes with abhominable ſhameleſneſſe ſticke not to make ſubiect the verie word of God, which ought to haue beene honourable and holie both to heauen and earth, men and Angels.

Mala.2.8

The viii. Chapter.

Of the power of the Church as touching the articles of faith: and vvith howv vnbridled licentiouſneſſe it hath in the papacy beene vvreſted to corrupt all purenes of doctrine.

A caution touching thinges ſpoken of the power of the Church.

NOwe followeth the thirde place of the power of the Church, which partlie conſiſteth in all the byſhops, and partly in the Councelles, and thoſe either prouinciall or generall. I ſpeake onelie of the ſpirituall power, which is proper to the Church. That conſiſteth either in doctrine, or in iuriſdiction, or in making of Lawes, Doctrine hath two partes, the authoritie to teache articles of Doctrine, and the expounding of them. Before that wee beginne to diſcourſe of euerie one of theſe in ſpecialtie, we will that the godly Readers be warned, that whatſoeuer is taught concerning the power of the Church, they muſt remember to applie it to that ende, whereunto (as Paul teſtifieth) it was giuen: that is, to edification, and not to destruction: which who so lawfully vse, they thinke themselues no more than the ministers of Christ, and therewithal the ministers of the people in Christ. Nowe of the edifyng of the Church, this is the only way, if the ministers themselues endeuour to preserue to Christ his authority, which can not otherwise be safe vnles that be left vnto him, which he receiued of his Father: that is, that he be the only schoolemaister of the Church. For it is written, not of anie other, but of him alone, Heare him. The power of the Church therefore is not to be sparingly set foorth, but yet to be enclosed within certaine boundes, that it be not drawen hither & hither after the lust of men. Hereunto it shalbe much profitable to note, howe it is described of the Prophetes and Apostles. For if wee simply graunt vnto men such power as they list to take vppon them, it is plaine to all men, what a slipperie readinesse there is to fall into tyranny, which ought to be far from the Church of Christ. Mat.17.5

2 Therefore here it must be remembred, that whatsoeuer authority or dignitie the holy Ghost in the scripture giueth either to the priestes or to the Prophets, or to the Apostls, or to the successours of the Apostls, al that same is giuen, not properly to the men themselues, but to the ministerie ouer which they are appointed, or (to speake it more plainely in one worde) whereof the ministerie is committed to them. For if we goe through them al in order, we shal not find that they had any authoritie to teach or to answere, but in the name and worde of the Lorde. For when they are called to the office, it is also enioyned them, that they should bring nothing of themselues, but speake out of the mouth of the Lord. And he himselfe doeth not bring them forth to be heard of ỹ people, before that he haue giuẽ thẽ instructiõs what they ought to speake, to the intent that they should speak no thing beside his word. Moses himself, the prince of al the prophets, was to be heard aboue the rest: but he was first instructed with his cõmandemẽts, that he might not declare any thing at al, but from the Lord. Therfore it is said, that the people when they embraced his doctrine, beleued in God, and in his seruãt Moses. Also ỹ the authority of the priests should not growe in contẽpt, it was stablished with most grieuous penalties. But therwithal ỹ Lorde sheweth vpõ what cõdition they were to be heard, when he saith ỹ he hath made his couenãt with Leui, ỹ the law of truth should be in his mouth. And a litle after he addeth: The lips of the priest shal kepe knowledge, & they shal require the law at his mouth: becaũse he is the angel of the God of hosts. Therfore if the priest wil be heard, let him shew himself the messẽger of God: ỹ is, let him faithfully report the cõmandementes that he receiued of his author. And where it is specially entreated of the hearing of them, this is expresly set, That they may answere according to the law of God.

All the priests authoritie depended vvholy vpon him vvhose priests they vvere.

3 What maner of power the prophets generally had, is very wel described in Ezechiel: Thou sonne of man (saith the Lord) I haue giuen thee to be a watchman to the house of Israel. Therefore thou shalt heare the worde out of my mouth, and thou shalt declare it to them from me. He that is cõmanded to heare out of the mouth of the Lord, is he not forbidden to inuent any thing of himself? But what is to declare from the Lorde, but so to speake as he may boldly boast, that it is not his owne, but the Lords word ỹ he he hath brought? The selfe same thing is in Hieremie, in other wordes. Let the prophet (saith he) with whom is a dreame, tel a dreame: & let him that Hier.23.28 hath my word speake my worde true. Certainly he appointeth a law to the all. And that is such, that he permitteth not any to teach more than he is commanded. And after he calleth it chaffe, al that is not come from himself only. Therefore none of the prophets themselues opened his mouth, but as the Lord told him the wordes before. Whereupon these sayinges are so oft Esa.6.5 found among them: the worde of the Lord, the burden of the Lord, so saith Iohn.1.6 the Lord, the mouth of the Lord hath spoken. And worthily. For Esay cryed Esa.6.5 out that he had defiled lips. Ieremie confessed that he coulde not speake, be-Ier.1.6. cause he was a childe: What could proceede from the defiled mouth of the one, and the fooliſh mouth of the other, but vncleane & vnwise, if they had spoken their owne speech? But his lips were holy & pure, when they began to be the instruments of the holy Ghost. When the Prophetes are bound with this religion, that they deliuer nothing, but that which they haue receyued, Ier.1.10 then they be garnished with notable power and excellent titles. For when the Loord testifieth, that he hath set them ouer nations and kingdomes, to plucke vp and to roote out, to destroy and plucke downe, to builde and to plant, he by and by adioyneth the cause: because he hath put his wordes in their mouth.

The apostles authoritie restrained & limited within the boundes of his commaundement which gaue them authoritie.

4 Now if you looke to the Apostles: they are in deede cõmended with many and notable titles, that they are the light of the world, and the salt of the earth, that they are to be heard in steed of Christ, that whatsoeuer they binde or loose in earth shalbe bound or loosed in heauen. But in their verie name they shewe howe much is permitted them in their office: that is, if they be Apostls, that they should not prate whatsoeuer they list: but shold faithfully report his commandements from whom they are sent, And the Mat.28.9 words of Christ are plaine enough, in which he hath determined their embassage: when he commanded them to go & teach al nations, al those things that he had commanded. Yea, & he himselfe also receiued this law, & laid it Iohn.7.16 vpon himselfe, that it should be lawfull for no man to refuse it. My doctrine (saith he) is not mine, but his that sẽt me, my fathers. He that was alway the only & eternall counceller of the Father, & he that was appointed by the Father the Lord and schoolemaster of all men, yet because he executed the ministerie of teaching, prescribed by his own example to al ministers, what rule they ought to follow in teaching. Therfore the power of the church is not infinite, but subiect to the word of the Lord, & as it were enclosed in it.

The auncient patriarches and fathers taught by Christ.

5 But sith this hath from the beginning ben of force in the church, & at this day ought to be in force, that the seruãts of God should teach nothing which they haue not learned of him: yet according to the diuersity of times they haue diuerse orders of learning. But that order which is now, much differeth from those that were before. First if it be true which Christ saith, that Mat.11.27. none hath seene the Father, but the sonne, and he to whom it hath pleased the sonne to shew him, it behoued verely that they shoulde bee alway directed by ẏ eternal wisdom of the father, which would come to the knowledg of God. For how should they either haue cõprehended in mind, or vttered the mysteries of God, but by his teaching, to whom alone the secretes of the Father are open? Therfore the holy fathers in old time knew God no other wise but beholding him in the Son as in a glasse. Whē I say this, I mean that God did neuer by any other mean disclose him selfe to men but by the Son, that is, his onely wisedom, light & truth. Out of this fountain did Adam, Noe, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, and the other draw all the knowledge that they had of heauenly doctrine. Out of the same fountain haue also all the Prophetes themselues drawen all the heauenly Oracles that they vttered. For verily this wisdom hath alway disclosed it selfe by moe wayes than one. To the Patriarches he vsed secret reuelations: but therewithal to confirm their minds, hee adioyned such signes, ỹ it could not be doubtfull to them, that it was God that spake. The Patriarches conueied ouer from hande to hand to posterity, ỹ which they had receiued. For the Lorde left it with them to this entent, that they should so spread it abroad. But the children and childrens children, by God secretly informing them, did knowe that that which they heard was from heauen, and not from the earth. Mala.2.7

The doctrin vvich Christe taught the fathers vvithout booke, in the lavv committed vnto vvriting: vpon the lavv the prophets grounded their doctrine.

6 But when it pleased God, to raise a more apparant forme of a Church he willed to haue his worde put in writing and noted, that the priests should fetch from thence what they might deliuer to the people, & that al the doctrine that should be taught should be tried by that rule. Therefore after the publishing of the lawe, when the priestes are commanded to teach out of ỹ mouth of the Lord, the meaning is, that they should teach nothing strange or differing from that kind of learning which the Lorde comprehended in the lawe: and to adde and diminish was vnlawfull for them. Then followed the Prophets, by whome in deede the Lord published new oracles to be added to the law: but yet not so new, but that they came out of the Law, & had respect vnto it: For, as touching doctrine, they were onely expositors of the law, & added nothing vnto it, but prophecies of thinges to come. Those excepted, they vttered nothing els but a pure exposition of the law. Because it pleased the Lorde that there should be a plainer and larger doctrine, ỹ weake consciences might be the better satisfied: he commaunded that the Prophecies also should be put in writing, & accounted part of his worde. And hereunto were added the histories, which are also the workes of the Prophetes, but made by the enditing of the holy ghost. I reckon the Psalmes among the Prophecies, because that which we attribute to the prophecies is also common to the psalmes. Therfore that whole body compacted of the law, prophecies, psalmes & histories, was the word of the Lord to the old people, by the rule whereof the priestes and teachers euen vnto Christes time were bound to examine their doctrine: neither was it lawfull for them to swarue either to the right hande or to the left: because all their office was enclosed within these bounds, that they should answere the people out of the mouth of God. Which is gathered of a notable place of Malachie, where he biddeth them to be mindfull of the law, & to giue heede to it, euen to the preaching of the gospel. For thereby he forbiddeth them all new found doctrines, and granteth them no leaue to swarue neuer so little out of the way which Moses had faithfully shewed them. And this is the reason why Dauid so honourably setteth out the excellencie of the lawe, and reheatseth so many praises of it: that is, that ỹ Iewes should couet no forein thing without it, sith within in it Mal.4.4.

was all perfection encloſed.

Chriſt manifeſted in the fleſh hath added the laſt hand to the reuelation of truth.

7 But when at laſt the wiſdome of God was openly ſhewed in the fleſh, that ſame wiſdom with ful mouth declared vnto vs al that euer cã with mãs wit be comprehended, or ought to be thought concerning the heauenly Father. Now therfore, ſince Chriſt the ſonne of righteouſnes hath ſhined, wee haue a perfect brightneſſe of the truth of God, ſuch as the clearenes is wont to be at mid-day, when the light was before but dimme. For verily the Prophet meant not to ſpeake of any meane thing, when he wrote that GOD in olde time ſpake diuerſly and many wayes to the fathers by the Prophets:

Heb. 1, 1.

but that in theſe laſt dayes he began to ſpeake to vs by his beloued Son. For he ſignifieth, yea he openly declareth, that God will not hereafter, as hee did before, ſpeak ſomtime by ſome, and ſomtime by other, nor wil adde Prophecies to Prophecies, or reuelations to reuelations: but that he hath ſo fulfilled all the partes of teaching in the Sonne, that they muſt haue this of him for the laſt and eternall teſtimony. After which ſorte all this time of the newe Teſtament wherein Chriſte hath appeared to vs with the preaching of his goſpel euen to ỹ day of iudgemẽt, is expreſſed by the laſt houre, the laſt times the laſt dayes: to the ende verily that contented with the perfection of the doctrine of Chriſt, we ſhoulde learne neither to faine vs any newe beſide it, or receiue it fained of other. Therfore not without cauſe the Father hath by ſingular prerogatiue ordeined the Sonne to be our teacher: commaunding him, and not any man, to be heard. He did in deede in fewe wordes ſet out his ſchoolemaſterſhip vnto vs, when he ſayde, Heare him: but in which there is more weight & force than men cõmonly think. For it is as much in effect, as if leading vs away from al doctrines of men, he ſhould bring vs to him only, and commaund vs to looke for all the doctrine of ſaluation at him alone, to hang vpon him alone, to cleaue to him alone, finally (as the very wordes do ſound) to harken to the voice of him alone. And truely what ought there nowe to be either looked for or deſired at the hande of man, when the very worde of life hath familiarly and openly diſcloſed himſelfe vnto vs? Yea but it is meete that the mouthes of all men be ſhut, after that he, in whome the heauenly Father willed to haue all the treaſures of knowledge & wiſdome to be hidden, hath once ſpoken, and ſo ſpoken as became both the wiſdome of God (which is in no part vnperfect) and Meſſias at whoſe hand the reuelation of all thinges is hoped for: that is to ſay, that he left nothing afterwarde for other to be ſpoken.

The vvritten vvord the onely rule of ſound teaching.

8 Let this therefore be a ſtedfaſt principle: ỹ there is to be had no other word of God, wherunto place ſhould be giuen in the church, than that which is contained firſt in the lawe and the prophets, and then in the writings of the Apoſtles: & that there is no other maner of teaching rightly, but according to the preſcription and rule of that worde. Heereupon alſo we gather, that there was no other thing graunted to the Apoſtles, but that which the prophets had had in olde time: that is, that they ſhoulde expounde the olde Scripture, and ſhewe that thoſe thinges that are therein taught are fulfilled in Chriſt: and yet that they ſhould not doe the ſame but of the Lorde, that is to ſay, the ſpirite of Chriſt going before them, and after a certaine maner enditing wordes vnto them. For Chriſt limitted their embaſſage with this condition when hee commaunded them to goe and teach, not ſuch things as they themſelues had raſhly forged, but all thoſe things that he had commanded them, and nothing could be more plainly ſpoken, than that which he ſaith in another place: but be not ye called maiſters, for onely one is your maiſter, Chriſt. Then, to imprint this more depely in their mind, he repeateth it twiſe in the ſame place. And becauſe their rudeneſſe was ſuch, that they coulde not conceiue thoſe things that they had heard and learned of the mouth of their maiſter, therefore the ſpirit of trueth is promiſed them by whome they ſhould be directed to the true vnderſtanding of all thinges. For that ſame reſtraining is to be diligently noted, where this office is aſſigned to the holy Ghoſt, to put them in minde of al thoſe thinges that hee before taught them by mouth.

John.14.26. & 16.13.

9 Therefore Peter who was verie wel taught how much hee might lawfully doe, leaueth nothing either to himſelfe or other, but to diſtribute the doctrine deliuered of God. Let him that ſpeaketh (ſaieth hee) ſpeake as the wordes of God, that is to ſay, not doubtingly, as they are wont to tremble whoſe own conſcience miſgiueth them, but with ſure confidence, which becommeth the ſeruant of God furniſhed with aſſured inſtructions. What other thing is this, but to forbid al inuentions of mans mind, from what head ſoeuer they haue proceeded, that the pure word of God may be heard and learned in the Church of the faithful? to take away the ordinãces or rather the fained deuiſes of al men, of what degree ſoeuer they be, that the decrees of God only may remaine in force? Theſe be thoſe ſpirituall armures, mightie through God to caſt downe holds: by which the faithful ſeruants of God may throw downe counſels, and all height that aduaunceth it ſelfe againſt the knowledge of God, & may leade all knowledge captiue to obey Chriſt. Loe this is the ſoueraigne power, wherewith it behoueth the Paſtors of the Church to be endued, by what name ſoeuer they bee called, that is, that by the worde of God they may with confidence be bolde to do all things: may compell all the ſtrength, glorie, wiſedome and height of the worlde to yeeld and obey to his maieſtie: being vpholden by his power, may commaunde all men from the higheſt to the loweſt: may build vp the houſe of Chriſt & pull down the houſe of ſatan: may feede the ſheep & driue away the wolues: may inſtruct and exhort the willing to learne: may reproue, rebuke & ſubdue the rebellious & ſtubborne: may binde, and looſe: finally may thunder & lighten, if neede be: but al things in the word of God. Howbeit there is, as I haue ſaid, this difference between the Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors, that the Apoſtles were the certaine & authentike ſecretaries of the holy Ghoſt, and therefore their writings are to be eſteemed for the Oracles of God: but the other haue none other office, but to teach that which is ſet forth & written in the holy Scriptures. We determine therfore, that this is not now left to faithfull miniſters, that they may coine any new doctrine, but that they ought ſimply to cleaue to the doctrine, whereunto the Lord hath made all men without exception ſubiect. When I ſay this, my meaning is not onely to ſhewe what is lawful for all particular men, but alſo what is lawfull for the whole vniuerſall Church. Now as touching all patticular men: Paul verily was ordeined by the Lorde Apoſtle to the Corinthians: but hee denieth that hee hath dominion ouer their faith. Who now dare take a dominion vpon himselfe, which Paul testifieth that it belonged not to him? If he had acknowledged himselfe to haue this libertie of teaching, that whatsoeuer the Pastor teacheth he may therein of right require to be beleeued: he would neuer haue taught the Corinthians this discipliue, that while two or three Prophetes speake, the rest should iudge, & if it were reuealed to any that sate, the first should hold his peace. For so he spared none, whose authoritie he made not subiect to the iudgement of the word of God. But, will some man say, of the whole vniuersal Church the case is otherwise. I aunswere that in an other place Paul meeteth with this doubt also, where hee saieth, that Faith is by hearing, & hearing by the worde of God. Truely, if Faith hang of the worde of God only, hath respect vnto & resteth vpon it alone, what place is there now left to the word of the whole world? For herein no man may doubt that hath wel knowen what faith is. For Faith ought to be staied vpon such assurednes, whereby it may stand inuincible against Satan, & all the engines of the hels, & against the whole world. This assurednes we shall no where finde but in the only word of God. Again, it is a generall rule which we here ought to haue respect vnto: that God doth therefore take from men the power to set forth a new doctrine, that he only may be our scholemaster in heauenly learning, as he only is true which can neither lye nor deceiue. This rule belongeth no lesse to the whole Church than to euery one of the faithful.

No other ground but the ſcriptures either for men particularly, or for the vvhole body of the church to build vpon.

Rom.10.

Their tyrannie who binde the world to beleeue whatsoeuer pleaseth them to teach.

10 But if this power of the Church, which wee haue spoken of, be compared with that power, whereof the spirituall tyrants, that haue falsly called themselues Bishops and Prelates of Religion, haue in certaine ages past boasted themselues among the people of God, the agrement shalbe no better than Christ hath with Belial. Yet it is not in this place my purpose to declare in what sort & with how wicked meanes they haue exercised their tyrannie: I will but rehearse the doctrine, which at this day they defende, first with writings, and then with sword and fire. Because they take it for a thing confessed, that a generall Councel is the true image of the Church, when they haue taken this principle, they do without doubt determine, that such councels are immediatly gouerned of the holy ghost, & that therefore they cannot erre. But whereas they themselues do rule the councels, yea & make them, they do in deede chalenge to themselues whatsoeuer they affirme to be due to the Councels. Therefore they will haue our faith to stand & fal at their wil that whatsoeuer they shal determine on the one side or the other, may be stablished & certaine to our mindes: so that if they allowe any thing we must allowe the same without doubting: if they condemne any thing wee must also hold it for condemned. In the meane time after their owne lust, & despising the word of God, they coine doctrines, to which afterwarde they require by this rule to haue faith giuen. For they also say that he is no Christian, that doth not certainly consent to all their doctrines as well affirmatiue as negatiue: if not with expressed yet with vnexpressed faith: because it is in the power of the Church, to make newe articles of the Faith.

Promises made to the Church abused to bolster vp a most vnlawfull power in the Church.

11 First let vs heare by what argumentes they prooue that this authoritie is giuen to the Church: and then we shall see how much that maketh for them which they alleage of the Church. The Church (say they) hath notable table promises, that it shall neuer be forsaken of Christ her spouse, but that it shalbe guided by his spirite into all trueth. But of the promises which they are wont to alleadge, many are giuē no lesse to euery one of the faithful particularly, than to the whole Church vniuersally. For though the Lord spake to the twelue Apostles, when he said: Behold I am with you euen to the end of the world: Againe: I will aske my Father, and he shall giue you an other comforter, namely the Spirit of trueth: yet he made the promise not only to the whole number of the twelue, but also to euery one of them: yea to the other disciples likewise, either those that he had already receiued, or those ỹ should afterward be added to them. But when they expounde such promises full of singular comfort, as though they were giuen to none of the Christians, but to the whole Church together: what do they else, but take away from all Christians that confidence which they al ought to receiue thereby to encourage them? Yet I do not here deny, but that the whole fellowship of the faithful furnished with manifold diuersitie of gifts, is endued with much larger & more plentiful treasure of the heauenly wisdome, than ech one seueraly: neither is it my meaning, that this is spoken in common to the faithfull, as though they were all alike endued with the Spirite of vnderstanding & doctrine: but because it is not to be granted, to the aduersaries of Christ, that they should for ỹ defence of an euil cause wrest the scripture to a wrong sense. But, omitting this, I simply confesse that which is true, that the Lorde is perpetually present with his, & ruleth them with his Spirit. And that this Spirite is not the Spirit of errour, ignorance, lying or darkenesse: but of sure reuelation, wisedome, trueth, & light, of whome they not deceitfully may learne those things that are giuen them, that is to saye, what is the hope of their calling, and what bee the richesse of the glorie of the inheritance of GOD in the Saintes. But whereas the faithfull, euen they that are endued with more excellent giftes aboue the rest, doe in this flesh receiue onely the first fruites and a certaine tast of that Spirite: there remaineth nothing better to them than knowing their owne weaknes, to hold themselues carefully within the boundes of the worde of God: least, if they wander far after their own sense, they by & by stray out of the right way, insomuch as they be yet voide of that spirit, by whose only teaching trueth is discerned frō falshood. For all men do confesse with Paul, that they haue not yet attained to the marke. Therefore they more endeuour to daily profiting, than glorie of perfection.

Matt.28.20. Ioh.1.14.19. 1.Cor.1.12. Ephe.1.18. Phil.3.11.

12 But they will take exception, & say that whatsoeuer is particularly attributed to euery one of the holy ones, the same doth throughly and fully belong to the Church it self. Although this hath some seeming of truth, yet I deny it to be true. God doth indeed so distribute to euery one of the members the gift of his spirit by measure, that the whole body wanteth nothing necessary, when the gifres are giuen in common. But the riches of the Church are alway such, that there euer wāteth much of that highest perfectiō, which our aduersaries do boast of. Yet the church is not therfore so left destitute in any behalfe, but that she alway hath so much as is enough. For the Lord knoweth what her necessitie requireth. But, to holde her vnder humility and godly modestie, he giueth her no more than he knoweth to be

The Church not so perfect by vertue of anie promise made vnto it but that still it remaineth in this vvorld subiect as to other infirmities so to error.

Ephe.5.25. 1.Tim.3.15. expedient. I know what here also they are wont to obiect, that is, that the church is clensed with the washing of water in the word of life, that it might be without wrinckle & spot, & that therfore in an other place it is called the piller and stay of trueth. But in the first of these two places is rather taught, what Christ daily worketh in it, than what he hath already done. For if he daily sanctifieth, purgeth, polisheth, wipeth from spots al them that be his: truely it is certain that they are yet besprinkled with some spots & wrinkles, and that there wanteth somewhat of their sanctification. But howe vain & fabulous is it, to iudge the Church already in euery part holy and spotlesse, wherof all the members are spotty & very vncleane? It is true therfore that the Church is sanctified of Christ. But only the beginning of that sanctifying is here seene: but the end and full accomplishment shalbe, when Christ the holiest of holy ones shall truly and fully fil it with his holinesse. It is true also that the spots and wrinckles of it are wiped away: but so that thay be daily in wiping away, vntil Christ with his comming do vtterly take away all that remaineth. For vnlesse we graunt this, we must of necessitie affirme with the Pelagians, that the righteousnesse of the faithfull is perfect in this life: and with the Cathani and Donatists we must suffer no infirmitie in the Church. The other place, as we haue elsewhere seene, hath a sense vtterly differing from that which they pretende. For when Paul hath instructed Timothee, and framed him to the true office of a Bishoppe, he sayeth that he did it to this purpose, that hee should knowe howe he ought to behaue himselfe in the Church. And that he should with the greater religiousnes and endeuor bende himselfe thereunto, he addeth that the Church is the very piller and staie of trueth. For what else doe these wordes meane, but that the trueth of Ephe.4.11. God is preserued in the Church, namely by the ministerie of preaching? As in another place he teacheth, ỹ Christ gaue Apostles, Pastors, & Teachers, that we should no more be carried about with euery winde of doctrine, or be mocked of men: but that being enlightened with the true knowledge of the Sonne of God, we should altogether meete in vnitie of Faith. Whereas therefore the trueth is not extinguished in the worlde, but remaineth safe, that same commeth to passe because it hath the Church a faithful keeper of it, by whose helpe and ministery it is susteined. But if this keping standeth in the ministery of the Prophets & Apostles, it foloweth that it hangeth wholly hereupon, if the word of the Lord be faithfully preserued and doe keepe his puritie.

The drift of the Church of Rome in maintaining that the Church cannot erre.

13 But that the readers may better vnderstande, vpon what point this question chiefly stãdeth, I wil in few words declare what our aduersaries require, and wherein we stand against them. Where they say that the Church can not erre, it tendeth hereunto, and thus they expound it, that forasmuch as it is gouerned by the spirit of God, it may go safely without the word: that whithersoeuer it goeth, it can not thinke nor speake any thing but trueth: that therefore if it determine any thing without or beside Gods worde, the same is no otherwise to be esteemed than as a certaine oracle of God. If we graunt that first point, that the Churche can not erre in thinges necessarie to saluation, this is our meaning, that this is therefore because forsaking all her owne wisedome, she suffereth her selfe to be taught of the holy

Ghost

Ghoſt by the worde of God. This therefore is the difference. They ſet the authoritie of the Church without the worde of God, but wee will that it be annexed to the worde, & ſuffer it not to be ſeuered from it. And what marueil is it, if the ſpouſe and ſcholer of Chriſt be ſubiect to her husbande and ſchoolemaſter, that ſhe continually & earneſtly hangeth of his mouth? For this is the order of a wel gouerned houſe, that the wife ſhoulde obey the authoritie of the husband: and this is the rule of a wel ordered ſchole, that the teaching of the ſchoolemaſter alone ſhould there be heard. Wherefore let the Church not be wiſe of her ſelfe, nor thinke any thing of her ſelfe: but determine the end of her wiſedome where he hath made an end of ſpeaking. After this manner ſhe ſhall alſo diſtruſt all the inuentions of her owne reaſon: but in thoſe things wherein it ſtandeth vpon the word of God, ſhe ſhall wauer with no diſtruſtfulneſſe or doubting, but ſhal reſt with great aſſuredneſſe & ſtedfaſt conſtancie. So alſo truſting vpon the largeneſſe of thoſe promiſes that ſhee hath, ſhee ſhal haue whereupon abundantly to ſuſteine her faith: that ſhe may nothing doubt that the beſt guide of the right way, the holy ſpirit, is alway preſent with her: but therewithal ſhe ſhall keepe in memorie what vſe the Lord would haue vs to receiue of his holy ſpirit. The ſpirit (ſaith he) which I wil ſend from my father ſhal lead you into al trueth. But how? becauſe (ſaith he) he ſhal put you in mind of all thoſe things that I haue told you. Therefore he giueth warning that there is nothing more to be looked for of his ſpirit, but that he ſhould enlighten our mindes to perceiue the trueth of his doctrine. Therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith excellently well. Manie (ſaith he) do boaſt of the holy ſpirite: but they which ſpeake their owne doe falſly pretend that they haue him. As Chriſt teſtified that hee ſpake not of himſelfe: becauſe he ſpake out of the law & the Prophets: ſo if any thing beſide the Goſpel be thruſt in vnder the title of the ſpirit, let vs not beleeue it, becauſe as Chriſt is the fulfilling of the law & the Prophets: ſo is the ſpirite, of the Goſpel. Theſe be his words. Now it is eaſie to gather how wrongfully our aduerſaries do, which boaſt of the holy Ghoſt to no other end but to ſet foorth vnder his name ſtrange and foraine doctrines from the word of god, whereas he will with vnſpeakable knot be conioyned with the word of god, and the ſame doeth Chriſt profeſſe of him when hee promiſeth him to his Church. So is it truely. What ſobrietie the Lord hath once preſcribed to his Church, the ſame he will haue to be perpetually kept, But he hath forbidde̅ her, that ſhe ſhould not adde any thing to his word, nor take any thing from it. This is the inuiolable decree of God & of the holy Ghoſt, which our aduerſaries go about to abrogate, when they faine that the Church is ruled of the ſpirite without the word.

Iohn. 16. 7. & 13.

Serm. de ſancto & ador. Spiritu. Ioh. 12. 50. & 14. 10.

14 Here againe they murmure againſt vs, and ſay that it behooued that the Church ſhould adde ſome things to the writings of the Apoſtles, or that they themſelues ſhoulde afterwarde with liuely voice ſupply many thinges which they had not clearely enough taught, namely ſith Chriſt ſaide vnto them. I haue many things to be ſaide to you, which you cannot now beare, and that theſe be the ordinances, which without the ſcripture haue beene receiued onely in vſe and manner. But what ſhameleſneſſe is this? I graunt the diſciples were yet rude, and in a maner vnapt to learne, when the Lorde ſaide saide this vnto them. But were they then also holden with such dulnes, when they did put their doctrine in writing, that they afterward needed to supply with liuely voice that which they had by fault of ignorance omitted in their writings? But if they were alreadie led by the spirite of trueth into all trueth when they did set foorth their writings: what hindred that they haue not therein contained and left written a perfect knowledge of the doctrine of the gospel? But go to: let vs graunt them that which they require. Onely let them point out what be those things that it behoued to be reuealed without writing. If they dare enterprise that, I wil assail them with Augustines words: that is, When the Lord had said nothing of them, which of vs dare say, these they be or those they be? or if any dare say so, whereby doth he proue it? But why do I striue about a superfluous matter? For a verie childe doth knowe, that in the writings of the Apostles, which these men do make in a manner lame and but halfe perfect, there is the fruit of that reuelation which the Lord did then promise them.

In doctrine nothing to be added by the Church vnto that which the Apoſtles haue left in writing.

Hom. in 1 ohn. 96.

The church not autorised to coine newe doctrines, because Christ doth number them with heathens that despise the iudgement of the Church. Mat. 18. 17.

15 What? say they, did not Christ put out of controuersie whatsoeuer the Church teacheth & decreeth, when he commaundeth him to be taken for a heathen man & a Publican that dare say against her? First in that place is no mention made of doctrine, but onely the authoritie of the censures is established for correcting of vices, that they which haue beene admonished or rebuked should not resist her iudgemẽt. But omitting this, it is much maruel, that these losels haue so litle shame, that they dare be proud of ỹ place. For what shal they get thereby, but that the consent of the Church is neuer to be despised, which neuer consenteth but vnto the trueth of the worde of God? The Church is to be heard, say they. Who denieth it? forasmuch as it pronounceth nothing but out of the word of the Lord. If they require any more let them knowe that these wordes of Christ do nothing take their part therin. Neither ought I to be thought too much contentious because I stand so earnestly vpon this point, That it is not lawfull for the Church to make any newe doctrine, that is, to teach and deliuer for an Oracle any more than that which the Lord hath reuealed by his word. For men of sound wit do see how great danger there is, if so great authoritie be once graunted to men. They see also how wide a window is opened to the mockings and cauillations of the wicked, if we say that that which men haue iudged is to be taken for an Oracle among Christians. Beside that, Christ speaking according to the consideration of his owne time, giueth this name to the Synagoge, that his disciples shoulde afterwarde learne to reuerence holy assemblies of the church. So should it come to passe that euerie citie and village should haue equall authoritie in coyning of doctrines.

Baptizing of infants & the consubstantialitie of Christ with God the father, are not warranted by the sole authoritie of the Church, but haue their sufficient grounds in Scripture.

16 The examples which they vse, do nothing help them. They say that the Baptising of infantes, proceeded not so much from the expresse commaundement of the scripture as from the decree of the Church. But it were a verie miserable succour, if we were compelled to flee to the bare authoritie of the Church for defence of the Baptisme of infants: but it shall in another place sufficiently appeare that it is far otherwise. Likewise whereas they obiect that that is no where founde in the Scripture, which was pronounced in the Nicene Synode, that the sonne is consubstantiall with the father: therein they do great wrong to the fathers, as though they had rashly condemned Arrius, because he woulde not sweare to their wordes, when he professed all that doctrine which is comprehended in the writings of the Prophets and Apostles. This word, I graunt, is not in the Scripture: but whē therein is so oft affirmed, that there is but one God, againe, Christ is so oft called the true and eternall God, one with the Father: what other thing doe the fathers of the Nicene councel when they declare that he is of one substance, but simply set out the natural sense of the Scripture? But Theodorite reporteth that Constantine vsed this preface in their assemblie, In disputations (saith he) of diuine matters, there is a prescribed doctrine of the holy Ghost: the bookes of the Gospels and of the Apostles, with the Oracles of the Prophets, doe fully shewe vs the meaning of God. Therefore laying away discord, let vs take the discussings of questions out of the wordes of the Spirite. There was at that time no man that spake against these holy monitions. No man tooke exception, that the Church might adde somewhat of her owne: that the Spirite reuealed not all things to the Apostles, or at least vttered them not to those that came after: or any such thing. If it be true which our aduersaries would haue: first, Constantine did euill, that tooke from the Church her authoritie: then, whereas none of the Bishops at that time rose vp to defend it, this was not without breach of their faith? for so they were betrayers of the right of the Church. But sith Theodorite rehearseth that they willingly embraced that which the Emperour saide, it is certaine that this new doctrine was then vtterly vnknowen.

Histo. Eccle. lib. 1. cap. 5.

The ix. Chapter.

Of Councels and of their authoritie.

NOwe, although I graunt them all thinges concerning the Church: yet they shall thereby not much preuaile for their intent. For whatsoeuer is saide of the Church, the same they by and by giue to the Councels, forasmuch as in their opinion those represent the Church. Yea, where they so stiffely contende for the power of the Church, they doe it of no other purpose, but to giue all that they can get to the bishop of Rome and his garde. But ere I beginne to discusse this question, I must needs here make protestation of two things aforehand. First, that where I shall in this point be somewhat rough, it is not because I lesse esteeme the olde Councels than I ought to doe. For I reuerence them from my heart, & wish them to be had in their due honor with all men. But herein is some meane, that is, that there be nothing withdrawen from Christ. Nowe this is the right of Christ, to bee the head in all Councels, and to haue no man fellowe with him in this dignitie. But I say that then onely he is the head, when he gouerneth the whole assembly with his worde and Spirite. Secondly, whereas I giue lesse to Councels than the aduersaries require. I doe it not for this cause that I am afraid of the Councels, as though they did make for their side, and were against ours. For as we are abundantly furnished with the worde of the Lorde to the full proofe of our own doctrine fully, and to the ouerthrow of the whole

A protestation concerning the estimation of Councels.

Papistrie that wee neede nor much to desire any other thing beside it: so if the matter require, the olde Councels do for a great part minister vnto vs so much as may suffice for both.

Christ in the midst of Councels: but not except they be gathered in his name, Matt. 18. 20.

2 Now let vs speake of the thing it selfe. If it bee sought of the Scriptures, what is the authoritie of Councels: there is no plainer promise than in this saying of Christ: Where two or three shalbe gathered together in my name, there I am in the middest of them. But that doth no lesse belong to euery particular assembly than to a generall Councel. But the doubt of the question standeth not therein: but because there is a condition added, that God will so onely be in the middest of the Councel, if it bee gathered together in his name. Therefore although our aduersaries doe a thousand times name Councels of bishops, they shal litle preuaile: neither shall they make vs to beleue that which they affirme, that is, that they be gouerned of the holy Ghost, vntil they haue proued that they are gathered together in the name of Christ. For it is as possible ỹ wicked & euill Bishops may conspire against Christ, as good & honest bishops may come together in his name. For a verie cleere proofe hereof are manie decrees that haue proceeded from such Councels. But this shalbe seene hereafter. Now I do but answere in one word that Christ promiseth nothing, but to thẽ that are gathered together in his name. Let vs therefore define what that is. I deny that they be gathered together in the name of Christ, which casting away the commaundement of God, wherein he forbiddeth any thing to be added to his word, or taken frõ it, do decree euery thing after their own wil: which being not contented with the Oracles of the Scripture, that is to say the only rule of perfect wisedom, do imagine some new thing of their owne head. Surely, sith Christ hath not promised ỹ he will be present at all Councels, but hath adioyned a peculiar marke, whereby to make true & lawfull Councels different from other: it is meete that we should not neglect this difference. This is the couenãt, which in old time God made with the Leuitical priests, that they should teach out of his mouth. This he alway required of the Prophets: this law also we see to haue bin laid vpon the Apostles. Who so breake this couenant, God doeth not vouchsafe, to let them haue the honor of Priesthood, nor any authority. Let the aduersaries vndo me this knot, if they wil make my faith bounde to the decrees of men beside the word of God.

Mala. 2. 7.

Trueth may be in the Church although the Pastors of the Church bee corrupt as in the times of the Prophets they were. Esa. 56. 10.

3 For whereas they think not that truth remaineth in the Church, vnlesse it be among the Pastors: and that the Church it self standeth not, vnlesse it appeare in generall Councels: that is farre from hauing beene alwaie true, if the Prophets haue left vnto vs true testimonies of their owne times. There was in the time of Esaie a Church at Hierusalem, which God had not yet forsaken. But of the Pastors he saith thus: The watchmẽ are al blind, neither know they any thing. They are all dumme dogges, neither are they able to barke. They lie along & sleepe, & loue sleeping: & the Pastors themselues know nothing, nor doe vnderstand: & they do altogether looke backe vnto their owne waies. After the same maner Osee saith: The watchman of Ephraim with God, the snare of the fouler, hatred in the house of God. Where ioyning them with God by way of mockage, he teacheth that their pretence of the priesthood is vain. The Church also endured vnto the time of Hieremie. Let vs heare what he saieth of the Pastors. From the prophet euen to the priest, euerie one followeth lying. Againe: The prophets do prophecie a lie in my name, when I haue not sent them, nor commaunded them. And least we should be to long in reciting his words, let those things be read that he hath written in the whole xxiii. and xl. chapiters. At that time on the other side Ezechiel did no more gently inuey against the same men. The cõspiracie (saith he) of the prophets in the mids of her as a roaring lion, & that violently taketh his pray. Her priests haue broken my law, and haue defiled my holy thinges, and haue made no difference betweene holie and prophane: & the rest that he adioyneth to the same effect. Like complaints are euery where in the Prophets, so that nothing is ofter found in them. Hier.6.13 Hier.14.4 Eze.22.25

4 But perhaps it might be that that was so among the Iewes: but our age is free from so great an euill. I woulde to God in deede it were so: but the holy Ghost hath giuen warning that it shalbe farre otherwise. The wordes of Peter are plaine. As (saith he) there were in the olde people false prophetes, so shall there also be among you false teachers, slily bringing in sectes of perdition. see you not howe hee saieth, ỳ there is danger to come, not by men of the common people, but by them that shal boast themselues with the title of teachers and pastors? Moreouer howe oft hath it ben forespoken by Christ and his Apostles, that there should verie great daungers hang ouer the Church by the pastors? Yea, Paul plainely sheweth, that Antichrist shal sit in no other place than in the temple of God. Whereby hee signifieth, that the horrible calamity of which he there speaketh, shal come from no where elsse but from them ỳ shal sit in steede of pastors in ỳ church. And in another place he sheweth, ỳ the beginnings of so great a mischiefe are euen already nere at hãd. For when he speaketh to the bishops of Ephesus, I know (saith he) that after my departure there shall enter into you rauening wolues not sparing the flocke. And they shalbe of your owne selues, that shall speake peruerse things, to leade away disciples after them. Howe much corruption might a long course of yeres bring among pastors, when they could so farre go out of kind in so small a space of time? And, not to fill much paper with rehearsing them by name: we are admonished by the examples in a maner of al ages, that neither the trueth is alway nourished in the bosome of the pastors, nor the safety of the Church doth hang vppon their state. They ought in deede to haue beene ỳ gouernors and keepers of the peace & safetie of the Church, for preseruation wherof, they are ordeined: but it is one thing for a man to performe that which he ought, & another thing to owe that which he perfourmeth not.

That vvich vvas in the first may be also in the last daies of the church, and is. 2.Pet.2. Matt.24.11 and 24. 2.Thess.2.4 Act.20.19

5 Yet let no man take these our wordes in such part, as though I would euerie where and rashly without any choise diminish the authoritie of Pastors. I do but onely admonishe that euen among pastors themselues there is a choise to be had, that we should not immediatly thinke them to be pastors that are so called. But the Pope with all his flocke of bishops, vppon none other reason, but because they are called Pastors, shaking away the obedience of the worde of God, do tumble & tosse al things after their owne lust: and in the meane time they trauaile to perswade, that they cannot bee destitute destitute of the light of truth, that the spirit of God perpetually abideth in them, ỹ the church consisteth in them & dieth with them. As though there be now no iudgements of the Lorde, whereby he may punish the worlde at this day with the same kinde of punishment, wherewith sometime he toke vengeance of the vnthankfulnes of the old people, that is, to strike the pastors with blindnes & amased dulnesse. Neither do they most foolish men vnderstand, that they sing the same song, which those in olde time did sing that warred against the word of God. For the enemies of Hieremie did thus prepare themselues against the trueth: Come, & we wil imagine imaginations against Hieremie: forasmuch as the law shal not perish from the priest, nor councell from the wise man, nor the word from the prophet.

Bishops in the church of Rome presuming vpon their titles as if God could not strike them nowe vvith amased dulnes as vvell as others in the olde vvorlde.

Hier.18.18

The blinde priestes & false prophetes that were of olde being assembed in a councel together might no doubt haue erred, & did.

6 Hereby it is easie to answere to that other obiection concerning generall councels. It can not be denied but that the Iewes had a true church in the time of the prophets. But if there had then ben a generall councel gathered together of the priests, what maner face of the church had ther appeared? We heare what God saith, not to one or two of thé but to the whole order: The priests shalbe astonied, and the prophets shalbe made afraide. Againe, the law shal perish from the priest, and councel from the Elders. Againe, Night shalbe to you in steede of a vision, and darkenesse in steede of propheciyng: & the sunne shall fall downe vpon the propheres, and bee darkened vpon these daies &c. Well: if al such had then been gathered together in one, what Spirit should haue gouerned in that assembie? Of that thing we haué a notable example in that councell which Achab called together. There were present foure hundred prophets. But, because they were come together of no other mind but to flatter the wicked king: therefore Satan was sent of the Lorde to be a lying spirite in the mouth of them all. There by al their voices the trueth was condemned. Micha was condemned for an heretike, striken and cast in prison. So was done to Hieremie, so to the other prophets.

1.King.22.5. &.22.

A councell of Bishops & pharisies assembled together against Christ in Ierusalem.

7 But let one example suffice for all, which is more notable than the rest. In that councel which the bishops and pharisees gathered at Hierusalem against Christ, what can a man say that there wanted, in so much as pertained to the outward shew? For if there had not then beene a Church at Hierusalem, Christ would neuer haue communicate with their sacrifices & other ceremonies. There was made a solemne summoning of them together: the high bishop sate as chiefe: the whole order of priestes sate by hym: yet Christ was there condemned, & his doctrine driuen away. This doing is a profe ỹ the Church was not enclosed in that councel But there is no perils that any such thing should happé to vs. Who hath giué vs assurãce therof? For it is not without fault of sluggishnes, to be too careles in so great a matter. But wher the holy Ghost doth with expresse words prophecy by ỹ mouth of Paul, that there shal come a departing (which cannot come but that the pastors must be the first that shal forsake God) why are we here in wilfully blinde to our owne destruction? Wherefore it is in no wise to be graunted, that the Church consisteth in the company of pastors, for whom the Lord hath no where vndertaken that they shall perpetually bee good, but he hath pronounced that they shal sometime be euill. But when he warneth vs of the danger, he doth it to this entent to make vs the warer. 8 What then? wilt thou say: Shall the councells haue no authoritie in determining? Yes forsooth. For neither do I here argue that all councels are to be condemned, or all their actes to be repelled, or (as the saying is) to bee defaced with one blotte. But (thou wilt say to mee) thou bringest them all into subiection, that it may bee free for euery man to receiue or refuse that which the councels haue determined. Not so. But so oft as the decree of any councel is brought forth, I would haue it first to be diligently weighed, at what time it was holden, for what cause it was holden, what manner of men were present: and then the very thing that is intreated of, to bee examined by the rule of the scripture: and that in such sort as the determination of the councell may haue his force, and be as a foreiudged sentence, and yet not hinder the aforesaid examination. I would to God all men did keep that moderation which Augustine prescribeth in the thirde booke against Maximinus. For when hee minded breefly to put to silence this heretike contending about the Decrees of councels: Neither (saith he) ought I to obiect against thee the Synode of Nice, nor thou against me the Synode of Arimimum, as to the entent to conclude one another by foreiudged sentence, neither am I bound by the authoritie of the one, nor thou of the other. By authorities of Scriptures, not such as are proper to either one, but such as are common to both, let there striue matter with matter, cause with cause, reason with reason. So should it come to passe, that councels should haue the maiestie that they ought: but in the meane season the Scripture shoulde bee alone in the higher place, that there might be nothing that shoulde not bee subiect to the rule thereof. So these olde Synodes, as of Nice, of Constantinople, the first of Ephesus, of Chalcedon, and such other, which were holden for confuting of errours, wee willingly embrace and reuerence as holy, so much as belongeth to the doctrines of faith: for they containe nothing but the pure and naturall exposition of Scripture, which the holy fathers with spirituall wisedome applied to the subduing of the enimies of Religion that then rose vp. In some of the latter councels also, we see to appeare a true zeal of godlinesse, and plain tokens of wit, learning, and wisedome. But as thinges are wont commonly to grow to worse, we may see by the latter Councelles, how much the Church hath now and then degenerate from the pureneſſe of that golden age. And I doubt not but that in these corrupter ages also, councels haue had some bishops of the better sort. But in these the same happened which the Senators themselues complained to be not well done in making of ordinaunces of the senate of Rome. For while the sentences are numbred, not weighed, it is of necessitie that oftentimes the better part is ouercome of the greater. Truely they brought foorth many wicked sentences. Neither is it here needefull to gather the speciall examples, either because it should be too long, or because other haue done it so diligently that there cannot much be added.

How farre councels to bee receiued.

The disagreemaunt betweene the councell of Constantinople and Nice, of Chalcedon and Ephesus.

9 Now, what needs I to rehearse Councels disagreeing with councels? And it is no cause that any should murmure against mee, and say, that of those councels that disagree the one is not lawfull. For, howe shall we iudge that? By this, if I bee not deceiued, that wee shall iudge by the Scriptures, that that the decrees thereof are not agreeable with true doctrine. For this is the onely certaine lawe to diſcerne them by. It is nowe about nine hundred yeares ago, ſince the Synode of Conſtantinople gathered together vnder Leo the Emperour, iudged that images ſet vp in Churches ſhould bee ouerthrowen, and broken in peeces. A little afterward, the councel of Nice, which Irene the Empreſſe aſſembled in ſpite of him, decreed that they ſhould be reſtored. Whether of theſe two ſhall we acknowledge for a lawfull councell? The latter which gaue images a place in Churches, hath preuailed among the people. But Auguſtine ſaith that that cannot be done without moſte preſent peril of idolatrie. Epiphanius which was before in time, ſpeaketh much more ſharply: for he ſaith that it is wickednesſe and abhomination to haue images ſeene in a Church of Chriſtians. Woulde they that ſo ſpeake, allowe that councell, if they were aliue at this day? But if both the hiſtorians tell trueth, and the verie actes be beleeued, not onely images them ſelues, but alſo the worſhipping of them was there receiued. But it is euident that ſuch a decree came from Satan. How ſay you to this, that in depraying and tearing the Scripture, they ſhew that they made a mocking ſtocke of it? Which thing I haue before ſufficiently made open. Howſoeuer it be, wee ſhall no otherwiſe bee able to diſcerne betweene contrary & diſagreeing Synodes, which were many, vnleſſe we trie them all by that balance of all men and angels, that is, by the worde of the Lorde. So wee embrace the Synode of Chalcedon, refuſing the ſeconde Synode of Epheſus, becauſe in this latter one the wickednesſe of Eutiches was confirmed, which the other former condemned. This thing holy men haue iudged none otherwiſe but by the ſcripture: whome wee ſo followe in iudging: that the worde of God which gaue light to them doeth alſo nowe giue light to vs. Now let the Ramaniſtes goe and boaſt, as they are wont, that the Holy ghoſt is faſtened and bounde to their councels.

The great vveaknes of the fathers aſſembled in the Councell of Nice againſt Arrius.

10 Howbeit there is alſo ſomewhat which a man may well thinke to bee wanting in thoſe auncient and purer councels: either becauſe they that then were at them, beeing otherwiſe learned and wiſe men, wholly bent to the buſineſſe then in hand, did not foreſee many other thinges, or for that many things of lighter importance eſcaped them being buſied with weightier and more earneſt matters: or for that ſimply, as beeing men they might bee deceiued with vnskilfulneſſe: or for that they were ſometime carried headlong with too much affection. Of this laſt point (which ſeemeth the hardeſt of all) there was a plaine example in the Nicene Synode, the dignitie whereof hath by conſent of all men, as it was worthie, beene receiued with moſt high reuerence. For when the principall article of our faith was there in danger, Arrius the enimie was preſent in readineſſe, with whom they muſt fight hande to hande, and the cheefe importaunce lay in the agreement of them that came prepared to fight againſt the errour of Arrius, this notwithſtanding, they careleſſe of ſo great daungers, yea, as it were hauing forgotten grauitie, modeſtie and al humanitie, leauing the battaile that they had in hand, as if they had come thither of purpoſe to doe Arrius a pleaſure, began to wounde themſelues with inwarde diſſentions, and to turne againſt themſelues the ſtile that ſhould haue beene bent againſt Arrius. There were heard heard foule obiectings of crimes, there were ſcattered bookes of accuſatiõs & there would haue ben no end made of contentions, vntill they had with mutual wounds one deſtroied an other, vnleſſe the Emperour Conſtantine had preuented it, which profeſſing that the examining of their life was a matter aboue his knowledge, and chaſtiſed ſuch intemperance rather with praiſe than with rebuking. Howe many waies is it credible that the other councels alſo failed, which followed afterwarde? Neither doeth this matter neede long proofe. For if a man reade ouer the actes of the councelles, he ſhall note therein many infirmities: though I ſpeake of nothing more greeuous.

The Synode of Chalcedon charged vvith ambition and vnaduiſed rashnes: infirmities apparent in holy Synodes leaſt vve ſhould too much reſt vpon men.

11 And Leo biſhop of Rome ſticketh not to charge with ambition and vnaduiſed raſhneſſe, the Synode of Chalcedon, which yet he confeſſeth to be ſounde in doctrines. He doth in deede not deny that it was a lawfull Synode: but he openly affirmeth, that it might erre. Some man peraduenture wil thimke me fonde, for that I buſie my ſelfe in ſhewing ſuch errours: forasmuch as our aduerſaries do confeſſe, that councels may erre in thoſe things that are not neceſſarie to ſaluation. But this labour is not yet ſuperfluous. For although becauſe they are cõpelled, they do in deed cõfeſſe it in word: yet when they thruſt vnto vs the determinatiõ of al councels in euery matter whatſoeuer it be, for an oracle of the holy Ghoſt, they do therin require more than they toke at the beginning. In ſo doing what do they affirme, but that councels can not erre: or if they erre, yet it is not lawfull for vs to ſee the trueth, or not to ſooth their errours? And I intend nothing els, but that it may thereby be gathered that the holy Ghoſt, ſo gouerned the godly and holy Synodes, that in the meane time he ſuffered ſomewhat to happen to them by the nature of men, leaſt wee ſhoulde too muche truſt to men. This is a much better ſentence, than that of Gregorie Nazianzene ỹ he neuer ſaw a good end of any coũcel. For he that affirmeth that al without exception ended ill doth not leaue them much authority. It is nowe nothing needeful to make mention ſeuerally of prouincial councels: forasmuch as it is eaſie to iudge by the general, how much authoritie they ought to haue to make newe articles of faith and to receiue what kinde of doctrine ſoeuer it pleaſeth them.

Spirituall rulers no further to be followed than themſelues doe followe the conduct of their heauenly guide.

12 But our Romaniſtes, when they ſee that in defence of their cauſe all helpe of reaſon doth faile thẽ, do reſort to that extreame & miſerable ſhift: that although the men themſelues be blockiſh in wit and counſel, and moſt wicked in minde and will, yet the word of God remaineth, which commandeth to obey Rulers. Is it ſo? what if I deny that they be rulers that are ſuch? For they ought to take vpon themſelues, no more than Ioſua had, which was both a prophete of the Lorde, and an excellent paſtor. But let vs heare with what wordes he is ſet by the Lorde into his office. Let not (ſaith hee) the volume of this lawe depart from thy mouth: but thou ſhalt ſtudie vppon it daies and nightes. Thou ſhalt neither bowe to the right hande nor to the left: then ſhalt thou direct thy way & vnderſtãd it. They therefore ſhalbe to vs ſpiritual rulers which ſhal not bow frõ the law of the Lord, neither to the one ſide nor to the other. But if the doctrine of al paſtors whatſoeuer they be, is to be receiued without any doubting, to what purpoſe was it that wee ſhould ſo oft and ſo earneſtly be admoniſhed not to harken to the ſpeech of falſe prophetes. Heare not (ſaith he by Hieremie) the words of the prophets that prophecie to you. For they teach you vanitie, & not out of the mouth of the Lord. Againe. Beware you of falſe prophets, that come vnto you in ſheeps clothing, but inwardly are rauening wolues. And Iohn ſhould in vain exhort vs, that we ſhould proue the ſpirites, whether they be of God. From which iudgement the very Angels are not exempted, much leſſe Satã with all his lies. What is to be ſaid of this ſaying: if the blinde lead the blind, they ſhal both fal into the dich? Doth it not ſufficiently declare, ỹ it is of great importãce what maner of prophets be heard, and that not all are raſhly to be heard (Wherefore there is no reaſon that they ſhoulde make vs afraide with their titles, therby to draw vs into partaking of their blindnes: foraſmuch as we ſee on the other ſide, ỹ the Lord had a ſingular care to fray vs away frõ ſuffering our ſelues to be led with other mens errour, vnder what viſor of name ſoeuer it lurketh. For if the anſwer of Chriſt be true, thẽ al blind guides, whether they be called fathers of the Church, or prelats, or biſhops, can do nothing but draw their partners into the ſame headlong downefall. Wherfore let no names of councels, Paſtors, biſhoppes (which may as well be falſely pretended as truely vſed,) hinder vs, but that being taught by leſſons both of words and examples, we may examine al ſpirites of all men by the rule of the word of God, that we may prooue whether they be of God or no.

Mat.7.15.

Matt.15.10

The vſe of councels in ſetting downe the true ſenſe of ſcripture ỹ when controuerſies riſe & trouble the Church.

13 Foraſmuch as we haue proued that there is not giuen to the church a power to ſet vp a new doctrine, now let vs ſpeake of the power which they attribute vnto it in expounding of ſcripture. Truly we doe willingly graunt, that if there happen debate about any doctrine, there is no better nor ſurer remedy thã if a Synode of true biſhops aſſemble together, wher the doctrin in controuerſie may be diſcuſſed. For ſuch a determinatiõ, whereunto the paſtors of Churches ſhal agree in commõ together, calling vpon the ſpirite of Chriſt, ſhal haue much greater force, than if euery one ſeuerally ſhoulde conceiue it at home, and ſo teach it to the people, or if a fewe priuate men ſhould make it. Againe, when biſhops are gathered in one, they doe the more commodiouſly take aduiſe in common, what and in what forme they ought to teach, leaſt diuerſitie ſhoulde breede offence. Thirdely Paul preſcribeth this order in diſcerning of doctrines: For wheras he giueth to euerie ſeueral Church a power to diſcerne, he ſheweth what is the order of doing in weightier cauſes, that is, that the Churches ſhould take vpon them a common triall of the matter together. And ſo doth the very feeling of godlines inſtruct vs, that if any man trouble the church with an vnwonted doctrine, and the matter proceede ſo farre that there be perill of greater diſſention, the churches ſhould firſt meete together, & examine the queſtion propounded: at laſt, after iuſt diſcuſſing had, bring foorth a determination taken out of ỹ ſcripture, ſuch as may both take away douting out of the people, & ſtop the mouthes of wicked & greedy men, ỹ they may not be ſo hardy to proceed any further: So when Arrius was riſen, the Nicene Synod was gathered together, which with the authority thereof both did breake the wicked endeuours of the vngodly man, and reſtored peace to the churches which he had vexed, and defended the etenall godheade of Christe, against his blasphemous doctrine. When afterward Eunomius and Macedonius stirred vp newe troubles, there madnesse was resisted with like remedy by the Synode of Constantinople. In the Councell at Ephesus the wickednes of Nestorius was banished. Finally this hath beene from the beginning the ordinarie meane in the Church to preserue vnitie, so oft as Satan began to work any thing. But let vs remember, that not in all ages or in al places are found Athanasies Basiles Cyrilles, and such defenders of true doctrine whome the Lorde then raised vp. But let vs thinke what happened at Ephesus in the second Synode, where the heresie of Eutiches preuailed, the man of holy memoty Flauianus was banished with certaine other godly men, and many such mischieues committed: euen because Dioscorus a seditious man and of a very naughtie nature, was there the cheefe, and not the spirite of the Lorde. But there was not the Church. I grant. For this I determine vtterly that the trueth doth not therfore die in the Church, although it be oppressed of one councell: but that the Lorde meruellously preserueth it, that it may againe in due time rise vp, and get the ouerhande. But I denie that this is perpetuall, that that is a true and certaine exposition of scripture which hath bin receiued by consents of a councell.

Not euery determination of a Councell to be receiued as a true and sound exposition of the scripture, some councels hauing expresly defined thinges against scripture: so far off it is that Councels shoulde haue power to authorise scripture.

14 But the Romanists shoote at an other marke, when they teach that the power to expounde the Sripture belongeth to the councelles, yea and that without appellation from them. For they abuse this colour, to call it an exposition of the scripture whatsoeuer is decreed in the councels. Of purgatorie, of the intercession of Saintes, of auricular confession, and such other there cannot be founde one syllable in the scriptures. But because all these thinges haue beene stablished by the authoritie of the church, that is to say (to speake truely) receiued in opinion and vse, therefore euery one of them must be taken for an exposition of scripture. And not that only: But if a coūcell decree any thing, though scripture cry out against it, yet it shall beare the name of an exposition thereof. Christ commaundeth all to drink of the cup, which hee reacheth in the Supper. The councell of Constance forbad that it should not be giuen to the lay people, but willed that the priest onely should drinke of it. That which so directlie fighteth against the institution of Christ, they will haue to bee taken for an exposition of it. Paul calleth the forbidding of marriage, the hypocrisy of deuils: And the holy Ghoste in another place pronounceth that mariage is in all men holy and honourable. Whereas they haue afterwarde forbidden priestes to marrie, they require to haue that taken for the true & naturall exposition of the Scripture, when nothing can be imagined more against it. If any dare once open his mouth to the contrary, hee shall bee iudged an heretike: because the determination of the Church is without appellation: and to doubt of her exposition, that it is not true, is a hainous offence. Why shoulde I inuey against so great shamelesnesse? For the very shewing of it is an ouercomming of it. As for that which they teach of the power to allow the scripture, I wittingly passe it ouer. For in such sort to make the Oracles of God subiect to the iudgement of men, that they should therefore be of force because they haue pleased men, is a blasphemie vnworthie to bee rehearsed: and I haue before touched the ſame matter alreadie. Yet I will aske them one thing: If the authoritie of the ſcripture be founded vpon the alowance of the church, what councels decree will they alleadge of that matter? I thinke they haue none. Why then did Arrius ſuffer himſelf to be ouercome at Nice with teſtimonies brought out of the goſpel of John? For after theſe mens ſaying, it was free for him to haue refuſed them, foraſmuch as there had no allowance of a generall councell gone before. They alledge the olde roll, which is called the Canon, which they ſay to haue proceeded from the iudgement of the church. But I aske them againe, in what councell that Canon was ſet forth. Here they muſt needes be dumme. Howbeit I deſire further to knowe, what manner of Canon they think ỹ was. For I ſee that the ſame was not very certainly agreed among the olde writers. And if that which Hierome ſayth ought to bee of force, the Bookes of Machabees, Tobie, Eccleſiaſticus and ſuch other ſhall be thruſt among the Apochrypha: which thoſe Canons doe in no wiſe ſuffer to be done.

The x. Chapter.

Of the power in making of Lawes: wherein the Pope and his haue vſed a moſt cruell tyranny and butchery vpon ſoules.

The tyrannie of the church of Rome in charging the conſciences of men with the burthen of their Lawes. Math. 23. 6.

NOwe followeth the ſeconde part, which they will haue to conſiſt in making of lawes, out of which ſpring haue flowed innumerable traditions of men, euen ſo many ſnares to ſtrangle pore ſoules. For they haue had no more conſcience, than had the Scribes and Phariſees to lay burdens vpon other mens ſhoulders, which they themſelues woulde not touch with one finger. I haue in another place taught how cruell a butcherie is that which they commannde concerning auricular confeſſion. In other lawes there appeareth not ſo great violence: but thoſe which ſeeme the moſt tolerable of all, doe tyrannouſly oppreſſe conſcienees. I leaue vnſpoken howe they corrupt the worſhippe of God, and do ſpoile God himſelfe of his right, which is the onely lawmaker. This power is nowe to be intreated of, whether the Church may binde conſciences with her lawes. In which diſcourſe the order of pollicie is not touched, but this only is intended, that God be rightly worſhipped according to the rule which himſelfe hath preſcribed, & that the ſpirituall libertie, which hath regarde vnto God, may remaine ſafe vnto vs. Vſe hath made that all thoſe decrees be called traditions of men, whatſoeuer they be that haue concerning the worſhipping of God proceeded from men beſide his worde. Againſt theſe doe we ſtriue, not againſt the holy and profitable ordinances of the Church which make for the preſeruation either of diſcipline or honeſtie or peace. But the end of our ſtriuing is, that the immeaſurable and barbarous Empire may bee reſtrained, which they vſurpe vppon ſoules, that woulde bee counted paſtors of the Church, but in very deede are moſt cruell butchers. For they ſay that the laws which they make are ſpirituall, and pertaining to the ſoule, and they affirme them to bee neceſſarie to eternall life. But ſo (as I euen nowe touched) the kingdome of Chriſte is inuaded, ſo the liberty by him giuen to the conſciences of the faithful is vtterly oppreſſed & throwen abroad, I ſpeake not now with how great vngodlineſſe they ſtabliſh ỹ obſeruing of their lawes, while out of it they teach men to ſeeke both forgiuenes of ſinnes, & righteouſnes, & ſaluation, while they ſet in it the whole ſumme of religion & godlines. This one thing I earneſtly hold, that there ought no neceſſitie to bee laide vpon conſciences in thoſe things wherein they are made free by Chriſt, and vnleſſe they be made free, as we haue before taught, they cānot reſt with God. They muſt acknowledge one onely king Chriſt their deliuerer, and bee gouerned by one law of libertie, euen the holy worde of the Goſpel, if they wil keepe ſtil the grace which they haue once obteined in Chriſt: they muſt be holden with no bondage, and bound with no bonds.

The libertie vvhich Chriſt hath giuen abridged in the Church of Rome by many hard and heauie conſtitutions: vvhich notvvithſtanding they call ſvveete & eaſie burthens.

3 Theſe Solons do in deede faine that their conſtitutions are lawes of libertie, a ſweete yoke, a light burden: but who cannot ſee that they be meere lies? They themſelues in deede do feele no heauineſſe of their owne lawes, which caſting away the feare of God, do careleſly and ſtoutly neglect both their owne and Gods lawes. But they that are touched with any care of their ſaluation, are farre from thinking themſelues free ſo long as they be intangled with theſe ſnares. We ſee with how great warineſſe Paul did deale in this behalfe, that he durſt not ſo much as in any one thing lay vpon men any ſnare at all, & that not without cauſe. Truely he foreſawe with how great a wound conſciences ſhould be ſtriken, if they ſhould be charged with a neceſſitie of thoſe things whereof the Lord had left them libertie. On the other ſide the conſtitutions are almoſt innumerable, which theſe men haue moſt grieuouſly ſtabliſhed with threatening of eternall death, which they moſt ſeuerely require as neceſſarie to ſaluation. And among thoſe there are many moſt hard to be kept, but all of them (if the whole multitude of them be laid together) are impoſſible: ſo great is the heape. How then ſhal it bee poſſible, that they vpon whome ſo great a weight of difficultie lieth, ſhoulde not be vexed in perplexitie with extreme anguiſh & terror? Therefore my purpoſe is here to impute ſuch conſtitutions, as tend to this ende, inwardly to bind ſoules before God, and charge them with a religion, as though they taught them of things neceſſarie to ſaluation. 1.Cor.7.2.5.

VVhat conſcience is.

3 This queſtion doth therfore incumber the moſt part of men, becauſe they do not ſuttlely inough put difference betweene the outward court (as they call it) and the court of conſcience. Moreouer this increaſeth the difficultie, that Paul teacheth that the magiſtrate ought to be obeyed not only for feare of puniſhment, but for conſciences ſake. Whereupon followeth, Rom.13.1. that conſciences are alſo bound with ỹ politike lawes. But if it were ſo, then all ſhould fall that we haue ſpoken in the laſt Chapter and intende nowe to ſpeake concerning the ſpiritual gouernment. For the loſing of this knot, firſt it is good to learne what is conſcience. The deſinitiō is to be gathered of the proper deriuation of the word. For, as when men do with minde and vnderſtanding conceiue the knowledge of things, they are thereby ſaide ſcire, to knowe, whereupon is deriued the name of ſcience knowledge: ſo when they haue a feeling of Gods iudgement as a witneſſe adioyned with them which doeth not ſuffer them to hide their ſinnes, but that they bee brought accuſed to the iudgement ſeat of God, that ſame feeling is called conſcience.

For it is a certaine meane betweene God and man: becauſe it ſuffereth not man to ſuppreſſe that which he knoweth, but purſueth him ſo far til it bring him to guiltines. This is it that Paul meaneth when hee teacheth that conſcience doth together witneſſe with men, when their thoughtes doe accuſe or acquite them in the iudgement of God. A ſimple knowledge might remaine in man as incloſed. Therefore this feeling which preſenteth man to the iudgement of God, is as it were a keeper ioyned to man, to marke and watche all his ſecretes, that nothing ſhould remaine buried in darkeneſſe. Whereupon alſo commeth that olde prouerbe, conſcience is a thouſande witneſſes. For the ſame reaſon alſo Peter hath ſet the examination of a good conſcience, for quietneſſe of minde, when wee being perſuaded of the grace of Chriſt, doe without feare preſent our ſelues to God. And the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrewes, vſeth theſe words, to haue no more conſcience of ſinne, in ſteede of, to bee deliuered or acquited, that ſinne may no more accuſe vs.

1. Pet. 3. 21

Heb. 10. 2.

Hovv a lavv is ſaid to binde the conſcience.

4 Therefore as workes haue reſpect to men, ſo the conſcience is referred to God: ſo that conſcience is nothing elſe but the inwarde pureneſſe of the heart. In which ſenſe Paul writeth that charitie is the fulfilling of the law, out of a pure conſcience, & faith not fained. Afterward alſo in the ſame chapter he ſheweth how much it differeth from vnderſtanding, ſaying that ſome had ſuffered ſhipwrack from the faith, becauſe they had forſaken good conſcience. For in theſe wordes hee ſignifieth, that it is a liuely affection to worſhip God, and a ſyncere deſire to liue godlily and holily. Sometime in deede it is referred alſo to men, as in Luke, when the ſame Paul teſtifieth, that he indeuoured himſelfe that hee might walke with a good conſcience toward God and men. But this was therefore ſaide, becauſe the fruites of good conſcience doe flowe, and come euen to men. But in ſpeaking properly, it hath reſpect to God onely, as I haue alreadie ſaide. Hereupon commeth that a lawe is ſaide to binde conſcience, which ſimply bindeth a man, without regard of men, or not hauing any conſideretion of them. As for example. God commandeth not onely to keepe the minde chaſte and pure fró all luſt, but alſo forbiddeth al manner of filthineſſe of wordes & outwarde wantonneſſe whatſoeuer it be. To the keeping of this law my conſcience is ſubiect, although there liued not one man in the worlde. So he that behaueth himſelfe intemperately, doeth not onely ſinne in this that hee giueth euil example to his brethren, but he hath his conſcience bound with guiltineſſe before God. In things that are of themſelues meane, there is another conſideration. For we ought to abſteine from them, if they breed any offence, but the conſcience ſtil being free. So Paul ſpeaketh of fleſh conſecrate to idoles. If any (ſaith he) make doubt, touch it not, for conſciences ſake. I ſay for conſcience, not thine owne, but the others. A faithfull man ſhould ſinne, which being firſt warned ſhould neuertheleſſe eat of ſuch fleſh. But howſoeuer in reſpect of his brother, it be neceſſarie for him to abſtaine, as it is preſcribed of God, yet he ceaſeth not to keepe ſtill the libertie of conſcience. Wee ſee how this lawe binding the outwarde worke, leaueth the conſcience vnbound.

Act. 24. 16.

1. Cor. 10. 28

Hovv men for conſcience ſake are bound to obey the lavves of men.

5 Nowe let vs returne to the lawes of men, If they bee made to this, end, ende, to charge vs with a religion, as though the obſeruing of them were of itſelfe neceſſarie, then we ſay that that is laide vpon conſcience which was not lawfull to be laid vpon it. For our conſciences haue not to do with men, but with God only: wherunto pertaineth that common difference between the earthly court and the court of conſcience When the whole world was wrapped in a moſt thicke miſt of ignorance, yet this ſmal ſparkle of light remained, ỹ they acknowledged a mans conſcience to be aboue all iudgments of men. Howbeit the ſame thing that they did with one worde confeſſe, they did afterwarde indeede ouerthrowe: yet it was Gods will that there ſhould then alſo remain ſome teſtimonie of Chriſtian libertie, which might deliuer conſciences from the tyranny of men. But that difficulty is not yet diſſolued, which ariſeth out of the words of Paul. For if we muſt obey Princes not onely for penalties ſake, but alſo for conſcience, it ſeemeth therupon to folow that Princes lawes haue alſo dominion ouer conſcience. If this bee true, then the ſame alſo ought to be ſaid of the lawes of the church, I anſwer ỹ firſt here we muſt put a difference betwen the generaltie & ſpecialty. For though all ſpeciall lawes doe not touch the conſcience, yet we are bound by the generall commaundement of God, which commendeth vnto vs the authoritie of magiſtrates. And vpon this point ſtandeth the diſputatiõ of Paul that magiſtrates are to be honored becauſe they are ordained of God. In the mean time he teacheth not that thoſe lawes that are preſcribed by them, do belong to the inward gouernment of the ſoule: whereas hee eche where extolleth both the worſhipping of God and the ſpiritual rule of liuing righteouſly, aboue all the ordinãces of men whatſoeuer they be. An other thing alſo is worthy to be noted, (which yet hangeth vpon the former) that ỹ lawes of men, whether they be made by the magiſtrate or by the Church, although they be neceſſary to be kept, (I ſpeake of the good and righteous lawes) yet therefore do not by themſelues binde cõſcience, becauſe the whole neceſſitie of keeping them is referred to the general end, but conſiſteth not in the thinges commanded. From this ſort do farre differ both thoſe that preſcribe a new forme of the worſhipping of God, and thoſe that appoint neceſſitie in thinges that be at libertie. Rom.13.1.

6 But ſuch are thoſe that at this day be called Eccleſiaſtical conſtitutiõs in the Papacie, which are thruſt in, in ſteede of the true and neceſſary worſhipping of God. And as they be innumerable: ſo are there infinite bonds to catch and ſnare ſoules. But although in the declaration of the law we haue ſomewhat touched them: yet becauſe this place was fitter to entreate fully of them, I will now trauaile to gather together the whole ſumme in the beſt order that I can. And becauſe we haue already diſcourſed ſo much as ſemed to be ſufficient, concerning the tyrannie which the falſe biſhops do take vpon themſelues, in libertie to teach whatſoeuer they liſt. I will now omitte al that part: & I will here tarry only vpon declaring the power, which they ſaie they haue, to make lawes. Our falſe biſhops therfore do burden cõſciences with new lawes, vnder this pretence, that they are ordained of the Lord ſpirituall lawmakers, ſince the gouernment of the Church is committed vnto them. Therefore they affirme that whatſoeuer they commaunde and preſcribe, ought neceſſarily to be obſerued of the Christian people: & that hee that breaketh it, is gilty of double disobedience, for ỳ he is rebellious both to God and to the Church. Certainly, if they were true bishops, I would in this behalfe graunt to them some authoritie, not so much as they require, but so much as is requisite to the well ordering of the pollicie of the Church. Now sith they are nothing lesse than that which they wold be accoũted, they can not take any thing to them, be it neuer so litle, but ỳ they shal take too much. But because this hath beene elsewhere cõsidered, let vs graunt them at this preser, that whatsoeuer power true bishops haue, the same rightly belõgeth to thé also: yet I deny that they be therefore appointed lawmakers ouer the faithful, that may of themselues prescribe a rule to liue by, or cõpel to their ordinances the people committed vnto them. When I say this, I mean, that it is not lawfull for them, to deliuer to the church to be obserued of necessity, ỳ which they haue deuised of thémselues without the word of God. Forasmuch as that authoritie both was vnknown to the Apostles, and so oft také away from the ministers of the Church by the Lords own mouth: I maruell who haue bin so bold to take it vpon them, and at this day are so bold to defend it, beside the example of the Apostles, & against the manifest prohibition of God.

All thinges needful to the perfect rule of vvell liuing conteined in the lavv.

7 As touching that that pertained to the perfect rule of wel liuing, the Lord hath so conteined al ỳ in his law, that he hath left nothing for mẽ that they might adde to that sum. And this he did first for this purpose, ỳ because the whole vprightnes of liuing standeth in this point, if all workes be gouerned by his wil as by a rule, he should be holden of vs the only maister and directer of life: then, to declare that he requireth of vs nothing more thã obedience. For this reason James saith: he that iudgeth his brother iudgeth the law: he that iudgeth the law, is not an obseruer of the law, but a iudge. But there is one only lawmaker, that can both saue & destroy. We heare ỳ God doth claime this one thing as proper to himself, to rule vs with the gouernment & lawes of his word. And the same thing was spoken before of Esay, althogh somwhat more darkly: the Lord is our king, the Lord is our lawmaker, the Lord is our iudge, he shal saue vs. Truly in both these places is shewed, ỳ he that hath power ouer the soule, hath the iudgement of life & death. Yea James pronounceth this plainly. Now, no man can take that vpon him. Therfore God must be acknowledged to be the only king of soules, to whó alone belongeth the power to saue & destroy, & those words of Esay expresse, & to be the king, and iudge, & lawmaker & Sauiour. Therefore Peter, when he admonisheth the Pastors of their duetie, exhorteth them so to feed the flocke, not as vsing a Lordship ouer the Clergy, by which word Clergy he signifieth the inheritance of God, that is to say the faithful people. This if we rightly weigh, that it is not lawful, that that should be transferred to mã, which God maketh his own only: we shal vnderstãd that so al the power is cut off whatsoeuer it be, that they chalenge, which aduance themselues to command any thing in the Church without the word of God.

Iam. 4. 12.

Esa. 33. 22.

1. Pet. 5. 2.

The vvay to iudge vvhat ordinances of men be repugnant to the vvord of God.

8 Nowe, forasmuch as the whole cause hangeth thereupon, that if God be the onely lawmaker, it is not lawfull for men to take that honour to themselues: it is meete also therewithall to keepe in minde those two reasons which we haue spoken, why the Lorde claimeth that to himself alone.

The firſt is that his wil may be to vs a perfect rule of all righteouſnes & holineſſe: and that ſo in the knowing of him may be the perfect knowledge to liue well. The other is, that (when the manner is ſought how to worſhip him rightly and wel) he onely may haue authoritie ouer our ſoules, whome wee ought to obey, and vpon whoſe becke we ought to hang. Theſe two reaſons being wel marked, it ſhal be eaſie to iudge, what ordinances of men are contrarie to the worde of God. Of that ſort be all thoſe which are fained to belong to the true worſhipping of God, and to the obſeruing whereof conſciences are bound, as though they were neceſſarie to be obſerued. Let vs therfore remẽbet that al lawes of men ought to be weighed with this balance, if we will haue a ſure tryall that may neuer ſuffer vs to erre. The firſt of theſe reaſons Paul in the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians vſeth in contending againſt the falſe Apoſtles that attempted to oppreſſe the Churches with newe burdens. The ſecond reaſon he more vſeth with the Galathians in the like caſe. This therefore he trauelleth to proue in the Epiſtle to the Coloſſians, that the doctrine concerning the true worſhipping of God is not to be ſought at mens hands: becauſe the Lord hath faithfully & fully inſtructed vs how hee ought to be worſhipped. To proue the ſame in the firſt Chapter, hee ſaith that in the Goſpel is conteined al wiſedome, whereby the man of God may be made perfect in Chriſt. In the beginning of the ſecond chapter hee ſaith, that al the treaſures of wiſdom & vnderſtanding are hidden in Chriſt. Therupon he afterward concludeth, let the faithful beware that they bee not by vaine Philoſophie led from the flocke of Chriſt, according to the conſtitutions of men. But in the end of the chapter, he doth yet with greater boldnes condemne all Ethelothreskias, that is to ſay, all fained worſhippings, which men deuiſe to themſelues, or receiue of other, & whatſoeuer precepts they dare of themſelues giue concerning the worſhipping of God. Wee haue therefore, that all thoſe ordinances are wicked, in obſeruing whereof the worſhipping of God is fained to be. As for the places in ỹ Galathians wherewith he earneſtly affirmeth that conſciẽces, which ought to be ruled of God only, ought not to be intangled with ſnares, they are open enough, ſpecially in the fifth chapter. Therefore let it be ſufficient to haue but noted them. Col. 1. 8.

9 But becauſe the whole matter ſhal better be made open by examples, before that wee go any further, it is good alſo to apply this doctrine to our own times. We ſay ỹ the conſtitutions which they call Eccleſiaſtical, wherewith the Pope and his doe burden the Church, are pernicious, and wicked: our aduerſaries defend that they be holy and auaylable to ſaluation. There be two kindes of them: for ſome concerne Ceremonies & rites, other ſome pertain more to diſcipline. Is there then a iuſt cauſe to moue vs to impugne them both? Truely a iuſter than we would. Firſt doe not the authors themſelues clearely define, ỹ the verie worſhipping of God is contained in them? To what purpoſe do they apply their ceremonies, but that God ſhould bee worſhipped by them? And that cõmeth to paſſe not by the only error of the ignorant multitude, but by their allowance that haue the place of teaching. I doe not touch the groſſe abhominations, wherewith they haue gone about to ouerthrowe all godlineſſe. But it ſhoulde not be imagined among them to be ſo hainous an offence, to haue fayled in any of the leaſt petie traditions, vnleſſe they did make the worſhipping of god ſubiect to their fained deuiſes. What do we then offende, if at this day wee cannot beare that which Paul taught to bee intollerable, that the lawfull order of the worſhipping of God ſhoulde bee reduced to the will of men: ſpecially when they commaund men to worſhip according to the elements of the world, which Paul teſtifieth to bee againſt Chriſt? Againe it is not vnknowen, with howe preciſe neceſſitie they binde conſciences to keepe whatſoeuer they commaunde. Here when wee crie out to the contrarie, wee haue all one cauſe with Paul, which in no wiſe ſuffereth faithful conſciences to be brought into bondage of men.

Coloſ. 2. 20. Gal. 5. 1.

A leſſe fault in the Papacie to tranſgreſſe the lawe of God than to miſſe in the keeping of humane conſtitutions.

10 Moreouer this worſt of all is added, that when religion hath once begun to be defiled with ſuch vaine inuentions, there euer followeth after that peruerſneſſe another abhominable frowardneſſe, whereof Chriſt reproched the Phariſees that the commaundement of God is made voide for the traditions of men. I will not vſe mine owne wordes in fighting againſt our lawmakers at theſe dayes. Let them haue the victorie, if they can by any meane purge themſelues from this accuſation of Chriſt. But how ſhould they excuſe them, when among them it is thought infinitely more hainous, to haue omitted auricular confeſſion when the time of yeare commeth about, than to haue continued a moſt wicked life a whole yeare together? to haue infected their tongue with a litle taſting of fleſh on a Friday, than to haue defiled their bodie with whoredom al the dayes of the weeke? to haue put their hand to an honeſt worke vpon a day conſecrate to I wot not what petie Sainctes, than to haue continually exerciſed their members in moſt wicked offences? for a Prieſt to be coupled with one lawfull mariage, than to be entangled with a thouſand adulteries? not to haue performed a vowed pilgrimage, than to breake faith in all promiſes? not to haue waſted ſomwhat vpon monſtruous and no leſſe ſuperfluous and vnprofitable exceſſiue gorgeouſneſſe of temples, than to haue failed to helpe the extreme neceſſities of the poore? to haue paſſed by an idol without honour, than to haue deſpitefully intreated all kindes of men? not to haue mumbled vp at certain houres a great number of words without vnderſtanding, than neuer to haue conceiued a true prayer in their heart? What is to make void the commandement of God for the traditions of men, if this be not: when commending the keeping of Gods commaundementes but coldly and as it were lightly by the way, they doe no leſſe earneſtly and buſily exact the obeying of their owne, than if they contained in them the whole pith of godlineſſe? when reuenging the tranſgreſſing of Gods lawe, with light penalties of ſatisfactions, they puniſhe the verie leaſt offence of one of their owne decrees with no leſſe paine than with priſonment, baniſhment, fire or ſworde? Being not ſo ſharpe and hard to intreate againſt the deſpiſers of God, they perſecute the deſpiſers of themſelues with vnappeaſeable hatred to the extremitie, and doe ſo inſtruct all thoſe, whoſe ſimplicitie they holde captiue, that they would with more contented minde ſee the whole lawe of God ouerthowen, than one ſmall title (as they call it) in the commaundements of the church to be broken. Firſt in this point is greeuous offence committed, that for ſmall matters, and ſuch as (if it ſhoulde bee tried by Gods iudgement) are at libertie, one man despiseth, iudgeth and casteth away an other. But now as though that were not euill enough, those trifling elements of the worlde (as Paul calleth them in writing to the Galatians) are weighed of more value than the heauenly oracles of God, And he that is in a mener acquited in adulterie, is iudged in meate: he that hath leaue to vse a harlot, is forbidden to haue a wife, This profite verily is gotten by that transgressing obedience, which is so much turned from God as it declineth to men. Gal. 4. 9.

11 There be also other two not slender faultes, which we disallow in the same ordinances. First, because they prescribe for the most part vnprofitable, and somtime also fond obseruations: then, because godly cõsciences are oppressed with the infinite multitude of them, & being rouled backe into a certain lewishnes, they so cleaue to shadowes, ỹ they cãnot attain to Christ. Wheras I cal thẽ fond & vnprofitable, I know that that wil not seeme credible to the wisedom of the flesh, which so well liketh them, that it thinketh the church to be vtterly deformed when they be takẽ away. But this is it, ỹ Paul writeth of, to haue a resemblance of wisedome in counterfaite worshipping, in humilitie, and in this that they thinke that with their sharpenesse they be able to tame their flesh. This is truely a most wholesome admonition, such as ought neuer to slip away frõ vs. Mẽs traditions (saith he) do deceiue vnder the shew of wisedom, whence haue they this colour? because they are fained of men, therefore the wit of man doth therein acknow his owne, and acknowing it doth more gladly embrace it, than any thing were it neuer so good, that lesse agreed with his vanitie. Againe they haue hereby an other commendation, because they seeme to be fit introductions to humilitie, for that with their yoke they hold the minds of mẽ pressed down to the groũd. Last of all, because they seeme to tend to this end to restraine the daintines of the flesh, and to subdue it with rigour of abstinence, therefore they are thought to be wisely deuised. But what saith Paul to these thinges? doth hee not shake off those visors: least the simple should be deceiued with false pretẽce? Because he iudged this enough for confutation of thẽ, that he had said ỹ they were the inuentions of men, he passeth ouer all these things without confuration, as though he estemed them for nothing: Yea, because he knew that al fained worshippings in the Church were condemned, & are so much more suspicious to the faithfull as they more delight the wit of man: because he knew that that fained image of outward humilitie doeth so much differ from true humilitie, as it might easily be discerned: finally because he knew that that childish introduction was no more esteemed than an exercise of the bodie: therfore he willed ỹ the very same thinges should be to the faithfull in steede of a confutation of mens traditions, by fauour of which they were commended among the ignorant. Humaine ordinãces though vnpositable in respect of their qualitie, & for their number burdensome, yet embraced by man because they are most agreeable to his vanitie, because they seeme introductions to humilitie, & because they make a shewe of restraining fleshly daintinesse. Col. 2. 23.

12 So at this day not only the vnlearned common people, but euery man as hee is most puffed vp with worldly wisedome, so is hee most maruelously delighted with beholding of ceremonies. But hypocrites and fooliish women thinke that there can be nothing deuised more glorious nor better. But they which do more deeply search, & more truely weigh according to the rule of godlines, of what value so many & such ceremonies are, doe vnderstand first that they are trifles, because they haue no profit: thẽ, that they are deceits, Vaine men, hypocrites and fooles delighted, the wisest sort offending with the toyish ceremonies of the Church of Rome.

becauſe they do with vaine pompe beguile the eies of the beholders. I ſpeak of thoſe Ceremonies, vnder which the Romiſh maſters will that there bee great myſteries: but we find them by experience to be nothing els but mery mockeries. And it is no maruell that the authors of them haue fallen ſo far as to mocke both themſelues and other with trifling follies: becauſe they partly tooke their exampler out of the dotages of the Gentiles, & partly after the manner of apes did vndiſcretly counterfaite the old vſages of the law of Moſes, which no more pertained to vs than the ſacrifices of beaſts & ſuch other things. Truly although there were none other argument, yet no man that hath his ſound wit wil looke for any goodneſſe of a heape ſo ill patched together. And the thing it ſelfe plainely ſheweth, that manie Ceremonies haue no other vſe but to amaſe the people rather than to teach them. So in theſe new found Canons, that do rather peruert thā preſerue diſcipline, the hypocrites repoſe great importance: but if a man do better looke into them he ſhall finde that they are nothing elſe but a ſhadowiſh and vaniſhing ſhew of diſcipline.

The nūber of ceremonies growē intollerable in the Church.

13 But now (to come to the other point) who doth not ſee that traditiōs with heaping one vpon an other, are ouergrowen into ſo great a number, that the Chriſtian Church may in no wiſe beare them? Hereby it is come to paſſe, that in Ceremonies there appeareth I wot not what Iewiſhneſſe, and the other obſeruations bring a grieuous butchery to Chriſtian ſoules. Auguſtine complained that in his time, the commandementes of God neglected, al things were ful of ſo many preſūptions, that he was more grieuouſly rebuked that in his Octaues had touched the ground with bare foot, thā he that had buried his wit with drunkennes. He complaineth that the church, which the mercy of God willed to be free, was ſo burdened, ỳ the ſtate of the Iewes was much more tolerable. If that holy man had happened to liue in our age, with what complaintes would he haue bewailed the bondage that now is? For both the number is ten times greater, and euery ſmal title is a hundred times more rigorouſly looked vnto, than at that time. So is wont to be done: when theſe peruerſe lawmakers haue gotten the dominiō, they make no end of bidding & forbidding, till they come to extreme peeuiſhnes. Which thing Paul hath alſo very wel declared in theſe words: If ye be dead to the worlde, why are ye holden as though ye were liuing with traditions, as eate not, taſt not, handle not? For whereas the Greek word apteſthai, ſignifieth both to eate & to touch, doubtleſſe in this place it is taken in the firſt of theſe two ſignifications, leaſt there ſhould be a ſuperfluous repetitiō. Therfore he doth here excellently well deſcribe the proceedings of the falſe Apoſtles. They begin at ſuperſtition, ſo that they doe not onely forbid to eate, but alſo euen ſlenderly to chawe: when they haue obtained this, they then alſo forbid to taſt. When this is alſo granted thē, they reckon it not lawful ſo much as to touch with a finger.

Ad Ian. Epi. 119

Col. 2. 20.

Chriſtianity buried vnder heapes of ceremonies.

14 This tyrannie in the ordinances of men we doe at this day worthily blame, by which it is come to paſſe that poore conſciences are marueloufly tormented with innumerable decrees & immeaſurable exacting of keeping of thē. Of Canons pertaining to diſcipline we haue ſpoken in another place. Of the Ceremonies what ſhall I ſaye, by which it is brought about that Chriſt

Christ being half buried, we are returned to Iewish figures? Our Lord christ (saith Augustine) hath bound together the fellowshippe of the new people, with Sacraments very few in number, most excellent in signification, most easie in obseruing. How farre the multitude & diuersity of vsages wherwith at this day we see the Church to be entangled, doth differ from this simplicity, it can not be sufficiently declared. I knowe with what crafty shift some suttle men do excuse this peruersenesse. They say that among vs there are many as rude as they were in the people of Israel: that such introductiō was ordained for their sakes, which although the stronger may well want, yet they ought not to neglect it, forasmuch as they see it to be profitable for the weake brethren. I answere, that we are not ignorant, what we owe to the weakenesse of our brethren: but on the other side we take exception and say, that this is not the way whereby the weake may be prouided for, that they should be ouerwhelmed with great heapes of Ceremonies. The Lord did not in vaine put his difference betweene vs and the old people, that his wil was to instruct them like childrē with signes & figures, but vs more simply without such outward furniture. As (saith Paul) a childe is ruled of his schoolemaister, and kept vnder custody, according to the capacitie of his age: so the Iewes are kept vnder the law. But we are like vnto ful growē mē, which being set at liberty from tutorshippe and gouernment, haue no more neede of childish introductions. Truely the Lord did foresee what maner of common people there should be in his Church, and how they should be ruled. Yet he did in this maner as we haue said, make difference betweene vs and the Iewes. Therefore it is a foolish way, if we will prouide for the ignorāt, in raising vp Iewishnes which is abrogate by Christ: Christ also touched in his owne words this difference of the olde & newe people, when he said to the woman of Samaria, that the time was come wherin the true worshippers should worship God in Spirite and truth. This verily had alway beene done: but the new worshippers differed from the olde in this pointe, that vnder Moses the Spirituall worshipping of God was shadowed & in a manner entangled with many Ceremonies, which being abolished, hee is nowe more simply worshipped. Therefore they that confound this difference, do ouerthrow the order institute & stablished by Christ. Shal there then (wilt thou say) no ceremonies be giuen to the ruder sort to helpe their vnskilfulnes? I say not so: for I veriely thinke that this kind of helpe is profitable for them. I do here trauaile only that such a meane may be vsed, as may brightly set out Christ and not darken him. Therefore there are giuen vs of God few Ceremonies, & those not laborsome, ỳ they should shewe Christ being present. The Iewes had moe giuen them, that they should be images of him being absent. Absent I say he was, nor in power, but in manner of signifiyng. Therfore, that meane may be kept, it is necessarie to kepe ỳ fewnes in number, easinesse in obseruing, and dignity in signifiyng, which also consisteth in clearenes. What neede I to say that this hath not beene done? For the thing it selfe is in all mens eyes.

Gal. 4. 2

Righteousnesse sought in the Church of Rome by the obseruation of ceremoniall ordinances seuered from the doctrine that should direct men vnto Christe, & mounted many of them onely to make mony of.

15 Here I omit with how pernitious opinions mens minds are filled, in thinking that they be sacrifices wherwith oblation is rightly made to God, whereby sinnes are clensed, whereby righteousnes & saluation is obtayned.

They

They will deny that good thinges are corrupted with ſuch forein errours; foraſmuch as in this behalfe a man may no leſſe offēd in the verie works alſo commanded of God. But this hath more hainouſnes, that ſo much honor is giuē to works raſhly fained by the wil of man, that they are thought to be thinges deſeruing eternal life. For the workes commanded of God haue reward therefore, becauſe the lawmaker himſelfe in reſpect of obedience accepteth thē. Therfore they receiue not their value of their own worthines, or of their owne deſeruing, but becauſe God ſo much eſteemeth our obedience toward him. I ſpeake here of ỳ perfectiō of workes which is cōmanded of God, & is not performed of men. For therfore the verie workes of ỳ lawe which we do, haue no thanke but of the free goodnes of God, becauſe in thē our obediēce is weake & lame. But becauſe we do not here diſpute, of what value workes are without Chriſt, therefore let vs paſſe ouer that queſtion. I come backe againe to ỳ which properly belongeth to this preſent argumēt, that whatſoeuer commendation workes haue in thē, they haue it in reſpect of the obedience, which only the Lord doth looke vpon, as he teſtifieth by the Prophet: I gaue not commandement of ſacrifices & burnt offringes, but only that ye ſhould with hearing, heare my voice. But of fained workes hee ſpeaketh in an other place, ſaying: Ye wey your ſiluer and not in bread. Againe, they worſhip me in vaine with the precepts of men. This therefore they can by no waies excuſe, that they ſuffer the ſilly people to ſeeke in thoſe outward trifles the righteouſnes wherby they may ſtand againſt God & vphold themſelues before the heauenly iudgement ſeat. Moreouer, is not this a fault worthy to be inueied againſt, that they ſhew forth ceremonies not vnderſtanded as it were a ſtage play, or a magical enchantment? For it is certaine that al ceremonies are corrupt & hurtful, vnles men be by thē directed to Chriſt. But the Ceremonies that are vſed vnder the papacy, are ſeuered from doctrine, that they may the more hold men in ſignes without al ſignification: Finally (ſuch a cunning craftſman is the belly) it appeareth that many of thē haue ben inuented by couetous ſacrificing prieſts, to bee ſnares to catch mony. But what beginning ſoeuer they haue, they are alſo giuen forth in common for filthy gaine, that we muſt needs cut off a great part of them, if we wil bring to paſſe that there be not a prophane market, and ful of ſacrilege vſed in the Church.

What humaine ordinances are, & the inconueniences whereunto they are ſubiect.

16 Although I ſeeme not to teach a continual doctrine concerning the ordināces of mē, becauſe this ſpeaking is altogether applied to our own time; yet there is nothing ſpoken ỳ ſhal not be profitable for al times. For ſo oft as this ſuperſtition creepeth in, that men wil worſhip God with their owne fained deuiſes, whatſoeuer the lawes be that are made to that purpoſe, they do by & by degenerate to thoſe groſſe abuſes. For the Lord threarneth not this curſe to one or two ages, but to al ages of the world, ỳ he wil ſtrik them with blindnes and amaſed dulneſſe that worſhippe him with the doctrines of men. This blinding continually maketh that they flee from no kinde of abſurdity, which deſpiſing ſo many warnings of God, do wilfully wrap themſelues in thoſe deadlie ſnares. But if, ſetting aſide circumſtances, you wyll haue ſimply ſhewed what be the mens traditions of al ages, which it is mete to be reiected of the church, and to be diſalowed of all the godly, that ſame shalbe a sure and plaine definition which wee haue aboue set: that all lawes without the word of God are made by men to this end, either to prescribe a maner of worshipping God, or to bind consciences with religion, as though they gaue commaundement of things necessary to saluation. If to the one or both of these there be adioyned other faults: as, that with the multitude they darken the brightnesse of the Gospel: that they nothing edifie, but be rather vnprofitable and trifling occupations than true exercises of godlines: that they be layd abroade to filthinesse and vnhonest gaine: that they be too hard to be kept: that they be defiled with euil superstitions: these shall bee helps that we may the more easily finde how much euill is in them.

17 I heare what they answere for themselues, that their traditions are not of themselues, but of God. For, they say that the Church is gouerned of the holy Ghost, that it cannot erre: and that the authoritie thereof remaineth with them. When this is obtained, it therewithall followeth, that their traditions are the reuelations of the holy ghost, which cannot bee despised but wickedly and with the contempt of God. And that they should not seem to haue attempted any thing without great authoritie, they will haue it beleeued that a great part of their obseruations came from the Apostles: and they affirme that by one example is sufficiently declared what the Apostles did in other thinges, when being assembled in one Councell, they did by the decree of the Councell command the Gentiles to abstaine from things offered to idols, from bloud and strangled. Wee haue already in another place declared, howe falsely for boasting of themselues they lyingly vsurpe the title of the Church. So much as concerning this present cause: if, plucking away visors, and deceitfull colours, we truely looke vpon that which we ought principally to care for, and which cheefly is for our behoofe, that is, what manner of Church Christ will haue, that we may fashion and frame our selues to the rule thereof: it shall easily be euident vnto vs, that it is not the Church, which passing the boundes of the worde of God, doth outrage and runne at riot in making of newe lawes. For doeth not that lawe which was once prescribed to the Church, remaine eternall? What I commaunde thee, that thou shalt keepe that thou mayest do it. Thou shalt not adde any thing nor take any thing from it. And in another place: Adde not to the worde of the Lord, nor minish any thing: least he peraduenture reproue thee, & thou be found a lier. Sith they can not deny that this was spoken to the churche, what do they else but report the stubbornes of that church, which they boast to haue bene so bold as after such prohibitions neuertheles to adde & mingle of her own with the doctrine of God? But God forbid that we should assent to their lies, whereby they burden the church with so great a slaunder: but let vs vnderstande, that the name of the Church is fasly pretented, so oft as this lust of mens rashnesse is spoken of, which can not hold it self within the prescribed boundes of God, but ỳ it wildly rangeth & runneth out into her own inuentions? There is nothing entangled, nothing darke, nothing doubtfull in these words, in which the whole Church is forbidden to adde to the word of God, or to take any thing from it, when the worshipping of God, and precepts concerning saluation, are entreated of. But this (say they) was spoken of the lawe onely, after which followed the prophecies and the whole whole miniſtration of the Goſpell. I graunt in deede: and I adde alſo, which are rather fulfillings of the law, than additions or diminiſhings. But if ỹ lord ſuffred nothing to be added to or take from the miniſterie of Moſes, which was (as I may ſo terme it) dark by reaſon of many doubfull enwrappinges, til by his ſeruaunts, the Prophets, and at length by his beloued ſonne, he miniſtred a clearer doctrine: why ſhoulde we not thinke it much more ſeuerely forbidden vs, that we ſhoulde adde nothing to the lawe, the Prophetes, the Pſalmes, and the Goſpell? The Lorde is not gone out of kinde from himſelf, which hath long ago declared, that he is with nothing ſo highly offended, as when he is worſhipped with the inuentions of men. Whereof came thoſe notable ſayings in the Prophets, which ought to haue continually ſounded in our eares: I ſpake no wordes to your fathers, in the day that I brought them out of Egypt, concerning ſacrifice and burnt offering. But this worde I commaunded them, ſaying: With hearing heare my voice: and I will bee your God, and you ſhall be my people, and you ſhall walk in al the way that I ſhall commaund you. Againe, I haue with proteſting proteſted vnto your fathers, Heare my voice. And other like ſayings: but this is notable aboue the reſt. Will God haue burnt offrings and ſacrifices, and not rather that his voice be obeied? For obedience is better than ſacrifice, and to harken is better than to offer the fat of Rammes. For, to reſiſt is as the ſinne of ſoothſaying: and not to obey is as the wickedneſſe of idolatrie. Therfore whatſoeuer inuentions of men are in this behalfe defended with the authoritie of the church, foraſmuch as the ſame cannot be excuſed from the crime of vngodlines, it is eaſy to proue that it is falſly imputed to the Church.

Iere. 11. 1. Sam. 15. 22.

The Apoſtles no authors of thoſe things, for vvhich their names are pretented in the Church of Rome.

18 After this ſort we freely inuey againſt this tyranny of mens traditions, which is proudlie thruſt in among vs, vnder the title of the church. For neither doe we ſcorne the Church (as our aduerſaries, to bring vs in hatred, do vniuſtly lie vpon vs) but we giue vnto her the praiſe of obedience, than which ſhe knoweth no greater praiſe. They rather are very ſore wrong doers to the Church, which make her obſtinate againſt her Lorde, while they faine that ſhe hath proceeded further than ſhee lawfully might doe by the word of God: though I ſpeak nothing how it is a notable ſhameleſnes ioined with as great malice, continually to cry out of the authoritie of the church, & in the meane time diſſemblingly to hide both what is commaunded her by the Lord, & what obedience ſhe oweth to the commaundement of the Lord. But if we haue a mind, as it is meete we ſhould haue, to agree with the church, this pertaineth rather to the purpoſe, to haue an eye vnto & remember what is commaunded by the Lord both to vs and the Church, that wee ſhould with one agreement obey him. For ther is no doubt but we ſhal very well agree with the Church, if wee doe in all things ſhewe our ſelues obedient to the Lorde. But now to father vpon the Apoſtles, the originall of the traditions wherewith the church hath bene hitherto oppreſſed, was a point of meere deceit: foraſmuch as the doctrine of the Apoſtles trauaileth wholly to this end, that conſciences ſhould not be burdened with new obſeruatiõs, nor the worſhipping of God be defiled with our inuentiõs. Moreouer if there be any faithfulnes in hiſtories and ancient monuments, the apoſtles not only neuer knewe, but alſo neuer heard of this that they attribute vnto them.

Neither

Neither let thé prate, that the moſt part of their decrees were receiued in vſe & in mens behauiors, which neuer were put in writing: euē thoſe things forſooth, which, while Chriſt was yet liuing, they could not vnderſtand, after his aſcending they learned by the reuelation of the holy ghoſt. Of the expoſition of that place we haue els where already ſeene. So much as is ſufficient for this preſent cauſe: truly they make thēſelues worthy to be laughed at, while they faine ỹ thoſe great myſteries, which ſo long time were vnknowē to the Apoſtles, were partly obſeruatiōs either Iewiſh or Gentle (of which al the one ſort had ben long before publiſhed among the Iewes, & all the other ſort among the Gentiles) and partly fooliſh geſturinges & vayne pety ceremonies, which fooliſh ſacrificing prieſts that can neither skill of ſwimming nor of letters, vſe to do very trimly: yea ſuch as children & fooles do ſo aptly counterfait that it may ſeeme ỹ there be no fitter miniſters of ſuch holy myſteries. If there were no hiſtories at all: yet men ỹ haue their ſoūd wit might conſider by the thing it ſelfe, ỹ ſo great a heape of ceremonies & obſeruations did not ſodenly burſt into the Church, but by litle & litle crept in. For when thoſe holier Biſhops, which were next in time to the Apoſtles, had ordained ſome things that belonged to order & diſcipline, afterward there followed men, ſome after other, not diſcreet enough, and too curious and greedie, of which the later that euery one was, ſo he more ſtriued with his predeceſſors in fooliſh enuious coūterfaiting, not to giue place in inuenting of new thinges. And becauſe there was peril leaſt their deuiſes woulde ſhortly grow out of vſe, by which they coueted to get praiſe among their poſteritie, they were much more rigorous in exact calling vpon the keeping of them. This wrongful zeale hath bred vs a great part of theſe ceremonies which they ſet out vnto vs for Apoſtolike. And this alſo the hiſtories doe teſtifie.

19 Leaſt in making a regiſter of them we ſhould be too tedious: we will be content with one example. In the miniſtring of the Lords ſupper, there was in ỹ Apoſtles time great ſimplicity. The next ſucceſſors, to garniſh the dignity of the myſtery, added ſomewhat that was not to be diſallowed. But afterward there came thoſe fooliſh counterfaiters, which with now & then patching of peces together, haue made vs this apparel of the prieſts which we ſee in the Maſſe, thoſe ornaments of the alter, thoſe geſturings, & the whole furniture of vnprofitable thinges. But they obiect, that this in olde time was the perſwaſiō, that thoſe things which were with one cōſent done in the vniuerſall Church, came from the Apoſtles themſelues, wherof they cite Auguſtine for witneſſe. But I will bring a ſolution from no other where than out of the wordes of Auguſtine himſelfe. Thoſe thinges (ſayeth hee) that are kept in the whole world, we may vnderſtand to haue beene ordained either of the Apoſtles themſelues, or of the general Councels, whoſe authoritie is moſt healthfull in the Church: as, that the Lords paſſion, and reſurrection, and his aſcending into heauen, and the comming of the holie Ghoſt, are celebrate with yearely ſolemnitie: and whatſoeuer like thing be found, that is kept of the whole Church, which way ſoeuer it be ſpreade abroade. When he reckeneth vppe ſo fewe examples, who doeth not ſee that he meant to impute to authours worthy of credit and reuerence, the obſerobseruations that then were vsed, euen none but those simple, rare, & sober ones, with which it was profitable ẏ the order of the Church should be kept together? But how far doth this differ from that which the Romish masters would enforce men to graunt, that there is no petie ceremony among thẽ that ought not to be iudged Apostolike.

The institution of holy water.

20 That I be not too long, I wil bring forth only one example. If any mã aske them, whence they haue their holy water: they by & by answere, from the Apostles. As though the histories do not attribute this inuentiõ to I wot not what Bishop of Rome, which truly, if he had called the Apostles to councel, would neuer haue defiled Baptisme with a strange & vnfitte signe. Albeit I do not thinke it like to be true, that the beginning of that halowing is so olde as it is there written. For, that which Augustine saieth, that certayne Churches in his time did shun that solemne following of Christes example in washing of feete, least that vsage should seeme to pertaine to Baptisme, secretly sheweth that there was then no kind of washing that had any likenes with baptisme. What soeuer it be, I will not graunt that this proceeded frõ an Apostolike spirite, ẏ baptisme, whẽ it is with a daily signe brought into remembrãce, should after a certaine maner be repeated. And I passe not vpõ this, ẏ the selfsame Augustine in an other place ascribeth other things also to the Apostles. For sith he hath nothing but coniectures, iudgement ought not vpõ them to be giuen of so great a matter. Finally, admit that we grauut them also, that those thinges which he rehearseth came from the time of the Apostles: Yet there is great difference betweene instituting some exercise of godlines, which the faithful with a free cõscience may vse, or if the vse of it shal not be profitable for them, they may forbeare it: and making a law that may snare consciences with bondage. But now, frõ what authot soeuer they proceeded, sith we see ẏ they are slidden into so great abuse, nothing withstandeth, but that we may without offence of him abolish them: forasmuch as they were neuer so commended, that they must be perpetually immoueable.

Epist. 118. ad Ianu.

The church of Rome in her ordinances nothing lesse than a follower of the apostles in theirs.

21 Neither doth it much helpe them, that to excuse their tyranny they pretend the example of the Apostles. The Apostles (say they) & the elders of the first church, made a decre beside the cõmandement of Christ, wherin they commanded all the Gentils to abstaine from things offred to idols, from strangled, & from bloude. If that was lawfull for them, why is it not also lawful for their successors, to follow ẏ same so oft as occasiõ so requireth? I would to God, they did both in all other things & in this thing folow thẽ. For I deny that the apostles did there institute or decree any new thing, which is easie to be proued by a strong reason. For wheras Peter in ẏ councell pronounceth, that God is tempted, if a yoake be laid vpon the necks of the disciples: he doth himselfe ouerthrowe his owne sentence, if he afterward consent to haue any yoke laid vpon them. But there is a yoke laide, if the Apostles do decree of their own authoritie that the Gentiles should be forbidden, ẏ they should not touch things offred to idols, bloud, & strãgled. In deede there yet remaineth a doubt, for that they do neuertheless seeme to forbid. But this doubt shal easily be dissolued, if a man do more nerely cõsider the meaning of the decree it selfe: in the order and effect wherof the chiefe chiefe point is, that to the Gentiles their libertie is to be left, and that they ought not to be troubled, nor accombred about the obseruatiõs of the law. Hitherto it very wel maketh of our side. But the exception that immediatly followeth, neither is any new lawe made by the Apostles, but the diuine & eternal commandement of God, ỳ charitie ought not to be broken, nor doth diminish one title of that libertie: but onely admonisheth the Gentiles, how they should temper themselues to their brethren, that they abuse not their liberty to the offence of them. Let this therefore be the second point, that the Gentiles should vse a harmlesse libertie, & without offence of their brethré. But yet they prescribe some certain thing: ỳ is, they teach and appoint, so far as was expedient for the time, by what things they might run into the offence of their brethren, that they might beware of those things: but they adde no newe thing of their owne to the eternall law of God, which forbiddeth the offending of brethren.

The Apostles in their constitution about the Gentiles made no newe lawe of their owne, but applied to the times a lawe which God had made before.

23 Like as if the faithfull Pastors which gouerne the Churches not yet well reformed, should commaund all their people, ỳ til the weak with whom they liue do growe stronger, they should not openly eate flesh on Friday, or openly labour vpon holy dayes, or any such thing. For although these things setting superstition aside, are by themselues indifferent: yet when ther is added offence of brethren, they cannot be done without a fault. But the times are such, that the faithfull cannot shewe such a sight to the weake brethren, but ỳ they shall sore wound their consciences. Who, but a cauiller, will say that so they make a newe lawe, whereas, it is certaine that they doe onely preuent offences, which are expresselỳ enough forbidden of the Lorde? And no more can it be said of the Apostles, whose purpose was nothing els, but in taking away the matter of offences, to cal vpon the law of God concerning the auoiding of offence: as if they had sayde: It is the Lordes commaundement that ye offende not a weake brother. Yee can not eate thinges offered to images, strangled and bloud, but that the weake brethren shal be offended. Therefore we commaund you in the worde of the Lord, that ye eat not with offence. And that the Apostles had respect to the same thing, Paul himselfe is a very good witnesse, which writeth thus, verily none otherwise than according to the meaning of the Councell: Concerning meates that are offered to idols, we know that the idoll is nothing. But some with conscience of the Idole, do eat it as offered to idols, and their conscience, forasmuch as it is weake, is defiled. See that your libertie bee not made an offence to the weak. He that shall haue wel weighed these thinges, shall not afterwarde bee deceiued with such a false colour as they make, that pretend the apostles for defence of their tiranie, as though the apostles had begun with their decree to breake the liberty of the Church. But, that they may not bee able to escape, but be driuen euen with their own confession to allowe this solution, lette them aunswere mee, by what right they were so bolde to abrogate the same decree. Because there was no more perill of those offences and dissentions: which the Apostles meant to prouide for, and they know that the lawe was to be weighed by the end thereof. Forasmuch as therefore this lawe was made in respect of charitie, there is nothing prescribed in it, but so much as pertaineth to charity. When they confesse ỳ the transgressing of this lawe is nothing but a breaking of charitie, do they not therewithall acknowledge, ỹ it is not a forged addition to the law of God, but a natural and simple appliance to the times and manners whereunto it was directed?

1. Cor. 8. 1.

nothing

The commandement of God strictly to be obserued in thinges appertaining to his honor and seruice.

23 But although such laws be a hundred times vniust and iniurious vnto vs, yet they affirme that they must be heard without exception: for they say that this is not here intented, that we should consent to errors, but only that being subiectes we should beare the hard commandementes of our gouernours, which it is not our partes to refuse. But here also the Lorde very well resisteth them with the truth of his word, and deliuereth vs out of such bondage into the libertie, which he hath purchased for vs with his holy bloude, the benefit whereof he hath more than once confirmed with his worde. For that is not here only intended (as they maliciously faine) ỹ we should suffer some grieuous oppression in our body, but that our consciences being spoiled of their liberty that is of the benefit of the bloud of Christ, should be seruilely tormented. Howbeit let vs passe ouer this also, as though it made litle to the matter. But of how great importance do we thinke it is, that ỹ Lords kingdom is taken away frō him, which he claimeth to himself with so great seuerity? But it is taken away so oft as hee is worshipped with the lawes of mens inuentions, whereas he will be holden for the onely lawmaker of his owne worship. And least any man shoulde think it to be a matter of nothing,

Esa. 29. 13. let vs here how much the Lord esteemeth it. Because (sayth he) this people hath feared me with the commandement and doctrine of men: behold I wil astonish them with a great and wonderous miracle. For wisedom shall perish from the wisemen therof, & vnderstanding shal depart from the elders. In an

Math. 15. 9. other place, They worship me in vaine, teaching doctrines, the commandements of men. And truely whereas the children of Israel defiled themselues with many idolatries, ỹ cause of al that euil is ascribed to this vncleane mixture, ỹ transgressing the commandements of God, they haue forged newe worshippings. And therefore the holy hystory reherseth ỹ the new strangers ỹ had bin transplanted by the king of Babylon to inhabite Samaria, were torne in peeces & consumed of wilde beasts, because they knew not ỹ iudgements or statutes of the God of that land. Although they had nothing offended in the Ceremonies, yet God would not haue allowed a vaine pompe: but in the meane time he ceased not to take vengeance of the defiling of his worship, for that men did thrust in deuises strange from his word. Whereupon it is afterward said, that they being made afraide with that punishment, receiued the Ceremonies prescribed in the lawe: but because they did not yet purely worship the true God, it is twise repeated that they did feare him & did not feare him. Whereupon we gather, ỹ the part of reuerence which is giuen to him, consisteth in this, while in worshipping him wee simply followe what

2. King. 23. he commaundeth with mingling none of our inuentions. And therefore the godly kings are oftentimes praysed, because they did according to al the commaundementes, and declined not to the right hande nor to the left. I go yet further: although in some fayned worshipping ther do not openly appeare vngodlines, yet it is seuerely condemned of the holy Ghoste, so soone

2. King. 16. 10. as men depart from the commaundement of God. The Altar of Achaz, the patern wherof was brought out of Samaria, might haue seemed to encrease ỹ

garnishment of the temple, whereas his deuise was to offer Sacrifices thereupon to God only, which he should do more honorably than vpon the first and old Altar. yet we see how the spirite detesteth that boldnes, for none other cause but for that the inuentions of men in the worshipping of God are vncleane corruptions. And howe much more clearly the will of God is opened vnto vs, so much the lesse excusable is our frowardnesse to attempt any thing. And therefore worthily with this circumstance the crime of Manasses is inforced, for that he builded a newe áltar in Ierusalem, of which God had pronounced, I will there set my name, because the authoritie of God is now as it were of set purpose refused. 2. King 21. 3.

24 Many doe maruel why God so sharply threateneth that hee will do things to be wondred at to the people of whom he was worshipped with the commandements of men, and pronounceth that he is worshipped in vaine with the precepts of men. But if they cõsidered, what it is in the cause of religion, that is to say of heauenly wisedome, to hang vpon the only mouth of God, they woulde therewithall see, that it is no slender reason why God so abhorreth such peruerse seruices, that are done to him acording to the lust of mans wit. For although they that obey such lawes for the wotshipping of God, haue a certeine shewe of humilitie in this their obedience, yet they are not humble before God, to whom they prescribe the same lawes which they themselues do keepe. This is the reason why Paul willeth vs so diligently to beware, that we be not deceiued by the traditions of men, and that which he calleth ethelothreskian, that is, Wilworship inuented of men beside the doctrine of God. This is verily true, both our owne wisedom, & al mens wisdom must be foolish vnto vs, that wee may suffer him alone to be wise. Which way they keepe not which doe studie with petie obseruations fained by the will of men to commend themselues vnto him, and do thrust vnto him as it were against his will a transgressing obedience toward him, which is in deede giuen to men. As it hath beene done both in many ages heretofore, & in the time within our own remembrance, and is also at this day done in those places where the authoritie of the creature is more esteemed than of the creator: where religion (if yet the same be worthie to be called religion) is defiled with more & more vnsauourie superstitions, than euer was any Paynim wickednes. For what could the wit of men breed but all thinges carnall and foolish & such as truely resemble their authors?

The reason vvhy God abhorreth seruices vvherevvith men deuise to please him.

Col. 2. 4.

25 Whereas also the Patrons of superstitions alleadge, that Samuel sacrificed in Ramatha, & although the same was done beside the law, yet it pleased God: the solution is easie, that it was not a certaine seconde altar to set against the one only altar: but because the place was not yet appointed for the arke of couenant, he appointed the town where hee dwelled for sacrifices, as the most conuenient place. Truely the mind of the holy prophet was not to make any innouation in holy things, whereas God had so straitly forbidden any thing to be added or minished. As for the example of Manoha, I say ỹ it was an extraordinarie & singular case. He being a priuate man offered sacrifice to God & not without the allowance of God: verily because hee enterprised it not of a rash motiõ of his own mind, but by a heauenly instinction. But how much the Lord abhorreth those things ỹ men deuise of them ſelues to worſhip him withal, another not inferior to Menoha Gedeon is a notable example, whoſe Ephod turned to deſtruction not only to him & his familie, but to the whole people. Finally, euery new found inuention, wherewith men couet to worſhip god, is nothing elſe but a defiling of true holines.

The miniſteriall authoritie of Scribes & Phariſees confirmed by Chriſt but not their preſumption to burthen men with what they luſted.

Mat. 23. 3. & 16. 6

26 Why then (ſay they) did Chriſt wil that thoſe intollerable burdens ſhould be borne, which the Scribes and Phariſees bound vpon men? But why in another place did the ſame Chriſt will that men ſhoulde beware of the leauen of the Phariſees: calling leauen (as Matthew the Euangeliſt expoundeth it) all their owne doctrine that they mingled with the pureneſſe of the worde of God? What would we haue more plaine, than that wee bee commaunded to flee and beware of all their doctrine? Whereby it is made moſt certaine vnto vs, that in the other place alſo the Lorde willed not, that the conſciences of his ſhould be vexed with the Phariſees own traditions. And the verie words, if they be not wreſted, ſound of no ſuch thing. For the Lord purpoſing there to inueigh ſharply againſt the manners of the Phariſees, did firſt ſimply inſtruct them that heard him, that although they ſawe nothing in their life meete for them to follow, yet they ſhould not ceaſe to do thoſe things which they taught in wordes, while they ſat in the chaire of Moſes, that is, to declare the Lawe. Therefore he meant nothing elſe but to prouide that the common people ſhoulde not with the euil examples of the teachers be brought to deſpiſe the doctrine. But forafmuch as many are nothing at all mooued with reaſons, but alway require authoritie, I will alleage Auguſtines wordes, in which the verie ſame thing is ſpoken. The Lords ſheepefold hath gouernours, ſome faithfull, and ſome hirelings. The gouernours that are faithfull, are true Paſtors: but heare ye, that the hirelings alſo are neceſſarie: for many in the Church following earthly profits, do preach Chriſt, and by them the voice of Chriſt is heard: and the ſheepe do followe, not a hireling, but a Paſtor by the meanes of a hireling. Heare yee that hirelings are ſhewed by the Lorde himſelfe. The Scribes (ſayeth hee) and the Phariſees ſit in the chayre of Moſes. Doe yee thoſe thinges that they ſaye, but doe not thoſe thinges that they doe. What other thing ſaide hee, but heare the voice of the Paſtor by the hyrelinges? For in ſitting in the chaire they teach the lawe of GOD: therefore God teacheth by them. But if they will teach their owne, heare it not, doe it not. This ſaith Auguſtine.

In forbidding mens conſciences to be charged with humane traditions, lawes whereby the Church is ſet in order are not preiudiced.

27 But whereas many vnskilfull men, when they heare that conſciences are wickedly bounde and God worſhipped in vaine with the traditions of men, do at once blot out altogether all lawes whereby the order of the Church is ſet in frame: therefore it is conuenient alſo to meete with their errour: Verily in this point it is eaſie to bee deceiued, becauſe at the firſt ſight it doeth not by and by appeare what difference is betweene the one ſorte and the other. But I will ſo plainly in fewe wordes ſet out the whole matter, that the likeneſſe may deceiue no man. Firſt let vs hold this, that if wee ſee in euery fellowſhip of men ſome policie to bee neceſſarie, that may ſerue to nouriſh common peace, and to retaine concorde: if wee ſee that in the doing of thinges there is alway ſome orderly forme, which is behoouefull for publike honeſtie and for verie humanitie not to be refuſed:

the ſame ought chiefely to be obſerued in Churches, which are both beſt maintained by a well framed diſpoſition of all thinges, and without agreement are no Churches at all. Therefore if we will haue the ſafetie of the Church wel prouided for, we muſt altogether diligently procure that which Paul commaundeth, that all thinges be done comelily and according to order. 1.Cor.14.4. But foraſmuch as there is ſo great diuerſitie in the manners of men, ſo great varietie in mindes, ſo great diſagreement in iudgementes & wits: neither is there any policie ſtedfaſt enough, vnleſſe it bee ſtabliſhed by certaine lawes, nor any orderly vſage can be obſerued without a certaine appointed forme: Therefore wee are ſo farre off from condemning the lawes that are profitable to this purpoſe, that we affirme that when thoſe be taken away, Churches are diſſolued from their ſinewes, and vtterly deformed and ſcattered abroade. For this which Paul requireth, that all thinges bee done decently and in order, cannot bee had, vnleſſe the order it ſelfe and comelineſſe bee eſtabliſhed, with obſeruations adioyned as with certaine bondes. But this onely thing is alway to be excepted in thoſe obſeruations, that they bee not either beleeued to be neceſſarie to ſaluation, and ſo bind conſciences with religion, or be applied to the worſhipping of God, and ſo godlines be repoſed in them.

28 We haue therefore a very good and moſt faithful marke, which puteth difference betweene thoſe wicked ordinaunces, by which we haue ſaid that true religion is darkened and conſciences ſubuerted, and the lawfull obſeruations of the Church: if wee remember that the lawfull obſeruations tende alway to one of theſe two thinges or to both together, that in the holy aſſemblie of the faithfull all thinges bee done comely and with ſuche dignitie as beſeemeth: and that the verie common felowſhippe of men ſhould bee kept in order as it were by certaine bondes of humanitie and moderation. For when it is once vnderſtonde that the lawe is made for publike honeſties ſake, the ſuperſtition is now taken away, into which they fall that meaſure the woorſhipping of God by the inuentions of men. Againe when it is knowen that it pertaineth to common vſe, then that falſe opinion of bonde and neceſſitie is ouerthrowen, which did ſtrike a great terror into conſciences, when traditions were thought neceſſarie to ſaluation. For herein is nothing required but that charitie ſhould with common duetifull doing be nouriſhed among vs. But it is good yet to define more plainely, what is comprehended vnder that comelineſſe which Paul commendeth, and alſo what vnder order. The ende of comelineſſe is, partly that when ſuch Ceremonies are vſed as may procure a reuerence to holy thinges, wee may by ſuch helpes be ſtirred vp to godlineſſe: partly alſo that the modeſty and grauitie which ought to be ſeen in all honeſt doings may therein principally appeare. In order this is the firſt point, that they which gouerne may knowe the rule and lawe to rule well: and the people which are gouerned may be accuſtomed to obeying of God, and to right diſcipline: Then, that the ſtate of the Church being well framed, peace and quietnes may be prouided for.

The difference betweene vvicked obſeruations and the lavvfull cõſtitutions of the Church.

29 Therefore wee ſhall not ſay that comelineſſe is, wherein ſhal be nothing but vaine delectation: ſuch as we ſee in that playerlike apparell, which the Papistes vse in their ceremonies, where appeareth nothing else, but an vnprofitable visor of gainesse, and excesse without fruite. But we shall account that to be comelinesse which shall so bee meete for the reuerence of holy mysteries, that it be a fit exercise to godlinesse, or at least such as shall serue to conuenient garnishing for the celebrating thereof: & the same not without fruite, but that it may put the faithfull in minde with howe greate modestie, religiousnesse and reuerence, they ought to handle holy thinges. Nowe, that ceremonies may be exercises of godlinesse, it is necessary that they leade vs the streight waie to Christ. Likewise wee maie not say that order consisteth in those trifling pomps that haue nothing else than a vanishing gaines: but that it standeth in such an orderly framing as maie take away all confusion, barbarousnesse, obstinacie, and al striues and dissentions.

1.Cor.11.21.& 5. Of the first sort are these examples in Paul: y prophane banketting should not bee mingled with the holie Supper of the Lorde: that women shoulde not come abrade, but couered: and many other which wee haue in common vse: as this, that we pray kneeling and bare headed: that we minister the Lordes Sacramentes not vncleanely, but with some dignitie: that in the burying of the dead we vse some honest shewe: and other thinges that are

1.Co.14.34 of the same sorte. Of the other kinde are the houres appointed for publike prayers, Sermons, and celebrations of mysteries: at Sermons, quietnesse and silence, places appointed, singing together of Hymnes, daies prefixed for celebrating of the Lords Supper, that Paul forbiddeth that women should teach in the Church, and such like. But specially those things that concerne discipline, as the teaching of the Catechisme, the censures of the Church, excommunication, fastinges, & such as may be reckoned in the same number. So all the constitutions of the Church, which wee receiue for holy and wholesome, we may referre to two chiefe titles: for some pertaine to rites, & ceremonies, and the other to discipline and peace.

A rule for church ordinances. 30 But because here is peril, least on the one side the false bishops should thereby catch a pretence to excuse their wicked and tyrannous lawes, and least on the otherside there bee some men too fearefull, which admonished with the aforesaide euils do leaue no place to lawes be they neuer so holie: here it is good to protest, that I alow only those ordinances of men which be both grounded vpon the authoritie of God, & taken out of the scripture, yea and altogether Gods owne. Let vs take for an example the kneeling which is vsed in time of common prayer. It is demanded, whether it bee a tradition of man, which euery mā may lawfully refuse or neglect, I say that it so of mē, that it is also of God. It is of God, in respect that it is a part of that comlinesse, the care and keeping whereof is commended vnto vs by the Apo-

1.Cor.14.40. stle: it is of men, in respect that it specially betokeneth that which had in generaltie rather beene pointed to, than declared. By this one example wee may iudge, what is to be thought of that whole kinde: verily because the Lorde hath in his holie Oracles both faithfully conteined and clearely set foorth both the whole summe of true righteousnesse, and all the partes of the worshipping of his diuine Maiestie, and whatsoeuer was necessarie to saluation: therefore in these thinges hee is onelie to be hearde as our Schoolemaister. But because in outward discipline and Ceremonies his will will was not to preſcribe each thing particularly what wee ought to followe (becauſe hee foreſawe this to hang vppon the ſtate of times, and did not thinke one forme to be fitte for all ages) herein wee muſt flee to thoſe generall rules which he hath giuen, that thereby all thoſe thinges ſhoulde bee tried which the neceſſitie of the Church ſhall require to bee commaunded for order and comlineſſe. Finally, Foraſmuch as hee hath therefore taught nothing expreſly, becauſe theſe things both are not neceſſarie to ſaluation, and according to the manners of euery nation and age ought diuerſly to be applyed to the edifying of the Church: therfore as the profite of the church ſhall require, it ſhal bee conuenient as well to change and abrogate thoſe that be vſed, as to inſtitute newe. I graunt in deede, that we ought not raſhly, nor oft, nor for light cauſes to runne to innouation. But what may hurt or edifie, charitie ſhall beſt iudge: which if we will ſuffer to be the gouernes, all ſhal be ſafe.

The obedience required vnto lawfull ordinances of the church.

31 Nowe it is the duetie of Chriſtian people, to keepe ſuch thinges as haue beene ordeined according to this rule, with a free conſcience & without any ſuperſtition, but yet with a godly and eaſie redineſſe to obey, not to deſpiſe them, not to paſſe them ouer with careleſſe negligence: ſo farre is it of, that they ought by pride and obſtinacie openly to breake them. What manner of libertie of conſcience (wilt thou ſay) may there bee in ſo great obſeruation and warineſſe? Yea, it ſhall ſtande excellently well when wee ſhall conſider, that they are not ſtedfaſt and perpetuall ſtayed lawes, whereunto wee be bounde, but outwarde rudimentes for the weakeneſſe of men: which although we do not all neede, yet wee doe all vſe them, becauſe wee are mutually one bound to another, to nouriſh charitie among vs. This wee may reknowledge in the examples aboue rehearſed. What? Doeth religion ſtande in a womans veile, that it is not lawfull to goe out of dores with her heade vncouered? Is that holy decree of his concerning ſilence, ſuch as cannot be broken without moſt hainous offence? Is there any myſterie in kneeling, or in burying of a dead carcaſe, that may not be omitted without ſinne? No, For if a woman neede, for the helping of her neighbour, to make ſuch haſt as may not ſuffer her to couer her head, ſhee offendeth not if ſhee runne thither with her head vncouered. And it may ſometime befall that it may be no leſſe conuenient for her to ſpeake, than at another time to holde her peace. And there is no cauſe to the contrarie, but that he which by reaſon of diſeaſe cannot bow his knees may pray ſtanding. Finally, it is better to burie a dead man ſpeedely in time, than when they lacke a winding ſheet, or when there be not men preſent to conuey him, to tarrie till he rot vnburied. But neuertheleſſe in theſe things there is ſomewhat which the manner and ordinances of the countrie, and finally very natural honeſtie and the rule of modeſtie appointeth to bee done or auoided: wherein if a man ſwarue any thing from them, by vnwarines, or forgetfulneſſe, there is no crime committed: but if vppon contempt, ſuch ſtubborneſſe is to bee diſallowed. Likewiſe the dayes themſelues, which they bee, and the houres, and howe the places be builded, and what Pſalmes be ſong vpon which day, it maketh no matter. But it is meete that there bee both certeine daies, and appointed houres, and a place fit to receiue all, if there bee regarde had of the preſeruation of peace, For how great an occasion of brawlings should the confusion of these things bee, if it were lawful for euery man as he list, to change those things that belong to common state: forasmuch as it will neuer come to passe that one same thing shall please all men, if things be left as it were in the middest to the choice of euery man? If any man do carpe against vs, and will herein bee more wise than hee ought, let him see himselfe by what reason hee can defende his owne precisenesse to the Lorde. As for vs, this saying of Paul ought to satisfie vs, that wee haue not an vse to contend, nor the Churches of God.

Cautions touching Churchordinances.

32 Moreouer it is with great diligence to be indeuoured, that no error creepe in, that may corrupt or obscure this pure vse. Which shalbe obteined, if all obseruations, whatsoeuer they shall bee, shall haue a shewe of manifest profite, and if verie fewe bee receiued: but principally if there be adioyned a faithfull doctrine of the Pastor, that may stoppe vp the waye to peruerse opinions. This knowledge maketh that in all these thinges euery man may haue his owne libertie preserued, and neuertheless shall willingly charge his owne libertie with a certaine necessitie, so farre as either this comelinesse that wee haue spoken of, or the order of Charitie shal require. Secondly, that both wee our selues shoulde without any superstition be busied in the obseruing of those thinges, and shoulde not too precisely require them of other, so as wee shoulde thinke the worshipping of God to bee the better for the multitude of ceremonies: that one Church should not despise another for the diuersitie of discipline: last of all that setting herein no perpetuall lawe to our selues, wee shoulde referre the whole vse and ende of obseruations to the edification of the Church, that when it requireth we may without any offence suffer not onely somewhat to bee changed, but all the obseruations that were before in vse among vs, to bee altered. For this age is a present experience, that certaine rites, which otherwise are not vngodly nor vncomely, may according to the fit occasion of the matter, bee conueniently abrogate. For (such hath beene the blindnesse and ignorance of the former times) Churches haue heretofore, with so corrupt opinion and with so stiffe affection, sticked in ceremonies, that they can scarcely be sufficiently purged from monstruous superstitions, but that many ceremonies must be taken away, which in olde time were peraduenture ordeined not without cause, and of themselues haue no notable vngodlines in them.

The xi. Chapter.

Of the iurisdiction of the Church, and the abuse thereof, such as is seene in the Papacie.

The vse of a policie in the church different frō that which is ciuil: the antiquitie of ecclesiastical iudgements: the difference of authoritie giuen to the Church in the 18. of Matth. from that which is giuen in the 16. of Matth. and the 21. of John.

NOwe remaineth the thirde part of the power of the Church, yea & the cheefe part in a well ordered state, which wee haue said to consist in iurisdiction. The whole iurisdiction of the Church perteineth to the discipline of maners, of which we shal entreat by and by. For as much as no citie or no town can stand without magistrate & policie: so the church of God (as

Ihaue

I haue alreadie taught, but now I am compelled to repeate it again) needeth her certaine ſpiritual pollicie: but ſuch as is vtterly ſeuered from the ciuile pollicie, and doth ſo nothing hinder or miniſh it, that it rather doth much helpe and further it. Therefore this power of iuriſdiction ſhal in a ſumme be nothing elſe but an order framed for the preſeruation of ſpirituall pollicie. To this ende from the beginning were ordained iudiciall orders in Churches, which might vſe examination of maners, correct vices & exerciſe the office of the keies. This order Paul ſpeaketh of in the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, when he nameth gouernments. Againe, to the Romanes, when hee ſaith: let him that ruleth, rule in carefulnes. For he ſpeaketh not to the magiſtrates, (for at that time there were no Chriſtian magiſtrates) but to them y were ioyned with the Paſtors for the ſpiritual gouernment of the church. Alſo in the Epiſtle to Timothee, he maketh two ſorts of Elders: ſome, that labor in the word: other ſome, that do not vſe the preaching of the word, & yet doe rule well. By this later ſort it is no dout that he meaneth thē y were appointed to looke vnto maners, and to the whole vſe of the keyes. For this power, of which we nowe ſpeake, hangeth wholly vppon the keyes which Chriſt gaue to the Church, in the xviii. Chap. of Matthewe: where hee commandeth, that they ſhould be ſharply admoniſhed in the name of the whole Church, that haue deſpiſed priuate monitions: but if they goe forwarde in their obſtinacie, he teacheth that they ſhould be put out of the fellowſhip of the faithfull. But theſe monitions & corrections cannot bee without knowledge of the cauſe: therefore there needeth both ſome iudgement and order. Wherefore vnleſſe we will make voide the promiſe of the keies, & take vtterly away excommunication, ſolemne monitions, & al ſuch things whatſoeuer they be: we muſt needes giue to the Church ſome iuriſdiction. Let the readers marke that that place entreateth not of the generall authoritie of doctrine, as in the xvi. Chapter of Matthewe, and the xxi. of John: but that the power of the Synagogue is for the time to come transferred to the flock of Chriſt. Vntill that day the Iewes had their order of gouerning, which Chriſt ſtabliſheth in his Church, and that with great penaltie, ſo much as concerneth the pure inſtitution of it. For ſo it behoued, foraſmuch as otherwiſe the iudgement of an vnnoble and vnregarded congregation might be deſpiſed of raſh and proude men. And that it ſhoulde not encomber the readers, that Chriſt doeth in the ſame wordes expreſſe things ſomewhat differing one from the other, it ſhalbe profitable to diſſolue this doubt. There be therefore two places, that ſpeake of binding and looſing. The one is in the xvi. Chapter of Matthewe, where Chriſt, after that he had promiſed that he woulde giue to Peter the keies of the kingdome of heauen, immediately addeth, that whatſoeuer he ſhall binde or looſe in earth, ſhalbe confirmed in heauen. In which wordes he meaneth none other thing, than hee doeth by other wordes in John, when ſending his diſciples to preach, after that hee had breathed vpon them he ſaide: whoſe ſinnes ye forgiue, they ſhalbe forgiuen: and whoſe ye retaine, they ſhalbe retained in heauen. I will bring an expoſition not ſuttle, not enforced, not wreſted: but natural, flowing, and offering it ſelfe. This commaundement of forgiuing and reteining ſinnes, & that promiſe of binding and looſing made to Peter, ought to be referred to no other thing but to the miniſterie of the worde: which when the Lorde committed to the Apoſtles, he did therwith alſo arme them with this office of binding and looſing. For what is the ſumme of the Goſpel, but that wee all being the bondſeruantes of ſinne and of death, are looſed and made free by the redemption that is in Chriſt Ieſus: and that they which do not receiue nor acknowledge Chriſt their deliuerer and redeemer, are damned and adiudged to euerlaſting bonds? When the Lord deliuered this meſſage to his Apoſtles, to be carried into all nations: to approue that it was his owne & proceeding from himſelf, he honored it with this noble teſtimonie: and that to the ſingular ſtrengthening both of the Apoſtles themſelues, and of all thoſe to whom it ſhould come. It behoued that the Apoſtles ſhould haue a ſtedfaſt and ſounde certaintie of their preaching, which they ſhould not only execute with infinite labours, cares, troubles and dangers, but alſo at the laſt ſeale it with their blood. That they might (I ſay) knowe the ſame to bee not vaine nor voide, but full of power and force: it behoued that in ſo great carefulneſſe, in ſo great hardneſſe of thinges, and in ſo great dangers, they ſhould be perſwaded that they did the buſineſſe of God: that when all the worlde withſtoode them, and fought againſt them, they ſhould knowe that God ſtoode on their ſide: that hauing not Chriſt the author of their doctrine preſent by ſight in earth, they ſhoulde vnderſtande him to be in heauen, to confirme the trueth of the doctrine which he had deliuered them. It behoued againe that it ſhould alſo be moſt certainly proued by teſtimonie to the hearers, that that doctrine of the Goſpell was not the worde of the Apoſtles, but of God himſelfe: not a voice bred in earth, but come downe from heauen. For theſe thinges, the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, the promiſe of euerlaſting life, the meſſage of ſaluation, cannot bee in the power of man. Therefore Chriſt hath teſtified, that in the preaching of the Goſpell there is nothing of the Apoſtles, but the onely miniſterie: that it was hee himſelfe that ſpake and promiſed all thinges by their mouthes as by inſtruments: and therefore that the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes which they preached, was the true promiſe of God: and the damnation which they pronounced, was the certaine iudgement of God. But this teſtifying is giuen to al ages, and remaineth in force, to certifie and aſſure all men, that the worde of the Goſpel, by what man ſoeuer it bee preached, is the verie ſentence of God, publiſhed at the ſoueraigne iudgement ſeate, written in the booke of life, ratified, firme and fixed in heauen. Thus wee ſee that in thoſe places the power of the keies is nothing but the preaching of the Goſpell: and that it is not ſo much a power as a miniſterie, if we haue reſpect to men. For Chriſt hath not giuen this power properly to men, but to his owne worde, whereof he hath made men miniſters.

1. Cor. 12. 28

The power of binding and looſing by diſciplyne committed to the Church. Mat. 18. 17.

2 The other place which we haue ſaid to be concerning the power of binding and looſing, is in the xviii. Chapter of Matthew, where Chriſt ſaith: If any brother heare not the Church, let him be to thee as a heathen man or a publicane. Verily I ſay vnto you: whatſoeuer ye bind vpon earth, ſhalbe bounde alſo in heauen: whatſoeuer yee looſe ſhalbe looſed. This place is not altogether like the firſt, but is a litle otherwiſe to be vnderſtanded. But I doe not ſo make them diuerſe, that they haue not great affinitie together.

This

This first point is like in both, that either of them is a general sentence: that in both there is alway all one power of binding and loosing, namely by the worde of God, all one commaundement, all one promise. But herein they differ, that the first place peculiarly belongeth to preaching, which the ministers of the worde doe execute: this latter place to the discipline of Excommunication, which is committed to the Church. The Churche bindeth, whom she excómunicateth not that she throweth him into perpetuall ruine and desperation, but becausse she condemneth his life and manners, and vnlesse he repent, doth already warne him of his damnation. She loseth whom she receiueth into communion: becausse she doth make him as it were partaker of the vnitie which she hath in Christ Iesus. Therefore that no man should obstinately despise the iudgement of the church, or little regard that he is condemned by the consenting voyces of the faithfull: the Lord testifieth that such iudgement of the faithful is nothing else but a publishing of his own sentence: and that whatsoeuer they do in earth, is confirmed in heauen. For they haue the worde of GOD, whereby they may condemne the peruerse: they haue the worde, whereby they maye receiue the repentaunte into grace. And they can not erre, nor dissent from the iudgement of God: becausse they iudge not but after the law of God, which is not an vncertaine or earthly opinion, but the holy wil of God, & a heauenly oracle. Out of these two places, which I thinke I haue both briefely & familiarly and truly expounded, those furious men without difference as they be caried with their owne giddinesse, goe about to stablish sometime confession, sometime excommunication, sometime iurisdiction, sometime the power to make lawes, sometime pardons. But the first place they aledge to stablish the supremacy of the Sea of Rome: they can so well skill to fit their keyes to all lockes and doores, that a man may say they haue practised smithes craft all their life.

The difference betweene ecclesiastical iudgement & ciuill, and the necessitie as well for the one as the other to continue.

3 For whereas many thinke that those thinges endured but for a time, when the Magistrats were yet strangers from the profession of our religion: they are deceiued in this, ỳ they consider not, howe greate difference and what maner of vnlikenesse there is of the Ecclesiastical & ciuill power. For the Church hath not the power of the sword to punish or restraine, no empire to commande, no prison, no other paines which the Magistrate is wont to lay vpon men. Againe, it tendeth not to this ende, that he that hath sinned should be punished against his will, but should with willing chastisement professe his repentance, Therfore there is a farre diuerse order: becausse neither doth the Church take to it selfe any thing which properly belongeth to the Magistrate, nor the magistrate can execute that which the church doth. This shalbe made plainer by an example. Is any man dronke? In a wel ordered citie prison shalbe his punishment. Hath he committed fornication? He shal haue like, or rather greater punishment. So shall both the lawes, & the magistrat, & outward iudgement be satisfied: But it may be that he shal giue no signification of repentance, but rather murmure & grudge against it. Shal the Church in this case doe nothing? But such can not bee receiued to the Supper, without doing wrong both to Christ and his holy institution. And reason requireth this, that hee which offendeth the Church with an euill example, should with solemne declaration of repentance take away the offence which he hath raised. The reason which they bring that are of contrarie opinion, is too colde. Christ say they committed these doings to the Church, when there was no magistrate to execute them. But it happeneth often times that the magistrate is more negligent, yea sometime peraduenture that himselfe is to be chastised, which happened to the Emperor Theodosius. There may beside this as much be said of the ministerie of the worde. Now therefore after their sentence, let Pastors cesse to blame manifest wicked doinges, let them ceasse to chide, to reproue, to rebuke, for there be Christian magistrates, which ought to correct these things with the law and with the sword. But as the Magistrate ought by punishing, and by restraining with force, to purge the Church of offences: so likewise the minister of the worde for his part ought to helpe the magistrate that there may not so many offend. So ought their workings to be conioyned that the one may bee a help, not a hinderance to the other.

Ecclesiasticall iurisdiction not abolished by ciuill.

4 And truely if a man more neerely wey the words of Christ, hee shall easily perceiue that in these places, is described a stayed state, and a perpetuall order of the Church, not such as endureth but for a time. For it is not meete that we should accuse them to the magistrate, that will not obey our monitions: which yet should be necessarie if the magistrat succeeded into the office of the Church. What is this promise? Shall we say that it is a promise of one or a fewe yeres? Verily verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer yee binde in earth. Moreouer Christ did here institute no newe thing, but followed the custome alway obserued in the auncient Church of his owne nation: whereby he signified that the Church cannot want the spirituall iurisdiction, which had beene from the beginning. And this hath beene confirmed by the consent of all times. For when Emperors and magistrates began to professe Christe, the spirituall iurisdiction was not by & by abolished: but only so ordred, that it should diminish nothing of the ciuile iurisdiction, or be confounded with it. And rightfully. For the magistrate, if he be godly, will not exempt himselfe from the common subiection of the children of God, whereof it is not the last parte to submit himselfe to the Church, iudging by the worde of God: so farre it is off, that he ought to take away that order of iudgement. For what is more honorable (saith Ambrose) for the Emperor, than to be called the sonne of the Church? For a good Emperor is within the Church, not aboue the Church, Therefore they, which to honor the magistrate doe spoile the Church of his power, do not onely with false exposition corrupt the sentéce of Christ, but also doe not slenderly condemne so many holy bishops which haue beene from the time of the Apostles, that they haue by false pretence vsurped the honor & office of the Magistrate,

Epi. 32. ad Valent.

Spirituall powver seuered from the powver of the swworde.

5 But on the other side it is good to see this, what was in olde time the true vse of the iurisdiction of the Church, and howe great abuse is crept in, that we may know what is to be abrogate, and what is to be restored of antiquitie, if we will ouerthrowe the kingdome of Antichrist, and set vp the true kingdome of Christ againe. First this is the marke to be shot at, that offences be preuented, and if any offence be risen vp, that it may bee abolished. In the vse two thinges are to be considered: first, that this spirituall power bee altogether ſeuered from the power of the ſworde: then, that it be not executed by the will of one man, but by a lawfull aſſembly. Both theſe things were obſerued in the purer Church. For the holy byſhops did not exerciſe their power with fines, or impriſonments, or other ciuil puniſhmentes: but they vſed the onely word of the Lord, as they ought to do. For the ſeueareſt reuenge, and as it were the vttermoſt thunderbolt of the church is excommunication, which is not vſed but in neceſſity. But this requireth neither force nor ſtrong hand, but is content with the power of the word of God. Finally, the iuriſdiction of the old Church was nothing elſe but a declaration in practiſe (as I may ſo call it) of that which Paul teacheth concerning the ſpirituall power of Paſtors. Ther is (ſaith he) power giuen to vs, whereby we may throwe downe ſtrong holdes, whereby we may make low all height that lifteth vp it ſelfe againſt the knowledge of God, whereby we may ſubdue all thought, & may lead it captiue into the obedience of Chriſt, and we haue in readineſſe a reuenge againſt all diſobedience. As this is done by the preaching of the doctrine of Chriſt: ſo, leaſt the doctrine ſhould be ſcorned, according to that which is taught ought they to be iudged which profeſſe thẽſelues of the houſhold of faith. But that cannot be done, vnleſſe ther be ioyned with the miniſtery a power to call them that are to be priuately admoniſhed, or to be more ſharply corrected, and alſo a power to exclude them from the communion of the ſupper, which cannot be receiued without prophaning of ſo great a myſtery. Therefore when in another place he ſaith, that it belongeth not to vs to iudge ſtraungers, hee maketh the children ſubiect to the cenſures of the Church, which may chaſtice their faultes, and he ſecretely ſignifieth that there were then iudiciall orders in force from which none of the faithfull was free.

2.Cor.10.4.

1.Cor.5.12.

6 But ſuch authoritie (as we haue declared) was not in the power of one man, to do euery thing according to his own will: but in the power of the aſſembly of the Elders, which was the ſame thing in the Church that a Senate is in a citie. Cyprian, when hee maketh mention by whome it was exerciſed in his time, vſeth to ioine the whole cleargy with the biſhop. But in another place alſo he ſheweth, that the verie cleargy ſo gouerned, that in the meane time the people was not excluded from the hearing of matters. For thus hee writeth: Since the beginning of my byſhoprick I haue determined to do nothing without the counſel of the cleargy and conſent of the people. But this was the common and vſuall manner, that the iuriſdiction of the Churche ſhoulde bee exerciſed by a Senate of elders: of whome (as I haue ſaide) there were two ſortes: For ſome were ordeined to teaching, and otherſome were onely iudges of manners. By little and litle this inſtitution grew out of kinde from the firſt beginning of it: ſo that euen in the time of Ambroſe onely clearkes were iudges in eccleſiaſticall iudgements. Which thing he him ſelfe complaineth of in theſe woods: The old Synagoge (ſaith he) and ſince that time the Church hath had Elders, without whoſe counſell nothing was done. Which by what negligence it is growne out of vſe, I know not, vnleſſe peraduenture by the ſlouthfulneſſe or rather the pride of the teachers, while they alone woulde be thought to bee ſomewhat. Wee ſee howe much the holy man is diſpleaſed, that any thing of the better ſtate is decaied, when Spirituall iuriſdiction executed by the will not of one but of many in the time of Cyprian and Ambroſe.

when notwithstanding they had yet continuing an order that was at the leaſt tolerable. What then would he doe if hee ſawe theſe deformed ruines that ſhewe almoſt no ſigne of the olde building? What bewailing woulde he vſe? Firſt, againſt lawe and right, the byſhop hath claimed to himſelfe alone, that which was giuen to the whole Church. For it is like as if the Conſull, driuing out the Senate, ſhould take the Empire vpon himſelfe alone. But as he is aboue the reſt in honour, ſo in the whole aſſembly is more authoritie than in one man. Therefore it was too wicked a deede, that one man, remouing the common power to himſelfe, hath both opened an entry to tyrannous luſt, and hath taken from the Church that which belonged vnto her, and hath ſuppreſſed and put away the aſſembly ordeined by the Spirite of Chriſt.

The abuſe of ſpiritual courtes.

7 But (as of one euill alway groweth another) Byſhops diſdaining it as a thing vnworthy of their care, haue committed it ouer to other. Hereupon are created Officials to ſerue that roome: I doe not yet ſpeake what kinde of men they be, but onely this I ſay, that they nothing differ from prophane Iudges. And yet they ſtill call it a ſpirituall iuriſdiction, where men contende about nothing but earthly matters. Although there were no more euill, with what face dare they cal a brawling court the iudgement of the church? But there are monitions, there is excommunication. So verily they mocke with God. Doeth a poore man owe a little money? he is cited: if he appeare, he is condemned. When he is condemned, if he doe not ſatisfie it, he is moniſhed: after the ſecond monition they proceede one ſteppe towarde excommunication: if he appeare not, he is moniſhed to come and yeelde himſelfe to iudgement: if hee then make delay, hee is moniſhed, and by and by excommunicate. I beſeech you, what is there any thing like either to the inſtitution of Chriſt, or to the auncient manner, or to an Eccleſiaſticall order? But there is alſo correction of vices. But howe? verily they not onely ſuffer but with ſecrete allowance do after a certain maner cheriſh and confirme adulteries, wantonneſſe, drunkenneſſe & ſuch kind of miſchieuous doings: & ỳ not only in the common people, but alſo in the cleargy themſelues. Of many they call a fewe before them, either that they ſhoulde not ſeeme ſlouthfull in winking at them, or that they may milke out ſome money. I ſpeake not of the pillages, robberies, briberies, & ſacriledges that are gathered ther by, I ſpeake not what manner of men are for the moſte part choſen to this office. This is enough & too much, that when the Romaniſts doe boaſt that their iuriſdiction is ſpirituall, it is eaſy to ſhewe that there is nothing more contrary to the order inſtitute of Chriſte, and that it hath no more likeneſſe to the auncient cuſtome than darkneſſe hath to light.

Spiritual powar abuſed, euil vſurped by the Pope.

8 Although wee haue not ſpoken all things that might be alleaged for this purpoſe, and thoſe things that wee haue ſpoken of are knitte vp in fewe words: yet I truſt that wee haue ſo fought it out, that there is nowe no more cauſe why any man ſhoulde doubt, ỳ the ſpirituall power whereof the Pope with al his kingdom proudly glorieth, is wicked againſt God, & an vniuſt tyranny ouer his people. Vnder the name of ſpirituall power I comprehende both boldneſſe in framing newe doctrines, wherewith they haue turned away the ſily people from the naturall pureneſſe of the worde of God, and the the wicked traditions wherewith they haue snared them, and also the false ecclesiasticall iurisdiction which they execute by Suffrages and Officiales. For if we graunt vnto Christ a kingdome among vs, it is not possible but that al this kinde of dominion must immediatly be ouerthrowen and fall downe. As for the power of the sword which they also giue to themselues, because it is not exercised vpon consciences, it pertaineth not to our present purpose to intreat of it. In which behalfe yet it is also to note, that they be alway like themselues, verily nothing lesse than that which they would be take for, that is to say, Pastors of the Church. Neither doe I blame the peculiar faultes of men, but the commō wickednes of the whole order, yea the verie pestilence of the order: forasmuch as it is thought that the same should be mained, vnlesse it be gloriously set foorth with wealth and proud titles. If we require the authoritie of Christ concerning this matter, it is no doubt but that his mind was to debar the ministers of his word from ciuill dominion and earthly gouernement, when he saide. The kinges of the Gentils beare rule ouer them: but you shall not so. For he signifieth not only that the office of Pastor is distinct from the office of a Prince, but that they be thinges so seuered, that they can not meete together in one man. For whereas Moses did beare both the offices together: First that was done by a rare miracle: againe, it was but for a time till thinges were better sette in order. But when a certaine forme was once prescribed of God, the ciuill gouernment was left vnto him, and he was commaunded to resigne the priesthoode to his brother. And worthiely. For it is aboue nature, that one man should suffice to beare both burdens. And this hath in al ages ben diligently obserued in the church. And there was neuer any of the bishops, so long as the true forme of the Church endured, that once thought of vsurping the power of the sword: so ỹ this was a cōmon prouerbe in the time of Ambrose, that Emperours rather coueted the priesthood, than priestes the empire. For this which he afterward saith, was emprinted in the minds of al men, that palaces pertained to the Emperour, and Churches to the Priest.

9 But since that a way hath ben deuised, whereby bishops might hold the title, honor & riches of their office without burden or care: least they should be left altogether idle, the power of the sworde was giuen them, or rather they did by vsurpation take it vpon themselues. By what colour wyll they defende this shamelesnes? Was this the duetie of Bishops to wrappe themselues with iudiciall hearing of causes, with the gouernementes of cities and prouinces, and through large circuites to meddle in businesse so vnpertaining to them: which haue so much worke and businesse in their owne office, that if they were wholy & continually occupied in it, and were withdrawen with no callinges away from it, yet they were scarcely able to satisfie it? But (such is their waiwardnesse) they sticke not to boast, that by this meane the Church doth florish according to her worthinesse, and that they themselues in the meane time are not too much drawen away from the dueties of their vocation. As touching the first point: if this be a comely ornament of ỹ holy office, that they be aduaunced to such height, that the highest monarches may stande in feare of them: then they haue cause to quarell with Christe, which hath in such sort grieuously pinched their honor. For, at least in their opinion.

Neither honorable for the church, nor if performāce of duetie be respected profitable, for Romish prelates to be both Bishops & kings.

opinion, what could haue ben ſpoken more diſhonorably than thoſe wordes: The kings of the Gentiles and princes beare rule ouer them, but you ſhall not ſo? And yet he laid no harder lawe vpon his ſeruants than he firſt laide and receiued vpon himſelfe. Who (ſaith he) hath made me a iudge or diuider among you? We ſee that he plainely putteth away from himſelfe the office of iudging, which he would not do if it were a thing agreeing with his office: wil not the ſeruaunts ſuffer themſelues to bee brought into that order, whereunto the Lorde hath yeelded himſelfe ſubiect? As for the other point,

Act. 6.2
I woulde to God they coulde ſo proue it in experience as it is eaſie to ſpeake it. But foraſmuch as the Apoſtles thought it not good, to leaue the worde of God and miniſter at tables: thereby, becauſe they will not bee taught, they are conuinced, that it is not all one mans worke to be both a good biſhop & a good prince. For if they (which according to the largeneſſe of the gifties wherwith they were endued, were able to ſatisfie mo and greater cares than any men that haue beene borne ſince them) haue yet confeſſed that they cannot at once apply the miniſterie both of the worde and of tables, but that they ſhoulde faint vnder the burden: howe colde theſe that bee men of no valor in compariſon of the Apoſtles a hundred folde excell the induſtrie of the Apoſtles? Truely, to attempt it was a point of moſte ſhameleſſe and too preſumptuous boldneſſe: yet wee ſee that it hath beene attempted: but with what ſucceſſe, it is euident. For it coulde not otherwiſe come to paſſe, but that forſaking their owne office they ſhoulde remooue into other mens charge.

The ſteps & occaſions whereby romiſh biſhops haue riſen vnto more than conuenient powuer.

10 And is is no doubt but that of ſmall beginning they haue by litle and little growen to ſo great encreaſes. For it was not poſſible that they ſhoulde at the firſt ſtep clime vp ſo high. But ſometime with ſubtletie & croked craftie meanes they priuilie auaunced themſelues, ſo as no man coulde foreſee that it woulde come to paſſe till it was done; ſometime when occaſion ſerued they did by terror and threatnings wring from princes ſome augmentation of their power: ſometime when they ſawe Princes not harde laced to giue, they abuſed their fond and vnaduiſed gentleneſſe. In olde time if anye controuerſie happened, the godly, to eſcape the neceſſitie of going to lawe, committed the arbitrement to the biſhop, becauſe they doubted not his vprightneſſe. With ſuch arbitrementes the olde biſhops were oftentimes encombred, which in deede greatly diſpleaſed them (as Auguſtine in one place teſtifieth) but leaſt the parties ſhould runne to contentious lawing, they did though againſt their willes take that encumbrance vpon them. Theſe men haue of voluntarie arbitrementes, which were altogether differing from the noiſe of iudiciall courtes, made an ordinarie iuriſdiction. In a li le while after when cities and countries were troubled with diuerſe harde diſtreſſes, they reſorted to the protection of biſhopes, to be ſafegarded by their faithfull ſuccour: the biſhops by marueilous ſuttletie, of protectors made themſelues Lordes. Yea, and it cannot be denied that they haue gotten the poſſeſſion of a greate parte by violent ſeditious partakinges. As for the Princes, that willinglie gaue iuriſdiction to biſhops, they were by diuerſe affections moued thereunto. But admitting that their gentlenes had ſome ſhewe of godlineſſe: yet with this their wrongfull liberalitie they did not verie well prouide for the profit of the Church, whose auncient and true discipline they haue so corrupted, yea (to say trueth) haue vtterly abolished. But those bishops ỹ haue abused such goodnes of princes to their owne commoditie, haue by shewing of this one exãple enough & too much testified ỹ they are not bishops. For if they had had any sparcle of an apostolike spirit, they wold without doubt haue answered out of the mouth of Paul: the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual. But they being rauished with blind greedines, haue destroyed both themselues, their successours, & the church.

The shifts which the bishop of Rome vseth to hold the power which by robbery he hath gotten.

11 At length the byshop of Rome not contented with meane Lordships, first layd hand vpon kingdoms, & afterward vpon the very empire. And that he may with some color whatsoeuer it be retain the possessiõ gottẽ by mere robbery, he somtime boasteth that he hath it by the law of God, he somtime pretendeth the gift of Constantine, somtime some other title. First I aunswere with Bernard: Admit that he do by any other reason whatsoeuer, claime this vnto him, yet hee hath it not by Apostolike right. For Peter coulde not giue that which he had not: but he gaue to his successors ỹ which he had, the care of Churches. But when the Lord and master saith, that he is not appointed iudge betweene two, a seruaunt and scholler ought not to think scorn if he be not iudge of all men. But Bernard speaketh of ciuill iudgements. For hee addeth: Therefore your power is in crimes, not in possessions: becausse for those & not for these ye haue receiued the keies of the kingdom of heauen. For which seemeth to thee the greater dignity to forgiue sinnes, or to diuide landes? There is no comparison. These base and earthly things haue Kinges & Princes of the earth their iudges. Why do ye inuade the bounds of other? &c. Againe, Thou art made a superiour: (he speaketh to Pope Eugenius) but whereunto? Not to beare lordship, I think. Therefore how much soeuer we thinke of our selues, let vs remember that there is a ministery layd vpon vs, not a lordship giuen vs. Learne that thou hast need of a weedhooke not of a scepter, that thou maist do the worke of a Prophet. Againe, it is plaine: Lordship is forbidden to the Apostles. Go thou therefore, & presume to vsurp to thy self either being a Lord, an Apostleship: or being an Apostle, a Lordship. And by and by after: the forme of an apostleship is this, Lordship is forbidden them, ministery is bidden them. Whereas these thinges are so spoken of a man, ỹ it is euident to al men that the very truth speaketh them, yea whereas the very thing it selfe is manifest without all wordes: yet the Bishoppe of Rome was not ashamed in the Councel at Orleance to decree that the supreme power of both the swordes belong to him by the lawe of God.

Concil. Arelatense.

12 As for the gift of Constantine, they that be but meanly practised in the histories of those times neede not to be taught how much this is not onely fabulous, but also to be laughed at. But to passe ouer histories, Gregory himselfe is both a sufficient & most full witnesse hereof. For so oft as he speaketh of the Emperour, he calleth him most noble Lord, and himself his vnworthy seruaunt. Againe, in a nother place: But let not our Lord by the earthly power be the sooner angry with the priestes: but with excellent consideration, for his sake whose seruaunts they be, let him so rule ouer them, that he also giue them due reuerence. We see howe in common subiection hee woulde be be accounted as one of the people. For hee there pleadeth not any other mans cause, but his owne. In an other place, I trust in the almighty God, that he will giue a long life to our godly Lordes, and will dispose vs vnder your hande according to his mercie. Neither haue I therefore alleaged these thinges, for that it is my purpose throughly to discusse this question concerning the gift of Constantine: but onely that the Readers shoulde see by the way how childishly the Romanistes do lie, when they go about to challenge an earthly Empire to their bishop. And so much the more fowle is ỹ shamelesnes of Augustine Steuchus, which in such a dispeired cause hath beene so bolde to sell his trauaile and tongue to the bishop of Rome. Valla (as it was not hard for a man learned and of a sharp wit) had strongly confuted that fable. And yet (as a man little exercised in ecclesiastical matters) he had not saide al that might haue made for that purpose. Steuchus burst in, and scattered stinking trifles to oppresse the cleare light. And truely he doth no lesse coldly handle the cause of his master, than if some merry conceited fellowe faining him selfe to do the same, would in deede take Vallas part. But verily it is a worthy cause, for which the Pope shoulde hire such patrones for mony: and no lesse worthy are those hired losels to be deceiued of their hope of gaine, as it happened to Eugubinus.

The time vvhen the Pope began first to ouertop the emperour.

13 But if any man require to knowe the time, since this fained Empire began to rise vp, there are not yet passed fiue hundred yeares, since the Byshops yet remained in subiection of the Princes, neither was the Pope created without authoritie of the Emperour. The Emperour Henry the fourth of that name, a light and rash man, and of no forecast, of great boldnesse and dissolute life, gaue first occasion to Gregory the seuenth to alter this order. For when he had in his court the byshoprickes of all Germany partly to bee sold, and partly layde open for spoile: Hildebrand, which had receiued displeasure at his hand, caught hold of a goodly colour to reuenge himself. But because he seemed to pursue an honest and a godly cause, hee was furthered with ỹ fauour of many. And Henry was otherwise, by reason of his insolent manner of gouerning, hated of the most part of princes. At the length Hildebrand, which called himselfe Gregory the seuenth, as he was a filthy & naughly man, bewrayed the malice of his heart: which was the cause that hee was forsaken of many that had conspired with him. But he thus much preuailed, that his successours might freely without punishment not onely shake off the yoke, but also bring Emperors in subiection to them. Hereunto was added ỹ from thence foorth there were many Emperours liker to Henrie than to Iulius Cæsar: whome it was no hard thing to subdue, while they sate at home careless of all things & slouthful, when they had most neede with vertue & lawfull meanes to represse, the greedines of the bishops. Thus we see with what colour that same godly gift of Constantine is shadowed, whereby the Pope faineth that the empire of the West was deliuered vnto him.

The violent meanes vvhereby the povver of the Pope hath grovvne.

14 In the meane time the Popes ceased not, sometime with fraud, sometime with treason, and sometime with force to inuade other mens dominions: & the very city it selfe, which before was free, within a hundred & thirty yeares, or there about they brought into their subiection, til they grew to the same power which they haue at this day: & for the obtaining or encreasing whereof they haue ſo troubled Chriſtendome by the ſpace of two hundred yeares, (for they beganne before that they tooke to them the dominion of the Citie) that they haue almoſt deſtroyed it. In the olde time when vnder Gregorie the keepers of the goods of the church, did take poſſeſſion of the lands which they reckened to belong to the Church, and after the maner of ſeaſing to the vſe of the Prince did ſet titles vpon them for token of claime, Gregorie aſſembling a councell of biſhops, inueying ſore againſt that prophane maner, asked whether they did not iudge that Clerke accurſed which did of his owne will by writing of any title attempt to enter vpon any poſſeſſion. They all pronounced, accurſed If to claime a peece of ground by writing of a title be in a Clarke an offence worthy of accurſing: when whole two hundred yeres together Popes do practiſe nothing elſe but battels, ſhedding of blood, deſtructions of armies, ſackinges of ſome cities, racing of other, ouerthrowes of nations, waſtings of kingdomes, onely that they might catch holde of other mens poſſeſſions: what curſings can be enough to puniſh ſuch examples? Truely it is very plaine that they ſeeke nothing leſſe than the glorie of Chriſt. For if they of their owne will doe wholy reſigne all the ſecular power that they haue, therein is no danger to the glory of God, no danger to ſound doctrine, no danger to the ſafetie of the Church: but they are caried blind and headlong with only greedineſſe of dominion: becauſe they thinke nothing ſafe, vnleſſe they may beare rule with rigorouſneſſe (as the Propher ſaith) and with power. Reg. lib. 4. cap. 88. Ezech. 34. 4.

15 To iuriſdiction is annexed immunitie, which the Romiſh Cleargie tooke to themſelues. For they thinke it againſt their dignitie, if they anſwere in perſonal cauſes before a temporall iudge: and therein they thinke both the libertie and dignitie of the Church to conſiſt, if they be exempt from cõmon iudgements and lawes. But the old biſhops, which otherwiſe were moſt rigorous in defending the right of the Church, iudged themſelues and their order to bee nothing hurt, if they were ſubiect to them. And the godlie Emperours, without gainſaying of any man, did alway call Clarkes to their iudgement ſeats ſo oft as need required. For thus ſaith Conſtantine in his Epiſtle to the Nicomedians: If any of the biſhoppes ſhall vndiſcreetely diſorder himſelfe, his boldnes ſhall be reſtrained by the execution of the miniſter of God, that is by my execution. And Valentinian ſaith: good biſhoppes doe not ſpeake againſt the power of the Emperour, but doe ſyncerely both keepe the commaundements of God the great king, and alſo obey our lawes. At that time all men were perſwaded of this without controuerſie. But Eccleſiaſtical cauſes were referred to the iudgement of the Biſhop As if any Clerke had offẽded nothing againſt the lawes, but only was accuſed by ẏ Canons: he was not cited to the cõmon iudgemẽt ſeat, but in ẏ cauſe had ẏ biſhop for his iudge. Likewiſe if there were a queſtiõ of Faith in controuerſie, or ſuch a matter as properly pertained to the Church, the iudgement thereof was committed to the Church. So is ẏ to be vnderſtanded, which Ambroſe writeth to Valentinian: Your father of honourable memorie, not onely aunſwered in worde, but alſo decreed by lawes, that in a cauſe of Faith hee ought to bee iudge that is neither vnfit in office nor vnlike in right. Againe: If we haue regarde to the Scriptures or olde examples, who is there that can denie that in a cause of Faith, in a cause (I say) of Faith, bishops are wont to iudge of Christian Emperors, and not Emperors of bishops? Againe I would haue come, O Emperour, to your consistorie, if either the bishops or the people would haue suffred me to goe: saying, that the cause of Faith ought to be debated in the Church before the people. He affirmeth verily that a spirituall cause, that is to say the cause of religion, ought not to be drawen into y temporall court where prophane causes are pleaded. Worthily do all men praise his constancie in this behalfe. And yet in a good cause hee proceedeth but thus farre, that if it come to violence and strong hand, he saith that he will giue place. Willingly (saith he) I will not forsake the place committed vnto me: but when I am enforced, I knowe not howe to resist: for our armour are prayers and teares. Let vs note the singular modestie & wisdom of the holy man, ioyned with stoutnesse of courage and boldnesse. Iustina the Emperours mother, because shee could not drawe him to the Arrians side, practised to driue him from the gouernment of the Church. And so should it haue come to passe, if hee had come when hee was called to the palace to pleade his cause. Therefore hee denieth the Emperour to bee a competent iudge of so great a controuersie. Which manner of doing both the necessitie of that time, and the continual nature of the matter required. For hee iudged that he ought rather to die, than that such an example should by his consent bee giuen to posteritie: & yet if violence be offred, he thinketh not of resistance. For he denieth it to be bishoplike, to defend the faith & right of the church with armes. But in other causes he sheweth himselfe readie to doe whatsoeuer the Emperour shall commaund him. If hee demaund tribute, (saith he) wee denie it not: the lands of the Church do pay tribute. If he aske landes, he hath power to claime them, none of vs resisteth. After the same manner also speaketh Gregorie. I am not ignorant (saith he) of the mind of our most noble soueraigne Lorde, that hee vseth not to intermeddle in causes pertaining to Priestes, least hee shoulde in any thing be burdened with our sinnes. He doth not generally exclude the Emperour from iudging of Priestes: but he saith that there be certaine causes, which he ought to leaue to the iudgement of the Church.

The immunitie of Romish clergie men from secular courts in the time of Gregorie not stoode vpon.

16 And by this verie exception the holy men sought nothing else, but that Princes lesse zealous of religion shoulde not with tyrannous violence and wilfulnesse interrupt the Church in doing her office. For neither did they disallowe, if princes sometime did vse their authoritie in Ecclesiasticall matters, so that it were done to preserue the order of the Church, not to trouble it, to stablish discipline, not to dissolue it. For sith the Church hath not the power of compelling, nor ought to require it (I speake of ciuil constraining:) it is the office of Godly Kings and Princes to maintaine religion with lawes, proclamations, and iudiciall proceedings. After this manner, when the Emperour Maurice had commaunded certaine bishops that they shoulde receiue their fellowe Bishops that were their neighbours and driuen out by the barbarous nations: Gregorie confirmeth that commaundement, and exhorteth them to obey it. And when hee himselfe is admonished by the same Emperour to come to attonement with Iohn the Bishop of Constantinople, hee doeth in deede render a reason why hee ought not to be blamed: yet he doth not boast of immunitie from the secular court, but rather promiseth that he wil be obedient, so farre as his conscience will giue him leaue: & therewithall he saith this, that Maurice did as became a godlie Prince, when he gaue such commandements to the Priests. The xii. Chapter.

Of the discipline of the Church, whereof the chiefe vse is in the censures and excommunication.

The discipline of the Church, the entreating whereof we haue differred vnto this place, is briefely to be declared, that wee may at length passe ouer to the rest. But that same for the most parte hangeth vpon the power of the keies and spirituall iurisdiction. That this may bee the more easily vnderstood, let vs diuide the Church into two principall degrees, that is to say the Cleargy, and the people. Clearkes I call by the vsuall name those that execute publike ministerie in the Church. First wee will speake of common discipline, to which all ought to bee subiect: then we wil come to the Cleargy, which beside that common discipline, haue a seuerall discipline by themselues. But because many for hatred of discipline do abhorre the very name thereof, let them heare this: If no fellowship, yea no house though it haue but a smal household, cã be kept in right state without discipline, ỹ same is much more necessary in the church, whose state ought to be most orderly of all. Therefore as the doctrine of Christ which bringeth saluation is the soule of the Church, so discipline is in steede of sinewes therein: whereby it is brought to passe, that the members of the bodie hang together euery one in his fit place. Wherefore whosoeuer do either desire to haue discipline taken away, or hinder the restoring therof, whether they do it of set purpose or by vnaduisednes, verily they seeke the extreeme dissipation of the Church. For what shal betide, if what is lustfull be lawfull to euery man? But so would it be, if there were not with the preaching of doctrine adioyned priuate admonishments, corrections, & such other helpes which susteine doctrine and suffer it not to be idle: discipline therfore is as it were a bridle wherwith they may be holden backe & tamed which coltishly resist against Christ: or as it were a pricke, wherwith they ỹ are not willing enough may be stirred vp: and somtime, as a fatherly rod, wherewith they which haue more grieuously fallen may be chastised mercifully and according to the mildnesse of the spirit of Christ. Sith therefore we do nowe see at hande certaine beginninges of a horrible wastnesse in the Church, because there is no care nor order to keep the people in awe, very necessitie crieth out that there is neede of remedy. But this is the onely remedy, which both Christ hath commanded, & hath alway bin vsed among the godlie.

The necessitie of discipline in the Church.

The first foundation of discipline is, that priuate monitions shoulde haue place: that is to say, that if any man of his owne accorde doe not his duety, if he behaue himselfe licentiously, or liue not honestly, or haue committed any thing worthy of blame, he shoulde suffer himselfe to be admonished: and that euery man should study to admonish his brother when occasion shall require. But specially let the Pastors and Priestes bee watchfull to doe do this, whose office is not onely to preach to the people, but in euery house to admonish & exhort if at any time they do not sufficiently preuaile by general doctrine: as Paul teacheth, when he rehearseth that he taught priuatly & in houses, and protesteth that he is clean from the bloud of all men, because he hath not ceassed with teares day & night to admonish euery one. For doctrine doth then obtain force & authority, whē the minister not only doth declare to all together what their dutie is to Christ, but also hath power & order to require the keping therof of thē whō he marketh to be either not obedient to doctrine, or slothful. If any man do either stubbornly refuse, or in going forward in his faultes, do despise such admonishmentes: when he hath bin the secōd time admonished with witnesses called to it, Christ cō. mandeth them to be called to the iudgement of the church, which is the assembly of Elders: and ỹ there they should be more grieuously admonished as it were by publike authoritie, that if he reuerēce the Church he may submit himselfe & obey. But if he be not hereby subdued, but do continue in his wickednes, then he commandeth him, as a despiser of the church, to be put away from the felowship of the faithfull.

Act. 20. 20. & 26.

Mat. 18. 15. & 17

The difference of dealing in faultes secretly & in faults openly committed.

3 But becausse he speaketh here onely of secret faults, we must make this diuision: that some sinnes be priuate, and some publike or openly manifest. Of the first sort Christ saith to euerie priuate man, Reproue him betweene thee and him alone. Of manifest sins Paul saith to Timothee. Reproue him before all men, that the rest may haue feare. For Christ had saide before, If thy brother haue offended against thee. Which words (against thee) vnlesse thou wilt be contentious, thou canst not otherwise vnderstand than vnder thine owne secret knowledge, so that there bee no moe priuie to it. But the same thing which the Apostle teacheth Timothee concerning the rebuking of them openly that sinne openly, he himselfe followed in Peter. For when Peter sinned euen to publike offence, hee did not admonishe him apart by himselfe, but brought him fourth into the sight of the Church. Therefore this shalbe the right order of doing, if in secrete faultes wee goe forwarde according to those degrees that Christ hath set: but in manifest faults, we immediately proceede to the Churches solemne rebuking, if the offence be publike.

Mat. 18 15
1. Tim. 5. 22.

Gal. 2. 14.

Not one and the same proceeding against meane & haynous offenders.

4 Let this also be an other distinction: that of sinnes some be defaults, other some be wicked doinges, or hainous offences. To the correcting of this later sort, not only admonishment or rebuking is to be vsed, but also a seuere remedy: as Paul sheweth which not only chastised with words the Corinthian that had committed incest, but also punished him with excommunication, so soone as he was certified of his wicked deede. Now therefore we beginne better to see howe the spirituall iurisdiction of the Churche: which punisheth sinnes according to the word of the Lord, is the best maintenāce of health, and foundation of order, & bonde of vnitie. Therefore when the Church doth banish out of her company manifest adulterers, whoremōgers, theeues, robbers, seditious persons, periured men, false witnesses, and suche other, againe, obstinate men, which being orderly admonished euen of small faultes do scorne God and his iudgement, she taketh nothing vpon her self without reason, but executeth the iurisdiction giuen her of the Lorde.

Moreouer, that none ſhould deſpiſe ſuch iudgement of the Church, or lightly regard that he is condemned by the conſenting voices of the faithfull: the Lorde hath teſtified, that the ſame is nothing elſe but a pronouncing of his owne ſentence, and that whatſoeuer they doe in earth is confirmed in heauen For they haue the worde of the Lord, wherby they may condemne the froward: they haue the worde, whereby they may receiue the repentant into fauour, They I ſay that truſt that without this bonde of diſcipline Churches may long ſtande, are deceiued in opinion: vnleſſe perhaps wee may want that helpe which the Lorde foreſawe that it ſhould be neceſſarie for vs. And truely how great is the neceſſitie thereof, ſhalbe better perceiued by the manifold vſe of it. Mat. 16. 19. and 18. 18 Ioh. 20. 23

5 There bee three endes which the Church hath reſpect vnto in ſuch corrections and excommunication. The firſt is, that they ſhoulde not, to the diſhonour of God, be named among Chriſtians, that leade a filthie and ſinfull life, as though his holy Church were a conſpiracie of naughtie and wicked men. For ſith the Church is the body of Chriſt, it cannot bee defiled with ſuch filthie & rotten members, but that ſome ſhame muſt come to the heade. Therefore that there ſhould not be any ſuch thing in the Church, whereby his holy name may be ſpotted with any reproch, they are to be driuen out of her houſhold, by whoſe diſhoneſtie any ſlaunder might redounde to the name of Chriſtians. And herein alſo is conſideration to be had of the Supper of the Lord, ỹ it be not profaned with giuing it to all without choiſe. For it is moſt true, that hee to whome the diſtribution of it is committed, if he wittingly and willingly admit an vnworthy man whom he might lawfully put backe, is as guiltie of Sacrilege, as if he did giue abroad the Lordes body to dogges. Wherefore Chryſoſtome grieuouſly inueigheth againſt the prieſts, which while they feare the power of great men, dare debarre no man. The bloud (ſaith he) ſhalbe required at your handes. If yee feare man, hee ſhall laugh you to ſcorne: but if yee feare God, ye ſhalbee reuerenced alſo among men. Let vs not feare maces, nor purple, nor crownes: we haue here a greater power. I verily will rather deliuer mine owne bodie to death, and ſuffer my bloud to be ſhed, than I wil be made partaker of this defiling. Therfore leaſt this moſt holy myſterie be ſpotted with ſlander, in the diſtributing thereof choiſe is greatly requiſite: which yet cannot bee had but by the iuriſdiction of the church. The ſecond end is, leaſt (as it is wont to come to paſſe) with the continuall company of the euill, the good ſhould be corrupted. For (ſuch is our readie inclinatiõ to go out of the way) there is nothing eaſier than for vs to be led by euill examples from the right courſe of life. This vſe the Apoſtle touched, when he commanded the Corinthians to put the inceſtuous man out of their companie. A litle leauen (ſaith he) corrupteth the whole lumpe of doa. And he foreſawe herein ſo great danger, that hee forbad him euen from all fellowſhip. If any brother (ſaith he) among you bee named either a whoremonger, or a couetous man, or a worſhipper of Idols, or a dronkard, or an euill ſpeaker, with ſuch a one I graunt you not leaue ſo much as to eate. The third end is, that they themſelues confounded with ſhame may begin to repent of their filthineſſe. So it is profitable for them alſo to haue their owne wickednesſe chaſtiſed, that with feeling of the rodde they may be awaked, which otherwise by tender bearing with them woulde haue become more obstinate. The same thing doth the Apostle meane whē he saith thus: If any doe not obey our doctrine, marke him, and keepe no company with him, that he may be ashamed. Againe in another place, when hee writeth that he hath deliuered the Corinthian to Satan, that his spirite might be saued in the day of the Lorde: that is (as I expound it) that he went into a damnation for a time, that he might be saued for euer. But he therefore saith that he deliuereth him to Satan, because the diuel is out of the church as Christ is in the Church. For whereas some do referre it to a certaine vexing of the flesh, I thinke that to be verie vncertaine.

1. Cor. 5. 5 Aug. de ver. apost. ho. 58.

The manner of ecclesiastical correction.

6 When these endes bee set foorth, nowe it remaineth to see howe the Church executeth this part of discipline which consisteth in iurisdiction. First let vs keepe the diuision aboue set, that of sinnes some be publike, and other some be priuate or more secrete. Publike are those that haue not only one or two witnesses, but are committed openly & with the offence of the whole Church. Secrete I call those, not which are altogether hidden from men, as are the sinnes of hypocrites, for those come not into the iudgement of the Church, but those of the meane kind which are not without witnesses, & yet are not publike. The first kind requireth not those degrees which Christ rehearseth: but when any such thing appeareth, the Church ought to do her duetie in calling the sinner & correcting him according to the proportion of the offence. In the second kinde according to the rule of Christ, they come not to the Church till there be also obstinacie added. When it is once come to knowledge, then is that other diuision to be noted betweene wicked doings & defaultes. For in lighter sinnes there is not to be vsed so great seueritie, but chastisement of wordes sufficeth, and the same gentle & fatherly, which may not harden nor confound the sinner, but bring him home to himselfe, that he may more reioyce than be sorie that hee was corrected. But it is meete that hainous offences bee chastised with sharper remedy. For it is not enough, if he that by doing a wicked deede of euil example hath greeuously offended the Church, should be chastised onely with wordes, but he ought for a time to be depriued of the cōmunion of the supper, til he haue giuen assurance of his repentance. For against the Corinthian Paul vseth not only rebuking of words, but driueth him out of ỹ church, & blameth the Corinthians that it had so long borne him. The old & better Church kept this order, when right ful gouernment florished. For if any man had done any wicked deede wherupon was growen offence, first he was cōmaunded to abstaine from partaking of the holy supper, then both to humble himselfe before God, and to testifie his repentance before the Church. There were also certain solemne vsages, which were enioyned to them that had fallen, to be tokens of their repentance. When they had so done, that the church was satisfied, then by laying on of hands hee was receiued into fauour. Which receiuing is oftētimes called of Cyprian peace, who also briefly describeth this vsage. They do penance (saith he) in a certaine full time: then they come to confession, & by the laying on of hands of the bishop & ỹ Cleargie they receiue power to come to the communion. Howbeit the Bishop and his cleargie had so the ruling of reconciliation, that they did therwithwithall require the consent of the people: as he sheweth in another place.

1. Cor. 5. 5.

7 From this discipline there was no man exempted, that euen the princes together with the common people did submit themselues to beare it. And rightfully, sith it was euident that it was the discipline of Christ, to whō it is meete that al sceptres and crownes of kinges bee submitted. So when Theodosius was depriued by Ambrose of power to come to the communion because of the slaughter committed at Thessalonica, he threw downe all the royall ornament wherewith he was clothed: hee openly in the Church bewailed his sinne, which had crept vpon him by fraud of other men: he craued pardon with groning and teares. For great kings ought not to think this to be any dishonor to them, if they humbly throw downe themselues before Christ the king of kings, neither ought it to displease them ỹ they be iudged by the Church. For sith in their court they heare nothing elle but mere flatteries, it is more than necessary for them to be rebuked of the Lorde by the mouth of the priestes. But rather they ought to wish, that the priests should not spare them, that the Lorde may spare them. In this place I omit to speak by whom this iurisdiction is to bee exercised, because it is spoken of in another place. This onely I adde that that is the lawfull manner of proceeding in excommunicating a man which Paul sheweth: if the Elders do it not alone by themselues, but with the Church knowing & allowing it: that is, in such sort that the multitude of the people may not gouerne the doing, but may mark it as a witnes & a keper ỹ nothing should be done of a few by wilful affection. But the whole maner of doing, beside the calling vppon the name of God, ought to haue such grauity, as may reseble ỹ presēce of Christ, ỹ it may be vndouted that he there sitteth for ruler of his own iudgement.

All men subiect vnto Churchdiscipline, vvhich to execute belongeth vnto some, but vnto all to see executed not as doers but as beholders of that vvhich is done. Ambros. in lib. 1. Epi. 3. in orat. habita in fun. Theodosii.

8 But this ought not to be passed ouer, that such seuerity becommeth the Church as is ioyned with the spirite of mildnes. For we must alway diligently beware (as Paul teacheth) that he which is punished be not swallowed vp of sorrow: for so should of a remedy be made a destruction. But out of the end may better be gathered a rule of moderation. For whereas this is required in excommunication that the sinner should be brought to repentance, and euil examples taken away, least either the name of Christ should be euil spoken of, or other men be prouoked to folow them: if we shal haue an eie to these things, we shalbe able easily to iudge how farre seueritie ought to proceede & where it ought to end. Therefore when the sinner giueth a testimonie of his repentance, & doth by his testimony, as much as in him lieth, blot out the offence: he is not to be enforced any further: but if he bee enforced, rigorousnes doth then exceed measure. In which behalfe the immeasurable seueritie of the old fathers cannot be excused, which both disagreed frō the prescribed order of the Lord, & also was maruellously dangerous. For when they charged a sinner with solemne penance, & depriuation from the holy communion sometime for seuen yeres, somtime foure yeres, sometime three yeres, sometime for their whole life: what other thing could follow thereof but either great hypocrisie or most great desperatiō? Likewise wheras no mā ỹ had fallen the second time was admitted to seconde penance but was cast out of the Church euen to the ende of his life: that was neither profitable nor agreing to reason. Therfore whosoeuer shal weigh the matter with soūd

The lenity and gentlenes that should be vsed in execution of Church discipline. 2. Cor. 2. 7.

iudgement, shall herein perceiue want of their discretion. Howbeit I do here rather disallow the publike manner, than accuse all them that vsed it, whereas it is certaine that many of them misliked it: but they did therefore suffer it, because they could not amende it. Truely, Cyprian declareth, howe much beside his owne will he was so rigorous. Our patience (saith he) & easinesse and gentlenes is readie to them that come. I wishe all to returne into the Church: I wish all our fellowsoldiars to be enclosed within the tentes of Christ & in the houses of God the father, I forgiue al things, I dissemble many things, for zeale & desire to gather brotherhood together, I examine not with ful iudgement those things that are committed against God, in pardoning defaults more than I ought, I am my self almost in default, I do with readie and ful loue embrace them that returne with repentance, confessing their sinnes with humble and plaine satisfaction. Chrysostome is somewhat harder, and yet he saith thus: If God be so kind, why will his Priest seeme so rigorous? Moreouer we know what gentlenesse Augustine vsed towarde the Donatistes, in so much that he sticked not to receiue into bishoprike those that had returned from schisme, euen immediatly after their repentance. But because a contrarie order had growē in force, they were compelled to leaue their owne iudgement to follow it.

Men seuered frō the Church by excommunication not rashly to bee condemned in the iudgements of mē.

9 But as this mildnes is required in the whole body of the church, that it should punish them that are fallen, mercifully & not to the extremitie of rigor, but rather according to the precept of Paul, should confirme charity toward them: so euery priuate man for himselfe ought to temper himselfe to this mercifulnes & gentlenes. Therefore it is not our part to wipe out of the number of the elect such as are driuen out of the Church, or to despaire of them as though they were already lost. We may indeed iudge them straungers from the Church, & therefore strangers from Christ: but that is onely during the time ẏ they abide in diuorce. But if then also they shew a greater resemblance of stubbornes than of gentlenes, yet let vs cōmit them to the iudgement of the Lord, hoping better of them in time to come than we see in time present, & let vs not therefore ceasse to pray to God for them, & (to comprehend all in one worde) let vs not condemne to death the person it selfe, which is in the hand & iudgment of God alone, but let vs rather weigh by the law of the Lord of what sort euery mans works be. Which rule while we follow, wee rather stande to the iudgement of God than pronounce our owne. Let vs not take to our selues more libertie in iudging, vnlesse wee will binde the power of God within boundes, & appoint a lawe to his mercie, at whose pleasure whē he thinketh it good, very euil men are turned into very good, strangers are graffed & foreins are chosē into the church. And this the Lord doth, thereby to mocke out the opinion of men, & rebate their rashnes: which if it be not restrained, presumeth to take to it selfe power of iudging more than it ought.

The difference betweene excommunicating and accursing.

10 For whereas Christ promiseth that that shalbe bounde in heauen, which they that be his shal bind in earth, he limiteth the power of binding, to the Censure of the church: by which they ẏ are excommunicate, are not thrown into euerlasting ruine & damnation: but hearing their liues & maners to be condemned, they are also certified of their owne euerlasting condem-

demnation, vnleſſe they repent . For excommunication herein differeth from accurſing, that accurſing taking away all pardon doth condemne a mã and adiudge him to eternal deſtruction : excommunication rather reuengeth and puniſheth maners. And though the ſame doe alſo puniſh the man, yet it doth ſo puniſh him, that in forewarning him of his damnation to come, it doeth call him backe to ſaluation. If that be obtained, reconciliation & reſtoring to the communion is readie. But accurſing is either very ſeldome or neuer in vſe. Therefore, although eccleſiaſticall diſcipline , permitteth not to liue familiarly , or to haue friendly conuerſation with them that bee excommunicate : yet wee ought to endeuour by ſuch meanes as we may, that returning to amendment , they may returne to the felowſhip and vnitie of the Church: as the Apoſtle alſo teacheth. Do not (ſaith he) thinke them as enemies, but correct them as brethren . Vnleſſe this gentleneſſe be kept as well priuately as in common, there is danger leſt from diſcipline we foorthwith fall to butcherie. 2. Theſſ. 3. 15

11 This alſo is principally required to the moderation of diſcipline, which Auguſtine entreateth of in diſputing againſt the Donatiſtes: that neyther priuate men , if they ſee faultes not diligently enough corrected by the Councel of elders, ſhould therefore by and by departe from the Church: nor the Paſtors themſelues, if they cannot according to their hearts deſire purge al things that neede amendment, ſhould therefore throw away the miniſterie, or with vnwonted rigorouſnes trouble the whole Church. For it is moſt true which he writeth: that he is free & diſcharged from curſe, whoſoeuer he be that either by rebuking amendeth what he can: or what he cãnot amend, excludeth , ſauing the bond of peace: or what he cannot exclude, ſauing the bond of peace, he doth diſalow with equitie, and beare with ſtedfaſtnes. Hee rendreth a reaſon thereof in another place: becauſe all godlye order & maner of eccleſiaſticall diſcipline ought alway to haue reſpect vnto the vnitie of the Spirite in the bond of peace: which the Apoſtle commaundeth to bee kept by our bearing one with another, and when it is not kept, the medicine of puniſhment beginneth to be not only ſuperfluous , but alſo hurtfull, and therfore ceaſſeth to be a medicine. He that (ſaith he) doth diligently thinke vpon theſe things doth neither in preſeruing of vnitie neglect the ſeueritie of diſcipline, nor doth with immeaſurableneſſe of correction breake ẏ bonde of felowſhip . He graunteth in deede that not onely the Paſtours ought to trauaile to this point, that there may remaine no fault in the Church , but alſo that euerie man ought to his power to endeuour thereunto: & he plainly declareth that he which neglecteth to moniſh, rebuke, & correct the euil, although he do not fauour them, nor ſinne with them, yet is giltie before the Lord. But if he be in ſuch degree, that he may alſo ſeuer them from the partaking of ſacraments, and doth it not, now he ſinneth not by an others euil, but by his own. Only he willeth it to be done, with vſing of diſcretion, which the Lord alſo requireth, leaſt while the tãres be in rooting out, the corne be hurt. Hereupon he gathereth out of Cyprian, Let a man therefore mercifully correct what he can: & what he cannot, let him patiently ſuffer, & with loue grone and lament it.

they saw faults in the Churches which the bishops did in deede rebuke with words, but not punish with excommunication, (because they thought that they could this way nothing preuaile) did sharply inuey against the bishops as betrayers of discipline, and did with an vngodly schisme diuide themselues from the flocke of Christ As the Anabaptistes doe at this day, which when they acknowledge no congregation to be of Christ, vnlesse it doe in euerie point shine with angelike perfection, do vnder pretence of their zeale ouerthrowe all edification. Such (saith Augustine) not for hatred of other mens wickednes, but for desire to maintaine their owne contentions, do couet either wholly to draw away, or at least to diuide the weake people snared with the boasting of their name: they swelling with pride, mad with stubbornnes, traiterous with slaunders, troublesome with seditions, least it should openly appeare that they want the light of trueth, do pretend a shadow of rigorous seueritie: & those things which in scripture are commanded to be done with moderate healing for correcting of the faultes of brethren, preseruing the syncerenes of loue, and keeping the vnitie of peace, they abuse to sacriledge of schisme & occasion of cutting off. So doth Satan transforme himselfe into an angell of light, when by occasion as it were of iust seueritie he perswadeth vnmercifull crueltie, coueting nothing else but to corrupt & break the bond of peace & vnitie: which bond remaining fast among Christians, al his forces are made weake to hurt, his traps of treasons are broken, & his councels of ouerthrowing do vanish away.

Howve to deale in faultes so common that they cannot vvith the peace of the church be corrected.

13 This one thing he chiefely commendeth, that if the infection of sin haue entred into the whole multitude, then the seuere mercy of liuelye discipline is necessarie. For (saith he) the deuises of separation are vaine, and hurtful & ful of sacridege, because they are vngodly & proud, & do more trouble the weake good ones, than they amend the stout euil ones. And ỹ which he there teacheth other, he himselfe also faithfully folowed. For writing to Aurelius bishop of Carthage, he complaineth that drunkennes which is so sore condemned in scriptures, doth range vnpunished in Affrica: & hee aduiseth him, that assembling a Councell of bishops he shoulde prouide remedie for it. He addeth by and by after, These things (as I thinke) are taken away not roughly, not hardly, not after an imperious maner, but more by teaching than by commaunding, more by admonishing than by threatning. For so must we deale with a multitude of sinners, but seueritie is to be exercised vpō the sinnes of few. Yet he doth not meane that Bishops shoulde therefore winke or hold their peace at publike faultes, because they cannot seuerely punish them: as he himselfe afterward expoundeth it: But he willeth that the measure of correction be so tempered, that so farre as may be, it may rather bring health than destruction to the body. And therefore at length he concludeth thus: Wherefore both this commaundement of the Apostle is in no wise to be neglected, to seuer the euil, when it may be done without peril of breaking of peace: & this is also to be kept, ỹ bearing one with another, wee should endeuour to preserue vnitie of the Spirit, in the bond of peace.

Lib. 3. cont. parm. cap. 2

1. Cor. 5. 7
Ephe. 4. 2.

The vse of exhortation to publique exercises of humilitie in the church.

14 The part that remaineth of discipline, which properlie is not contained in the power of keies, standeth in this, ỹ according to the necessitie of times the pastors should exhort the people either to fasting, or to common supplications, or to other exercises of humility, repentance, & faith, of which things there is neither time, nor measure, nor forme prescribed by the word of God, but is left in the iudgement of the church. The obseruing of this part also, as it is profitable, so hath alway bin vsed of the old church euen from ỹ verie Apostles. Howbeit the Apostles themselues were not the first authors of them, but they tooke example out of the law & the Prophets. For we see that there so oft as any weightie businesse happened, the people were called together, common prayers enioyned, & fasting commanded. Therefore the Apostles followed that which both was not new to the people of God, & they foresawe that it should be profitable. Likewise is to be thought of other exercises, wherewith the people may either be stirred vp to their duetie, or be kept in awe and obedience. There are examples eche where in holy histories, which we neede not to gather togither. In summe this is to be holdē that so oft as there happeneth any controuersie of religion, which must bee determined either by a Synode or by ecclesiastical iudgement, so oft as they be about chooſing of a minister, finally, so oft as any hard matter or of great importance is in doing: againe, when there appeare tokens of the wrath of God, as pestilence, & warre, & famine: this is a holy ordinance & profitable for all ages, that the Pastors should exhort the people to common fasting, & to extraordinarie prayes. If any man doe not allowe the testimonies which may be alleaged out of the old testament, as though they were not meete for the Christian Church, it is certaine that the Apostles also did the same. Howbeit of praiers I thinke there will scarcely any be found that wil mooue any question. Therefore let vs say somewhat of fasting: becausē many when they vnderstand not what profit it hath, do iudge it not so necessarie: some also do vtterly refuse it as superfluous: and when the vse of it is not wel knowen, it is easie to slide into superstition.

15 Holy & true fasting hath three endes. For wee vse it, either to make leane and subdue the flesh, that it should not waxe wanton, or that we may be better disposed to prayers & holy meditations, or that it should be a testimonie of our humbling before God, when we be willing to confesse our giltines before him. The first end hath not so often place in common fasting, becausē all men haue not like estate of body, nor like health: therefore it rather agreeth with priuate fasting. The second end is common to both, for as well the whole Church as euery one of the faithfull hath neede of such preparation to prayer. The third also is likewise common. For it shall sometime befall that God shal strike some nation with warre, or pestilence, or ẅ some calamitie. In such a common scourge the whole people must accuse themselues, and openly confesse their owne giltinesse. But if the hand of the Lord do strike any priuate man, he ought to do the same, either alone, or with his own family. That standeth chiefely in the affection of the mind. But when the minde is affected as it ought to be, it is scarcely possible, but that it will breake out into outward testifying: and then chiefely if it turne to common edifying, that altogither in openly confessing their sinne should yelde praise of righteousnesse to God, and euery one mutually exhort other with their example.

A triple vse of fasting.

Fasting ioyned with prayer by ye Antiochians, Anna, Nehemias, Paul.

16 Wherefore fasting, as it is a signe of humbling, hath more often vs-

publikely, than among priuate men, howsoeuer it be common, as is already saide. Therefore as touching the discipline whereof we now entreate: so oft as we must make supplication to God for any great matter, it were expedient to commaunde fasting together with prayer. So when the Antiochians laide handes vpon Paul & Barnabas, that they might the better commende to God their ministery which was of so great importãce, they ioined fasting with prayer: So both they afterward, when they made ministers ouer churches, were wont to pray with fasting. In this kinde of fasting they had regard to none other thing, but that they might bee made fresher and more vncombered to pray. Verily this we finde by experience, that when the bellie is full, the minde is not so lifted vp to God, that it can both with heartie and feruent affection be carried to prayer, and continue in it. So is that to be vnderstoode which Luke rehearseth of Anne, that shee serued the Lorde in fastinges and prayers. For hee doth not set the worshipping of God in fasting: but signifieth that the holy woman did after that manner exercise her selfe to continuaunce of prayer. Such was the fasting of Nehemias when he did with earnestly bent zeale pray to God for the deliuerance of his people. For this cause Paul saith that the faithfull do well, if they abstaine for a time from their wedding bed, that they may the more freely apply prayer and fasting. Where ioining fasting to prayer in steede of a helpe, he putteth vs in minde that it is of no value but so farre as it is referred to this ende. Againe, when in the same place hee giueth a rule to married folkes, that they shoulde mutually render good will one to another, it is plaine that hee doeth not speake of daily praiers, but of such prayers as require a more earnest intentiuenesse.

Publike fasting in the publike calamities of the Church.

17 Againe, if either pestilence, or famine, or warre beginne to range abroad, or if any calamitie otherwise seem to hang ouer any countrey & people: then also it is the duty of Pastors to exhort the Church to fasting, ỳ they may humbly beseech the Lord to turne away his wrath. For he giueth warning that he is prepared and in a maner armed to reuenge, when hee maketh any danger to appeare. Therefore as accused men in time past with long hanging beard, with vncombed haire, with blacke array, were wont humbly to abase themselues, to procure the mercie of the iudge: so when we are accused before the indgement seate of God, it behoueth both for his glorie, & for common edification, and also is profitable and healthfull for vs, that we should in piteous array craue to escape his seueritie. And that this was vsed among the people of Israel, it is easie to gather by the wordes of Joel. For when he commandeth a trumpet to be sounded, the congregation to be gathered togither, fasting to be appointed, and the rest that followe: he speaketh of thinges receiued in common custome. Hee had a litle before said, that examination is appointed of the wicked deedes of the people, and had declared that the day of iudgement was nowe at hande, and had summoned them being accused to pleade their cause: then hee crieth out that they shoulde haste to sacke cloth and ashes, to weeping and fasting: that is, that they should also with outwarde testifyinges throwe themselues downe before the Lorde, Sacke cloth and ashes peraduenture did more agree with those times: but there is no dout that the calling togither, and weeping, and fasting & such like do likewise pertaine also to our age, so oft as the state of our thinges doth so require. For sith it is a holy exercise, both to humble men, and to confesse humilitie, why should we lesse vse it than the olde people did in like necessitie? We reade that not onely the people of Israel, which were informed and instructed by the worde of GOD, but also the Niniuits which had no doctrine, but the preaching of Ionas, fasted in token of sorrowe. What cause is there therefore why we should not doe the same? But it is an outwarde ceremonie, which was with the rest ended in Christe. Yea rather euen at this day it is, as it alway hath beene, a verie good helpe to the faithfull, and a profitable admonition, to stirre vppe themselues, that they should not with to great careleſnesse & sluggishnesse more & more prouoke God when they are chastised with his scourges. Therefore Christ when hee excuseth his Apostles for that they fast not, doth not say that fasting is abrogate: but he appointeth it to times of calamitie, & ioyneth it with mourning. The time shall come (saith he) when the bridegrome shall be taken awaye from them.

and

Matt 9.15 Luke.5.34

18 But that there should be no errour in the name, let vs define what fasting is. For we do not here vnderstande by it only abstinence and sparing in meate and drinke, but a certaine other thing. The life of the godly ought in deede to be tempered with honest sparing & sobrietie, that so neere as is possible it may in the whole course thereof beare a certaine resemblance of fasting. But beside this there is an other fasting for a time, when we withdraw any thing of our wõted diet, either for one day or for a certaine time, and do charge our selues with a straiter and seuerer abstinence in diet than ordinarie. This consisteth in three thinges, in time, in qualitie of meates, & in smalnes of quãtitie. I meane by time, that we should vse those doings fasting, for which fasting is ordained. As for example, if a man fast for common prayer: that he come emptie vnto it. Qualitie standeth in this, that all daintinesse should be absent, & being content with common & baser meates, we should not stirre vp appetite with delicates. The rule of quantitie is in this, that wee eate more sparingly and lesse than we be wont, onely for necessitie, and not also for pleasure.

In fasting, time, qualitie, & quantitie of meates to be respected.

19 But we must alway principally beware, that no superstition creepe vpon vs, as it hath heretofore happened to the great hurt of the Church. For it were much better that there were no vse at al of fasting than that it should be diligently kept, and in the meane time be corrupted with false & hurtfull opinions, whereunto the world sometime falleth, vnlesse the Pastors do with great faithfulnesse and wisedome preuent it. The first point therfore is, that they shoulde alway enforce that which Joel teacheth, that they shoulde cut their heartes and not their garmentes: that is, that they shoulde admonishe the people, that God doth not greatly esteeme fasting of it selfe, vnles there bee an inwarde affection of the hearte, a true misliking of sinne and of himselfe, true humbling, & true sorow through the feare of God: yea that fasting is profitable for no other cause, but for that it is ioyned to these as an inferiour helpe. For GOD abhorreth nothing more than when men in setting signes and an outwarde shewe in steed of innocencie of heart, do labor with false color to deceiue themselues. Therefore Esaie most sharpely inueyeth against Superstition and the opinion of merit in fasting to be taken heede of.

againſt this hypocriſie, that the Iewes thought that they had ſatisfied God, when they had onely faſted, howſoeuer they did nouriſh vngodlines and vncleane thoughts in their heart. Is it (ſaith he) ſuch a faſting which the Lord requireth? and ſo foorth as followeth. Therefore the hypocritical faſting is not only an vnprofitable & ſuperfluous wearying, but alſo a great abomination. An other euill neere vnto this is chiefely to be taken heede of, that it be not taken for a meritorious worke, or a forme of worſhipping God. For ſith it is a thing of it ſelfe indifferent, & hath no value but by reaſon of thoſe endes which it ought to haue reſpect vnto, it is a moſt hurtfull ſuperſtition, to confound it with the workes commanded of God and neceſſarie of them, ſelues without other reſpect. Such was in olde time the dotage of the Manichees: whome when Auguſtine confuteth, hee doth plainely enough teach, that faſting is to be iudged by no other ends than thoſe which I haue ſpoken of, and is no otherwiſe allowed of GOD, vnleſſe it be referred to the ſame. The thirde errour is in deede not ſo vngodly, yet it is perillous: to require the keeping of it more preciſely and rigorouſly as it were one of the chiefe dueties, and ſo to aduaunce it with immeaſurable prayſes, that men ſhoulde thinke they haue done ſome excellent thing when they haue faſted. In which behalfe I dare not altogether excuſe the olde fathers, but that they haue ſowed ſome ſeedes of ſuperſtition, and giuen occaſion to the tyrannie which hath riſen ſince. There are founde in deede ſometimes in them ſound and wiſe ſentences, of faſting, but afterward we nowe and then meete with immeaſurable praiſes of faſting which aduaunce it among the chiefe vertues.

Liber. 2. de mor. Manic. cap. 13. & li. 20 cont. Fau.

The faſt of Lent ſuperſtitious if it be vſed vnder colour of followving Chriſt in his fortie daies faſt. Matt. 4. 2

20 And at that time the ſuperſtitious obſeruing of Lent was ech where grown in vſe: becauſe both the common people thought that they did therin ſome notable ſeruice to God, and the Paſtors did commend it for a holye folowing of Chriſt: whereas it is playne, that Chriſt did not faſt to preſcribe an example to other, but that in ſo beginning the preaching of the Goſpel, he might in very deede proue that it was not a doctrine of men, but deſcended from heauen. And it is marueilous, that ſo groſſe an errour, which is confuted with ſo many and ſo euident reaſons, could creepe into men of ſo ſharpe iudgement. For Chriſt did not faſt oft (which hee muſt needes haue done if he would haue ſet forth a lawe of yearely faſting) but only once whē he prepared himſelfe to the publiſhing of the Goſpell. And hee faſted not after the manner of men, as it was meete that he ſhoulde haue done if hee would haue prouoked men to followe him: but rather he ſheweth an example, whereby he may rather drawe men to wonder at him than ſtirre them vp to followe him. Finally there is none other cauſe of this faſting, than of that which Moſes faſted when hee receiued the lawe at the hande of the Lorde. For ſith that miracle was ſhewed in Moſes to ſtabliſh the authority of the Lawe, it ought not to haue beene omitted in Chriſt, leaſt the Goſpell ſhould ſeeme to giue place to the lawe. But ſince that time it neuer came in any mans minde vnder colour of following of Moſes to require ſuch a forme of faſting in the people of Iſrael. Neither did any of the holy Prophetes and fathers follow it, when yet they had minde and zeale enough to godly exerciſes. For, that which is ſaide of Helias, that he paſſed fortie daies without meate and drinke, tended to no other ende but that the people ſhould know that he was ſtirred vp to be a reſtorer of the law from which almoſt al Iſrael had departed. Therfore it was a mere wrongful zeale & ful of ſuperſtition, ỳ they did ſet foorth faſting with the title & color of following of Chriſt. Howbeit in the manner of faſting there was then great diuerſitie, as Caſſiodorus rehearſeth out of Socrates in the ninth booke of his hiſtorie. For the Romanes (ſaith he) had but three weeks, but in theſe three there was a cõtinuall faſting, except on the Sunday and Saturday. The Slauonians and Grecians had ſixe weekes: other had ſeuen: but their faſting was by diuided times. And they diſagreed no leſſe in difference of meates. Some did eate nothing but bread and water: ſome added herbes: ſome did not forbeare fiſhe and fowles: ſome had no difference in meates. Of this diuerſitie Auguſtine alſo maketh mention in the latter Epiſtle to Januarie.

21 Then followed worſe times, and to the prepoſterous zeale of the people was added both ignorance and rudeneſſe of the Biſhops, and a luſt to beare rule, and a tyrannous rigor. There were made wicked lawes, which ſtraine conſciences with pernitious bonds. The eating of fleſh was forbidden, as though it defiled a man. There were added opinions full of ſacriledge one vpon an other, til they came to the bottome of all errors. And that no peruerſeneſſe ſhould be omitted, they began with a moſt fonde pretence of abſtinence to mocke with God. For in the moſt exquiſite deintines of fare is ſought the prayſe of faſting: no delicates doe then ſuffice, there is neuer greater plentie, or diuerſitie or ſweetneſſe of meates. In ſuch and ſo gorgious preparation they thinke that they ſerue God rightly. I ſpeake not how they neuer more fowly glutte themſelues, than when they would bee counted moſt holy men. Briefely, they count it the greateſt worſhipping of God to abſteyne from fleſh, and (theſe excepted) to flowe full of all kind of deinties. On the otherſide they thinke this ỳ extreemeſt vngodlineſſe, and ſuch as ſcarcely may be recompenſed with death, if a man taſt neuer ſo little a peece of bacon or vnſauery fleſh with browne bread. Hierome telleth, that euen in his time were ſome ỳ with ſuch follies did mock with God: which becauſe they would not eat oyle, cauſed moſt deintie meats from euery place to be brought them: yea to oppreſſe nature with violence, they abſteined from drinking of water, but cauſed ſweete and coſtly ſuppings to be made for them, which they did not drinke out of a cup, but out of a ſhell. Which fault was then in a fewe, at this day it is a common fault among all rich men that they faſt to no other ende but that they may banket more ſumptuouſly and deintily. But I will not waſt many wordes in a matter not doutfull. Only this I ſay, that both in faſting and in all other partes of diſcipline, the Papiſts ſo haue nothing right, nothing pure, nothing wel framed and orderly, wherby they may haue any occaſion to be proud, as though there were any thing remaining among them worthy of praiſe.

The groſſe abuſe of faſting.

Ad Nepotiã.

22 There followeth another parte of diſcipline, which peculiarly belongeth to the cleargie. That is conteined in the canons which the olde Biſhops haue made ouer themſelues and their order. As theſe be: ỳ no clearke ſhoulde giue himſelfe to hunting, to dicing, nor to banketting: that none ſhould ſhoulde occupy vſurie, or marchandiſe: that none ſhould be preſent at wanton dauncings: and ſuch other ordinances. There were alſo added penalties whereby the authority of the canons was ſtabliſhed, that none ſhould breake them vnpuniſhed. For this end to euery byſhop was committed the gouernment of his owne cleargy, that they ſhould rule their clearkes according to the cannons, and holde them in their dutie. For this ende were ordeined yearely ouerſeeinges and Synodes, that if any were negligent in his duetie, he ſhoulde be admoniſhed: if any had offended, he ſhoulde be puniſhed according to ỹ meaſure of his offence. The biſhops alſo themſelues had yerely their prouinciall Synodes, and in the olde time yearely two Synodes, by which they were iudged if they had done any thing beſide their duety. For if any Byſhop were too harde or violent againſt his cleargie, they might appeale to thoſe Synodes, although there were but one that complained. The ſeuereſt puniſhment was that he which had offended ſhould be remooued from his office, & for a time be depriued of the communion. And becauſe ỹ ſame was a continuall order, they neuer vſed to diſmiſſe any Synode, but ỹ they appointed a place and time for the next Synode. For, to gather a generall Councel, pertained to the emperour onely, as all ỹ old ſummonings of Councels do teſtify. So long as this ſeueritie flouriſhed, ỹ clearks did require in word no more of ỹ people, than themſelues did perform in example and deed. Yea they were much more rigorous to themſelues thā to ỹ people. And verily ſo it is meete, that the people ſhould be ruled with a gentler and looſer diſcipline, as I may ſo tearme it: but the clearks ſhould vſe ſharper iudgements among themſelues, and ſhould leſſe beare with themſelues, than with other men. How all this is growne out of vſe, it is no neede to rehearſe, when at this day nothing can be imagined more vnbridled and diſſolute than the clergy, and they are broken foorth to ſo great licentiouſnes, that the whole world crieth out of it. That all antiquitie ſhould not ſeeme to be vtterly buried among them, I graunt indeede that they doe with certaine ſhadowes deceiue the eyes of the ſimple: but thoſe are ſuch as come no neerer to the auncient manners, than the counterfaiting of an ape approcheth to ỹ which men do by reaſon and aduiſe. There is a notable place in Xenophon, where he teacheth how fowly the Perſians had ſwarued from ỹ ordinances of their Elders, and were fallen frō the rigorous kind of life, to ſoftnes & daintines, ỹ yet they couered this ſhame, ſaying that they diligently kept ỹ ancient vſages. For when in the time of Cyrus ſobriety and temperaunce ſo farre flouriſhed that men needed not to weepe, yea and it was accounted a ſhame: with poſterity this continued a religious obſeruation, that no man ſhoulde draw ſnotte out of his noſtrilles, but it was lawfull to ſucke it vp, and feede within euen till they were rotten the ſtinking humors which they had gathered by gluttonous eating. So by the old order it is vnlawfull to bring winepots to the borde: but to ſwill in wine that they neede to be caried away drunken is tollerable. It was ordeined to eat but once in a day: this theſe good ſucceſſors haue not abrogate, but they gaue leaue to continue their ſurfettings frō mid day to midnight. The cuſtome was that men ſhoulde make an ende of their dayes iourney faſting. But it was at liberty and vſedly the cuſtome, for auoiding of wearineſſe, to ſhorten their iourney to two houres. Whenſoeuer the Papiſtes ſhal pretend their baſtarde rules, to ſhewe themſelues to be like to the holy fathers: this example ſhal ſufficiently reproue their fond counterfeiting, that no painter can more liuely expreſſe it.

for

23 In one thing they bee too rigorous and vnentreatable, that they giue not leaue to Prieſtes to marrie. But how great libertie there is among them to vſe whoredome vnpuniſhed, is not needefulto be ſpoken: and bearing them bolde vppon their ſtinking vnmarried life, they haue hardened themſelues to all wicked doings: But this forbidding doeth plainly ſhewe, how peſtilent all their traditions are, foraſmuch as it hath not onely ſpoiled the Church of good and fitte Paſtors, but alſo hath brought in a horrible ſincke of miſcheeues, and throwen many ſoules into the gulfe of deſperation. Truely whereas marriage hath beene forbidden to Prieſtes, that ſame hath beene done by wicked tyrannie, not onely againſt the worde of God, but alſo againſt all equitie. Firſt to forbidde that which the Lorde had left at libertie, was by no meanes lawfull for men. Againe, that God hath expreſſely prouided by his worde that this libertie ſhoulde not be broken, is ſo euident that it needeth no long demonſtration. I ſpeake not how Paul in many places willeth a Biſhoppe to bee the husband of one wife. But what coulde bee more vehemently ſpoken, than where hee pronounceth by the holy Ghoſt, that there ſhalbe in the laſt times wicked men that ſhall forbidde marriage: and hee calleth them not onely deceiuers, but diuels? This therefore is a Prophecie, this is a holye Oracle of the holye Ghoſt, wherewith hee willed to arme the Church aforehande againſt daungers, that the forbidding of marriage is the doctrine of diuels. But they thinke that they haue gayly eſcaped when they wreſt this ſentence to Montanus, the Tatrans, Encratites, and other olde heretikes. They only (ſay they) condemned marriage: but wee doe not condemne it, but debarre the cleargie from it, for whome wee thinke it not to bee conuenient. As though albeit this prophecie was firſt fulfilled in thoſe aforeſaide men, it might not alſo bee applied to theſe: or as though this childiſh fonde ſuttletie were woorth the hearing, that they ſay that they forbidde it not, becauſe they forbid it not to all. For it is all one as if a tyraunt woulde affirme that it is not an vniuſt lawe, with vniuſtice whereof one parte alone of the Citie is oppreſſed.

1.Tim.3.2 & 2.6.

1.Tim.4.3.

24 They obiect, that the Prieſt doth by ſome marke differ from the people. As though the Lorde did not alſo foreſee this, with what ornamentes Prieſtes ought to excell. So they accuſe the Apoſtle of troubling the order and confounding the comelineſſe of the Church, which when he portrayed out the abſolute forme of a good Biſhop durſt ſet marriage among the other giftes which he required in him. I know how they expound this, namely that none is to be choſen that hath had a ſecond wife. And I graunt that this is not a new expoſition: but that it is a falſe expoſition, appeareth by the text it ſelf, becauſe he by & by after ſetteth out of what qualities the wiues of Biſhops & Deacons ought to be. Paul reckeneth marriage among ye vertues of a Biſhop, theſe men teach that it is an intollerable fault in the order of the cleargie. And, on Gods name, not contented with this general diſpraiſe they Miriage in the clergie allowed by the Apoſtle, by the church of Rome not onely diſallowed, but diſgraced by vnſeemely ſpeach.

Siriti. ad Epſc. Hiſpa.

call it in their canons vncleanneſſe and defiling of the fleſh. Let euery man thinke with himſelfe out of what workſhop theſe thinges be come: Chriſt vouchſaueth ſo to honour marriage that he willeth it to bee an image of his holy conioyning with the Church. What could be ſpoken more honourably to ſet out the dignitie of Marriage? With what face therefore ſhall that bee called vncleene or defiled wherein ſhineth a likeneſſe of the ſpirituall grace of Chriſt?

The ſeparation of Leuites from their vwiues vvhē they miniſtred in the tēple, proueth but ſlenderly the forbidding of mariage in the clergie vnder the Goſpel.

25 But nowe when their forbidding ſo euidently fighteth with the word of God, yet they finde in the Scriptures wherewith to defende it. The Leuiticall Prieſts were bound to lie a ſunder from their wiues, ſo oft as it came to their turnes to miniſter, that they might handle the holy things pure & vndefiled. Therefore it were verie vncomely, that our holy thinges, ſith they be both much more noble and daily, ſhould be handled of married men. As though there were alone perſon of the miniſter of the Goſpel, as was of the Leuiticall Prieſthood. For they, as figures, repreſented Chriſt, which being the mediator of God & men ſhould with moſt abſolute pureneſſe reconcile the Father vnto vs. But when ſinners could not in euery behalf expreſſe the figure of his holineſſe, yet that they might with certain groſſe draughts yeld a ſhadowe of him, they were commaunded to purifie themſelues beyonde the manner of men, when they came to the Sanctuarie: namely becauſe they then properly figured Chriſte, for that as pacifiers to reconcile the people to God they appeared at the tabernacle the image of the heauenly iudgement ſeate. Foraſmuch as the Paſtors of the church doe not beare this perſon at this day, therefore they are vainly compared with them. Wherefore the Apoſtle doth without exception boldly pronounce, that mariage is honorable among all men, but that for whoremongers and adulterers abideth the iudgement of God. And the Apoſtles themſelues did with their owne example approue that marriage is not vnmeete for the holineſſe of any office be it neuer ſo excellent. For Paul witneſſeth that they did not onely keepe wiues, but alſo caried them about with them.

Heb. 13. 4.

1. Cor. 9. 5.

Marriage allowed in bishops by the ancient fathers of the Church.

26 Againe it was a maruellous ſhameleſneſſe that they durſt ſet out this comelines of chaſtitie for a neceſſarie thing, to the great reproch of the old Church: which when it abounded with ſingular learning of God, yet excelled more in holineſſe. For if they paſſe not vpon the Apoſtles, (as they are wont ſometime ſtoutly to deſpiſe them) what I beſeech you will they doe to all the olde fathers, whome it is certaine to haue not onely ſuffered but alſo allowed marriage in the order of Biſhops? They forſooth did nouriſh a filthie prophaning of holye thinges, foraſmuch as ſo the myſteries of the Lorde were not rightly reuerenced among them. It was moued indeed in the Nycene Synode to haue vnmarried life commaunded: as there alway want not ſome ſuperſtitious men, which doe euer inuent ſome newe thing, to bring themſelues in admiration. But what was decreede? The ſentence of Paphnutius was aſſented to, which pronounced that a mans lying with his owne wife is chaſtitie. Therefore marriage remained holye among them: neither did it turne them to any ſhame nor was thought to ſpot the miniſterie.

Hiſt tripart. Lib. 2. ca. 14.

27 Then followed times, in which too ſuperſtitious obſeruation of ſingle

gle life grew in force. Hereupon came those often and vnmeasurable aduanced praises of virginitie, so ỹ scarcely any other vertue was thought among the people to be compared with it. And although mariage was not condemned for vncleane, yet the dignitie thereof was so diminished, and the holinesse of it obscured, that hee seemed not to aspire with a courage strong enough to perfection, that did not refraine himselfe from it. Hereupon came those cannons whereby it was first forbidden that they which were come to the degree of Priesthoode should not contract mariage: then, that none should be taken into that order but vnmaried men, or such as did forsake mariage together with their wiues. These thinges, because they seemed to procure reuerence to Priesthood, were (I graunt) euen from antiquitie receiued with great wel liking. But if the aduersaries obiect antiquitie against me, first I aunswere that this libertie remained both vnder the Apostles and in certaine ages after them, that Bishops might be married: that the Apostles themselues, and other Pastors of great authoritie which succeeded in their places, vsed the same without sticking at it. The example of that ancienter Church ought worthily to be of greater weight with vs, than that wee should thinke that to be either vnlawfull or vncomely for vs which was then with praise receiued and vsed. Secondly I saie that that age which for immeasurable affection to virginity began to be partial against mariage, did not so lay vpon Priestes the lawe of vnmaried life, as though it were a thing necessary of it self, but because they preferred vnmaried men aboue the maried. Finally I answere that they did not so require it ỹ they did with force and necessity constraine them to continence which were not fit to keepe it. For when they punished whoredomes with most seuere lawes, of them that cõtracted mariage they decreed no more but that they should giue ouer the execution of their office.

Howw single life grewv to bee so much aduaunced in the clergy.

28 Therefore whensoeuer the defenders of this new tyrannie shall seeke the pretence of antiquitie to defende their vnmaried life: so oft we shal answere them with requiring thẽ, that they restore the old chastnesse in their Priestes: that they remoue adulterers and whoremongers: that they suffer not those in whom they suffer not honest & chast vse of mariage bed, to run vnpunished into all kinde of lust: that they call againe the discontinued discipline, whereby all wantonnesses may be restrained: that they deliuer the Church from this so wicked filthinesse, wherewith it hath beene long deformed. When they haue graunted this, then they must againe be put in minde that they boast not that thing for necessarie, which being of it selfe at libertie hangeth vpon the profit of the Church. Yet I say not this for that I think that in any condition place is to be giuen to those canons which lay ỹ bond of vnmaried life vpon the order of Priestes: but that the wiser sort may vnderstand with what face our enemies doe slaunder holy mariage in Priests by obiecting the name of antiquitie. As touching the fathers, whose writinges remaine, euen they when they speake of their owne iudgement, except Hierome, did not with so great spitefulnesse deface the honestie of mariage. We shalbe content with one commendation of Chrysostome: because he, sith he was a principall estemer of virginitie, cannot be thought to haue beene more lauish than other in commendation of mariage. Thus he saith:

Twvo Items to the Churche of Rome concerning the single life vvhich they require in the order of priests.

Of vowes, by rash promiſing whereof, eche man hath miſerably entangled himſelfe.

The hurt that hath come to the church by vowes.

IT is verily a thing to be lamented, that the Churche, for whom libertie was purchaſed with the ineſtimable price of the bloud of Chriſt, hath been ſo oppreſſed with cruell tyrannie, and almoſt ouerwhelmed with a huge heape of traditions: but in the meane time euery mans priuate madneſſe ſheweth, that not without moſt iuſt cauſe there hath beene ſo much permitted of God to Satan and his miniſters. For they thought it not enough, neglecting the commaundement of Chriſt, to beare any burdens whatſoeuer were laide vpon them by falſe teachers, vnleſſe they did alſo eche man procure to himſelfe ſeuerall burdens of his owne, and ſo with digging pittes for themſelues ſhould drowne themſelues deeper. This was done while they ſtriued in deuiſing of vowes, by which there might be added to the commō bondes a greater and ſtraighter binding. Sith therefore wee haue taught, that by their boldnes which haue born rule vnder the title of Paſtors in the Church, the worſhipping of God hath beene corrupted, when they ſnared ſilly conſciences with their vninſt lawes: here it ſhall not be out of ſeaſon to adioyne an other euill which is neere vnto it, that it may appeare that the worlde according to the peruerſeneſſe of his owne diſpoſition, hath alway, with ſuch ſtoppes as it coulde, put away the helpes whereby it ſhould haue beene brought to God. Nowe, that it may the better appeare that very grieuous hurt hath beene brought in by vowes, let the readers kepe in mind the principles aboue ſet. For firſt we haue taught, that whatſoeuer may be required to the framing of life godlily and holily, is comprehended in the lawe. Againe, we haue taught that the Lorde, that he might thereby the better call vs away from deuiſing of new works, hath encloſed the whole praiſe of righteouſneſſe in the ſimple obedience of his will. If theſe thinges be true, it is eaſie to iudge that all fained worthippinges, which wee inuent to our ſelues to deſerue the fauour of God, are not acceptable to him howe much ſoeuer they pleaſe vs. And truely the Lorde himſelfe in many places doeth not onely openly refuſe them, but alſo grieuouſly abhorre them. Hereupon ariſeth a doubt of thoſe vowes which are made beſide the expreſſe worde of God, what account is to be made of them, whether they may rightly bee vowed of Chriſtian men, and howe farre they binde them. For the ſame which among men is called a promiſe, in reſpect of God is called a vowe. But to men we promiſe thoſe thinges either which we thinke wil be pleaſant vnto them, or which wee owe of duetie. Therefore there ought to bee a much greater heedful obſeruation in vowes which are directed to God himſelfe, with whom we ought to deale moſt earneſtly. In this point ſuperſtition hath in all ages maruellouſly ranged, ſo that men without iudgement, with without choiſe, did by & by vow vnto God whatſoeuer came in their mind, or into their mouth. Hereupon came thoſe follies, yea, monſtruous abſurdities of vowes among the heathen, wherewith they did too inſolently mocke with their Gods. And I would to God that Chriſtians alſo had not followed this their boldneſſe. It ought not in deede to haue beene ſo: but wee ſee that in certaine ages paſt nothing hath beene more vſuall than this wickedneſſe, that the people ech where deſpiſing the lawe of God did wholly burne with mad greedineſſe to vowe whatſoeuer had pleaſed them in their dreame. I will not hatefully enforce, nor particularly rehearſe how hainouſly and how many waies herein men haue offended: But I thought good to ſay this by the way, that it may the better appeare, that we doe not moue queſtion of a needeleſſe matter, when we intreat of vowes.

2 Nowe if wee will not erre in iudging which vowes be lawfull, & which be wrongfull, it behoooueth to weigh three things: that is to ſay, who it is to whome the vowe is made: who wee bee that make the vowe: laſt of all, with what mind wee vowe. The firſt point hath reſpect to this, that wee ſhoulde thinke that wee haue to doe with God, whom our obedience ſo much deliteth, that he pronounceth all wilworſhips to be accurſed, how gay and glorious ſoeuer they be in the eyes of men. If al voluntarie worſhips, which wee our ſelues deuiſe without commandement, be abhomininable to God, it followeth that no worſhip can be acceptable to him but that which is allowed by his word. Therefore letvs not take ſo great libertie to our ſelues that wee dare vowe to God that which hath no teſtimonie how it is eſteemed of him. For whereas that which Paul teacheth, that it is ſinne whatſoeuer is done without Faith, extendeth to all doinges, then verily it chiefly hath place, when thou directeſt thy thought the ſtreight waie to God. But if we fall and erre eué in the ſmalleſt things, (as Paul there diſputeth of the difference of meates) where certaintie of faith ſhineth not before vs: howe muche more modeſtie is to be vſed, when wee attempt a thing of greateſt weight? For nothing ought to be more earneſt vnto vs than the duties of religion. Let this therefore be the firſt conſideration in vowes, that wee neuer come to the vowing of any thing, but that conſcience haue firſt certainely determined ỹ it attempteth nothing raſhly. But it ſhall then be free from daunger of raſhneſſe, when it ſhall haue God going before it, and as it were enforming it by his word what is good or vnprofitable to be done.

The firſt thing to be reſpected in vovves, is the perſon of God to vvhome they are made.

Rom. 14. 23.

3 In the other thing which we haue ſaide to be here to bee conſidered, this is conteined, that wee meaſure our owne ſtrengthes, that we haue an eye to our vocation, that we neglect not the benefite of libertie which God hath giuen vs. For hee that voweth that which either is not in his power, or diſagreeth with his vocation, is raſh: and he that deſpiſeth the bountifulnes of God, whereby hee is appointed Lorde of all thinges, is vnthankefull. When I ſay thus, I doe not meane that any thing is ſo ſet in our owne hand, that ſtanding vpon confidence of our owne ſtrength wee may promiſe the ſame to GOD. For it was moſt truely decreede in the Councel at Araſium, that nothing is rightly vowed to God but that which we haue receiued of his hand, for aſmuch as all things that are offered him are his mere gifts. But ſith ſome things are by Gods goodnes giuen vs, and other ſome things

The ſecond thing to be regarded in the making of a vovv, is the meaſure of their ſtrength that make it.

by his equitie denied vs: let euery man (as Paul commaundeth) haue respect to the measure of grace giuen vnto him. Therefore I doe here meane nothing elſe, but that vowes muſt bee tempered to that meaſure which the Lorde preſcribeth there in his giuing: leaſt if thou attempt further than he permitterh, thou throwe thy ſelfe downe headlong with taking too much vpon thee. As for example. When thoſe murtherers, of whome mention is made in Luke, vowed that they woulde taſte of no meat till Paul were ſlaine: although the deuiſe had not beene wicked, yet the raſhneſſe it ſelfe was not to bee ſuffered, that they made the life and death of a man ſubiect to their power. So Jephthe ſuffered puniſhment for his follye, when with headlong heate hee conceiued an vnaduiſed vowe. In which kinde vnmarried life hath the cheefe place of madde boldneſſe. For ſacrificing Prieſtes, Monkes, and Nonnes, forgetting their owne weakeneſſe, thinke themſelues able to keepe vnmarried life. But by what Oracle are they taught that they ſhall haue chaſtitie throughout all their life, to the verie ende whereof they vowe it? They heare the worde of GOD concerning the vniuerſall ſtate of men, It is not good for man to bee alone. They vnderſtande, and woulde to God that they did not feele, that ſinne remaining in vs is not without moſt ſharpe prickes. With what confidence dare they ſhake off that generall calling for all their life long: whereas the gifte of continencie is oftener graunted for a certaine time as opportunitie requireth? In ſuch ſtubborneſſe let them not looke for God to bee their helper: but let them rather remember that which is ſaide. Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lorde thy God. And this is to tempte God, to endeuour againſt the nature put in vs by him, and to deſpiſe his preſent giftes as though they nothing belonged vnto vs. Which they not onely doe: but alſo marriage it ſelfe, which God thought it not againſt his maieſtie to inſtitute, which hee hath pronounced honourable in all men, which Chriſt our Lorde hath ſanctified with his preſence, which hee vouchſaued to honour with his firſt miracle, they dare call defiling, onely to aduaunce with marueilous commendations a certaine vnmarried life of what ſort ſoeuer it bee. As though they themſelues did not ſhew a cleare example in their life, that vnmarried ſtate is one thing, and virginitie an other: which their life yet they moſt ſhameleſly call Angellike, doing herein verily too great iniurie to the Angels of God, to whom they compare whoremongers, adulterers, and ſomewhat elſe much worſe and filthier. And truely here need no arguments when they are openly confuted by the thing it ſelfe. For wee plainly ſee, with how horrible paines the Lorde doeth commonly take vengeaunce of ſuch arrogancie, and contempt of his gifts by too much truſt in themſelues. I ſpare for ſhame to ſpeake of the more ſecrete faultes, of which euen this that is already perceiued is too much. It is out of controuerſie that we ought to vowe nothing, that may hinder vs from ſeruing of our vocation. As if a houſholder ſhoulde vowe, that hee will leaue his wife and his children and take other charges in hand: or if hee that is fit to beare office, when hee is choſen doe vowe that he will be a priuate man. But what is meant by this, that our libertie ſhould not bee deſpiſed, hath ſome difficultie if it bee not declared. Therfore thus in fewe wordes I expounde it. Sith God hath made vs Lords of all things, & hath so made them subiect vnto vs that we shoulde vse them all for our commoditie: there is no cause why we should hope that it shalbe an acceptable worke to God if we yelde our selues into bondage to the outward things which ought to be a helpe vnto vs. I say this for this purpose, because many do hereby seeke praise of humilitie, if they snare themselues with many obseruations, from which God not without cause willed vs to be free & discharged. Therefore if we wil escape this danger, let vs alway remember that we ought not to depart from that order which the Lorde hath ordained in the Christian Church.

The third thing to be respected in a vowe is the mind of the vower, vvhich in vowes that haue relation to the time past hath two ends to be directed by.

4 Now I come to that which I did set in the third place: that it is much material with what minde thou makest a vowe, if thou wilt haue it allowed of God. For sith the Lorde ragardeth the heart, not the outward shewe, it commeth to passe that the selfe same thing, by changing the purpose of the mind, doth sometime please him and is acceptable vnto him, and somtime highly displeaseth him. If thou so vowe the abstaining from wine, as though there were any holinesse in it, thou art superstitious: if thou haue respect to any other ende which is not euill, no man can disallow it. But in my iudgement there be foure endes, to which our vowes shalbe rightly directed: of which for teachings sake I referre two to the time past, and the other two to the time to come. To the time past belong those vowes, wherby we do either testifie our thankfulnesse to God for benefites receiued: or to craue the turning away of his wrath, we our selues doe punish our selues for the offences that we haue committed. Let vs call the first sort, if you will, the exercises of thankesgiuing, the other of repentance. Of the first kinde we haue an example in the tithes which Iacob vowed, if the Lorde did bring him home safe out of banishment into his countrey. Againe in the olde Sacrifices of the peace offrings, which godlie kinges and captaines, when they tooke in hande righteous warre, did vowe that they would pay if they had obtained the victorie, or at least when they were oppressed with any great distresse, if the Lorde had deliuered them. So are all those places in the Psalmes to bee vnderstoode which speake of vowes. Such vowes maie at this day also be in vse among vs, so oft as the Lord hath deliuered vs either out of any calamitie, or from a hard sickneſſe, or from any other danger. For it is then not against the dutie of a godlie man, to consecrate to God his vowed oblatiō, as a solemne token of his reknowledging, least he should seeme vnthankful towarde his goodnesse. Of what sort the seconde kinde is, it shall suffice to shewe with one onely familiar example. If anie by the vice of gluttonie bee fallen into anie offence, nothing withstandeth but that to chastice his intemperance he maie for a time forsake all deintie meates, and may doe the same with a vowe adioyned, that hee may binde himselfe with the straiter bonde. Yet I doe not so make a perpetuall lawe to them that haue likewise offended: but I shewe what is lawfull for them to doe, which shall thinke suche a vowe profitable for themselues. I doe therefore so make suche a vowe lawfull, that in the meane time I leaue it at libertie.

Gen. 28. 20. Psal. 22. 27. & 56. 12. & 116. 14. 18

Two other ends of vowes vvhich haue relation to the time to come.

5 The vowes that are applied to the time to come, partly (as we haue alreadie said) doe tend to this end that we may be made the warer: and partly that as it were by certaine ſpurres we may be pricked forward to our dutie. Some man ſeeth himſelfe to be ſo inclined to ſome certaine vice, that in a thing which otherwiſe is not euill hee cannot temper himſelfe from falling foorthwith into an euil: he ſhal doe nothing inconuenientlyif he doe for a time by vowe cut off from himſelfe the vſe of that thing. As if a man knowe that this or that apparell of body is perillous vnto him, and yet entiſed with deſire he earneſtly couet it, what can he do better, than if in putting a bridle vpon himſelfe, that is in charging himſelf with neceſſity of abſteining from it, he deliuer himſelfe from all doubting? Likewiſe if a man bee forgetfull or ſlowe to neceſſarie duties of godlineſſe, why may he not by taking a vowe vpon him both awake his memorie and ſhake off his ſlouthfulnes? In both I graunt that there is a forme of childiſh ſchooling: but euen in this that they are helpes of weakeneſſe, they are not without profit vſed of the rawe & vnperfect. Therefore we ſhall ſay that thoſe vowes are lawfull which haue reſpect to one of theſe ends, ſpecially in outward things, if they both be vpholden with the allowance of God, and do agree with our vocation, & be meaſured by the power of grace giuen vs of God.

Howe to iudge of vowes as well thoſe which generally all men or particularly ſome doe make vnto God.

6 Now alſo it is not hard to gather what is generally to be thought of all vowes. There is one common vowe of all the faithfull, which being made in baptiſme we doe confirme and as it were ſtabliſh by Catechiſme and receiuing of the Supper. For the Sacramentes are as charters, by which the Lord deliuereth to vs his mercie and thereby euerlaſting life, and we againe on our behalfes doe promiſe him obedience. But this is the forme or verily the ſumme of the vow, that forſaking Satan we yeeld our ſelues into ſeruice to God, to obey his holy commaundements, and not to follow the peruerſe deſires of our fleſh. It ought not to be doubted but that this vowe, ſith it hath teſtimonie of the Scripture, yea and is required of all the children of God, is both holy and profitable to ſaluation. And it maketh not to the contrary, that no man in this life performeth the perfect obedience of the law which God requireth of vs. For ſith this forme of couenanting is compriſed within the couenant of grace, vnder which is contained both forgiuenes of ſins and the Spirit of ſanctification: the promiſe which we there make is ioyned both with beſeeching of pardon and with crauing of helpe. In iudging of particular vowes, it is neceſſarie to keepe in minde the three former rules, whereby wee may ſafely weigh of what ſort euerie vowe is. Neither yet thinke that I ſo commende the vetie ſame vowes which I affirme to be holie, that I woulde haue them to be daylie. For though I dare teach no certaine rule of the number or time: yet if any man obey my counſell, he ſhall take vpon him none but ſober and for a time. For if thou oftentimes breake foorth into making of manie vowes, all religiouſnes will with verie continuance growe out of eſtimation with thee, and thou ſhalt come to a bending readineſſe to fall into ſuperſtition. If thou binde thy ſelfe with a perpetuall vowe, either for great paine and tediouſneſſe thou ſhalt vndoe it, or being wearied with long continuance thou ſhalt at one time or other be bolde to breake it.

Superſtitious vowes of faſtinges, pilgrimages & ſuch like.

7 Nowe alſo it is plaine with how great ſuperſtition in this behalfe the world hath in certaine ages paſt bin poſſeſſed. One man vowed y he woulde abſtaine abſtain from wine: as though abſtaining from wine were of it ſelfe a worſhip acceptable to God. An other bound himſelfe to faſting, an other to abſtaining from fleſhe for certaine daies, in which he had with vaine opinion fained to be a ſingular holines aboue the reſt. And ſome things alſo were vowed much more childiſh, although not of children. For this was holden for a great wiſdome, to take vpon them vowed pilgrimages to holier places, and ſometime either to go al their iourney on foote, or with their body halfe naked, ẏ by their werines the more merite might be gotté. Theſe & ſuch other, with incredible zeale whereof the world hath a while ſwelled, if they be examined by thoſe rules, which we haue aboue ſet, ſhalbe found not only vaine & trifling, but ful of manifeſt vngodlines. For howſoeuer the fleſh iudge, God abhorreth nothing more than fained worſhippings. There are beſide this thoſe pernitious & damned opinions, ẏ hypocrits when they haue ſuch trifles thinke ẏ they haue gotten no ſmall righteouſnes: they repoſe the ſum of godlineſſe in outwarde obſeruations, they deſpiſe all other that are leſſe careful of ſuch things.

Monkish vowes & the ende why monkeries were first instituted.

8 To recken vp al the particular formes, is nothing to purpoſe. But forasmuch as the monkiſh vowes are had in greater reuerence, becauſe they ſeeme allowed by the common iudgement of the Church: of thoſe it is good to ſpeake briefely. Firſt leaſt any ſhould by preſcription of long time defend monkerie, ſuch as it is at this day, it is to be noted that in old time there was in monaſtaries a far other order of liuing. Such as were diſpoſed to exerciſe themſelues to greateſt ſeueritie and patience, went thither. For what maner of diſcipline they ſay that the Lacedemonians had vnder the lawes of Lycurgus, ſuch was at that time among the monks, yea and much more rigorous. They ſlept vpon the ground: their drinke was water: their meate was bread, herbes, and rotes: their chiefe deinties were in oyle and ciches. They abſtained from all delicate diet and trimming of body. Theſe things might ſeeme aboue trueth, if they were not written by witneſſes that ſaw & proued thé. as Gregorie Nazianzene, Baſile, and Chryſoſtome. But with ſuch introductions they prepared themſelnes to great offices. For, that the colleges of monkes were then as it were the ſeedeplots of the order of miniſters of the Church, both theſe whom we haue now named are a proofe plaine enough (for they were all brought vp in monaſteries and from thence called to the office of biſhops) and alſo many other ſingular and excellent men in their time. And Auguſtine ſheweth that this was alſo vſed in his time, that monaſteries yeelded clerkes to the Church. For he ſpeaketh thus to the monkes of the Iſle of Caprarea: But you brethren we exhort in the Lord, that ye kepe your purpoſe & continue to the end: and if at any time our mother the Church ſhall require your trauail, do ye neither with gredy pride take it vpō you, nor with flattering ſlothfulneſſe refuſe it: but with a meeke heart obey to God. Neither preferre ye your own quiet leaſure aboue the neceſſities of the church: to whom if no good men would haue miniſtered in her trauaile, you ſhould not haue founde howe you ſhould haue beene borne. He ſpeaketh there of the miniſterie, by which the faithfull are ſpiritually borne againe. Alſo to Aurelius. There is both occaſion of falling giuen to themſelues, and moſte haynous wrong done to the order of the Clergy, if forſakers of monaſteries be choſen to the ſoldierſhip of the Clergy: when euen of thoſe ẏ remaine in the monaſterie, we vſe to take into the Clergy none but the moſt approoued & beſt. Vnleſſe perhaps as the cõmon people ſay, hee is an euill piper but a good fidler: ſo it ſhall alſo be ieſtingly ſaid of vs, he is an euil monke, but a good Clerke. It is too much to be lamented, if we lift vp monkes into ſuch a ruinous pride, & thinke Clerkes worthy of ſo great reproch, wheras ſomtime euẽ a good monke maketh not a good clerke, if he haue ſufficient cõtinence and yet want neceſſarie learning. By theſe places it appeareth, ẏ godly men were wont with the diſcipline of monks to prepare thẽ ſelues to the gouernment of the Church, that they might the fitter and better inſtructed take ſo great an office vpon them. Not that they all attained to this end, or yet tended toward it, when for the moſt part they were vnlearned men: but ſuch were choſen out as were meete for it.

The orders & exerciſes of auncïẽt monkes.

9 But chiefely in two places he painteth out vnto vs the forme of the old monkerie. In the booke of the manners of the Catholike Church, where he ſetteth the holineſſe of that profeſſion againſt the ſclaunders of the Manichees: & in an other booke which he entitled of the work of monkes, where he inueyeth againſt certaine degendred monkes, which beganne to corrupt that order. I will here ſo gather a ſumme of thoſe thinges which hee ſaieth, that ſo neere as I may I will vſe his owne wordes. Deſpiſing (ſaith he) the entiſements of this world, gathered into one moſt chaſt and holye life, they ſpende their time together, liuing in prayers, readinges, and diſputations. not ſwelling with pride, not troubleſome with ſtubborneſſe, not wanne with enuiouſneſſe. None poſſeſſeth anie thing of his owne, none is burdenous to any man. They get by working with their handes thoſe thinges wherewith both their body may be fedde, and their minde may not be hindered from God. Their worke they deliuer to them whom they call Deanes. Thoſe Deanes deſpiſing all thinges with great carefulneſſe make account thereof to one whom they cal Father. Theſe fathers not onely moſt holy in maners, but alſo moſt excellent in godly doctrine, high in al things, do with no pride prouide for them whom they call children, with great authoritie of them in cõmanding, and great willingnes of the other in obeying: They come together at the very laſt time of the day, euery one from his dwelling, while they be yet faſting, to heare that Father, and there meete together to euerie one of theſe fathers at the leaſt three thouſãd men, (he ſpeaketh chiefly of Egypt, and of the Eaſt) then they refreſh their body, ſo much as ſuffiſeth for life and healthfulneſſe, euery man reſtraining his deſire, not to take largely euen of thoſe things that they haue preſent very ſpare & vile. So they do not onely abſtaine from fleſh & wine, ſo much ẏ they may be able to tame their luſtes, but from ſuch thinges which doe ſo much more greedily prouoke appetite of the belly and throte, how much they ſeeme to other, to be as it were cleaner, by colour whereof the filthie deſire of exquiſite meates, which is not in fleſh, is wont to be fondly and fowlie defended. Whatſoeuer remaineth aboue neceſſarie foode (as there remaineth oftentimes much of the workes of their handes and pinching of their fare) is with greater care diſtributed to the poore, than it was gotten by them that diſtribute it. For they doe in no wiſe trauaile that they may haue abundance of theſe thinges, but they

by all

by all meanes endeuour that that which they haue abounding may not remaine with them. Afterward when he hath rehearſed the hardnes, whereof hee himſelfe had ſeene examples both at Millaine and elſe where: among theſe thinges (ſaieth hee) no man is enforced to hard thinges which hee cannot beare: no man is charged with that which he refuſeth: neither is hee therefore condemned of the reſt, becauſe he confeſſeth himſelfe to want ſtrength in following of them: for they remember howe much charitie is commended: they remember that all thinges are cleane to the cleane. Therefore all their diligence watcheth, not to the refuſing of kindes of meate as vncleane, but to tame luſt, and to retaine the loue of brethren. They remember, meate for the bellie, and the bellie for meates, &c. Yet many ſtrong do abſtaine for the weakes ſake. Many of them haue no neede to do thus: but becauſe it pleaſeth them to ſuſtaine themſelues with baſer diet and nothing ſumptuous. Therefore they themſelues, which being in health do forbeare, if conſideration of their health compell, when they are ſicke do take without any feare. Many drinke no wine, & yet they thinke not themſelues defiled with it: for they moſt gently cauſe it to be giuen to the fainter, and to them that cannot get the health of their bodie without it: and ſome which fooliſhly refuſe it, they doe brotherly admoniſh that they be not with vaine ſuperſtition ſooner made weaker than holier. So they diligently exerciſe godlines: but they knowe that the exerciſing of the body pertaineth but to a ſhort time. Charitie is chiefly kept: to charitie the diet, to charitie the ſpeech, to charitie the apparel, to charitie ỹ countenance is fitted. They meet and conſpire into one charitie. To offend it, is accounted as haynous as to offende God. If any reſiſt charitie, he is caſt out and ſhunned. If any offende charitie, he is not ſuffered ſo abide one day. For aſmuch as in theſe wordes, as in a painted table, that holy man ſeemeth to haue ſet out what maner of life monkerie was in olde time, although they were ſomewhat long, yet I was content to enterlace them here: becauſe I ſaw that I ſhould haue bene ſomewhat longer if I had gathered the ſame things out of diuerſe, how much ſo euer I ſtudied for briefeneſſe.

Ibid. cap. 33. Tit. 1. 15.

2. Cor. 6. 13.

10 But my purpoſe here is not to go through this whole matter, but only by the way to point out, not only what maner of monkes the old Church had, but what maner of thing the profeſſion of monkes was at that time: ſo as the ſound witted readers may iudge by the compariſon, what face they haue which alleage antiquitie to maintaine the preſent monkerie. Auguſtine when he depainteth vnto vs a holy & true monkerie, would haue to be abſent all rigorous exacting of thoſe thinges which by the word of the Lord are left vs at libertie. But there is nothing ỹ is at this day more ſeuerely required. For they count it a miſchiefe that can neuer be purged, if any do neuer ſo litle ſwarue from the preſcribed rule in colour or faſhion of garment, in kind of meat, or in other trifling & cold ceremonies. Auguſtine ſtoutly maintaineth, ỹ it is not lawfull for monks to liue idle vpon other mens. He denieth ỹ there was euer in his time any ſuch example of a well ordered monaſterie. Our men ſet the chiefe part of their holineſſe in idleneſſe. For if you take idlenes from them, where ſhalbe ỹ contemplatiue life whereby they boaſt ỹ they excel al other men, & approch nere vnto Angels? Finally, Auguſtine requi-quireth ſuch a monkerie, as ſhould be nothing but an exerciſe & help to the dueties of godlines which are commended to all Chriſtians. What? when he maketh charitie the chiefe, ye & almoſt only rule thereof, do we thinke ỹ he praiſeth a conſpiring, wherby a fewe men being bound togither, are ſeuered from ỹ whole body of the church? But rather he willeth them w̃ their example to giue light to other to keep the vnitie of ỹ church. In both theſe points there is ſo much difference of the monkery at this preſent, that a man can ſcarcely find any thing more vnlike, I will not ſay contrarie. For our monkes not contented with that godlines, to the ſtudie of which alone Chriſte commandeth them ỹ are his continually to apply, doe imagine I wote not what new godlines, by meditation whereof they may be perfecter than other.

Only monkish life termed perfection in the Papacie.

11 If they denie this, I would know of them why they vouchſafe to giue to their owne order alone the title of perfection, & take away the ſame from all the callings of God. Neither am I ignorant of that ſophiſticall ſolution, ỹ it is not therefore ſo called becauſe it doth conteine perfection in it, but becauſe it is the beſt of all other to attaine perfection. When they are diſpoſed to boaſt themſelues before the people, when to ſnare vnskilfull and vnware yong men, when to maintaine their priuileges, when to aduaunce their owne dignitie to the reproch of other, then they boaſt that they are in the ſtate of perfection. When they are ſo nigh driuen that they cannot defend this vaine arrogancie, then they flee to this ſtarting hole, that they haue not yet attained perfection, but that they are in the ſame ſtate wherein they aſpire vnto it aboue other. In the meane time that admiration among ỹ people remaineth, as though the only monkiſh life were angelike, perfect, and cleanſed from all fault. By this pretence they make moſt gainful markets, but that ſame moderation lieth buried in a fewe bookes. Who doth not ſee ỹ this is an intollerable mockerie? But let vs ſo reaſon with them, as though they gaue no more to their profeſſion thã to cal it a ſtate of attaining perfection. Verily in giuing it this name, they do as by a ſpeciall mark make it differing from other kinds of life. And who can abide this, that ſo great honor ſhould be giuen away to an ordinãce that is nowhere by any one ſyllable allowed: and that by the ſame all other callings of God, which are by his owne holy mouth not onely commaunded, but alſo commended with notable titles of praiſe, are by the ſame accounted vnworthie? And how great wrong (I beſeech you) is done to God, when I wote not what new found thing is preferred aboue all the kinde of life ordained by himſelfe, and praiſed by his owne teſtimonie?

Popish monkes proud and vaineglorious as if their obedience did extend vnto farther perfection than the lavv of Christ doth require to be in all men.
Matt. 5. 14.

12 But go to, let them ſay that it is a ſlaunder which I haue before ſaide, that they are not contented with the rule preſcribed of God. Yet though I holde my peace, they themſelues do more than enough accuſe themſelues. For they openly teach, that they take vpon them more burden than Chriſt laid vpon his: becauſe forſooth they promiſe to kepe the counſels of ỹ goſpel concerning louing their enimies, not coueting of reuenge, not ſwearing, &c. To which things Chriſtians are not generally bounde. Herein what antiquitie will they ſhewe forth againſt vs? This neuer came in any of the olde fathers mindes. They all crie out with one voyce that there was no one litle worde at al vttered of Chriſt, which ought not neceſſarily to be obeied. And with-without anie douting they do echwhere teach, that these verie same things by name were commandements, which these good expositors triflingly say that Christ did but counsell. But forasmuch as we haue before taught y this is a most pestilent error, let it suffice heere to haue briefely noted that the monkery which is at this day, is grounded vpon the same opinion, which all the godly ought worthily to abhor: which is, that there should be imagined some perfecter rule of life, than this common rule which is giuen of God to the whole Church. Whatsoeuer is builded vpon this foundation, can not be but abhominable.

13 But they bring an other proofe of their perfection, which they thinke to be most strong for them. For the Lorde saide to the yong man that asked him of the perfection of righteousnes, If thou wilt be perfect, sell al that thou hast and giue it to the poore. Whether they do so or no, I do not yet dispute: but graunt them that for this present. Therfore they boast that they be made perfect by forsaking al theirs. If the summe of perfection stande in this, what meaneth Paul when he teacheth, that he which hath distributed al his goods to the poore, vnlesse he haue charitie, is nothing? What maner of perfection is this, which if charitie be absent, is brought with man to nothing? Here they must needes answere, that this is the chiefest in deede, but not the only worke of perfection. But here also Paul crieth against them, which sticke not to make charitie the bonde of perfection, without any such forsaking. If it be certaine that betweene the maister and the disciple is no disagremẽt, and the one of them clearely denieth the perfection of man to consist in this that he should forsake all his goods, and againe affirmeth, that perfection is without it: we must see howe that saying of Christ is to be taken, If thou wilt be perfect, sell all that thou hast. Nowe, it shalbe no darke sense, if we weigh (which we ought alway to marke in all the preachinges of Christ) to whom these wordes be directed. A yong man asketh, by what workes hee shall enter into euerlasting life. Christ, because hee was asked of workes, sendeth him to the lawe, and rightfully: for it is the way of eternall life, if it be considered in it selfe, and is no otherwise vnable to bring saluation vnto vs but by our owne peruersnesse. By this answere Christ declared, that hee teacheth no other rule to frame life by, than the same that had in old time ben taught in the lawe of the Lorde. So did he both giue witnesse to the law of God, that it was the doctrine of perfect righteousnesse: and therewithall did meete with sclaunders, that he shoulde not seeme by any newe rule of life to stirre the people to forsaking of the lawe. The young man beeing in deede not of an euill minde, but swelling with vaine confidence, answered that he had from his childehoode kept all the commaundementes of the law. It is most certaine that hee was an infinite space distant from that to which he boasteth that he had attained. And if his boasting had beene true, he had wanted nothing to the highest perfection. For we haue before shewed, that the lawe containeth in it selfe perfect righteousnesse: and the same appeareth hereby that the keeping of it is called the way of eternal saluation. That he might be taught to knowe how litle he had profited in that righteousnesse, which he had too boldly aunswered that he had fulfilled, it was profitable to shake out a familiar fault of his. When he aboundeth in richesse, he had his heart faſtened vpon them. Therefore becauſe he felt not this ſecret wound, Chriſt launced him. Go (ſaith he) ſell all that thou haſt. If he had beene ſo good a keeper of the lawe as he thought he was, he would not haue gone away ſorrowful when he heard this worde. For who ſo loueth God with all his heart, whatſoeuer diſagreeth with the loue of him, he not onely taketh it for dong, but abhorreth as bringing deſtruction. Therefore whereas Chriſt commanderh the couetous riche man to leaue all that he hath, it is all one, as if bee ſhould commaunde the ambitious man to forſake all honours, the voluptuous man all delites, and the vnchaſt man all the inſtrumentes of luſt. So conſciences that are touched with no feeling of generall admonition, muſt bee called backe to the particular feeling of their owne euill. Therefore they do in vaine drawe this ſpeciall caſe to general expoſition, as though Chriſt did ſet the perfection of a man in forſaking of goods: wheras he meant nothing elſe by this ſaying, than to driue the young man that ſtoode to much in his owne conceite, to ſeele his owne ſore, that he might vnderſtand that he was yet a great way diſtant from perfect obedience of the lawe, which otherwiſe he did falſely take vpon him. I grant that this place hath ben euil vnderſtãded of ſome of the fathers, and that thereupon grew this coueting, of wilfull pouertie, whereby they only were thought to be bleſſed, which forſaking all earthly thinges, did dedicate themſelues naked to Chriſt. But I truſt that al the good & not contentious men wil be ſatisfied with this my expoſition, ſo that they ſhal no more doubt of the meaning of Chriſt.

Popish monkes howv vnlike to the monkes of olde euen in reſpect of their verie order and profeſſion.

14 Howbeit the fathers thought nothing leſſe, thã to ſtabliſh ſuch perfection, as hath ſince ben framed by the cowled ſophiſters, thereby to raiſe vp a double chriſtianity. For ỹ doctrine ful of ſacrilege was not yet borne, which cõpareth the profeſſion of monkery to baptiſme, yea & openly affirmeth, ỹ it is a forme of ſecond baptiſme. Who cã doubt that the fathers with al their heart abhorred this blaſphemy? Now as touching that laſt thing, which Auguſtine ſaith to haue ben among the olde monkes, that is, ỹ they applied thẽſelues wholy to Charitie: what neede I to ſhewe in wordes that it is moſt far from this new profeſſion? The thing it ſelfe ſpeaketh, that all they that goe into Monaſteries, depart from the Church. For why? Doe not they ſeuer themſelues from the lawful felowſhip of the faithful. in taking to themſelues a peculiar miniſtery and priuate miniſtration of Sacramentes? What is it to diſſolue the communion of the Church, if this be not it? And (that I may follow the compariſon which I beganne to make, and may once conclude it) what haue they in this behalfe like to the old monkes? They although they dwelt ſeuerally from other men, yet hadde not a ſeuerall Church: they did partake of the ſacramentes together with other: they appeared at ſolemne aſſemblies: there they were a part of the people. Theſe men, in erecting to themſelues a priuate altar, what haue they elſe done but broken the bond of vnitie? For they haue both excommunicate themſelues from the whole body of the Church, and haue deſpiſed the ordinarie miniſterie, whereby the Lord willed to haue peace & charity kept amõg his. Therfore how many miniſteries there be at this day, I ſay ỹ there be ſo many aſſemblies of ſchiſmatikes, which troubling the order of the church, are cut off from the lawful felowſhip of the faithful. And ỹ this departing ſhould not be ſecrete, they haue giuen to themselues diuers names of sects. Neither were they ashamed to boast of that, which Paul doth so detest that he can not sufficiently amplifie the hainousnes of it. Vnlesse perhap we thinke that Christ was diuided of the Corinthians, when one gloried of one teacher, & an other of an other: & that now it is done without any iniury to Christ, ỳ in steed of Christians we heare some called Benedictines, some Franciscanes, some Dominicanes: and that they are so called, that they themselues when they couet to be seuerally knowen from the common sort of Christians, do with great pride take these titles to them for the profession of their religion.

15 These differences which I haue hitherto rehearsed betweene the old monkes and the monkes of our age, are not differences in maners, but in the profession it self. Therfore let the readers remember that I haue rather spoken, of monkery than of monkes, & haue touched those faultes, not which stick in the lise of a few of them, but which can not be seuered from their very order of liuing it selfe. But what difference is in their maners, what neede I particularly to declare? This is certaine, ỳ there is no degree of men more defiled with all filthinesse of vices: no where more are factions, hatreds, affectiõs of parties, ambitions whottet than among them. In deed in a few monasteries they liue chastly, if it be to be called chastitie where lust is so farre kept downe that it be not openly euill spoken of: yet a man shal scarcely find euery tenth monastery which is not rather a stewes thã a holy house of chastity. But what honest sparing is in their diet? Swine be none otherwise fatted in sties. But least they should complaine that I handle them too vngently, I go no further. Howbeit in those fewe thinges which I haue touched, whosoeuer knoweth the thing it selfe wil confesse that there is nothing spoken accuserlike. Augustine, when according to his testimonie monkes excelled in so great chastity, yet complaineth that there were many vagabunds, which with euill craftes & deceits wiped simple men from their money, which with carying about the reliques of martyrs did vse filthy marchandisings, yea & in steede of the reliques of martyrs did shewe foorth the bones of any other dead men, & which with many such wicked doings sclandered the order. As hee reporteth that he saw no better men than them which haue profited in monasteries, so he lamenteth that he hath seene no worse men than those that disprofited in monasteries. What would he say if at this day he sawe all monasteries to swell, and in a maner to burst with so many and so dispeired vices? I speake nothing but that which is well knowen to all men. Yet doeth not this dispraise pertaine to all without any exception at all. For as there was neuer rule & discipline of liuing so holily stablished in monasteries, but that there remained some drones much vnlike the rest: so I doe not so that monkes are at this day so run out of kinde from that holy antiquity, but that they haue yet some good men in their flocke. But they lye hidden a fewe & scattered in that huge multitude of naughty & wicked men: & they are not only despised, but also lewdly railed at, & somtime cruelly handled of other, which (as the Milesians prouerbe is) thinke that there ought to be no place for any honest man among them.

A greater difference in the maners of these newe and those ancient monkes.

Somewhat amisse euen in the verie profession of monkerie, whiche vvas of olde.

16 By this compari son of the olde and present monkerie, I trust I haue brought to passe that which I purposed, that it may appeare that our cowled men do falſly pretende the example of the firſt Church for defence of their profeſsion: foraſmuch as they no leſſe differ from them then apes from men. In the mean time I ſticke not to declare, that euen in that olde forme which Auguſtine cõmendeth, there is ſomwhat which litle pleaſeth me. I grant that they were not ſuperſtitious in exacting the outward exerciſes of rougher diſcipline, but I ſay that there wanted not to much affectatiõ & wrongful zeale. It was a goodly thing, forſaking their goods, to be without al earthly carefulneſſe: but God more eſteemeth care to rule a houſeholde godlily, when a holy houſholder being looſe and free from all couetouſnes, ambition, & other deſires of the fleſh, trauaileth to this purpoſe to ſerue God in a certain vocation. It is a godly thing to play the Philoſopher in wilderneſſe far from the company of men: but it agreeth not with Chriſtian gentleneſſe as it were for hatred of mankind to fly into deſert and ſolitarineſſe, & therewithall to forſake thoſe duties which the Lorde hath chiefly commaunded. Although wee graunt that there was no other euill in that profeſſion, yet this verily was no ſmall euill, that it brought an vnprofitable and perillous example into the Church.

men

The vowes wherewith monkes at this day enter into that order: as firſt perpetual virginitie.

17 Nowe therefore let vs ſee what manner of vowes they be, wherwith monkes at this day are profeſſed into this goodly order. Firſt, becauſe their minde is to inſtitute a newe and fained worſhipping to deſerue Gods fauour: I concluded by the thinges afore ſpoken that whatſoeuer they vowe is abhominable before GOD. Secondely without any regarde of Gods calling, without any his allowance, they inuent for them ſuch a kinde of liuing as pleaſeth themſelues. I ſaye that it is a raſhe and therefore an vnlawefull enterpriſe: becauſe their conſcience hath nothing whereupon it may vpholde it ſelfe before GOD, and whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne. Moreouer when they binde themſelues to many peruerſe and wicked worſhippinges, which the monkery at this day containeth in it, I affirme that they be not conſecrate to God, but to the Deuill. For why was it lawfull for the Prophete to ſay, that the Iſraelites offered their children to Deuils and not to God: only for this that they had corrupted the true worſhipping of God with prophane Ceremonies: and ſhall it not bee lawefull for vs to ſay the ſame of monkes, which with their cowle do put vpon themſelues a ſnare of a thouſande wicked ſuperſtitions? Nowe what ſortes of vowes are there? They promiſe to GOD perpetuall virginitie, as though they hadde bargayned with God before, that he ſhoulde deliuer them from neede of marriage. There is no cauſe why they ſhoulde alleage, that they do not make this vowe but truſting vpon the grace of GOD. For ſith hee pronounceth that he giueth it not to all men, it is not in vs to conceiue a confidence of a ſpeciall gifte. Let them that haue it, vſe it. If at any time they feele themſelues to be troubled of their fleſhe, let them flee to this helpe by whoſe only power they may reſiſt. If they preuaile not, let them not deſpiſe the remedy that is offered them. For they by the certaine word of God are called to mariage, to whom power of continence is denied. Continence I call, not whereby the body is onely kept cleane from whoredome, but whereby the minde keepeth chaſtitie vndefiled. For Paul commaundeth not onely outwarde wantonneſſe, but alſo the burning of the minde, to be auoyded. This (ſay they) they) hath from furtheſt time of memorie beene obſerued, that they which would dedicate themſelues wholy to the Lorde, ſhoulde binde themſelues to the vowe of continence. I grant in deede that this manner hath alſo bin of auncient time receiued: but I do not graunt that that age was ſo free from all fault, that whatſoeuer was then done muſt be taken for a rule. And by litle & litle this vnappeaſable ſeueritie crept in, that after a vowe made there was no roome for repentance. Which is euident by Cyprian. If virgins haue of faith dedicate themſelues to God, let them continne ſhamefaſtly, and chaſtly without any faining. So being ſtrong and ſtedfaſt, let them looke for the reward of virginitie. But if they will not or cannot continue, it is better that they ſhoulde marrie than with their delightes fall into the fire. What reproches would they now ſpare to teare him withall, that woulde with ſuch equitie temper the vow of continencie? Therefore they are departed farre from that auncient manner, which will not onely admit no moderation or pardon if any be founde vnable to perfourme his vow: but they do without all ſhame pronounce that he ſinneth more greeuouſly if he remedie the intemperance of the fleſh with taking a wife, than if he defile both his body & ſoule with whoredome. Epi. 11.

18 But they ſtill enforce the matter, and goe about to ſhewe that ſuch a vowe was vſed in the Apoſtles time: becauſe Paul ſaith that the widowes which hauing beene once receiued into the Publike miniſterie did marrie, denied their firſt faith. But I do not denie to them, that the widowes, which bounde themſelues and their ſeruices to the Church, did therewithall take vppon them the bond of continuall vnmarried life: not becauſe they repoſed any religion therein, as it afterwarde began to be vſed: but becauſe they coulde not beare that office but being at their owne libertie and looſe from yoke of marriage. But if, when they had once giuen their faith, they looked backe to newe marriages, what was this elſe but to ſhake off the calling of God? Therfore it is no maruel that with ſuch deſires he ſaith that they waxe wanton againſt Chriſt. Afterwarde to amplifie the matter hee ſaieth, that they doe ſo not performe that which they haue promiſed to the Church, that they doe alſo breake and make void their firſt Faith giuen in Baptiſme: in which this is comprehended, that euery man ſhould anſwere his calling. Vnleſſe perhaps you had rather vnderſtande it thus, that hauing as it were loſt all ſhame, they did from thence foorth caſt away all care of honeſtie, did giue foorth themſelues to all wantonneſſe and vnchaſtitie, and did in licentious and diſſolute life reſemble nothing leſſe than Chriſtian women: which ſenſe I like verie well. Therefore we aunſwere, that thoſe widdowes which were then receiued to publike miniſterie, did lay vppon themſelues a bond to continue vnmarried: if they afterwarde married, wee eaſily perceiue that that happened to them which Paul ſpeaketh of, that caſting away ſhame they became more wanton than beſeemed Chriſtian women. That ſo they not only ſinned, in breaking their faith giuen to the Church, but ſwarued from the common law of godly women. But firſt I denie that they did profeſſe vnmarried life for any other reaſon, but becauſe marriage agreed not with that miniſterie which they tooke in hand: and I deny that they did bind themſelues at all to ſingle life, but ſo far as the neceſſitie of their vocation did beare. Againe I doe not graunt that they were so bounde, but that it was then also better for them to marrie, than either to be troubled with the prickings of the flesh, or to fall into any vncleanneſſe. Thirdly I say that that age is appointed of Paul, which is commonly out of danger: ſpecially ſith he commaundeth them only to be choſen, which contented with one marriage haue alreadie ſhewed a token of their continencie. And we do for no other reaſon diſallow the vow of vnmarried life, but becauſe it is both wrongfully taken for a ſeruice of God, and it is raſhly vowed of them to whome power of continencie is not giuen.

Saint Paules wordsconcerning widowes vvreſted vnto the maintenance of Nunnes.

19 But how was it lawfull to drawe this place of Paul to Nunnes? For there were created deaconiſſes, not to delight God with ſinging & with mũbling not vnderſtanded, & liue ỹ reſt of their time idle: but that they ſhould execute publike miniſtration toward the poore, that they ſhould with al ſtudie, earneſtnes & diligence, endeuour themſelues with the dueties of charitie. They did not vow vnmarried life, to yelde thereby any worſhip to God becauſe they abſtained from marriage: but onely becauſe they were thereby the more vncombred to execute their office. Finally they did not vowe it, either in the beginning of their youth, or yet in the middeſt of their flowing age, that they might afterward learn too late by experience into how great a headlong downfall they had throwen themſelues: but when they ſeemed to haue paſſed all danger, then they vowed a no leſſe ſafe than holy vowe. But (not to enforce their firſt two points) I ſay it was not lawful to haue women receiued to vowe continencie before the age of threeſcore yeares: forasmuch as the Apoſtle admitteth onely women of ſixtie yeares old, & commaundeth the yonger to marrie & bring foorth children. Therefore, neither that releaſe made of 12. yeares, and then 20. and afterward of thirtie yeares can be any way excuſed: and much leſſe is it tollerable, that ſillie maides, before that they can by age knowe themſelues, or haue any experience of themſelues, are not onely trained by fraude, but conſtrained by force and threateninges to put on thoſe curſed ſnares. I will not tarie vppon confuting the other two vowes. Onely this I saye: beſides this that they bee intangled with not a fewe ſuperſtitions, (as the matter is noweadayes) they ſeeme to bee made to this purpoſe, that they which vow them ſhould mock both God and men. But leaſt wee ſhoulde ſeeme too maliciouſly to ſhake vp euery ſmall parcell, wee will be content with that generall confutation which is aboue ſet.

The vvay for conſciences intangled vvith rash vovves to vnvvind themſelues.

20 What manner of vowes be lawfull and acceptable to God, I thinke is ſufficiently declared. Yet becauſe ſometime vnskilfull and fearefull conſciences, euen when they miſlike or diſallowe any vowe, do neuertheles doubt of the binding, & are greeuouſly tormented, when they both dread to break their faith giuen to God, & on ỹ other ſide they feare leaſt they ſhould more ſin in keping it: here they are to be ſuccoured, that they may wind thẽſelues out of this diſtreſſe. But, to take away all doubt at once: I ſay that all vowes being not lawfull, nor rightly made, as they are nothing worth before God, ſo ought to be void to vs. For if in contractes of men thoſe promiſes only do bind, in which he with whom we cõtract, would haue vs bound: it is an abſurditie, that we ſhould be driuẽ to the keeping of thoſe things which god doth not require of vs: ſpecially ſith our workes are no otherwiſe right, but when they pleaſe God, & when conſciences haue this teſtimonie that they pleaſe him. For this remaineth certaine, whatſoeuer is not of faith, is ſinne. Wherby Paul meaneth, that the worke which is taken in hande with doubting, is therefore faultie, becauſe faith is the roote of all good workes, by which we are aſſured that they be acceptable to God. Therefore if it bee lawful for a Chriſtian man to goe about nothing without this aſſuredneſſe: if by fault of ignorance they haue taken any thing in hande, why ſhould they not afterward giue it ouer when they be deliuered from errours? Sith vowes vnaduiſedly made are ſuch, they do not onlie nothing bind, but are neceſſarily to be vndone. Yea, what if they are not onelie nothing eſteemed, but alſo are abhominable in the ſight of God, as is aboue ſhewed? It is needleſſe to diſcourſe anie longer of a matter not needfull. This one argument ſeemeth to mee to be enough to pacifie godlie conſciences and deliuer them from all doubt: ỹ whatſoeuer works do not flow out of the pure fountaine and be not directed to the lawful end, are refuſed of God: and ſo refuſed that he no leſſe forbiddeth vs to goe forward in them, than to beginne them. For hereupon followeth, that thoſe vowes which proceede of errour and ſuperſtition, are both of no value before God, and to be forſaken of vs. Rom. 14. 23

Departure from monkerie to ſome other honeſt kinde of life iuſtifiable.

21 Moreouer he that ſhall know this ſolution, ſhall haue wherewith hee maie defende againſt the ſlaunders of the wicked, them that depart from monkerie to ſome honeſt kind of life. They are grieuouſly accuſed of breach of Faith & periurie, becauſe they haue broken (as it is commonly thought) the inſoluble bonde wherwith they were bound to God and to the Church. But I ſay ỹ there was no bond where God doth abrogate ỹ which man confirmeth. Moreouer, admitting that they were bound, when they were holdé intangled with not knowing of God, and with errour: nowe ſince they are lightened with the knowledge of the truth, I ſaie that they are therewithall free by the grace of Chriſt. For if the croſſe of Chriſt haue ſo great effectualneſſe, that it loſeth vs from the curſe of the law of God, wherwith we were holden bound, how much more ſhal it deliuer vs from foreine bonds, which are nothing but the ſnaring nets of Satan? To whomſoeuer therefore Chriſt ſhineth with the light of his Goſpell, it is no doubt that he looſeth them frō alſnares which they had put vpon themſelues by ſuperſtition. Howbeit they want not yet an other defence, if they were not fit to liue vnmaried. For if an impoſſible vow be a ſure deſtructiō of the ſoule, whom the Lord would haue ſaued and not deſtroied: it followeth that we ought not to continue therin. But how impoſſible is the vowe of continence to them that are not indued with a ſingular gift, wee haue alreadie taught, and experience ſpeaketh it though I holde my peace. For neither is it vnknowen with how great filthineſſe almoſt all monaſteries doe ſwarme. And if anie of them ſeeme honeſter, and more ſhamefaſt than the reſt, yet they are not therefore chaſt becauſe they ſuppreſſe and keepe in the fault of vnchaſtitie. So verily God doth with horrible examples take vengeance on the boldnes of men, which forgetting their owne weakneſſe, do againſt nature couet that which is denied them, and deſpiſing the remedies which the Lorde had giuen them at hand, do truſt that they can with ſtubborneſſe and obſtinacie ouercome the Gal. 3. 3.

diſeaſe of incontinence. For what elſe ſhall we call it but ſtubborneſſe, when one being warned that he needeth mariage, and that the ſame is giuen him of the Lord for a remedy, doth not onely deſpiſe it, but alſo bindeth himſelf with an oth to the deſpiſing of it?

The xiiii. Chapter.

Of Sacramentes.

The definition of a Sacrament.

BEſide the preaching of the Goſpell, an other helpe of like ſort is in the Sacramentes: of which to haue ſome certaine doctrine taught, is much behouefull for vs, whereby we may learne both to what end they were ordeined, and what is nowe the vſe of them. Firſt it is meete to conſider what is a Sacrament. It ſeemeth to mee that this ſhall bee a plaine and proper definition, if we ſay that it is an outwarde ſigne, wherewith the Lorde ſealeth to our conſciences the promiſes of his good wil toward vs, to ſuſtein the weakeneſſe of our faith: and we againe on our behalfes doe teſtifie our godlineſſe towarde him as well before him and the Angels as before men. We may alſo with more briefeneſſe define it otherwiſe: as to cal it a teſtimonie of Gods fauour towarde vs confirmed by an outward ſigne, with a mutuall teſtifying of our godlineſſe towarde him. Whetherſoeuer you chooſe of theſe definitions, it differeth nothing in ſenſe from that definition of Auguſtine, which teacheth that a Sacrament is a viſible ſigne of a holie thing, or a viſible forme of inuiſible grace: but it doeth better and more certainly expreſſe the thing it ſelfe. For whereas in that briefeneſſe there is ſome darkenes, wherein many of the vnskilfuller ſort are deceiued, I thought good in moe words to giue a fuller ſentence, that there ſhould remaine no doubt.

The auncient vſe of the vvorde Sacrament.

2 For what reaſon the old writers vſed this worde in that ſenſe, it is not hard to ſee. For ſo oft as the old tranſlator would render in Latine this Greek worde Myſterion myſterie, ſpecially when diuine matters were intreated of, hee tranſlated it Sacrament. So to the Epheſians, That hee might make knowen vnto vs the Sacrament of his will. Againe, if yet yee haue hearde the diſtribution of the grace of God, which is giuen to mee in you, becauſe according to reuelation the ſacrament was made knowen to me. To the Coloſſians, The myſterie which hath bin hidden from ages & generations, but now is manifeſted to his Saintes, to whom the Lorde would make knowen the riches of this Sacrament. &c. Againe, to Timothie, A great Sacrament of godlineſſe: God is openly ſhewed in the fleſh. He woulde not ſay a ſecrete, leaſt he ſhoulde ſeeme to ſay ſomewhat vnder the greatneſſe of the thinges. Therefore hee hath put Sacrament in ſteed of Secret, but of a holy thing. In that ſignification it is ſometime found among the eccleſiaſticall writers. And it is well enough knowen, that thoſe which in Latine are called Sacraments, in Greeke are Myſteries: which expreſſing of one thing in two ſeuerall words endeth all the contention. And hereby it came to paſſe that it was drawen to thoſe ſignes which had a reuerende repreſentation of high and ſpirituall thinges. Which Auguſtine alſo noteth in one place. It were long (ſaith he) to diſpute of the diuerſitie of ſignes, which when they pertaine to diuine things, are called Sacraments.

3 Now of this definition which we haue set, we vnderstande that a Sacrament is neuer without a promise going before it, but rather is adioyned as a certaine addition hanging to it, to this ende that it should confirme & seale the promise it self, & make it more approued vnto vs, yea after a certain manner ratified. Which meane the Lord foreseeth to be needefull first for our ignorance and dulnesse, and then for our weakenes: & yet (to speake properly) not so much to confirme his holy worde, as to stablish vs in the Faith thereof. For the trueth of God is by it selfe sound & certaine enough, and cannot from any other where receiue better confirmation than from it selfe. But our Faith, as it is small and weake, vnlesse it bee stayed on euery side, and be by all meanes vpholden, is by and by shaken, wauereth, staggereth, yea, and fainteth. And herein verily the mercifull Lorde according to his great tender kindnesse tempereth himselfe to our capacitie: that, whereas wee be naturall men, which alway creeping vpon the ground and sticking fast in the flesh, doe not thinke nor so much as conceiue any spirituall thing, he vouchsaueth euen by these earthly elements to guide vs vnto himselfe, and in the flesh it selfe to set forth a mirror of spirituall good things. For if wee were vnbodily (as Chrysostome saieth) hee woulde haue giuen vs the verie same things naked and vnbodily. Nowe because wee haue soules put within bodies, he glueth spirituall thinges vnder visible things. Not because there are such giftes planted in the natures of the thinges which are set foorth to vs in the Sacramentes: but because they were signed by God to this signification.

Sacraments ordained of God as seales of his promises, not that they but vve stood in neede of confirmation by such meanes.

Hom. 60 Ad popul.

4 And this is it which they commonly say, that a Sacrament consisteth of the worde and the outward signe. For wee must vnderstande the worde to bee, not that which being whispered without meaning and faith, with onelynoise as it were with a magicall enchantment hath power to consecrate the element: but which being preached maketh vs to vnderstande what the visible signe meaneth. Therefore that which was vsually done vnder the tyrannie of the Pope, was not without a great profaning of the mysteries. For they thought it ynough, if the Priest, while the people stoode amasedly gazing at it without vnderstanding, did mumble vp the forme of consecration. Yea, they of set purpose prouided this, that no whit of doctrine shoulde thereof come to the people: for they spake all thinges in Latine before vnlearned men. Afterward superstition brake out so farre, that they beleeued that the consecration was not formally made, vnlesse it were with a hoarse whispering sounde which fewe might heare. But Augustine teacheth farre otherwise of the Sacramentall worde. Let the worde (saith hee) bee added to the element, and there shal bee made a Sacrament. For whence commeth this so great strength to the water, to touch the bodie and washe the soule, but by the worde making it? not because it is spoken, but because it is beleeued, For in the verie worde it selfe the sounde which passeth is one thing, and the power which abideth is an other. This is the worde of Faith which wee preach, sayth the Apostle. Whereupon in the Actes of the Apostles it is saide, by faith cleansing their hearts. And Peter the Apostle saith, So baptisme also saueth vs: not the putting away of the filthines of the flesh, VVith the Sacraments the vvord of promise to be ioyned, not as they ioyne it in the Church of Rome, but as Christ did & taught his disciples after him to do.

flesh, but the examination of a good conscience. This is the worde of faith which we preach: by which without doubt, that it may bee able to cleanse, Baptisme also is halowed. You see how it requireth preaching, whereupon faith may grow. And we neede not to trauell much in proofe hereof, forasmuch as it is cleare what Christ did, what he commaunded vs to doe, what the Apostles followed, what the purer Church obserued. Yea euen from the beginning of the worlde it is knowen, that so oft as God offered any signe to the holy fathers, there was added an vnseparable knot of doctrine, without which our senses should be made amazed with bare beholding. Therefore when wee heare mention made of the Sacramentall word, let vs vnderstand the promise, which being with a loude voice preached of the minister, may leade the people thither as it were by the hande, whither the signe tendeth and directeth vs.

A sophistical dilemma to exclude the vse of sacraments.

5 Neither are some to be heard which trauel to fight against this, with a double horned argument rather suttle than sound. Either (say they) wee knowe, or we know not, that the worde of God which goeth before the sacrament, is the true will of God. If wee knowe it, then wee learne no newe thing of the sacrament which followeth after. If wee knowe it not, then neither will the sacrament teach it: whose whole force standeth in the worde. Wherunto let this briefely be for an answere: that the seales which are hanged at patents and other publike instruments, taken by themselues are nothing, for as much as they should be hanged in vaine if the parchment had nothing written in it: yet they do not therefore not confirme and seale that which is written, when they be added to writings. Neither can they say that this similitude is lately fained by vs, which Paul himselfe vsed, calling Circumcision a seale, where he purposely trauelleth to proue, that Circumcision was not righteousnes to Abraham, but a sealing of that couenant, by faith whereof he had alreadie bene iustified before. And what, I beseech you is there that may much offend any man, if we teach that the promise is sealed with sacraments, when of the promises themselues it is euident that one is confirmed with another? For as euery one is manifester, so is it more fit to vphold faith. But the Sacraments do both bring most cleare promises, and haue this peculiar more than the word, that they liuely represent them to vs as it were painted out in a table. Neither ought that distinction any thing to moue vs, which is wont to be obiected, betweene Sacraments and seales of patents: that whereas both consist of carnall elements of this worlde, those cannot suffice or be meete to seale the promises of God, which are spiritual and euerlasting, as these are wont to be hanged to, for sealing of the grants of Princes concerning fading and fraile things. For a faithfull man, when the sacramentes are present before his eyes, sticketh not in that fleshly sight, but by those degrees of proportion, which I haue spoken of, hee riseth vp with godly consideration to the high mysteries which lie hidden in the Sacraments.

6 And sith the Lorde calleth his promises, couenantes: and his Sacramentes, seales of couenants: a similitude may well bee brought from the couenants of men. What can a sow killed worke, if wordes were not vsed, yea vnlesse they went before? For sowes are many times killed without any more inward or higher myſterie. What can the giuing of a mans right hand do, ſith oftentimes handes are matched with enmitie? But when wordes haue gone before, by ſuch ſignes the lawes of leagues are ſtabliſhed, although they were firſt conceiued, made, and decreed in wordes. Therefore Sacramentes are exerciſes which make the credit of the worde of God certainer vnto vs: and becauſe we are carnall, they are deliuered vnder carnall thinges, that ſo they ſhould inſtruct vs according to the capacitie of our dulneſſe, and guide vs by the hande as ſchoolemaiſters guide children. For this reaſon Auguſtine calleth a Sacrament, a viſible word: becauſe it repreſenteth the promiſes of God as it were painted in a table, & ſetteth them before our ſight cunningly expreſſed & as in an image. Other ſimilitudes alſo may be brought, whereby Sacraments may be more plainly ſet out, as if we call them pillers of our Faith. For as a building ſtandeth & reſteth vpon the foundation: yet by ſetting vnder of pillers, it is more ſurely ſtabliſhed: ſo, Faith reſteth vpon the worde of God, as vpon a foundation: but when Sacramentes are added, it ſtaieth yet more ſoundly vpon them as vpon pillers. Or if wee call them looking glaſſes, in which we maie beholde the riches of the grace of God, which he giueth vs. For (as we haue alreadie ſaid) he doeth in them manifeſtly ſhewe himſelfe to vs, ſo much as is giuen to our dulneſſe to know, and doeth more expreſſely teſtifie his good will and loue towarde vs than by his worde.

In Ioh. hom. 80. Lib. 19. cont. Fauſt.

7 Neither doe they reaſon fitly enough to the purpoſe, when they labour to proue hereby that they are not teſtimonies of the grace of God, becauſe they are alſo giuen to the wicked, which yet do thereby feele God nothing more fauourable to them, but rather procure to theſelues more grieuous damnation. For by the ſame argument neither ſhoulde the Goſpell, which is heard and deſpiſed of manie, be the teſtimony of the grace of God: nor yet Chriſt himſelf, which was ſeene and knowen of manie, of whom verie fewe receiued him. The like wee maie alſo ſee in patentes. For a great parte of the multitude laugheth at and ſcorneth that authentike ſeale, howſoeuer they know that it proceeded from the Prince to ſeale his will withall: ſome regarde it not, as a thing not pertaining to them: ſome alſo abhorre it: ſo that conſidering this ſo egall relation of both, that ſame ſimilitude which I haue aboue vſed, ought more and more to be liked. Therefore it is certain that the Lorde doeth offer vnto vs mercie and a pledge of his grace both in his holie worde and in the Sacramentes: but the ſame is not receiud but of them which receiue the word and Sacraments with ſure faith: like as Chriſt is offred of the father vnto ſaluation, to all, yet he is not acknowledged and receiued of all. Auguſtine in one place minding to declare the ſame, ſaide that the effectualneſſe of the worde is ſhewed foorth in the Sacrament: not becauſe it is ſpoken, but becauſe it is beleeued. Therefore Paul, when hee ſpeaketh to the faithfull, ſo entreateth of Sacraments that he includeth the cõmunion of Chriſt in them, as when he ſaith: all ye that are baptiſed, haue put on Chriſt. Againe, we are all one bodie and one ſpirite, which are baptiſed in Chriſt. But when he ſpeaketh of the wrongfull vſe of Sacramentes, he giueth no more to it than to colde and voide figures. Whereby hee ſignifieth, that howſoeuer the wicked and hypocrites with their peruerſeneſſe do either oppresse or darken or hinder the effect of the grace of God in the Sacraments, yet that withstandeth not but that where and so oft as it pleaseth God, both they may bring a true testimonie of the communicating of Christ, and the Spirite of God himselfe may deliuer & perform that which they promise. We determine therefore that Sacramentes are truely called testimonies of the grace of God, and as it were certaine seales of the good will which he beareth towarde vs: which by sealing it vnto vs, doe by this meane sustaine, nourish, confirme, and encrease our faith. As for the reasons which some are wont to obiect against this sentẽce, they are too trifling and weake. They say that if our Faith be good, it cannot be made better: for they say that it is no faith, but which without shaking, stedfastly, and without withdrawing, resteth vpon the mercie of God. It had beene better for such to pray with the Apostles that the Lorde woulde encrease their Faith, than carelesly to pretende such a perfection of faith, which neuer any of the sonnes of men hath obteined, nor any shall obtaine in this life. Let them answere, what maner of faith they thinke that he had which saide: I beleeue Lorde, helpe my vnbeleeuingnesse. For euen that faith, howsoeuer it was but a begon faith, was a good faith, and might bee made better when vnbeleeuingnesse were taken away. But they are confuted by no certainer argument than by their owne conscience. For if they confesse thẽselues sinners, (which whether they will or no they cannot denie) they must needes impute the same to the imperfection of their faith.

Sacramentes though miniſtred to the vvicked, teſtimonies neuertheleſſe of the good vvill of God, and effectuall to augment faith.

Although vve beleeue vvith all our hearts, and although it bee the vvorke of the holy Ghost, to beginne, mainteine and make perfect faith, yet are not the Sacramentes hereby proued vneffectuall to the increase of faith.

Act.8.37. Ephe.4.13. Psal.119.10. & 111.1. & 138.1. Psal.12 3.

8 But (saie they) Philip aunswered the Eunuch, that he might be baptized, if he beleued with al his heart. What place here hath the confirmation of Baptisme, where faith filleth the whole heart? Again I aske them whether they do not feele a good part of their heart void of faith: whether they doe not daily acknowledge newe encreases, The heathen man gloried that he waxed old with learning. Therefore we Christians be thrise miserable, if we waxe olde with profiting nothing, whose faith ought to go forward by all degrees of ages, till it growe into a perfect man. Therefore in this place to beleeue with all the heart, is not perfectly to beleeue Christ, but onely from the heart and with a syncere minde to embrace him: not to be ful with him, but with feruent affection to hunger, and thirst, and sigh toward him. This is the maner of the Scripture, to say that that is done with the whole heart, which it meaneth to be done syncerely and heartily. Of this sort are these sayinges: I haue in all my heart sought thee: I will confesse to thee in al my heart, and such other. As on the other side, where he rebuketh guilefull and deceitfull men, he vseth to reproch them with heart and heart. Then they say further, that if faith be encreased by Sacramentes, the holie Ghost is giuen in vaine, whose strength and worke it is to begin, mainteine, and make perfect faith. To whom indeede I graunt, that faith is the proper & whole worke of the holy Ghost, by whom being enlightened wee knowe God and the treasure of his goodnesse, and without whose light our mind is so blind, that it can see nothing, so senseless, that it can smell nothing of spirituall things. But for one benefit of God which they set forth, we consider three. For first the Lord teacheth & instructeth vs with his worde: then he strengtheneth vs with Sacraments: last of all he shineth into our mindes with the ſight of his holie ſpirite, and openeth an entry for the word and ſacraments into our hearts, which otherwiſe ſhould but ſtrike our eares, & be preſet before our eies, and nothing moue the inward partes.

Howw ſacramẽtes are ſaid to confirme faith.

9 Wherefore as touching the confirmation and encreaſe of faith, I would haue the reader warned (which I thinke I haue alredy in plaine wordes expreſſed) that I do ſo aſſigne that miniſterie to the ſacraments, not as though I thought that there is perpetually in them I wote not what ſecret force, by which they may of themſelues be able to further or confirme faith: but becauſe they are ordained of the lord to this end, that they ſhould ſerue to the ſtabliſhing and encreaſing of faith. But then onely they do truely performe their office, when that inward ſchoolemaſter the ſpirite is come to them, with whoſe onely power both the heartes are pearced, & affections are moued, and the entrie is ſet open for the ſacramentes into our ſoules. If hee be abſent, Sacraments can do no more to our minds, than if either the brightneſſe of the ſunne ſhould ſhine vpon blind eyes, or a voyce ſounde to deafe eares. Therefore I ſo make diuiſion betweene the ſpirit and ſacraments, that the power of working remaine with the ſpirite, and to the ſacramentes bee left onely the miniſtration, yea and the ſame voide and trifling without the working of the ſpirite: but of much effectualneſſe, when he inwardlye worketh and putteth forth his force. Nowe it is plaine in what ſort according to this ſentence, a godly minde is confirmed in the faith by ſacraments: that is to ſay, euen as the eyes ſee by the brightneſſe of the Sunne, and the eares heare by the ſounde of a voyce: of which neither the eies ſhoulde anie whit perceiue any light, vnleſſe they had a ſight in themſelues that might naturallie be enlightened, and the eares ſhould in vaine be knocked at with anie crying whatſoeuer it were, vnleſſe they were naturally made and fitte to heare. But if it be true, which ought at once to be determined among vs, that what the ſight worketh in our eies to ſeeing of the light, what the hearing worketh in our eares to the perceiuing of a voice, the ſame is the worke of the holy Ghoſt in our heartes, both to the conceiuing, and ſuſteining, and cheriſhing and ſtabliſhing of faith: then both theſe thinges doe likewiſe follow: that the ſacramentes doe nothing at al profite without the power of the holy Ghoſt: & that nothing withſtandeth but that in hearts already taught of that ſcholemaſter, they may make faith both ſtronger and more encreaſed. Onely this difference there is, that the power of hearing and ſeeing is naturally ſet in our eares and eies: but Chriſt beſide the meaſure of nature doth by ſpecial grace worke the ſame in our mindes.

By this doctrine concerning the force of ſacramẽts nothing taken frõ the powver of the holy ghoſt.

10 Whereby thoſe obiections alſo, which comber ſome men, are diſſolued: That if we aſcribe to creatures either the increaſe or confirmation of faith, there is wrong done to the Spirite of God, whom we ought to acknowledge the onely authour thereof. For neither doe wee in the meane time take from him either the praiſe of confirming or increaſing it: but rather we affirme, that euen this that he encreaſeth and confirmeth faith, is nothing elſe but with his inward enlightening to prepare our mindes to receiue that confirming which is ſet forth by the ſacramẽts. But if it be yet too darkely ſpoken, it ſhalbe made very cleare by a ſimilitude which I wil bring. If thou purpoſe with wordes to perſwade a man to doe anie thing, thou wilt ſearch out all the reaſons, whereby he may be drawen to thy opinion, and may be in a manner ſubdued to obey thy counſel. But thou haſt hitherto nothing preuailed, vnleſſe he likewiſe haue a percing & ſharpe iudgemẽt, wherbyhe may weigh what pith is in thy reaſons, vnleſſe alſo he haue a tractable wit & readie to harken to teaching: finally vnleſſe he haue conceiued ſuch an opinion of thy faithfulneſſe and wiſedome, as may be to him like a certaine foreiudgement to cauſe him to ſubſcribe. For both there are manie ſtobborne heades, which a man can neuer bowe with any reaſons: and alſo where credite is ſuſpected, where authoritie is deſpiſed, litle good is done euen with the willing to learne. On the other ſide let al thoſe thinges be preſent, they wil truely bring to paſſe ẏ the hearer, to whom thou giueſt counſell, will obey the ſelfe ſame counſels which otherwiſe he would haue laughed to ſcorne. The ſame worke alſo the ſpirite worketh in vs. For leaſt the worde ſhould beate our eares in vaine, leaſt the Sacramentes ſhould ſtrike our eies in vaine, he ſheweth vs that it is God which ſpeaketh therein, hee ſofteneth the ſtubbornes of our heart, & frameth it to the obedience which is due to the worde of the Lorde. Finally he conueieth thoſe outward words and ſacraments from the eares into the ſoule. Therefore both the word and the Sacraments do confirme our faith, when they ſet before our eies ẏ good wil of the heauẽly father toward vs, by knowledge of whom both the whole ſtedfaſtnes of our faith ſtandeth faſt, & the ſtrength of it encreaſeth: the ſpirit confirmeth it, when in engrauing the ſame confirmation in our minds he maketh it effectual. In the meane time the father of lightes can not bee forbidden, but as he enlightneth the bodily eies with the beames of the ſunne, ſo he may enlighten our mindes with ſacramentes, as with a brightneſſe ſet meane betweene.

As by the ſacraments, ſo alſo by the worde, faith ſowen increaſed & brought to ripenes through the forcible operation of the ſpirite.

11 Which propertie the Lord taught that there was in his outward word, when in the parable he called it ſeede. For as ſeede, if it fall vpon a deſerte and vntilled peece of ground, wil do nothing but die: but if it be throwen vpon arable lande wel manured and tilled, it wil bring forth her fruit with very good encreaſe: ſo the word of GOD, if it light vpon a ſtiffe necke, it will grow barren as that which is ſowen vpon ſand: but if it light vpon a ſoule manured with the hande of the heauenly ſpirite, it will be moſt fruitfull. But if there be like reaſon of ſeede and of the worde: as we ſay that out of ſeede corne both ſpringeth and encreaſeth, and groweth vppe to ripeneſſe: why may wee not ſaye that faith taketh out of the worde of GOD both beginning, encreaſe, and perfection? Paul verie wel expreſſeth both theſe things in ſundry places. For when he goeth about to put the Corinthians in remembrance how effectually God vſed his trauaile, he glorieth that he hath the miniſterie of the Spirite, as though the power of the holie Ghoſt were with an vnſeparable knot ioyned with his preaching, to enlighten and thoroughly moue the minde. But in an other place when he mindeth to admoniſh them, of what force the worde of God is of it ſelfe beeing preached by man, hee compareth the miniſters them ſelues to huſbandmen, whiche when they haue beſtowed their labour and trauaile in tilling the earth haue no more to do. But what ſhoulde tilling, and ſowing, & watering profit vnleſſe that which is ſowen ſhould receiue liuelineſſe by heauenly benefite?

Therefore?

Therefore he concludeth, that both he that planteth and he that watereth are nothing: but that all things are to be aſcribed to God, which alone giueth the encreaſe. Therefore the Apoſtles do in their preaching vtter the power of the ſpirit, ſo far as God vſeth the inſtrumentes ordeined by himſelfe to the ſetting forth of his ſpiritual grace. Yet we muſt kepe ſtill that diſtinction, that we remember, what man is able to do by himſelfe, and what is proper to God.

When ſacraments are remoued to take away men's confidence in thoſe thinges which thereby were confirmed, thi doeth shewe them to be meanes whereby faith grooweth, yet ſo that no power proper vnto God be tranſcribed frō him to them.

12 Sacraments are ſo confirmations of our faith, that many times when the Lord meaneth to take away the confidence of the very thinges that are by him promiſed in the Sacraments, he taketh away the ſacramentes themſelues. When he ſpoyleth and thruſteth away Adam from the gift of immortalitie, he ſaith: Let him not eate of the fruite of life, leaſt he liue for euer. What ſaith he? Could that fruite reſtore to Adam his vncorruption, from which he was now fallen? No. But this is all one as if he had ſaide: Leaſt hee ſhould enioy a vaine confidence if he keepe ſtil the ſigne of my promiſe, let that be ſhaken away from him which might bring him ſome hope of immortalitie. After this manner when the Apoſtle exhorteth the Epheſians to remember that they were ſorein geſts of the teſtaments, ſtraungers from the fellowſhip of Iſrael, without god, without Chriſt, he ſaith, that they were not partakers of Circumciſion. Whereby he doth (by figure of tranſnominatiō) ſignifie that they were excluded frow the promiſe it ſelfe, which had not receiued the ſigne of the promiſe. To their other obiection, that the glorie of God is conueyed to creatures, to whom ſo much power is aſcribed, and that thereby it is ſo farre diminiſhed, we haue in readines to anſwere that we ſet no power in creatures. Onely this we ſay, that God vſeth meanes and inſtruments, which he himſelfe ſeeth to be expedient: that all thinges may ſerue his glorie, foraſmuch as he is Lorde and iudge of all. Therefore as by bread and other nouriſhments hee feedeth our body: as by the ſunne he enlighteneth the world: as by fire he warmeth: yet neither bread, nor the ſunne, nor fire, are any thing but ſo farre as by thoſe inſtrumentes he doeth diſtribute his bleſſings vnto vs: ſo ſpiritually he nouriſheth faith by the Sacramentes, whoſe onely office is to ſet his promiſes before our eyes to be looked vpon, yea to be pledges vnto vs of them. And as it is our ducty to faſten none of our affiance in other creatures, which by the liberalitie and bountifulneſſe of God are ordeined to our vſes, and by the miniſterie whereof he giueth vs his giftes, nor to haue them in admiration, & prayſe them as cauſes of our good: ſo neither ought our confidence to ſticke faſt in the Sacramentes, nor the glorie of God to be remoued vnto them: but leauing all thinges, both our faith and confeſſion ought to riſe vp to him the author both of the ſacraments and of all things.

Epheſ. 2. 12.

The word Sacrament tranſlated from militarie vnto Chriſtian profeſſion: the power which ſacraments haue in augmenting faith not thereby diſproued.

13 Whereas ſome bring an argument out of the verie name of a Sacrament, it is nothing ſtrong. A Sacrament (ſay they) whereas it hath among allowed authors many ſignifications, yet it hath but one which agreeth with the ſignes: that is, whereby it ſignifieth that ſolemne oth which the ſouldier maketh to his capitaine when he entreth into profeſſion of a ſoldier. For as by that othe of warfare new ſouldiers do bind their faith to the capitaine, & profeſſe to be his ſoldiers: ſo by our ſignes we profeſſe Chriſt our capitaine, and and do teſtifie ỹ we ſerue vnder his banner. They adde ſimilitudes to make thereby the matter more plaine. As a gowne made the Romanes ſeuerally knowen from the Greekes which did weare clokes: as the verie degrees of men at Rome were diſcerned by their ſeuerall ſignes: the degree of Senators from the degree of knightes, by purple coate & piked ſhooes: againe a knight from a commoner, by a ring: ſo we beare our ſignes that may make vs ſeuerally knowen from prophane men. But by the thinges aboue ſaide it is euident enough that the olde writers, which gaue to the ſignes the name of Sacraments, had no regarde how this worde was vſed among Latine writers, but for their owne purpoſe fained this new ſignification, whereby they ſignified onely holy ſignes. But if wee wil ſearch the matter more deepely, it may ſeeme that they haue with the ſame relation applied this worde to ſuch a ſignification, wherewith they haue remoued the name of faith to that ſenſe wherein it is nowe vſed. For whereas faith is a trueth in performing promiſes: yet they haue called faith an aſſuredneſſe, or ſure perſuaſion which is had of the trueth it ſelfe. Likewiſe whereas a ſacrament is the ſouldiers part whereby he voweth himſelfe to his captaine: they haue made it the captaines parte, whereby he receiueth ſouldiers into roomes of ſeruice. For by the ſacrament the Lorde doth promiſe that hee will be our God, and that we ſhal be his people. But we paſſe ouer ſuch ſutleties: for aſmuch as I thinke I haue proued with arguments plaine enough, that they had reſpect to nothing elſe but to ſignifie that theſe are ſignes of holy and ſpirituall thinges. We receiue in deede the ſimilitudes which they bring of outwarde tokens: but wee allowe not that that which is the laſt point in the ſacramentes, is by them ſet for the chiefe, yea and onely thing. But this is the firſt point, that they ſhould ſerue our faith before God: the later point that they ſhould teſtifie our confeſſion before men. According to this later conſideration thoſe ſimilitudes haue place. But in the meane time let that firſt point remaine: becauſe otherwiſe (as we haue alreadie proued) the myſteries ſhould be but colde, vnleſſe they were helps to our faith, & additions to doctrine ordeined to the ſame vſe and ende.

As by ſome too litle, ſo by others too much force is aſcribed vnto ſacraments.

14 Againe we muſt be warned, that as theſe men do weaken the force, and vtterly ouerthrowe the vſe of ſacraments: ſo on the contrarie ſide there be ſome, which fain to ſacraments I wot not what ſecret vertues, which are no where read to be put in them by God. By which error the ſimple and vnskilfull are dangerouſly deceiued, while they are both taught to ſeeke the giftes of God where they cannot be found, & are by litle and litle drawen away from God, to embrace meere vanitie in ſteede of his veritie. For the Sophiſtical ſchooles haue taught with great conſent, that the Sacramentes of the newe lawe, that is to ſay thoſe which are nowe in vſe in the Chriſtian Church, do iuſtifie and giue grace, ſo that we doe not lay a ſtoppe of deadly ſinne. It cannot be expreſſed how pernitious and peſtilent this opinion is, and ſo much the more, becauſe in many ages heretofore, to the great loſſe of the Church it hath preuailed in a great part of the worlde. Truely it is vtterly diueliſh. For when it promiſeth righteouſnes without faith, it driueth ſoules headlong into deſtruction: then becauſe it fetcheth the cauſe of righteouſnes from the ſacraments, it bindeth the miſerable mindes of men alreadie readie of their owne accord to much bending to the earth, with this superstition that they rather rest in the sight of a bodily thing than of God himself. Which two things I would to God we had not so proued in experience, so litle neede they any long proofe. But what is a sacrament taken without fayth, but the most certaine destruction of the Church? For wheras nothing is to be loked for thereof without the promise, & the promise doeth no lesse threaten wrath to the vnlawful, than it offereth grace to the faithful: he is deceiued that thinketh that there is any more giuen to him by the sacraments, than that which being offred by the worde of God, he receiueth by fayth.

Wherevpon another thing also is gathered, ỹ the affiance of saluation hangeth not vpon the partaking of the sacrament, as though Iustification consisted therein: which wee know to be reposed in Christ only, and to be communicated vnto vs no lesse by the preaching of the Gospel, than by the sealing of the sacrament: and that without that it cannot wholly stand. So true is that which Augustine also writeth, ỹ inuisible sanctification may be without a visible signe, and agayne that a visible signe may be without true sanctification. For (as he also writeth in another place,) men do put on Christ sometime vntill the receiuing of a sacrament, sometime euen vntil the sanctification of life. And that first point may be common both to good and to euill: but this other is proper to the good and godly.

Liber. 4. de quæst. vet. testament.

Li. 5. de bap. cont. Donat. cap. 14.

The hidden grace not alwayes ioyned with the visible signe of the sacrament.

15 Hereupon cõmeth that distinction if it bee well vnderstanded, which the same Augustine hath often noted, betweene a sacrament, and the thing of the sacrament. For it not only signifieth, that the figure and trueth are there contained, but that they do not so hang togither, but that they may be seuered: and that euen in the verie conioyning the thing must alway be discerned from the signe, that wee giue not to the one that which belongeth to the other. He speaketh of the separation, when he writeth that ỹ sacraments do worke in the only elect that which they figure. Againe, when he writeth thus of the Iewes: When the sacraments were common to all, the grace was not common, which is the power of the sacraments. So nowe also ỹ washing of regeneration is common to all: but the grace it selfe, whereby the members of Christ are regenerate with their head, is not common to all. Agayne, in another place of the Supper of the Lorde, We also at this day receiue visible meate. But the sacrament is one thing, and the power of the sacrament another thing. What is this, that many receiue of the altar and dy, and in receiuing do dy? For the Lordes morsell was poyson to Iudas: not becausse he receiued an euill thing, but becausse he being euill receiued a good thing euillie. A litle after: The sacrament of this thing, that is of the vnity of the bodie and bloud of Christe, is somewhere prepared on the Lordes table dayly, somewhere by certaine distances of daies: and thereof is receiued vnto life to some, and vnto destruction to some. But the thing itselfe whereof it is a sacrament, is receiued vnto life to all men, but vnto destruction to no man, whosoeuer is partaker of it. And a litle before hee had saide, Hee shall not dy which eateth: but hee which pertayneth to the power of the sacrament, not to the visible sacrament: which eateth within, not without: which eateth with heart, not hee which presseth with tooth. Thus you heare euery where, that a sacrament is so seuered from his owne trueth by the vnworthineſſe of the receiuer, ỳ there remaineth nothing but a vaine & vnprofitable figure. But ỳ thou maiſt haue not a ſigne voide of trueth, but the thing with the ſigne, thou muſt conceiue by faith ỳ word which is there encloſed. So how much thou ſhalt by the ſacraments profite in communicating of Chriſt, ſo much profite ſhalt thou take of them.

Chriſt the ſubſtãce of al ſacraments & the only cauſe of righteouſnes: the ſacramentes effectual meanes to nourish the knowledge of Chriſt, though the vvicked lacking faith be not nourished by them.

16 If this be ſomewhat darke becauſe of the ſhortnes, I will ſet it out in mo wordes. I ſay that Chriſt is the matter, or (if thou wilt) the ſubſtance of al ſacraments: foraſmuch as in him they haue all their perfectneſſe, and do promiſe nothing without him. So much leſſe tolerable is the error of Peter Lombard, which doth expreſly make them cauſes of righteouſneſſe and ſaluation, whereof they be partes. Therefore bidding all cauſes farewell which mans wit doeth faine to it ſelfe, wee ought to ſtay in this one cauſe. Therefore how much we be by their miniſterie holpen to the nouriſhing, confirming, and encreaſing of the true knowledge of Chriſt in vs, and to the poſſeſſing of him more fully, and to the enioying of his richeſſe, ſo much effectualneſſe they haue with vs. But that is done when we doe with true faith receiue that which is there offered. Do the wicked thẽ (wilt thou ſay) bring to paſſe by their vnthankfulnes, that the ordinances of God be voide and turne to nothing? I anſwere that that which I haue ſaide, is not ſo to bee taken, as though the force and trueth of the ſacrament did hang vpõ the ſtate or will of him that receiueth it. For that which God hath ordained remaineth ſtedfaſt and keepeth ſtill his nature, howſoeuer men do varie. But ſith it is one thing to offer, an other to receiue: nothing withſtandeth but that the ſigne halowed by the word of God may be in deede that which it is called, and keepe his owne force: and yet that there come thereby no profite to an euill doer and wicked man. But Auguſtine doeth in fewe wordes well aſſoile this queſtion. If (ſaith he) thou receiueſt carnally, it ceaſſeth not to be ſpiritual: but it is not to thee. But as Auguſtine hath in the aforeſaide places ſhewed that a ſacrament is a thing nothing worth, if it be ſeuered from the trueth thereof: ſo in another place he giueth warning that euen in the verie conioyning needeth a diſtinction, leaſt we ſticke too much in the outward ſigne. As (ſaith he) to followe the letter, & to take the ſignes in ſteede of the thinges, is a point of ſeruile weakeneſſe: ſo to expounde the ſignes vnprofitably is a point of euill wandring errour. Hee nameth two faultes which are here to bee auoided: The one when we ſo take the ſignes as though they were giuen in vaine, and when with abacing or diminiſhing their ſecrete ſignifications by our enuiouſneſſe, wee bring to paſſe that they bring vs no profite at all. The other, when in not raiſing our mindes beyond the viſible ſigne, wee giue away to the Sacrament the prayſe of all thoſe good thinges which are not giuen vs but of Chriſt onely, and that by the holy Ghoſt, which maketh vs partakers of Chriſt himſelfe: and in deede by the helpe of the outward ſignes: which if they allure vs to Chriſt, when they bee wreſted an other way, the whole profite of them is vnworthilye ouerthrowen.

Lib. 3. de doct. Chriſt. cap. 9

Chriſt ſet foorth as by the vvorde ſo by the ſacra-

17 Wherefore let this remaine certaine, that there is no other office of the ſacraments than of the worde of God: which is to offer and ſette foorth Chriſt vnto vs, and in him the treaſures of heauenly grace: but they auaile or profit nothing, but being receiued by faith: euen as wine, or oyle, or any other liquor, though you poure it on largely, yet it will run beside and perish, vnlesse the vessels mouth be open to receiue it, and the vessel though it bee wette rounde about on the outside, shall neuertheless remaine emptie and voyde within. Beside this we must beware, least those things which haue bin written by the olde writers somwhat too gloriously to amplifie the dignitie of sacraments, should lead vs away into an error neere to this: namely that we should thinke that there is some secret power knit & fastened to the sacraments, ỳ they may of themselues giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost, like as wine is giuen in a cup: whereas onely this office is appointed to them by God, to testifie and stablish to vs the good will of GOD towarde vs, and do profite no further vnlesse the Holy Ghoste ioyne himselfe to them, which may open our mindes and heartes, and make vs partakers of this testimonie, wherin also do clearely appeare diuers and seueral graces of God. For the sacraments, as we haue aboue touched, are that thing to vs of God, which to men are messengers of ioyfull thinges, or earnestes in stablishing of bargaines: which doe not of themselues giue any grace, but doe tell and shewe vs, and (as they be earnestes & tokens,) do ratifie vnto vs those things that are giuen vs by the liberalitie of God. The Holy Ghoste (whome the sacraments do not in cõmon without difference bring to al men, but whom the Lorde peculiarly giueth to them that be his) is he that bringeth the graces of GOD with him, which giueth to the sacramentes place in vs, which maketh them to bring forth fruite. But although we doe not denie that God himselfe with the most present power of his Spirite is present with his own institution, least the ministration which he hath ordeined of the sacramentes should be fruitlesse and vaine: yet we affirme that the inward grace of the Spirite, as it is seuered from the outward ministerie, so ought to be seuerally weighed and considered. God therefore truly perfourmeth in deede whatsoeuer he promiseth and figureth in signes: neither do the signes want their effect, that the author of them may be prooued true and faithfull. The question here is onely whether GOD worketh by his owne and by inwarde power (as they call it) or do resigne his office to outwarde signes. But wee affirme, that whatsoeuer instruments he vse, his originall working is nothing hindered thereby. When this is taught concerning the sacramentes, both their dignitie is honorably set out, and their vse is plainely shewed, and their profitablenesse is abundantly reported, and the best meane in all these thinges is reteined, that neither any thing be giuen to them which ought not, nor againe any thing be taken from them which is not conuenient to be taken from them. In the meane time that fained deuise is taken away, whereby the cause of iustification and power of the holy Ghost is inclosed in elementes as in vessels or waggons, and that principal force which hath beene omitted of other is expresly set out. Here also it is to be noted, that God inwardly worketh ỳ which the minister figureth and testifieth by outwarde doing: least that be drawen to a mortall man, which God claimeth to himselfe alone. The same thing also doth Augustine wisely touch. Howe (saith he) doth both Moses sanctifie, and God? Not Moses for GOD: but Moses with visible sacramentes by his ministerie, but GOD with inuisible grace ments, whether auailable without faith, to whom they are auailable in them they work not by any secret included force, grace commeth with the sacraments not from the sacraments but from God.

Quæstio. vet. testam. libro 3. cap. 84.

grace by his holy Spirite: where also is the whole fruite of visible sacraments. For without this sanctification of inuisible grace, what doe those visible sacraments profit?

Thinges sometimes natural and somtimes miraculous vsed for sacramentes.

18 The name of sacrament, as we haue hitherto entreated of the nature of it, doth generally conteine al the signes that euer God gaue to mẽ, to certifie and assure them of the trueth of his promises. Those he sometime willed to remaine in natural thinges, sometime he deliuered them in miracles. Of the first kinde these bee examples, as when he gaue to Adam and Eue, the tree of life for an earneſt of immortalitie, that they might assure themselues of it, so long as they did eate of the fruite thereof. And when he did set the heauenly bowe for a monument to Noe and his posteritie, that hee woulde no more from thence foorth destroy the earth with ouerflowing of water. These Adam & Noe had for sacramentes. Not that the tree did giue them immortalitie, which it coulde not giue to it selfe: nor that the Bowe (which is but a striking backe of a sunbeame vpon the clouds against it) was of force to hold in the waters: but becaus they had a marke grauen in them by the worde of God, that they shoulde be examples and seales of his testamentes. And the tree was a tree before, and the bowe a bowe. When they were written vpon with the worde of God, then a newe forme was put into them, that they should beginne to be that which they were not before. That no man should thinke these thinges spoken without cause, the bowe it selfe is at this day also a witnesse of that couenant, which God made with Noe: which bowe so oft as we behold, wee reade this promise of God written in it, that the earth shall neuer be destroyed with ouerflowing of waters. Therfore if any fond Philosopher, to scorn the simplicitie of our faith, doe affirme that such varietie of colours doeth naturally arise of reflected beames and a cloude sette against them: lette vs graunt it in deede, but let vs laugh to scorne his senseleſſe follie, which doth not acknowledge God the Lorde and gouernour of nature: which at his owne will vseth all the elementes to the seruice of his owne glorie. If he had emprinted such tokens in the sunne, the starres, the earth, stones, and such like, they shoulde all haue beene sacramentes to vs. Why are not vncoyned & coyned siluer both of one value, sith they are both one metall? euen becaus the one hath nothing but nature: when it is stricken with a common marke, it is made money, and receiueth a new valuatiõ. And shal not God be able to mark his creatures with his word, that they may bee made sacramentes, which before were naked elements? Of the second kinde these were examples, when hee shewed to Abraham a light in a smoking ouen: when hee watered the fleece with dewe, the earth remaining drie: againe hee watered the earth, the fleece beeing vntouched, to promise victorie to Gideon: when he drewe the shadowe of the dial ix. lines backeward, to promise safetie to Ezechias. These thinges, when they were done to relieue and stablish the weakenesse of their faith, were then also sacraments.

Sacraments on Gods behalfe testimonies of grace, on ours notes and markes of profession.

19 But our present purpose is, to discourse peculiarly of those sacramentes, which the Lorde willed to bee ordinarie in his Church, to nourish his worshippers and seruauntes into one faith and the confession of one faith. For (to vse the wordes of Augustine) men can bee congeled together into into no name of religion either true or falſe, vnleſſe they be bound together with ſome fellowſhip of viſible ſignes and ſacraments. Sith therefore the moſt good father foreſawe this neceſſitie, hee did from the beginning ordeine certaine exerciſes of godlineſſe for his ſeruauntes, which afterwarde Satan by turning them to wicked and ſuperſtitious worſhippings, hath many waies depraued and corrupted. Hereupon came thoſe ſolemne profeſſions of the gentiles into their holy orders, and other baſtarde vſages: which although they were full of error and ſuperſtition, yet they alſo were therewith a proofe that men could not in profeſſion of religion bee without ſuch outward ſignes. But becauſe they neither were grounded vpon the worde of God, nor were referred to that trueth whereunto all ſignes ought to bee directed, they are vnworthie to bee rehearſed where mention is made of the holy ſignes which are ordeined of god & haue not ſwarued from their foundation, that is, that they ſhould be helpes of true godlineſſe. They conſiſt not of bare ſignes, as were the boawe and the tree, but vpon Ceremonies: or rather the ſignes that be here giuen are Ceremonies. But as it is aboue ſaide, that they be on the Lordes behalfe teſtimonies of grace & ſaluation: ſo they be againe on our behalfe markes of profeſſion, by which wee openly ſweare to the name of God, for our partes binding our faith vnto him. Therfore Chryſoſtome in one place fitly calleth them couenantings whereby God bindeth himſelfe in league with vs, and wee bee bounde to pureneſſe and holineſſe of life, becauſe here is made a mutuall forme of couenanting betweene God and vs. For as the Lorde therein promiſeth that hee will cancel and blot out whatſoeuer guiltines and penaltie we haue gathered by offending, and doth reconcile vs to himſelfe in his only begotten ſonne: ſo wee againe on our behalfes do by this profeſſion bind our ſelues vnto him to the following of godlineſſe and innocencie: ſo that a man may rightly ſay that ſuch ſacraments are ceremonies, by which God will exerciſe his people firſt to the nouriſhing, ſtirring vp, and ſtrengthening of faith inwardly, then to the teſtifying of religion before men.

Lib.9.contra Fauſt.Mani. ca.11.

10 And euen theſe ſacraments alſo were diuerſe, after the diuerſe order of time, according to the diſtribution whereby it pleaſeth the Lorde to ſhewe himſelfe after this or that manner to men. For to Abraham and his poſteritie Circumciſion was commaunded whereunto afterward puriſyings and Sacrifices, and other Ceremonies were added out of the lawe of Moſes. Theſe were the Sacramentes of the Iewes vntill the comming of Chriſt: at which comming thoſe being abrogate, two ſacramentes were ordeined, which nowe the Chriſtian Church vſeth, Baptiſme, and the Supper of the Lord. I ſpeake of thoſe that were ordeined for the vſe of the whole Church. For as for the laying on of hands, whereby the miniſters of the Church are entred into their office, as I doe not vnwillingly ſuffer it to be called a Sacrament, ſo I doe not recken it among the ordinarie ſacramentes. As for the reſt which are commonly called ſacramentes, what they are to bee accounted, wee ſhall ſee by and by. Howebeit the olde Sacramentes alſo had reſpect to the ſame marke, whereunto ours doe tende, that is, to direct and in a manner lead by the hand to Chriſt: or rather as images to repreſent him, and ſhewe him foorth to be knowen. For whereas wee haue alrea-

Whereunto pertaineth that heauenly paterne of the tabernacle and of the worſhipping in the lawe, which was giuen to Moſes in the mount. One onely difference there is, that thoſe did ſhadowe out Chriſt being promiſed, when he was yet looked for: theſe doe teſtifie him already giuen and deliuered.

The intente of circumciſion, purifyings & ſacrifices of the lavv. Gen.22.18. 21 When theſe things ſhal al be particularly and ech one ſeuerally declared, they ſhall bee made much plainer. Circumciſion was to the Iewes a ſigne, whereby they were put in minde, that whatſoeuer commeth of the ſeede of man, that is to ſaie the whole nature of man is corrupt, and hath neede of proyning. Moreouer it was a teaching, and token of remembrance whereby they ſhoulde confirme themſelues in the promiſe giuen to Abraham, concerning that bleſſed ſeede in whom all the nations of the earth were to bee bleſſed, from whom they had their owne bleſſing to be looked for. Nowe that healthfull ſeede (as we are taught of Paul) was Chriſte, in whome alone they hoped that they ſhould recouer that which they had loſt in Adam. Wherefore Circumciſion was to them the ſame thing which Paul ſaith that it was to Abraham, namely the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of faith: that is to ſaye, the ſeale whereby they ſhoulde be more certainely aſſured, that their faith, wherewith they looked for that ſeede, ſhoulde bee accounted to them of God for righteouſneſſe. But we ſhall vppon a better occaſion in an other place goe through with the compariſon of Circumciſion & Baptiſme. Baptiſinges and purifiynges did ſet before their eies their owne vncleanneſſe, filthineſſe and pollution, wherewith they were defiled in their own nature: but they promiſed an other waſhing, wherby al their filthineſſes ſhould be wiped and waſhed away. And this waſhing was Chriſt, with whoſe bloode we being waſhed doe bring his cleanneſſe into the ſight of GOD, that it may hide all our defilinges. Their Sacrifices did accuſe them of their owne wickedneſſe, and therewithall did teach, that it was neceſſarie that there ſhoulde bee ſome ſatisfaction which ſhoulde bee paide to the iudgement of God. That therefore there ſhoulde bee ſome one cheefe Biſhoppe, a mediatour betweene God and men, which ſhould ſatisfie God by ſhedding of bloude, and by offering of a ſacrifice which ſhould ſuffice for the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. This cheefe Prieſt was Chriſt: hee himſelfe ſhed his owne bloode: hee himſelfe was the Sacrifice: for hee offered himſelfe obedient to his father vnto death: by which obedience hee tooke away the diſobedience of man, which had prouoked the diſpleaſure of God.

The ſacraments of the newe teſtament baptiſme & the ſupper of the Lord, vvherein Chriſte ſhineth more clearely than in the ſacraments of the olde. 1.Iohn.5.6. 22 As for our ſacramentes, they doe ſo much more clearely preſent Chriſt vnto vs, as hee was more neerely ſhewed to men, ſince he hath ben truely deliuered of his father ſuch as he had beene promiſed. For baptiſme doth teſtifie vnto vs that we are cleanſed & waſhed, the Supper of thankeſgiuing teſtifieth that wee bee redeemed. In water, is figured waſhing: in bloode, ſatisfaction. Theſe two thinges are founde in Chriſt, which (as Iohn ſaith) came in water and bloode, that is to ſay that hee might cleanſe and redeeme. Of which thing the ſpirit of God alſo is a witneſſe. Yea there are three witnesses in one, Water, Bloud, and Spirite. In water and bloud we haue a testimonie of cleansing and redeeming: but the Spirite the principal witnesse bringeth vnto vs assured credite of such witnessing. This high mysterie hath notably welbin shewed vs in the crosse of Christ, when water and bloud flowed out of his holy side: which side for that cause Augustine rightfully called the fountaine of our Sacraments: of which yet we must entreate somewhat more at large. There is no doubt but that more plentifull grace also of the Spirite doth here shewe foorth it selfe if you compare time with time. For that pertaineth to the glory of the kingdō of Christ, as we gather out of many places, but specially out of the 7. Chapter of Iohn. In which sense we must take that saying of Paul, that vnder the lawe were shadowes, but in Christ is the body. Neither is it his meaning to spoile of their effect the testimonies of grace, in which Gods will was in the olde time to prooue himselfe to the Fathers a true speaker, euen as at this day he doeth to vs in Baptisme and in the holy Supper. But onelie his purpose was by waie of comparison to magnifie that which was giuen vs, least any should thinke it marvellous, that the Ceremonies of the lawe were abolished by the comming of Christ.

Ioh. 19. 34 Hom. in Ioh. 20.

Col. 2. 17.

23 But that same schoole doctrine (as I may also briefly touch this by the way) is vtterly to be hissed out, whereby there is noted so great a difference betweene the Sacramentes of the old and new law, as though those did nothing but shadow out the grace of God, and these doe presently giue it. For the Apostle speaketh no lesse honourably of those than of these, when hee teacheth that the Father did eate the same spirituall meate, which we eate, and expoundeth that same meate to be Christ. Who dare make that an emptie signe, which deliuered to the Iewes a true communion of Christ? And the grounde of the cause which the Apostle there handeleth, doeth plainely fight on our side. For, that no man trusting vpon a colde knowledge of Christ, and empty title of Christianitie, and outward tokens, should presume to despise the iudgement of God: he sheweth foorth examples of Gods seueritie to be seene in the Iewes: that we should knowe that the same paines which they haue suffered, hang ouer vs, if wee followe the same faultes. Now that the comparison might be fitte, it behoued that he should shew that there is no vnequalnesse betweene vs & thē in those good things whereof hee did forbid vs to boast falsely. Therefore first hee maketh vs equall in the Sacramentes, and leaueth to vs not so much as any smal peece of prerogatiue, that might encourage vs to hope of escaping vnpunished. Neither verily is it lawfull to giue any more to our Baptisme, than he in an other place giueth to circumcision, when he calleth it the seale of the righteousnesse of Faith. What soeuer therefore is at this day giuen vs in our Sacramentes, the same thing the Iewes in olde time receiued in theirs, that is to say, Christ with his spirituall riches. What power our Sacramentes haue, the same they also felt in theirs: that is to say, that they were to them seales of Gods good will towarde them, into the hope of eternall saluation. If they had beene apt expositors of the Epistle to the Hebrues, they woulde not haue so beene blinded. But when they reade there, that sinnes were not cleansed by the Ceremonies of the law, yea ỹ the old shadowes had no auai-ling force to righteousnesse: they neglecting the comparison which is there handled, while they tooke holde of this one thing, that the law of it self nothing profited the folowers of it, thought simply that the figures were voide of trueth. But the Apostles meaning is to bring the ceremoniall lawe to nothing, vntill it come to Christ, vpon whom alone hangeth all the effectualnesse of it.

What is spokē in scripture to diminish the estimation of circumcision, the same in like occasion and sense might as well bee saide of baptisme.
1. Cor. 10. 5
1. Pet. 3. 21.
Col. 2. 11.

24 But they wil obiect those things which are read in Paul concerning the circumcision of the letter, that it is in no estimation with God, that it giueth nothing, that it is vaine. For such sayings seeme to presse it downe farre beneath Baptisme. Not so. For the verie same might rightfully bee saide of baptisme. Yea and also the same is saide, first of Paul himselfe, where hee sheweth that God regardeth not the outwarde washing whereby wee enter into profession of religion, vnlesse the minde within bee both cleansed and continue in cleanneſſe to the ende: againe of Peter, when he testifieth that the trueth of baptisme standeth not in the outwarde washing, but in a good witnessing of conscience. But he seemeth also in another place vtterly to despise the circumcision made with hande, when hee compareth it with the circumcision of Christ. I answere that euen in this place nothing is abated of the dignitie of it. Paul there disputeth against them, which required it as necessarie when it was now abrogate. Therefore he warneth the faithfull, that leauing the olde shadowes they should stande fast in the trueth. These maisters (saith he) instantly call vpon you, that your bodies may be circumcised. But yee are spiritually circumcised according to the soule and bodie. Ye haue therfore the deliuerance of the thing in deede, which is much better than the shadowe. A man might take exception to the contrary and say that the figure is not therefore to be despised because they had the thing in deed: forasmuch as the putting off of the olde man, of which he there spake, was also among the Fathers, to whom yet outward circumcision had not bin superfluous: He preuenteth this obiection, when he by and by addeth, that the Colossians were buried with Christ by Baptisme. Whereby he signifieth that at this day Baptisme is the same to Christians, which circumcision was to the old people: and therefore that circumcision cannot bee enioyned to Christians without wrong done to Christ.

The sacramēts of the lavv shadowes not in respect of their vvorking but in regard of their maner of signifying that vvhich is vvrought & spoken of as things of small account not simplie but vvhē Christ is seuered from them.

25 But that which followeth and which I euen nowe alleadged, is harder to assoyle, that all the Iewish ceremonies were shadowes of things to come, and that in Christ is the body: but most hard of all is that which is intreated in many Chapters of the Epistle to the Hebrues, that the blood of beasts, attained not to cōsciences: that the law had a shadow of good things to come, not an image of things: that the folowers of it obteined no perfection of the Ceremonies of Moses & such other. I go back to ỹ which I haue already touched, that Paul doth not therfore make the ceremonies shadowish, because they had no soūd thing in them: but because the fulfilling of them was after a certaine manner hanged in suspense vntil the deliuering of Christ. Againe I saie that this is to be vnderstanded not of the effectualnesse, but rather of the manner of signifying. For till Christ was manifestly shewed in the flesh, all the signes did shadowe him out as absent, howsoeuer hee did inwardly vtter to the faithfull the presence of his power and of himselfe.

But

But this we ought cheefely to marke, that in all those places Paul doeth not speake simply, but by way of contention. Because he striued with the false Apostles, which woulde haue godlinesse to consist in the Ceremonies onely without any respect of Christ: to confute them, it sufficeth onely to intreate, of what value Ceremonies are by themselues. This marke also the author of the Epistle to the Hebrewes followed. Let vs therfore remembrr that here is disputed of Ceremonies, not as they be taken in their owne and naturall signification, but as they be wrested to a false and wrongfull exposition: not of the lawfull vse of them, but of the abuse of superstition. What maruell is it therfore if ceremonies being seuered from Christ, are vnclothed of al force? For al signes whatsoeuer they be, are brought to nought, when the thing signified is taken away. So when Christ had to doe with them which thought that Manna was nothing else but meat for the bellie, hee applieth his speech to their grosse opinion, and saith that he ministreth better meat, which may feede soules to hope of immortalitie. But if you require a plainer solutiō, the summe of all tendeth to this: First, that all that furniture of ceremonies, which was in the lawe of Moses, is a vanishing thing and of no value, vnlesse it be directed to Christ. Secondly, that they so had respect to Christ, ỹ when he at length was manifestly shewed in the flesh, they had their fulfilling. Finally that it behooued that they should be taken away by his comming, euē as a shadowe vanisheth away in the cleare light of the sunne. But because I do yet differre longer discourse of that matter vnto that place where I haue purposed to compare baptisme with circumcision, therefore I do now more sparingly touch it. Iohn. 6. 27.

26 Perhaps also those immeasurable praises of Sacraments, which are read in old writers concerning our signes, deceiued those miserable Sophisters. As this of Augustine. That the Sacramentes of the olde lawe did onely promise the Sauiour, but ours do giue saluation. When they marked not that these and such other formes of speaking were spoken: they also published their excessiue doctrines, but in a cleane contrarie sense from the writing of the olde fathers. For Augustine meant no other thing in that place, than as the same Augustine writeth in another place, That the Sacramentes of the law of Moses did foretell of Christ, but ours do tel of him present. And against Faustus. That those were promises of things to be fulfilled, these were tokens of things fulfilled: as if he should say, that those figured him when he was looked for, but ours do as it were shewe him present which hath beene alreadie deliuered. Moreouer he speaketh of the manner of signifying, as also he sheweth in another place. The lawe (saith hee) and the Prophets had Sacramentes, foretelling of a thing to come: but the Sacraments of our time do testifie that that is alreadie come, which those did declare to be to come. But what he thought of the thing and effectualnesse, he exponndeth in many places: as when he saith, that the Sacraments of the Iewes were in signes, diuerse: but in the thing signified, equall with ours: diuerse in visible forme, but equal in spiritual power. Againe: in diuerse signes is all one faith: so in diuerse signes, as in diuerse wordes: because wordes change their soundes by times: and truely wordes are nothing but signes. The Fathers did drinke the same spirituall drinke, for they dronke not the same bodily drinke.

In vvhat sense the fathers haue so much extolled the sacraments of the nevv testament aboue the olde.

See ye therefore, Faith remaining one, the signes varied. To them the rock was Christ: to vs that is Christ which is set vpon the altar. And they dronke for a great Sacrament, the water flowing out of the rocke: what we drinke, the faithfull knowe. If thou consider the visible forme they dronke an other thing: if an vnderstandable signification they dronke the same spirituall drinke. In an other place, in the mysterie the same is their meate and drink which is ours: but the same in signification, not in forme: because the selfe same Christ was figured to them in the rocke, and shewed to vs in the flesh. Howbeit in this behalfe also we graunt that there is some differẽce. For both sacramentes doe testifie that the fatherly good wil of God and the graces of the holy Ghost are offered vs in Christ: but our Sacraments testifie it more clearely and brightly. In both is a deliuering of Christ: but in these more plenteous and fuller, namely as that difference of the olde and newe Testament beareth, of which we haue intreated before. And this is it that the same Augustine meant (whom we more often alleadge as the best and faithfullest witnesse of all the olde writers) where he teacheth that when Christ was reuealed, sacraments were ordained both in number fewer, in signification higher, in force more excellent. Of this thing also it is expedient that the readers briefely be warned, that whatsoeuer the sophisters haue trifflingly taught concerning the worke wrought, is not onely false, but disagreeth with the nature of the sacraments, which God hath ordained, ỹ the faythfull being voide and needie of all good thinges shoulde bring nothing thither but beggerie. Whereupon followeth that in receiuing them, these men doe nothing whereby they may deserue praise: or that in doing (which in this their respect is meerely passiue) no worke can be ascribed vnto them.

The xv. Chapter.

Of Baptisme.

The first vse of baptisme to be a token of our cleansing and therefore not a mark of recognisance & a signe of profession only as some vvould haue vs.

BAptisme is a signe of the entring wherewith we are receiued into fellowship of the Church, that being graffed into Christ, we may bee reckened among the children of God. Now it was giuen vs of God to this end, (which I haue taught to be common to all the mysteries) first, that it should serue to our faith with him, and to our confession before men. Wee will orderly declare the manner of both purposes. Baptisme bringeth three thinges to our Faith, which also must bee seuerally intreated of. This is he first which the Lorde setteth out vnto vs, that it should be a token and proofe of our cleansing: or (to expresse my minde better) it is like to a certaine sealed charter, whereby he confirmeth vnto vs, that all our sinnes are so defaced, cancelled, and blotted out, that they may neuer come in his sight, not be rehearsed, not be imputed. For he willeth that all they that beleeue, should be baptised into forgiuenesse of sinnes. Therefore they which thought that baptisme is nothing else but a marke and token whereby we professe our religion before men, as souldiers beare the conusance of their captain for a mark of their profession, weigh not that which was the cheefe thing in Baptisme. That is this, that we shoulde receiue it with this promise, that whosoeuer bebeleeue & are baptiſed, ſhalbe ſaued. Mar. 16. 16.

2 In this ſenſe is that to be vnderſtoode which Paul writeth, that the Church is ſanctified of Chriſt her ſpouſe, and cleanſed with waſhing of water in the word of life. And in another place, that we are ſaued according to his mercie by the waſhing of regeneration and of the renuing of the holie Ghoſt. And that which Peter writeth, that baptiſme ſaueth vs. For Pauls will was not to ſignifie, that our waſhing and ſaluation is perfectly made by water, or that water containeth in it ſelfe the power to cleanſe, regenerate, and renue. Neither did Peter meane the cauſe of ſaluation, but onely the knowledge and certaintie of ſuch giftes to be receiued in this Sacrament: which is euidently enough expreſſed in the wordes themſelues. For Paul knitteth together the worde of life, and baptiſme of water: as if he had ſaid, that by the Goſpel the meſſage of waſhing & ſanctifying is brought vs, that by baptiſme ſuch meſſage is ſealed. And Peter immediately adioyneth, that that baptiſme is not the putting away of the filthines of the fleſh, but a good conſcience before God, which is of Faith. Yea baptiſme promiſeth vs no other cleanſing, but by the ſprinkling of the bloud of Chriſt: which is figured by water, for the likeneſſe of cleanſing and waſhing. Who therefore can ſai: that wee be cleanſed by this water, which certainely teſtifieth that the bloud of Chriſt is our true and onely waſhing? So that from no where elſe can be fetched a ſurer reaſon to confute their blinde errour which referre all things to the power of the water, than from the ſignification of Baptiſme itſelfe: which doeth withdrawe vs as wel from that viſible element which is ſet before our eyes, as from all other meanes, that it may bind our mindes to Chriſt alone.

Our cleanſing not made by baptiſme as by a cauſe but manifeſted by it as by a ſigne. Ephe. 5. 26. Tit. 3. 5. 1. Pet. 3. 22.

3 Neither is it to be thought that Baptiſme is applied onely to the time paſt, that for new fallings, into which we fall backe after Baptiſme, we muſt ſeeke newe remedies of cleanſing in I wote not what other Sacramentes, as though the force of Baptiſme were worne out of vſe. By this errour it came to paſſe in olde time, that ſome would not be baptiſed but in the vttermoſt perill of life, and at their laſt gaſpings, that ſo they might obtaine pardon of their whole life. Againſt which waywarde ſuttle prouiſion the olde Biſhops ſo oft inueigh in their writinges. But thus we ought to thinke, that at what time ſoeuer we be Baptiſed, we are at once waſhed and cleanſed for all our life. Therefore ſo oft as we fall we muſt go back to the remembrance of baptiſme, & therewith we muſt arme our mind, that it may be alway certaine & aſſured of the forgiuenes of ſinnes. For though when it is once miniſtred, it ſeemeth to be paſt, yet by later ſinnes it is not aboliſhed. For the cleannes of Chriſt is therein offred vs: that alway floriſheth, is oppreſſed with no ſpots, but ouerwhelmeth & wipeth away all our filthines: yet ought we not to take thereof a libertie to ſinne in time to come (as verily we be not hereby armed to ſuch boldnes) but this doctrine is giuen onely to them, which when they haue ſinned, do grone wearied & oppreſſed vnder their ſins, that they maie haue wherewith they may raiſe vp & comfort themſelues, leaſt they ſhould fall into confuſion & deſperation So Paul ſaith, that Chriſt was made to vs a propitiator, vnto the forgiuenes of faults going before. Wherin he denieth not that therein is obtained perpetuall & continuall forgiueneſſe of ſinnes euen Baptiſme a cõfirmation of the waſhing out of all ſinne and not onely of ſinnes paſt before we be baptiſed. Rom. 3. 25.

euen vnto death: but he meaneth that it was giuen of the Father, onely to poore sinners, which wounded with the searing iron of conscience, doe sigh to the Phisition. To these the mercie of God is offred. They which by escaping of punishment do hunt for matter & libertie to sinne, doe nothing but prouoke to themselues the wrath and iudgement of God.

The force of baptisme as vvell as repentance extended throughout our vvhole liues.

4 I know in deede that it is commonly thought otherwise: that by the benefit of repentance & of the keies we do after Baptisme obtaine forgiuenesse, which at our first regeneration is giuen vs by only Baptisme. But they which deuise this do erre herein that they do not remember ỳ the power of the keies, whereof they speake, doth so hang vpon baptisme that it ought in no wise to be seuered. The sinner receiueth forgiuenesse by the ministerie of the Church, namely not without the preaching of the Gospel. But what maner of preaching is that? That wee bee cleansed from sinnes by the bloud of Christ. But what signe & testimonie is there of that washing, but Baptisme? We see therefore how that absolution is referred to Baptisme. And this error hath bred vs the fained Sacrament of penance: of which I haue touched somewhat before, & the residue I will make an end of in place fit for it. But it is no marueile if men, which according to the grossenesse of their wit were immeasurably fast tied to outward things, haue in this behalf also bewrayed that fault, that not contented with the pure institution of God, they did thrust in newe helpes fained of themselues. As though baptisme it self were not a Sacrament of repentance. But if repentance be commended to vs for our whole life, the force also of baptisme ought to be extended to the same bounds. Wherefore it is also no doubt but that all the godly throughout all their life long, so oft as they be vexed with knowledge in conscience of their own sinnes, dare cal back themselues to the remembrance of baptisme, that thereby they may confirme themselues in the affiance of that onely & continual washing which we haue in the blood of Christ.

A second vse of baptisme to shevv vs our mortification and newnes of life.

Rom. 6. 3.

5 It bringeth also another fruite, because it sheweth vs our mortification in Christ, & new life in him. For (as the Apostle saith) wee are baptised into his death, being buried together with him into death, that we may walke in newnesse of life. By which wordes he doth not only exhort vs to the following of him (as though he did say, that we are by baptisme put in minde, that after a certaine example of the death of Christ, we should die to our lustes: and after the example of his resurrection, we shoulde be raised vp to righteousnes,) but he fetcheth the matter much deeper: that is to say, that by baptisme Christ hath made vs partakers of his death, that we maie bee grafted into it. And as the graffe receiueth substance and nourishment of the roote into which it is graffed: so they that receiue baptisme with such faith as they ought, do truely feele the effectualnesse of the death of Christ in the mortifying of their flesh: and therewithall also they feele the effect of his resurrection in the quickening of the Spirite. Hereupon hee gathereth matter of exhortation: that if wee be Christians, wee ought to be dead to sinne, and to liue to righteousnesse. This selfe same argument he vseth in another place that we be circumcised, and haue put off the olde man, since that we be buried in Christ by Baptisme. And in this sense, in the same place which we haue before alleadged, he called it the washing of regeneration and of renuing.

Col. 2. 12.
Tit. 3. 5.

nuing. Therefore first free forgiueneſſe of ſinnes and imputation of righteouſnes is promiſed vs, and then the grace of the holie Ghoſt, which may reforme vs into newneſſe of life.

A third vſe of baptiſme to teſtifie our ingraffing into Chriſt, and partaking of his graces.

6 Laſt of al our faith receiueth alſo this profit of baptiſme, that it certainly teſtifieth vnto vs, that we are not onely graffed into the death & liſe of Chriſt, but that we are ſo vnited to Chriſt himſelfe that wee are partakers of al his good things. For therefore he hath dedicated and hallowed Baptiſme in his owne bodie, that he might haue it common with vs, as a moſte ſtrong bond of the vnitie and fellowſhid which he vouchſafed to enter into with vs: ſo that Paul proueth therby that we be the children of God, becauſe we haue put on Chriſt in baptiſme. So we ſee that the fulfilling of baptiſme is in Chriſt, whom alſo for this reaſon we cal the proper obiect of baptiſme. Therefore it is no marueile if it be reported that the Apoſtles baptiſed into his name, which yet were commaunded to baptiſe into the name of the Father alſo and of the holy Ghoſt. For whatſoeuer giftes of God are ſet foorth in baptiſme, are found in Chriſt alone. And yet it cannot bee, but that hee which baptiſeth into Chriſt, doe therewithall call vpon the name of the Father and of the holy Ghoſt. For we are therefore cleanſed with his bloud, becauſe the merciful Father according to his incomparable kindnes, willing to receiue vs into fauour, hath ſet him a mediatour in the middeſt to procure to vs fauour with him. But regeneration we ſo onely obtaine, by his death and reſurrection, if being ſanctified by the Spirit we be endued with a newe and ſpiritual nature. Wherefore both of our cleanſing & regeneration we obtaine and after a certaine maner diſtinctlie perceiue the cauſe in the Father, the matter in the Sonne, and the effect in the holy Ghoſt. So Iohn firſt baptiſed, ſo afterward the Apoſtles, with the baptiſme of repentance into the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: meaning by this worde repentance, ſuch regeneration: and by forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, waſhing.

The baptiſme of Iohn the ſame vvith that vvhich the apoſtles miniſtred howſoeuer the olde vvriters Chryſoſtome and Auguſtine ſeuer the one from the other.

7 Whereby alſo it is made moſt certaine, ỹ the miniſterie of Iohn was altogether the ſame which was afterward committed to the Apoſtles. For the diuerſe hands wherewith it is miniſtred, make not the baptiſme diuers: but the ſame doctrine ſheweth it to be the ſame baptiſme. Iohn and the Apoſtles agreed into one doctrine: both baptiſed into repentance, both into the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, both into the name of Chriſt, from whome was both repentance and forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Iohn ſaid ỹ he was the lambe of God, by whome the ſinnes of the world ſhould be taken away: where hee made him the ſacrifice acceptable to the Father, the propitiator of righteouſnes, the author of ſaluation. What could the Apoſtles adde to this confeſſion? Wherefore let it trouble no man, that the old writers labor to ſeuer the one from the other, whoſe voice we ought not ſo much to eſteeme that it maye ſhake the certaintie of the ſcripture. For who wil rather harken to Chryſoſtome denying that forgiuenes of ſinnes was comprehended in the baptiſme of Iohn, than to Luke contrariwiſe affirming ỹ Iohn preached the baptiſme of repentance into the forgiueneſſe of ſinne? Neither is that ſuttletie of Auguſtine to be receiued, that in the baptiſme of Iohn ſinnes were forgiuen in hope, but in the baptiſme of Chriſt they are fotgiuē in deede. For whereas the Euangeliſt plainely teſtifieth, that Iohn in his baptiſme promiſed the forgiuenes of sinnes: what neede we to abate this title of commendatiō, when no necessitie compelleth vs vnto it? But if any man seeke for a difference out of the worde of God, he shall finde none other but this, that John baptised into him that was to come, the Apostles into him that had already presented himselfe.

The baptising not diuerse because the graces of the spirite were diuerse which followed the ministerie of Iohn, & of Christs Apostles, yea euen of thapostles before and after Christes ascensiō.

8 As for this that more abundant graces of the Spirite were poured out since the resurrection of Christ, it maketh nothing to stablishe a diuersitie of baptismes. For the baptisme which the Apostles ministred while he was yet conuersant in earth, was called his: yet it had no larger plentifulnesse of the spirite, than the baptisme of John. Yea, euen after his ascension, the Spirite was not giuen to the Samaritans aboue the common measure of the faithfull before the ascension, although they were baptised into the name of Iesus, till Peter and John were sent vnto them to lay their handes vpon them. This onely thing, as I thinke, deceiued the olde writers, that they sayde that the baptisme of John was but a preparation to the baptisme of Christe, because they reade, that they were baptised againe of Paul, which had once receiued the baptisme of Iohn. But how much they were herein deceyued, shal elsewhere be plainly declared in place fit for it. What is it therefore that Iohn said, that he baptised in deede with water, but that Christ shoulde come which should baptise with the holy Ghost, and with fire? This may in fewe wordes be assoyled. For he meant not to put difference betweene the one baptisme and the other, but he compared his owne person with the person of Christ, saying that himselfe was a minister of water, but ỹ Christe was the giuer of the holy Ghost, and should declare his power by visible miracle the same day that hee shoulde sende the holy Ghost to the Apostles vnder fyrie tongues. What could the Apostls boast of more than this? What more could they also that baptise at this day? For they be onely ministers of the outward signe, and Christ is the author of the inward grace: as the same olde writers themselues do euery where teach, & specially Augustine, whose principall stay against the Donatistes is this, that what a one soeuer he be that baptiseth, yet onely Christ is ruler of it.

Act.2.8

The grace of mortification & purification assured vnto vs by baptisme shadowed to the people of Israell darkely vnder other figures, 1. Cor.10.2 Exod.14.21

9 These things which we haue spoken both of mortification & of washing, are shadowed out in the people of Israel, whome for the same cause the Apostle saith to haue beene baptised in the cloud and in the sea. Mortifiyng was figured, when the Lord deliuering them out of the hande of Pharao and from cruell bondage, made for them a way through the red sea, and drowned Pharao himselfe, and the Aegyptians their enemies, that followed them harde at their backes, and were euen in their necks to ouertake them. For after the same maner also he promiseth to vs in baptisme, and by a signe giuen sheweth vs, that we are by his power brough forth and deliuered out of the thraldome of Aegypt, that is to say out of the bondage of sinne: that our Pharao is drowned, that is to say the diuel, although euen so also hee ceasseth not to exercise & wearie vs. But as that Aegyptian was not throwē downe into the bottome of the sea, but being ouerthrowen on the shore, did yet with terrible sight make the Israelites afraid, but could not hurt them: so this our enemie yet in deede threatneth, sheweth his weapons, is felt, but cannot ouercome. In the cloud was a signe of cleansing. For as thē the Lord

couered them with a cloude cast ouer them, and gaue them refreshing cold, least they should faint and pine away with too cruel burning of the sunne: so in baptisme wee acknowledge our selues couered and defended with the bloud of Christ, least the seueritie of God, which is in deede an intollerable flame, should lie vpon vs. But although this mysterie was then darke & knowen to fewe: yet because there is none other way to obtaine saluation, but in those two graces, God would not take away the signe of them both from the old fathers, whome he had adopted to be heires. Num.9.14.

10 Nowe it is cleare, how false that is which some haue lately taught, & wherein some yet continue, that by baptisme wee bee loosed and deliuered from originall sinne, and from the corruption which was from Adam spread abroade into his whole posteritie, and that wee bee restored into the same righteousnes and purenes of nature, which Adam should haue obtained, if he had stand fast in the same vprightnesse wherein he was first created. For such kinde of teachers neuer vnderstood what was originall sinne, nor what was originall righteousnesse, nor what was the grace of baptisme. But wee haue alreadie proued, that original sinne is the peruersenesse and corruption of our nature, which first maketh vs giltie of the wrath of God, and then also bringeth forth workes in vs, which the Scripture calleth the workes of the flesh. Therefore these two points are seuerally to be marked, namely that we being in all partes of our nature defiled and corrupted are alreadie for such corruption only, holden worthily condemned & conuicted before God, to whome nothing is acceptable but righteousnes, innocencie and cleannesse. Yea, & verie infants themselues bring their owne damnation with them frō their mothers wombe. Who, although they haue not yet brought forth the fruites of their iniquitie, yet haue the seede thereof inclosed within them. Yea, their whole nature is certaine seede of sinne, therefore it cannot but be hateful and abhominable to God. The faithfull are certified by baptisme ỹ this damnation is taken away, and driuen from them: forasmuch (as wee haue alreadie said) the Lord doth by this signe promise vs that full and perfect forgiuenesse is graunted both of the fault which should haue beene imputed to vs, & of the paine which wee should haue suffred for the fault: they take hold also of righteousnes, but such as the people of God may obtaine in this life, that is to say by imputation only: because the Lord of his owne mercie taketh them for righteous and innocent. Faithful men by baptisme not rid of originall sinne but certified first that condemnation vvherunto the corruption of their nature hath made them subiect is done away. Gal.5.19.

11 The other point is, that this peruersnesse neuer ceasseth in vs, but continually bringeth forth new fruits, namely those works of the flesh which we haue before described: none otherwise than a burning fornace continually bloweth out flame & sparcles, or as a spring infinitely casteth out water. For lust neuer vtterly dieth & is quenched in men, vntill being by death deliuered out of the bodie of death, they haue vtterly put off themselues. Baptisme in deede promiseth vs ỹ our Pharao is drowned, & the mortification of sin: yet not so ỹ it is no more, or may no more trouble vs, but only that it may not ouercome vs. For so long as we liue enclosed within this prison of our body, the remnants of sinne shall dwell in vs: but if we holde fast by faith the promise giuen vs of God in baptisme, they shall not beare rule nor reigne. But let no man deceiue himselfe: Let no man flatter himselfe in his owne Secondly that the vvorkes of the flesh shal not beare rule and haue dominion ouer them.

owne euil, when he heareth that sinne alway dwelleth in vs. These thinges are not spoken to this end, that they should careleslly sleepe vpon their sins, which are otherwise too much inclined to sinne: but onely, that they should not faint & be discouraged, which are tickled and pricked of their flesh. Let them rather think that they are yet in the way, and let them beleeue ỹ they haue much profited, when they feele that there is dayly somewhat minished of their lust, til they haue attained thither whither they trauail, namely to ỹ last death of their flesh, which shalbe ended in the dying of this mortall life. In the meane time let them not cesse both to striue valiantly, and to encourage them to go forward, and to stirre them vp to full victorie. For this also ought more to whet on their endeuours, that they see ỹ after that they haue long trauailed, they haue yet no small businesse remaining. This we ought to holde: we are baptised into the mortifying of our flesh, which is begon by baptisme in vs, which we daily follow: but it shalbe made perfect when wee shall remoue out of this life to the Lord.

Baptisme according to Saint Paul the earnest of our regeneratiõ. the vveakenesse of our nature hereunto, & the greatnesse of our comfort notvvithstãding this vveakenesse.

Rom. 6. 14.

12 Here we say no other thing, than the Apostle Paul in the seuenth Chapter to the Romanes most clearely setteth out. For after that he had disputed of free righteousnes, because some wicked men did thereof gather, that we might liue after our owne lust, because we should not be acceptable to God by the deseruings of workes: he addeth, that al they that are clothed with the righteousnes of Christ, are therewith regenerate in Spirite, & that of this regeneration wee haue an earnest in baptisme. Hereupon he exhorteth the faithfull, that they suffer not sinne to haue dominion in their members. Now because he knewe that there is alway some weakenesse in the faithfull: that they should not therfore be discouraged, he adioyneth a comfort, that they are not vnder the lawe. Because againe it might seeme, that Christians might grow insolent, because they are not vnder the yoke of the lawe, he entreateth what maner of abrogating that is, and therewithal what is the vse of the lawe: which question he had nowe the seconde time differred. The summe is, that we be deliuered from the rigor of the lawe, that wee should cleaue to Christ: but that the office of the lawe is, that wee being conuinced of our peruersenes should confesse our owne weakenesse and miserie. Nowe forasmuch as that peruersenesse of nature doeth not so easily appeare in a prophane man, which followeth his own lustes without feare of God: he setteth an example in a man regenerate, namely in himselfe. Hee saith therefore that he hath a continuall wrastling with the remnants of his flesh, and that he is holden bounde with miserable bondage, that he cannot consecrate himselfe wholly to the obedience of the law of God. Therefore he is compelled with groning to crie out. Vnhappy am I. Who shal deliuer me out of this body subiect to death? If the children of God be holden captiue in prison so long as they liue, they must needes be much carefully grieued with thinking vpon their owne perill, vnlesse this feare be met withal. Therefore he adioyneth to this vse a comfort, that there is no more damnation to them that are in Christ Iesu. Where he teacheth, that they whom the Lord hath once receiued into fauour, engraffed into the communion of his Christ, hath by baptisme admitted into ỹ fellowship of his church, while they continue in the faith of Christ, although they bee besieged of ſinne, yea and carie ſinne about within them, yet are acquited from guiltines & condemnation. If this be the ſimple and naturall expoſition of Paul, there is no cauſe why we ſhould ſeeme to teach any new vnwonted thing.

Baptiſme the bande of our profeſſion.

13 But Baptiſme ſo ſerueth our confeſſion before men. For it is a marke, whereby we openly profeſſe that we ſhould be accounted among the people of God: whereby we teſtifie that we agree with all chriſtians into the worſhipping of one God and into one religion: finally wherby we openly affirme our faith: that not only our hearts ſhould breath out the praiſe of God, but alſo our tongue, and al the members of our body ſhoulde ſounde it out with ſuch vtterances as they be able. For ſo, as we ought, all our thinges are employed to the ſeruice of the glorie of God, wherof nothing ought to be void, and other may by our example be ſtirred vp to the ſame endeuours. Heere-vnto Paul had reſpect, when hee asked the Corinthians whether they had not beene baptiſed into the name of Chriſt: meaning verily, that euen in this that they were baptiſed into his name, they auowed themſelues vnto him, ſwore to his name, and bound their faith to him before men, that they could no more confeſſe any other, but Chriſt alone, vnleſſe they would forſake the confeſſion which they had made in baptiſme.

1. Cor. 1. 2.

The author of baptiſme is alſo the vvorker of grace ſpiritual therein figured not incloſed.

14 Now ſith it is declared what our Lorde had regard vnto in the inſtitution of baptiſme: it is plaine to iudge what is the way for vs to vſe and receiue it. For ſo farre as it is giuen to the raiſing, nouriſhing and confirming or our faith, it is to be taken as from the hande of the author himſelfe: wee ought to hold it certaine and fully perſwaded, that it is he which ſpeaketh to vs by the ſigne, that it is he which cleanſeth vs, waſheth vs, & putteth away the remembrance of our ſinnes, that it is he which maketh vs partakers of his death, which taketh away from Satan his kingdome, which feebleth the forces of our luſt, yea which groweth into one with vs, that being cloathed with him we may be reckoned the children of God: that theſe things, I ſay, he doth inwardly ſo trulie and certainely performe to our ſoule, as wee certainely ſee our bodie outwardly to be waſhed, dipped, and clothed. For this either relation, or ſimilitude, is the moſt ſure rule of Sacramentes: that in bodily things we ſhould behold ſpiritual things, as if they were preſently ſet before our eyes, foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed the Lord to repreſent them by ſuch figures: not for that ſuch graces are bound and encloſed in the Sacrament, that they ſhould be giuen vs by the force thereof: but onely becauſe the Lorde doth by this token teſtifie his will vnto vs, that is, that he will giue vs all theſe things. Neither doth he onely feede our eyes with a naked ſight, but he bringeth vs to the thing preſent, and together fulfilleth that which it figureth.

Cornelius and Paul by baptiſme not indued vvith grace but aſſured that they vvere endued through faith, vvithout vvhich baptiſme doth but teſtifie our vnthankefulnes.

15 Hereof let Cornelius the captaine be an example, which was baptiſed, hauing before receiued forgiueneſſe of ſinnes and viſible graces of the holy Ghoſt: ſeeking not by baptiſme a larger forgiueneſſe but a more certain exerciſing of fayth, yea an encreaſe of confidence by a pledge. Peraduenture ſome man will obiect: why therefore did Ananias ſay to Paul, that he ſhould waſhe away his ſinnes by baptiſme, if ſinnes bee not waſhed away by the power of baptiſme it ſelfe? I anſwere: We are ſayd to receiue, to obtaine, to get that which ſo farre as concerneth the feeling of our fayth, is giuen vs of

Act. 9. 17.

of the Lord, whether he doe then firſt teſtifie it, or being teſtified doth more and certainlier confirme it. This therfore only was the meaning of Ananias: that thou maieſt be aſſured Paul, that thy ſinnes are forgiuen thee, be baptiſed. For the Lorde doth in baptiſme promiſe forgiuenes of ſins: receiue this, and be out of care. Howbeit I meane not to diminiſh the force of baptiſme, but that the thing and the truth is preſent with the ſigne, ſo farre as GOD worketh by outwarde meanes. But of this Sacrament, as of all other, we obtaine nothing but ſo much as we receiue by Fayth. If we want faith, it ſhall be for a witneſſe of our vnthankefulneſſe, whereby we may be declared guilty before God, becauſe we haue not beleeued the promiſe there giuen. But ſo
1. Cor. 12. 13 far as it is a ſigne of our confeſſiō, we ought by it to teſtifie that our affiance is in the mercy of God, and our cleanneſſe is in the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, which is gotten vs by Ieſus Chriſt: and that by it we enter into the Churche of Chriſt, that wee may with one conſent of Fayth and charitie liue of one minde with all the faythfull. This laſte pointe did Paule meane, when he ſaieth that we are all baptiſed in one Spirite, that wee may be one body.

16 Now if this be true which we determine, that a Sacrament is not to be waied according to his hande of whom it is miniſtred, but as of the very hand of God, from whom without doubt it proceeded: hereupon we may gather that nothing is added to it nor taken from it by the worthyneſſe of him by whoſe hand it is deliuered. And euen as among men, if a letter bee ſent, ſo that the hand & the ſeale be wel knowen, it maketh no matter who or what manner of man bee the carrier: ſo it ought to ſuffice to acknowe the hande and ſeale of the Lorde in his Sacramentes, by what carrier ſoeuer they be brought. Hereby the errour of the Donatiſtes is very well confuted, which meaſured the force and value of the Sacrament by the worthines of the miniſter. Such at this day are our Catabaptiſtes, which deny that wee be rightly baptiſed, becauſe we were baptiſed by wicked men & idolaters in the popiſh kingdome: therefore they turiouſly cal vpon vs to be baptiſed againe. Againſt whoſe follies we ſhalbe armed with a reaſō ſtrong enough, if we think that we were profeſſed by baptiſme not into the name of any man, but into the name of the Father, the Sonne, and the holye Ghoſt, and that therefore it is not the baptiſme of man, but of GOD, of whomſoeuer it bee
Matt. 28. 19 miniſtred. Although they were neuer ſo much ignorant or deſpiſers of God and all godlineſſe, which baptiſed vs, yet they did not baptiſe vs into the fellowſhippe of their owne ignorance or ſacrilege, but into the fayth of Ieſus Chriſt: becauſe they called not vpon their owne name, but the name of GOD, nor baptiſed vs into any other name. Nowe if it were the baptiſme of God, it hath verily encloſed in it a promiſe of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, the mortifiyng of the fleſh, the ſpiritual quickning, and the partaking of Chriſt. So it nothing hindered the Iewes, to haue beene circumciſed of vncleane prieſtes and apoſtataes: neither was the ſigne therefore voyde, that it needed to be done of newe: but it was ſufficient to returne to the naturall beginning. Where they obiecte that baptiſme ought to bee celebrate in the aſſemblies of the godly, that prooueth not, that that which is faulty in part, ſhould deſtroy the whole force thereof. For when we teache

Nothing added vnto or taken from baptiſme by their vworthineſſe or vnvworthines vvhich are miniſters of it: & therfore rebaptization not to be receiued.

what ought to de done that baptiſme may be pure, and voide of all defiling, we doe not aboliſh the ordinance of God, although idolaters corrupt it. For when in old time Circumciſion was corrupted with many ſuperſtitions, yet it ceaſed not to be taken for a ſigne of grace: neither did Joſias and Ezechias, when they gathered out of all Iſrael them that had departed from God, call them to a ſeconde Circumciſion.

17 Nowe whereas they aske vs, what faith of ours hath yet followed baptiſme in certaine yeares paſt, that they might thereby prooue that the baptiſme is voyde, when it is not ſanctified vnto vs, but by the worde of promiſe receiued by faith: to this queſtion we anſwere that we in deede beeing blinde and vnbeleeuing, did in a long time not holde faſt the promiſe giuen vs in baptiſme: yet the promiſe it ſelfe, for as much as it was of God, continued alway ſtayed, ſtedfaſt, and true. Although all men be liers and faithbreakers, yet God ceaſeth not to be true: although all men be loſt, yet Chriſt remaineth ſaluation. We confeſſe therefore that Baptiſme, for that time profited vs nothing at all: foraſmuch as in it ỹ promiſe offered vs, without which baptiſme is nothing, lay nothing regarded. Nowe ſith by the grace of God, wee haue begonne to waxe wiſer, we accuſe our owne blindneſſe and hardneſſe of heart, which haue ſo long beene vnthankefull to his ſo great goodneſſe. But wee beleeue that the promiſe it ſelfe is not vaniſhed away: but rather thus we conſider, God by baptiſme promiſeth the forgiueneſſe of ſins, and ſith hee hath promiſed it, will vndoubtedly performe it to all that beleeue it. That promiſe was offered vs in baptiſme: by faith therefore let vs embrace it. It hath in deede long beene buried from vs becauſe of infidelitie: nowe therefore let vs receiue it by faith. Wherfore where the Lorde calleth the Iewiſh people to repentance, hee giueth them no commaundement of a ſeconde Circumciſion, which being (as we haue ſaide) circumciſed with a wicked and vngodly hande, liued a certaine time intangled with the ſame wickedneſſe. But he earneſtly calleth vpon the onely turning of the heart. Becauſe, howe ſoeuer the couenant was broken of them, yet the ſigne of the couenant, by the ordinance of the Lorde, remained alway ſtedfaſt and inuiolable. Therefore with the onely condition of repentance they were reſtored into the couenaunt which the Lorde had once made with them in circumciſion: which yet being receiued by the hand of a leaguebreaker prieſt, ſo much as in them lay, they had defiled againe, and the effect whereof they had quenched.

Baptiſme not made void by their remaining a long time in blindneſſe that are baptiſed.

Rom. 3.3.

18 But they thinke that they ſhake a firy dart at vs, when they alleadge that Paul rebaptiſed them which were once baptiſed with the baptiſme of John. For if by our owne confeſſion, the baptiſme of John was altogether the ſame that ours is nowe: euen as they hauing beene before peruerſely inſtructed, when they were taught the true faith, they were againe baptiſed into it: ſo that baptiſme, which was without true Doctrine, is to be taken for nothing, and we ought to be newely baptiſed againe into ỹ true religion, wherwith we are nowe firſt inſtructed. Some thinke, that there was ſome wrongfully affectioned man to Iohn, which had entred them with their firſt baptiſme rather to a vaine ſuperſtition. Of which thing they ſeeme to gather a coniecture hereupon, becauſe they confeſſed themſelues to bee vtterly igno-ignorant of the Holy Ghost: whereas Iohn verily woulde neuer haue ſent away from himſelf ſcholers ſo vntaught. But neither is it likely that the Iewes although they had not beene baptiſed at all, were deſtitute of all knowledge of the holy Ghoſt, which is famouſly ſpoken off by ſo many teſtimonies of the ſcripture. Whereas therefore they aunſwere that they knowe not whether there bee a hoy Ghoſt, it is to be vnderſtanded as if they had ſaid that they haue not yet heard, whether the graces of the Spirit, of which Paul aſked them, were giuen to the Diſciples of Chriſt. But I graunt that that was the true baptiſme of Iohn, and all one and the ſelfe ſame with the baptiſme of Chriſte: but I denie that they were baptiſed againe. What then meane theſe wordes, they were baptiſed in the name of Ieſus? Some doe expounde it, that they were but inſtructed of Paul with true doctrine. But I had rather vnderſtande it more ſimplie, to bee the baptiſme of the holy Ghoſt, that is to ſay, that the viſible graces of the Spirite were giuen them by the laying on of handes: which to bee expreſſed by the name of baptiſme, is no newe thing. As on the day of Pentecoſt it is ſaide, that the Apoſtles remembred the wordes of the Lorde, concerning the baptiſme of fire and of the ſpirite. And Peter ſaith that the ſame came to his remembrance, when hee ſawe thoſe graces powred out vpon Cornelius, and his houſholde and kinred. Neither is that contrarie which is after adioyned, When he had laid his handes on them, the Holy Ghoſt came downe vpon them. For Luke doeth not tell of two diuerſe thinges: but followeth the manner of telling commonly vſed among the Hebrewes, which do firſt propound the ſumme of the matter, and then doe ſet it out more at large. Which euery man may perceiue by the very framing together of the wordes. For hee ſaith, When they had hearde theſe thinges, they were baptized in the name of Ieſus. And when Paul had laide his handes vpon them, the holy Ghoſt came downe vpon them. In this latter ſentence is deſcribed, what manner of baptiſme that was. If ignorance doe ſo corrupt a former Baptiſme, that it muſt bee amended with a ſecond baptiſme: the Apoſtles ſhould haue beene rebaptiſed firſt of all, which in whole three yeares after their baptiſme, had ſcarcely taſted anie ſmall parcel of purer doctrine. And now among vs what riuers might ſuffice to renewe ſo many waſhinges, as there be ignorances by the mercie of the Lord daily amended in vs?

Act. 1.5.

Act. 11.16.

Acceſſaries inuentions of men added vnto Chriſtes inſtitution of baptiſme.

19 The force, dignitie, profit, and end of the myſterie if I be not deceiued, ought by this time to bee plaine enough. So much as concerneth the outwarde ſigne, I would to God the naturall inſtitution of Chriſte had prevailed ſo much as was meete, to reſtrain the boldnes of men. For, as though it were a contemptible thing to be baptiſed with water according to the precept of Chriſt, there is inuented bleſſing, or rather inchaunting, to defile ỹ true halowing of ỹ water. Afterward was added a taper with chreſme: but the blowing ſemeth to open the gate to baptiſme. But although I am not ignorant, howe auncient is the beginning of this added packe: yet it is lawful both for me and all the godly to refuſe whatſoeuer things men haue preſumed to adde to the ordinance of Chriſt. When Satan ſaw that by the fooliſh light credite of the worlde at the verie beginnings of the Goſpell his deceits were eaſily receiued, he brake forth into groſſer mockeries. Hereupon ſpittle, tle, & like trifles, were openly brought in with vnbrideled libertie to the reproch of baptiſme. By which experiences let vs learne that nothing is either holier, or better, or ſafer, than to be content with the authoritie of Chriſt alone. How much better therefore was it, leauing ſtagelike pompes, which daſell the eyes of the ſimple, and dull their mindes, ſo oft as anie was to be baptiſed, that he ſhould be preſented to the aſſemblie of the faithful, and be offered to God, the whole Church looking on as a witneſſe: & praying ouer him: that the confeſſion of faith ſhould be rehearſed, wherewith he that is to be catechiſed ſhould be inſtructed: that the promiſes ſhoulde bee declared which are contained in Baptiſme: that the inſtructed ſhoulde be baptiſed in the name of the Father, and the ſonne, and the holie Ghoſt: at length that he be ſent away with praiers and thankeſgiuing. So is nothing omitted that might make to the matter, and that the onely ceremonie which proceeded from God the author therof, ſhould moſt clearely ſhine, beeing not ouerwhelmed with anie forreine filthines. But whether he be wholy dipped which is baptiſed, & that thriſe or once, or whether he be but ſprinkled with water onely powred vpon him, it maketh very little matter: but that ought to be at libertie to Churches according to the diuerſitie of countries. Howbeit the verie worde of baptizing ſignifieth to dip, and it is certaine that the maner of dipping was vſed of the old Church.

Baptiſme not to be adminiſtred by priuate men.

20 This alſo pertaineth to the purpoſe, to knowe that it is done amiſſe if priuate men take vpon themſelues the adminiſtration of baptiſme. For as well the diſtribution of this as of the ſupper is a part of the eccleſiaſtical miniſterie. For Chriſt did not commaunde women, nor yet euerie ſort of men, that they ſhould baptize: but whom he had ordained his Apoſtles, to them he gaue this commandement. And when he commanded his diſciples to do that in the miniſtration of the Supper which they had ſeene him do, when he executed the office of a right diſtributer: he would without doubt, that they ſhoulde therein follow his example. As for this that in many ages paſt, yea and in a maner at the verie beginning of the Church, it hath beene receiued in vſe, ỹ lay men might baptiſe in peril of death, if the miniſter were not preſent in time. I ſee not with howe ſtrong a reaſon it may be defended. The very old fathers themſelues, which either helde or ſuffered this maner, were not ſure whether it were wel done. For Auguſtine ſeemeth to haue this doubt, when he ſaith: Although a lay man compelled by neceſſitie doe giue baptiſme, I can not tell whether a man may godlily ſaie that it ought to bee iterate. For if it be done when no neceſſitie compelleth, it is the vſurping of an other mans office: but if neceſſitie enforceth, it is either none or a veniall ſinne. Moreouer of women it was decreed without any exception in the Councell at Carthage, that they ſhoulde not preſume to baptize at all. But there is daunger, leaſt if hee which is ſicke ſhoulde die without baptiſme, hee ſhoulde bee depriued of the grace of regeneration. Not ſo, God pronounceth that hee adopteth our infantes to bee his owne, before they bee borne, when hee promiſeth that hee will be a God to vs and to our ſeed after vs. In this worde is conteined their ſaluation. Neither ſhall anie man dare to bee ſo reprochfull againſt God, to denie that his promiſe is of it ſelfe ſufficient to worke the effect thereof. Howe much harme that doctrine being euil expounded, ỳ baptiſme is of neceſſitie to ſaluation, hath brought in, fewe doe marke: and therefore they take leſſe heede to themſelues. For where this opinion is growen in force, that all are loſt to whom it hath not happened to be waſhed with water, our ſtate is worſe thā the ſtate of ỳ old people, as though the grace of God were now more narrowly ſtrengthened than it was vnder the lawe. For Chriſt ſhall be thought to bee come, not to fulfill the promiſes, but to aboliſh them: foraſmuch as the promiſe which then was of it ſelfe effectuall enough to giue health before the eighth daie, now ſhould not be of force without helpe of the ſigne.

Lib. contra epiſt. parm. 2. cap. 13. Cap. c.

Women not authoriſed to baptiſe.

21 But howe the cuſtome was before that Auguſtine was borne, firſt is gathered of Tertullian, that it is not permitted to a woman to ſpeake in the Church, nor to teach, nor to baptiſe, nor to offer, that ſhee ſhoulde not claime to her ſelfe the executiō of any mans office, much leſſe of the prieſts. Of the ſame thing Epiphanius is a ſubſtantial witneſſe, where he reprocheth Marcion, that he gaue women libertie to baptiſe. Neither am I ignoraunt of their anſweare which thinke otherwiſe, that is, that common vſe much diffe-reth from extraordinarie remedy, when extreeme neceſſitie inforceth: but when he pronouncing that it is a mockerie to giue women libertie to baptiſe, excepteth nothing, it ſufficiently appeareth that he cōdemneth this corruption, ſo that it is by no color excuſable. Alſo in the third booke, where teaching that it was not permitted euen to the holy mother of Chriſt, he addeth no reſtrainte.

Sephora no preſident for womens taking vpon them to baptiſe.

22 The example of Sephora is vnſeaſonable alleaged. For whereas the Angell of God was appeaſed, after that ſhe taking a ſtone, circumciſed her ſonne, thereuppon it is wrongfully gathered that her doing was allowed of God. Otherwiſe it ought to bee ſaide, that the worſhipping which the nations that were brought out of Aſſyria raiſed vp, pleaſed God. But by other ſtrong reaſons it is prooued, that that which a fooliſh woman did, is wrongfully drawen to an example of imitation. If I ſhould ſay that it is a certaine ſingular caſe, which ought not to be made an example, & ſpecially ỳ ſith it is no where red that in olde time there was giuen to the prieſtes a ſpeciall cō-maundement to circumciſe, the order of circumciſion and Baptiſme is vnlike: this ſhoulde bee ſtrong enough to confute them. For the wordes of Chriſt are plaine: Goe ye, teach all nations, and baptiſe. When he ordeined the ſelfe ſame men publiſhers of the Goſpel, and miniſters of Baptiſme and none (as the Apoſtle witneſſeth) doeth take honour vppon himſelfe in the Church, but he that is called as Aaron: whoſoeuer without lawfull calling baptiſeth, he ruſheth into an other mans office. Euen in the ſmalleſt thinges, as in meate and drinke, whatſoeuer we enterpriſe with a doubtfull conſcience, Paul openly crieth out to be ſinne. Therefore in womens baptiſing is much more grieuouſly ſinne, where it is euident that they brake the rule appointed by Chriſte, foraſmuch as wee knowe that it is vnlawfull to plucke in ſunder thoſe things that God conioyneth. But al this I paſſe ouer. Onely I would haue the readers to note, that Sephoraes purpoſe was nothing leſſe, than to doe any ſeruice to God. Seing her ſonne to bee in danger, ſhe grudged, and murmured, and not without ſtomacking threwe the foreſkinne vpon the ground, ſhe ſo taunted her husbande, ỳ ſhe was alſo angry with God. Finally it is plaine that al this came of a furiousneſſe of mind, becauſe ſhe murmured againſt God and her husband, for that ſhe was compelled to ſhed the bloud of her ſonne. Moreouer if ſhe had in al other things behaued her ſelfe well, yet herein is an vnexcuſable raſh preſumption ỳ ſhe circumciſed her ſonne, her husband being preſent, not any priuate man, but Moſes the principall prophet of God, than whom there neuer roſe any greater in Iſraell: which was no more lawfull for her to doe, than at this day it is for women in the ſight of the biſhoppe. But this controuerſie ſhall by and by be eaſily taken away by this principle, that infantes are not debarred from the kingdome of heauen, whō it happeneth to depart out of this preſent life before that it be granted them to be dipped in water. But it is alredy proued that no ſmall wrong is done to the couenant of God, if we do not reſt in it, as though it were weake of it ſelfe: where as the effect thereof hangeth neither vpon baptiſme, nor vpon any additions. There is afterward added to it a Sacrament like a ſeale, not that it bringeth effectualnes to the promiſe of God as to a thing weake of it ſelfe, but onely confirmeth it to vs. Wherupon foloweth, that the children of the faithfull are not therefore baptiſed, that they may then firſt be made the children of God, which before were ſtrangers from the Church, but rather that they be therefore receiued by a ſolemne ſigne into the Church, becauſe by the benefit of the promiſe they did already belong to the body of Chriſt. Therfore if in omitting the ſigne there be neither ſlouthfulneſſe, nor contempt, nor negligence, wee are free from all danger. It is therfore much more holie, to giue this reuerence to the ordinance of God, that we ſeeke ſacramentes from no where elſe, than where the Lord hath left them. When we may not haue them of the Church, the grace of God is not ſo bound to them, but that we may obtain them by faith out of the word of the Lord.

The xvi. Chapter.

That the Baptiſme of infants doth very well agree with the inſtitution of Chriſt and the nature of the ſigne.

BVt foraſmuch as in this age, certaine phrentike Spirites haue raiſed vp ſore troubles in the Church for the Baptiſme of infantes, and do not yet ceaſe to turmoile: I can not chooſe but I muſt ioyne here an addition to reſtraine their furiouſneſſe. If peraduenture it ſhall ſeeme to ſome man to bee very much too long, let him (I beſeech him) weigh with himſelf, that we ought ſo much to eſteeme the pureneſſe of doctrine in a moſt great matter, together with the peace of the Church, that nothing ought to be lothſomely receiued, which may auaile to procure them both. Beſide that, I ſo ſtudie to frame this diſcourſe, that it ſhalbe of no ſmall importance to the clearer declaration of the myſterie of Baptiſme. They aſſayle the baptiſme of infants with an argument indeede fauourable in ſhew, ſaying that it is grounded vpon no inſtitution of Chriſt, but that it was brought in only by the boldnes of men, and peruerſe curiouſneſſe, & then afterward with fonde eaſineſſe raſhly receiued in vſe. For a Sacrament, vnleſſe it reſt vpon a certaine foundation of the word of God, hangeth but by a threede. But what if, when the matter is well considered, it shall appeare that the Lords holie ordinance is falsely and vniustly charged with such a slander? Let vs therefore search out the first beginning of it. And if it shall appeare, that it was deuised by the onlie rashnesse of men, then bidding it farewel, let vs measure the true obseruation of baptisme by the onely will of God. But if it shalbe prooued that it is not destitute of his certaine authoritie, we must beware, least in pinching the holie ordinances of God, we be also slanderous against the author himselfe.

The right consideration of baptisme grounded vppon the promise and spirituall mysterie thereof not vpō the outvvard ceremonie alone.

2 First it is a doctrine well enough knowen, and confessed among all the godly, that the right consideration of the signes, consisteth not onelie in the outward Ceremonies: but principally hangeth vpon the promise, and vpon the spirituall mysteries, for figuring whereof the Lord ordeineth the Ceremonies themselues. Therefore hee that will perfectly learne of what value baptisme is, to what ende it tendeth, finally what it is: let him not stay his thought vpon the element and bodily sight: but rather let him raise it vp to the promises of God, which are therein offered vs, and to the inward secrets which are therein represented vnto vs. He that knoweth these thinges, hath attained the sound trueth of baptisme, and the whole substance thereof as I may so call it: and thereby also he shalbe taught, what is the reason, & what is the vse of the outward sprinkling. Againe hee that contemptuously passing ouer these, shall haue his minde wholly fastened and bound to the visible Ceremonie, shall vnderstande neither the force nor propertie of baptisme: nor yet so much as this, what the water meaneth, or what vse it hath. Which sentēce is proued with so many & so cleere testimonies of scripture, that we neede not at this present to tarrie long about it. Therfore it remaineth nowe, that we seeke out of the promises giuen in baptisme, what is the force and nature of it The scripture sheweth, that the cleansing of sinnes, which we obteine of the bloud of Christ, is here first shewed: then the mortifying of the flesh, which standeth vpon the partaking of his death, by which the faithful are regenerate into newnesse of life, yea and into the fellowship of Christ. To this summe may be referred whatsoeuer is taught in the Scriptures concerning baptisme: sauing that beside this it is a signe to testifie religion before men.

The vse of circumcision vnder the lavv.

3 But forasmuch as before the institution of baptisme, the people of God had circumcision in stead therof: let vs see what these two signes differ the one from the other, and with what likenesse they agree together. Wherevpon may appeare what is the relation of the one to the other. Where the Lorde gaue circumcision to Abraham to be kept, he telleth him before, that he would be God to him and to his seede: adding, that with him is the flowing store and suffisance of all things, that Abraham shoulde account that his hand should be to him a spring of all good thinges. In which wordes the promise of eternall life is conteined, as Christ expoundeth it, bringing an argument from hence to proue the immortalitie of the faithfull, and the resurrection. For God (saith he) is not the God of the dead, but of the liuing. Wherfore Paul also shewing to the Ephesians from what destruction the Lorde had deliuered them, gathereth by this that they had not beene admitted into the couenant of circumcision, that they were without Christ, without God, without hope, ſtrangers from the teſtaments of the promiſe: all which things the couenaunt it ſelfe conteined. But the firſt acceſſe to God, the firſt entrie to immortall life, is the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Whereupon is gathered, that this forgiueneſſe aunſwereth to the promiſe of baptiſme concerning our clenſing. Afterward the Lorde taketh couenant of Abraham that he ſhould walke before him in pureneſſe & innocencie of heart which belongeth to mortifying or regeneration. And that no man ſhould dout, that circumciſion is a ſigne of mortifying, Moſes in another place doth more plainly declare it, whē he exhorteth the people of Iſrael, to circumciſe the vncircumciſed skin of the heart, becauſe they were ſeuerally choſen to be the people of God out of all the nations of the earth. As God, where he adopteth the poſteritie of Abraham to his people, commaundeth them to be circumciſed: ſo Moſes pronounceth that the heartes ought to be circumciſed, declaring verily what is the trueth of this circumciſion. Then that no man ſhould endeuour toward it by his owne ſtrength, he teacheth that they neede the grace of God. All theſe thinges are ſo often repeated of the prophets, that I neede not to heape into this place many teſtimonies which do each where offer themſelues. We haue proued therefore, that in circumciſion a ſpiritual promiſe was vttered to the fathers, ſuch as in baptiſme is giuen: for as much as it figured to them the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, & the mortifiyng of the fleſh. Moreouer as we haue taught that Chriſt is the foundation of baptiſme, in whome both theſe thinges remaine: ſo it is euident that he is alſo of circumciſion. For he is promiſed to Abraham, and in him the bleſſing of all nations. To the ſealing of which grace, the ſigne of cirmumciſion is added.

Thagreement and difference betweene circumciſion & baptiſme

4 Now we may eaſily ſee, what there is like in theſe two ſignes, or what there is differing. The promiſes, whereuppon wee haue declared that the power of the ſignes conſiſteth, is al one in both, namely of the fatherly fauor of God, of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, of life euerlaſting. Then, the thing figured alſo is all one and the ſame, namely regeneration. The foundation whereupon the fulfilling of theſe thinges ſtandeth, is al one in both. Wherefore there is no difference in the inward myſterie, whereby the whole force and propertie of the Sacramentes is to be weighed. The vnlikelines that remaineth, lieth in the outwarde Ceremonie, which is the ſmalleſt portion: whereas the chiefeſt part hangeth vpon the promiſe and the thing ſignified. Therefore we may determine, that whatſoeuer agreeth with circumciſion, doeth alſo belong to baptiſme, except the difference of the viſible Ceremonie. To this relation and compariſon, the Apoſtles rule leadeth vs by the hande, whereby wee are commanded to examine all expoſition of Scripture by the proportion of faith. And truely the trueth doth in this behalfe almoſt offer it ſelfe to be felt. For as circumciſion, becauſe it was a certaine token to the Iewes, whereby they were certified that they were choſen to bee the people and houſeholde of GOD and they againe on their behalfes profeſſed that they yeelded themſelues to GOD was their firſt entrie into the Church: ſo nowe alſo wee by baptiſme enter into profeſſion of God, that wee maie bee reckoned among his people, and mutually ſweare to his name. Whereby it appeareth out of controuerſie, that baptiſme is come into the place of circumcision, that it maye haue the same office with vs.

Infants beeing partakers of the spirituall grace may not be denied the outwarde signe of baptisme more than Jewish children circumcision.

5 Nowe if we list to search out, whether baptisme be lawfully communicate to infantes: shall wee not say that hee doth too much play the foole, yea dote, which will rest onely vpon the element of water, and the outwarde obseruation, but cannot abide to bende his minde to the spirituall mysterie? Whereof if there be any consideration had, it shall without doubte certainely appeare that Baptisme is rightfully giuen to infantes, as the thing that is due vnto them. For the Lorde in olde time did not vouchsafe to admit them to circumcision, but ỳ he made them partakers of al those thinges which were then signified by circumcision. Otherwise he should with meere deceites haue mocked his people, if he had fed them with deceitfull signes, which is horrible euen to be hearde of. For he pronounceth expresly, that the circũcision of a little infant should be instede of a seale to seale the promise of the couenant. But if the couenant remaine vnbroken and stedfast, it doth at this day no lesse belong to the children of Christians, than vnder the olde testament it perteined to the infantes of the Iewes. But if they bee partakers of the thing signified, why shall they be debarred from the signe? if they haue the trueth, why shall they be put backe from the figure? Although the outward signe cleaue fast together with the worde in the Sacrament, so that they can not be plucked in sunder: yet if they be seuerally considered, whether of them, I pray you, shall wee esteeme of more value? Truely sith wee see that the signe seruieth the worde, wee must say that it is vnder it, and must set it in the inferiour place. Sith therefore the worde of Baptisme is extended to infantes: why shall the signe, that is to say, the addition hanging to the worde, be debarred from them? This one reason, if there were no moe, were aboundantly enough to confute all them that will speake to the contrarie. That which is obiected, that there was a day certainely set for circumcision, is altogether but a shift. We graunt that wee bee not nowe bounde to certaine dayes, like the Iewes: but when the Lorde howsoeuer he certainely appointeth no day, yet declareth that hee is pleased that infants should with a solemne formall vsage bee receiued into his couenant: what seeke we more?

The children of Christian parentes being holy seede as Abrahams were, as necessarily the one bound to be baptised as the other to be circumcised.

6 Howbeit the scripture openeth vnto vs yet a certainer knowledge of the trueth. For it is most euident, that the couenant which the Lord once made with Abraham, is at this day no lesse in force to Christians, than it was in old time to the Iewish people: yea and that this word hath no lesse respect to Christians, than it then had respect to the Iewes. Vnlesse perhappes wee thinke, that Christ hath by his comming diminished, or cut short the grace of his father. Which saying is not without abhominable blasphemie. Wherfore as euen the children of the Iewes were called a holy seede, because beeing made heires of the same couenant they were made differing from the children of the vngodly: for the same reason euen yet also the children of Christians are accompted holy, yea although they bee the issue but of one parent faithfull: and (as the Apostle witnesseth) they differ frõ the vncleane seede of Idolaters. Nowe when the Lorde immediately after the couenant made with Abraham, commaunded the same to bee sealed in infantes with an outward Sacrament: what cauſe will Chriſtians alleadge, why they ſhoulde not at this daie teſtifie and ſeale the ſame in their children? Neyther let any man obiect againſt me, that the Lorde commaunded his couenant to be confirmed with no other ſigne than of circumciſion, which is long agoe taken away. For wee haue in readineſſe to anſweare, that for the time of the olde teſtament he ordeined circumciſion to confirme his couenant: but circumciſion being taken away, yet alway remaineth the ſame maner of confirming which we haue common with the Iewes. Wherefore wee muſt alway diligently conſider what is common to both, & what they haue ſeuerall from vs. The couenaunt is common, the cauſe of confirming it is common. Onely the manner of confirming is diuerſe, becauſe circumciſion was that to them, in place whereof baptiſme hath ſucceeded among vs. Otherwiſe if the teſtimonie whereby the Iewes were aſſured of the ſaluation of their ſeed, be taken away from vs, it ſhould be brought to paſſe by the cõming of Chriſt, that the grace of God ſhould be darker and leſſe approoued by teſtimonies to vs, than it was before to the Iewes. If that cannot be ſaide without extreme ſlander of Chriſt, by whom the infinite goodneſſe of the Father hath more clearely and liberally than euer heretofore beene poured foorth vppon the earth, and declared to men: wee muſt needes graunt, that it is at the leaſt not more pinchingly to bee ſuppreſſed, nor to be ſet foorth with leſſe teſtimonie, than it was vnder the darke ſhadowes of the lawe.

7 Wherefore the Lorde Ieſus, minding to ſhewe a token whereby the worlde might vnderſtande that hee was come rather to enlarge than to limit the mercie of God, gently embraced children offered vnto him, rebuking the diſciples which went about to forbid them to come to him: forasmuch as they did leade thoſe, to whom the kingdome of heauen belongeth, away from him by whom alone the entrie is open into heauen. But (will ſome man ſay) what like thing hath baptiſme with this embracing of Chriſt? For neither is it reported that he baptiſed them, but that he receiued them. embraced them, and wiſhed them well. Therefore if we liſt to follow his example, let vs helpe infants with prayer, but not baptiſe them. But let vs weigh the doings of Chriſt ſomewhat more heedfully, than ſuch kind of men doe. For neither is this to be lightly paſſed ouer, that Chriſt commandeth infants to be brought vnto him, adding a reaſon why, becauſe of ſuch is the kingdom of heauen. And afterward he witneſſeth his will with deede, when embracing them he commendeth them to his Father with his prayer and bleſſing. If it be meete that infantes be brought to Chriſt, why is it not alſo meete that they be receiued to baptiſme, the ſigne of our communion and fellowſhip with Chriſt? If the kingdome of heauen be theirs, why ſhall the ſigne be denied them, whereby there is as it were an entrie opened into the Church, that beeing admitted into it they maie be adnumbred among the heires of the heauenly kingdome? How vniuſt ſhall we be, if we driue awaie them whom Chriſt calleth vnto him? if we ſpoyle them, whom hee garniſheth with his gifts? if we ſhut out them whom he willingly receiueth? But if wee will examine how much that which Chriſt there did, differeth from baptiſme, yet of how much greater price ſhall wee haue baptiſme, (whereby wee teſtifie that infants are contained in the couenant of God) than receiuing, embracing, laying on of handes, and prayer, whereby Chriſt himſelfe being preſent: declareth that they both are his, and are ſanctified of him? By the other cauillations, wherby they labour to mock out this place, they do nothing but bewray their owne ignorance. For they gather an argument of this which Chriſt ſaith. Let litle ones come to me, that they were in age good bigge ones which were alreadie able to goe. But they are called of the Euangeliſtes, brephe, and paidia, by which wordes the Greekes doe ſignifie babes yet hanging on the breſtes. Therefore this worde (to come) is ſimply ſet for (to haue acceſſe.) Loe what ſnares they are compelled to make, which are growen hard againſt the trueth. Now where they ſay, that the kingdome of heauen is not giuen to them, but to ſuch as bee like them, becauſe it is ſaid to be of ſuch, not of them: that is no ſounder than the reſt. For if that be graunted, what maner of reaſon ſhall the reaſon of Chriſt be, whereby he meaneth to ſhew, that infantes in age are not ſtrangers from him? When he commaundeth that infantes be ſuffered to haue acceſſe vnto him, nothing is plainer than that verie infancie indeede is there ſpoken of. And that this ſhoulde not ſeeme an abſurditie, he by and by addeth: of ſuch is the kingdome of heauen. But if it muſt needes bee that infantes be comprehended herein, it muſt be plaine that by this worde (ſuch) are meant verie infants themſelues, and ſuch as be like them.

Though it bee not expreſly mentioned in ſcripture vvhat infants vvere baptiſed by the Apoſtles: yet vvhen they are reported to haue baptiſed families, vve haue no reaſon to think that the children in ſuche families vvere not baptiſed: no vvriter ſo olde that maketh not the baptiſme of infants as ancient as the Apoſtles times.

Act. 16. 15. & 23

8 Nowe there is no man that ſeeth not, that baptiſme of infantes was not framed by man, which is vpholden by ſo great approouing of Scripture. Neither doe they colourably enough play the fooles, which obiect that it is no where founde, that any one infant was baptiſed by the handes of the Apoſtles. For although it bee not expreſſely by name rehearſed of the Euãgeliſtes: yet becauſe againe they are not excluded, ſo oft as mention happeneth to be made of the baptiſing of any houſholde: who, vnleſſe hee bee madde, can reaſon thereupon that they were not baptiſed? If ſuch argumentes were of anie force, women ſhoulde be forbidden to partake of the Lordes ſupper, whom wee reade not to haue beene receiued vnto it in the time of the Apoſtles. But heere we bee content with the rule of faith. For when wee conſider, what the inſtitution of the Supper requireth, thereby alſo wee maie eaſily iudge to whom the vſe thereof ought to bee communicated. Which we obſerue alſo in baptiſme. For when we marke, to what end it was ordeined, we euidently eſpie, that it belongeth no leſſe to infantes, than to elder folkes. Therefore they cannot be depriued of it, but that the wil of the author muſt be manifeſtly defrauded. But whereas, they ſpread abroade among the ſimple people, that there paſſed a long row of yeares after the reſurrection of Chriſt, in which the baptiſme of infants was vnknowen: therin they moſt fowly do lie. For there is no writer ſo old, that doth not certainly referre the beginning thereof to the time of the Apoſtles.

The fruite that commeth by baptiſme both to children preſented, & to ſuch alſo as preſent them thereunto.

9 Nowe remaineth that we briefely ſhewe, what fruite commeth of this obſeruation, both to the faithfull which preſent their children to the Church to be baptiſed, and alſo to the infants themſelues that bee baptiſed with the holy water: that no man ſhoulde deſpiſe it as vnprofitable or idle. But if it come in any mans minde, vppon this pretence to mocke at the baptiſme

baptiſme of infantes, he ſcorneth the commaundement of Circumciſion giuen by the Lorde. For what will they bring foorth to impugne the baptiſme of infantes, which may not alſo be throwen backe againſt Circumciſion? So the Lorde taketh vengeance of their arrogance, which doe by and by condemne that which they comprehend not with the ſenſe of their owne fleſh. But God furniſheth vs with other armures, whereby their fooliſhneſſe may be beaten flatte. For neither this his holy inſtitution, by which wee feele our faith to be holpen with ſingular comforte, deſerueth to be called ſuperfluous. For Gods ſigne communicated to a childe doeth as it were by an emprinted ſeale confirme the promiſe giuen to the godly parente, and declareth that it is ratified that the Lord wil be GOD not onely to him but alſo to his ſeede, and will continually ſhewe his good will and grace, not to him only, but alſo to his poſteritie euen to the thouſandth generation. Where when the great kindneſſe of GOD vttereth it ſelfe, firſt it yeeldeth moſt large matter to aduaunce his glorie, and ouerſpreadeth godly heartes with ſingular gladneſſe, becauſe they are therewithall more earneſtly moued to loue againe ſo godly a Father, whome they ſee to haue care of their poſteritie for their ſakes. Neither doe I regarde, if any man take exception, and ſaye that the promiſe ought to ſuffice to confirme the ſaluation of our children: foraſmuch as it hath pleaſed God otherwiſe, who as hee knoweth our weakeneſſe, willed in this behalfe ſo much to beare tenderly with it. Therefore let them that embrace the promiſe of Gods mercye to be extended to their children, thinke that it is their duetie to offer them to the Church to be ſigned with the ſigne of mercie, and thereby to encourage themſelues to a more aſſured confidence, becauſe they do with preſent eye behold the couenant of the Lord grauen in the bodies of their children. Againe, the children receiue ſome commodity of their baptiſme, that being engraffed into the body of the Church, they be ſomewhat the more cõmended to the other members. Then when they are growen to riper age, they be thereby not ſclenderly ſtirred vp to earneſt endeuour to worſhippe God, of whom they haue ben receiued into his children by a ſolemne ſigne of adoption, before that they could by age acknow him for their Father. Finally that ſame condemnation ought greatly to make vs afraide, that GOD will take vengeance of it, if any man deſpiſe to marke his ſonne with the ſigne of the couenant, becauſe by ſuch contempt the grace offred is refuſed and as it were foreſworne. Gen.17.14

10 Now let vs examine the argumentes, whereby certaine furious beaſts doe not ceaſe to aſſaile this holy inſtitution of God. Frſt becauſe they ſee that they be exceedingly neere driuen and hard ſtrained with the likeneſſe of baptiſme and Circumciſion, they labour to plucke in ſunder theſe two ſignes with great differẽce, that the one ſhould not ſeeme to haue any thing common with the other. For they ſaye that both diuerſe thinges are ſignified, and that the couenant is altogether diuerſe, and that the naming of the children is not all one. But while they goe about to prooue that firſte point, they alleage that Circumciſion was a figure of mortification and not of baptiſme. Which verily we do moſt willingly graunt them. For it maketh verie wel for our ſide. Neither do we vſe any other profe of our ſentence, thã that that baptiſme and circumciſion are ſignes of mortification. Hereupō we determine ỹ baptiſme is ſet in the place of circumciſion, that it ſhould repreſent vnto vs the ſame thing which in old time it ſignified to the Iewes. In affirming the difference of the couenant, with howe barbarous boldneſſe doe they turmoile & corrupt the ſcripture: & that not in one place alone, but ſo as they leaue nothing ſafe or whole? For they depaint vnto vs the Iewes ſo to be carnal ỹ they be liker beaſts than men: with whom forſooth the couenant made proceedeth not beyond the temporal life, to whom the promiſes giuē do reſt in preſent & bodily good things. If this doctrine take place, what remaineth but that the nation of the Iewes were for a time filled with the benefites of GOD, none otherwiſe than as they fatte a hearde of ſwine in a ſtie, that at length they ſhould periſh with eternal damnation. For ſo ſoone as we alleage Circumciſion and the promiſes annexed vnto it, they aunſwere that circumciſion was a literall ſigne, and the promiſes thereof were carnall.

Promiſes Spirituall and heauenly, not earthly and carnal onely made to the fathers in the olde teſtamēt. Coloſ.2.11

11 Truely if circumciſion was a literal ſigne, there is no otherwiſe to bee thought of baptiſme. For the Apoſtle in the ſeconde Chapter to the Coloſſians maketh the one no more ſpirituall than the other. For hee ſayeth that we are circumciſed in Chriſt, with a circumciſion not made with hand, putting away the body of ſinne that dwelled in our fleſh: which hee calleth the circumciſion of Chriſt. Afterwarde for declaration of that ſaying, hee adioyneth, that we be buried with Chriſt by baptiſme. What meaneth he by theſe words, but that the fulfilling and truth of baptiſme, is alſo the truth & fulfilling of circumciſion, becauſe they figure both one thing? For he trauaileth to ſhew, ỹ baptiſme is the ſame to chriſtians, which circumciſion had beene before to the Iewes. But foraſmuch as wee haue nowe euidently declared, that the promiſes of both the ſignes, and the myſteries that are repreſented in them, doe agree together, we wil for this preſent tarrie no longer vpon them. Onely I will put the faithful in minde, that though I holde my peace, they ſhould weigh with themſelues whether it bee taken for an earthly and literall ſigne, vnder which nothing is conteined but ſpirituall and heauenly. But that they ſhould not ſell their ſmokes to the ſimple, wee will by the way confute one obiection wherwith they colour this moſt ſhameleſſe lie. It is moſt certaine that the principal promiſes, wherein was conteined the couenant which in the Olde teſtament GOD ſtabliſhed with the Iſraelites, were ſpirituall, and tended to eternal life: and then agayne, that they were receiued of the father, ſpiritually, as it was meete, that they might thereof receiue affiaunce of the life to come, whereunto they longed with the whole affection of their heart. But in the meane time wee denie not, but that hee witneſſed his good will towarde them with earthlye and carnall benefites: by which alſo wee ſay that the ſame promiſe of ſpirituall thinges was confirmed. As when he promiſed euerlaſting bleſſednеſſe to his ſeruaunt Abraham, that he might ſette before his eyes a manifeſt token of his fauour, hee addeth an other promiſe concerning the poſſeſſion of the lande of Chanaan. After this manner we ought to vnderſtande all the earthly promiſes that are giuen to the Iewiſh nation, that the ſpirituall promiſe, as the head, whereunto they are directed, ſhould alway haue the chiefe place. But sith I haue more largely entreated of these thinges in the difference of the new and olde testament, therefore now I doe the more slightly knit it vp.

12 In the naming of the children they finde this diuersitie, that in the olde testament they were called the children of Abraham, which issued of his seede: but that now they are called by that name, which follow his faith: And that therefore that carnall infancie, which was by circumcision graffed into the fellowship of the couenant, figured the infants of the Newe testament, which are regenerat by the word of God to immortall life. In which wordes we beholde in deede a small sparkle of trueth: but herein these light spirites grieuously offend, that when they catch hold of that which first cõmeth to their hand, when they should go further and compare many things togither, they stand stifly vpon one word. Whereby it cannot otherwise be but that they must sometime be deceiued which rest vpon the sound knowledge of nothing. We graunt in deede that the carnall seede of Abraham did for a time hold the place of the spirituall seede which is by faith graffed into him. For we be called his children howsoeuer there is no naturall kinred betweene him and vs. But if they meane, as they plainly shewe that they doe, ỹ there was neuer spirituall blessing promised to the carnall seede of Abrahã, herein they are much deceiued. Wherefore we must leuel to a better mark, whereunto we are directed by the most certaine guiding of the Scripture. The Lord therfore promised to Abraham, that he should haue a seede, wherin all nations of the earth shalbe blessed: and therewithall assureth him, that he would be a God to him & his seed. Whosoeuer do by faith receiue Christ the author of blessing, are heires of this promise, and therfore are called the children of Abraham.

The supposed difference which the aduersaries of infantes baptisme doe put betweene the ancient circumcised, and the newe baptised seed of Abraham.

Rom.4.12.

13 But although since the resurrection of Christ the bounds of the kingdome of God haue begun to be far and wide enlarged into all nations without difference, that according to the saying of Christ, faithfull ones should be gathered from euery part to sit downe in the heauenly glory with Abraham Isaac, and Iacob: yet he had many ages before extended that same so great mercie to the Iewes. And because passing ouer all other, he had chosen out that onely nation, in which he woulde restraine his grace for a time, called them his peculiar possession, and his purchased people. For testifying of such liberalitie, Circumcision was giuen by the signe whereof the Iewes might be taught ỹ God is to them the author of saluation: by which knowledge their mindes were raised into hope of eternall life. For what shall he want, whome God hath once receiued into his charge? Wherefore the Apostle meaning to prooue that the Gentiles were the children of Abraham as well as the Iewes, speaketh in this maner: Abraham (saith he) was iustified by faith in vncircumcision. Afterward he receiued the signe of circumcision, the seale of righteousnesse of faith, that he shoulde be the father of all the faithfull, both of vncircumcision and of circumcision, not of them that glorie of only circumcision, but of them that followe the faith which our father Abraham had in vncircumcision. Do not wee see that both sortes are made egall in dignitie? For during the time appointed by the decree of god, he was the father of circumcision. When the wall beeing plucked downe (as the the Apoſtle writeth in an other place) by which the Iewes were ſeuered from the Gentiles, the entrie was made open to them alſo into the kingdome of God, he was made their father, and that without the ſigne of circumciſion, becauſe they haue baptiſme in ſteede of circumciſion. But where hee expreſſely by name denieth, that Abraham is father to them which are of circumciſion only, that ſame was ſpoken to abate the pride of certain, which omitting the care of godlineſſe, did booſt themſelues of onely ceremonies. After which manner at this day alſo their vanitie may bee confuted which ſeeke in baptiſme nothing but water.

The carnal and ſpirituall ſeede of Abraham heretofore vvith the eſtimation due to them both.

14 But another place of the Apoſtle out of the 9 Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romanes ſhalbe alleaged to the conrrary, where he teacheth ỹ they which are of the fleſh, are not the children of Abraham: but they onely are counted his ſeede, which are the children of promiſe. For he ſeemeth to ſignifie, that the carnall kinred of Abraham is nothing, which yet we do ſet in ſome degree. But it is more diligently to be marked, what matter the Apoſtle there entreateth of. For, meaning to ſhewe to the Iewes how much the goodneſſe of God was not bound to the ſeede of Abraham, yea howe it nothing auaileth of it ſelfe, he bringeth foorth Iſmael and Eſau for example to prooue it: whome being refuſed, as if they were ſtrangers, although they were according to the fleſh the naturall offspring of Abraham, the bleſſing reſted in Iſaac and Iacob. Whereupon is gathered that which he afterward affirmeth, that ſaluation hangeth of the mercie of God, which he extendeth to whome it pleaſeth him: and that there is no cauſe why the Iewes ſhould ſtand in their own conceit, or boaſt vpon the name of the couenant, vnleſſe they keepe the lawe of the couenant, that is to ſay, do obey the word. Againe when he hath throwen them downe from vaine confidence of their kinred, yet becauſe on the other ſide he ſawe, that the couenant which was once made of God with the poſteritie of Abraham, could in no wiſe be made voide, in the 11. chapter, he argueth that the carnall kinred is not to be ſpoiled of his due dignitie: by the beneficiall meane whereof hee teacheth that the Iewes are the firſt and naturall heires of the Goſpel, but in reſpect that by their vnthankfulneſſe, they were forſaken as vnworthie: yet ſo that the heauenly bleſſing is not vtterly remoued from their nation. For which reaſon, howe much ſoeuer they were ſtubborne and couenant breakers, neuertheleſſe hee calleth them holy (ſo much honor he giueth to the holy generation, with whome God had vouchſaued to make his holy couenant) but calleth vs, if we be compared with them, as it were after born, yea or the vntimely borne children of Abraham, & that by adoption, not by nature: as if a twig broken off from his naturall tree, ſhould be graffed into a ſtrange ſtock. Therefore that they ſhould not be defrauded of their prerogatiue, it behoued that the Goſpel ſhould be firſt preached to them: for they be in ỹ houſholde of God as it were the firſt begotten children. Wherefore this honour was to be giuen them, vntil they refuſed it being offered them, and by their owne vnthankfulneſſe brought to paſſe that it was carried away to the Gentiles. Neither yet, with howe great obſtinacie ſoeuer they continue to make warre againſt the Goſpell, ought they to be deſpiſed of vs: if wee conſider that for the promiſes ſake, the bleſſing of GOD doeth yet ſtill remaine remaine among them: as verily the Apostle testifieth that it shall neuer vterly depart from thence: because the giftes and calling of God are without repentance. Rom.11.29

15 Beholde of what force is the promise giuen to the posteritie of Abraham, and with what balance it is to be weied, Wherefore although in discerning the heires of the kingdom from bastards & strangers, we nothing dout that the onely election of God ruleth with free right of gouernment: yet we also therwithal perceiue, that it pleased him peculiarly to embrace the seed of Abraham with his mercy, and that the same mercy might bee the more surely witnessed, to seale it with circumcision. Nowe altogether like state is there of the Christian Church. For as Paul there reasoneth that the Iewes are sanctified of their parents: so in an other place he teacheth, that the children of christians receiue the same sanctification of their parentes. Whereupon is gathered, that they are worthily seuered from the rest, which on the other side are condemned of vncleanesse. Now who can doubt, but that it is most false which they do therupon conclude, ỳ say that the infants which in old time were circumcised, did onely figure spirituall infancie, which ariseth of the regeneration of the worde of God. For Paul doeth not so suttlely play the Philosopher, where he writeth ỳ Christ is the minister of Circumcision, to fulfill the promises which had ben made to the fathers, as if he said thus: Forasmuch as the couenant made with Abraham hath respect to his seede, Christ, to performe and discharge the promise once made by his Father, came to saluation to the nation of the Iewes. See you not howe also after the resurrection of Christ, he iudgeth that the promise of the couenant is to be fulfilled, not only by way of allegorie, but as the very words do sound to the carnal seede of Abraham. To the same entent serueth that which Peter in the second Chapter of the Actes, declareth to the Iewes, that the benefit of the Gospel is due to them and their seede by right of the couenant, and in the Chapter next following he calleth them the children of the Testament, that is to say heyres. From which also not much disaccordeth the other place of the Apostle aboue alleaged, where he accounteth and setteth Circumcision emprinted in infants, for a testimonie of ỳ communion which they haue with Christ. But if we harken to their trifles, what shalbe wrought by that promise, whereby the Lord in the second article of his law vndertaketh to his seruantes, ỳ he will be fauorable to their seede euen to the thousandth generation? Shal we here flee to allegories? But ỳ were too trifling a shift. Or shall we say ỳ this is abolished? But so the lawe shoulde be destroyed, which Christ came rather to stablish, so far as it turneth vs to good vnto life, Let it therefore be out of controuersie, ỳ God is so good & liberal to his, that for their sakes, he will haue also their children, whom they shall beget, to bee adnumbred among his people. The like difference betweene the one and the other now in the christian Church. 1.Cor.7.14 Rom.15.8 Act.2.39 Act.3.25 Ephe.2.21

16 Moreouer the differences which they go about to put betwene baptisme & circũcisiõ, are not only worthy to be laughed at, & voide of al colour of reason, but also disagreeing with themselues. For whẽ they haue affirmed that baptisme hath relation to the first day of the spiritual battel, but circũcision to the eight when mortification is already ended, by and by forgetting the same, they turne their song, & call circumcision a figure of the flesh to be Absurd differences betweene baptisme and circumcision to exclude children from the one, though from the other they were not excluded.

to be mortified, but baptisme they call buriall, into which none are to be put til they be alreadie dead. What dotages of phrentike men, can with so great lightnesse leape into sundry diuersities? For in the first sentence, baptisme must go before circumcisiō: by the other, it is thrust backe into ỹ later place. Yet is it no newe example, that the wits of men be so tossed vp and downe, when in steede of the most certaine worde of God they worship whatsoeuer they haue dreamed. We therfore say that that former difference is a meere dreame. If they listed to expound by way of allegorie vpō the eight day, yet it agreed not in that maner. It were much fitter, according to the opinion of the old writers, to referre the number of eight to the resurrection which was done on the eight day, whereupon we knowe that the newnes of life hangeth: or to the whole course of this present life, wherein mortification ought alway to go forward, til when life is ended, mortification it selfe may also bee ended. Howbeit God may seeme to haue minded to prouide for the tendernesse of age, in deferring circumcision to the eight day, because the wounde should haue ben more dangerous to the children new borne & yet red from their mother. How much stronger is that, that we being dead before, are buried by baptisme: when the Scripture expresly crieth to the contrarie that we are buried into death to this intent, that we should die, and from thenceforth should endeuour to this mortification? Nowe, a likewise handling it is, that they cauill that women ought not to be baptised, if baptisme must bee framed like to circumcision. For if it be most certaine ỹ the sanctifying of the seede of Israel was testified by the signe of circumcision: therby also it is vndoubted, that it was giuen to sanctifie both males and females. But the only bodies of male children were marked with it, which might by nature be marked: yet so that the women were by them after a certaine maner companions and partners of circumcision. Therefore sending far away such follies of theirs, let vs sticke fast in the likenes of baptisme and circumcisiō, which we most largly see to agree in the inward mysterie, in the promises, in vse, in effectualnesse.

Childrens vvant of vnderstanding no reason to keepe them from being baptised vvhich is the seale of that sanctitie vvherof they are capable.

17 They thinke also that they bring forth a most strong reason, why children are to be debarred from baptisme, when they alleage that they are not yet for age able to vnderstand the mysterie there signified. That is spirituall regeneration, which can not be in the first infancie. Therefore they gather, that they are to be taken for none other than the children of Adam, till they be growen to age meete for a second birth. But the truth of God echwhere speaketh against all these thinges. For if they be to be left among ỹ children of Adam, then they are left in death: forasmuch as in Adam we can doe nothing but die. But contrariwise Christ commandeth them to be brought vnto him. Why so? because he is life: Therfore that he may giue life to them, he maketh them partakers of himselfe: when in the meane time these fellowes driuing them far away do adiudge them to death. For if they say for a shift that infantes do not therfore perish if they be accounted the children of Adam, their errour is aboundantly confuted by witnesse of the scripture. For whereas it pronounceth that all do die in Adam, it foloweth that there remaineth no hope of life but in Christ. Therefore that we may be made heires of life, we must communicate with him. place, that by nature we are subiect to the wrath of God, and conceiued in sinne, whereunto damnation perpetually cleaueth: wee must depart out of our owne nature, before that the entry bee open to vs into the kingdome of God. And what can be more plainly spoken, than that flesh & bloud can not possesse the kingdome of God? Therefore let all be done away whatsoeuer is ours (which shall not be done without regeneration) then we shall see this possession of the kingdome. Finally if Christ say truely, when he reporteth that he is life, it is necessarie that we be graffed into him, that we may be deliuered out of the bondage of death. But (say they) howe are infantes regenerate, which are not endued with knowledge neither of good nor of euill? But we aunswere, that the worke of God is not yet no worke at all, although it be not subiect to our capacitie, Moreouer it is nothing doutful, that the infants which are to be saued (as verily of that age some are saued) are before regenerat of the Lorde. For if they bring with them from their mothers wombe the corruption naturally planted in them: they must be purged thereof, before that they be admitted into the kingdome of God, wherinto nothing entreth that is defiled or spotted. If they be borne sinners, as both Dauid and Paul affirme: either they remaine out of fauour and hateful to God, or they must needes be iustified. And what seeke we more, when the iudge himselfe openly affirmeth that the entrie into heauenly life is open to none but to them that be born again? And to put such carpers to silence, he shewed an example in Iohn the baptist, whom he sanctified in his mothers womb, what he was able to doe in the rest. Neither doe they any thing preuaile by the shift wherewith they here mocke, that that was but once done: whereupon it doth not by and by followe that the Lord is wont commonly to doe so with infantes. For neither do we reason after that maner: only our purpose is to shew, that the power of God is by them vniustly & enuiously limited within those narrowe boundes within which it suffreth not it selfe to bee bounde. Their other by shift is euen of as great weight. They alleage that by the vsuall maner of the Scripture, this word (from the wombe,) is asmuch in effect, as if it were said, from childhoode. But we may clearely see, ỹ the Angel when he declared the same to Zachary, meant an other thing: that is, that it which was not yet borne, should be filled with the holy Ghost. Let vs not therfore attempt to appoint a lawe to GOD, but that he may sanctifie whom it pleased him, as he sanctified this child, forasmuch as his power is nothing minished.

18 And truly Christ was therfore sanctified from his first infancy, that he might sanctifie in himselfe his elect out of euery age without difference. For as, to do away the fault of disobedience which had bin cõmitted in our flesh, he hath put on the same flesh vpon himselfe, that he might in it for vs and in our steede performe perfect obedience: so he was conceiued of ỹ holy Ghost that hauing the holinesse thereof fully poured into him in the flesh which he had taken vpon him, he might powre forth the same into vs. If we haue in Christ a most perfect paterne of al the graces which God continually sheweth to his children, verily in this behalfe also he shalbe a prose vnto vs, ỹ the age of infancy is not so farre vnfit for sanctification. But howsoeuer it be, yet this we holde out of controuersie, that none of the elect is called out of this preſent life, which is not firſt made holy & regenerate by the Spirit of God. Wheras they obiect to the contrary, that in the Scriptures ỹ Spirit acknowledgeth no other regeneration but of incorruptible ſeede, that is, of the word of God: they do wrongfully expounde that ſaying of Peter, wherein he comprehendeth only the faithful which had ben taught by preaching of the Goſpel. To ſuch in deed we grant that the word of the Lord is the only ſeed of ſpirituall regeneration: but we deny ỹ it ought thereupon to be gathered, that infantes can not be regenerate by the power of God, which is to him as eaſie and ready as to vs it is incomprehenſible and wonderful. Moreouer it ſhould not be ſafe enough for vs to take this away from the Lorde, that he may not be able to ſhewe himſelfe to be knowen to them by whatſocuer way he will.

1.Pet.1.23.

No abſurditie that infants haue ſome ſpark of that heauenly light here vvhereof in heauē the ful brightneſſe doth shine vnto them though they die in their infancie.

19 But faith, ſay they, is by hearing, whereof they haue not yet gotten the vſe, neither can they be able to knowe God, whom Moſes teacheth to be deſtitute of the knowledge both of good and euil. But they conſider not that the Apoſtle, when he maketh hearing the beginning of faith, deſcribeth only the ordinary diſtribution of the Lord & diſpoſition which he vſeth to keep in calling them that be his: but appointeth not to him a perpetuall rule, that he may not vſe any other way. Which way verily he hath vſed in the calling of many, to whome he hath giuen the true knowledge of himſelfe by an inwarde maner, by the enlightening of the Spirite, without any preaching vſed for meane thereof. But whereas they thinke it ſhalbe a great abſurdity, if any knowledge of God be giuen to infantes, from whom Moſes taketh away the vnderſtanding of good & euill. I beſeech them to anſwere me what danger is there if they be ſaide to receiue ſome part of that grace, whereof a little after they ſhall enioye the full plentifulneſſe. For if the fulneſſe of life ſtandeth in the perfect knowlede of God, when many of them, whō in their very firſt infancy death by and by taketh away, do paſſe into eternall life, truly they are receiued to behold ỹ moſt preſent face of God. Whom therefore the Lord wil enlighten with the ful brightneſſe of his light, why may he not preſently alſo, if it ſo pleaſe him, ſend out to ſhine vpō them ſome ſmall ſparcle therof: ſpecially if he do not firſt vncloth them of ignorance, before that he take them out of the priſon of the fleſh? Not that I mean raſhly to affirme that they be endued with the ſame Faith which we feel in our ſelues, or that they haue altogether like knowledge of faith: (which I had rather leaue in ſuſpenſe) but ſomwhat to reſtraine their fooliſh arrogance, which according as their mouth is puffed vp with fulnes, do boldly deny or affirme they care not what.

Deut.1.39.

Infantes not excluded from baptiſme more than from circumciſion for vvant of faith and repentance.

20 But that they may yet ſtande more ſtrongly in this point, they adde that baptiſme is a Sacrament of repentance and of Faith, wherfore ſith neither of theſe can befall in tender infancie, we ought to beware leaſt if they be admitted to the communion of baptiſme, the ſignification of it be made void and vaine. But theſe dartes are throwen rather againſt GOD than againſt vs. For it is moſt euident by many teſtimonies of Scripture, that circumciſion alſo was a ſigne of repentance, Moreouer it is called of Paul the ſeale of the righteouſneſſe of Faith. Let therefore a reaſon be required of God himſelfe why hee commaunded it to be marked in the bodies of infantes.

Rom.14.11.

For

For ſith baptiſme and circumciſion are both in one caſe, they can giue nothing to the one but that they muſt alſo therewithall graunt the ſame to the other. If they looke backe to their wonted ſtarting hole, that then by the age of infancie were figured ſpirituall infantes, the way is alreadie ſtopped vp againſt them. We ſay therefore, ſith God hath communicated to infants circumciſion a ſacrament of repentance and faith, it ſeemeth no abſurditie if they be made partakers of baptiſme: vnleſſe they liſt openly to rage againſt the ordinance of God. But both in all the doings of God, and in this ſelfe ſame doing alſo ſhineth wiſedome and righteouſneſſe enough, to beat downe the backebitings of the wicked. For though infants, at the ſame inſtant that they were circumciſed, did not comprehende in vnderſtanding what that ſigne meant: yet they were truely circumciſed into the mortification of their corrupt and defiled nature, in which mortification they ſhoulde afterwarde exerciſe themſelues when they were growen to riper age. Finally it is verie eaſie to aſſoile this obiection, with ſaying that they be baptiſed into repentance and Faith to come: which although they be not formed in them, yet by ſecrete working of the Spirit the ſeede of both lyeth hidden in them. With this aunſwere at once is ouerthrowen whatſoeuer they wreſt againſt vs which they haue fetched out of the ſignification of baptiſme. Of which ſort is that title wherewith it is commended of Paul, where he calleth it the waſhing of regeneration & of renewing. Whereupon they gather that it is to be giuen to none but to ſuch a one as is able to conceiue thoſe things. But we on the contrary ſide may anſwere, that neither was circumciſion which betokened regeneration, to be giuen to any other than to them that were regenerate. And ſo ſhall we condemne the ordinance of God. Wherefore (as we haue alreadie touched in diuerſe places) whatſoeuer arguments do tend to the ſhaking of circumciſion, they haue no force in the aſſayling of baptiſme. Neither do they ſo eſcape away, if they ſay that we ought to take that for determined and certaine, which ſtandeth vpon the authoritie of God, although there appeare no reaſon of it: which reuerence is not due to the baptiſme of infants, nor to ſuch other things which be not commended vnto vs by the expreſſe word of God: ſith they are ſtil faſt holden with this double argument. For the commaundement of God concerning infantes to be circumciſed, was either lawfull and ſubiect to no cauillations, or worthie to be found fault withal. If there were no inconuenience nor abſurdity in the commaundement of circumciſion, neither can there any abſurditie be noted in obſeruing the baptiſme of infantes. Tit. 3. 5.

21 As for the ſpot of abſurditie which in this place they go about to lay vpon it, we thus wipe it away. Whome the Lord hath vouchſaued to elect, if hauing receiued the ſigne of regeneration, they depart out of this preſent life before that they be come to riper age, he reneweth them with the power of his ſpirite incomprehenſible to vs, in ſuch manner as hee alone foreſeeeth to be expedient. If they chance to grow vp to age, whereby they may be taught the trueth of baptiſme, they ſhall hereby bee the more inkindled to the endeuour of renewiug, the token whereof they ſhall learne to haue bene giuen them from their firſt infancie, that they ſhoulde exerciſe themſelues in it throughout ỹ whole courſe of their life. To the ſame entẽt ought that to be applied which Paul teacheth in two places, that by baptisme wee are buried together with Christ For he doth not meane thereby, that hee which is to be baptised, must be alreadie first buried together with Christ: but simplie declareth what doctrine is contained vnder baptisme, yea & that to them that be alreadie baptised: so that verie mad men would not affirme by this place that it goeth before baptisme. After this manner Moses and the prophets did put the people in minde what circumcision meant, wherewith yet they had beene marked while they were infantes. Of the same effect also is that which hee writeth to the Galathians, that they when they were baptised, did put on Christ. To what ende? verily that they should from thence forth liue to Christ, because they had not liued before. And although in the older sort the receiuing of the signe ought to follow ỹ vnderstanding of the mysterie: yet it shall be by and by declared that infantes ought to bee otherwise esteemed and accoũted of. And no otherwise ought we to iudge of the place of Peter, in which they thinke that they haue a strong hold: whē he saith that it is not a washing to wipe away the filthinesses of the body, but the witnesse of a good conscience before God, by the resurrection of Christ. They indeede do gather thereby, that nothing is left to the baptisme of infantes, but that it should be a vaine smoke, namely from which this truth is far distant. But they often offend in this errour, that they wil haue the thing in order of time to goe alway before the signe. For the trueth of circumcision also consisted of the same witnesse of good conscience. If it ought of necessitie to haue gone before, infantes shoulde neuer haue beene circumcised by the commaundement of God. But he shewing that the witnesse of a good conscience was contained vnder the trueth of circumcision, and yet therewithall also commaunding infants to be circumcised, doth in ỹ pointe sufficiently declare that circumcision is applied to the time to come. Wherfore there is no more present effectualnes to be required in baptisme of infantes, than that it should confirme and stablish the couenant made by the Lord with them. The rest of the signification of that Sacrament shall afterward follow at such time as God himselfe foreseeth.

Baptisme of infantes proued by allegatiõs brought to disproue it, as that it is ministred to the forgiuenes of sinnes, that the Church is therewith clensed of the Lorde in the worde of life, that thereby wee are graffed into the bodie of Christ.

Ephe. 5.26

22 Nowe I thinke there is no man, that doeth not clearely see that all such reasons of theirs are mere misconstruings of scripture. As for the rest that be of a neere kinde to these, we will lightly runne through them by the way. They obiect that baptisme is giuen vnto the forgiuenes of sinnes: which when it is graunted, will largely make for defence of our sentence. For sith we be borne sinners, we do euen form our mothers wombe neede forgiuenes and pardon. Now seing the Lord doth not cut off, but rather assure to that age the hope of mercy: why shoulde we take from them the signe which is much inferiour than the thing it selfe? Wherefore that which they goe about to throw against vs, we thus throw backe against themselues: infantes haue remission of sinnes giuen them, therefore they ought not to haue the signe taken from them. They alleadge also this out of the Epistle to the Ephesians: that the Church is cleansed of the Lorde, with the washing of water in the worde of life. Than which there coulde nothing be alleadged more fit to ouerthrow their errour: for thereupon groweth an easie proofe of our side. If the Lord will haue ỹ washing wherwith he cleanseth his church

to

to be testified by baptisme: it seemeth not rightfull that it shoulde want the testimonie of it in infantes, which are rightfully accompted parte of the Church, forasmuch as they be called heires of the heauenly kingdome. For Paul speaketh of the whole Church, where he saieth that it was cleansed with the baptisme of water. Likewise of this that in an other place he saieth that we be by baptisme graffed into the body of Christ, wee gather that infantes, whom he reckeneth among his members, ought to be baptised, least they be plucked away from his body. Beholde with what violence with so many engines they assault the fortresses of our faith. 1.Cor.12.13

23 Then they come downe to the practise and custome of the time of the Apostles, wherein none is found to haue beene admitted to baptisme, but he which hath before professed faith and repentance. For where Peter was asked of them that were minded to repent, what was needful to be done he counselled them first to repent, and then to be baptised, into the forgiuenesse of sinnes. Likewise Philip, when the Eunuch required to be baptised, aunswered that he might be baptised if he beleeued with al his heart. Hereby they thinke that they may winne, that it is not lawfull that baptisme bee graunted to any, but where faith and repentance goe before. Truely if wee yeelde to this reason, the first of these two places where is no mention made of faith, wil proue that repentance alone sufficeth: & the other place, wherin repentance is not required, wil proue that faith onely is enough. I thinke they will aunswere that the one place is holpen with the other, and therefore must be ioyned together. I say also likewise, that other places must bee laid together which make somewhat to the vndoing of this knot: forasmuch as there be many sentences in scripture, the vnderstanding wherof hangeth vpon the circumstãce of the place. As this presently is an example. For they to whom Peter and Philip spake these things were of age sufficient to haue practise of repentance and to conceiue faith. We earnestly deny that such ought to be baptised, vntill after perceiuing of their conuersion and faith, at least so farre as it may be searched out by the iudgement of mẽ. But, that infantes ought to be accompted in an other number, it is more than euident enough. For in old time if any man did ioyne himselfe into communion of religion with Israel, it behoued that hee shoulde first bee taught the couenant of the Lord, & instructed in the law, before that hee were marked with circumcision, becaus in birth he was a straunger from the people of Israell, with whome the couenant had beene made with circumcision stablished.

The apostles in not baptising anie come vnto yeares of discretion vvithout repentance & professiõ made of their faith, meant not hereby to teach that none shold be baptised but onely such as vvere of yeares to doe this.

24 As also the Lord, when he adopteth Abraham to himselfe, doth not begin at circumcision, hiding in the meane time what he meaneth by that signe: but first he declareth what couenant he intendeth to make with him, and then after faith giuen to the promise, hee maketh him partaker of the Sacrament. Why doth in Abraham the sacrament folow faith, & in Isaac his sonne it goeth before al vnderstanding? Because it is meet that he, which being in ful growen age is receiued into fellowship of the couenãt, from which he had beene hitherto a stranger, should first learne the conditions thereof: but an infant begotten of him needed not so, which by right of inheritance according to the forme of the promise is euen from his mothers wombe cõtained in the couenant. Or (that the matter may bee more clearely and briefely ſhewed) if the children of the faithfull, without the helpe of vnderſtanding, are partakers of the couenant, there is no cauſe why they ſhoulde be debarred from the ſigne for this that they cannot ſweare to the forme of the couenant. This verily is the reaſon, why in ſome places God affirmeth that the infantes which are iſſued of the Iſraelites, are begotten and borne to him. For without doubt he eſteemeth as his children the children of the to whoſe ſeede hee promiſeth that he will bee a Father. But he which is vnfaithfull, iſſued of vngodly parentes, till hee bee by faith vnited to God, is iudged a ſtraunger from the communion of the couenant. Therefore it is no maruell if he be not partaker of the ſigne, the ſignification whereof ſhoulde be deceitfull and voyde in him. To this effect Paul alſo writeth, that the gētiles ſo long as they were drowned in their idolatrie, were out of the Teſtament. With this ſhort ſumme, (as I thinke) the whole matter may be clearly opened: that they which in growen age, embrace the faith of Chriſt, foraſmuch as they were hitherto ſtrangers from the couenaunt, are not to bee marked with baptiſme, but whereas faith and repentance come betweene, which onely can open them the entrie into fellowſhip of the couenant: but the infantes that are iſſued of Chriſtians, as they are receiued of God into the inheritance of the couenāt, ſo ſoone as they be borne, ſo ought to be receiued to baptiſme. Hereunto muſt that bee applied which the Euangeliſt ſpeaketh of, that they were baptiſed of Iohn which confeſſed their ſinnes. Which example at this day alſo we thinke meete to be kept. For if a Turke offer himſelfe to baptiſme, he ſhould not be raſhly baptiſed of vs, namely not till after confeſſion whereby he may ſatisfie the Church.

The vvordes of Chriſt concerning birth of vvater & the ſpirite nothing leſſe than a proofe that actual regeneration muſt preſētly alvvaies concur vvith baptiſme.

25 Moreouer they bring foorth the words of Chriſt, which are rehearſed in the third Chapter of Iohn, whereby they thinke that a preſent regeneration is required in baptiſme. Vnleſſe a man be borne againe of water & the ſpirite, he cannot enter into the kingdome of God. Loe (ſay they) howe baptiſme is by the Lordes owne mouth called regeneration. Then therfore whom it is more than enough knowen to be vnable to receiue regeneration by what colour we do admit to baptiſme which cannot be without regeneration? Firſt they are deceiued in this that they think that in this place mētion is made of baptiſme, becauſe they heare the name of water. For after ỹ Chriſt had declared to Nicodemus the corruption of nature, & taught him, ỹ men muſt be borne of new, becauſe Nicodemus dreamed of a bodily newe birth, he there ſhewed the manner how God doth regenerate vs, namely by water and the Spirite: as though he ſhould ſaie by the ſpirite which in cleanſing and watering faithfull ſoules, doeth the office of water. Therefore I take water and the ſpirite ſimplie for the ſpirite, which is water. Neither is this a newe forme of ſpeech, for it altogether agreeth with the ſame which is in the thirde Chapter of Mathewe: Hee that followeth me, it is he that baptiſeth in the holy Ghoſt & fire. Therfore as to baptiſe in the holy Ghoſt and fire, is to giue the Holy Ghoſt, which hath the office and nature of fire: ſo to be borne againe of water and the ſpirite, is nothing elſe but to receiue that power of the holy ſpirite which doth the ſame thing in the ſoule that water doeth in the bodie. I knowe that other doe otherwiſe expounde it: but I am out of doubt that this is the naturall meaning: becauſe the purpoſe of Christ is none other, but to teach that al they must put off their own nature which aspire to the heauenly kingdome. Howebeit if we list to cauill vnsauorily as they do, it were easie for vs (when we haue granted as they woulde haue it) to inferre vpon them that baptisme is before faith and repentance: for asmuch as in the wordes of Christ it goeth before the spirit. It is certaine that this is vnderstanded of spiritual giftes: which if they come after baptisme, I haue obtained what I require. But leauing cauillations, we must hold fast the plaine exposition, which I haue brought, that no man till hee haue beene renewed with liuing water, that is, with the spirite, can enter into the kingdome of God.

Al vnbaptised not to be adiudged to eternal death.

26 Now hereby also it is euident that their fained inuention is to bee hissed out, which adiudge all the vnbaptised to eternall death. Therefore let vs according to their request imagine baptisme to bee ministred to none but to them that bee growen in age: What will they say, shall become of a Childe, which is rightly and well instructed with the introductions of godlines, if when the day of baptising is at hande, he happen to bee taken away with sudden death beside al mens hope? The Lordes promise is cleare, that whosoeuer hath beleeued in the sonne, shall not see death, nor shal come into iudgement, but is alreadie passed from death into life: and it is no where found that he euer damned him that was not yet baptised. Which I woulde not haue so taken of me as though I meant that baptisme might freely bee despised (by which despising I affirme that the Lords couenant is defiled: so much lesse can I abide to excuse it) onely it is enough for mee to prooue, that it is not so necessarie, that he should be immediately thought to be lost, from whom power is taken away to obtaine it. But if wee agree to their fained deuise, we shall damne al them without exception, whome any chance withholdeth from baptisme, with how great faith soeuer (by which Christ himselfe is possessed) otherwise they are endued. Moreouer they make all infantes guiltie of eternal death, to whome they denie baptisme, which by their owne confession is necessarie to saluation. Nowe let them looke howe trimly they agree with the wordes of Christ, by which the kingdome of heauen is adiudged to that age. But, to graunt them euerie thing so muche as pertaineth to the vnderstanding of this place, yet they shal gather nothing thereof, vnles they ouerthrow the former doctrine which we haue stablished concerning the regeneration of infantes.

The baptisme of infātes not dispreued by the commaundement which Christ gaue to teach and baptise, nor by the promise of saluation which he maketh to euerie one that beleeueth and is baptised.

27 But they glorie that they haue the strongest hold of all in the verie institution of baptisme, which they fetch out of the last Chapter of Mathewe: where Christ sending foorth his Apostles to al nations, giueth them the first commaundement to teach them, and the second to baptise them. Then also out of the last of Marke they adioine this, He that beleeueth and is baptised, shall be saued. What seeke we further (say they) when the Lords owne wordes doe openly sound, that we must first teach ere we baptise, and do assigne to baptisme the seconde state after Faith? Of which order the Lorde also shewed an example in himself, which would be baptised not til ỹ thirtith yeare. But here, O good God, howe many waies doe they both entangle themselues, and bewray their owne ignorance? For herein they now more than childishly erre, that they fetch the first institution of Baptisme from

Marke. 16. 16
Luke. 3 23

thence, which Christ had frō the beginning of his preaching giuen in charge to his Apostles to minister. Therefore there is no cause why they should affirme that the law and rule of Baptisme is to be fetched out of these places, as though they contained the first institution thereof. But to beare with thē for this fault, yet how strong is this manner of reasoning? Truely if I listed to dallie with them, there is not a little lurking hole, but a most wide field offereth it selfe open for vs to escape them. For when they sticke so fast to the order of words, that they gather that because it is saide, Go, preach and baptise, Againe, he that beleeueth and is baptised, therefore they must preache before that they baptise, & beleeue before ẏ they require baptisme: why may not wee againe aunswere them with saying that we must baptise before that we must teach the keeping of those thinges that Christ hath commaunded namely sith it is said, baptise ye, teaching them to keepe whatsoeuer thinges I haue commanded you? which same things we haue noted in that saying of Christ which hath ben euen now alleadged concerning the regeneration of water and the Spirit. For if it be so vnderstoode as they woulde haue it, verily in that place baptisme must be before spirituall regeneration, because it is named in ẏ first place, For Christ doth teach that we must be regenerate, not of the spirite & water, but of water and the spirite.

Mar. 16. 15

28 Nowe this inuincible reason whereupon they beare themselues so bolde, seemeth to be somewhat shaken: but because trueth hath defence enough in simplicitie, I wil not escape away with such light arguments. Therefore let them take with them a ful aunswere. Christ in this place giueth the chiefe commaundement concerning preaching of the Gospell, whereunto he adioineth the ministerie of baptisme as an addition hanging vpon it. Againe he speaketh none otherwise of baptisme, but so far as the ministration of it is vnder the office of teaching. For Christ sendeth the Apostles to publish the Gospell to all the nations of the worlde, that they shoulde from echwhere with the doctrine of saluation gather together into his kingdome men that before were lost. But whom, or what manner of men? It is certaine that there is no mention but of thē that are able to receiue teaching. Afterwarde he addeth that such, when they are instructed, ought to be baptised, adioyning a promise, that they which beleeue and are baptised shall be saued. Is there in all that saying so much as one syllable of infantes? What forme therfore of reasoning shal this be wherwith they assaile vs: they which are of growen age, must first be instructed, that they may beleeue, ere they be baptised: therefore it is vnlawful to make baptisme common to infantes? Although they would burst themselues, they shal prooue nothing else by this place but that the gospel must be preached to them that are of capacitie able to heare it, before that they be baptised, forasmuch as he there speaketh of such only. Let them hereof, if they can make a stoppe to debarre infantes from baptisme.

The Gospel by Christes appointment to be preached to men of capacitie & they to beleeue before they be baptised: but not infants therefore to be vnbaptised till they come vnto yeeres of habilitie to heare and beleeue.

Children no more excluded from baptisme by commaundement giuen that no men should be baptised before they beleeue, than from meate by thapostles iniunction that none should eate that laboureth not.

2. Thes. 3. 10

29 But that euen blinde men also may with groping finde out their deceites, I will point them out with a verie cleare similitude. If anie man cauill that infantes ought to haue meate taken from thē, vpon this pretence that the Apostle suffereth none to eate but them that labor, shall he not bee worthie that all men should spit at him? Why so? Because he with difference draw-

draweth that to al men, which was ſpoken of one kinde & one certaine age of men. No whit handſomer is their handling in this preſent cauſe. For that which euerie man ſeeth to belong to one age alone, they drawe to infantes, ỹ this age alſo may be ſubiect to the rule which was made for none but them that were more growen in yeares. As for the example of Chriſt, it nothing vpholdeth their ſide, He was not baptiſed before that he was thirtie yeares olde. That is indeede true: but there is a reaſon thereof readie to be ſhewed: becauſe he then purpoſed by his preaching to lay a ſound foundatiõ of baptiſme, or rather to ſtabliſh the foundation which had beene before laide of Iohn. Therefore when he minded with his doctrine to inſtitute baptiſme, to procure ỹ greater authoritie to his inſtitution, he ſanctified it with his owne bodie, and that in ſuch fitneſſe of time as was moſt conuenient, namely whẽ he began his preaching. Finally, they ſhall gather nothing elſe hereof, but that baptiſme toke his original & beginning at the preaching of the Goſpel. If they liſt to appoint the thirteeth yeare, why do they not keepe it, but doe receiue euerie one to baptiſme as he hath in their iudgement ſufficiently profited? yea & Seruettus one of their maſters, when he ſtiffely required this time, yet began at the 21. yeare of his age to boaſt himſelfe to bee a prophet. As though he were to be ſuffred that taketh vpon himſelf the place of a teacher in the church, before that he be a member of the church. Luke. 3. 23

30 At the laſt they obiecte, that there is no greater cauſe why baptiſme ſhould be giuen to infants, than the Lords ſupper, which yet is not graunted them. As though the ſcripture did not euery way expreſſe a large difference. The ſame was in deede vſually done in the olde Church, as it appeareth by Cyprian and Auguſtine: but that maner is worthily growen out of vſe. For if we conſider the nature and propertie of baptiſme, it is truely an entrie into the Church, and as it were a forme of admiſſion, whereby we are adnumbred into the people of God, a ſigne of our ſpirituall regeneration by which we are borne againe into the children of God: whereas on the other ſide the Supper is giuen to them that be more growen in age, which hauing paſſed tender infancie, are nowe able to beare ſtrong meate. Which difference is verie euidently ſhewed in the ſcripture. For there the Lorde ſo much as pertaineth to baptiſme, maketh no choiſe of ages. But hee doeth not likewiſe giue the ſupper to all to take part of it, but only to them which are fit to diſcerne the body & bloud of the Lorde, to examine their owne conſcience, to declare the Lords death, to weigh the power therof. Woulde wee haue anie thing plainer, than that which the Apoſtle teacheth whẽ he exhorteth that euerie man ſhould proue & examine himſelfe, and then eate of this bread & drinke of this cup? Therefore examination muſt goe before, which ſhould in vaine be looked for of infants. Againe, hee that eateth vnworthily, eateth & drinketh damnation to himſelfe, not diſcerning the Lords body. If none can partake worthily but they that can well diſcerne the holineſſe of the Lords bodie, why ſhould we giue to our tender children, poyſon in ſteede of liuely foode? What is that commaundement of the Lorde, yee ſhall doe it in remembrance of mee? what is that other which the Apoſtle deriueth from the ſame, So oft as ye ſhall eate of this bread, yee ſhall declare the Lordes death till he come? What remembrance (I beſeech you) ſhall wee require at our infants of the thing which they neuer attained with vnderstanding, what preaching of the crosse of Christ, the force and benefite whereof they do not yet comprehende in minde? None of these thinges is prescribed in baptisme. Therefore betweene these two signes is great difference: which we note also in like signes in the olde testament; Circumcision, which is knowen to answere to our baptisme, was appointed for infants. But the passouer into whose place the Supper hath now succeeded, did not receiue all maner of gestes without difference, But was rightly eaten of them onely that might by age enquire of the signification of it. If these men had remaining one crumme of sound braine, woulde they be blinde at a thing so cleare and offring it selfe to sight.

The ſcripture ſhewveth reaſon vvhy the Lordes Supper ſhould not be giuen vnto infantes, but vvhy baptiſme ſhould not none.

1. Cor. 11. 28

Twentie argumentes of Seruetus against the baptisme of children answered.

31 Although it grieueth me to lode the readers with a heape of trifles: yet it shalbe worth the trauaile briefely to wipe away such gay reasons as Seruetus not the least of the Anabaptistes, yea the great glorie of that company, thought himselfe to bring when he prepared himselfe to conflict. Hee alleageth, that Christes signes as they be perfect, so doe require them that be perfect or able to conceiue perfection. But the solution is easie: that the perfection of baptisme, which extendeth euen to death, is wrongfully restrained to one point of time. I say yet further, that perfection is foolishly required in man at the first day, whereunto baptisme allureth vs al our life lõg by continuall degrees. He obiecteth that Christes signes were ordained for remembrance, that euerie man shoulde remember that he was buried togither with Christ. I answere that that which hee hath fained of his owne head, needeth no confutation: yea ỹ which he draweth to baptisme, Paules wordes shewe to be proper to the holy Supper, that euerie man should examine himselfe: but of baptisme there is no where any such thing. Whereupon wee gather that they bee rightly baptised which for their smalnesse of age, are not yet able to receiue examination. Whereas he thirdly alleageth, that al they abide in death which beleeue not the sonne of God, and that the wrath of God abideth vppon them: and therefore that infantes which cannot beleeue lie in their damnation: I aunswere that Christ there speaketh nõt of the generall giltinesse wherewith all the posteritie of Adam are enwrapped, but onely threatneth the despisers of the Gospel, which doe proudly and stubbornly refuse the grace offred them. But this nothing pertaineth to infants. Also I set a contrarie reason against them: that whomsoeuer Christ blesseth, hee is discharged from the curse of Adam and the wrath of God: Sith therefore it is knowen that infantes are blessed of him, it followeth that they are discharged from death. Then he falsely citeth that which is nowhere read, that whosoeuer is borne of the spirite, heareth the voice of the spirit. Which although we graunt to be writtren, yet shall prooue nothing else but that the faithfull are framed to obedience, according as the spirite worketh in them. But that which is spoken of a certaine number, it is faultie to drawe indifferently to all. Fourthly, he obiecteth: because that goeth before which is naturall wee must tarrie ripe time for baptisme which is spiritual. But although I graunt that al the posteritie of Adam begotten of the flesh doe from the verie wombe beare their owne damnation, yet I denie that that withstandeth but that God may presently bring remedie.

For

For neither ſhal Seruetus proue that there were many yeres appointed by God that the ſpirituall newneſſe of life may beginne. As Paul teſtifieth, although they which are borne of the faithfull are by nature damned: yet by ſupernaturall grace they are ſaued. Then he bringeth foorth an allegorie, that Dauid going vp into the towre of Sion, did leade neither blind men nor lame men with him but ſtrong ſouldiours. But what if I ſet a parable againſt it, wherein God calleth to the heauenly banket blinde men and lame men: howe will Seruetus vnwinde himſelfe out of this knot? I aske alſo whether lame and maimed men had not firſte beene ſouldiours with Dauid. But it is ſuperfluous to tary longer vpon this reaſon, which the readers ſhal find by the holy hiſtorie to be made of meere falſehoode. There followeth an other allegorie, that the Apoſtles were fiſhers of men, not of little children. But I aske, what that ſaying of Chriſt meaneth, that into the net of the Goſpel are gathered all kindes of fiſhes. But becauſe I like not to play with allegories, I aunſwere that when the office of teaching was enioyned to the Apoſtles, yet they were not forbidden from baptiſing of infantes. Howbeit I would yet know, whē the Euangeliſt nameth thē Anthropous, men, (in which worde is comprehended al man kinde without exception) why they ſhoulde deny infantes to be men. Seuenthly he alleageth, that ſith ſpirituall thinges agree with ſpirituall, infantes which are not ſpirituall, are alſo not meete for baptiſme. But firſt it is plainely euident howe wrongfully they wreſt the place of Paul. There is entreated of doctrine: when the Corinthians did too much ſtande in their owne conceite for vaine ſharpeneſſe of witte, Paul rebuketh their ſluggiſhneſſe, for that they were yet to be inſtructed in the firſt introductions of heauenly wiſedom. Who can thereof gather that baptiſme is to be denied to infants, whom being begotten of the fleſh God doth by free adoption make holy to himſelfe? Whereas he ſaith, that they muſte be fedde with ſpirituall meate, if they be newe men, the ſolution is eaſie, that by baptiſme they are admitted into the flocke of Chriſte, and that the ſigne of adoption ſuffiſeth them, till being growen to age they be able to beare ſtrong meate: that therefore the time of examination which GOD expreſly requireth in the holy Supper, muſt be tarried for. Afterwarde hee obiecteth that Chriſt calleth all his to the holy Supper. But it is certaine enough that he admitteth none, but them that bee already prepared to celebrate the remembrance of his death. Whereupon followeth that infantes whom he vouchſafed to embrace, do ſtay in a ſeueral and proper degree by themſelues til they growe to age, and yet are not ſtrangers. Whereas hee ſaith, that it is monſtruous that a man after that he is borne, ſhould not eat: I aunſwere that ſoules are otherwiſe fed than by the outwarde eating of the Supper: and that therefore Chriſte is neuertheleſſe meate to infantes, although they abſtaine from the ſigne. But of baptiſme the caſe is otherwiſe, by which onely the gate into the Church is opened to them. Againe he obiecteth that a good ſtewarde diſtributeth meate to the houſholde in due time. Which although I willingly graunt: yet by what right will he appoint vnto vs the certaine time of baptiſme, that he may prooue that it is not giuen to infantes out of time. Moreouer hee bringeth in that commaundement of Chriſt to the Apoſtles, that they ſhould make haſt into the harueſt, while

while the fieldes waxe white. Verily Christ meaneth this onely, that the Apostles seeing the fruite of their labour present, should the more cheerefully prepare themselues to teach. Who shal therefore gather that the only time 11 of harueſt is the ripe time for baptisme? His eleuenth reason is, that in the Act.12.26 first Church Christians and disciples were all one: but we see nowe that hee fondely reasoneth from the part to the whole. Disciples are called men of ful age, which had beene alreadie throughly taught, & had professed Christ: as it behoued that the Iewes vnder the lawe should be the disciples of Moses: yet no man shal thereof rightly gather, that infantes were strangers, whom the Lorde hath testified to be of his household. Beside these he alleageth, 12 that all Christians are brethren, in which number infantes are not vnto vs, so long as we debarre them from the Supper. But I returne to that principle, that none are heires of the kingdome of heauen, but they that are the members of Christ: then, that the embracing of Christ was a true token of the adoption, whereby infantes are ioyned in common with full growen men, and that the absteining for a time from the Supper withstandeth not but that they pertaine to the bodie of the Church. Neither did the theefe that was conuerted on the Crosse, cease to be brother of the godly, although 13 he neuer came to the Supper. Afterwarde he addeth, that none is made our brother but by the Spirite of adoption, which is giuen only by the hearing of faith. I aunswere, that he still falleth backe into the same deceitfull argument, because he ouerthwartly draweth that to infants which was spoken onely of growen men. Paul teacheth there that this is Gods ordinarie manner of calling to bring his elect to the faith, when he stirreth vp to them faithfull teachers, by whose ministerie & trauaile he reacheth his hand to them. Who dare thereby appoint a lawe to him, but that he may by some other secret way graffe infants into Christ? Where he obiecteth that Cor-
14 nelius was baptised after that he had receiued the holy Ghost: howe wrong-
Act.10.24 Act.8.27. fully he doeth out of one example gather a general rule, appeareth by the Eunuch and the Samaritanes, in whome the Lorde kept a contrarie order, that baptisme went before the giftes of the holy Ghost. The fifteenth reason 15 is more than fooliſh. Hee saieth that wee are by regeneration made gods:
Iohn.1.35 & that they be gods to whom the worde of God is spoken, which accordeth not to children that be infantes. Whereas he faineth a Godheade to the faithful, that is one of his dotages, which it pertaineth not to this presente place to examine. But to wrest the place of the Psalme to so contrarie a sense, is a point of desperate shamelesnesse. Christ saieth, that Kinges and Magistrates are called of the prophet gods, because they beare an office appointed them of God. But, that which concerning the speciall commandement of gouernaunce is directed to certaine men, this handsome expositor draweth to the doctrine of the Gospel, that he may banishe infantes out of the 16 Churche. Againe he obiecteth, that infantes can not be accounted newe men, because they are not begotten by the worde. But I doe nowe agayne repeate that which I haue often saide, that to regenerate vs doctrine is the vncorruptible seede, if wee be fitte to receiue it: but when by reason of age there is not yet in vs aptnesse to learne, God keepeth his degrees of rege-
17 nerating. Afterwarde he commeth backe to his allegories, that in the lawe

sheepe and a goat were not offred in sacrifice so soone as they came out of the wombe. If I listed to drawe figures to this purpose, I could likewise redily obiect against him, that all first begotten thinges were consecrate to God so soone as they had opened the wombe: then, that a lambe must be killed at a yeeres age. Whereupon followeth that manlye strength is not to be tarried for, but rather that the newe and yet tender issues are chosen of God for sacrifices. Furthermore he affirmeth that none can come to Christ, but they that haue beene prepared of John. As though Johns office were not enduring but for a time. But, to omit this, truely that same preparation was not in the children whome Christ embraced & blessed. Wherefore let him go with his false principle. At length he calleth for patrones Trismegistus and the Sibylles, to proue that holy washings pertaine not but to them that are of growen age. Lo how honorably he thinketh of the baptisme of Christ, which hee reduceth to the ceremonies of the Gentiles, that it may be no otherwise ministred than pleaseth Trismegistus. But wee more esteeme the authoritie of God, whome it hath pleased to make infants holy to himselfe, and to admitte them with the holy signe, the force whereof they did not yet by age vnderstand. Neither doe we count it lawfull to borrowe out of the cleansinges of the Gentiles anie thing that may change in our baptisme the euerlasting and inuiolable lawe of God, which he hath stablished concerning circumcision. Last of all, he maketh this argument: that if it be lawefull to baptise infants without vnderstanding, then baptisme may enterlude-like and in sport be ministred of boies when they play. But of this matter let him quarel with God by whose commandement circumcision was common to infants before that they had attained vnderstanding. Was it therefore a playing matter, or subiect to the follies of children, that they might ouerthrow the holy ordinance of God? But it is no marueile that these reprobate spirites, as though they were vexed with a phrensie, doe thrust in all the grossest absurdities for defence of their errours: because God doth with such giddinesse iustly take vengeance of their pride and stubbornnesse. Verily I trust I haue made plaine with how feeble succors Seruetus hath holpe his silly brethren the Anabaptistes.

32 Nowe I thinke it wilbe doutfull to no sober man, howe rashly they trouble the Church of Christ, that moue brawles & contentions for the baptisme of infants. But it is profitable to consider, what Satan goeth about with this so great suttletie: euen to take away from vs the singular fruit of affiance and spiritual ioy which is to be gathered hereof, and to diminishe as muche also of the glorie of the goodnesse of God. For howe sweete is it to godlye minds, to be certified not onely by worde, but also by sight to be seene with eies, that they obtaine so much fauour with the heauenly father, that hee hath also care of their posteritie? For here it is to be seene, howe he taketh vpon him the person of a most prouident father of household towarde vs, which euen after our death doeth not lay away his carefulnesse of vs, but prouideth and foreseeth for our children. Ought we not here after the exãple of Dauid with all our heart to leape vp vnto thankesgiuing, that by suche shewe of his goodnes, his name may be sanctified? This, verily Satan intendeth, in assailing with so great armies the baptisme of infantes: namely, that this testifiyng of the grace of God being taken away, the promise which by it is present before our eies, may at length by litle & litle vanish away. VVherupon should growe not only a wicked vnthankefulnesse towarde the mercie of God, but also a certaine slothfulnesse in instructing our children to godlinesse. For by this spurre wee are not a litle pricked forwarde to bring them vp in the earnest feare of God and in the keeping of his lawe, when we consider that euen immediatly from their birth, he taketh and acknowledgeth them for his children. VVherefore vnlesse we list enuiously to darken the bountifulnesse of God, let vs offer to him our children, to whome he giueth a place among them that be of his familie and housholde, that is to saye, the members of the Church.

The xvii. Chapter.

Of the holy Supper of Christ: and vvhat it auaileth vs.

The sacrament of the supper of Christ instituted to testifie that our soules are not onely once made alyue, but continually kept and nourished by Christ as by foode.

AFter that God hath once receiued vs into his familie, and not onely to take vs as his seruants, but as his children: that he may fulfil the office of a most good father, and careful for his issue, the taketh also vppon him to nouri h vs throughout the whole course of our life. And not contented therwith, it pleased him by a pledge giuen to assure vs of this continuall liberalitie. To this ende therefore he hath giuen his Church an other Sacrament by the hand of his onely begotten Sonne, namely a spirituall banket, wherein Christ testifieth himselfe to be the quickning bread, wherewith our soules are fed to true and blessed immortalitie. But forasmuch as the knowledge of so great a mysterie is verie necessarie, and according to the greatnesse thereof, requireth a diligent declaration: and Satan, that he might bereaue the Church of this inestimable treasure, hath long ago spread mistes, and since that time darkenesse, to obscure the light of it, and then hath stirred strifes and battailes that might estrange the mindes of the simple from tasting of this holie foode, and hath also in our time attempted the same craft: therefore when I shall haue briefely knit vp the summe for the capacitie of the vnlearned, I wil vndo those knottes, wherewith Satan hath endeuoured to snare the worlde. First, bread and wine are signes, which represent vnto vs the inuisible foode, which we receiue of the flesh and bloude of Christ. For as in baptisme God againe begetting vs doth graffe vs into the felowship of his Church, and by adoption doeth make vs his owne: so wee haue saide that he perfourmeth the office of a prouident father of housholde, in this that he continually ministreth vs meate, that he sustaineth and preserueth vs in that life whereunto he hath by his worde begotten vs. Nowe the onely meate of our soule is Christ, and therefore the heauenly Father calleth vs to him, that being refreshed with common partaking of him, wee may from time to time gather liuely force, vntill we attaine to heauenly immortalitie. But forasmuch as this mysterie of the secrete vniting of Christe with the godly is by nature impossible to be comprehended, hee giueth the figure and image thereof in visible signes most fit for our smal capacitie: yea, as it were by earnest and tokens giuen, he maketh it so assured vnto vs as if it were seene with our eies, because this so familiar a similitude entreth euen to the grosseſt mindes. that soules are so fed with Christ, as bread and wine doe susteine the bodily life. Nowe therefore wee haue it declared, to what ende this mystical all blessing tendeth, namely to assure vs, that the bodie of the Lorde was so once offred for vs, that we nowe eate it, and in eating it do feele in vs the effectual working of that onely sacrifice. that his bloude was so once shed for vs, that it is vnto vs continual drinke. And so sound the words of the promise there adioyned. Take, this is my bodie, which is deliuered for you. The body therefore which was once offred vp for our saluation, we are commanded to take and eate: that when we see our selues to be made partakers of this, we may certainely determine that the power of his death which bringeth life shalbe effectuall in vs. Whereupon also he calleth the cup, the couenant in his bloud. For after a certaine maner it reneweth, or rather continueth the couenant which he hath once stablished with his bloud, so much as pertaineth to the confirming of our faith, so oft as he teacheth vnto vs that holy bloud to be tasted of.

2 A great fruit verily of affiance and sweetnesse may godly soules gather of this sacrament, because they haue a witnesse, that we are growen together into one body with Christ, so that whatsoeuer is his we may cal ours. Hereupon followeth that we may boldly promise vnto our selues, that euerlasting life is ours, whereof he is heire: and that the kingdome of heauen, whereinto he is now entred, can no more fal away from vs than from him: againe that we cannot now be condemned by our sinnes, from the giltines whereof he hath acquited vs, when he willed them to be imputed to himself as if they were his owne. This is the marueilous exchange, which of his immeasurable bountifulnes he hath made with vs: that he being made with vs the sonne of man, hath made vs with him the sonnes of God: that by his comming downe into earth, he hath made vs a way to goe vp into heauen: that putting vpon him our mortalitie, he hath giuen vs his immortalitie: & taking on him our weakenes, he hath strengthened vs with his power: that taking our pouertie to himselfe, he hath conueyed his riches to vs: that taking to him the weight of our vnrighteousnes, wherwith we were oppressed, he hath clothed vs with his righteousnesse.

The exchaunge vvhich Christ hath made by taking that vppon him vvhich vvas ours, & cõmunicating that vvhich is his to vs confirmed by this sacrament.

3 Of all these things we haue so ful a witnessing in this sacrament, that we must certainly determine, that Christ is truely giuen vs, as if Christ himselfe were set present before our eies, and handled with our hands. For this worde can neither lie to vs, nor mocke vs: Take, eate, drinke: this is my bodie which is deliuered for you: this is the bloud, which is shed into the forgiueneſse of sinnes. Whereas he commaundeth to take, he signifieth that it is ours. Whereas he commaundeth to eate, he signifieth that that is made one substance with vs. Wheras he saith of the bodie, that it is deliuered for vs: of the bloud, that it is shed for vs: therein he teacheth that both are not so much his as ours: because hee tooke and laid away both, not for his commoditie, but to our saluation. And truely it is to be diligently marked, that the chiefe and in a manner whole pith of the sacrament standeth in these wordes. Which is deliuered for you, which is shed for you. For otherwise it should not much profit vs, that the body and bloud of our Lorde are nowe distributed, vnlesse they had beene once giuen foorth for our redemption and Christ truely giuẽ & made ours in this sacrament the vvhole pith vvhereof in a maner standeth herein, that for vs the body and bloud of Christ vvere offered vvhich vve receiue represented vnder breade and vvine to teach that they are to the soule the same vvhich these visible creatures to the bodie.

and ſaluation. Therefore they are repreſented vnder bread and wine, that we ſhould learne that they are not onely ours, but alſo ordained for the nouriſhment of ſpiritual life. This is it that wee before ſaide, that from the corporall thinges which are ſhewed foorth in the ſacramentes, we are by a certaine proportionall relation guided to ſpirituall things. So when bread is giuen vs for a ſigne of the bodie of Chriſt, we ought by & by to conceiue this ſimilitude: As bread nouriſheth, ſuſteineth, and maintaineth the life of our bodie: ſo the body of Chriſt is the onely meate to quicken and giue life to our ſoule. When we ſee wine ſet foorth for a ſigne of his bloud: wee muſte call to minde what vſes wine bringeth to the bodie, that we may conſider that the ſame are brought to vs ſpiritually by the bloud of Chriſt: thoſe vſes be, to cheriſh, to refreſh, to ſtrengthen, to make mery. For if wee ſufficiently weigh, what the deliuering of this holy bodie, what the ſhedding of this holy bloud, hath profited vs: wee ſhal plainely perceiue that theſe things which are ſpoken of bread and wine, according to ſuch proportionall relation doe verie well accorde with them towarde vs when they are communicated vnto vs.

The higheſt conſideration in this ſacrament is of the promiſe vvher by Chriſt hath teſtified his flesh to be meat and his bloud to be drinke in deede.

4 Therefore the chiefe partes of the Sacrament are not ſimply and without higher conſideration to reach to vs the bodie of Chriſt: but rather y ſame promiſe, whereby he teſtifieth, that his fleſh is verily meat, & his bloud is drinke, with which we are fed into eternall life: wherby he ffirmeth himſelfe to be the bread of life, of which who ſo eateth, he ſhall liue for euer: to ſeale (I ſay) and confirme that promiſe: and for bringing the ſame to paſſe, to ſend vs to the croſſe of Chriſt, where that promiſe hath beene truely perfourmed, and in all pointes fulfilled. For wee do not wel and healthfully eate Chriſt but crucified, when we do with liuely feeling conceiue the effectualnes of his death. For whereas he calleth himſelfe the bread of life, he did not borrow that name of the ſacrament, as ſome do wrongfully expound it: but becauſe he was giuen vs ſuch of the father, and perfourmed himſelfe ſuch, when being made partaker of our humaine mortality, he made vs partners of his diuine immortalitie: when offring himſelfe for ſacrifice, he tooke our accurſednes vpon himſelfe, that he might fill vs with bleſſing: when with his death he deuoured and ſwallowed vp death: when in his reſurrection hee raiſed vp this our corruptible fleſhe which he had put on, to glorie and vncorruption.

This ſacrament maketh not Chriſt to be the bread of life, but teſtifieth vnto vs that hee is ſo to ſuch as receiue him in the due eſtimation of theſe myſteries vvhereby he is receiued, to receiue him to eate his flesh & to drinke his bloud, an effect of beliefe and a thing to be diſtinguished frō faith.

5 It remaineth that by appliance all the ſame may come to vs. That is done, both by the Goſpell, and more clearely by the holy Supper, where both he offreth himſelfe to vs with all his good things, and we receiue him by faith. Wherefore the ſacrament maketh not that Chriſte firſt beginneth to be the bread of life: but when it bringeth into remembrance, that he was made the bread of life, which we continually eate, and when it giueth vnto vs the taſt and ſauour of that bread, then it maketh vs to feele the ſtrength of that bread. For it promiſeth vs, that whatſoeuer Chriſt did or ſuffred, the ſame was done to giue life to vs. Then, that this giuing of life is euerlaſting, by which we may without ende be nouriſhed, ſuſteined, and preſerued in life. For as Chriſt ſhould not haue beene to vs the bread of life, vnleſſe hee had beene borne and had died for vs, vnleſſe he had riſen againe for vs:

so nowe he should not be the same vnlesse the effectualnesse and fruite of his birth, death and resurrection, were an euerlasting and immortall thing. All which Christ hath very well expressed in these wordes. The bread which I will giue, is my flesh, which I will giue for ỹ life of the world. By which words without doubt he signifieth, that his body should therfore be to vs for bread, to the spiritual life of the soule, because it should be giuen forth to death for our saluation: and that it is deliuered to vs to eate of it, when by faith he maketh vs partakers of it. Once therefore he gaue it, that he might bee made bread, when he gaue forth himself to be crucified for the redemption of the world: daily he giueth it, when by the worde of the Gospell he offereth it vnto vs to be receiued, so farre as it was crucified: where he sealeth that deliuerance with the holy mysterie of the Supper: where he inwardlie fulfilleth that which he outwardly betokeneth. Nowe herein wee must beware of two faultes, ỹ neither doing too much in abasing the signes, we seeme to plucke them from their mysteries to which they are in a maner knitte fast: nor that being immeasurable in aduauncing the same, wee seeme in the meane time somewhat to darken the mysteries themselues. That Christ is the breade of life, wherewith the faithfull are nourished into eternall saluation, there is no man but he granteth, vnlesse he be altogether without religiō. But this point is not likewise agreed vpon among all men, what is the manner of partaking of him, For there be that in one worde define, that to eate the flesh of Christ and to drinke his bloud, is nothing else but to beleeue in Christ himself. But I thinke that Christ meant some certainer and higher thing, in that notable sermon where he commendeth to vs the eating of his flesh, namely, that we are quickened by the true partaking of him: which also he therefore expressed by the wordes of eating and drinking, least any man shoulde thinke, that the life which we receiue of him is conceiued by bare knowledge onely. For as not the sight, but the eating of bread suffiseth the body for nourishment: so it behoueth that the soule be truely & throughly made partaker of Christ, that by the power of him it may be quickened into a spirituall life. But in the meane time we confesse ỹ there is no other eating, but of faith: as there can no other be imagined. But this is the difference betweene my wordes & theirs, that with them to eate is only to beleeue: but I say ỹ the flesh of Christ is eaten with beleeuing, because by faith he is made ours, and I say that eating is the fruite and effect of faith. Or, if you wil haue it plainer, with them eating is faith: and I thinke it rather to followe of faith. In wordes verily the difference is but small: but in the thing it selfe, not small. For though the Apostle teacheth that Christ dwelleth in our heartes by faith: yet no man will expounde this dwelling to be faith: but all men doe perceiue that there is expressed a singular effect of faith, for that by it the faithful doe obtaine to haue Christ dwelling in them. After this maner, the Lorde meant, in calling himselfe the bread of life, not onely to teach that in the faith of his death and resurrection, saluation is reposed for vs: but also that by true partaking of himselfe it is brought to passe, that his life passeth into vs, and becommeth ours: like as bread, when it is taken for foode, ministreth liuelinesse to the body.

The meaning of saint Augustine and saint Chrysostome when they speake of the participation of the body of Christ.

6 Neither did Augustine, whome they bring in for their patrone, in anye other other meaning write that we eate by beleeuing, than to shewe that this eating is of faith, not of the mouth. Which I also denie not: but yet therwithall I adde, that we do by faith embrace Christ, not appearing a farre of, but making himselfe one with vs, that he may be our head, and we his members. Yet doe not I vtterly disalowe that manner of speaking: but onely I denie it to be a full declaration, if they meane to define what it is to eate the flesh of Christe. Otherwise I see that Augustine hath oft vsed this forme of speeche: as when he sayeth in the third booke of Christian doctrine, Vnlesse ye eate the flesh of the sonne of man: this is a figure teaching that wee must communicate with the passion of the Lorde, and must sweetely and profitably lay vppe in remembraunce that for vs his flesh was crucified and wounded. Againe when he sayeth that the three thousande men which were conuerted at Peters sermon, did drinke the bloude of Christ by beleeuing, which they hadde shedde by cruell dealing. But in many other places he honorably setteth out that benefite of faith, that by it our soules are no lesse refreshed with the communicating of the flesh of Christe, than our bodies are with the bread which they eate. And the same is it which in a certaine place Chrysostome writeth, that Christe doeth not onely by fayth, but also in deede make vs his body. For he meaneth not that we doe from any other where than from faith, obtaine such a benefite: but this onely he meaneth to exclude, that none when hee heareth faith to bee named, should conceiue a naked imagination. As for them that wil haue the Supper to be only a marke of outward profession, I do now passe them ouer: because I thinke ỹ I haue sufficiently confuted their error, when I entreated of sacramentes generally. Onely this thing let the readers marke, that when the cup is called the couenant in the bloude, there is a promise expressed that may be of force to confirme faith. Whereupon followeth, that vnlesse wee haue respect to God, and embrace that which he offreth, we do not rightly vse the holy Supper.

Hom. in Ioh. 31. and 40.

Act. 2.41.

Hom. 60.

Luke. 22.20.

They straine the communion of Christ too narrowly who make it nothing but the participation of his spirite onely.

7 Moreouer they also do not satisfie me, which acknowledging that we haue some communion with Christ, when they mean to expresse it, do make vs partakers onely of the spirite, without making any mention of flesh and bloude. As though all those thinges were spoken of nothing, that his flesh is verily meate, that his bloud is verily drinke: that none hath life, but hee that eateth that flesh, and drinketh that bloude: and such other sayinges that belong to the same ende. Wherefore if it be certaine that the ful communicating of Christ proceedeth beyond their description, as it is to narowly strained: I will now goe about to knit vp in fewe words, howe large it is and how farre it extendeth it selfe, before that I speake of the contrary fault of excesse. For I shall haue a longer disputation with the excessiue teachers, which, when according to their owne grossenesse they frame a maner of eating and drinking ful of absurditie, doe also transfigure Christ stripped out of his flesh into a fantasie: if yet a man may with any wordes comprehende so great a mysterie, which I see that I can not sufficiently comprehende with minde: and therefore I do willingly confesse it, that no man should measure the highnes therof by the smal proportion of my childishnesse. But rather I exhorte the readers, that they doe not restrain the sense of their minds within these two narrow boũds: but endeuour to rise vp much higher, than they can by my guiding. For I my selfe, so oft as I speake of this thing, when I haue traueiled to say all, thinke that I haue yet said but litle in respect of the worthinesse thereof. And although the minde can do more in thinking than the tongue in expressing: yet with greatnesse of the thing, the minde also is surmonted and ouerwhelmed. Finally therefore nothing remaineth, but that I must breake forth into admiration of ỹ mysterie, which neither the minde can suffice to thinke of, nor the tongue to declare. Yet after such maner as I can, I will set foorth the summe of my sentence: which as I nothing doubt to be true, so I trust that it wil not be disallowed of godly heartes.

8 First of all, we are taught out of the scripture, that Christ was from the beginning that life bringing worde of the Father, the fountaine and originall of life, from whence all thinges euer receiued their hauing of life. Wherefore Iohn sometime calleth him the worde of life, and somtime writeth that life was in him: meaning that he euen then flowing into all creatures, powred into them the power of breathing & liuing. Yet the same Iohn addeth afterward, that the life was then & not till then openly shewed, whẽ the Sonne of God taking vpon him our flesh, gaue himselfe to be seene with eyes and felt with hands. For though he did before also spread abroade his power into the creatures: yet because man, being by sinne estraunged from God, hauing lost the communion of life, sawe on euerie side death hanging ouer him: that he might recouer hope of immortalitie, it behooued that he shoulde be receiued into the communion of that worde. For howe small a confidence maiest thou cõceiue thereof, if thou heare ỹ the word of God in deede, from which thou art most farre remoued, conteineth in it selfe the fulnesse of life, but in thy selfe and rounde about thee nothing offereth it selfe and is present before thine eyes but death? But since that fountaine of life beganne to dwell in our flesshe, nowe it lieth not a farre off hidden from vs, but presently deliuereth it selfe to be partaken of vs. Yea and it maketh the very flesshe, wherein it resteth, to bee of power to bring life to vs, that by partaking thereof wee may be fedde to immortalitie. I am (saith hee) the bread of life, ỹ am come down from heauen. And the bread which I will giue is my flesh, which I will giue for the life of the worlde. In which wordes hee teacheth not onely that he is life, in respect that hee is the eternall worde of GOD which came downe to vs from heauen, but that in comming downe he powred the same power into the flesshe which he did put on, that from thence the communicating of life might flowe foorth vnto vs. Hereupon also these things nowe follow, that his flesh is verily meat, and his blood is verilie drinke, with which sustenances the faithfull are fostered into eternall life. Herein therefore consisteth singular comfort to the godly, ỹ nowe they finde life in their owne flesh. For so they doe not onely with easie passage atteine vnto it, but haue it of it selfe laid abroad for them & offering it selfe vnto them. Onely let them hold open the bosome of their heart ỹ they may embrace it being present, and they shall obteine it.

Christ from the beginning the fountaine of life, by taking our flesh maketh it of power beeing fed on to be sustenãce that fostereth vnto immortalitie.

Iohn 6. 48. and 58.

9 But although the flesh of Christ haue not so great power of it selfe, that it can giue life to vs, which both in the owne first estate of it was sub-

The flesh of Christ being (though not of it self) as vnwasted fountain from vvhence life flovveth, he that vvill liue must of necessitie be partaker thereof, and haue fellovvship vvith it.

Iohn. 5. 19.

ject to mortalitie, and now being endued with immortalitie, liueth not by it selfe: yet it is rightfully called life bringing, which is filled with fulnesse of life to powre it into vs. In which meaning I do with Cyril expounde that saying of Christ: as the father hath life in himselfe, so hee hath also giuen to the sonne to haue life in himselfe. For there he properly speaketh of his giftes, not which he from the beginning possessed with the father, but with which he was garnished in the same flesh in which he appeared. Therefore hee sheweth that in his manhoode also dwelleth the fulnesse of life, that whosoeuer partaketh of his flesh and bloode, may therewithall also enioy the partaking of life. Of what sort that is, we may declare by a familiar example. For as out of a fountaine water is sometime dronke, sometime is drawen, sometime by sorrowes is conueied to the watering of groundes, which yet of it selfe doeth not ouerflow into so many vses, but from the verie spring it selfe which with euerlasting flowing yeldeth and ministreth vnto it from time to time newe abundance: so the flesh of Christ is like a riche and vnwasted fountaine which powreth into vs the life springing from the Godhead into it selfe. Nowe who seeth not that the communion of the flesh and bloode of Christ is necessarie to all that aspire to heauenly life? Hereunto tendeth that saying of the Apostle, that the Church is the body of Chist and the fulfilling of it: and that hee is the heade out of which the whole body coupled and knit together by iointes maketh encrease of the body: that our bodies are the members of Christ. All which thinges we vnderstand to be impossible to be brought to passe, but that hee must wholy cleaue to vs in Spirit and body. But that most neere fellowship whereby we are coupled with his flesh, hee hath yet set out with a more glorious title, when he said that we are members of his bodie, and are of his bones and of his flesh. At the last, to declare it to be a matter greater than all wordes, he concludeth his saying with an exclamation, This is (saith hee) a great secret. Therefore it should be a point of extreeme madnesse to acknowledge no communion of the faithfull when the flesh and bloode of the Lorde, which the Apostle declareth to bee so great, that he had rather wonder at it than expresse it.

Ephe. 5. 30.

The body & blond of Christ truely giuen vs, & not bare and naked figures thereof in the Sacrament.

10 Let the summe bee, that our soules are so fedde with the flesh and bloode of Christ, as breade and wine do maintaine and susteine the bodily life. For otherwise the proportionall relation of the signe shoulde not agree, vnlesse soules did finde their foode in Christ. Which can not be done, vnles Christ doe truely growe into one with vs, and refresh vs with the eating of his flesh and drinking of his bloud. But although it seeme incredible, that in so great distance of places the flesh of Christ reacheth to vs that it may be meate to vs: let vs remember howe much the secrete power of the spirite surmounteth aboue all our senses, and howe foolishe it is to go about to measure his vnmeasurableneesse by our measure. That therefore which our minde comprehendeth not, let our faith conceiue, that the spirit truly knitteth in one those thinges that are seuered in places. Nowe that same holy communicating of his body and bloud, whereby Christe powreth his life into vs, euen as if hee pearced it into our bones and marowes, hee in the supper also testifieth and sealeth: and that not with setting before vs a vain or voide signe, but bringing foorth there the effectuall working of his spirit whereby he fulfilleth that which he promiseth. And verily he there offreth & deliuereth the thing signified to all them that sit at that spirituall banket: although it be receiued with fruit of the faithful only, which receiue so great bountifulnesse with true faith and thankfulnesse of mind. After which maner the Apostle saide, that the bread which we breake is the communion of the bodie of Christ: and that the cuppe which we hallowe with the worde and praiers to that purpose, is the communion of his bloud. Neither is there any cause why any mã should obiect, that it is a figuratiue speech, by which the name of the thing signified is giuen to the signe. I graunt verily that the breaking of the bread is a signe, not the thing it selfe. But this being admitted, yet we shal rightly gather of the deliuerance of the signe, that the thing it selfe is deliuered. For vnlesse a man will cal God a deceiuer, he can neuer be so bolde to saye that he setteth before vs an emptie signe. Therefore if by the breaking of bread the Lord doeth truely represent the partaking of his body, it ought to be out of dout that he truly performeth & deliuereth it. And this rule is alway to be holden of the godly, that so oft as they see the signes ordained of the Lord, they certainly thinke and perswade themselues that the trueth of the thing signified is there present. For to what purpose should the Lord deliuer to thee into thy hand the signe of his body, but to assure thee of the true partaking of it? If it be true, that a visible signe is giuen vs, to seale the gift of an inuisible thing: when we receiue the signe of the bodie, let vs no lesse certainely beleeue that the body it selfe also is giuen vs. 2. Cor. 10. 16

11 I say therefore (which both hath bin alway receiued in the Churche, & all they teach at this day that thinke right) that the holy mysterie of the Supper consisteth of two thinges: that is to say of the bodily signes, which beeing set before our eies do represent vnto vs inuisible thinges according to the capacitie of our weakenesse: and of spirituall truth, which is by those signes both figured and deliuered. Of what sort that is, when I meane to shewe it familiarly, I vse to set three thinges: the signification, the matter which hangeth of ỹ signification, ỹ vertue or effect which foloweth of both. The signification consisteth in the promises, which are after a certaine maner wrapped together with the signe. The matter of substance I call Christ with his death & resurrection. By effect I vnderstand the redemption, righteousnesse, sanctification, and eternall life, and whatsoeuer other benefites Christ bringeth vs. Now although al these thinges haue respect to faith: yet I leaue no place to this cauillatiõ: as though when I say that Christ is receiued by faith, I would haue him conceiued with vnderstanding onlie & imagination. For the promises offer him, not that we shoulde sticke fast in the sight alone and in bare knowledge: but that we should enioy the true communicating of him. And trulie I see not how any man may haue confidence that he hath redemption and righteousnesse in the crosse of Christ, & life in his death, but principally standing vpon the true communion of Christe himselfe. For those good thinges shoulde not come to vs, vnlesse Christ first made himselfe ours. I say therfore, that in the mystery of the Supper, by the signes of bread and wine Christ is truely deliuered to vs, yea and his body & bloud, in which he hath fulfilled al obedience for purchasing of righteousnes to vs: namely that first we should grow together into one body with him: and then being made partakers of his substance, we may also feele his power in the communicating of all his good things.

A locall presence of the body of Christ not needeful vnto this that we may enioy the partaking of it which the spirite of Christe perfourmeth without such grossenesse.

12 Now I come down to the excessiue mixtures, which superstition hath brought in. For herein Satan hath played with marueilous suttletie, that withdrawing the mindes of men from heauen, he might fill them with peruerse errour, as though Christ were fastened to the element of breade. And first we must not dreame such a presence of Christ in the sacrament, as the crastesmen of the court of Rome haue fained: as though the body of Christ were made present with presence of place, to be handled with hands, to bee broosed with teeth, and swallowed with mouth. For this forme of recantation Pope Nicholas endited to Berengarius, to be a witnesse of his repentance: namely with words so farre monstruous, that the author of the glose crieth out ỹ there is danger, if the readers do not wisely take heed to themselues, least they should sucke out of them an heresie worse than was that of Berengarius. In the seconde distinction, in the Chapter beginning thus, Ego Berengarius. But Peter Lombarde, although he trauaile much in excusing the absurditie, yet more inclineth to the contrarie sentence. For as we nothing doubt that it hath limits according to the perpetuall nature of the bodie of men, & is holden in heauen, into which it was once receiued, vntill he returne to iudgement: so to drawe it backe vnder these corruptible elementes or to imagine it present euery where, wee account it to be vtterly vnlawful. Neither verily is it so needful to this that we may enioy the partaking of it: for asmuch as the Lord giueth vs this benefit by his Spirit that we be made one with him in body, Spirit, and soule. The bonde therefore of this conioyning is the spirit of Christ, by the knitting whereof we be coupled together, & as it were a certain conduit, by which whatsoeuer Christ himselfe both is and hath, is conueyed to vs. For if we behold the sunne shining foorth with his beames vpon the earth after a certain manner to cast forth his substance vnto it to engender, nourish, and quicken the fruites thereof: why should the extending of beames of the spirit of Christ be inferiour to conuey the communion of his flesh and bloud into vs? Wherefore the Scripture, when it speaketh of our partaking with Christ, referreth ỹ whole force thereof to the Spirite. Yet in steede of many, one place shalbe sufficient. For Paul in the eight chapter to the Romanes, sayth that Christ dwelleth in vs none otherwise than by his spirite: whereby yet he taketh not away that communion of his flesh and bloud of which we nowe speake, but teacheth that the Spirite alone worketh that wee possesse whole Christ and haue him dwelling in vs.

Chryso. Ser. de spiritu sancto.

The manner of presence which the schoolemen haue deuised in this sacrament.

13 The schoolemen thought more shamefastly which were withholden with horrour of so barbarous vngodlinesse. Yet they also themselues do nothing but mocke with suttler deceites. They graunt that Christ is not contained there by way of circumscription nor after a bodily manner: but afterward they inuent a way, which neither themselues do vnderstand, nor they can declare to other: yet it is such as falleth to this point that Christe must be ſought in the forme of breade as they call it. For what is it? When they ſay that the ſubſtance of bread is turned into Chriſt, do they not faſten him to the whitenes which they there leaue? But (ſay they) he is ſo conteined in the Sacrament, that he abideth in heauen: and we determine no other preſence but of habitude. But whatſoeuer wordes they bring in to clooke it with a deceitfull colour, this is the ende of all, that that is by conſecration made Chriſt, which before was bread: that from thenceforth Chriſt lieth hid vnder that colour of bread. Which alſo they are not aſhamed in plaine words to expreſſe. For theſe be the wordes of Lombarde: that the body of Chriſt, which in it ſelfe is viſible, when the conſecration is ended, lieth hidden and is couered vnder the forme of bread. So the forme of that bread is nothing elſe but a viſour, that taketh away the ſight of the fleſh frō the eies. Neither neede we many coniectures, to finde what ſnares they minded to lay with theſe wordes, ſith the thing it ſelfe plainely ſpeaketh it. For it is to be ſeene with howe geat ſuperſtition in certaine ages paſt, not onely the common ſort of men, but alſo the verie cheefe of them haue beene holdē, and at this day be holden in popiſhe Churches. For hauing little care of true faith (by which alone we both come into the fellowſhip of Chriſt, and doe cleaue together with him (ſo that they haue a carnal preſēce of him, which they haue framed beſide the worde, they thinke that they haue him preſent enough. Therefore in a ſumme, we ſee that this hath bene gotten by this wittie ſubtlety that bread was taken for God. Lib.4. diſt.

14 From hence proceeded ỹ ſame fained tranſubſtantiation, for which at this day they fight more earneſtly than for all the other articles of their faith. For the firſt builders of that local preſence coulde not vnwinde themſelues from this doubt howe the bodie of Chriſt ſhould be mingled with the ſubſtance of breade, but that by and by manie abſurdities did thruſt themſelues in place. Therefore they were driuen of neceſſitie to flee to this inuention, that there is made a turning of breade into the body: not that the body is properly made to God, but becauſe Chriſt ỹ he might hide himſelfe vnder the forme, bringeth the ſubſtance to nothing. But it is marueilous, ỹ they fel to ſo great ignorance, yea ſenſeleſſe dulneſſe, that not onely ỹ ſcripture but alſo the conſent of ỹ olde Church fighting againſt it, they brought abroad that monſter. I grant indeede that ſome of ỹ olde writers ſometime vſed the name of turning: not for that they would deſtroy the ſubſtance in ỹ outward ſignes, but that they might teach that the bread dedicate to ỹ myſterie differeth farre from common bread and is nowe other. But ech where they all plainely declare, that the holy ſupper conſiſteth of two partes, an earthly part, and a heauenly: and the earthly part they do without controuerſie expound to be bread and wine. Truely whatſouer they babble, it is plaine that in confirming of this doctine they want the defence of antiquitie, which they oftentimes preſume to ſet againſt the euident word of God. For it is not ſo long agoe ſince it was inuented, it was verily vnknowen not only to thoſe better ages, in which ỹ purer doctrine of religion yet floriſhed, but alſo euen when that ſame pureneſſe was much defiled. There is none of the old writers ỹ doth not in expreſſe words confeſſe ỹ the holy ſignes in the Supper are bread and wine: although, as we haue ſaide, they ſometime ſet it out with diuers titles, to aduance the dignitie of ỹ mysterie. For whereas they say ỹ in the consecration is made a secrete turning, that now it is an other thing then bread and wine: I haue euen nowe giuen warning ỹ they do not thereby meane ỹ the things themselues, are brought to nought, but that they are now to be otherwise esteemed than commō meates, which are appointed onely to feede the belly: forasmuch as in them is deliuered to vs the spirituall meate and drinke of the soule. This we also denie not. If (say these men) there be a turning, it must needes be that there is of one thing made an other thing. If they meane that there is some thing made which before was not, I agree with them. If they will drawe it to that their owne imagination, let them answere me what chāge they thinke to be made in baptisme. For herein the fathers also do determine a marueilous turning, whē they say that of a corruptible element is made a spritual washing of ỹ soule, yet none of them denieth that water remaineth. But (say they) there is no such thing in baptisme, as is ỹ in the Supper. This is my body. As though the question were of those wordes, which haue a meaning plaine enough: and not rather of that worde of turning, which ought to signifie no more in the Supper thā in baptisme. Therefore farewell they with these snares of syllables, whereby they doe nothing else but bewray their owne hungrinesse. For otherwise the signification would not agree together vnlesse the trueth which is there figured, had a liuely image in outward signe. Christes will was by the outward signe to testifie that his flesh is meate. If hee did set before vs onely an empty imaginatiue forme of bread not true bread, where were the correlatiō or similitude which should lead vs from the visible thing to the inuisible? For, that all thinges may agree together, the signification shall extende no further, but that we be fedde with the forme of the flesh of Christ. As, if in baptisme the forme of water shoulde deceiue our eyes, it shoulde not bee to vs a certaine pledge of our washing: yea by that deceitful shewe there should be giuen vs an occasion of wauering. Therefore the nature of the sacrament is ouerthrowen, vnles in the maner of signifying ỹ earthly signe aunswere to ỹ heauenly thing. And therefore we loose the trueth of this mysterie, vnlesse true bread represent to vs the true body of Christ. I repeate it againe: Sith ỹ Supper is nothing else, than a visible testifying of that promise which is in ỹ sixt Chapter of Iohn, namely that Christ is the bread of life, which came downe from heauen: there must be visible bread vsed for a meane whereby ỹ same spirituall bread may be figured: vnles we will that we loose all the fruit which in this behalfe God tenderly granteth to susteine our weakenes. Now by what reason shoulde Paul gather, that alwe are one body and one bread, which doe together partake of one bread, if there remained onely an imaginatiue forme and not rather a naturall trueth of bread?

1. Cor. 10, 17.

The visible elements in this sacrament changed not in respect of their nature but of their vse onely.

15 But they could neuer haue beene so fowly beguiled with the deceits of Satan, but because they were already bewitched with this errour, that the body of Christ inclosed vnder bread was by the bodily mouth set downe into the belly. The cause of so brutish imagination was, that consecration signified as much among them as a magicall enchauntment. But this principle was drawen to them, that bread is a sacrament to none but to men, to whome the worde is directed: like as ỹ water of baptisme is not changed in is

it selfe, but so soone as the promise is adioyned, it beginneth to be that to vs which it before was not. This shall better appeare by exampl- of a like Sacrament. The water springing out of the rocke in the desert was to the fathers a token & signe of the same thing, which the wine doth figure to vs in the Supper. For Paule teacheth that they dr unk the same spiritual drink. But it was a cõmon watering for the beasts & cattell of the people. Wherupon it is easilie gathered, that in earthlie elements, when they are applied to a spiritual vse, there is made no other turning but in respect of men, in so much as they are to them seales of the promises. Moreouer sith Gods purpose is (as I often repeate) as it were by handsome chariots to list vs vp to himselfe, they do by their waywardnes wickedly disapoint the same, which do in deede call vs to Christ, but lurking inuisiblie vnder bread. For it is not possible that the minde of men, vncombring it selfe from the immeasurableneſſe of places, should attaine to Christ euen aboue the heauens. That which nature denied them, they attempted to amend with a more hurtfull remedie: that abiding in earth, we shoulde neede no heauenlie neerenes of Christ. Loe, this is the necessity, that compelled them to transfigure the bodie of Christ. In Bernards time, although a harder maner of speaking was growen in vse, yet transubstantiation was not then knowne. And in all ages before that, this similitude did flie about in euerie mans mouth, that ther is with bread & wine a spiritual thing ioyned in this mysterie. Of the words they aunswere, as they thinke, wittilie: but bringing nothing fit for this present cause. The rod of Moses (say they) beeing turned into a serpent, although it did get the name of a Serpent, yet keepeth still the old name, & is called a rod. So in their opinion it is as probable, that although the breade passe into a newe substance, it may be abusiuely and yet not vnaptly called that which it appeareth to the eies. But what likelihoode or neerenesse find they betweene a cleare miracle, and their fained illusion, of which no eye in earth is witnesse? The Magitians had mocked with deceites, so that the Aegyptians were persuaded, that they excelled in diuine power to change creatures aboue the order of nature. Moses came foorth, and driuing away all their deceites, shewed that the inuincible power of God was on his side, because his own rod consumed al the rest. But forasmuch as that was a turning discernable with eyes, therefore as we haue sayde, it pertaineth nothing to this present cause: and in a little time after, the rod visibly returned into his own form. Beside that it is not knowne, whether that sudden turning was of substaunce or no. Also the alluding to the rods of the Magycians is to bee considered, which the Prophet therefore woulde not call Serpents, least hee should seeme to signifie a turning where none was: becauſe those deceiuers had done nothing but cast a myst before the eyes of the beholders. What likenes herewith haue these formes of speech, The bread which we breake, So oft as ye shall eate this bread, They communicated in breaking of bread, & such other? It is certaine that their eyes were onely deceiued with the enchauntment of the Magicians. As concerning Moses, the matter is more dourtful, by whose hand it was no more hard for God to make of a rod a Serpent, & againe of a Serpent to make a rod, than to cloth Angels with fleshly bodies, and by and by after to vncloth them. If the nature of this mystery were the same or like, there were some colour for their solution. Let this therefore remaine certaine, that it is not truly nor fitly promised vs that in the Supper the flesh of Christ is truely to vs for meate, vnlesse the true substance of the outward signe agree with it. And (as one errour groweth of an other) the place of Ieremie is so foolishly wrested to prooue transubstantiation, that it irketh me to rehearse it. The Prophet complaineth that wood is put in his bread: meaning that by the crueltie of his enemies, his bread was infected with bitternesse. As Dauid with a like figure bewaileth that his meate was corrupted with gall, and his drinke with vineger. These men will haue it that the body of Christ was by way of allegorie fastened to ỹ crosse. But some of the olde fathers thought so. As though we ought not rather to pardon their ignorance, & to burie their shame, than to adde shamelesnes to compell them yet still to fight like enemies with the naturall meaning of the Prophet.

Ier. 11. 19

16 Other, which see that the proportionall relation of the signe and the thing signified, can not be ouerthrowen, but that the trueth of the mystery must fall, do confesse that the bread of the Supper is verily a substance of an earthly and corruptible element, and suffreth no change in it selfe, but hath vnder it selfe the body of Christ enclosed. If they did so declare their meaning, that when the bread is deliuered in the mysterie, there is adioyned the deliuering of the bodie, because the trueth is vnseuerable from the signe: I would not much striue with them. But because they placing the body in the bread, do faine to it a being euery where contrary to the nature thereof, and in adding vnder the bread, they will haue it lie there hidden: it is necessarie a little while to drawe such suttleties out of their dennes. For my mind is not yet as of set purpose to go through with al this point: but only that I may lay the foundations of the disputation which shall by and by followe in place fit for it. They will therefore haue the body of Christ to be inuisible & immeasurable, that it may be hid vnder the bread: because they thinke they do not otherwise communicate with him than if he descend into the bread: but they comprehend not the maner of descending, whereby he lifteth vs vpward to himselfe. They lay vpon it all the colours that they can: but when they haue said all, it sufficiently appeareth, that they stay vpō the local presence of Christ. Whence commeth that euen because they can abide to conceiue no other partaking of the flesh & bloud, but which consisteth either of ioyning & touching of place, or of some grosse enclosing.

The errour of consubstantiation & the cause vvhereof it riseth.

The flesh of Christ by some grosly extended as vvide as heauen and earth, by others suttelly imagined to be because glorious therefore free from the naturall properties of thinges corporal.

17 And, that they may obstinatly defende the errour once rashly conceiued, some of them sticke not to say, that the flesh of Christ had neuer any other measurings, but so farre & wide as heauen & earth is broad. Whereas he was borne a childe out of the wombe, whereas he grewe, whereas hee was spread abroad on the crosse, whereas he was enclosed in the sepulchre, the same was done by a certain dispensation, that he might be borne & die, and performe the other dueties of man. Whereas after this resurrection he was seene in his wonted forme of body, wheras he was taken vp to heauen, whereas last of all also after his ascension he was seene of Stephen and Paul: it was done by the same dispensation, that it might appeare to the sight of men ỹ he was made a king in heauen. What is this else, but to raise vp Mar- tion out of hel. For no man can dout that the body of Christ was a fantasie or a fantastical thing, if he was of such state. Some slip away somwhat more suttelly, with saying that this body which is giuen in the sacrament is glorious and immortal: and that therfore it is no absurditie, if it be contained in many places, if in no place, if with no forme, vnder the Sacrament. But I aske what maner of body Christ gaue to the disciples, the daie before that he suffred: do not the wordes sound that he gaue the same mortall bodie, which was within a litle after to be deliuered? Hee had alreadie before (say they) shewed his glorie to be seene to three of the disciples. That is true indeede, but his will was by that brightnesse to giue them a taste of immortalitie for an houre. In the meane time they shall not there finde a double bodie, but that one body which Christ did beare, garnished with newe glorie. But when he distributed his bodie at his first supper, the time was nowe at hand, when he being striken of God, and humbled should lie without glorie as a leprous man: so farre is it off that he then would shew foorth the glorie of his resurrection. And how great a windowe is here opened to Marcion, if the bodie of Christ was seene in one place mortall & base, and in an other place was holden immortal & glorious? Howbeit if their opinion take place, the same happeneth daily: because they are compelled to confesse that the bodie of Christ being visible in it selfe, lieth hid inuisibly vnder the signe of bread. And yet they that vomit out such monstruousnes are so not ashamed of their owne shame, that they do vnprouoked hainously raile at vs, because we do not subscribe to them.

Esa. 53. 4

18 Now if they list to fasten the body & bloud of the Lorde to bread & wine: the one shall of necessitie be plucked in sunder from the other. For as the bread is deliuered seuerally from the cup, so the body vnited to ỹ bread must needes be diuided from the bloud enclosed in the cup. For when they affirme that the bodie is in the bread & the bloud in the cup: and the bread & wine are by spaces of place distant the one from the other: they can by no shift escape, but that the body must be seuered from the bloud. But whereas they are wont to alleage, that by accompaning (as they faine) in the body is the bloud, & likewise in the bloud is the body, ỹ verily is too trifling: forasmuch as the signes in which they are enclosed, are so seuered. But if we bee lifted vp with our eies & minds to heauē, ỹ we seke Christ there in the glorie of his kingdom: as the signes do allure vs to him whole, so vnder the signe of bread, we shalbe fed with his body, vnder the signe of wine we shall seuerally drinke his bloud, ỹ at length we may enioy him whole. For although he hath taken away his flesh from vs, & in his body is ascended vp into heauen, yet he sitteth at the right hand of the father, that is to say he reigneth in the power, and maiestie, & glorie of the father. This kingdome is neither bounded with any spaces of place, nor compassed about with any measurings, but ỹ christ may shew forth his might wher soeuer it pleaseth him both in heauen & in earth: but that he may shew himselfe present with power & strength: but that he may alway be at hande with thē that be his, breathing his life into thē, may liue in them, strengthen them, quicken them, preserue them safe, euen as if he were present in body: finally, but that he may feede them with his owne bodie, the communion whereof hee doeth by the power of his ſpirite powre into them. After this maner the body and bloude of Chriſt is deliuered to vs in the Sacrament.

power

The true maner of Chriſtes preſence, and the ſubſtantiall communicating of his bodie and blood in the Lordes ſupper made hatefull to the vvorld by the vniuſt iudgements of men.

19 But we muſt appoint ſuch a preſence of Chriſt in the ſupper, as may neither faſten him to the element of bread, nor ſhut him vp in the bread, nor by any meane compaſſe him in, (for it is plaine that all theſe thinges abate his heauenly glorie) finally ſuch as may neither take from him his owne meaſure, nor diuerſly draw him in many places at once, nor fain to him ſuch an vnmeaſurable greatneſſe as is ſpreade abroade throughout heauen and earth, for theſe thinges are plainelie againſt the truth of the nature of manhoode. Let vs (I ſay) neuer ſuffer theſe two exceptions to be take away from vs. The one, that nothing be abated from the glorie of Chriſt, which is done, when he is brought vnder the corruptible elements of this world, or is bound to any earthly creatures. The other, that nothing be by fayning, applyed to his body, that agreeth not with the nature of man: which is done, whē it is either ſaid to be infinite, or is ſet in many places at once. But theſe abſurdities being taken away, I willingly receiue whatſoeuer may auaile to expreſſe the true and ſubſtantiall communicating of the bodie and bloud of the Lord, which communicating is deliuered to the faithfull vnder the holy ſignes of the ſupper: and ſo that they may be thought not to receiue it by imagination only or vnderſtanding of minde, but to enioy it in deede to the foode of eternall life. Why this ſentence is ſo hatefull to the worlde, and all defence taken away from it by the vniuſt iudgementes of many, there is no cauſe at all, but for that the diuel hath with horrible bewitching madded their mindes. Truely that which we teach, doth in al points verie well agree with the Scriptures: it containeth neither any abſurditie, nor darkenes, nor doutfulneſſe: it is not againſt true godlineſſe and ſound edification: finally, it hath nothing in it, that may offend, ſauing that in certaine ages paſt, whē that ignorance and barbarouſneſſe of Sophiſters reigned in the Church, ſo cleare light and open truth hath beene vnworthily oppreſſed. Yet becauſe Satan at this day alſo trauaileth by troubleſome ſpirites to ſpot it with al the ſlaunders and reproches that he can, and bendeth himſelfe to no other thing with greater endeuour: it is profitable the more diligently to defende and reſcue it.

The vvordes of Chriſtes inſtitution, in vvord holde, in deede peruerted and forſaken by the authors of vvel of tranſubſtantiation as of ſubſtantiation.

20 Now before that wee goe any further, we muſt entreate of the ſelfe inſtitution of Chriſt: ſpecially becauſe this is the moſt glorious obiectiō that our aduerſaries haue, that we depart from the wordes of Chriſt. Therefore, that we may be diſcharged of the falſe cauſe of malice wherewith they burden vs, our fitteſt beginning ſhall be at the expoſition of the words. Three Euangeliſtes and Paul rehearſe, that Chriſt tooke bread: when he had giuen thankes he brake it, gaue it to his diſciples and ſaide, Take, eate, this is my bodie which is deliuered, or broken for you. Of the cuppe Matthew and Marke ſay thus: This cuppe is the bloud of the newe Teſtament, which ſhall be ſhedde for many vnto forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. But Paul and Luke ſay thus: This cuppe is the newe teſtament in my bloode. The patrones of tranſubſtantiation will haue by the pronoune (this) the forme of bread to be ſignified, becauſe the conſecration is made in the whole content of the ſentence, and there is no ſubſtance that can be ſhewed. But if they bee holden with religious care of the wordes, because Christ testified, that that which he reached into the disciples handes, was his body: truely this their deuise, that that which was bread is nowe the bodie, is most farre from the propet meaning of them. That which Christ tooke into his handes and gaue the Apostles, he affirmeth to be his body: but he tooke bread: who therefore can not vnderstand that bread is yet shewed? and therefore there is no greater absurditie, than to remoue that to the forme, which is spoken of the breade. Other, when they expounde this word (is) for (to be transubstantiate,) doe flee to a more enforced and violently wrested glose. Therefore there is no cause why they shoulde pretende that they be mooued with reuerence of words. For this was vnheard of among al nations and languages, that the word (is) should be taken in this sense, namely for to be turned into another thing. As for them that leaue bread in the supper, and affirme that there is the body of Christ, they much differ among themselues. They which speake more modestly, although they precisely exact the letter. This is my bodie, yet afterward swarue from their preciseneſſe, and saye that it is as much in effect as that the body of Christ is with bread, in bread, and vnder bread. Of the matter it selfe which they affirme, we haue alreadie touched somewhat, and we shall by and by haue occasion yet to speake more. Now I dispute onely of the words, by which they say they are restrained that they cannot admit bread to be called the bodie, because it is a signe of the bodie. But if they shunne all figures, why do they leape away from the plaine shewing of Christ, to their owne maners of speaking farre differing from it? For there is great difference betweene this that bread is the bodie, and this that the bodie is with bread. But because they sawe it to be impossible, that this simple proposition might stande, that bread is the bodie: they haue attempted to scape away by those formes of speache, as it were by crooked turninges. Some more bolde sticke not to affirme that euen in proper speaking, bread is the bodie, and by this meane they truely proue themselues to be literall men. If it be obiected, that therefore the bread is Christ, and is God: this verily they will denie, because it is not expressed in the wordes of Christ. But they shall nothing preuaile by denying it: forasmuch as all doe agree that whole Christ is offred vs in the supper. But it is an intollerable blasphemy, that it be without figure spoken of a fraile and corruptible element, that it is Christ. Nowe I aske of them, whether these two propositions bee both of one effect, Christ is the sonne of God, and bread is the body of Christe. If they graunt that they are diuerse, (which we will enforce them to graunt whether they will or no) then let them answere whence commeth the difference. I thinke they will bring none other but that the breade is after the sacramentall manner called the body. Whereupon followeth, that Christe words are not subiect to the common rule, nor ought to be tried by Grammer. Also I aske of all the precise and stiffe requirers of the letter, where Luke and Paul do call the Cup the Testament in the bloude, whether they do not expresse the same thing which they did in the first part, where they call breade the bodie. Truely the same religion was in the one part of the mysterie that was in the other: and because shortnesse is darke, longer speach doth better open the meaning. So oft therefore as they shall affirme by one worde, that the bread is the body: I will out of moe wordes bring a fit exposition, that it is the Testament in the body. For why? Shal wee neede to seeke a more faithful or surer expositor than Paul and Luke? Neither yet do I tende hereunto, to diminish any thing of that communicating of the bodie of Christ which I haue confessed: onely my purpose is to confute that foolishe waiwardnesse, whereby they doe so hatefullie brawle about wordes. I vnderstande, by the authoritie of Paul and Luke, that the bread is the body of Christ, because it is the couenant in the body. If they fight against this, they haue warre not with me, but with the spirite of God. Howsoeuer they crie out that they be touched with reuerence of the wordes of Christ, wherby they do not figuratiuely vnderstande those thinges that are plainely spoken: yet this is not a pretence rightful enough, why they should so refuse all the reasons which we obiect to the contrarie. In the meane time, as I haue alreadie giuen warning, it is conuenient to learne, what maner of thing this is, The testament in the body and bloud of Christ: because the couenant stablished with the sacrifice of death, should otherwise not profit vs, vnlesse there were adioyned that secret communicating whereby we growe into one with Christ.

Figuratiue speech vsual, & vnto signes the names of things signified giuen vvhen sacramentall mysteries are entreated of: vvhich thing S. Augustine plainly teacheth.

21 It remaineth therefore that for the affinitie which the things signified haue with their signes, we confesse that the selfname of the thing was giuen to the signe: figuratiuely in deede, but doe without a most fit proportionall agreement. I leaue allegories and parables, lest any man should quarell that I seeke startingholes, and wander out of the present purpose. I say that this is a speech by figure of transnomination which is commonly vsed in the Scripture, when mysteries are entreated of. For neither cā you otherwise vnderstand that which is said: that circumcision is a couenant: that the lambe is the passeouer: that the Sacrifices of the law are expiations: finally that the rocke, out of which water flowed in the desert, was Christ: vnlesse you take it to be spokē by way of transferring of names. Neither are names transferred onely from the higher name to the lower: but contrariwise the name of the visible signe is also giuen to the thing signified: as when it is said that God appeared to Moses in the bushe: when the arke of couenant is called God, and the face of God: & the doue is called the holy Ghost. For though the signe differ in substance from the thing signified: because this is spirituall and heauenly, & that is corporall and visible: yet because it doeth not only figure the thing which it is holily appointed to represent, as a naked and emptie token, but doth also truly deliuer it in deede: why may not the name of the thing rightly accorde with it? If signes deuised by men, which are rather images of things absent, than markes of things present, which selfe absent things, they doe often times deceitfully shadowe, are yet sometime garnished with the titles of the thinges: then those thinges that are ordeined of God, doe by much greater reason borrowe the name of those things, of which they alway both beare a sure and not deceitfull signification, and haue the trueth adioyned with them. There is therefore so great likenesse and neerenes of the one to the other, that it is easie to draw their names to & fro. Therfore let our aduersaries cease to heap vnsauourie scoffings against vs, in calling vs Tropists, because we expound ỹ sacramētal maner

maner of ſpeaking after the common vſe of the Scripture. For whereas the Sacraments agree together in many things: in this transferring of names, they haue al a certaine cõmunitie together. As therfore the Apoſtle teacheth, ỹ the ſtone out of which ſpiritual drinke did ſpring to ỹ Iſraelites, was Chriſt, becauſe it was a viſible ſigne, vnder which that ſpirituall drinke was truly in deede but not diſcernably to the eye perceiued: ſo bread is at this day called the body of Chriſt, forasmuch as it is a ſigne whereby the Lorde offereth to vs the true eating of his body. Neither did Auguſtine otherwiſe think or ſpeake leaſt any man ſhould deſpiſe this as a new inuention If (ſaith he) the ſacraments had not a certaine likenes of thoſe things whereof they are ſacramentes, they ſhould not be ſacraments at al. And of this likeneſſe oftentimes they take the names of the things themſelues. As therefore after a certaine maner the ſacrament of the body of Chriſt, is the bodie of Chriſt: the ſacrament of the bloud of Chriſt: is the bloud of Chriſt: ſo the Sacrament of faith is faith. There be in him many like places, which it were ſuperfluous to heap together, ſith that one ſuffiſeth: ſauing that the readers muſt be warned that the holy mã teacheth the ſame thing in the epiſtle to Enodius. But it is a trifling ſhift to ſay, that where Auguſtine teacheth, that when transferring is often and commonly vſed in myſteries, he maketh no mentiõ of the Supper: becauſe if this ſhift were receiued, we might not reaſon from the generalty to the ſpecialtie, neither were this a good argumẽt: Euerie feeling creature hath power of mouing, therefore an oxe & an horſe haue power of mouing. Howbeit long diſputation hereof is in an other place ended by the words of the ſame holy man, where he ſaith, that Chriſt ſticked not to cal it his body, when he gaue the ſigne of his body. Againſt Adimãtus, the Manichean, in the twelft Chapter, And in an other place, vpon the thirde Pſalme. Maruelous (ſaith he) is the patience of Chriſt, that he receiued Judas to the banket, wherein he committed and deliuered to his diſciples the figure of his bodie and bloud.

Epiſt. 23. ad Boniface.

22 But if ſome preciſe man, being blind at all the reſt, do ſtand only vpon this worde (this is) as though it ſeuered this myſterie from al other, the ſolution is eaſie. They ſay that the vehemence of the ſubſtantiue verbe (is) is ſo great that it admitteth no figure. Which if wee graunt to them: euen in the words of Paul is reade the ſubſtantiue verbe, where he calleth bread the communicating of the bodie of Chriſt. But the communicating is an other thing than the bodie it ſelfe. Yea commonly where Sacramentes are entreated of, we finde the ſame worde vſed. As: This ſhall bee to you a couenant with me. This Lambe ſhall bee to you a paſſouer. To rehearſe no moe: when Paul ſaith that the rocke was Chriſte, why doe they take the ſubſtantiue verbe in that place to be of leſſe vehemence than in the ſpeech of Chriſt? Let them alſo anſwer, where John ſaith, the holye Ghoſt was not yet, becauſe Ieſus was not yet glorified, of what force the ſubſtantiue verbe is in that place. For if they abide faſtened to their rule, the eternall eſſence of the holy Ghoſte ſhall bee deſtroyed, as though it tooke beginning at the aſcenſion of Chriſt. Finally let them aunſwere, what meaneth that ſaying of Paul, that Baptiſme is the waſhing of regeneration and renuing, which it is euident to bee vnprofitable to many. But nothing is ſtronger to confute them, than that saying of Paul, ỳ the church is Christ. For bringing a similitude of the bodie of man, he addeth, So is Christ: in which place he vnderstandeth the only begotten son of God, not in himselfe, but in his members. Hereby I thinke I haue obtained that to sound witted and vncorrupted men the sclaunders of our enimies, are lothsome, when they spread abroade, that we withdraw credite from the words of Christ: which we do no lesse obediently embrace than they, & do weigh them with more godlie reuerence. Yea their negligent careles̄nes sheweth that they do not greatly care what Christ meant, so ỳ it giue them a buckler to defend their obstinacie: like as our earnest searching ought to be a witnes how much we esteem the authoritie of Christ. They odiously spread abroad, that naturall sense of man withholdeth vs frō beleeuing that which Christ hath vttered with his owne holy mouth: but how maliciously they burden vs with this slaunder, I haue a great part already made plaine, and hereafter it shall more clearely appeare. Therefore nothing withholdeth vs from beleeuing Christ whē he speaketh, nor from obeying so soone as he doth but with becke will this or that. Only this is the question, whether it be vnlawfull to enquire of the naturall meaning.

The wordes and syllables of christs speech not so precisely to be stoode vpon, that all expositiō be reiected which being sound and sober bringeth light, but no discredit vnto the speaker.

23 These good masters, that they may seeme wel lettered, do forbid men to depart be it neuer so litle from the letter, But I on the other side, when the scripture nameth God a warlike man, because I see that without figurative translation it is too rough a maner of speaking, do not doubt that it is a comparison taken from men. And truely vpon none other pretence in the olde time the anthropomorphits troubled the true teaching fathers, but that catching fast hold of these sayinges, The eies of God doe see, It went vp to his eares, His hand stretched out, The earth his footestole, they cryed out that God had his body taken from him, which the Scripture assigneth vnto him. If this lawe be receiued, outragious barbarousnesse shall ouerwhelme the whole light of faith. For what monsters of absurdities may not phrentike men picke out, if it be graunted them to alleage euerie small title to stablish their opinions? That which they obiect, that it is not likely, that when Christ prepared for his Apostls a singular comfort in aduersities, he did then speak in a riddle or darkely, maketh of our side. For if it had not come in the mindes of the Apostles, that bread was figuratiuely called the body, because it was the signe of the body, they had without dout ben troubled with so monstruous a thing. Almost at the same moment Iohn reporteth that they did sticke in perplexitie at euerie of the least difficulties. They which striue among themselues, how Christ will go to the father: and doe moue question, how he will goe out of the world: they which vnderstande nothing of those thinges that are spoken concerning the heauenly father, till they see him: how would they haue ben so easie to beleeue that which all reason refuseth, that Christ sitteth at the borde in their sight, and is enclosed inuisible vnder bread? Whereas therefore they in eating the breade without doubting, testified their consent, hereby appeareth that they tooke Christs words in the same sense that wee doe, because they remembred that which ought not to seeme strange in mysteries, that the name of the thing signified is transferred to the signe. Therefore it was to the disciples, as it is to vs, a certaine and cleare comfort, entangled with no riddle. Neither is there anie other cause why some shoulde depart from our exposition, but becausse the inchauntment of the diuel hath blinded them, namely that they should faine darkenesse to themselues, where the exposition of an apte figure offereth it selfe. Moreouer if we precisely stand vpon the wordes, Christ shoulde wrongfully haue spoken in one place seuerally an other thing concerning ỹ bread than he speaketh of the cup He calleth the bread his body, hee calleth the wine his bloud: either it shal be a confused vaine repetition, or it shall bee such a partition as shall diuide the body from the bloud. Yea it shall as truly be saide of the cup, This is my body, as of the bread it selfe, and it may likewise interchangeably be saide, that the bread is the blood. If they answere that we must consider to what ende or vse the signes were ordained: I grant it in deed: but in the meane time they shal not vnwind themselues, but that their errour must draw this absurditie with it, that the bread is the bloode, and the wine is the body. Nowe I wote not what this meaneth, when they grant the bread and the body to be diuerse thinges, yet to affirme that the one is spoken of the other properly & without any figure as: if a man should say that a garment is indeede a thing differing frō a mā, & yet that it is properly called a man. In the meane while as though their victorie consisted in obstinacie and railing, they say that Christ is accused of lying, if an exposition be sought of the wordes. Nowe it shalbe easie for vs to shew to the readers how vniust wrong these catchers of syllables do to vs, when they fill ỹ simple with this opinion, ỹ we withdraw credit from the wordes of Christ, which we haue proued to be furiously peruerted and confounded by them, but to be faithfully and rightly expounded by vs.

The vnmeasurable power of God not at all diminished by them vvho refuse the doctrine of consubstantiation.

24 But the slander of this lie cannot be vtterly purged, til an other crime be wiped away. For they spread abroad, ỹ we be so addicted to natural reasō, that we giue no more to the power of God, than ỹ order of nature suffereth and common sense teacheth. From so malicious slanders I appeale to the verie doctrine it selfe which I haue declared: which doeth clearely enough shew, ỹ I do not measure this mystery by the proportion of mans raason, nor do make it subiect to the lawes of nature. I beseech you, haue we learned out of naturall philosophie, ỹ Christ doth so from heauen feede our soules & bodies with his flesh, as our bodies are nourished with bread & wine? Whence commeth this power to flesh, ỹ it may giue life? All men will say that it is not done naturally. It will no more please mans reason, ỹ the flesh of Christ reacheth to vs, that it may be food vnto vs. Finally whosoeuer hath tasted of our doctrine, shalbe rauished into admiration of the secrete power of God. But these good men that be so zealous of it, forge to themselues a miracle, which being taken away, God himselfe vanisheth with his power. I desire to haue ỹ readers once againe warned, ỹ they diligētly wey what our doctrine bringeth, whether it hang vpon common sense, or with the winges of faith, surmounting the world, climbeth vp beyond it into the heauēs. We say that Christ as wel with the outward sign as with his spirit, descendeth to vs, that he may truely quicken our soules with the substance of his flesh and of his blood. In these fewe wordes he that perceiueth not to bee contained many miracles, is more than senseless: forasmuch as there is nothing more beside nature, than that ſoules ſhould borowe ſpirituall and heauenly life, of the fleſh which tooke her beginning of the earth, & which was ſubiect to death. Nothing is more incredible, than that thinges diſtant and a ſunder by the whole ſpace of heauen and earth, ſhould in ſo great diſtance of places not onely be conioyned, but alſo vnited, that ſoules may receiue foode of the fleſhe of Chriſt. Therefore let wayward men ceaſe to procure hatred to vs, by a filthy ſlaunder, as though we did enuiouſly reſtraine any thing of the immeaſurable power of God. For they do either too fooliſhly erre or too maliciouſly lie. For it is not heere in queſtion what God could, but what he would. We affirme ẏ to be done which pleaſed him. But it pleaſed him, that Chriſt ſhould be made like to his brethren in all things, except ſinne. What maner of thing is our fleſh? Is it not ſuch as cõſiſteth of the certain meaſure of it, as is contained in place, as is touched, as is ſeene? And why (ſay they) may not God make, that one ſelfe ſame fleſhe may occupie many and diuers places, may be contained in one place, may be without meaſure and forme? Thou madde man, why requireſt thou of the power of God to make fleſh at one ſelfe time to be & not to be fleſh? Like as if thou ſhouldeſt inſtantly require, him to make at one ſelfe time the light to be both light and darkenes. But he willeth light to be light, darkeneſſe to be darkeneſſe, fleſh to be fleſh. He ſhall in deede when it pleaſeth him, turne darkenes into light, and light into darkeneſſe. but when thou requireſt that light and darkeneſſe may not differ, what doeſt thou elſe but peruert the order of the wiſdome of God? Therefore fleſhe muſt be fleſh: and Spirit Spirite, euerie thing in ſuch lawe and condition as God hath created it. But ſuch is the condition of fleſh, that it muſt be in one yea and that a certaine place, and conſiſt of her meaſure & of her forme. With this condition Chriſt tooke fleſh vpon him, to which (as Auguſtine witneſſeth) he hath giuen indeed vncorruption and glory, but he hath not taken from it nature and trueth.

Heb.4.15.

Ep. ad Dard.

They that make Chriſt to lurke inuiſible vnder bread, are neither thereunto led by the vvordes of Chriſt, nor holpen therein by Gods alrightineſſe.

25 They anuſwere, that they haue the word, whereby the will of God is made plaine: namely if it be granted them to baniſh out of the Church ẏ gift of expoſitiõ, which may bring light to the word, I grant ẏ they haue ẏ word: but ſuch as in olde time the Anthropomorphites had, when they made God hauing a body: ſuch as Marcion & the Manachees had, when they fained the body of Chriſt to be, either heauenly or fantaſticall. For they alleadged for teſtimonies, The firſt Adam was of the earth earthly, the ſeconde Adam is of heauen, heauenly: Againe, Chriſt abaced himſelfe, taking vpon him the forme of a ſeruaunt, & was founde in likenes as a man. But the groſſe eaters think that there is no power of God, vnles with the monſter forged in their braines the whole order of nature be ouerthrowẽ: which is rather to limite God, when we couet with our fained inuẽtions to prooue what he can doe. For out of what word haue they taken ẏ the body of Chriſt is viſible in heauen, but lurketh inuiſible in earth vnder innumerable litle peeces of bread? They wil ſay ẏ neceſſitie requireth this ẏ the body of Chriſt ſhould be giuẽ in the ſupper. Verily becauſe it pleaſed them to gather a fleſhly eating out of the words of Chriſt: they being caried away by their owne foreiudgement, were driuen to neceſſitie to coine this ſuttletie, which the whole ſcripture crieth out againſt. But ẏ any thing is by vs diminiſhed of the power of god, is so false ỹ by our doctrine the praise of it is very honorablie set out. But forasmuch as they alway accuse vs, that we defraud God of his honour, when we refuse that which according to cõmõ sense is hard to be beleeued, although it haue bin promised by the mouth of Christ: I make againe the same aunswere that I made euen now, that in the mysteries of faith we doe not aske counsel of common sense, but with quiet willingnesse to learne, and with the spirit of meekenesse, which Iames cõmendeth, we receiue the doctrin come from heauen. But in that when they perniciously erre, I denie not that we follow a profitable moderation. They hearing the wordes of Christ, This is my body, imagine a miracle most farre from his mind. But when out of this fained inuẽtion arise fowle absurdities, because they haue alredy with headlong hast put snares vpon themselues, they plunge themselues into the bottomlesse depth of the almightinesse of God that by this meane they may quench the light of trueth. Hereupon commeth that proude precisenes: We will not knowe howe Christ lieth hid vnder the breade, holding our selues contented with this saying of his, This is my body. But we, as we doe in the whole Scripture, doe with no lesse obedience than care, studie to obteine a sounde vnderstanding of this place: neither do we with prepostrous heate rashly and without choise catch holde of that which first thrusteth it selfe into our mindes: but vsing diligent musing vpon it, we embrace the meaning which the spirite of God ministreth: and standing thereupon we do frõ aloft despise whatsoeuer earthly wisdome is set against it. Yea we holde our mindes captiue that they may not be bolde so much as with one litle word to carpe against it: and do humble them, that they may not dare to rise vp against it. Hereupon sprung vp the exposition of the wordes of Christ, which to be by the continuall vsage of the scripture common to all Sacraments, all they that haue ben thought but meanely exercised therein, do knowe. Neither doe we, after the example of the holy Virgin, thinke it lawfull for vs, in a hard matter to enquire how it may be done. Iam. 1. 21. Luk. 1. 34.

Christ proued by scripture not to be on earth according to the presence of the flesh, but onely by maiestie prouidence and grace.

26 But because nothing shall more auaile to confirme the faith of the godly than whẽ they haue learned that the doctrine which we haue taught is taken out of the worde of God, and standeth vpon the authoritie therof: I will make this also euident with as great briefenes as I can. The body of Christ, since the time that it rose againe, not Aristotle but the Holy Ghost teacheth to be limited, and that it is comprehended in heauen vntil the last day. Neither am I ignorãt that they boldly mocke out those places that are alleadged for this purpose. So oft as Christ saith that he will depart, leauing the worlde, they answere that that departing is nothing else but a changing of mortall state. But after this manner, Christ shoulde not set the Holie Ghost in this place to supplie (as they call it) the want of his absence: forasmuch as he doeth not succeede into this place, nor Christ himselfe doth descende againe out of the heauenly glory to take vpon him the state of mortall life. Truely the comming of the Holy Ghost, and the ascending of Christ are thinges set as contrary: therefore it cannot be that Christ should according to the flesh dwell with vs after the same manner that hee sendeth his spirite. Moreouer hee in plaine wordes expresseth, that hee will not be alway with his disciples in the worlde. This saying also they thinke Iohn 14. 22. and 28. Matt 26. 11.

that they doe gaily wipe away, as though Christ saide that he will not alway be poore and miserable or subiect to the necessities of this fraile life, But the circumstance of the place crieth plainely to the contrarie, because there is not intreated of pouertie and neede, or of the miserable state of earthly life, but of worship and honour. The anointing pleased not the disciples, because they thought it to be a superfluous & vnprofitable cost, and neere vnto riotous excesse, therefore they had rather that the price thereof which they thought to be ill wasted, had beene bestowed vpon the poore. Christ answereth that he shal not alway be present that he may be worshipped with such honour. And none otherwise did Augustine expounde it, whose wordes bee Tract. in Ioh. 50. these which are nothing doubtful. When Christ said, Ye shal not alway haue me, he spake of the presence of his body. For according to his maiestie, according to his prouidéce, according to his vnspeakeable and inuisible grace,
Matt. 28. 20. this was fulfilled which he saide, behold, I am with you euen to the ending of the world. But according to the flesh which the word tooke vnto him, according to this that he was borne of the Virgin according to this ỹ he was taken of the Iewes, that he was fastened to the tree, that he was take downe from the crosse, that he was wrapped in linnen clothes, ỹ he was laid in the graue, that he was manifestly shewed in the resurrection, this was fulfilled, Yee shall not alway haue me with you. Why so? Because he was conuersant according to the presence of his bodie fourtie dayes with his disciples, and while they accompanied him in seeing not in following he ascended. He is not here: for he sitteth there at the right hand of the Father. And yet hee is here: because he is not gone away in presẽce of Maiestie. Otherwise according to the presence of maiestie we haue Christ alway: and according to the presence of the flesh it is rightly saide, But me ye shall not alway haue. For according to the presence of the flesh, the Church had him a fewe daies: nowe shee holdeth him by faith, but seeth him not with eyes. Where (that I may note this also briefly) he maketh him present to vs three waies, by maiestie, prouidence, and vnspeakeable grace, vnder which I comprehend this maruellous communion of his bodie and blood: if so that we vnderstande it to be done by the power of the holy Ghost, not by that fained enclosing of his bodie vnder the element. For our Lord hath testified, that he hath flesh and bones which may be felt and seene. And to goe away and Ascende do not signifie to make a shewe of one ascending and going away, but to doin deede that which the wordes sounde. Shall we then (will some man say) assigne to Christ some certaine coast of heauen? But I answere with Augustine
Lib. de fide sym. ca. 16. that this is a most curious and superfluous question, if so that yet wee beleeue that he is in heauen.

Ascending sophisticallie expounded to be nothing else but cõueiance out of sight.
Actes 1. 9.
Mar. 16. 16.
Luk. 24. 51.

27 But what doeth the name of ascending so oft repeated? doth it not signifie a remooving from one place to an other? They denie it: because after their opinion, by height is onely signified maiestie of Empire. But what meaneth the verie manner of ascending? was he not in sight of his disciples looking on, lifted vp on high? Do not the Euangelistes plainely declare that he was taken vp into the heauens? These wittie Sophisters do answere that with a cloud set betweene him and them he was conueied out of their sight, that the faithfull might learne that from thence foorth he should not bee be visible in the world. As though, to make credit of his inuisible presence, he ought not rather to vanish away in a moment, or as though the cloud ought not rather to compasse him before ỳ he stirred his foot. But when he is caried vp on high into the aire, & with a cloud cast vnderneath him, teacheth ỳ he is no more to be sought in the earth: we safelie gather, that now he hath his dwelling place in the heauens: as Paul also affirmeth, and from thence biddeth vs to looke for him. After this maner the Angels warned the disciples, ỳ they in vain gazed vp into heauē: because Iesus which is taken vp into heauen, shall so come as they haue seene him go vp. Here also the aduersaries of sound doctrine start away with a pleasant shift as they thinke, saying that he shall then come visible, which neuer went out of the earth but that he abideth inuisible with them that be his. As though the Angels did there signifie a double presence, & do not simplie make the disciples witnesses of his going vp seeing it with their eyes, ỳ no doubting might remain: euen as if they had said: hee in your sights beholding it, beeing taken vp into heauen, hath claimed to himselfe the heauenly empire: it remaineth that ye patiently abide in expectation, till hee come againe the iudge of the world: because he is now entred into heauen, not that hee may alone possesse it, but that he may gather together with him you and all the godly. Phil. 3. 10.

28 But forasmuch as the defenders of this bastard doctrine are not ashamed to garnish it with the consenting voices of the olde writers and specially of Augustine: I will in fewe wordes declare how peruersly they go about it. For whereas their testimonies haue beene gathered together of learned and godly men, I will not do a thing already done: let him that will, seeke them out of their workes. I will not heape together, neither out of Augustine himselfe, all that might make to the purpose: but will bee content to shewe by a fewe that he is without controuersie whole on our side. As for this that our aduersaries, to writhe him from vs, doe alleage that it is commonlie read in his bookes, that the flesh and bloude of Christ is distributed in the supper, namely the sacrifice once offered in the crosse: it is but trifling: sith he also calleth it either thanksgiuing, or the sacramēt of the body. But in what sense he vseth the wordes of flesh and bloud, we needе not to seeke w̄ long cōpassing about: forasmuch as hee declareth himselfe, saying that sacraments take their names of the likenes of the things which they signify: and that therfore after a certain manner the sacrament of the body is ỳ body. Wherwith accordeth another place which is wel enough known, The Lord sticked not to say, This is my body, when he gaue the signe of it. Againe they obiect, that Augustine writeth expreslie, that the body of Christ falleth to the grounde, and entreth into the mouth: euen in the same sense, that he affirmeth it to be cōsumed, because he ioineth them both together. Neither doth that make to the contrarie, which he saith, that when the mysterie is ended the bread is consumed: because he had a little before saide: sith these thinges are knowen to men, forasmuch as they are done by men, they may haue honour as things: but as maruellous things, they may not. And to no other end tendeth that which our aduersaries do too vnaduisedly draw to themselues: that Christ did (after a certain manner) beare himselfe in his owne handes, when he reacheth the mysticall breade to the disciples.

And no maruel: ſith in another place he plainlie affirmeth that bodies, if ſpaces of places be taken from them, ſhalbe no where: & becauſe they ſhall be no where, they ſhall not be at all. It is a hungrie cauillation, to ſay that in that place is not entreated of the Supper, in which God vttereth ſpeciall power: becauſe the queſtion was moued concerning the fleſhe of Chriſt, and the holie man of ſet purpoſe aunſwering ſaith: Chriſt gaue immortalitie to his fleſh, but tooke not nature from it. After this form it is not to be thought that he is ech where ſpread abroad: for we muſt beware that Epiſt. ad Dardan. we do not ſo affirme the Godhead of the man, that we take away the trueth of the bodie. And it followeth not, that that which is in God muſt bee eche where as GOD is. There is a reaſon by and by added: for one perſon is God and man, and both are one Chriſt: ech where, by this that he is God: in heauen, by this that he is man. What a negligence had it beene, not to except the myſterie of the ſupper being a thing ſo earneſt and weightie, if there had beene in it any thing againſt the doctrine which he entreated of. And yet if a man doe heedefully reade that which followeth within a little after, he ſhall finde that vnder that general doctrine, the ſupper is alſo comprehended, that Chriſt the onelie begotten ſonne of GOD, and the ſame the ſon of man, is eche where whole preſent as God: that he is in the temple of God (that is in the Church) GOD as it were there dwelling, and in ſome certain place of heauen by reaſon of the meaſure of his true body. We ſee howe, to the vniting of Chriſt with the Church, he doeth not drawe his bodie out of Heauen: which ſurelie hee woulde haue done, if the bodie of Chriſt were not truelie meate to vs vnleſſe it were encloſed vnder bread. In Tract. 50. in Ioh. an other place defining howe the faithfull do nowe poſſeſſe Chriſte. Thou haſt him (ſaith he) by the ſigne of the croſſe, by the ſacrament of Baptiſme, by the meate and drinke of the altar. How rightlie he reckoneth a ſuperſtitious vſage among the ſignes of the preſence of Chriſte, I doe not nowe diſpute: but hee that compareth the preſence of the fleſh to the ſigne of the croſſe, ſufficiently ſheweth that he faineth not a two bodied Chriſt, that the ſame he may lurke hidden vnder the bread, which ſitteth viſible in hea-
Matt. 26. 11. uen. If this need plainer declaration, it is by and by after added in the ſame place, that according to the preſence of maieſty, wee alway haue Chriſte that according to the preſence of the fleſhe, it is rightly ſaide, Mee ye ſhall Matt. 28. 20. not alway haue. They aunſwere, that this is alſo added, that according to an vnſpeakable and inuiſible grace, it is fulfilled which is ſaide of him, I am with you, euen vnto the ending of the worlde. But that is nothing for their aduantage: becauſe this is at length reſtrained to his maieſtie, which is euer in cõpariſon ſet againſt the body, & his fleſh by expreſſe name is made different from his grace & power. As in an other place the ſame cõpariſon of cõtraries is red in him, that Chriſt by bodily preſence left the diſciples, that by ſpirituall preſence he may be ſtill with them: where it is plain ỳ the ſubſtãce of the fleſh is diſtinguiſhed from the power of the ſpirit, which conioineth vs with Chriſt, though we be otherwiſe farre ſeuered by diſtance of places. The ſame manner of ſpeaking he oftentimes vſeth, as when he ſaith: He is to come againe to the quicke & the dead with bodily presence, according to the rule of Faith & sound doctrine. For with spirituall presence he was also to come to them, and to abide with the whole Church in the worlde vntill the ending of the worlde. Therefore this speech is directed to the beleeuers whome hee had alreadie begonne to saue with bodily presence, & whome hee was to leaue with bodily absence: that he might with his Father saue them with spirituall presence. To take bodily for visible is but trifling: sith he setteth also the body in comparison against the diuine power: and adding (to saue with the Father) he clearely expresseth that he doth powre abroad his grace from heauen to vs by his spirite.

29 And sith they put so much confidence in this lurking hole of inuisible presence, goe too let vs see howe well they hide themselues in it. First they shall not bring foorth one syllable out of the scriptures, whereby they may proue that Christ is inuisible: but they take that for confessed which no man that hath his sounde wit will graunt them, that the body of Christ can not otherwise bee giuen in the Supper but being couered with the visor of bread. And this is the verie point about which they strine with vs, so farre is it off from having the place of a principle. And when they so babble, they are compelled to make a double bodie of Christ: because after their opinion it is in it selfe visible in heauen, but inuisible in the supper after a special maner of dispensation. But howe trimly this agreeth, it is easie to iudge both by other places of scripture, and by the witnesse of Peter. Peter saith that Christ must be holden or cõteined in heauen, til he come againe. These me teach that he is euery where, but without forme. They take exception and say that it is vniust dealing, to make the nature of a glorified bodie subiect to the lawes of common nature. But this aunswere draweth with it that doting error of Seruetus, (which is worthily to bee abhorred of all the godlie) that the bodie was swallowed vp of the Godheade. I doe not say that they thinke so. But if this bee reckoned among the qualities of a glorified bodie, to fill al things after an inuisible manner, it is euident, that the bodilie substance is destroyed, and that there is lefte no difference of the godheade and the nature of man. Againe if the bodie of Christ bee of so manie fashions and diuerse, that it is seene in one place, and is inuisible in an other: where is the verie nature of a bodie which consisteth of his measured proportions? and where is vnitie? Much more rightly doeth Tertullian say, which affirmeth that the body of Christ was a true and naturall bodie, because in the mysterie of the Supper the figure of it is set before vs for a pleadge and assurance of the spirituall life. And verilie Christ sayde of his glorified body, see and feele, for a Spirite hath not flesh and bones. Loe by Christes owne mouth the trueth of the flesh is prooued, because it can bee felte and seene, Take away these thinges, then it shall cease to bee flesh. They still flee to their denne of dispensation which they haue framed to themselues. But it is our parte so to embrace that which Christ absolutely pronounceth, that that which he meaneth to affirme may be of force with vs without exception. Hee prooueth himselfe to bee no Ghost, because hee is visible in his flesh. Let that be taken away which hee claimeth as proper to the nature of his bodie: must they not then be faine to coine a newe definition of a body? Nowe whither soeuer they turne themselues about, their fained dispensatiō hath no place in that Phil.3.21. place of Paul where he saith, that we looke for a Sauiour from heauen which shall fashion our base body like to his glorious bodie. For we may not hope for a like fashioning in those qualities which they faine to Christ, that euery one should haue an inuisible and vnmeasurable body. Neither shall there be found any man so dul witted whom they may make to beleeue so great an absurditie. Let them not therefore ascribe this gift to Christes glorified bodie, to be at once in many places, and to be conteyned in no space. Finally let them either openly denie the resurrection of the flesh, or let them grant that Christ being clothed with heauenly glorie, did not put off his flesh, who shal make vs in our flesh fellowes and parteners of the same glorie, when we shall haue the resurrection common with him. For what doeth the scripture teach more plainely, than that as Christ did put on our true flesh when he was borne of the Virgin, and suffered in our true flesh when hee satisfied for vs: so he receiued againe also the same true flesh in rising againe, and caried it vp to heauen? For this is to vs the hope of our resurrection and ascending into heauen, that Christ is risen againe and ascended: and (as Tertullian saith) he caried the earnest of our resurrection into the heauens with him. Now how weake and fraile shoulde that hope be, vnlesse this our selfe flesh had beene raised vp with Christ and entred into the kingdome of heauen? But this is the proper trueth of a bodie, to be conteined in space, to consist of his measured proportions, to haue his forme. Therefore away with this foolish deuise, which doeth fasten both the minds of men & Christ to the bread. For to what purpose serueth the secret presence vnder bread, but that they which couet to haue Christ ioyned with thē, may rest in that signe? But the Lorde himselfe willed vs to withdrawe not onely our eyes but all our senses from the earth, forbidding himselfe to bee touched of the Ioh.20.27. women vntill he had gone vp to his Father. When hee seeth Marie with godlie zeale of reuerēce to make hast to kisse his feet, there is no cause why he shoulde disallowe and forbid this touching till he haue beene taken vp into heauen, but becawse he will be sought no where elsse. Whereas they obiect that he was afterwarde seene of Stephen, the solution is easie. For neyther was it therefore necessarie that Christ should chang place, which could Act.7.56. Act.9.4. Matt.28.6. Ioh.20.19. giue to the eyes of his seruaunt such sharpenesse of sight as might pearce

Matt.14.25. through the heauens. The same also is to be saide of Paul. Whereas they obiect that Christ came out of the Sepulchre being shut: and entred in among the disciples, the dores being shut: that maketh neuer a whitte more for maintenance of their error. For as the water like a fast pauement made a way to Christ walking vpon the lake: so it is no maruell, if at his comming the hardnes of the stone yeledd it selfe. Howbeit it is more proueable, that by his commandement the stone was remoued, and by and by after passage giuen him returned into his place. And to enter the dores being shut, is not asmuch in effect as to pearce through the whole substaunce, but by diuine power to open an entrie for himselfe, that hee sodenly stoode among the disciples, verilie after a maruellous manner, when the dores were fast lock-Luk.44.3.1 ked. That which they alleadge out of Luke, that Christ sodenly vanished away away from the eyes of the disciples with whom he went to Emaus, profiteth them nothing, and maketh for vs. For, that he might take away the sight of him selfe from them, he was not made inuisible, but onely went out of sight. As when he went in iourny together with them (as the same Luke witnesseth) he did not put on a newe face, that he might not be knowen, but held their eyes. But these fellowes do not only transforme Christ, that hee may be conuersant in earth, but in diuers places they make him diuerse and vnlike himselfe. Finally, in so trifling they do not by one word in deede, but by a circumstance, make of the flesh of Christ a spirit: and not contented therwith, they put vpon it altogether contrarie qualities. Whereupon of necessitie followeth that it is double. Luc. 24.16.

30 Now although we graunt them that which they prate of the inuisible presence, the vnmeasurablenes shall not be yet proued, without which they shall in vaine attempt to enclose Christ vnder bread. Vnlesse the body of Christ may bee euerie where at once, without any compasse of place, it shall not be likely that he lyeth hidden vnder bread in the supper. By which necessity they brought in the monstrous being euery where. But it is shewed by strong and plaine witnesses of Scripture, that it was limitted about by the measure of the body of a man: and then that by his ascending he hath made it plain that he is not in all places, but that when he passeth into one place, he leaueth the other that hee was in before. Neither is the promise which they alleage, to be drawen to the body, I am with you euen to the ending of the world. First the continual conioyning can not stand, vnlesse Christ dwel in vs corporallie without the vse of the Supper. Therefore there is no iust cause why they shoulde so sharply brawle about the wordes of Christ, that they may in the Supper enclose Christ vnder bread. Againe the text it selfe proueth, that Christ speaketh nothing lesse than of his flesh, but promiseth to his disciples inuincible helpe, whereby he may defend and sustein them against all the assaultes of Satan and the world. For when he inioyned them a hard charge: least they should dout to take it in hand, or should fearefully execute it, he strengtheneth them with affiance of his presence: as if he had said, that his succour shall not faile them, which shalbe impossible to be ouercome. Vnlesse they listed to confounde all thinges, ought they not to haue made distinction of the manner of presence. And verily some had rather with great shame to vtter their ignorance, than to yeeld neuer so litle of their errour. I speake not of the Papistes: whose doctrine is more tolerable, or at the least more shamefast. But contentiousnes so carrieth some away, that they say that by reason of the natures vnited in Christ, whersoeuer the Godhead of Christ is, there is also his flesh, which cannot be seuered from his Godhead. As though that same vniting haue compounded of those two natures I wote not what mean thing which was neither God nor man. So in deede did Eutyches and after him Seruetus. But it is plainely gathered out of the Scripture, that the only one person of Christ doth so consist of two natures, that either of them hath still her owne propertie remaining safe. And that Eutiches was rightfully condemned, they will bee ashamed to denie: it is marueile that they marke not the cause of his condemning, that taking away the difference betweene the natures, enforcing the vnitie

Though the intuisibilitie of the body of Christ were graunted, yet the vnmeasurablenes thereof, which beeing denied taketh away the presence of Christ in or vnder the bread, was both condemned in the heresie of Eutiches and hath in Scripture no colour of proofe.

Mat. 2.20.

vnitie of perſon, he made of God man, and of man God. What madneſſe therfore is it, rather to mingle heauen and earth togither, than not to draw the bodie of Chriſt out of the heauenly ſanctuarie? For whereas they bring for themſelues theſe teſtimonies, None is gone vp to heauen but he that is come downe the ſonne of man which is in heauen. Againe, The ſonne which is in the boſome of the Father, he ſhall declare them: it is a point of like ſenſleſſe dulneſſe, to deſpiſe the communicating of properties which was in olde time not without cauſe inuented of the holie Fathers. Truely, whē the Lord of glorie is ſaid to be crucified, Paul doth not meane that he ſuffred any thing in his Godhead: but becauſe the ſame Chriſt which being an abiect and deſpiſed in the fleſh did ſuffer, was both God and Lord of glorie. After this maner alſo the Sonne of man was in heauen: becauſe the ſelfe ſame Chriſte, which according to the fleſh did dwell the Sonne of man in earth, was God in heauen. In which ſort he is ſaid to haue deſcended from the ſaid place according to his Godhead: not that the Godhead did forſake heauen to hide it ſelf in the priſon of the bodie: but becauſe, although it filled all things, yet in the verie manhood of Chriſt it dwelled corporally, that is to ſay naturally and after a certaine vnſpeakeable maner. It is a common diſtinction in ſchooles, which I am not aſhamed to rehearſe: that although whole Chriſt be euery where, yet not ỹ whole that is in him is euery where. And I would to God the Schoolemen themſelues had well weyed the pith of this ſaying: for ſo ſhoulde the vnſauory inuention of the fleſhly preſence of Chriſt haue bin met withall. Therefore our mediatour, ſith hee is whole euery where, is alway at hand with his, & in the ſupper after a ſpeciall maner giueth himſelf preſent: but yet ſo, that whole he is preſent, not the whol that he is: becauſe, as it is ſaid, in his fleſh he is conteined in heauen till hee appeare to iudgement.

Chriſt preſent in the ſupper though he deſcend not to preſent his body viſible in bread.

31 But they are farre deceiued, which conceiue no preſence of the fleſh of Chriſt in the ſupper, vnleſſe it be made preſent in bread. For ſo they leaue nothing to the ſecrete working of the Spirit, which vniteth Chriſt himſelfe vnto vs. They thinke not Chriſt preſent, vnleſſe he come downe to vs. As though if he did lift vs vp to him, we ſhould not aſwell enioy his preſence. Therefore the queſtion is onely of the manner: becauſe they place Chriſt in the bread, but we thinke it not lawfull for vs to pluck him out of Heauen. Let the readers iudge whether is the righter. Onely let this cauillation be driuen away, that Chriſt is taken away from his ſupper, vnleſſe he be hidden vnder the couer of bread. For ſith this myſterie is heauenly, it is no need to draw Chriſt into the earth, that he may be ioyned to vs.

The manner of the preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament incomprehenſible inexplicable.

32 Now if any man doe aske me of the manner, I will not be aſhamed to confeſſe, that it is a higher ſecret than ỹ it can be either comprehēded with my witte, or vttered with my words: and, to ſpeake it more plainely, I rather feele it, than I can vnderſtand it. Therefore I doe herein without controuerſie embrace the trueth of God, in which I may ſafely reſt. He pronounceth ỹ his fleſh is the meate of my ſoule, & his bloud is the drink. With ſuch food I offer my ſoule to him to be fedde. In his holy Supper he commaundeth me vnder the ſignes of breade and wine to take, eate, and drink his bodie & bloud. I nothing doubt that both he doeth truely deliuer them, and I doe receiue them. Onely I refuse the absurdities, which appeare to bee either vnworthy of the heauenly maiestie of Christ, or disagreeing from the trueth of his nature of manhood: forasmuch as they must also fight with the worde of God, which also teacheth that Christ was so taken vp into the glorie of the heauenly kingdome that it lifteth him vp aboue all estate of the worlde, and no lesse diligently setteth foorth in his nature of man, those thinges that are properly belonging to his true manhoode. Neither ought this to seeme incredible, or not consonant to reason, because as the whole kingdom of Christ is spiritual, so whatsoeuer he doth with his Church, ought not to be reduced to the reason of this world Or, that I may vse the wordes of Augustine, this mysterie, as other are, is done by men, but from God: in earth, but from heauen. Such (I say) is the presence of the bodie, as the nature of the Sacrament requireth: which we say here to excell with so great force, and great effectualnesse, that it not onely bringeth to our mindes vndouted trust of eternall life, but also assureth vs of the immortalitie of our flesh. For it is now quickned of his immortal flesh, & after a certaine maner communicateth of his immortalitie. They which are caried aboue this with their excessiue speches, do nothing but with such entanglements darken the simple and plaine truth. If any be not yet satisfied, I would haue him here a while to consider with me, that we nowe speake of a sacrament, al the partes whereof ought to be referred to faith. But we do no lesse deintily and plentifully feede faith with this partaking of the body which wee haue declared, than they that plucke Christ himselfe out of heauen. In the meane time I plainely confesse, that I refuse ỹ mixture of the flesh of Christ with our soule, or the powring out of it such as they teach: because, it suffiseth vs, that Christ doth out of the substance of his flesh breath life into our soules, yea doeth power into vs his owne life, although the verie flesh of Christ doeth not enter into vs. Moreouer it is no doubt that the proportion of faith, whereby Paul willeth vs to examine all exposition of Scripture, doeth in this behalfe verie well agree with me. As for them that speake against so euident a trueth, let them looke after what rule of faith they fashion themselues. He that doth not confesse that Iesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God. These men, although they cloke it, or make it not, doe spoile him of his flesh.

33 Of communicating is to be likewise thought, which they acknowledge none, vnlesse they deuoure the flesh of Christ vnder breade. But there is no smal wrong done to the holy Ghost, vnlesse we beleue that it is brought to passe by his incomprehensible power, that wee communicate with the flesh and bloud of Christ. Yea if the force of the mysterie, such as it is taught of vs, and as it was knowen to the olde Church fiue hundred yeres ago, were weighed according to the worthines of it, there was enough and more whereupon we might be satisfied: the gate had beene shut against manie foule errours, out of which haue beene kindled many horrible dissensions wherewith both in old time and in our age the Church hath bene miserably vexed, while curious men doe enforce an excessiue maner of presence, which the scripture neuer sheweth. And they turmoile about a thing soundly and rashly conceiued, as if the enclosing of Christ vnder bread were (as

Our communicating of Christ in the sacrament spirituall not carnall, such as receiueth Christ himselfe not the effectes of his grace only, otherwise sacramental then Lombard and after him others haue dreamed, who thinke his flesh eaten without taste, without faith.

(as the prouerbe is) the prowe and poupe of godlineſſe. It principally behoued to knowe, howe the bodie of Chriſt, as it was once deliuered for vs, is made ours: howe we are made partakers of his bloude that was ſhedde: becauſe this is to poſſeſſe whole Chriſt crucified, that we may enioy al his good things. Now theſe things, in which was ſo great importance, being omitted yea neglected & in a maner buried, this only crabbed queſtiō pleaſeth them how the body of Chriſt lieth hid vnder bread or vnder the fourme of bread. They falſly ſpreade abroad that whatſoeuer we teach concerning ſpirituall eating, is contrarie to the true and reall eating, as they call it: becauſe wee haue reſpecte to nothing but to the manner, which among them is carnall, while they encloſe Chriſt in bread: but to vs it is ſpirituall, becauſe the ſecret power of the ſpirite is the bond of our conioyning with Chriſt. No truer is that other obiection, that we touch onely the fruit or effect which the faithful take of the eating of the fleſh of Chriſt. For wee haue ſaide before, that Chriſt himſelfe is the ſubſtance of the Supper: and that thereupon followeth the effecte, that by the ſacrifice of his death we are cleanſed from ſinnes, by his bloud we are waſhed, by his reſurrection we are raiſed vp into hope of the heauenly life. But the fooliſh imagination, whereof Lombarde was the author, hath peruerted their mindes, while they thinke that the eating of the fleſh of Chriſt is the Sacrament. For this ſaith he: The Sacrament and not the thing are the fourmes of breade and wine: the Sacrament and the thing, are the fleſh and bloud of Chriſte: the thing and not the Sacrament, is the myſticall fleſhe. Againe within a litle after. The thing ſignified and contained, is the proper fleſhe of Chriſt: the thing ſignified and not contained, is his myſticall bodie. Whereas he maketh difference beetweene the fleſh of Chriſt, and the effectuall power of nouriſhing, wherwith it is endued, I agree: but whereas he faineth it to be a ſacrament, yea and contained vnder bread, it is an error not to be ſuffred. Hereupon hath growen the falſe expoſition of ſacramentall eating, becauſe they haue thought that wicked men alſo and euil doers doe eate the fleſh of Chriſt, howe much ſo euer they be ſtraungers from him. But the fleſh of Chriſt, it ſelfe in the myſterie of the Supper is no leſſe a ſpirituall thing than eternall ſaluation. Whereupon we gather, that whoſoeuer be voyde of the ſpirit of Chriſt, can no more eate the fleſh of Chriſt, than they can drinke wine wherewith is ioyned no taſt. Truely Chriſt is too hainouſly torne in ſunder, when that dead body and which hath no liuely ſtrength, is giuen foorth in common to vnbeleeuers: and his expreſſe wordes are directly againſt it. Whoſoeuer eateth my fleſhe and drinketh my bloude, abideth in me, and I in him. They aunſwere that in that place is not entreated of the ſacramentall eating: which I graunt, ſo that they will not now and then ſtumble againſt the ſame ſtone, in ſaying that the fleſhe it ſelfe is eaten without fruite. But I woulde knowe of them, howe long they holde it when they haue eaten it. Heere, in my iudgement, they ſhall haue no way to get out. But they obiecte, that nothing can be withdrawen or faile of the promiſes of God by the vnthankefulneſſe of men. I graunt in deede, and I ſaye that the force of the myſterie remaineth whole, howſoeuer wicked men doe, as much as in them lyeth, endeuour to make it voide. Yet it is one thing to be offered, and an other thing thing to be receiued. Christ reacheth this spirituall meate and offreth this spiritual drinke to all men, some do greedily eate of it, some do lothingly refuse it: shall these men refusing make the meat and the drinke to loose their nature? They wil say that their opinion is holpen by this similitude, namely, that the flesh of Christ, though it be vnsauorie, is neuertheless his flesh. But I denie that it can be eaten without the tast of faith: or (if we list rather to speake as Augustine doeth) I say that men beare away no more of this Sacrament, than they gather with the vessel of faith. So nothing is abated from the Sacrament, yea the trueth and effectualnesse thereof remaineth vnminished, although the wicked depart emptie from the outwarde partaking of it. If they againe obiect that this worde, this is my bodie, is diminished, if the wicked receiue corruptible bread and nothing else: we haue a solution readie, that God will not be acknowen true in the receiuing it selfe, but in the stedfastnesse of his owne goodnesse, when he is readie to giue, yea liberally offreth to the vnworthie that which they refuse. And this is the fulnesse of the Sacrament, which the whole world cannot breake, ỹ the flesh and bloud of Christ is no lesse giuen to the vnworthie than to the chosen faithfull ones of God: but therewithal it is true, that as water lighting vpon a harde stone, falleth away, because there is no entrie open into the stone: so the wicked do with their hardnesse driue backe the grace of God that it cannot pearce into them. Moreouer, that Christ should bee receiued without faith, is no more agreeing with reason, than seede to budde in the fire. Whereas they aske, how Christ is come to damnation to some, vnlesse they receiue him vnworthily, it is a verie colde question: for asmuch as wee no where read, that men do procure death to themselues by vnworthily receiuing Christ, but rather by refusing him. Neither doth Christs parable helpe them, where he saith that seede groweth vp among thornes, and afterward being choked is marred: because hee there entreateth, of what value the faith is which endureth but for a time, which they doe not thinke to be necessarie to the eating of Christes flesh and drinking of his bloud, that in this behalfe do make Iudas egally fellow with Peter. But rather by the same parable their errour is confuted, where Christ saith that some seede falleth in the high way, other some vpon stones, and neither of them taketh roote. Whereupon followeth that to the vnbeleeuers their own hardnesse is a let that Christ attaineth not to them. Whosoeuer desireth to haue our saluation holpen by this mystery, shall finde nothing fitter, than that the faithfull being led to the very fountaine, should drawe life out of the Sonne of God. But the dignitie of it is honourably enough set out, when we keepe in mind that it is a helpe whereby we be graffed into the body of Christe, or beeing graffed do more & more growe together, til he do fullie make himself one with vs in the heauenly life. They obiect that Paul ought not to haue made them guiltie of the bodie & bloud of Christe, vnlesse they were partakers of them. But I answere that they are not therefore condemned because they haue eaten them, but onely because they haue prophaned the mysterie, in treading vnder feete the pledge of the holie conioyning with God, which they ought reuerently to receiue.

Li. 4. Diſt. 8

Ioh. 6. 56

Matt. 13. 7.

1. Cor. 11. 29.

34 Nowe because Augustine among the old writers chiefly hath affirmed that that article of doctrine, that nothing is abated from the Sacraments, nor the grace which they figure is made voide by the infidelitie or naughtinesse of men: it shalbe profitable to prooue clearely by his owne wordes, howe vnfitly and peruersly they doe drawe that to this present cause, which cast the bodie of Christ to dogges to eare. The sacramental eating, after their opinion, is whereby the wicked receiue the bodie and bloud of Christ without the power of the spirite, or any effect of grace. Augustine contrariwise weying wisely those words, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud, shall not die for euer, saieth: Namely the power of the sacrament, not onely the visible sacrament: and verily within, not without: hee ỳ eateth it with heart, not he that presseth it with tooth. Whereupon at length he concludeth that the sacrament of this thing, that is to say, of the vnitie of the body & bloud of Christ, is set before men in the supper of the Lorde, to some vnto life, to some vnto destruction: but the thing it selfe whereof it is a Sacrament, to all men vnto life, to none vnto destruction, whosoeuer bee partaker of it. That none should here cauil, that the thing is called not the bodie, but the grace of the Spirite which may be seuered from the bodie, the contrarie comparison betweene these two words of addition Visible and inuisible driueth away al these mysts: for vnder the first of them cannot be comprehended the bodie of Christ. Whereupon followeth that the vnbeleeuers doe communicate onely of the visible signe. And that all douting may be better taken away, after that he had saide that this bread requireth the hunger of the inward man, he addeth: Moses and Aaron and Phinees, and many other that did eate Manna, pleased God. Why so? because the spirituall meate they spiritually vnderstood, spiritually hungred, spiritually tasted, that they might be spiritually filled. For wee also at this day haue receiued spirituall meat: but the Sacrament is one thing, and the power of the sacrament is an other. A litle after: and by this he that abideth not in Christ, and in whome Christ abideth not, wout dout neither eateth spiritually his flesh, nor drinketh his blood, though carnally & visiblie he presseth with teeth the signe of the bodie and blood. We heare againe that the visible signe is set in comparison as contrarie to spirituall eating. Whereby that error is confuted, that the bodie of Christ inuisible is in deed eaten sacramentally, though not spiritually. We heare also ỳ nothing is granted to prophane & vncleane men beside the visible receiuing of the signe. Hereupō commeth his famous saying, that the other disciples did eate the breade the Lorde, but Iudas did eate the bread of the Lord: wherin he plainly excludeth the vnbeleuers frō ỳ partaking of the body & bloud. Neither tēdeth it to any other end which he saith in another place: What marueilest thou, if to Iudas was giuen ỳ br d of Christ, by which he might be made bond to the diuel: when thou seest on the contrarie side ỳ to Paul was giuen the angell of the diuel, by whome he might be made perfect in Christ? he saith verily in another place, ỳ the bred of the Supper was the bodie of Christ to them to whome Paul said, He that eateth vnworthily, eateth & drinketh iudgement to himselfe: and that they haue not therefore nothing, because they haue receiued naughtilie. But in what sense, he declareth more fully in another place. For taking in hād purposely to define how the wicked & euil doers, which professe the Christian faith faith with mouth but with deedes doe denie it, doe eate the bodie of Christ (and that against the opinió of some which thought that they did not eate in sacrament onelie but in verie deede.) But neither (saith he) ought it to be said that they eate the body of Christ, because they are not to be reckened among the members of Christ. For (to speake nothing of the rest (they can not together bee the members of Christ, and the members of a harlot. Finally where himselfe saith, He that eateth my flesh, & drinketh my blood, abideth in me, & I in him, he sheweth what it is not sacramentally but in verie deed to eate the bodie of Christ. For this is to abide in Christ, that Christ may abide in him. For he so said this, as though he had said, he that abideth not in me, and in whom I abide not, let him not say or thinke that he doeth eate my bodie, or drinke my blood. Let the readers weigh the thinges set as contraries in the comparison to eate, sacramentally, and in verie deed: and there shall remaine no doubt. He confirmeth the same, no lesse plainelie in these wordes: Prepare not your iawes, but your heart: Hereupon is this Supper cõmended. Loe we beleeue in Christ, when we receiue by faith: in receiuing we know what to thinke. We receiue a litle & are fatted in heart. Therfore not that which is seene, but that which is beleeued, doeth feede. Here also, which the wicked receiue, he restraineth to the visible signe: and teacheth that christ is none otherwise receiued thã by faith. So also in an other place, pronouncing expresly that the good and the euill doe communicate together in the signes, he excludeth the euil frõ the true eating of the flesh of Christ. For if they receiued the thing it selfe, he woulde not vtterly haue left that vnspoken which was more fit for his matter. Also in an other place, entreating of the eating and the fruit thereof, he cõcludeth thus: Then shal the body and bloud of Christ be life to euery man, if that which in the sacrament is visibly receiued, be in the truth it selfe spiritually eaten, spiritually dronk. Therfore who so make vnbeleeuers partakers of the flesh & bloud of Christ, that they may agree with Augustine, let them shewe vs the visible bodie of Christ: forasmuch as, by his iudgement, the whole truth is spirituall. And it is certainely gathered out of his words, that the sacramental eating, when vnbeleefe closeth vp the entrie to trueth, is as much in effect as visible or outwarde eating. If the body of Christ might be eaten truly and yet not spiritually, what shoulde that meane which he saith in an other place? Yee shall not eate this body which ye see, and drinke the bloud which they shall shedde that shall crucifie me. I haue commended a certaine sacrament vnto you, being spiritually vnderstanded it shall quicken you. Verily he would not denie but that the same bodie which Christ offred for sacrifice, is deliuered in the Supper: but he did set out the manner of eating: namelie that beeing receiued into heauenlie glorie, by the secrete power of the Spirite, it breatheth life into vs. I graunt in deede that there is oftentimes founde in him this maner of speaking, that the bodie of Christ is eaten of the vnbeleeuers: but he expoundeth himselfe, adding, In Sacrament. And in an other place he describeth spirituall eating, in which our bitinges consume not grace. And least mine aduersaries should say, that I fight with them with a heape of places, I would know of them howe they can vnwinde themselues from one saying of his, where he saith that Sacramentes doe worke in the only onely elect that which they figure. Truly they dare not deny but ỹ the bread in the supper figureth the body of Christ. Wherupon followeth ỹ the reprobate are debarred from the partaking of it. That Cyril also thought none otherwise, these wordes do declare. As if a man vpon molten waxe do powre other wax, he wholly tempereth the one waxe with the other: so it is necessary if any man receiue the flesh & bloud of the Lord that he be ioyned with him that Christ may bee found in him and he in Christe. By these wordes I think it is euident, that they are bereaued of the true and reall eating, that do but sacramentally eat the body of Christ, which cannot be seuered from his power: and that therefore faileth not the faith of the promises of God, which ceaseth not to raine from heauen, although the stones and rockes conceiue not the liquor of the raine.

In 6. Ioan. ca. 17.

Adoration of Christ in the sacrament vnwarranted.

35 This knowledge shall also easily draw vs away from the carnal worshipping, which some haue with peruerse rashnesse erected in the sacrament: because they made account with themselues in this maner: If it be the body, then both the soule & the Godhead are together with the body, which now cannot be seuered: therefore Christ is there to be worshipped. First if their accompanying which they pretend be denied them, what will they do? For how much soeuer they cry out vppon an absurditie, if the body bee seuered from the soule and the Godhead: yet what sound witted and sober man can perswade himself that the body of Christ is Christ? They thinke themselues in deed gaily to proue it with their logical arguments. But sith Christ speaketh distinctly of his body and bloud, but describeth not the maner of presence: how will they of a doubtfull thing gather certainely that which they would? What then? if their consciences chaunce to be exercised with any more grieuous feeling, shal not they by & by with their logical arguments be dissolued and melt? namely when they shall see themselues destitute of the certaine word of God, vpon which alone our soules do stand fast, when they are called to accoũt, & without which they faint at euery first moment: whẽ they shall call to minde that the doctrine & examples of the Apostles are against them, & that themselues alone are to themselues the authors of it. To such motions shalbe added other not small prickinges. What? Shall it be a matter of no importance, to worship God in this forme, where nothing was prescribed vnto vs? When it concerned the true worship of God, ought they with so great lightnesse to haue attempted that of which there is no where reade any one word? But if they had, with such humblenesse as they ought, holden all their thoughtes vnder the worde of God, they would truely haue harkened to that which he sayde, Take, eate, drinke, and would haue obeied this comandement, wherein he biddeth the Sacrament to be receiued, not to be worshipped. But they which, as it is commanded of God, do receiue it without worshipping, are assured ỹ they doe not swarue from Gods cõmandement: than which assurednes there is nothing better when we take any worke in hande. They haue the example of the Apostles, whõ we read not to haue fallen down flat & worshipped it, but euẽ as they were sitting, to haue receiued it & eaten it. They haue the vse of the Apostolike Church, wherin Luke reporteth ỹ the faithful did cõmunicat not in worshipping but in breaking of bread. They haue the Apostles doctrine, wherwith Paul instructed ỹ

Act. 2. 4.

Church

Church of the Corinthians, professing that he had receiued of the Lord that which he deliuered. 1.Cor.11.

36 And these things verily tend to this end, that the godly reader should weye howe perillous it is in so hie matters to wander from the simple word of God to the dreames of our owne braine. But those things that are aboue sayde, ought to deliuer vs from all dout in this behalfe. For that godly soules may therein rightly take holde of Christe, they must needes be lifted vp to heauen. If this be the office of a Sacrament, to helpe the mind of man which otherwise is weake, that it may rise vpwarde to reach the height of spirituall mysteries; then they which are holden downe in the outward signe do stray from the right way of seeking Christ. What then? Shall we denie that it is a superstitious worshipping, when men doe throwe themselues downe before bread, to worship Christ therin? Doutlesse the Nicene Synode meant to meet with this mischiefe, when it forbade vs to be humbly intentiue to the signes set before vs. And for none other cause was it in olde time ordained, that before the consecration the people should with a loud voice be put in mind to haue their heartes lifted vpwarde. The Scripture it selfe also, beside that it diligently declareth vnto vs the ascension of Christ, wherby he conueyed away the presence of his body from our sight & conuersation: to shake away from vs all carnal thinking of him, so oft as it maketh mention of him, commandeth vs to be in minds raised vpward, & to seeke him in heauen sitting at the right hand of ỹ father. According to this rule he was rather to be spiritually worshipped in heauenly glorie, than this so perillous a kinde of worshipping to be deuised, full of carnall and grosse opinion of God. Wherfore they ỹ haue inuented the worshipping of the Sacramẽt, haue not only dreamed it of themselues beside the Scripture, in which no mention of it can be shewed (which yet should not haue beene ouerpassed if it had beene acceptable to God.) But also all the Scripture crying out against it, they haue framed to themselues a God after the will of their owne lust, leauing the liuing God. For what is idolatrie, if this be not, to worship the gifts in steede of the giuer himself? Wherin they haue doublely offended: For both the honor takẽ from God was conueyed to a creature: and hee himselfe also dishonored in the defiling and prophaning of his benefite, when of his holy Sacrament is made a cursed idole. But let vs contrariwise, least we fall into the same pitte, throughlie settle our eares, eyes, heartes, minds, and tongues in the holy doctrine of God. For that is the schoole of the holy Ghost, ỹ best scholemaster, in which such profit is attained, that nothing neede more to be gotten from any where else, but we willingly ought to be ignoraunt of whatsoeuer is not taught in it.

Adoration of the sacrament of Christes bodie superstitious, condemned in effect by the councell of Nice, by the vse of the old Church & by Scripture.

Sursum corda.

Col.3.2.

Christ in the sacrament offered and giuen by promise vnto them not vvhich beholde and adore, but vvhich eate and giue thankes: this sacrament beeing instituted for the participation of Christ by faith and the profession of our grateful remẽbrance as tvvo speciall vses.

37 But now (as superstition, when it hath once passed the right bounds, maketh no ende of sinning (they fel a great way further. For they haue deuised Ceremonies altogether straunge from the institution of the Supper, to this end only that they might giue diuine honors to the signe. We yeeld (say they) this worship to Christ. First, if this were done in the Supper, I would say that that worshipping onely is lawfull, which resteth not in the signe, but is directed to Christ sitting in heauen. But nowe by what pretense doe they boast that they worshippe Christ in that bread: when they haue no promise thereof?

thereof. They consecrate an hoſt, as they cal it, which they may carye about in pompe, which they may ſhew forth in a common gazing to be looked vpon, worſhipped, and called vpon. I aske by what power they thinke it to bee rightly conſecrate. Verily they will bring foorth thoſe wordes, This is my body. But I will obiect to the contrarie, that it was therewithall ſaide, Take and eate. Neither will I doe that of nothing. For when a promiſe is knit to a commaundement, I ſay that the promiſe is ſo contained vnder the cõmandement, that being ſeuered it is made no promiſe at all. This ſhalbe made plainer by a like example. God gaue a commandement, when he ſaide. Call vpon me: He added a promiſe, I will heare thee. If any man calling vpon Peter & Paul, do glorie vpon this promiſe, wil not all men crie out that he doth wrongfully? And what other thing I pray you, doe they which leauing the commaundement concerning eating, do catch holde of a maimed promiſe, this is my body, to abuſe it to ſtrãge ceremonies frõ the inſtitutiõ of Chriſt? Let vs therefore remember that this promiſe is giuen to them which keepe the cõmandement ioyned with it: but that they be deſtitute of al the word, which remoue the Sacramẽt to any other way. Wee haue heretofore entreated how the myſtery of ỹ holy ſupper ſerueth our Faith before God. But foraſmuch as the Lorde doeth here not onely bring into our remẽbrance ſo great largenes of his boũtie, as we haue before ſhewed, but doth as it were from hand to hand bring it forth, & ſtirreth vs to acknowledge it: he doth therewithall warne vs that we be not vnthankeful to ſo plentifull liberality; but rather that we would publiſh it with ſuch praiſes as it is meete, and aduance it with thankeſgiuing. Therefore when he deliuered the inſtitution of the Sacrament it ſelfe to the Apoſtles, he taught them that they ſhoulde doe it in remembrance of him. Which Paul expoundeth, to declare the Lordes death. That is, publikely and altogethet with one mouh openly to confeſſe, that all our affiance of life and ſaluation is repoſed in the death of the Lorde: that wee may glorifie him with our confeſſion, and may by our example exhort other to giue glorie to him. Here againe it appeareth whereunto the marke of this Sacrament is directed, namely to exerciſe vs in the remembrance of the death of Chriſt. For, this that we are commaunded to declare the Lordes death till he come to iudge, is nothing elſe but that we ſhoulde publiſhe that with confeſſion of mouth, which our faith hath acknowledged in the ſacrament, that is, that the death of Chriſt is our life. This is the ſecond vſe of the Sacrament, which pertaineth to outward confeſſion.

A third vſe of this ſacrament in ſtirring vp vnto vnitie and loue.

38 Thirdly the Lord alſo willed it to be to vs in ſteed of an exhortation, than which none other can more vehemently encorage & enflame vs both to pureneſſe and holineſſe of life, and alſo to charitie, peace & agreement. For the Lord doth therein ſo communicate his body to vs, that he is made throughly one with vs, and we with him. Nowe ſith he hath but one body, whereof he maketh vs al partakers, it is neceſſarie that al we alſo be by ſuch partaking made one body. Which vnitie the breade which is deliuered in the ſacrament, repreſenteth: which as it is made of many graines in ſuch ſort mingled together that one can not be diſcerned from an other: after ỹ ſame manner we alſo ought to be conioyned & knit together with ſo great agreement of mindes, that no disageement or diuision come betweene vs. This I had rather to be expressed with Paules wordes. The cup of blessing (saith he) which we blesse is the communicating of the blood of Christ: & the bread of blessing which wee breake, is the partaking of the body of Christ. Therefore we all are one body that partake of one breade. We shall haue verie well profited in the Sacramente, if this thought so shall bee imprinted and ingrauen in our mindes, that none of the brethren can bee hurte, despised, refused, abused, or any wise bee offended of vs, but that therewithall wee doe in so doeing hurte, despise, and abuse Christe with our iniurious dealinges: that wee can not disagree with our brethren but that wee must therewithall disagree with Christe: that Christe cannot bee loued of vs, but that he must be loued in our brethren: that what care we haue of our owne body, such also we ought to haue of our brethren which are members of our body: as no part of our body is touched with any feeling of greefe, which is not spreade abroade into all the other partes, so we must not suffer our brother to bee greeued with any euill whereof wee should not also be touched with compassion. Therefore Augustine not without cause so oft calleth this sacrament that bond of charitie. For what sharper spur could bee put to vs, to stirre vp mutuall charitie among vs, than when Christ giuing himselfe to vs, doth not onelie allure vs with his owne example that we shoulde mutually dedicate and deliuer our selues one to another: but in so much as he maketh himselfe common to all, he maketh al vs also one in himselfe? 1.Cor.10,16.

39 But hereby is that verie well confirmed which I haue saide in an other place, that the true ministration of the Sacrament stãdeth not without the word. For whatsoeuer profite commeth to vs of the Supper, requireth the word: whether we be to be confirmed in faith, or to be exercised in confession, or be stirred vp to dutie, prayer is needefull. Therefore nothing can be more disorderly done in the supper, than if it be turned to a dumbe action: as hath beene done vnder the tyranny of the Pope. For they would haue the whole force of consecratiõ to hang vpon ỹ intent of the Priest, as though this nothing pertained to the people, to whome it most of all behooued that the mysterie shoulde be declared. But thereupon hath growen this errour, ỹ they marked not that those promises wherewith the consecration is made, are directed not to the elements themselues, but to them ỹ receiue thẽ. But Christ speaketh not to the bread, ỹ it may be made his bodie, but commandeth his disciples to eat, & promiseth to them the cõmunicating of his body & blood. And none other order doth Paul teach than that together with ỹ bread and the cup, the promises should be offered to the faithfull. Thus it is truely. We ought not to imagine any magicall inchauntment, that it be sufficient to haue mũbled vp ỹ words, as though the elements did heare them: but let vs vnderstande that those wordes are a liuely preaching, which may edifie the hearers, which may inwardly pearce into their mindes, which may be imprinted and setled in their hearts, which may shewe forth effectualnes in ỹ fulfilling of ỹ which it promiseth by these reasons it clearly appeareth ỹ the laying vp of the sacrament, which many do earnestly require, ỹ it may be extraordinarily distributed to ỹ sick, is vnprofitable: For either they receiue it without rehearsing of the institutiō of Christ, or the minister shall together with the signe ioyne the true declaration of the mysterie. In silence is abuse and fault. If the promises be rehearsed, and the mysterie declared, that they which shall receiue it may receiue it with fruite, there is no cause why we should doubt that this is the true consecration. To what ende then will that other consecration come the force whereof commeth not so farre as to the sicke mē? But they that doe so, haue the example of the old church. I graunt: but in so great a matter, and in which wee erre not without greate daunger nothing is safer than to follow the trueth it selfe.

The danger of vnworthily receiuing this sacrament.

40 Nowe as we see that this holy breade of the Supper of the Lorde is spirituall meat, no lesse sweete and delicate than healthful to the godly worshippers of God, by the tast whereof they feele that Christ is their life, whō it raiseth vp to thankesgiuing, to whome it is an exhortation to mutuall charitie among themselues: so on the other side it is turned into a most noysome poyson to all them whose Faith it doeth not nourishe and confirme, and whome it doeth not stirre vp to confession of praise and to charitie. For as bodily meate, when it findeth a stomake possessed with euill humors, being it selfe also thereby made euill and corrupted doeth rather hurt than nourishe: so this spirituall meate, if it light vppon a soule defiled with malice and naughtinesse, throweth it downe headlong with greater fall: verily not by the fault of the meate it selfe, but because to defiled and vnbeleeuing men nothing is cleane, though otherwise it bee neuer so much sanctified by the blessing of the Lorde. For (as Paul saith) they that eate & drinke vnworthily are guiltie of the body and bloode of the Lorde, and doe eate and drinke iudgement to themselues, not discerning the bodie of the Lord. For such kinde of men as without any sparcle of faith, without any zeale of charitie, doe thrust themselues foorth like swine to take the Supper of the Lorde, doe not discerne the body of the Lorde. For in so much as they doe not beleeue that that bodie is their life, they doe as much as in them lieth dishonour it, spoyling it of all the dignitie thereof, and finally in so receiuing it they prophane and defile it. But in so much as being estraunged and disagreeing from their brethren, they dare mingle the holy signe of the bodie of Christ with their disagreementes, it is no thanke to them that the bodie of Christ is not rent in sunder, and limmemale torne in peeces. And so not vnworthilie they are guiltie of the bodie and bloode of the Lord, which they doe with vngodlinesse full of sacriledge so fowlie defile. Therefore by this vnworthie eating, they take to thēselues damnation. For wheras they haue no faith reposed in Christ, yet receiuing the sacrament they professe ỹ there is saluation for them no where else than in him, and doe forsware all other affiance. Wherefore they themselues are accusers to themselues, they themselues pronounce witnesse against themselues, and they themselues seale their owne damnation. Againe when they being with hatred and euill will deuided and drawen in sunder from their brethen, that is from the mēbers of Christ, haue no part in Christ: yet they doe testifie that this is the onelie saluation to cōmunicate with Christ, and to bee made one with him. For this cause Paul commaundeth, that a man prooue himselfe, before that hee eate of this breade or drinke of this cup. Whereby (as I expound it) he meant meant that euery man should descende into himselfe, and weigh with himselfe, whether hee doe with inwarde affiance of heart rest vpon the saluation which Christ hath purchaced: whether hee acknowledge it with confession of mouth: then whether hee doe with desirous endeuour of innocence and holinesse aspire to the following of Christ: whether after his example he bee ready to giue himselfe to his brethren, and to communicate himselfe to them with whome he hath Christ common to him: whether, as he himselfe is accompted of Christ, he do likewise on his behalfe take all his brethren for members of his owne body: whether he couet to cherish, defend and helpe them as his owne members. Not for that these duties both of faith and charitie can now be perfect in vs: but because we ought to endeuour this, and with all our desires to long towarde it, that wee may daily more and more encrease our Faith begon.

Tit 1.15.
2. Cor. 11.29.

1. Cor. 11.21.

41 Commonly when they go about to prepare men to such worthines of eating, they haue in cruell wise tormented and vexed poore consciences: and yet they brought neuer a whitte of all those thinges that might serue to the purpose. They saide that those did eate worthily which were in state of grace. To be in state of grace they expounded to bee pure and cleansed from all sinne. By which doctrine al ỹ men that euer haue at any time bene or now be in earth, were debarred from the vse of this sacrament. For if we goe about this, to fetch our worthines frō our selues, we are vtterly vndone: onely despaire & damnable ruine abideth for vs. Though we endeuour with our whole strengthes, wee shall nothing more preuaile, but that then at last we shall bee most vnworthy, when wee haue most of all trauelled about seeking of worthines. To salue this sore, they haue deuised a way to attain worthines: that, as much as in vs lieth, making examination, and requiring of our selues accompt of all our doings, we should with contrition, confession, and satisfaction cleanse our vnworthines. which way of clensing, what manner of thing it is, we haue already shewed there where was more conuenient place to speake of it. So much as serueth for our present purpose, I say ỹ these be two hungrie and vanishing comfortes, to dismaid and discouraged consciences, and such as are striken with horror of their sinne. For if ỹ Lord by special forbidding admitteth none to the partaking of the supper but the righteous and innocent: there needeth no smal heede that may make a man assured of his owne righteousnes which he heareth to be required of God. But whereby is this assurednes confirmed vnto vs, that they are discharged afore God, which haue done so much as in them lay? But although it were so yet when shall it be that a man may be bold to assure himselfe that he hath done as much as in him lay? So when there is made no certaine assurance of our worthines, the entrie shall alway remaine shut by that horrible forbidding, whereby is pronounced that they eate and drinke iudgement to themselues, which eate and drinke vnworthily.

Consciences tormented by that vworthines of receiuing vvhich is taught in the Church of Rome.

42 Nowe it is easy to iudge what manner of doctrine this is which reigneth in the Papacie, and from what author it hath proceeded, which with ỹ outragious rigor thereof, bereaueth and spoileth, miserable sinners & such as be tormented with feare and sorrow, of the comfort of this Sacrament in which yet al the sweete delicates of the gospel were set before them. Surely the

The medicinable vertue of this sacrament vnto mē vveakened vvith the conscience of their owne vnvvorthines.

the deuill coulde by no readier way destroy men, than by so making them senseleſſe, that they could not perceiue the taſte and sauour of such foode, wherewith it was the will of the most good heauenly father to feede them. Least therefore we runne into such headlong downfall, let vs remember that this holy banket is medicine to the sicke, comfort to sinners, liberall gift to the poore: which bring no profite to the healthie, righteous, and rich, if any such could bee founde. For whereas in it Christ is giuen vs for meate: we vnderstand that without him we pine, starue, and faint, like as famine destroieth the liuely strength of the body. Again whereas he is giuen vs for life: we vnderstand ẏ without him we are in our selues vtterly deade. Wherefore this is the worthineſſe both the onely & beſt that we can bring to god, if we offer to him our own vilenes & (as I may so cal it) vnworthines, ẏ of his mercie he may make vs worthy of him: if we despaire in our selues, that we may be comforted in him: if we humble our selues, that we may bee raised vp of him: if we accuse our selues, ẏ we may be iustified of him: moreouer if we aspire to that vnitie which he commendeth to vs in his supper: & as he maketh vs al one in himself, so if we wish to vs all altogether one soul, one heart, one tongue. If we haue these things throughly wel weied & considred, such thoughts although they shake vs, yet shal neuer ouerthrow vs. As how should we being needie & naked of all good things, we defiled w filthines of sins, we halfe dead, eat the body of the Lord worthily? We will rather think that we being pure come to the liberall giuer, we sick to the phisician, we sinners to the author of righteousneſſe, finally we dead men to him that giueth life: that that worthineſſe which is commaunded of God, consisteth chiefly of Faith, which reposeth al thinges in Christ and nothing in vs: and next of charitie, and the selfe same charitie which it is enough to offer vnperfect to God, that he may increase it to better, forasmuch as it cannot be giuen perfect. Some other agreeing with vs in this, that the worthineſſe it selfe consisteth in Faith and charitie: yet in the measure of worthines haue gone farre out of the way, requiring a perfection of Faith, whereunto nothing may be added, and a charitie egall with that which Christ hath shewed toward vs. But hereby they doe none otherwise than those other before, driue all men away from comming to this holie Supper. For if their sentence should take place, no man should receiue but vnworthily, forasmuch as all without exception should bee holden guiltie and conuict of their vnperfectneſſe. And truely it were a point of two much amazed dulneſſe, I will not say foolishneſſe, to require such perfection in the Sacrament, as may make the Sacrament void and superfluous: which was not ordained for the perfect, but for the weake and feeble to awake, to stirre vp, to pricke forward and exercise the affection of faith and charitie, and to correct the default of either of them.

The libertie granted vnto men and their vvanton follie shewed in ceremonies annexed to the administration of this sacrament.

43 But so much as concerneth the outward forme of doing, whether faithfull receiue it in their hand or no, whether they diuide it, or euerie one eate that which is giuen him: whether they put againe the cup in the hand of the deacõ, or deliuer it to ẏ next: whether the bred be leauened, or vnleauened: whether the wine be red or white: it maketh no matter. These things be indifferent and left in the libertie of the Church. Howbeit it is certaine taine, that the vſage of the olde Church was, that euerie one ſhoulde take it into his hande. And Chriſt ſaid, Diuide it among you. The hiſtories report that it was leauened and common bread before the time of Alexander Byſhope of Bome, which firſt delited in vnleauened bread: But for what reaſō I ſee not, vnleſſe it were with a newe ſight to drawe the eyes of the common people to wondering at it, rather than to inſtruct their minds with good religion. I adiure al them that are touched with any though but light zeale of godlineſſe, to tel whether they do not euidently ſee, both howe much more brightly the glorie of GOD ſhineth herein, and how much more aboundant ſweeteneſſe of ſpirituall comfort commeth to the faithfull, than in theſe colde and playerlike trifles, which bring none other vſe but to deciue the ſenſe of the amazed people. This they call the holding of the people in religion, when being made fooliſh & ſenſeleſſe with ſuperſtition it is drawen whither they liſt. If any man will defende ſuch inuentions by antiquitie, I my ſelfe alſo am not ignorant how auncient is the vſe of chreſme, and blowing in Baptiſme: How nie to the age of the Apoſtles the Supper of the Lord was infected with ruſtineſſe: but this verily is the waiwardnes of mans boldneſſe, which can not withholde it ſelfe but that it muſt alway play and bee wanton in the myſteries of God. But let vs remember that God doeth ſo highly eſteeme the obedience of his word, ỹ he willeth vs in it to iudge both his angels and the whole worlde. Now, bidding farewell to ſo great a heape of ceremonies: it might thus haue been moſt comlily miniſtred, if it were oft and at leſt euery weeke ſet before the Church, but that firſt they ſhoulde beginne with publike prayers: then a ſermon ſhould be made, then the miniſter, hauing bread and wine ſet vpon the boorde, ſhould rehearſe the inſtitution of the ſupper: and then ſhoulde declare the promiſes that are in it left vnto vs: and therewithall ſhoulde excommunicate all them that by the Lords forbidding are debarred from it, afterwarde they ſhould pray ỹ with what liberalitie the Lord hath giuen vs this holy foode, he would inſtruct & frame vs alſo with the ſame faith, and thankefulneſſe of minde to receiue it, and that foraſmuch as we are not of our ſelues, he woulde of his mercie make vs worthy of ſuch a banket: that then either Pſalmes ſhould be ſong, or ſomewhat read, and the faithful ſhould in ſeemely order communicate of ỹ holy banket, the miniſters breaking the breade and giuing it to the people: that when the ſupper is ended, exhortation ſhould be made to pure faith & confeſſion of faith, to charitie, and to maners meete for Chriſtians: laſt of al that giuing of thanks ſhould be rehearſed, and praiſes be ſong to God: which being ended the congregation ſhould be let goe in peace.

Luke 22.17.

44 Theſe thinges that wee haue hitherto ſpoken of this Sacrament doe largely ſhewe, that it was not therefore ordeyned, that it ſhoulde bee receiued yearely once, and that ſlightly for manners ſake (as nowe commonly the cuſtome is) but that it ſhoulde bee in often vſe to all Chriſtians that with often remembrance they ſhoulde repeate the paſſion of Chriſt: by which remembrance they might ſuſteyne and ſtrengthen their Faith, and exhort themſelues to ſing confeſſion of praiſe to God, and to publiſhe his goodneſſe: finally by which they might nouriſhe mutuall charitie, and reſtifie it among themſelues, whereof they ſawe the knot in the vnitie of ỹ body of Christ. For so oft as we communicate of the signe of the body of the Lord, we doe as by a token giuen and receiued, interchaungeably binde our selues one to another vnto all dueties of loue, that none of vs do any thing whereby he may offende his brother, nor leaue any thing vndone whereby he may helpe him, when neede requireth and abilitie sufficeth. That such was the vse of the Apostolike Church, Luke rehearseth in the Acts, when he saith that the faithfull were continuing in the doctrine of the Apostles, in communicating in breaking of bread, and in prayers. So was it altogether meete to be done, that there should be no assemblie of the Church without the worde, prayers, partaking of the Supper and almes. That this order was also institute among the Corinthians we may sufficientlie gather of Paul and it is certaine that in many ages afterwarde it was in vse. For thereupon came those olde Canons, which they father vppon Anacletus and Calixtus, that when the consecration is done, all shoulde communicate that wil not be without harmdoers of ỹ Church. And it is red in those old Canons, which they cal the canons of the apostles: that they which continue not vnto the ende, and do not receiue the holy Communion, must bee corrected as men that moove vnquietnesse of the Church. Also in the Councell at Antioch, it was decreed that they which enter into the Church, and heare the scriptures, and doe abstein from the communion, shoulde be remoued from the Church, till they haue amended this faulte. Which although in the first Councell at Toletum it was either somewhat qualified or at least set foorth in milder wordes yet it is there also decreed, that they, which when they haue hearde the sermon, are founde neuer to communicate, shoulde be warned: if after warning they absteyne, they should be debarred from it.

The first beginnings of slacknes to communicate.

45 Verily by these ordinances the holy men meant to retaine & maintaine the often vse of the Communion, which often vse they had receiued frõ the Apostles thẽselues, which they saw to be most wholsome for ỹ faithful, and by litle & litle by the negligence of the common people to grow out of vse, Augustine testifieth of his owne time: The Sacrament (saith hee) of this thing, of the vnitie of the Lordes body, is somewhere daily, somewhere by certaine distances of the dayes, prepared vnto the Lordes table, and is there receiued at the table, to some vnto life, to othersome vnto destruction. And in the first Epistle to Ianuarius: some doe dailie communicate of the body and bloude of the Lorde: some receiue it at certaine dayes: in some places there is no day let passe wherein it is not offered: in some other places onely vppon the Saturday and the Sunday, and in some other places neuer but on the Sunday. But forasmuch as the common people was (as we haue said) somewhat slacke, the holy men did call earnestly vpon them with sharpe rebukinges, lest they shoulde seeme to winke at such slouthfulnesse. Such an example is in Chrysostome vpon the Epistle to the Ephesians. It is not said vnto him that dishonoured ỹ banket: wherfore didst thou fit downe? but wherefore diddest thou come in? Whosoeuer is not partaker of the mysteries, hee is wicked and shameleese for that hee standeth here present. I beseech you if any be called to a banket, washeth his handes, sitteth downe, seemeth to prepare himselfe to eat, and then doeth tast of nothing: shal he not shame both the banket, and the maker of the banket? So thou standing among among them that with prayer doe prepare themselues to receiue the holy meate, hast euen in this that thou hast not gone away, confessed that thou art one of the nũber of them, at the last thou dost not partake: had it not bin better that thou hadst not bin present? Thou wilt say, I am vnworthie. Therefore neither wast thou worthy of the communion of prayer, which is a preparing to the receiuing of the holy mystery.

The custome of yearely once receiuing peruerse.

46 And truely this custome, which commaundeth to communicate yerely once, is a most certaine inuention of the diuell, by whose ministerie soeuer it was brought in. They say that Zepherinus was authour of that decree, which it is not likely to haue bene such as we nowe haue it. For he by his ordinance did peraduenture not after the worst manner prouide for the church, as the times then were. For it is no doubt but that then ỹ holie supper was set before the faithful so oft as they came together in assembly, neither is it any doubt but ỹ a good part of them did communicate. But when it scarcely at any time happened that all did communicate together, and whereas it was necessarie ỹ they which were mingled with prophane men and idolaters, should by some outward signe testify their faith: the holy man for order and policies sake, appointed that day, wherein the whole people of Christians should by partaking of the Lords supper vtter a confession of their faith. The ordinance of Zepherinus beeing otherwise good hath beene euill wrested of them that came after, when a certain lawe was made of one communicating yeerely: whereby it is come to passe, that almoste all men when they haue once communicate, as though they had gaily discharged themselues for al the rest of the yete, sleepe soundly on both eares. It ought to haue bin farre otherwise done. Euery weeke at the least, the Lords table should be set before the assembly of the Christians: the promises should bee declared, which might feede vs spiritually at it: none should in deede be cõpelled by necessity, but all should bee exhorted and pricked forwarde: the sluggishnesse also of the slothfull should be rebuked. Al should by heapes, as hungrie men, come together to such daintyes. Not without right full cause therefore at the beginning I complained, that by the craft of the deuil this custome was thrust in, which when it appointeth one certaine day of the yeare, maketh men slothfull for all the rest of the yere. We see in deede that this peruerse abuse was crept in euen in the time of Chrysostome: but wee may also therewithall see how much it displeased him. For he complaineth with grieuous wordes in the same place which I enen now alleaged, ỹ there is so great inequalitie of this matter, that often in some times of the yeare they came not euen when they were cleane, but at Easter they came euen when they were vncleane. Then he crieth out: O custome, O presumption. Then in vaine is the daily offring vsed: in vaine we stand at the altar: there is none that partaketh together with vs. So farre is it off that hee allowed it by his authoritie adioyned to it.

An ordinance to take away half this sacrament from the people.

47 Out of the same shop proceeded also another ordinance, which hath stolen away or violently taken away the half of the supper from the better number of the people of God, namely the signe of the bloude, which beeing denied to lay & profane mẽ (for with such titles forsooth they set out Gods inheritance) became a peculiar possession to shauen and annointed men.

It is the commaundement of the eternall God, that all ſhould drinke: which commandement man dare diſcontinue and repell with a newe & contrarie law, commanding that not all ſhould drinke. And ỹ theſe lawmakers ſhould not ſeeme to fight without reaſon againſt their God, they pretende perils that might happen if this holy cup were commonly giuen to all: as though thoſe dangers had not bene foreſeene & marked of the eternall wiſedome of God. And then ſuttlely forſooth they reaſon, that the one is enough for both. For if (ſay they) it be the body, it is whole Chriſt, which cannot now be ſeuered from his body. Therefore by accompanying the body contayneth the bloude. Lo howe our wit agreeth with God, when it hath neuer ſo little begon with looſe reines, to be wanton and wilde. The Lord ſhewing bread ſaith that it is his body: when hee ſheweth the cup, he calleth it his bloude. The boldnes of mans reaſon, crieth out contrariwiſe, that the bread is the bloud, and the wine is the bodie: as though the Lord had for no cauſe ſeuered his body from his bloude both in wordes and in ſignes: or as though it had euer bene heard ſpoken that the bodie or bloud of Chriſt is called God & man. Verily if he had meant to ſignify whole himſelfe, he might haue ſaid it is I: as he is wont to ſpeak in the ſcriptures, and not, this is my body, this is my bloud. But he willing to helpe our weakeneſſe, did ſet the cup ſeuerally from the bread, to teach that he ſufficeth no leſſe for drink thā for meat. Nowe let one part be taken away, then wee ſhall finde but the one halfe of the nouriſhments in him. Therefore, although it be true which they pretende, that the bloud is in the bread by way of accompanying, and againe, the body in the cup, yet they defraude godly ſoules of the confirmation of faith which Chriſte deliuereth vs as neceſſarie. Therefore bidding their ſuttleties farewell, we muſt hold faſt the profit which is by the ordinance of Chriſt in the two earneſts.

Cauillous allegations for defenſe of the halfe communion.

48 I know in deede that the miniſters of Sathan do heere cauil, as it is an ordinarie thing with them to make mockery of the Scriptures. Firſt they alleage that of one bare doing ought not to be gathered a rule wherby the Church ſhoulde be bound to perpetuall obſeruing. But they lie when they ſay that it was but a bare doing: for Chriſt did not only deliuer the cup, but alſo did inſtitute that his Apoſtles ſhould in time to come do the ſame. For they are the wordes of a commaunder, drinke yee all of this cup. And Paul ſo rehearſeth that it was a deede, that he alſo commendeth it for a certaine rule. Another ſtarting hole is, that the apoſtles alone were receiued of Chriſt to the partaking of this ſupper whome he had already choſen & taken into the order of the ſacrificing prieſtes. But I woulde haue them aunſwere me to fiue queſtions, from which they ſhal not be able to eſcape, but that they ſhall be eaſily conuinced with their lies. Firſt, by what oracle haue they this ſolution reuealed, beeing ſo ſtraunge from the word of God? The Scripture reckoneth twelue that ſate with Ieſus: but it doeth not ſo obſcure the dignitie of Chriſt that it calleth them ſacrificing prieſts of which name we will ſpeake hereafter in place fit for it. Though he gaue it then to the twelue, yet he commaunded that they ſhoulde doe the ſame, namely that they ſhould ſo diſtribute it among them. Secondly, why in that better age, from the Apoſtles almoſt a thouſande yeares, were all without exception made partakers of both the signes? was the old church ignorant what guests Christ had receiued to his Supper? It were a point of most desperate shamelesnesse, here to sticke and dally in graunting it to be true. There remaine the ecclesiastical histories, there remaine the bookes of the olde writers, which minister euident testimonies of this matter. The flesshe (sayth Tertullian) is fed with the body and blood of Christ, that the soule may be fatted with feeding vpon God. Howe (sayde Ambrose to Theodosius) wilt thou receiue with such handes the holy body of the Lorde? With what boldenesse wilt thou with thy mouth partake of the cup of ỹ precious bloud? And Hierome sayth. The Priestes which make the Thankesgiuing, and doe distribute the bloud of the Lorde to the people. Chrysostome, Not as in the olde lawe the Priest did eate part, and the people parte: but one body is set before all, and one cuppe. Those thinges that pertaine to the Thankesgiuing are all common betweene the priest and the people. The selfe same thing doeth Augustine testifie in many places.

49 But why dispute I about a thing most known? Let al the greekes and Latine writers be read ouer: such testimonies shal euery where offer thẽselues. Neither was this custom growen out of vse, while there remained one drop of pureneſſe in the church. Gregorie, whome you may rightly say to haue beene the last Bishop of Rome, teacheth that it was kept in his time. What is the bloud of the Lamb, ye haue now learned, not by hearing but by drinking. His bloud is poured into the mouthes of the faithful. Yea it yet endured foure hundred yeares after his death, when al thinges were growen out of kinde. For neither was that taken only for an vsage, but also for an inuiolable law. For then was in force the reuerence of Gods institution, & they douted not ỹ it was sacrilege, to seuer those things which the Lord had cõioyned. For thus saith Gelasius. We haue founde, ỹ some receiuing onely the portion of the holy body, do abstain frõ the cup. Let them without dout, because they seeme to be bound with I wot not what superstition, either receiue the sacraments whole, or be debarred frõ thẽ whole. For ỹ diuiding of this mysterie is not cõmitted without great sacrilege. Those reasons of Cyprian were heard, which truly ought to moue a christian mind. How (sayeth he) do we teach or prouoke them to shed their bloud in the confessing of christ, if we deny his bloud to thẽ that shal fight? Or how do wee make them fit for the cup of Martyrdom, if we do not first in the church by the right of communion admit them to drink the cup of the Lord. Wheras the canonists do restraine that decree of Gelasius to the priests, that is so childish a cauil that it needs not to be confuted.

The custome of ministring the cup to the people not abrogated as long as there continued any drop of pureneſſe in the church.

De consec. dist. 2. cap. comper. Ser. 5. de lap.

50 Thirdly, why did he simply say of the bred, that they should eat: but of the cup, that they shoulde all drinke? euen as if hee had meant of set purpose to meete with the craft of Satan. Fourthly, if (as they would haue it) the Lord vouchsafed to admit to his supper onely sacrificing priestes, what man euer durst cal to the partaking of it, strangers whom the Lord had excluded? yea and to be partaking of that gift, the power whereof was not in their handes, without any commandement of him which only could giue it) Yea vpon confidence of what warrant do they vse at this day to distribute to the common people the signe of the body of Christ, if they haue neither comcommandement nor example of the Lorde? Fiſtly, did Paul lye, whē he ſaid to the Corinthians, that he had receiued of the Lord that which he had deliuered to them? For afterwarde he declareth the thing that he deliuered, that all without difference ſhould communicate of both the ſignes. If Paul receiued of the Lord, that all ſhould be admitted without difference: let thē looke of whom they haue receiued which doe driue away almoſt all the people of God: becauſe they can not nowe pretende God to be the author of it, with whom there is not yea and nay. And yet ſtil for cloking of ſuch abhominations they darę pretend the name of the Church, and with ſuch pretence defend it. As though either theſe Antichriſts where the church, which ſo eaſily tread vnderfoote, ſcatter abroad, and deſtroy the doctrine and inſtitution of Chriſt: or the Apoſtolike Church were not the churhe, in which the whole force of religion floriſhed.

The xviii. Chapter.

Of the Popish Maſſe, by vvhich ſacriledge the Supper of Chriſt hath not onelie bin prophaned, but alſo brought to nought.

The ſacrifice of the maſſe being held to be a ſacrifice propitiatorie is nothing but a meare prophanation of the ſupper of the Lorde.

WIth theſe and like inuentions Satan hath trauailed, as by ouerſpreading of darkenes to obſcure and defile the holy ſupper of Chriſt, that atleaſt the purenes of it ſhould not be kept ſtill in the Church. But the heade of horrible abhomination was when hee aduanced a ſigne, by which it might not only be darkened and peruerted, but being vtterly blotted and aboliſhed ſhould vaniſh and fall out of the remembrannce of men: namelie whē he blinded almoſt the whole world with a moſt peſtilent error that they ſhould beleeue that the Maſſe is a ſacrifice and oblation to obtain the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Howe at the beginning the ſounder ſorte of the ſchoolemen tooke this doctrine, I nothing regard: farewell they with their crabbed ſuttleties: which howſoeuer they may be defended with cauilling, yet are therefore to be refuſed of all good men, becauſe they doe nothing elſe but ſpreade much darkeneſſe ouer the brightneſſe of the ſupper. Therefore bidding them farewell, let the readers vnderſtande that I heere match in fight with that opinion, wherewith the Romiſhe Antichriſte and his prophetes haue infected the whole worlde, namely that the maſſe is a worke whereby the ſacrificing Prieſt which offereth vp Chriſt, and the other that do partake at the ſame oblation, do deſerue the fauour of GOD: or that it is a cleanſing ſacrifice, whereby they reconcile GOD to themſelues. Neither hath this beene receiued only in common opinion of the people, but the verie doing it ſelfe is ſo framed, that it is a kinde of pacifying wherewith ſatisfaction is made to GOD for the purging of the quicke and dead. The wordes alſo which they vſe, doe expreſſe the ſame: and no other thing may we gather of the daily vſe of it. I knowe howe deepe rootes this peſtilence hath taken, vnder howe great ſeeming of goodnes it lurketh, howe it beareth in ſhewe the name of Chriſte, howe in the one name of Maſſe many beleeue that they comprehend the whole ſumme of faith. But when it ſhalbe by the worde of God moſt cleerely prooued, that this Maſſe, how much ſoeuer it bee coloured & glorious, yet ſhamefully diſhonoureth Chriſt, burieth & oppreſſeth his croſſe, putteth his death in forgetfulnes, taketh away the fruite ỹ commeth thereof vnto vs, doth weaken and deſtroy the ſacrament wherein was left the memorie of his death: ſhall there then be any ſo deepe roots, which this moſt ſtrong axe, I mean the word of god, ſhall not cut downe & ouerthrowe? Is there any face ſo beautifull, that this light cannot bewray the euill which lurketh vnder it?

Chriſt diſhonored by the ſacrifice of the maſſe.

2 Let vs therfore ſhew that which hath bene ſet in the firſt place, that in it is intolerable blaſphemy & diſhonor done to Chriſt. For he was conſecrate of his Father a Prieſt & biſhop, not for a time as wee reade that they were ordeined in the old teſtament, whoſe life being mortal their prieſthod alſo could not be immortall: for which cauſe alſo there needed ſucceſſors ỹ ſhould from time to time be put in the place of them that died. But in place of Chriſt, which is immortal, ther nedeth no vicar to be ſet after him. Therfore he was ordeined of the father a prieſt for euer, according to the order of Melchiſedech, that he ſhoulde execute an euerlaſting prieſthood. This myſterie had bene long before figured in Melchizedech, whome when the Scripture had once brought in for the prieſt of the liuing god, it neuer afterward made mention of him, as though he had had no ende of his life. After this point of likeneſſe, Chriſt was called a prieſt according to his order. Nowe they that doe dailie ſacrifice, muſt needes appoint prieſts to make ỹ oblations whome they muſt appoint as it were ſucceſſors and vicars in the ſteede of Chriſt. By which putting in ſteede of him, they doe not onelie ſpoyle Chriſt of his honour, and plucke from him the prerogatiue of eternal prieſthood, but alſo trauaile to thruſt him downe from the right hande of his Father, on which he cannot ſit immortall, but that he muſt therewithall remaine the eternall prieſt. Neither let them lay for thẽſelues that their petie ſacrificers are not put in place of Chriſt as if he were dead, but onelie are helpers of his eternal prieſthood, which ceaſſeth not therefore to continue. For they are more ſtrongly holden faſt with the wordes of the Apoſtle, than that they may ſo eſcape: namelie, that there were many other prieſts made, becauſe they were by death letted to continue. Therefore there is but one that is not letted by death, & he needeth no companions. Yet, ſuch is their frowardneſſe, they arme them ſelues with the example of Melchiſedech to defende their wickedneſſe. For, becauſe it is ſaide that he offred breade and wine, they gather that he was a foreſhewing of their Maſſe: as though the likeneſſe betweene him and Chriſt were in the offering of bread and wine. Which is ſo emptie and trifling that it needeth no confutation. Melchiſedech gaue bread and wine to Abraham and his companions, to refreſh them being wearie after their iourney and battaile. What is this to a ſacrifice? Moſes praiſeth the gentleneſſe of the holy king: theſe fellowes vnſeaſonably coyne a myſtery whereof no mention is made. Yet they deceitfullie point their error with an other colour, becauſe it followeth by and by after, And he was ỹ prieſt of the higheſt God. I anſwere, that they wrõgfully draw to the bread & wine that which the apoſtle referreth to the bleſſing. Therfore when hee was the prieſt of God he bleſſed Abraham. Whereupon the ſame Apoſtle (than whom we neede to ſeeke no better expoſitor) gathereth his his excellēcie, becauſe the leſſer is bleſſed of the greater. But if the oblation of Melchiſedec were a figure of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe, would the Apoſtle, I pray you, which ſearcheth out all euen the leaſt things, haue forgotten ſo earneſt and weightie a thing? Nowe (howſoeuer they triſle) they ſhall in vaine goe about to ouerthrowe the reaſon which the Apoſtle himſelfe bringeth, that the right and honour of ſacrificing prieſthoode ceaſſeth among mortall men, becauſe Chriſt which is immortall, is the onely and perpetuall ſacrificing prieſt.

The croſſe of Chriſt thereby buried and oppreſſed

Heb. 9. 12

3 An other vertue of the Maſſe was, that it oppreſſeth and burieth the croſſe and paſſion of Chriſt. This verily is moſt certaine, that the croſſe of Chriſt is ouerthrowen ſo ſoone as the altar is ſet vp. For if he offered himſelf for a ſacrifice vpon the croſſe, that he might ſanctifie vs for euer, and purchaſe to vs eternall redemption: vndoubtedly the force and effectualneſſe of that ſacrifice cōtinueth without any end. Otherwiſe we ſhould thinke nothing more honourably of Chriſt, than of oxen and calues which were ſacrificed vnder the law: the offeringes whereof are proued vneffectual & weake by this that they were oft renued. Wherefore either we muſt confeſſe, that the ſacrifice of Chriſt, which he fulfilled vpon the croſſe, wanted the force of eternall cleanſing, or that Chriſt hath made an ende of al with one ſacrifice once for euer. This is it that the Apoſtle ſayeth, that this chiefe biſhop Chriſt once appeared by offring vp of himſelfe before the ending of the worlde, to the driuing away of ſinne. Againe, That we are ſanctified by the will of God, by the offring of the bodie of Ieſus Chriſt once. Againe, That Chriſt with one oblation for euer hath made perfect them that are ſanctified: whereunto he adioyneth a notable ſentence, that forgiuenes of ſinnes being once purchaſed, there remaineth no more any oblation. This alſo Chriſt ſignified by his laſt ſaying and vttered among his laſt gaſpings, when he ſaid, it is ended. We are wont to note the laſt ſayings of men when they are dying, for oracles. Chriſt dying teſtifieth that by his own ſacrifice is perfited & fulfilled whatſoeuer was for our ſaluatiō. Shal it be lawful for vs daily to pach innumerable ſacrifices to ſuch a ſacrifice, (the perfection whereof he hath ſo ſhiningly ſet forth) as though it were vnperfect? When the holy word of God not onely affirmeth, but alſo crieth out, and proteſteth, that this ſacrifice was once fully done that the force thereof remaineth euerlaſting: who ſo require an other ſacrifice, do they not accuſe this of imperfection and weakeneſſe? But as for the Maſſe, which hath beene deliuered in ſuch ſort that there may euery day be made a hundred thouſand ſacrifices, to what end tendeth it, but that the paſſion of Chriſt wherby he offered him an only ſacrificed oblation to the father, ſhould ly buried & drowned? Who, vnleſſe he be blind, cannot ſee that it was the boldnes of Satan, which wraſtled againſt ſo open and cleare trueth? Neither am I ignoraunt with what deceits that Father of lying vſeth to colour this his fraud, ſaying that there are not ſundrie nor diuers ſacrifices, but that one ſelfe ſame ſacrifice is repeted. But ſuch ſmokes are eaſily blowen awaye. For in the whole diſcourſe the Apoſtle trauaileth to proue: not only ỳ there are no other ſacrifices, but ỳ that one ſacrifice was once offred vp, & ſhal no more be repeated. The ſutteller men do yet ſlip out at a narrower hole, ſaying, that it is not a repeting but

Heb. 9. 26. and 10. 10.

Ioh. 19. 19.

but an appliyng. But this Sophisticall argument also is no lesse easilie confuted. For neither did Christ once offer vp himselfe with this condition: that his sacrifice should be daily cõfirmed with new oblations: but ẏ by the preaching of the Gospel, & ministring of the holy Supper, the fruit therof should be communicated vnto vs. So Paul saith that Christ our passeouer was offred vp, & biddeth vs to eate of him. This (I say) is the meane whereby the Sacrifice of the Crosse is rightly applied to vs, when it is communicated to vs to take the vse of it, & we with true faith receiue it. 1. Cor. 5. 7

4 But it is worth the labour to heare, with what other foundation beside these they vphold the sacrifice of the Masse. For they drawe to this purpose the prophecie of Malachie, whereby the Lord promiseth that the time shall come when throughout the whole world there shalbe offered to his name incense and a cleane sacrifice. As though it were a newe or vnwonted thing among the prophets, when they speake of the calling of the Gentiles to expresse by the outward ceremonie of the lawe the spirituall worshipping of God, to which they exhort them, that they might the more familiarlye declare to the men of their age, that the Gentils should be called into the true felowship of religion. Like as also they are wont altogether to describe by figures of their law, the trueth that was deliuered by the Gospel. So they set for turning to the Lord, ascending into Ierusalem: for the worshipping of God, the offering of al kinds of gifts: for larger knowledge of him which was to be giuen to the faithful in the kingdom of Christ, dreames & visions. That therefore which they alleage, is like vnto an other prophecie of Esay, where the Prophet foretelleth of three altars to be set vp in Assyria, Egypt, and Iury. For first I aske, whether they doe not graunt that the fulfilling of this prophecie is in the kingdome of Christ. Secondly, where be these altars, or when they were euer set vp. Thirdely whether they thinke that to euery seuerall kingdome is appointed a seueral Temple, suche as was that at Ierusalem. These things if they weigh, I thinke they wil cõfesse, that the Prophet vnder figures agreable with his time, prophecieth of the spiritual worship of God to be spread abroad into the whole world. Which we giue to thẽ for a solution. But of this thing sith there doe euerie where examples commonly offer themselues, I will not busie my selfe in longer rehearsal of them. Howbeit herein also they are miserably deceiued, that they acknowledge no sacrifice but of the Masse, whereas in deede the faithfull do now sacrifice to the Lord, & do offer a cleane offering, of which shalbe spoken by and by. The vweake supporters of the Masse. Mal. 1. 8 Ioel. 2, 28 Esay. 19. 21 and with an other death confirme this testament, or rather with infinite deathes confirme innumerable testaments of Masses. Haue I not therefore said true at the beginning, that the only and true death of Christ is blotted out by Masses? Yea what shall we say of this that the Masse directly tendeth to this end, that if it be possible, Christ should be slaine againe? For where is a testament (saith the Apostle) there of necessitie must be the death of the testator. The Masse sheweth it selfe to be a newe testament of Christ: therefore it requireth his death. Moreouer the hoste which is offred, must necessarily be slaine and sacrificed. If Christ in euery seuerall Masse be sacrificed, then hee must at euery moment bee in a thousande places cruelly slaine. This is not mine, but the Apostles argument, If he had needed to offer himselfe oft, he must oft haue died since the beginning of the worlde. I knowe that they haue an aunswere in readinesse, whereby also they charge vs with slander. For they say that that is obiected against them which they neuer thought, nor yet can. And wee knowe, that the death and life of Christ is not in their hand. We looke not whether they goe about to kill him: onely our purpose is to shewe, what manner of absurditie followeth of their vngodly and wicked doctrine. Which selfe thing I proove by the Apostles owne mouth. Though they crie out to the contrarie a hundred times, that this sacrifice is vnbloudie: I will denie that it hangeth vpon the will of men, that sacrifices should change their nature, for by this meane the holy & inuiolable ordinance of God should faile. Whereupon followeth that this is a sure principle of the Apostle, that there is required shedding of blood, that washing may not be wanting.

5 Nowe I come downe to the third office of the Masse, where I must declare howe it blotteth out the true and onelie death of Christ, and shaketh it out of the remembrance of men. For as among men the strength of a Testament hangeth vppon the death of the testator: so also our Lorde hath with his death confirmed the testament whereby hee hath giuen vs forgiuenesse of sinnes and eternall righteousnesse. They that dare varie or make newe any thing in this testament, doe denie his death, and holde it as it were of no force. But what is the masse, but a newe and altogether diuerse testament? For why? Doeth not euerie seueral Masse promise newe forgiuenesse of sinnes, newe purchasing of righteousnesse: so that nowe there bee so many testamentes, as there be Masses? Let Christ therefore come againe, and By the sacrifice of the Masse, the memorie of the death of Christ blotted out.

Heb. 9. 16.

The death of Christ made vnfruitful by the sacrifice of the Masse

6 Now is the fourth office of the Masse to be entreated of, namely to take away from vs the fruite that came to vs of the death of Christ, while it maketh vs not to acknowledge it and thinke vpon it. For who can call to minde that he is redeemed by the death of Christ when he seeth a newe redemption in the Masse? Who can trust that sinnes are forgiuen him, when he seeth a newe forgiuenesse? Neither shall he escape that shall say, that we do for no other cause obtein forgiuenesse of sinnes in the Masse, but because it is alreadie purchased by the death of Christ. For he bringeth nothing else than as if he should boste, that Christ hath redeemed vs with this condition that we should redeeme our selues. For such doctrine hath beene spread by the ministers of Satan, & such at this day they maintaine with cryings out with sworde and fire, that we when in the Masse we offer vp Christ to his Father, by this worke of offring do obteine forgiuenesse of sinnes, & are made partakers of the passion of Christ. What nowe remaineth to the passion of Christ, but to be an example of redemptiō, whereby we may learne to be our owne redeemers? Christ himselfe, when in the Supper he sealeth the confidence of pardon, doth not bid his disciples to sticke in that doing, but sendeth them away to the sacrifice of his death: signifying that the Supper is a moniment or memorial (as the cōmon speach is) whereby they may learne that the satisfactorie clensing sacrifice, by which ỹ Father was to be appeased, must haue bene offred but once. For neither is it enough to knowe that Christ is the onely sacrifice, vnlesse the onely sacrificing be ioyned with it, that our faith may be fastened to his crosse.

7 Now

7 Now I come to the conclusion, namely that the holy Supper, in which the Lord had left the remembrance of his passion grauen and expressed, is by the setting vp of the Masse, taken away, defaced, and destroyed. For the Supper it self is the gift of God, which was to be receiued with thanksgiuing. The sacrifice of the Masse is fained to pay a price to God, which he may receiue for satisfaction How much difference there is betweene to giue and to receiue, so much doth the sacrifice differ from the Sacrament of the Supper. And this truely is the most wretched vnthankefulnesse of man, that where the largesse of Gods bountie ought to haue bene acknowledged, and thanks to be giuen therein he maketh God his dettor. The Sacrament promised, that by the death of Christ we are not onely once restored into life, but are continually quickned, because then all the partes of our saluation were fulfilled. The sacrifice of the Masse singeth a farre other song, that Christ must be daily sacrificed, that he may somwhat profit vs. The Supper should haue beene distributed in the common assemblie of the Church, that it might enforme vs of the communion whereby we al cleaue together in Christ Iesus. The sacrifice of the Masse dissolueth and plucketh in sunder this communitie. For after that the errour grewe in force, that there must be sacrificers that shoulde sacrifice for the people, the Supper of the Lorde as though it were posted ouer to them, ceased to bee communicated to the congregation of the faithfull according to the commaundement of the Lorde. An entrie was made open to priuate Masses, which might rather resemble a certaine excommunication, than that same communitie ordained of the Lord, when ỹ perie sacrificer willing seuerally by himselfe to deuour his sacrifice, doth seuer himselfe from the whole people of the faithfull. I cal priuat Masse (least any man be deceiued) whereſoeuer there is no partaking of the Lords Supper among the faithful, although otherwise a great multitude of men be present.

The Sacrament of that holy Supper thereby defaced & destroyed.

8 And whēce the verie name of Masse first sprong, I could neuer certeinly iudge: sauing that it seemeth to me likely that it was taken of the offrings that were giuen. Whereupon the olde writers vse it commonly in the plurall number. But to leaue striuing about the name, I say that priuate Masses are directly against the ordinance of Christ, and therfore they are a wicked prophaning of the holy Supper. For what hath the Lorde commaunded vs? not to take, and diuide it among vs? What manner of obseruing of the commaundement doth Paul teach? not the breaking of bread, which is the communion of the body & bloud? Therfore when one taketh it without distributing, what likenesse is there? But that same one man doth it in ỹ name of the whole church. By what commandement? Is not this openly to mock god, when one man priuatly taketh to himself that which ought not to haue bene done but among many? But becaufe the wordes of Christ and Paul are plain enough, we may breefly conclude, that whereſoeuer is not breaking of bread to the cōmunion of the faithful, there is not ỹ supper of the Lord, but a false and wrongfull counterfaiting of the supper. But a false counterfaiting is a corrupting. Nowe the corrupting of so great a mysterie is not without wickednes. Therefore in priuate masses is a wicked abuse. And (as one fault in religion from time to time breedeth another) after that that manner of offring offring without communion was once crept in, by litle and litle they began in euerie corner of churches to make innumerable Masses, and diuerſly to drawe the people hither and thither, which ſhould haue come together into one aſſembly, that they might reknowledge the myſterie of their owne vnitie. Now let them goe and denie it to be idolatrie, that in their Masses they ſhew forth bread to be worſhipped in ſteede of Chriſt. For in vaine they boſt of thoſe promiſes of the preſence of Chriſt, which howſoeuer they be vnderſtoode, verily were not giuen to this purpoſe, that wicked & prophane men ſo ofr as they will: and to whatſoeuer abuſe they liſt, may make the bodye of Chriſt: but that the faithfull, when with religious obſeruation they doe in celebrating of the Supper follow the commaundement of Chriſt, may enioy the true partaking of him.

No commaundement in ſcripture to vvarrant Maſſing Sacrificers.

9 Beſide that, this peruerſnes was vnknowen to the purer churche. For howſoeuer the more ſhameles ſort among our aduerſaries do here go about to diſguiſe the matter with falſe colours, yet it is moſt ſure that all antiquitie is againſt them, as wee haue afore prooued in other thinges, and it may more certainly be iudged by the continuall reading of old writers. But ere I make an ende of ſpeaking of it, I aske our Maſſing doctors, ſith they knowe that obedience is more eſteemed of God than oblations, and that he more requireth that his voyce be harkened to, than that ſacrifices bee offered: howe they beleeue that this manner of ſacrificing is acceptable to GOD, whereof they haue no certaine commaundement, and which they ſee not to be allowed by any one ſyllable of the Scripture. Moreouer when they heare the Apoſtle ſay, that no man taketh to himſelfe the name & honor of ſacrificing prieſthood, but he that is called as Aaron was: yea & that Chriſt himſelfe did not thruſt in himſelfe, but obeyed the calling of his Father: either they muſt bring forth God the author & ordeiner of their ſacrificing prieſthoode, or they muſt confeſſe that the honour is not of GOD, into which they haue with wicked raſhnes broke in vncalled. But they can not ſhewe one title of a letter ỹ maintaineth their ſacrificing prieſthood. Why therfore ſhal not their ſacrifices vaniſh away which can not be offred without a prieſt?

1.Sam.16.22.

Such Sacrifice neuer allowed by old vvriters as the Church of Rome hath deuiſed in the maſſe.

10 If any man do thruſt in ſhort ſentences of the olde writers gathered here & there, and do by their authoritie trauaile to proue that the ſacrifice which is done in the ſupper is farre otherwiſe to be vnderſtanded than wee doe expounde it: let him be brieflie anſwered thus: if the queſtion be of allowing the forged deuiſe of ſacrifice, ſuch as the Papiſtes haue fained in the Maſſe, the olde writers doe neuer ſpeake in defence of ſuch ſacrilege. They do in deede vſe the word Sacrifice: but therewithall they expounde, that they meane nothing elſe but the remembrance of that true and only ſacrifice, which Chriſt our onely ſacrificing prieſt (as they ech where reporte of him) made on the croſſe. The Hebrues (ſaith Auguſtine) in the ſacrifices of beaſtes which they offered to GOD, did celebrate a prophecie of the ſacrifice to come, which Chriſt offred: the Chriſtians doe with the holy oblation and partaking of the body of Chriſte celebrate a remembraunce of the ſacrifice already made. Heere verilie hee teacheth altogether the ſame thing, which is written in mo wordes in the booke of faith to Peter the deacon, whoſoeuer be the author of it. faſtly & doubt not at al, that the only begotté himſelfe, being made fleſh for vs, offered himſelfe for vs a ſacrifice and oblation to God into a ſauour of ſweeteneſſe: to whome with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt in the time of ỹ olde teſtament beaſtes were ſacrificed: and to whome now with the father and the holy Ghoſt (with whome hee hath one godhead) the holy Church throughout the whole world ceaſſeth not to offer the ſacrifice of bread and wine. For in thoſe fleſhly ſacrifices was a figuring of the fleſh of Chriſt which he ſhoulde offer for our ſinnes, and of his bloode which hee ſhoulde ſhed to the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. But in this ſacrifice is thankeſgiuing and rehearſal of the fleſh of Chriſt which he offred for vs, & of his blood which ỹ ſame he hath ſhed for vs. Whereupon Auguſtine himſelfe in many places expoundeth it to be nothing elſe but a ſacrifice of praiſe. Finally you call commonly find in him, ỹ the ſupper of the Lord is for no other reaſon called a ſacrifice, but becauſe it is the remembrance, image, and witnes of that ſingular, true, and onely ſacrifice wherewith Chriſt hath cleanſed vs. Alſo there is a notable place in his fourth booke of the Trinitie the xxiiii. Chapter where after that he hath diſcourſed of the onely ſacrifice he thus concludeth: becauſe in a ſacrifice fower things are conſidered, to whom it is offered, and of whō, what is offered, and for whome. The ſame he himſelfe the one and true mediator reconciling vs to God by the ſacrifice of peace, remaineth one with him to whome he offered: maketh them one in him for whom he offered: is one himſelfe which offered, and the thing which he offered. To the ſame effect alſo ſpeaketh Chryſoſtome. But they ſo chalenge the honour of ſacrificing prieſthoode to Chriſt, that Auguſtine teſtifieth it to be the voice of Antichriſt if any man make a Biſhope interceſſor betweene God and men.

Lib. 1. cont. parm. cap. 8.

11 Yet doe wee not denie but that the offering vp of Chriſt is there ſo ſhewed in vs, that the ſpectacle of the croſſe is in a maner ſet before our eies: as the Apoſtle ſaith that Chriſt was crucified in the eyes of the Galathians, when the preaching of the croſſe was ſet before them. But foraſmuch as I ſee ỹ thoſe old Fathers alſo wreſted this remēbrance an other way than was agreable with the inſtitution of the Lord (becauſe their ſupper conteined I wote not what repeated or at leaſt renewed forme of ſacrificing) the ſafeſt way for godly hearts ſhalbe to reſt in the pure & ſimple ordinance of God: whoſe alſo the ſupper is therefore called, becauſe in it his authoritie alone ought to be in force. Truely ſith I find that they haue kept a godly and true ſenſe of this whole myſterie, and I do not perceiue that they meant to abate any thing were it neuer ſo litle from the onely ſacrifice of the Lord, I cannot condemne them of vngodlineſſe: yet I thinke ỹ they cannot be excuſed, but ỹ they haue offended ſomewhat in the maner of the celebratiō. For they coūterfaited the Iewiſh maner of ſacrificing more nerely thā either Chriſt had ordeined, or the nature of the Goſpel did beare, Therefore that ſame ouerthwart appliance to heauenly things is the onely thing wherein a man may worthily blame them, for that being not contēted with the ſimple & natural inſtitution of Chriſt, they ſwarued to the ſhadowes of the law.

Chriſt after a ſort offred becauſe his offring as it were painted out by this myſterie: in celebration whereof the fathers not ſimplie to bee allowed, though not to be condemned of vngodlines neither.

Gal. 3. 1.

12 If a man doe diligently wey, that this difference is put by the worde of the Lord betweene the ſacrifices of Moſes, and our Thankeſgiuing, that whereas thoſe did repreſent to the Iewiſh people, the ſame effectualneſſe of the dearh of Christ, which is at this day deliuered to vs in the ſupper, yet the maner of repreſentiug was diuerſe. For in thoſe, the Leuiticall prieſts were commaunded to figure that which Chriſt ſhoulde performe it: there was brought a ſacrifice which ſhould be in the ſteed of Chriſt himſelf: there was an altar whereupon it ſhould be offered: Finally all things were ſo done, ỹ there was ſet before their eies an image of ỹ ſacrifice which was to be offred to God for a ſatisfactorie cleanſing. But ſince the time ỹ the ſacrifice is ended the Lorde hath appointed to vs another order: namely that it ſhould conuey to the faithfull people the fruit of the ſacrifice offered to him by the ſonne. Therefore he hath giuen vs a table whereat wee ſhoulde eate, not an altar whereupon ſacrifice ſhould be offered: hee hath not conſecrated prieſtes to ſacrifice, but miniſters to diſtribute the holy banket. Howe much more hie and holy the myſterie is, ſo much more religiouſly & with greater reuerence it is meete to be handled. Therefore there is no way ſafer, than putting away all boldneſſe of mans vnderſtanding, to ſticke faſt in that alone which the Scripture teacheth. And truely if wee conſider that it is the Supper of the Lorde and not of men, there is no cauſe why we ſhould ſuffer our ſelues to be remooued one heire breadth from it by any authoritie of men or preſcription of yeares. Therefore when the Apoſtle minded to cleanſe it from all faultes which had alreadie crept into the Church of the Corinthians, hee vſeth the readieſt way thereunto, that is, he calleth it backe to the onely inſtitution of it, from whence he ſheweth that a perpetuall rule ought to be fetched.

1. Cor. 11. 20.

The name of ſacrifice, two kinds thereof in the Law, in the Goſpell two other thereunto anſwerable

13 Nowe leaſt any wrangler, ſhoulde ſtirre vs vp ſtrife by reaſon of the names of ſacrifice and ſacrificing prieſt, I will alſo declare, but yet breefely what in the whole diſcourſe I haue meant by a ſacrifice, and what by a ſacrificing prieſt. Whoſo ſtretche the worde ſacrifice to all holy Ceremonies and doinges of religion, I ſee not by what reaſon they doe it. We doe knowe that by the continuall vſe of ỹ ſcripture a ſacrifice is called that which the Greekes call ſomtime Thuſia, ſometime Proſphora, ſomtime Telete. Which being generally taken comprehendeth whatſoeuer is in any wiſe offered to God. Wherfore we muſt make diſtinction: but yet ſo that this diſtinctiō may haue a ſupernall appliance of ſimilitude from the ſacrifices of the lawe of Moſes: vnder the ſhadowes whereof the Lorde willed to repreſent to his people the whole trueth of ſacrifices. Of thoſe although there were diuerſe formes, yet they may all be referred to two ſortes. For either there was oblation made for ſinne after a certayne manner of ſatisfaction, whereby guiltineſſe was redeemed before God: or it was a ſigne of the worſhipping of God, and a teſtifying of religion: ſometime in ſteede of ſupplication, to craue the fauour of God: ſometime inſteede of thankeſgiuing, to teſtifie thankfulneſſe of minde for benefites receiued: ſometime onely for an exerciſe of godlineſſe, to renewe the ſtabliſhing of the couenaunt: to which latter ſort pertained burnt offringes, drinke offeringes, oblations, firſt fruites, and peace offerings Wherefore let vs alſo diuide ours into two kindes: and for teachinges ſake let vs call the one the ſacrifice of worſhip and of Godly deuotion, becauſe it conſiſteth in the honouring and worſhipping of GOD, which the faithfull both owe and yelde vnto him: or, if you will, the ſacrifice of Thankesgiuing: forasmuch as it is giuen to God of none but of them that being loden with immeasurable benefits, do render to him themselues with all their doings. The other may bee called propitiatorie or of expiation. The sacrifice of expiation is that which tendeth to appease the wrath of God, to satisfie his iudgement, and so to wash and wipe away sinnes: whereby the sinner cleansed from the filthy spots of them, & restored into purity of righteousnesse, may returne into fauour with God himselfe. So in the lawe those were called sacrifices that were offered for the purging of sins: not for that they were sufficiēt to recouer the fauor of God, or to put away iniquitie: but for that they shadowed out such a true sacrifice which at lēgth was fully done by Christ alone: and by him alone, because it could be done by none other: & once, because the effectualnes and force of that one sacrifice which Christ hath fully done, is eternall, as he himselfe hath testified w̄ his owne mouth, when he said that it was ended and fulfilled: that is to say, that whatsoeuer was necessarie to the reconciling of the fathers fauor, to y̆ obtaining of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, to righteousnesse and to saluation, all the same was perfourmed and fulfilled with that his onely oblation, and there so nothing wanted thereof, that there was afterward no place left to any other sacrifice.

Exod. 29. 39

Iohn 19. 30

14 Wherefore I determine, that it is a most wicked reproch, & blasphemy not to be suffred, as wel against Christ as against the sacrifice which he hath fully done by his death vpon the crosse for vs, if any man by renewing an oblation thinke to purchase the pardon of sinnes, to appease God, and to obteine righteousnesse. But what is elsse done by Massing, but that by deserving of new oblatiō we may be made partakers of the passion of Christ. And that ther might be no measure of madding, they thought it but a smal thing to say that there is made indifferently a common sacrifice for the whole Church, vnlesse they further said that it is in their choyse to apply it peculiarly to this man or that man to whome they would, or rather to euery one whosoeuer he were that woulde buy for himselfe such ware with ready mony. Now because they coulde not reach to the price that Iudas had, yet that they might in some marke resemble their author, they kept the likenesse of number. Iudas solde him for thirtie siluer pence: these fellowes sell him, after the french account, for thirtie brasen pence: but Iudas solde him once, these fellowes sell him as oft as they can finde a buier. In this sense also wee deny that they be sacrificing priestes, that is to say, they that with such an oblation are meanes to God for the people, they that appeasing God, may purchase the satisfactorie purging of sinnes. For Christe is the onely byshop & sacrificing priest of the new Testament, into whome all Priesthodes are remoued, and in whome they be shut vp & ended. And if the Scripture had made no mention of the eternall priesthoode of Christe: yet forasmuch as God, since that he hath taken away those olde priesthoodes, hath ordained none, the apostles argument remaineth inuincible, that no man taketh honor to himselfe but he that is called of God. By what affiance therfore dare these robbers of God, that boast themselues for the butchers of Christe, call themselues the sacrificing Priestes of the liuing God?

In the sacrifice of the masse Christ blasphemed and sold, the sacrificer himselfe not authorised.

The common price of a masse in France is 3 karolus, which make 20. deniers, about the value of a sterling groate.

Heb. 5. 4

The very practise of the church of Rome in their masse and the grosenes thereof condemned euen by Plato himself.

15 Plato hath an excellent place in his second booke of commom weale.

Where when he entreateth of the old manners of expiation, & laugheth to scorne the foolish confidence of euil men and wicked doers, which thought that their wicked doings were by these as by coueringes hidden that the Gods could not see them, and did, as if they had gotten warrant of the gods by couenant, more carelesly follow their own lusts: he seemeth throughly to touch the manner of satisfactory purging of the Masse, such as is at this day in the world. To beguile & vndermine an other man, all men knowe to be vnlawfull. To grieue widowes with wrongfull dealinges, to robbe the Fatherlesse, to trouble the poore, by euill crafty meanes to catch other mens goods to themselues, with forswerings and deceits to enter forceably into any mans possessions, to oppresse any man with violence & tyrannous fear, all men confesse to be wicked. How therefore dare so many commonly doe all these thinges, as though they should freely be bolde to do them? Truely, if we rightly weigh it, no other cause doeth so much encourage them, but because they haue confidence, that by the sacrifice of a Masse, as by payment of ful price for recompence, they shall satisfie God, or at the least that this is an easie way to compound with him. Then Plato proceedeth further to scorne their grosse blockishnesse, which thinke that by such satisfactorie cleansinges thole paines are redeemed that otherwise they shoulde suffer in hell. And whereto serue at this day the yeerely obites, and the greater part of Masses, but that they which throughout all their life haue bene most cruell tyrants, or most rauenous robbers, or giuen foorth to all mischieuous doings, should as though they were redeemed by this price, escape the fire of purgatory?

The sacrifice of praise and thankesgiuing.

16 Vnder the other kind of sacrifice, which we haue called the sacrifice of Thankesgiuing, are conteined all the dutifull workes of charitie, which when we extend to our brethren, we honour the Lord himselfe in his members: then, all our prayers, praisings, giuinges of thankes, and what soeuer we do to the worshipping of God. Al which things finally do hang vpon the greater sacrifice, whereby we are in soul and body halowed to be a holy tẽple to the Lorde. For neither is it enough, if our outward doinges bee applied to the obeying of him: but first our selues, and then all that is ours ought to be consecrat and dedicate to him: that whatsoeuer is in vs, may serue his glory, and may sauour of zelous endeuour to aduance it. This kind of sacrifice tẽdeth nothing at al to appease the wrath of God, nothing at al to obteine forgiuenesse of sinnes, nothing at all to deserue righteousnesse: but is occupied only in magnifying & extolling of God. For it cannot be pleasant and acceptable to God, but at their handes, whom by forgiuenesse of sinnes already receiued he hath by other meanes reconciled to himself, and therfore acquited them from guiltinesse. But it is so necessarie for the church, that it can not be away from it. Therefore it shall be euerlasting, so long as the people of God shal continue, as we haue before already shewed out of the prophet: for in that meaning I will take this prophecie, For from the rising of the sunne to the going downe thereof, great is my name among the Gentiles, and in euerie place incense shalbe offred to my name, and a clean offring: because my name is terrible among the Gentiles, sayth the Lord: so far is it off, that we would put it away. So Paul biddeth vs to offer our bodies a ſacrifice liuing, holy, acceptable to God, a reaſonable worſhip. Where hee ſpake verie pithilie, when he added that this is our reaſonable worſhipping: for he meant the ſpirituall manner of worſhipping of God, which he did ſecretly ſet in compariſon againſt the carnall ſacrifices of the lawe of Moſes. So liberall doing of good and communicating are called ſacrifices by which God is pleaſed. So the liberalitie of the Philippians, whereby they had relieued the pouertie of Paul, is called a ſacrifice of ſweete ſmelling. So all the good workes of the faithfull are called ſpirituall ſacrifices. Heb.13.16. Phil.4.18.

Prayer and other good duties termed Sacrifices by the Prophets, and Chriſtians in reſpect thereof Prieſts.

17 And why doe I ſeeke out many examples? For commonly this manner of ſpeaking is often found in the ſcriptures. Yea and while the people of God was yet holden vnder the outward ſchooling of the lawe, yet the Prophets did ſufficiently expreſſe, that vnder thoſe carnall ſacrifices was the trueth, which the Chriſtian Church hath common with the nation of the Iewes. After which manner Dauid prayed, that his praier might as incenſe aſcende into the ſight of God. And Oſee called giuing of thankes, the calues of lips, which in another place Dauid calleth the ſacrifices of praiſe. Whom the Apoſtle himſelfe following, calleth them alſo the ſacrifices of prayſe, & expoundeth them the fruites of lippes confeſſing to his name. This kind of ſacrifice the Supper of the Lord cannot want: wherein when we declare his death and render thankeſgiuing, wee doe nothing but offer the ſacrifice of prayſe. Of this office of ſacrificing, all wee Chriſtians are called a kingly Prieſthoode: becauſe by Chriſt we offer to God that ſacrifice of prayſe of which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, the fruite of lippes that confeſſe to his name. For neither doe we with our giftes appeare in the ſight of God without an interceſſor. Chriſt is he, which being the mediator comming betweene, we offer vs and ours to the Father. Hee is our Biſhoppe, which being entred into the ſanctuarie of heauen, hath opened the entrie to vs. He is the altar, vpon which wee lay our giftes, that in him wee may bee bolde all that wee are bolde. It is hee (I ſay) that hath made vs a kingdome and Prieſts to the Father. Pſal.141.2. Oſee.14.3. Pſa.51.21. Hebr.13.15. 1.Pet.2.9.

Maſſe a graund deceiuer of the vvorld.

18 What remaineth, but that the blinde may ſee, the deafe may heare, children themſelues may vnderſtande this abhomination of the Maſſe? which being offered in a golden cup, hath made dronke the kings and peoples of the earth, from the hieſt to the loweſt, hath ſo ſtricken them with drowſineſſe and giddineſſe, that being become more ſenſeleſſe than bruite beaſts, they haue ſet ỹ whole ſhip of their ſafetie only in this deadly deuouring gulfe. Truely Satan neuer did bend himſelf with a ſtronger engine than this to aſſaile and vanquiſh the kingdome of Chriſt. This is the Helene, for whom the enemies of the trueth fight at this day with ſo great rage, ſo great furiouſneſſe, ſo great cruelᵗie: and a Helene in deede, with whome they ſo defile themſelues with ſpirituall whoredome, which is the moſt curſed of al. I doe not here ſo much as once touch with my lingle finger thoſe groſſe abuſes wherewith they might colour the vnholy pureneſſe of their holy Maſſe: howe filthie markettings they vſe, how vnhoneſt gaines they make with their maſſings, with how great rauening they fill their couetouſneſſe. deserued in certain ages past to be so honorable & to be had in so great reuerence. For, to haue these so great mysteries set out according to their worthinesse, requireth a greater worke: & I am vnwilling to mingle herewith those filthie vncleannesses that commonly shewe themselues before the eyes and faces of all men, that all men may vnderstand, that the Masse taken in her most piked pureneſſe, and wherwith it may be set out to the best shew, without her appendances, from the roote to the toppe swarmeth full of all kinde of wickednes, blasphemie, idolatrie, and sacriledge.

No sacrament in the Church but onely Baptisme & the Lordes supper.

19 The readers nowe haue in a maner almost all those thinges gathered into an abridgement, which we haue thought behoueful to bee knowen concerning these two Sacramentes: the vse of which hath beene deliuered to the Christian Church from the beginning of the newe testament, to continue to the verie ende of the worlde: namely, that Baptisme shoulde be as it were a certaine entrie into it, and an admission into faith: and the supper should be as it were a continual foode, wherewith Christ spiritually feedeth the familie of his faithful. Wherefore as there is but one God, one faith, one Christ, one Church his bodie: so there is but one Baptisme, and is not oft ministred againe. But the supper is from time to time distributed, that they which haue beene once receiued into the Church, may vnderstande yᵗ they be continually fed with Christ. Beside these two as there is no other sacrament ordeined of God, so neither ought the Church of the faithfull to acknowledge any other. For that, it is not a thing that lieth in the choise of mã to raise and set vp newe sacraments, he shal easily vnderstande that remembreth that which hath beene here before plainely inough declared, that is, that sacramentes are appointed of God to this end, that they should instruct vs of some promise of his, and testifie to vs his good will toward vs: and he also that calleth to minde, that none hath bin Gods counseller, that might promise vs any certaintie of his will, or assure vs, and bring vs out of care, what affection he beareth toward vs, what he will giue, or what he will deny vs. For therewith is also determined, that no man can set forth a signe to be a testimonie of any will or promise of his: it is he himself alone, that can by a signe giuen testifie to vs of himself. I will speake it more briefely, and paraduenture more grosly, but more plainely, A Sacrament can neuer be without promise of saluation. All men gathered on a heape together can of themselues promise nothing of our saluation. Therefore neither can they of thẽ selues set foorth or set vp a sacrament.

Esa. 40 13. Rom. 11. 34.

The diuers sacraments of the Iewes and our different case frõ theirs.

20 Therefore let the Christian Church be contented with these two, and let her not onely not admit or acknowledge any thirde for the present time, but also not desire or looke for any to the end of the world. For whereas certaine diuerse sacramentes, beside those their ordinarie ones, were giuen to the Iewes according to the diuerse course of times, as Manna, Water springing out of the rocke, the brasen serpent and such other: they were by this change put in minde that they should not stay vppon such figures whose state was not verie stedfast: but that they should looke for some better thing from God, which should continue without any decaying, & without any end. But we are in a farre other case, to whome Christ is openly shewed: in whome all the treasures of knowledge and wisedome are hidden with so great abundance and plenty, that either to hope for or looke for any new encrease to these treasures, is verily to moue God to wrath, and to prouoke him against vs. Wee must hunger for, seeke, looke vpon, learne, and throughly learne Christ alone, vntill that great day shall appeare, wherein the Lord shall openly shewe to the full the glorie of his kingdome, and himselfe such as he is, to be beholden of vs. And for this reason this our age is in the Scriptures signified by the last houre, the last dayes, the last times, that no man should deceiue himselfe with vaine looking for any new doctrine or reuelation. For many times & in many sorts he spake before of his prophets in these last dayes the heauenly Father hath spoken in his beloued Sonne, which onely can manifestly shew the Father: and in deede he hath manifestly shewed him to the full, so much as behoueth vs, while we now behold him by a glasse. As therefore this is now taken away from men, that they cannot make newe Sacraments in the Church of God: so it were to be wished, that as little as were possible of mans inuentiō might be mingled with those sacramentes that are of God. For like as when water is powred in, the wine departeth and is delayed: and as with leauen scattered among it, the whole lump of doae waxeth sower: so the pureneſſe of the mysteries of god is nothing else but defiled when man addeth any thing of his owne. And yet we see how farre the sacraments are swarued out of kinde from their naturall pureneſſe, as they be handled at this day. There is eehwhere too much of pompes, ceremonies, and gesturings: but of the worde of God in ỹ meantime there is neither any consideration or mention, without which euen the sacraments themselues are not sacraments. Yea and the very ceremonies that are ordeined of God, in so great a rout cannot once lift vp their head, but lie as it were oppressed. How litle is that seene in baptisme, which onely ought there to haue shined and beene looked vpon, as we haue in an other place rightfully complained, euen baptisme it selfe? As for the supper, it is vtterly buried, since that it hath bene turned into the masse, sauing that it is seene once euery yeare but in a mangled and halfe torne fashion.

The xix. Chapter.

Of the fiue falsely named Sacramentes: where is declared, that the other fiue which haue beene hitherto commonlie taken for sacraments, are not Sacramentes: and then is shewed what manner of thinges they bee.

OVr former discourse concerning Sacraments might haue obtained this with the sober and willing to learne, that they shoulde not ouer curiously proceede any further, nor should without the worde of God embrace any other Sacraments beside those two which they knewe to bee ordeined of the Lord. But forasmuch as that opinion of the seuen sacramentes, beeing commonly vsed in all mens talke, hauing wandred through al schooles and preachinges, hath by verie auncientie gathered rootes, and is yet still settled in the mindes of men: I thought that I shoulde do a thing worth the trauell, if I should seuerally and more neerely search those other fiue that are commonly adnumbred among the true and naturall Sacraments of the

A sacrament defined to be a visible signe of inuisible grace, & this applied in the Schoole of Rome to fiue other besides those two before handled.

Lord,& wiping away all deceitfull colour, ſhould ſet them forth to be ſeene of the ſimple ſuch as they be,and how falſely they haue bene hitherto take for ſacramentes. Firſt,I here proteſt to all the godly, that I doe not take in hand this contention about the name for any deſiring of ſtriuing,but that I am by weightie cauſes led to fight againſt the abuſe of it. I am not ignorant that Chriſtians are Lords,as of words,ſo of al thinges alſo,& therefore may at their will apply wordes to thinges,ſo that a godly ſenſe be kept,although there be ſome vnproperneſſe in the ſpeaking. All this I graunt: although it were better that the wordes ſhould be made ſubiect to thinges, than things to the wordes. But in the name of Sacrament there is another conſideration. For they which make ſeuen Sacraments,do therewithall giue to them all this definition,that they be viſible formes of inuiſible grace: they make them altogether veſſels of the holy ghoſt: inſtruments of giuing of righteouſneſſe,cauſes of the obtaining of grace. Yea and the maſter of the ſentences himſelfe denyeth that the ſacraments of the law of Moſes are properly called by this name,becauſe they did not deliuer in deede the thing that they figured. Is it,I beſeech you,to be ſuffered,that thoſe ſignes which the Lord hath hallowed with his owne mouth, which hee hath garniſhed with excellent promiſes,ſhould not bee accounted for Sacramentes: and in the meane time this honour ſhoulde bee conueyed away to thoſe vſages which men either haue deuiſed of themſelues,or at leaſt do obſerue without expreſſe commandement of God? Therefore either let them change the definition,or let them abſtain from the wrongful vſing of this word,which doth afterward engender falſe opinions & full of abſurdirie. Extreme annointing (ſay they) is a figure and cauſe of inuiſible grace, becauſe it is a Sacrament, If we ought in no wiſe to graunt that which they gather vpon it,then truely we muſt reſiſt them in the name it ſelfe,leaſt therby we admit that it may giue occaſion to ſuch an errour. Againe when they woulde proue it to be a Sacrament,they adde this cauſe,for that it conſiſteth of the outwarde ſigne and the word. If we finde neither commaundement nor promiſe of it, what can we do elſe but cry out againſt them?

In no mans power but in Gods alone to inſtitute ſacramentes.

2 Now appeareth that we brawle not about the worde,but do mooue a controuerſie not ſuperfluous concerning the thing it ſelfe. Therefore this we muſt ſtrongly holde faſt, which we haue with inuincible reaſon before confirmed,that the power to inſtitute a ſacrament is in the hande of none but of God only. For a ſacrament ought with a certaine promiſe to raiſe vp & comfort the conſciences of the faithful: which coulde neuer receiue this certainty from man. A ſacrament ought to be to vs a witneſſing of the good will of God toward vs,whereof none of all men or Angels can be witnes,for aſmuch as none hath bene of Gods counſel. Therfore it is he alone which doth with right authoritie teſtify of himſelfe to vs by his word. A ſacrament is a ſeale,wherewith the teſtament or promiſe of God is ſealed. But it could not be ſealed with bodily things and elements of this world,vnleſſe they be by the power of God framed and appointed thereunto. Therefore man can not ordaine a Sacrament,becauſe this is not in the power of man, to make that ſo great myſteries of God ſhould lye hidden vnder ſo baſe things. The word of God muſt goe before,which may make a ſacrament to be a Sacrament, as Augustine verie well teacheth. Moreouer it is profitable that there be kept some difference betweene the Sacramentes and other ceremonies, vn'esse wee will fall into many absurdities The Apostles prayed kneeling: therefore men shall not kneele without a Sacrament. It is saide that the disciples prayed toward the East: therefore the looking into the East shalbe a Sacrament. Paul willeth men in euery place to lift vp pure handes, and it is rehearsed that holy men oftentimes prayed with their hands lifted vp, then let the lifting vp of hands also be made a Sacrament. Finally let al ỹ gestures of the holy ones turne into Sacraments. Howebeit I would not also much passe vpon these thinges, if so that they were not ioyned with those other greater discommodities.

Actes 19.40. and 10.3.6.

1. Tim. 2.8.

3 If they will presse vs with the authoritie of the old Church, I say that they pretend a false colour. For this number of seuen is no where founde among the Ecclesiasticall writers: neither is it certaine at what time it first crept in. I graunt in deede that sometime they be very free in vsing ỹ name of a sacrament: but what meane they thereby? euen all ceremonies & outwarde rites, and all exercises of Godlinesse. But when they speake of those signes that ought to be witnesses of the grace of God toward vs, they are contented with these two, Baptisme, & the Supper. Least any man shoulde thinke that I falsly boast of this, I wil here rehearse a few testimonies of Augustine. To Ianuarius he saith, First I would haue thee to holde fast that which is the chiefe point of this disputation, that our Lord Christ (as he himselfe saith in the Gospel) hath made vs subiect to a light yoke and a light burden. Wherefore he hath bound together the fellowship of the newe people with Sacraments very few in number, verie easie in obseruing, very excellent in signification. As are Baptisme hallowed in the name of the Trinitie, and the Communicating of the body & blood of the Lorde, & whatsoeuer else it set forth in the Canonical Scriptures. Again, in his book of Christian doctrine, Since the Lords resurrection, the Lord himself & the doctrine of the Apostles hath deliuered certaine fewe signes in steede of many, and those most easie to be done, most reuerend in vnderstanding, most pure in obseruing: as is Baptisme, and the celebrating of the body and blood of the Lorde. Why doth he here make no mention of the holy number, that is, of the number of seuen? Is it likely that hee woulde haue passed it ouer, if it had beene at that time ordeined in ỹ Church, specially sith he is otherwise in obseruing of numbers more curious than neede were? Yea, when he nameth Baptisme and the Supper, and speaketh nothing of the rest: doeth hee not sufficiently signifie, that these two mysteries do excell in singular dignitie, and that the other ceremonies doe rest beneath in a lower degree? Wherefore I say that these Sacramentarie Doctors are destitute not onely of the worde of the Lorde, but also of the consent of the olde Church, howe much soeuer they glorie of this pretence. But now let vs come down to the special things themselues.

Although the worde Sacrament be in the fathers largely applied, yet S. Augustine speaking of those principall mysteries which Christ hath left vnto his Church, doth mention onelie baptisme and the celebrating of the body and blood of Christ.

Epist. 118.

Lib. 3. cap. 9.

Of Confirmation

The cause and maner of ancient Confirmation, with the opinions of Leo & Jerome concerning it.

4 This was the maner in olde time, that the children of Christians, whē they were growen to age of discretion should be brought before the bishop: that they shoulde fulfill that duetie which was required of those that beeing growen growen in yeares did offer themselues to baptisme. For these sate among those that were to be catechised, til being fully instructed in the mysteries of the faith, they could make a confession of their faith before the bishop and the people. Therefore they that were baptised being infantes, because they had not then made confession of their faith before the church, were about the ende of their childhood or in the beginning of their yeeres of discretion presented againe by their parents, and were examined of the Bishop according to the forme of the Chrechisme, which they had the certaine & common. And that this doing, which otherwise ought worthilie to be graue and holy, might haue the more reuerence and dignitie, there was added also the Ceremonie of laying on of handes. So that same childe, his faith being allowed, was let goe with solemne blessing. The olde writers doe oft make

Epi. 39. mention of this maner. Leo the Pope writeth: If any returne from Heretikes, let him not be baptised againe: but (which hee wanted among the Heretikes) let the vertue of the Spirite be giuen him by the Bishops laying on of his handes. Here our aduersaries will crie out, that it is rightfully called a Sacrament, in wich the holy Ghost is giuen, but Leo himselfe doeth in an
Epi. 77. other place declare what he meaneth by those wordes: Who so (sayth hee) is baptised among heretikes, let him not be rebaptised, but with calling vpon the holy Ghost, let him be confirmed with laying on of handes: becauſe hee receiued onelie the forme of baptisme without sanctifying. Hierome also maketh mention of it, writing against the Luciferians. But although I doe not deny that Hierome somewhat erreth therein, for that hee sayeth that it is an obseruation of the Apostles: yet he is most farre from these mens follies and the verie same also he qualifieth, when he addeth, that this blessing is giuen to the bishops only, rather in honor of their priesthood than by the necessitie of lawe. Therefore such laying on of handes, which is done simply in steede of blessing, I praise and would that it were at this day restored to the pure vse thereof.

For confirmation as at this day they vse it in the Church of Rome their is in the vvord of God no vvarrant.

5 But the later age hauing in a manner blotted out the thing it selfe, hath set I wote not what fained confirmation for a Sacrament of God. They haue fained that the vertue of confirmation is, to giue the holy Ghost to the encrease of Grace, which in baptisme was giuen to innocencie: to strengthen them to battaile, which in baptisme were newe begotten to life. This Confirmation is celebrate with annoynting, and with his forme of wordes, I signe thee with the signe of the holy crosse, and confirme thee with the chresme of saluation, in the name of the Father, and of the sonne, and of the holy Ghost. All this is gaily and trimly done. But where is the word of God, that may promise here the presence of the holy Ghost? They cannot bring foort one title. Whereby then will they certifie vs, that their chresme is the vessel of the holy Ghost? We see oyle, that is a thicke and fat liquor & nothing else. Let the word (sayth Augustine) bee added to the element, and there shalbe made a sacrament. Let them (I say) bring foorth this worde, if they will haue vs in the oyle to loooke vpon any thing but the oyle. If they did acknowledge themselues ministers of the Sacramentes, as they ought, we needed to striue no longer. This is the first lawe of a minister, that he do nothing without commaundement. Go to, let them bring foorth any comcommaundement of this point of miniſtery, & I will not ſpeake one worde more. If they haue no commaundement, they cannot excuſe their boldnes full of ſacriledge. After this manner the Lord asked the phariſees, whether the baptiſme of John were from heauen or from men: if they had anſwered, from men, then he had made them confeſſe that it was triflling and vaine: if from heauen, then were they compelled to acknowledge the doctrine of John. Therefore leaſt they ſhoulde too much ſlaunder John, they durſt not confeſſe that it was from men. If therefore Confirmation be from men, it is proued to be vaine and trifling: if they will perſwade vs that it is from heauen, let them prooue it. Math. 21. 25

Impoſition of handes, vſed by the Apoſtles, no preſident for popiſh confirmatiõ.

6 They do in deede defend themſelues with the example of the Apoſtles, whome they thinke to haue done nothing raſhly. That is well in deed: neither would we blame them, if they ſhewed themſelues followers of the Apoſtles. But what did the Apoſtles? Luke reporteth in the Actes, that the Apoſtles which were at Hieruſalem, when they heard that Samaria had receiued the word of God, ſent thither Peter & John: they prayed for the Samaritans, that they might receiue the holy ghoſt, which was not yet come into any of them, but they were baptiſed onely in the name of Ieſus: when they had prayed, they laid their hands vpon them: by which laying on, the Samaritans receiued the holy Ghoſt. And of this laying on of hands he diuers times maketh mention. I heare what the Apoſtles did: that is, they faithfully executed their miniſterie. The Lord willed that thoſe viſible and wonderfull graces of the holy ghoſt, which hee then poured out vppon his people, ſhould be miniſtred and diſtributed of his Apoſtles by the laying on of hands. But vnder this laying on of handes: I thinke there was not contained anie higher myſterie: but I expound it, that they adioined ſuch a ceremonie, that by the verie outward doing they might ſignify, that they cõmended & as it were offered to God him vpon whom they laide their hãds. If this miniſterie which ỹ Apoſtles then executed, were yet ſtill remaining in the Church, the laying on of hands alſo ought to be kept. But ſince that ſame grace hath ceaſſed to be giuen, whereto ſerueth the laying on of hãds? Truely the holie ghoſt is yet preſent with the people of God, without whom being guider & directer, the church of God cannot ſtand. For wee haue the eternal promiſe & which ſhal euer ſtand in force, by which Chriſt calleth to himſelfe them that thirſt, that they may drinke liuing waters. But thoſe miracles of powers, & manifeſt workings, which were diſtributed by the laying on of hands, haue ceaſſed, neither behooued it that they ſhould be but for a time. For it behooued that the preaching of the goſpell while it was newe, ſhould be glorioufly ſet forth and magnified, with vnheard of and vnwonted miracles. From which when the Lord ceaſſed, he did not by & by forſake his Church, but taught that the royaltie of his kingdome & the dignitie of his worde was excellently enough diſcloſed. In what point therefore will theſe ſtageplayers ſay that they folow the Apoſtles? They ſhoulde haue done it with laying on of handes, that the euidẽt power of the holy Ghoſt might by and by ſhew forth it ſelfe. This they bring not to paſſe: why therefore doe they boaſt that the laying on of hands maketh for them, which we reade in deede that the Apoſtles vſed, but altogither to an other ende? Actes 8. 21

Iohn 7. 37.

7 This

Ioh.20.22. 7 This hath like reaſon as if a man ſhould teach that the breathing wherewith the Lord breathed vpon his diſciples, is a ſacrament whereby the holy ghoſt is giuen. But wheras the Lord did this once, he did not alſo wil that we ſhould do the ſame. After the ſame maner alſo the Apoſtles laid on their hãds, during the time that it pleaſed the Lord that the viſible graces of the holy Ghoſt ſhould be diſtributed at their praiers: not that they which come after, ſhould only playerlike & without the thing in deede counterfaite an emptie & cold ſigne, as theſe apes do. But if they prooue that in laying on of hands they follow the Apoſtles, (wherein they haue no like thing with the apoſtles, ſauing I wote not what ouerthwart wrongfull counterfaiting) yet whence commeth their oyle which they call the oyle of ſaluation? Who taught them to ſeeke ſaluation in oyle? Who taught them to giue to it the power of ſtrenthening? Did Paul, which draweth vs farre away from the elements of this world, which condemneth nothing more than the ſticking to ſuch pety obſeruations? But this I boldly pronounce not of my ſelfe, but from the Lorde. Who ſo call oyle the oyle of ſaluation, they forſweare the ſaluation which is in Chriſt, they deny Chriſt, they haue no part in the kingdome of God. For oyle is for the belly, and the belly for oyle, the Lord ſhall deſtroy both. For all theſe weake elementes, which decay with very vſe, belong nothing to the kingdome of God, which is ſpirituall and ſhall neuer decay. What then? will ſome men ſay: doe you meaſure with the ſame meaſure, the water wherewith we be baptiſed, and the bread & wine vnder which the ſupper of the Lord is giuen? I anſwere that in ſacramentes giuen of God, two things are to be looked vnto: the ſubſtance of the bodily thing which is ſet before vs, and the forme that is by the word of God printed in it, wherein lyeth the whole ſtrength. In reſpect therefore that the breade, wine, and water that are in the Sacraments offered to our ſight, doe keepe their own ſubſtance, this ſaying of Paul alway hath place, Meate for the belly, and the belly for meates: God ſhall deſtroy them both. For they paſſe & vaniſh away with the faſhion of this worlde. But in reſpect that they be ſanctified by the word of God, that they may be Sacraments, they do not hold ys in the fleſh, but do truely aud ſpiritually teach vs.

Gal.4.9. Col.2.20

With derogation from baptiſme force giuen vnto confirmation which doth not belong vnto it.

8 But let vs yet more neerely looke into it, how many monſters this fat liquor foſtereth and feedeth. Theſe annointers ſay, that the holy Ghoſt is giuen in baptiſme, to innocence: in confimation, to encreaſe of grace: that in Baptiſme, we are newe begotten into life: in confirmation, we are prepared to battle. And they are ſo paſt ſhame, that they denie that baptiſme can well be done without confirmation. O wickedneſſe! Are we not therfore in baptiſme buried together with Chriſt, beeing made partakers of his death, that wee may bee alſo partners of his reſurrection? But this fellowſhippe with the death & life of Chriſt Paul expoundeth to be the mortifying of our fleſh, and quickning of our ſpirit: for that our old man is crucified, that wee may walke in newnes of life. What is to be armed to battell if this be not? If they counted it a matter of nothing, to tread vnder feete the word of God: why did they not yet at leaſt reuerence the church, to whõ they wil in euery point ſeeme ſo obedient? But what can be brought forth more ſtrong againſt their doctrine, than ỹ decree of the Mileuitane councel? Who ſo ſaith

that

that baptiſme is giuen only for forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, and not for a helpe of grace to come, accurſed be he. But whereas Luke, in the place which wee haue alleged, ſaith that they were baptiſed in ỹ name of Ieſus Chriſt, which had not receiued the holy Ghoſt: he doeth not ſimplie deny that they were endued with any gift of the holy Ghoſt, which beleeued in Christ with hart, and confeſſed him with mouth: but meaneth of that receiuing of the holy Ghoſt, whereby the open powers and viſible graces were receiued. So is it ſaide that the Apoſtles receiued the Spirit on the day of Pẽtecoſt, wheras it had bin long before ſaide vnto them of Chriſt, it is not you that ſpeake, but the Spirit of my Father which ſpeaketh in you. Behold all ye ỹ are of God, the malicious and poyſonous deceite of Sathan. That thing which was truly giuen in baptiſme, hee lyingly ſaith to be giuen in his confirmation, that he may by ſtealth leade you vnware from baptiſme. Who now can dout that this is the doctrine of Satan, which cutting away frõ baptiſme the promiſes properly belonging to baptiſme, doth conuey away and remoue them, to an other thing? It is found (I ſay) vpon what maner of foundatiõ this godly annointing ſtandeth. The word of God is, that all they which are baptiſed in Chriſt, haue put on Chriſt with his giftes. The word of the anointers is, that they receiued in baptiſme no promiſe, by which they may be armed in battails. That is the voyce of truth, therfore this muſt be ỹ voyce of lying. Therfore I can more truly define this confirmation than they haue hitherto definet it: namely, ỹ it is a notable ſlander of baptiſme, which darkeneth, yea aboliſheth the vſe therof: that it is a falſe promiſe of the deuill, which draweth vs away from the truth of God. Or, if you will, it is oyle defiled with the lying of the deuill, which as it were by ouerſpreading of darkeneſſe deceiueth the eyes of the ſimple.

Gal.3.27. De conſe.diſt. 5.cap.Sp.

9 They adde furthermore, that all the faithfull ought after baptiſme to receiue the holy Ghoſt by laying on of hands, that they may be founde full Chriſtians: becauſe he ſhal neuer be a Chriſtian, ỹ is not chreſmed with the biſhoppes Confirmation. Theſe be their owne ſayinges worde for worde. But I had thouht ỹ whatſoeuer thinges perteined to Chriſtianitie, were all ſet foorth in writing and comprehended in Scriptures. Now, as I perceiue, the true forme of religion is to be ſought and learned from elſe where than out of the Scriptures. Therefore the whole wiſedome of God, the heauenly trueth, the whole doctrine of Chriſt, doth but begin Chriſtians, and oyle maketh them perfect. By this ſentence are damned all the Apoſtles, and ſo many Martyrs, whome it is moſt certaine to haue neuer beene chreſmed: foraſmuch as the oyle was not yet made, which beeing poured vpon them, they might fulfil al ỹ parts of chriſtianity, or rather might be made Chriſtiãs which yet were none. But, though I holde my peace, they doe largely confute themſelues. For howe many of the number of their owne people do they anoint after baptiſme? why therefore doe they ſuffer ſuch halfe chriſtians in their flocke, whoſe imperfection might eaſily be holpen? Why doe they with ſo careleſſe negligence ſuffer thẽ to omit that which was not lawfull to bee omitted without greeuous offẽce? Why do they not more ſeuerely call vpon the keeping of a thing ſo neceſſarie, & without which ſaluation can not be obteined, vnles peraduẽture ſome be preuented by death? Verily when when they so freely suffer to bee despised, they secretly confesse that it is not of so great value as they boast it.

Confirmation preferred before baptisme in worthines, because that administred by a Bishop.

10 Last of all they determine that this holy anointing is to bee had in greater reuerence than baptisme: because this annointing is peculiarly ministred by the hands of the chiefe bishops, but baptisme is commonly distributed by euerie Priest. What may a man here say, but ỹ they are vtterly mad, which so flatter their owne inuentions, that in comparison of thē they carelesly despise the holy ordinances of God? O mouth that robbest God, darest thou set a fatte liquor only defiled with the stinke of thine own breath, and enchaunted with murmuring sound of words, against the Sacrament of Christ, and to compare it with water hallowed with the worde of God? But thy wickednes accounted this but a smal matter, vnles thou didst also prefer it aboue the same. These be the answeres of the holy sea, these be the Oracles of the Apostolike trestle. But some of them, euen in their owne opinion, begonne somewhat to qualifie this vnbridled madnesse. It is (say they) to be worshipped with greater reuerence: peraduēture not for the greater vertue and profit ỹ it giueth: but because it is giuen of the worthier men, & is made in the worthier part of the body, that is, in the forehead: or because it bringeth a greater encrease of vertues, althogh baptisme auaile more to forgiuenesse. But in the first reason do they not bewray themselues to be Donatists, which measure the force of the Sacrament by the worthines of the minister

Cap. de his vero, Dist. eadem.

But I will admitte, that Confirmation bee called the worthier by reason of the worthines of the Bishops hand. But if a man aske of them, from whence so great prerogatiue hath beene giuen to bishoppes, what reason will they bring beside their owne lust? The Apostles alone vsed that power, which alone distributed the holy Ghost. Are the bishoppes alone Apostles? Yea are they Apostles at all? But let vs also grant them that: why do they not by the same argument affirme, that bishoppes alone ought to touch the Sacrament of the blood in the Supper of the Lorde: which they therefore deny to lay men, because the Lord gaue to the Apostles alone? If to the Apostles alone, why do they not conclude: therfore to the bishops alone? But in that place they make the Apostles, simple priests: but now ỹ giddines of their head carieth them another way, suddenly to create them bishops. Finallie Ananias was no Apostle, to whō yet Paul was sent that he should receiue his sight, be baptised, and be filled with the holy Ghost. I will adde this also to the heape. If by the law of God this was the proper office of bishops, why haue they bin so bold to giue it away to common priests? as we read in a certaine epistle of Gregorie.

L.i.4 Senten: Dist.7.cap.2.

Act.19.17.

Dist.19.cap.Peruenit.

Confirmation the worthier because in it the former in baptisme the hinder part of the head annointed.

11 As for their other reason, how trifling, fonde, and fooliſh is it, to call their confirmatiō worthier than the baptisme of God, because in it the forehead is annointed with oyle, and in baptisme the hinder part of the head, as though baptisme were done with the oyle & not with the water? I cal all the godly to witnesse, whether those losels do not endeuour themselues to this onely ende, to corrupt the pureneſſe of the sacraments, with their leauen. I haue already spokē this in an other place, that in the Sacraments, ỹ which is of GOD, scarcely glimmereth through at holes, among the rout of the inuentions of men. If any man did not beleeue me therein, lette him nowe at least beleeue his owne maisters. Loe passing ouer the water, and making no accompt of it, they highly esteeme the onely oyle in baptisme. Wee therefore on the contrary side doe say, that in baptisme the foreheade also is dipped in water. In comparison of this, wee esteeme not your oyle worth one peece of dong, whether it be in baptisme or in confirmation. If any alleage that it is solde for more: by this adding of price, the goodnes (if any were in it) is corrupted: so much lesse may they commend a most filthie deceite by theft. In the third reason they bewray their owne vngodlines, while they prate that in confirmation is giuen a greater increase of vertues than in baptisme. By the laying on of handes the Apostles distributed the visible graces of the Spirite. In what thing do these mens fat liquor shewe it selfe fruiteful? But away with these qualifiers, that couer one sacrilege with manie sacrileges. It is like the Gordian: which it is better to breake in sunder, than to labour so much in vndoing it.

Confirmation not established by consent of antiquity & if it were yet not proued therby a sacrament.

12 But nowe when they see themselues destitute of the word of God & probable reason, they pretende as they are wont, that it is a most auncient obseruation and stablished by consent of many ages. Although ỳ were true, yet they win nothing thereby. A Sacrament is not from the earth, but from heauen: not from men, but from God alone. They must prooue God to be the author of their confirmation if they will haue it taken for a Sacrament. But why do they obiect antiquitie, wheras the old writers, when they mind to speake properly, do no where recken moe sacraments than two? If a foretresse of our faith were to be sought from mẽ, we haue an inuincible tower, that the old fathers neuer acknowledged those for sacraments which these men do lyingly faine to the sacraments. The old writers speak of the laying on of handes: but do they call it a sacrament? Augustine plainely affirmeth that it is no other thing than prayer. Neither let them here barke against me with their stinking distinctions, that Augustine meant that not of the laying on of hands vsed to confirmation, but which was vsed to healing or reconciliation. The booke remaineth and is abroad in the hands of men. If I wrest it to any other sense than Augustine himselfe wrote it, I giue them leaue after their ordinarie maner to oppresse me not onely with railing but also with spitting at me. For he speaketh of thẽ that returned from Schisme to the vnity of the Church. He denieth that they needed to be newly baptised: for he saith, that the laying on of hands sufficeth, that by the bonde of peace the Lord may giue them the holy Ghost. But for asmuch as it might seeme an absurditie, that the laying on of hands should be done of new rather than baptisme: he sheweth a difference. For (saith he) what other thing is the laying on of hands, than prayer vpon a man? And that this is his meaning appeareth by another place, where he saith: Hande is laide vpon heretikes amended, for the coupling of Charitie, which is the greatest gift of the Holy ghost, without which whatsoeuer holy thinges are in man they auaile not to saluation.

Liber. 2. de bap. contra Donat. cap. 16.

Lib. 5. cap. 23.

The auncient right, and profitable vse of true confirmation.

13 But I would to God we did keepe still the manner which I haue said to haue bin in the old time, before that this vntimely deliuered image of a sacramẽt was born: not that it should be such a confirmation as they fayne, which cannot once be named without iniury to baptisme: but a catechising, wherewherby children or they that were nere to the age of discretion did declare an accompt of their faith before the Church. But it should be the best maner of Catechising, if a forme were written to that vse, containing and familiarly setting out a summe in a manner of al the articles of our religion, in which the whol church of the faithful ought without controuersy to agree: that a childe being ten yeres old should offer himselfe to the Church to declare a confession of his faith, should be examined of euery article, and answere to euery one: if he were ignorant of any thing, or did not vnderstande it, he might be taught. So should he, before the Church witnessing and beholding it, professe the onely, true, and pure faith, wherewith the people of the faithful doth with one mind worship the one God. If this discipline were at this day in force, truely the slouthfulnesse of some parentes woulde bee whetted, who doe carelesly neglect the instruction of their children as a thing nothing belonging to them, which then without open shame they could not omit: there should be among Christian people a greater consent of faith, and not so great ignorance and rudenesse of many: some should not be so rashly carried away with new and strange doctrines: finally all should haue as it were a certaine orderlie instruction of Christian learning.

Of Penance.

The ancient laying on of handes by the bishop and cleargie after penance holie and healthfull for the Church.

14 In the next place they set Penance, of which they intreat so confusedly & disorderedly, that consciences cannot beare away no sure or sound thing of their doctrine. We haue already in another place declared at large what we haue learned out of the scriptures concerning repentance, & then what they also teach of it. Nowe we haue this onely to touch, what reason they had ỳ raised vp the opinion, which hath heretofore raigned in Churches and schooles, that it is a sacrament. But first I will briefly say somewhat of the vsage of the old Church, the pretence whereof they haue abused to stablish their fained inuention. This order they kept in publike penance, ỳ they which had fully done the satisfactions enioined them, were reconciled with solemne laying on of handes. That was the signe of absolution, whereby both the sinner himselfe was raised vp before God with trust of pardon, & the Church was admonished gently to receiue him into fauor, putting away the remembrance of his offence. This Cyprian oftentimes calleth, to giue peace. That this doing might be of great dignity, and haue more commendation among the people, it was ordeined that the bishops authority should alway be vsed for the mean herein. From hence came ỳ decree of the secõd councell at Carthage: Be it not lawful to a priest at the Masse publikely to reconcile a penitent. And another decree of the councel at Arausium, let those which in time of their penaunce depart out of this life, bee admitted to the Communion without the laying on of hands vsed in the reconciling: if they recouer of their sickenesse let them stande in the degree of penitentes, and when the time is fully expired, let them receiue of the byshop the laying on of hands vsed in reconciling. Againe the decree of the third councel at Carthage: Let nor the priest without the authority of the bishop, reconcile a penitent. Al these tended to this end, ỳ the seueritie which they would haue to be vsed in ỳ behalfe, should not with too much lenitie grow to decay. Therefore Epist. li. 1. cap. 2.

Cap. 33.

fore they willed the bishop to be iudge of it, which was likely ỳ he would be more circumspect in the examinatiō thereof. Howbeit Cyprian in a certaine place sheweth, that not only the bishop, but also the whole clergie laid their hands on him. For thus he saith. At the full time they do penance, then they come to the Communion, and by the laying on of hands of the bishop & the clergie they receiue power to partake of the communion. Afterward by processe of time it came to this point, that beside publike penance they vsed this ceremonie also in priuate absolutions. Hereupon came that distinction in Gratian betweene publike and priuate reconciliation. I iudge that same old vsage of which Cyprian maketh mention, to haue bin holy and healthful for the Church, and I would that it were at this day restored. As for this latter, although I dare not disallowe it, or at least speake more sharpely against it, yet I thinke it to be lesse necessarie. Howsoeuer it be, yet we see that the laying on of hands in penāce is a ceremonie ordeined of mē, not of God, which is to be set among meane things & outward exercises: & those verily which are not to be despised, but which ought to be in a lower degree than those ỳ are commended vnto vs by the worde of the Lorde.

Decret. 26. quæst. 6.

15 But the Romanistes and the schoolemen, (which haue an ordinarie custome to corrupt all things with wrong expounding them) doe here very carefully trauell in finding out a sacrament. Neither ought it to seeme any maruell, for they seeke a knot in a rushe. But where they haue it best, they leaue a thing entangled in suspense, vncertaine, and confounded and troubled with diuersitie of opinions. They say therefore either that the outwarde penance is a sacrament, and if it be so, that it ought to bee taken for a signe of the inwarde penance, that is, of the contrition of hearte, which shalbe the thing of the Sacrament: or that they both together are a Sacrament, not two Sacraments, but one ful one. But, that the outward penance is onely the sacrament: the inwarde is both the thing and the Sacrament: & that the forgiuenesse of sinnes is the thing and not the Sacrament. Let them which keepe in remembrance the definitioe of a Sacrament which we haue aboue set, examine thereby that which these men call a Sacrament, & they shall finde that it is not an outwarde ceremonie ordeined of the Lorde for the confirming of our faith. If they cauill that my definition is not a lawe which they neede to obey: let them heare Augustine, whom they faine that they esteeme as most holy. Visible Sacramentes (saith hee) were ordeined for carnall mens sakes, that by degrees of sacraments they may be conueied from those thinges that are seene with eyes to those things that are vnderstanded. What like thing doe either they themselues see, or can they shewe to other in that which they call the Sacrament of Penance? The same Augustine saith in an other place: It is therefore called a Sacrament, because in it one thing is seene, and an other thing is vnderstanded. That which is seene hath a bodily forme, that which is vnderstanded, hath a spirituall fruite. Neither doe these things in any wise agree with the Sacrament of penance such as they faine it, where there is no bodily forme that may represent a spirituall fruit.

Absolution after penance though not a sacrament yet rather a sacrament than penance it selfe.

16 And, to kill these beastes vpon their owne fighting place, if there be any sacramēt here to be sought, may it not be much more colourablie said ỳ the the absolution of the priest is a sacrament, than penance either inwarde or outwarde? for it might readily be said, that it is a ceremony to assure our faith of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, and hath a promise of the keies as they call it, Whatsoeuer ye shall binde or loose vpon earth, shall bee bound or looſed in heauen. But some man would haue obiected, that the most part of them ỳ are absolued of the Priests obteine no such thing by such absolution where as by their doctrine the Sacramentes of the new law ought to worke indeed ỳ which they figure. This were but to be laughed at. For, as in ỳ supper, they make a double eating, a Sacramentall eating which is egallie common to good and to euill, and a spirituall eating which is onelie proper to the good: why might they not also faine ỳ absolution is receiued two waies? Yet could I not hitherto vnderstand what they meant with this their doctrine, which we haue alreadie tauhgt how farre it disagreeth from the trueth of God, whē we purposely intreated of that argument. Here my mind is onelie to shewe, that this doubt withstandeth not, but that they may call the absolution of ỳ priest a Sacrament. For they might aunswere by the mouth of Augustine ỳ sanctification is without the visible Sacramēt, & the visible sacrament without inward sanctification. Againe, that the sacramentes doe worke in the onelie elect that which they figure. Againe, that some do put on Christ so far as to the partaking of the Sacrament, other some to sanctification: the one, the good and euill egally doe: this other the good onely. Truely they haue more than childishly erred and be blinded in the cleare sunne, which trauelling with great hardnesse, yet espied not a thing so plaine and open to euery man.

Lib. 3. quæ vet. Testamen. De bap. par. Liber 5. de bap. contr. Donat.

Reasons why penance can be no sacrament.

17 Yet least they should waxe too proude, in what part soeuer they set the sacrament, I denie that it ought rightfullly to be taken for a Sacrament. First, becausse there is no speciall promise to it, which is the onely substance of a Sacrament. Againe, becausse whatsoeuer ceremonie is here shewed foorth, it is the meere inuention of men: whereas we haue alreadie proued ỳ the ceremonies of Sacraments cannot be ordeined but of God. Therefore it was a lie and deceite which they haue inuented of the Sacrament of penance. This fained sacrament they haue garnished with a meete commendation, calling it a second boord after shipwrecke, becausse if a man haue by sinning marred ỳ garment of innocence which he receiued in baptisme, hee may by penance repaire it. But it is the saying of Hierom. Whose soeuer it be, it cannot be excused but ỳ it is vtterly wicked if it be expounded after their meaning. As though baptisme be blotted out by sinne, & is not rather tobe called to remembrance of euerie sinner, so oft as he thinketh of the forgiuenesse of sinne, that he may therby gather vp himselfe, and recouer courage, and strenthen his faith, that he shall obteine the forgiuenesse of sins which is promised him in baptisme. But that which Hierome hath spoken hardly and vnproperly, that by penance baptisme is repaired (from which they fal away that deserue to be excōmunicate from the Church) these good expositours draw to their wickednesse. Therefore you shall most fitly speake, if you call baptisme the sacrament of penance, sith it is giuen for a confirmation of grace, and seale of confidence, to them that purpose repentance. And least you should thinke this to be our deuise, beside this ỳ it agreeth with the the wordes of the ſcripture, it appearth that it was in the old Church commonlie ſpoken like a moſt certain principle. For in the booke of Faith to Peter, which is ſaide to be Auguſtines, it is called the ſacrament of Faith and of penaunce. And why flee we to vncertain ſayings? As though wee coulde require anie thing more plaine, than that which the Euangeliſt reciteth: that Iohn preached the baptiſme of repentance vnto forgiueneſſe of ſinnes? Decret. 15. quæ. 1. cap. firmiſſime. Marke 1. 4. Luke 3. 3.

Of extreame vnction as they call it.

18 The third fained Sacrament is extreme vnction, which is not done but of the prieſt, and ỹ in extremes (ſo they terme it) & with oyle conſecrate of the biſhop, & with this forme: By this holy anointing, & by his moſt kinde mercie, God pardon thee whatſoeuer thou haſt offended by ſeeing, by hearing, by ſmelling, feeling, taſting. They faine ỹ there be two vertues of it, the forgiuenes of ſinnes, & eaſe of bodily ſicknes if it be ſo expedient: if not, the ſaluation of the ſoul. They ſay that the inſtitution of it is ſet of Iames, whoſe wordes are theſe: Is any ſicke among you? Let him bring in the Elders of the church, and let them pray ouer him, annointing him with oyle in ỹ name of the Lord: & the praier of faith ſhall ſaue the ſicke man, and the Lorde ſhall raiſe him vp: and if he be in ſinnes, they ſhalbe forgiuẽ him. Of the ſame ſort is this annointing, of which we haue aboue ſhewed that the other laying on of handes is, namely a playerlike hypocriſie, whereby without reaſon and without fruit they would reſemble the apoſtles. Marke rehearſeth ỹ the apoſtles at their firſt ſending, according to the commaundement which they haue receiued of the Lorde, raiſed vp dead men, caſt out diuels, cleanſed leprous men, healed the ſick, and ỹ in healing of the ſick they vſed oyle. They annointed (ſaith he) many ſick men with oyle, and they were healed. Hereunto Iames had reſpect, when hee commaunded the Elders to be called together to annoint the ſick man. That vnder ſuch Ceremonies is contained no higher myſtery, they ſhal eaſilie iudge which mark how great liberty the Lord and his Apoſtles vſed in theſe outward things. The Lorde going about to reſtore ſight to the binde man, made cley of duſt and ſpitle, ſome he healed with touching, otherſome with his word. After the ſame maner the apoſtles healed ſome diſeaſes with ỹ word only, ſome with touching, other ſome with annointing. But it is likely ỹ this annointing was not (as al other things alſo were not) cauſeleſly put in vre, I grant: yet not that it ſhould be a mean of healing, but onely a ſigne, that the dulnes of the vnskilful might be put in minde from whence ſo great power proceeded, to this end that they ſhould not giue the praiſe thereof to the apoſtles. And that the holy ghoſt and his gifts are ſignified by oyle it is a common & vſual thing. But that ſame grace of healings is vaniſhed away, like as alſo the other miracles, which the Lord willed to be ſhewed for a time, whereby hee might make the new preaching of the goſpel maruellous for euer. Therefore though wee graunt neuer ſo much, that annointing was a ſacrament of thoſe powers which were then miniſtred by the hands of the Apoſtles, it now nothing pertaineth to vs to whom the miniſtration of ſuch powers is not committed.

19 And by what greater reaſon do they make a ſacrament of this annoin- Iohn 9. 7.

Act. 20. 10. ting, than of all other signes that are rehearsed to vs in the Scripture? Why doe they not appoint some Syroah to swim in, wherein to at certain ordinarie recourses of times sick mē may plunge thēselues? That (say they) should be done in vaine. Truely no more in vaine than annointing. Why doe they not lie along vpon dead men, because Paul raised vp a dead child with lying vpon him? Why is not clay made of spittle & dust, a Sacrament? But the other were but singular examples: but this is giuen of Iames for a commandement. Verily Iames spake for the same time, when the Church yet stil enioied such blessing of God. They affirme in deed that there is yet stil the same force in their annointing: but we finde it otherwise by experience. Let no man now maruell how they haue with such boldnes mocked soules, which they know to be senselesse and blinde when they are spoiled of the worde of God, that is, of their life & light: sith they are nothing ashamed to go about to mocke the liuing and feeling senses of the body. Therefore they make themselues worthy to bee scorned, while they boast that they are endued with the grace of healinges. The Lord verily is present with his in all ages, & so oft as neede is he helpeth their sicknesses no lesse than in old time: but he doth not so vtter those manifest powers, nor distributeth miracles by the handes of the Apostles: because this gift both was but for a time, and also is partly fallen away by the vnthankfulnesse of men.

Extreame annointing hath neither ordinance of God to be grounded on nor promise of grace annexed.
Math. 3. 16
Iohn. 1. 32.

20 Therefore as not without cause the Apostles haue by the signe of oyle openly testified, that the grace of healings cōmitted to them was not their own power, but the power of the holy ghost: so on the other side they are wrongdoers to the holy ghost, which make a stincking oyle and of no force, to be his power. This is altogether like as if one would say that a oile is the power of the holy ghoste, because it is called by that name in Scripture: that euery doue is the holy ghost, because he appeared in that forme. But these thinges, let them looke to. So much as for this present is enough for vs, we do most certainly perceiue that their annointing is no sacramēt: which is neither a Ceremonie ordained of God, nor hath any promise. For when we require these two thinges in a sacrament, that it be a ceremonie ordeined of God, and that it haue a promise of God: we do therwithall require that the same ceremonie be giuen to vs, and that the promise belong vnto vs. For no man doth affirme that Circumcision is now a Sacrament of the Christian Church, although it both was an ordinance of God, and had a promise knitte vnto it: because it was neither commaunded to vs, nor the promise which was adioyned to it was giuen to vs with the same condition. That the promise which they proudlie boast of in their annointing, is not giuen to vs, we haue euidently shewed, and they themselues declare by experience. The Ceremonie ought not to haue beene vsed, but of them that were endued with the grace of healinges, not of these butchers that can more skill of slaying and murthering than of healing.

If S. Iames did command annointing as at ing to continue in the Church, yet not annointing at such vnseasonable time, by such person, vvith such oile, in such persvvasion, as the Church of Rome vseth.
Iam. 5. 14.

21 Howbeit although they obteine this, that that which Iames commaundeth concerning annointing, agreeth with this age (which they are most farre from) yet euen so they shall not haue much preuailed in proning of their vnction wherewith they haue hitherto annointed vs. Iames willeth that all sicke men be annointed: these men infect with their fatte liquor,

not

not ſicke men,but corpſes halfe dead,when the life lieth already laboring at the toppe of their lippes,or (as they themſelues tearme it) in extremes. If they haue in their Sacrament a preſent medicine, whereby they may either eaſe the ſharpeneſſe of diſeaſes,or at leaſt may bring ſome comfort to the ſoule,they are too cruell that doe neuer heale in time. Iames willeth that the ſicke man be annointed of the Elders of the Church:theſe men allowe no annointer but the petie ſacrificing Prieſt.Wheras they expound in Iames preſbyteros the Elders to bee Prieſtes, and fondly ſay that the plurall number is there ſet for comelineſſe ſake: that is but trifling: as though the Churches at that time abounded with ſwarmes of ſacrificing Prieſts,ỹ they might goe in a long pompous ſhew to carrie a pageante of holy oyle.When Iames ſimplie biddeth ỹ ſicke men be annointed,I vnderſtand by it none other annointing but of common oyle:and none other is found in Markes rehearſall.Theſe men vouchſafe to haue none other oyle, but ỹ which is hallowed of the Biſhop,that is to ſay,warmed with much brething on it, enchaunted with much mumbling,and with the knee bowed nine times ſaluted in this maner:thriſe haile holy oile:thriſe haile holy chriſme:thriſe haile holy balme.Out of whom haue they ſucked ſuch coniurations? Iames ſaith: that when the ſicke man is annointed with oile,and prayer hath beene pronounced ouer him,if he be in ſinnes they ſhalbe forgiuen him:namely, that the guiltineſſe being taken away, they may obteine releaſe of ỹ paine:not meaning that ſinnes are put away with fat liquor,but that the praiers of the faithfull whereby the afflicted brother is commended to God,ſhall not be vaine.Theſe men do wickedly lye,that by their holy, that is to ſay,abominable annointing,ſinnes are forgiuen. Loe howe gaily they ſhall preuaile, when they haue bin at large ſuffred to abuſe the teſtimonie of Iames at their pleaſure.And leaſt we ſhoulde neede to trauaile long in proofe hereof,their owne chronicles do diſcharge vs of this hardnes.For they report that Pope Innocentius which in Auguſtines time gouerned the Church of Rome, ordeined that not onely prieſts, but alſo all Chriſtians ſhould vſe oyle to annoint for their neceſſitie and others.Autor hereof is Sigeb in his Chronicles.

Of Eccleſiaſticall Orders.

22 The fourth place in their regiſter hath the Sacrament of Order but the ſame ſo fruitful,that it breedeth out of it ſelfe ſeauen litle ſacramẽts. But this is verie worthie to be laughed at,that whereas they affirme ỹ there bee ſeauen Sacramentes,when they goe about to rehearſe them, they reken vp thirteene. Neither can they alleage for themſelues, that they are but one Sacrament,becauſe they tende all to one prieſthoode, and are as it were certaine degrees vnto it.For ſith it is euident that in euery one of them are ſeueral Ceremonies,and they theſelues ſay that there be diuerſe graces:no man can doubt but that they ought to be called ſeuẽ ſacraments if their opinions be receiued.And why ſtriue we about it as though it were a thing doubtfull,foraſmuch as they themſelues do plainely and ſeuerally declare ſeuen? But firſt we will briefely knit vp by the way,how many & howe vnſauerie abſurdities they thruſt in vnto vs,when they go about to cõmend to vs their Orders in ſteede of Sacraments: and then we will ſee whether the Ceremonie which Churches vſe in ordering of minſters, ought to bee called a Sacrament at all. They make therefore ſeuen eccleſiaſticall orders or degrees, which they garniſh with the name of a Sacrament. Thoſe bee, dorekepers, Readers, Exorciſtes, Acoluthes or followers, Suddeacons, Deacons, Prieſtes. And vii. they ſay that they bee, for the ſeuenfoolde grace of the Holy Ghoſt, wherewith they ought to be eudued that are promoted vnto them. But it is increaſed & more largely heaped to them in their promotion. Nowe the number it ſelfe is hallowed with a wrongful expounding of ſcripture, when they thinke that they haue red in Eſay vii. vertues of the holy Ghoſt, whereas both in deede Eſay there rehearſeth but ſixe, and alſo the Prophete meant not to comprehende them all in that place: for hee is elſe where as well called the ſpirite of life, of ſanctification, of adoption of the children, as he is in that place called the Spirite of wiſedome, of vnderſtanding, of counſell, of ſtrength, of knowledge, and of the feare of the Lorde. Howbeit ſome ſuttleler men make not ſeuen orders, but nine, after the likeneſſe (as they ſay) of the Church triumphing. But among them alſo there is ſtrife: becauſe ſome woulde haue the ſhauing of the cleargie to bee the firſt order of all, and Biſhopricke the laſt: otherſome excluding ſhauing altogether, recken Archbiſhopricke among the orders. Iſidore otherwiſe diuideth them. For he maketh pſalmiſts and Readers to be diuerſe: he adpointeth the pſalmiſts for ſongs, & the Readers to the reading of the Scriptures, wherewith the people may be inſtructed. And this diſtinction is kept by the Canons. In ſo great diuerſitie what will they haue vs to followe or flee? Shall wee ſay that there bee ſeuen orders? So teacheth the maiſter of the ſchoole: but the moſt illuminate doctors doe otherwiſe determine. Againe they alſo diſagree among themſelues. Moreouer the moſt ſacred Canons call vs an other way. Thus forſooth doe men agre, when they diſpute of godly matters without the word of God.

In their ſacrament of orders ſeuen perſue ſacraments conteined or as ſome of them do thinke mee.

He ſignifieth himſelfe to bee a dorekeeper, when he ſaith, I am the dore. He tooke vpon him the office of Reader, when hee red Eſay in the Synagoge. He did the office of an Exorciſt, when touching the tongue and eares of the deafe and dumme man, hee reſtored to him his hearing. Hee teſtified himſelfe to be an Acoluth or follower in theſe wordes. nations and languages, whereas Acoluthos in Greeke simply signifieth a follower. Howbeit if I shoulde earnestly tarrie in confuting these men, I should my selfe also worthily bee laughed at, they are so trifling and verie mockeries.

24 But that they may not bee able yet stil with false colours to deceiue euen very sillie women, their vanitie is by the way to be vttered. They create with great pompe and solemnitie their Readers, Psalmists, Dorekeepers Acoluthes, to execute those offices, whereunto they appoint very children, or those whome they call lay men. For who for the most part lighteth the candles, who poureth wine & water into the cruet, but a child or some base fellow of the laitie, ỹ maketh his gaine thereof? Doe not the same men sing, Doe they not shut and open the Church dores? For who euer saw in their temples an Acoluth, or a Dorekeeper executing his office? But rather hee that when he was a boy did ỹ office of an Acoluth, when he is once admitted into the order of Acoluthes, ceaseth to be ỹ which he beginneth to bee called, that they may seeme to wil of purpose to cast of the office when they take vpon them the title. Behold why they haue neede to be consecrate by Sacraments, and to receiue the holy ghoste, namely, that they may doe nothing. If they alleage for excuse, that this is the frowardnesse of times, that they forsake and neglect their ministeries: lette them therwithal confesse that there is at this day in the church no vse nor fruit of their holie orders, which they meruellously aduance, and that their whole Church is full of curse: because it suffereth tapers and cruets to be handled of children & prophane men, which none are worthy to touch but they that are consecrat Acoluthes: and because it committeth the songes to children, which ought not to be hard but of a hallowed mouth. As for their Exorcists, to what end do they consecrate them? I heare ỹ the Iewes had their exorcists: but I see that they were so called of the exorcismes or coniurations which they vsed. Of these counterfait exorcistes who euer heard it spoken, that they shewed any example of their profession? It is fained that they haue power giuen them to lay their hands vpon mad men, them that are to bee catechised, and men possessed with diuels: but they can not perswade the diuelles that they haue such power, because the diuels doe not onelie not yeelde to their commandements, but also vse cõmaunding authoritie ouer thẽ. For a man can scarcelie finde euery tenth of them, that is not led with an euill Spirite. Therefore whatsoeuer thinges they babble concerning their petie Orders, they are patched together of foolish & vnsauorie lies. Of the old Acoluths, and Dorekeepers, and Readers, we haue spoken in another place, when we declared the order of the church. Our purpose here is onlie to fight against that new found inuention of the seuenfold sacrament in ecclesiasticall orders. Of which there is no where any thing red, but among these foolish praters the Sorbonists and Canonists.

Men consecrated in the Church of Rome to execute certain mean duties, as if they couldе not lawfullie bee done but by hallowed men, and yet men vnhallowed & vnconsecrated suffered to do them.

Acts. 19. 13.

25 Now let vs consider of the ceremonies which they vse about it. First whomsoeuer they receiue into their order of soldiers, they do with one cõmon signe enter thẽ into Clergie. For they shaue them in the crown, ỹ the crowne may betoken kinglie dignity, because Clerkes ought to be kinges, ỹ they may rule themselues and other. For Peter speaketh thus of them, Yee

Rasure of the crown ministred in token of spirituall kinglike dignitie, and sceptre to that purpose abused.

Cap. Dupl. 12. quæstio.

1.Peter 2.9. are a chosen kinde, a kinglie priesthood, a holy nation, a people of purchase. But it was sacrilege to take to themselues alone that which is giuen to the whole Church, and proudly to glorie of the title which they had taken from the faithfull. Peter speaketh to the whole Church: these fellowes wrest it to a few shauen mē: as though it were said to them alone: be ye holy: as though they alone were purchased by the bloude of Christe: as though they alone were by Christ made a kingdom and priesthood to God. Then they assigne also other reasons: the top of their head is made bare, that their minde may be declared to be free vnto the Lorde, which with open face may beholde the glorie of God. Or that they may bee taught that the faultes of their mouth & their eyes must be cut off. Or the shauing of their head is the putting away of temporall thinges, and the hairie compasse about the crowne are the remnants of goods that are retained for their sustenaunce. All in signes: because forsooth the veile of the tēple is not yet cut in sunder. Therfore being perswaded that they haue gaily discharged their duties, because they haue figured such things by their crowne, of the verie things in deede they perfourme nothing at all. How long will they mocke vs with such false colours and deceits? The cleargy by shearing of a few haires do signifie that they haue cast away the aboundance of temporall goods, that they beholde the glorie of God, that they haue mortified the lust of the eares and eyes: but there is no kinde of men more rauining, more senselesly dul, more lustful. Why do they not rather truely perfourme holinesse, than with false & lying signes counterfait a shew of it?

In scripture no president of the popish rasure ministred vnto clearkes at the first receipt of their cleargie.

26 Moreouer when they say that the crown of the Clergy hath the beginning and reason from the Nazarites: what other thing doe they allege than ỳ their mysteries are sprong out of the Iewish ceremonies, or rather ỳ they are meere Iewishnesse? But whereas they further say, ỳ Priscilla, Acila, & Paul himself, taking a vowe vpon them did sheare their heades, that they might be purified: they bewray their grosse ignorance. For it is no where red of Priscilla: & of Acila also it is doubtful: for ỳ same shearing may as wel be referred to Paul as to Acila. But, that we may not leaue to them that which they require, that they haue an example of Paul: the simpler must note, that Paul did neuer sheare his head for any sanctification, but onely to serue the weakenesse of his brethren. I am wont to call such vowes the vowes of charitie not of godlines: that is to say, not taken in hand for any seruice of god, but to beare with the rudenes of the weake: as he himself saith, that he was made a Iewe to the Iewes, &c. Therfore he did this, & the same but once, & for a short time, ỳ hee might for a time fashion himselfe to the Iewes. These men when they will without any vse counterfait the purifyings of the Nazarites, what do they else but raise vp another Iewishnes, when they wrongfully couet to follow the olde Iewishnesse? With the same religiousnesse was that decretall Epistle made, which according to the Apostle, forbiddeth cleakes that they should not suffer their haire to growe, but sheare it round like a bowle. As though the Apostle, when he teacheth what is comely for al men, were carefull for the rounde shearing of the Cleargy. Hereby let the readers consider, of what force and worthinesse are those other mysteries that follow, into which there is such an entrie.

27 Whence

27 Whence the shearing of Clerkes tooke beginning, appeareth sufficiently euen by Augustine alone, Whereas at that time none suffred their haire to growe, but nice men, & such as coueted a smothenesse & trimnesse not meete enough for men: it seemed to be a point of no good example, if ỳ were permitted to the clergie. Therfore Clerkes were commaunded either to sheare their head or to shaue it, that they should not beare any shewe of womanlike trimming. But this was so common, that certaine Monkes, that they might the more set out their holinesse with notable & seuerall attire from other men, did let their haire growe long. But afterward when the fashion turned to wearing of haire, and certaine nations were added to Christiandome which alway vsed to weare long haire, as Fraunce, Germanie, and England: it is likely that clerkes did euerie where sheare their heads, least they should seeme to couet the gainesse of haire. At the last in a corrupter age, when all olde ordinances were either peruerted or gone out of kind into superstition, because they saw no cause in the shearing of the clergie (for they had reteined nothing but a foolish counterfaiting) they fled to a mysterie, which now they superstitiously thrust in vnto vs for the approouing of their Sacrament. The dorekepers at their consecration receiue the keyes of the Church, whereby they may vnderstand that the keeping of it is committed to them. The readers receiue the holy Bible. The exorcistes receiue the formes of exorcismes, which they should vse ouer mad and them that are to be catechised. The Acoluthes receiue their tapers & cruet. Lo these are ỳ ceremonies wherein (if God will) there is so much secret power, ỳ they may be not onely signes & tokens, but also causes of inuisible grace. For this they require by their definition, when they will haue them taken among the Sacramentes. But to make an end in few words, I say it is an absurditie that in their scholes & canons they make these lesser orders Sacraments: whereas euen by their owne confession that teach this, they were vnknowen to the primitiue Church, & deuised many yeres after. For Sacraments, sith they contein the promise of God, can not be ordeined of Angels, nor of men, but of God alone, whose office alone it is to giue promise.

The first occasion of shearing in the Clergie, the deliuerie of keyes vnto dorekeepers, the bible vnto readers, the formes of exorcisme vnto exorcistes, of taper and cruet vnto Acoluthes.

Lib. 4. Sent. Dist. 24. c. 8.

28 There remaine three orders, which they call the greater. Of the which, Subdeaconry (as they call it) was remoued into that number, since that the rout of the smaller ones beganne to growe. But because they seeme to haue a testimonie for these out of the word of God, they doe peculiarly for honors sake, call them holy orders. But nowe it is to be seene, howe crokedly they abuse the ordinances of God to their pretence. We will beginne at the order of Priesthoode or the sacrificers office. For by these two names they signifie one thing, and so they call them to whome they say that it pertayneth to offer vpon the altar the sacrifice of the body and bloode of Christe, to pronounce prayers, and to blesse the giftes of God. Therefore at their consecration they receiue the patine with the hostes, for tokens of power giuen to them, to offer acceptable sacrifices to God. And their handes are annointed: by which signe they are taught, that they haue power giuen thẽ to consecrate. But of the Ceremonies we shal speake hereafter. Of the thing it selfe I say: it so hath no title of the worde of God which they pretende, that they coulde not more wickedly corrupt the order set

The order of Priesthood iniurious to Christe.

ſet by God. Firſt verily this ought to ſtande for a thing confeſſed (which we haue affirmed in entreating of the Popiſh maſſe) that they are al wrong doers to Chriſte, which call themſelues ſacrificing prieſtes, or offer a ſacrifice of appeaſement. Hee was appointed and conſecrate of the Father a prieſt Pſal.110.4. with an oth, according to the order of Melchiſedech, without any end, with-Heb.5.6.& 7.3. out any ſucceſſour. Hee once offred a ſacrifice of eternal ſatisfactorie cleanſing, and reconciliation: and now alſo being entred into the Sanctuary of heauen, he maketh interceſſion for vs. In him we are all ſacrificing prieſtes, but to praiſes and giuinges of thankes, finally to offer vs and ours to God. It was his ſingular office alone, with his offring to appeaſe God, and to purge ſinnes. When theſe men take that vpon them, what remaineth but that their ſacrificing Prieſthoode is vngodly and full of ſacrilege? Truly they are too wicked, when they dare garniſh it with the name of a Sacrament. As touching the true office of Prieſthoode, which is commended to vs by ỹ mouth of Chriſt, I willingly account it in that degree. For therein is a ceremonie,
1.Tim.4.14. firſt taken out of the Scriptures, then ſuch a one as Paul teſtifieth not to bee vaine nor ſuperfluous, but a faithfull ſigne of ſpirituall grace. But whereas I haue not ſet it for a thirde in the number of Sacraments, I did it becauſe it is not ordinarie and common among all the faithfull, but a ſpeciall rite for one certaine office. But ſith this honour is giuen to the Chriſtian miniſterie, there is no cauſe therefore why the Popiſh ſacrificers ſhould be proude. For Chriſt commaunded diſtributers of his Goſpell and myſteries to be ordeined, not ſacrificers to be conſecrated. Hee gaue them commandement Matt.28.19. Mar 16.15. Iohn 21.15. to preach the Goſpell and to feede the flocke not to offer ſacrifices. He promiſed them the grace of the holy Ghoſt, nor to make ſatisfactorie purging of ſinnes, but rightly to execute and to maintaine the gouernement of the Church.

Blowing and giuing the holie Ghoſt in ordaining of prieſtes. 29 The ceremonies agree verie well with the thing it ſelfe. Our Lorde when he ſent forth the Apoſtles to preach the Goſpel, did blow vpon them. By which ſigne he repreſented the power of the holy Ghoſt which he gaue Iohn 20.22. vnto them, This blowing theſe good men haue reteined, and as though they did put foorth the holy Ghoſt out at their throte, they whiſper ouer their ſilly prieſtes that they make, Receiue the holy Ghoſt. So leaue they nothing which they do not ouertwhartly counterfait: I wil not ſay like plaiers (which vſe their geſturings neither without art nor without ſignificatiõ) but like apes, which counterfait euery thing wantõly & without any choiſe. We keepe (ſay they) the example of the Lorde. But the Lorde did many thinges which he willed not to be examples to vs. The Lord ſaid to the diſciples, Receiue the holy Ghoſt. He ſayd alſo to Lazarus, Lazarus come forth, Iohn.20.22. Iohn 11.43. Matt.9.5. Iohn 5.8. He ſayd to the man ſicke of the palſie, Riſe and walke. Why do not they ſay the ſame to all dead men and ſicke of the palſie? He ſhewed a profe of his diuine power, when in blowing vpon the Apoſtles he filled thẽ with the grace of the holie Ghoſt. If they goe about to doe the ſame thing, they enuiouſly counterfaite God, and doe in a maner chalenge him to ſtriue with them: but they are farre from the effect, and do nothing with this fooliſh geſturing but mocke Chriſt. Verily they be ſo ſhameleſſe, that they dare affirme that they giue the holy Ghoſt. But how true that is, experience teacheth, which crieth out that ſo many as be conſecrated prieſts are of horſes made aſſes, of fooles made mad men. Neither yet doe I ſtriue with them for that: onely I condemne the ceremonie it ſelfe, which ought not to haue beene drawn to be an example, forasmuch as it was vſed of Chriſte for a ſingular ſigne of one myracle: ſo farre is it off, that the excuſe of following his example ought to defend them.

Vnction of prieſts to the imitation of the ſonnes of Aaron. Lib.4. Sent. diſt. 24. cap 8. & in can. diſt. 21. c. 1.

30 But of whome receiued they the annointing? They aunſwere that they receiued it of the ſonnes of Aaron, from whome their order alſo tooke beginning. Therefore they had rather alway to defende themſelues with wrongfull examples, than to confeſſe that themſelues haue deuiſed that which they vſe without cauſe. But in the mean time they conſider not, that while they profeſſe themſelues the ſucceſſours of the ſonnes of Aaron, they are wrong doers of the prieſthood of Chriſte, which alone was ſhadowed & figured by all the old ſacrificing prieſthoodes. In him therfore they were all conteined and fulfilled, in him they ceaſſed, as we haue ſometimes alreadie repeated, & the epiſtle to the Hebrues without help of anie gloſſes teſtifieth. But if they be ſo much delited with the ceremonies of Moſes, why doe they not haſtilie take oxen, calues, & lambes to make ſacrifices? They haue indeed a good part of the old tabernacle & of the whole Iewiſh manner of worſhipping: but yet this wanteth in their religion, that they doe not ſacrifice calues and oxen. Who cannot ſee, that this obſeruation of annointing is much more hurtfull than Circumciſion, ſpecially when there is adioined ſuperſtition and Phariſaicall opinion of the worthineſſe of the worke? For the Iewes did ſet in Circumciſion, truſt of righteouſnes: theſe men do ſet in annointing, ſpirituall graces. Therefore while they couet to be counterfaiters of the Leuites, they are made Apoſtataes from Chriſt, and doe put themſelues from the office of paſtors.

No reaſon vvhy the church of Rome ſhould in the making of her prieſts, vſe the ceremonie of annointing more than the reſt, vvhich vvere vſed in the making of Leuiticall prieſts: the laying on of handes idle in that action vvhich no commaundement of God doeth vvarrant. Exod. 30. 30.

31 This is (if God will) the holy oyle that printeth the marke that can not be raced out. As though oyle could not be wiped away with duſt & ſalt, or if it ſticke faſter, with ſope. But this marke is ſpirituall. What hath oyle to do with the ſoul? Haue they forgotten that which they oft chaunt to vs out of Auguſtine, that if the worde be taken from the water, it ſhall bee nothing but water, and that it hath this from the worde that it is a ſacrament? What word wil they ſhew in their fat liquor? Will they ſhew the commandement that was giuen to Moſes, concerning the annointing of the ſonnes of Aaron? But there is alſo commaundement giuen, of the coate, the ephod, the har, the crowne of holineſſe, with which Aaron was to be garniſhed, and of the coates, girdles, and miters, wherewith the ſonnes of Aaron were to bee clothed. There is commaundement giuen to kill a calfe, and burn the fat of him for incenſe, to cut rammes and burne them, to ſanctify their eares and garments with the bloud of another ram, and innumerable other obſeruations, which being paſſed ouer, I marualle why the only annointing of oyle pleaſeth them. But if they loue to bee ſprinkled, why are they rather ſprinled with oyle than with bloude? Forſooth they goe about a wittie thing, to make one religion of Chriſtianitie, Iewiſhneſſe, and paganiſme, as it were of patches ſowed togither. Therefore their annointing ſtinketh which is without the ſalt, that is, the worde of God. There remaineth laying on of handes,

handes, which as I grant in true and lawfull Orderings to be a Sacrament, so I deny that it hath anie part in this plaie, where they neither obeie the commaundement of Christ, nor haue respect to the ende whereunto the promise ought to lead vs. If they wil not haue the signe denied them, they must applie it to the thing it selfe, whereunto it is appointed.

The order of Deaconrie.

32 About the order also of Deaconrie I woulde not striue with them, if that same ministerie which was in the Apostles time & in the purer church, were restored to the vncorrupted state thereof. But what like thing haue they whome those men faine to be deacons? I speake not of the men (least they should complaine that the doctrine is wrongfullie weighed by ỹ faults of the men) but I affirme that for those whome they deliuer vs by their doctrine, they vnworthilie fetch testimonie from the example of them whom the Apostolike Church ordained Deacons. They say that it partaineth to their deacons to stand by the priestes, to minister in all things that are done in the Sacraments, namelie in baptisme, in the chresme, in the patine, in the chalice: to bring in the offerings & lay them vpon the altar, to make readie the Lordes table, and to couer it: to carrie the crosse, to pronounce & sing the Gospel and epistle to the people. Is here anie one worde of the true ministerie of Deacons? Now let vs heare the instituting of them. Vpon ỹ Deacon that is ordered, the bishop alone laieth his hande. Hee laieth a praier booke and a Stoale vpon his left shoulder, that he may vnderstand that hee hath receiued the light yoke of the Lorde, whereby hee may subdue to the feare of God those thinges that pertaine to the left side. He giueth him the text of the Gopel, that he may perceiue himselfe to be a publisher of it. And what belong these things to Deacons? They do euen like as if a man would say that he ordeined them Apostles whome hee appointed onelie to burne frankincense, to trimme the images, to sweepe the Churches, to catche mise, to driue awaie dogges. Who could suffer such kind of men to be called Apostles, and to be compared with the verie Apostles of Christ? Therfore let them not hereafter lyinglie saie that those be Deacons, whom they institute onelie for their enterludelike plaies. Yea & by the verie name it selfe they sufficientlie declare what manner of office they haue. For they call thē Leuites, and will haue their order & beginning referred to the children of Leui. Which I giue them leaue to do, so that they do not afterward garnish them with the fethers of other.

The order of Subdeaconrie and the trifling vse thereof.

33 Of Subdeacons to what purpose is it to speake? For wheras indeede they were in old time appointed for care of the poore, they assigne to them I wot not what trifling businesse, as to bring the chalice and the patine, the little cruet with water, and the towel to the altar, to powre water to washe hands, &c. Now whereas they speake of receiuing & bringing in of offrings, they meane those which they deuour as abandoned to their holie vse. With this office verie well agreeth the forme of their consecrating. That he receiue of the bishop, the patine and the chalice: of the Archdeacon, the cruet with water, the manuale, and such other baggage. Within these trifles they require to haue vs confesse that the holie ghoste is enclosed. What godlie man can abide to graunt this? But, to make once an end, wee may determine the same of them ỹ we do of the rest. Neither neede wee to repeat

repete further these things that are aboue declared. This may be enough to teach the sober & willing to learne (whom I haue taken in hand to instruct) that there is no Sacramẽt of God but where is shewed a Ceremonie ioined with a promise: or rather verely but where is a promise seene in a Ceremony. Here is not found one syllable of any certaine promise: therefore it were in vaine to seeke a Ceremonie to confirme the promise. Againe of those Ceremonies that they vse, it is not read that any one is institute of God. Therefore here can be no Sacrament.

Of Matrimonie.

34 The last is Matrimonie, which as all men confesse to be ordeined of God, so no man vntill the time of Gregorie euer sawe that it was giuen for a Sacrament. And what sober man would euer haue thought it? It is a good and a holy ordinance of God, so tillage, carpentrie, shoomakers craft, barbers craft, are lawfull ordinances of God, and yet they are no Sacramentes. For there is not onely this required in a Sacrament, that it be the worke of God, but that it be an outwarde Ceremonie appointed of God to confirme a promise. That there is no such thing in Matrimonie, very children also can iudge. But (say they) it is a signe of the holy thing, that is, of the spiritual conioyning of Christ with the Church. If by this word Signe, they vnderstãd a Tokẽ set before vs of God to this end to raise vp ỹ assurednes of our faith, they are far beside ỹ truth. If they simplie take a signe for ỹ which is brought to expresse a similitude, I will shew how wittily they reason. Paul saith, As one starre differeth from an other starre in brightnes, so shalbe the resurrectiõ of the dead. Loe here is one Sacrament. Christ saith, The kindome of heauen is like a graine of mustardseede. Loe here is another. Againe, The kingdome of heauen is like vnto leauẽ. Lo here is the third. Esay saith, Behold, the Lord shall feede his flocke as a shepeherd. Lo here the fourth. In an other place, The Lord shall goe forth as a Giant. Lo here is the fifth. Finally what end or measure shal there be? There is nothing but by this meane it shal be a Sacramẽt. How many parables and similitudes are in the Scripture, so many Sacramentes there shalbe. Yea & theft shalbe a Sacrament because it is written, the day of the Lord is like a thiefe. Who can abide these sophisters prating so foolishly? I grant in deede ỹ so oft as we see a vine, it is very good to call to remembrance that which Christ sayth, I am a vine, ye be branches my Father is the vinedresser. So oft as a shepherd with his flocke commeth toward vs, it is good also that this come to our minde, I am a good shepherd, my sheepe heare my voice. But if any man adde such similitudes to the number of Sacraments, he is meete to be sent to Antycira.

Matrimonie not thereby proued a Sacrament because it resembleth our conioyning with Christ.

35 But they still lay forth the wordes of Paul, in which he giueth to matrimonie the name of a Sacrament: hee that loueth his wife, loueth himselfe. No man euer hated his owne flesshe, but nourisheth it and cherisheth it, euen as Christ doth the Church: because we are members of his bodie, of his flesshe and of his bones. For this a man shall leaue his Father and mother, and shall cleaue to his wife, and they shalbe two into one flesh. This is a great Sacrament: but I say in Christ and in the Church. But so to handle the Scriptures, is to mingle heauen and earth together. Paul, to shewe shewe to maried men, what singular loue they ought to beare to their wiues, setteth foorth Christ to them for an example. For as he poured foorth the bowels of his kindnesse vpō the Church which he had espoused to himselfe: so ought euery man to be affectioned towarde his owne wife. It followeth after, he that loueth his wife loueth himselfe: as Christ loued the Church. Nowe to teach howe Christ loued the Church as himselfe, yea howe hee

Gen. 3. 23. made himselfe one with his spouse the Churche, hee applieth to him those thinges which Moyses reporteth that Adam spake of himselfe. For when Eue was brought into his sight, whom he knewe to haue beene shapen out of his side: This woman (sayth hee) is a bone of my bones, and flesshe of my flesshe. Paul testifieth that all this was spiritually fulfilled in Christ and vs, when he saith that we are members of his bodie of his flesshe, and of his bones, yea and one flesshe with him. At length he addeth a concluding sentence, This is a great mysterie. And least any man should be deceiued with the double signifying of y words, he expresseth that he speaketh not of the fleshly conioyning of man and woman, but of the spiritual mariage of Christ and the Church. And truly it is in deede a great mysterie, that Christ suffered a ribbe to be taken from himsefe, whereof we might be shapen: that
Gal. 2 20. is to say, whē he was strong, he willed to be weake, that we might be strengthned with his strength: that now we may not our selues liue, but hee may liue in vs.

The Church of Rome absurd and repugnant to hir selfe in making matrimonie a sacrament.

36 The name of Sacrament deceiued them. But was it rightfull that the whole Church should suffer the punishment of their ignorance? Paul sayde Mysterie: which word when the translator might haue left being not vnused with Latin eares, or might haue translated it a Secret: he chose rather to put in the word Sacramēt, yet in no other sense than Paul had in Greeke called it mysterie. Nowe let them go and with crying out raile against the skill of tongues, by ignorance whereof they haue so long most fowly beene blinde in an easie matter, & such as offreth it selfe to be perceiued of euery mā. But
1. Tim. 3. 9. Ephe. 1. 9. Lib. 4. Sent. Dist. 17. ca. 4. & in Dec. 27. quæst. 2. cap. Cum Socra. glos. ca. lex diu. Ibid. Decret. Lib. 4. Sent. dist. 33. cap. 2. & in dec. 32. quæst. 2. 5. Quicquid. why do they in this one place so earnestly sticke vpon this litle word Sacrament, and some other times do passe it ouer vnregarded? For also in the first Epistle to Timothee the Translator hath vsed it, and in the selfe same Epistle to the Ephesians: in euery place for mysterie. But let this slipping be pardoned them: at least the hers ought to haue had a good remembrance. For, when they haue once set out Matrimonie with title of a Sacramente, afterwarde to cal it vncleanneesse, defiling, and fleshly filthinesse, how giddy lightnesse is this? howe great an absurditie is it to debarre priestes from a Sacrament? If they denie that they debarre them from the Sacrament, but from the lust of copulation: they escape not so away from me. For they teach that the copulation it selfe is a part of the Sacrament, and that by it alone is figured the vniting that we haue with Christ in conformitie of nature: because man and woman are not made one but by carnal copulation. Howbeit some of them haue here founde two Sacraments: the one of God and the soule, in the betrothed man & woman: the other of Christ and the Church, in the husband and the wife. Howsoeuer it be, yet copulation is a Sacrament, from which it is vnlawfull that any Christian shoulde be debarred: Vnlesse peraduenture the Sacramentes of Christians doe so ill agree, that they can not ſtand together. There is alſo an other abſurditie in their doctrines. They affirme that in the ſacrament is giuen the grace of the holy ghoſt: they teach that copulation is a ſacrament: and they deny that at copulation the holy Ghoſt is at any time preſent.

37 And, becauſe they would not ſimplie mocke the Church, how long a roawe of errours, lies, deceites, and wickednesſes haue they knitte to one errour? ſo that a man may ſay, that they did nothing but ſeeke a Denne of abhominations, when they made of matrimony a Sacrament. For when they once obteined this, they drewe to themſelues the hearing of cauſes of matrimonie: for it was a ſpirituall matter, which prophane iudges might not meddle with. Then they made lawes, whereby they ſtabliſhed their tyranny, but thoſe partly manifeſtly wicked againſt God, and partly moſt vniuſt toward men. As are theſe: That mariages made betweene yong perſons without conſent of their parents, ſhoulde remaine of force and ſtabliſhed. that the mariages be not lawfull betweene the kinsfolkes to the ſeuenth degree: and if any ſuch bee made, that they be diuorced. And the verie degrees they faine againſt the lawes of all nations, and againſt the ciuill gouernment of Moſes. That it bee not lawfull for a man that hath put away an adulteresſe, to mary an other. That ſpirituall kinsfolkes may not bee coupled in marriage. That there be no mariages celebrate, from Septuageſime to the vtas of Eaſter, in three weekes before Midſommer, nor from Aduent, to Twelfetide. And innumerable other like, which it were long to rehearſe. At length we muſt creepe out of their mire, wherein our talke hath now tarried longer than I would. Yet I thinke I haue ſomewhat profited, that I haue partly plucked the lyons skinnes from theſe aſſes.

The ſundrie bad ordinances, practiſes & dealings of the court of Rome, grounded on this opinion, that matrimonie is a ſacrament.

Deut. 18. 6.

The xx. Chapter.

Of Ciuill gouernement.

NOwe whereas we haue aboue ſet two kindes of gouernment in man, and whereas we haue ſpoken enough of the one kind which conſiſteth in the ſoule or in the inwarde man, and hath reſpect to eternall life: this place requireth that we ſpeake ſomewhat alſo of the other, which perteineth onely to the ciuill and outwarde righteouſneſſe of manners. For the courſe of this matter ſeemeth to be ſeuered from the ſpirituall doctrine of faith, which I tooke in hande to entreate of: yet the proceeding ſhall ſhewe that I do rightfully ioine them together, yea that I am of neceſſitie compelled to doe it ſpecially ſith on the one ſide, madde and barbarous men doe furiouſly go about to ouerthrow this order ſtabliſhed by GOD: and on the other ſide the flatterers of princes, aduancing their power without meaſure, ſticke not to ſet it againſt the empire of God himſelfe. Vnleſſe both theſe miſchiefes be met withal, the pureneſſe of faith ſhall be loſt. Beſide that it is not ſmallie for our behoofe, to know how louingly God hath in this behalfe prouided for mankinde, that there may flouriſh in vs a greater deſire of godlineſſe to witnes our thankfulneſſe. Firſt, ere we enter into the thing it ſelfe, we muſt holde faſt that diſtinction which wee haue aboue set, least (as it commonly happeneth to many) we vnwisely mingle these two thinges together, which haue altogether diuerse cõsideration. For when they heare that libertie is promised by the Gospel, which acknowledgeth among men no king and no magistrate, but hath regarde to Christ alone: they thinke that they can take no fruite of their libertie, so long as they see any power to haue preeminence ouer them. Therefore they think that nothing shal be safe, vnlesse the whole world be reformed into a newe fashion: where may neither be iudgements, nor lawes, nor magistrates, nor any such thing which they thinke to withstande their libertie. But whosoeuer can put difference betwene the body and the soule, between this present & transitorie life, and that life to come and eternall: he shall not hardly vnderstand that the spiritual kingdome of Christ, and the ciuil gouernement are things farre a sunder, Sith therefore that is a Iewish vanitie, to seeke & inclose the kingdome of Christ vnder the elementes of this worlde: let vs rather thinking, as the scripture plainely teacheth, that it is a spirituall fruite, which is gathered of ỹ benefite of Christ, remẽber to keep within the bonds thereof this whole libertie which is promised and offered vs in him. For what is ỹ cause why the same Apostle which biddeth vs to stand, and not to be made subiect to the yoke of bondage, in an other place forbiddeth bond seruants to be carefull of their state: but because spiritual libertie may very wel agree with ciuill bondage? In which sense also these his sayings are to be taken: In the kingdome of God there is no Iewe, nor Grecian, no male, nor female, no bondman, nor freeman. Againe, There is no Iewe nor Grecian, Circumcision, Vncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, Bondman, Freeman: but Christ is all in all. Whereby he signifieth, that it maketh no matter in what estate thou be among men, nor vnder the lawes of what nation thou liuest: forasmuch as in these things consisteth not the kingdome of Christ.

Magiſtracie not taken away by the liberti vvhich is promiſed in the goſpell.

The vse of ciuil gouernment amongest Christian men.

2 Yet doeth not this distinction tende hereunto, that we shoulde thinke that the whole order of policie is an vncleane thing, nor pertcining at all to Christian men. So indeed do the phrentike men, that are delighted with vnbridled licentiousnesse, crie out and boast. For sith we be dead by Christ to the elements of the worlde, and being remoued into the kingdome of God doe sit among the heauenly ones: they thinke that it is vnworthie for vs, & farre beneath our excellence, to bee occupied with these prophane and vncleane cares that are busied about affaires not perteining to a Christian man. To what purpose (say they) are lawes without iudgements and iudgement seates? But what hath a Christian man to do with iudgements themselues? yea if it be not lawfull to kill, whereto serue lawes and iudgementes among vs? But as we haue euen nowe giuen warning, that this kinde of gouernment is seueral from that spirituall and inward kingdome of Christ: so it is also to be knowen that they nothing disagree together. For ỹ Ciuil gouernment doth now beginne in vs vpon earth certaine beginnings of the heauenly kingdome, and in this mortall and vanishing life, doth as it were enter vpon an immortall and incorruptible blessednesse: but the intent of his spirituall gouernment is, so long as wee shall liue among men, to cherish and maintaine the outward worshipping of God, to defend the sounde doctrine of Godlinesse and the state of the Church, to frame our life to the felfellowship of men, to fashion our manners to ciuil righteousnesse, to procure vs into friendship one with another, to nourish common peace and quietness: all which I graunt to be superfluous, if the kingdome of God, such as it is now among vs doe destroy this present life. But if the will of God be so, that we while we long toward the heauenly countrey, should bee wayfaring from home vpon the earth: and sith the vse of such wayfaring needeth such helpes: they which take them from man, doe take from him his verie nature of man. For whereas they alleadge that there is so great perfection in the Church of God, that her owne moderate gouernment sufficeth it for a law: they themselues doe foolishly imagine that perfection which can neuer bee founde in the common fellowshippe of men. For sith of naughtie men the pride is so great, and the wickednesse so obstinate, as can not bee restrayned with great sharpenes of lawes: what thinke we that they will doe, if they see vnpunished libertie lye open to their lewdnesse, which can not euen with force be sufficiently compelled not to doe euill.

Religion by ciuil policie maintained.

3 But of the order of policie, there shall be an other fitter place to entreate. Nowe our meaning is to haue this onely vnderstanded, that to thinke to driue it away, is outragious barbarousnes, the vse whereof is no lesse among men, than of breade, water, the sunne, and aire, but the dignitie much more excellent. For it tendeth not onely hereunto (which is the only commoditie of all those thinges) that men may breath, eate, drinke and bee cherished (although in deede it comprehendeth all these thinges, while it maketh that they liue together) yet I say, it tendeth not hereunto onely: but also that idolatrie, sacrileges against the name of God, blasphemies against his trueth, and other offences of religion may not rise vp and be scattered among the people, that common quiet be not troubled, that euery mā may keepe his owne safe and vnappeired, that men may vse their affaires together without hurt, that honestie and modestie be kept among them: finally that among Christians may be a common shewe of religion, and among men may be manlike ciuilitie. Neither let any man bee mooued, for that I doe nowe referre the care of stablishing of religion to the policie of men, which I seeme before to haue set without the iudgment of men. For I do no more here, than I did before, geue men leaue after their owne will to make lawes cōcerning religion and the worshipping of God, when I allow the ordinaunce of policie, which endeuoreth hereunto, that the true religion which is contained in the lawe of GOD, be not openly and with publique sacrileges freely brokē and defiled. But the readers being holpen by the verie plainnesse of order, shall better vnderstande what is to bee thought of the whole kinde of ciuill gouernment, if we seuerallie entreate of the partes thereof. There be three partes of it: the magistrare which is the gouernour and keeper of the lawes, the lawes according to which hee gouerneth: the people, which are gouerned by the lawes, and obey the Magistrate. Therefore let vs first consider of the office of the Magistrate, whether it bee a lawfull vocation and allowed of God, what maner of office hee hath, and howe great is his power, then with what lawes a Christian ciuill state is to be ordered: then last of all, what profite of the lawes commeth to the people, what reuerence is due to the magistrate.

The magistrates office allowed of God.

4 The Lorde hath not onely testified that the office of magistrates is allowed and acceptable to him, but also setting out the dignity thereof with most honourable titles, he hath maruellously commended it vnto vs, That I may rehearse a fewe of them. Whereas whosoeuer be in place of magistrate are named Gods, let no man thinke that in that naming is smal importance. For therby is signified that they haue commandement from God: that they are furnished with the authoritie of God and doe altogether beare the person of God, whose steede they do after a certaine maner supplie. This is not my cauillation, but the exposition of Christ. If the scripture (saith hee) called them Gods to whome the word of God was giuen: What is this else, but that God hath committed his businesse to them, that they shoulde serue in his office, and (as Moses and Iosophat saide to their Iudges whome they appointed in euerie seuerall citie of Juda) that they shoulde sit in iudgement, not for man but for God? To the same purpose maketh this that the wisedome of God affirmeth by the mouth of Salomon, that it is his worke, that Kings reigne, and councellers decree righteous thinges, that princes beare principalitie, and all the iudges of the earth execute iudgement. For this is all one in effect as if it had been saide, that it commeth not to passe by the peruersenes of men, that the gouernment of al things in earth is in the hand of kings and other rulers, but by the prouidence & holy ordinance of God, to whom it so seemed good to order the matters of men: forasmuch as he is both present and president among thē in making of laws & in executing vprightnes of iudgementes. Which Paul also plainely teacheth, when he reckeneth gouernments among the gifts of God, which being diuersly distributed according to the diuersitie of grace, ought to be imployed of the seruants of Christ to the edificatiō of the Church. For although he there properly speaketh of a councell of graue men, which in the Primitiue Church were appointed y they shoulde haue the rule of ordering the publike discipline (which office in the Epistle to the Corinthians hee calleth Gouernment) yet forasmuch as we see that the ende of ciuill power commeth to the same point, it is no doubt but that he commendeth vnto vs al kinde of iust gouernment. But he speaketh more plainely, where he purposely maketh a full discourse of that matter. For he both sheweth that power is the ordinance of God, and that there are no powers, but they are ordeined of God: & that the Princes thēselues are the ministers of God, to the well doers vnto praise: to the euill, reuengers vnto wrath. Hereunto may be added also the examples of holy mē: of which some haue possessed kingdomes, as Dauid, Josias, Ezechias: other some, Lordships, as Ioseph and Daniell: other some, Ciuill gouernementes in a free people, as Moses, Iosue, and the iudges: whose offices the Lord hath declared that he alloweth. Wherefore none ought nowe to doubte that the ciuill power is a vocation not onely holy and lawfull before GOD, but also the most holy, and the most honest of all other in the whole life of men.

The office of the ciuill magistrate no lesse allowable in the sight of God and needful for men vnder Christ than it was before.

5 They which couet to bring in a state without Rulers, take exception and say that although in olde time there were kings and iudges ouer y rude people, yet at this day y seruile kind of gouerning agreeth not with the perfection which Christ hath brought with his Gospell. Wherein they bewray

not not onely their ignorance, but also their diueliſh pride, while they take vpon themſelues perfection, of which not ſo much as the hundreth part is ſeene in them. But what maner of men ſoeuer they be, it is eaſie to confute it: becauſe where Dauid exhorteth all kings and Rulers to kiſſe the ſonne of God, he doth not bid them, giuing ouer their authoritie, to take themſelues to a priuate life, but to ſubmit the power that they beare to Chriſt, that he alone may haue preeminence aboue all. Likewiſe Eſay, when he promiſeth that kings ſhall be foſterfathers of the Church, and Queenes ſhalbe nourſes, he doth not depoſe them from their honour: but rather doth by an honourable title make them defenders to the godlie worſhippers of God. For, that prophecie pertaineth to the cõming of Chriſt. I do wittingly paſſe ouer many teſtimonies which do eche where offer themſelues, and ſpecially in the Pſalmes wherein all gouernours haue their right maintained. But moſt cleare of all is the place of Paul, where admoniſhing Timothee that in the common aſſemblie prayers muſt be made for kinges, he by and by addeth a reaſon, That we may vnder them lead a quiet life with all godlineſſe and honeſtie: in which wordes he committeth the ſtate of the Church to their defence and ſauegarding.

Pſal.3.12. Eſa.49.23. 1.Tim.2.2.

6 Which conſideration ought continually to buſie the magiſtrates thẽſelues, foraſmuch as it may put a great ſpurre to them whereby they may be pricked forward to their duetie, and bring them a ſingular comfort whereby they may mitigate the hardneſſe of their office, which truely are both many and great. For with how great an endeuour of vprightneſſe, wiſedome, mildnes, continence, & innocencie, ought they to charge thẽſelues, which know themſelues to be appointed miniſters of the righteouſnes of God? By what aſſiance ſhal they admit vniuſtice to their iudgement ſeat, which they heare to bee the throne of the liuing God? By what boldnes ſhall they pronounce a wrongfull ſentence with that mouth, which they vnderſtand to be appointed an inſtrument for the trueth of God? With what conſcience ſhall they ſubſcribe to wicked decrees with the hand which they know to be ordeined to write the acts of God? In a ſumme, if they remember that they bee the vicegerents of God, they muſt watch with all care, earneſtnes, & diligence, that they may repreſent in themſelues vnto men a certaine image of the prouidence, preſeruation, goodnes, good wil, and righteouſneſſe of God. And they muſt cõtinually ſet this before their eyes, that if all they be accurſed, ỹ doe execute in deceite the worke of the vengeance of God, they are much more grieuouſly accurſed, that vſe themſelues deceitfully in a rightful vocation. Therefore when Moſes and Ioſaphat minded to exhort their iudges to their duetie, they had nothing more effectuall to moue their mindes withall, than that which we haue before rehearſed, Looke what ye do. For yee ſit in iudgement not for man but for God: namely he which is nere to you in ỹ cauſe of iudgement. Now therefore let the feare of the Lorde bee vpon you. Looke & be diligent: becauſe there is no peruerſnes with the Lord our God. And in an other place it is ſaid, the God ſtood in the aſſembly of the Gods & ſitteth iudge in the middeſt of the gods, ỹ they may bee encouraged to their duetie when they heare that they be the deputies of God, to whome they muſt one day yeelde accompt of the gouernment of their charge. And worthily thily this admonition ought to be of great force with them. For if they make any default, they are not only wrong doers to men whō they wickedly vexe, but also slaunderers to God himselfe, whose holy iudgementes they defile. Againe they haue also whereupon they may singularly comfort themselues, when they consider with thēselues that they are not busied in prophane affaires and such as are not fit for the seruant of God, but in a most holy office, namely forasmuch as they are the deputies of God.

Reuilers of Magistrates, are railers at God: the rule of Kings not taken away because the Apostles were by Christ forbidden to rule as Kings.

7 As for them that are not moued with so many testimonies of Scripture from being bolde to raile at this holy ministerie, as a thing disagreing with Christian religiō and godlinesse: what do they else but raile at GOD himselfe, the dishonour of whome can not but be ioyned with the reproche of his minister? And verily they doe not refuse the magistrates, but do cast away God, that he should not reigne ouer them. For if the Lorde sayde this truely of the people of Israel: because they had refused the gouernement of Samuel: why shall it be lesse truely saide at this day of them that giue themselues leaue to rage against all gouernmentes ordained of God? But sith the Lorde sayde to the disciples, that the kings of nations beare rule ouer them, but that among them it is not so, where he that is the first must be made the least: by this saying it is forbidden to all Christians that they should not take kingdomes or gouernmentes vpon them. O handsome expositors! There rose a strife among the disciples, which of them excelled other: the Lorde, to suppresse this vaine ambitiō, taught them that their ministerie is not like vnto kingdomes, in which one man hath preeminence aboue the rest. I beseech you, what doeth this comparison make to the dishonour of kingly dignitie? yea what doeth it proue at all, but that the ministerie of an Apostle is not the office of a king? Moreouer although among the magistrates themselues there be diuerse formes, yet there is no difference in this behalfe but that we ought to take them all for the ordinances of God. For Paul also doeth comprehende them altogether, when hee sayth that there is no power but of God: and that which best liked him of all, is commended with notable testimonie aboue the other, namely ỹ power of one: which because it bringeth with it a common bondage of all (except that one man to whose will it maketh all thinges subiect) in old time could lesse be allowed of noble and the excellent sort of natures. But the Scripture to meet with their vniust iudgementes, expresly by name affirmeth, that it is the prouidence of Gods wisedome that kinges do reigne, and peculiarly commandeth the king to be honored.

Diuers kindes of ciuil gouernement and the lawfulnes of each kinde.

8 And truly it were very vaine that it should be disputed of priuate men which should bee the best state of policy in the place where they liue: for whom it is not lawfull to consult of the framing of any common weale. And also the same could not be simply determined without rashnesse, forasmuch as a great parte of the order of this question consisteth in circumstances. And if thou compare also the states themselues together without circumstances, it shall not be easie to discerne which of them ouerweieth the other in profitablenesse, they match so equally together. There is an easie way to fall from kingdome into tyranny: but not much harder is it to fall from the rule of the chiefest men to the faction of a fewe: but most easie of all from the peoples gouernment, to sedition. Truely, if those three formes of gouernments which the Philosophers set out, to be considered in thēselues I will not denie that either the gouernment of the cheefest men, or a state tempered of it and common gouernment farre excelleth all other not of it self: but because it most seldome chaunceth that kinges so temper themselues that their will neuer swarueth from that which is iust & right, again, that they be furnished with so great sharpenesse of iudgement and wisdome that euery one of them seeth so much as is sufficient. Therefore the fault or default of men maketh, that it is safer and more tolerable that many should haue the gouernment, that they may mutually one help another, one teach and admonish an other, and if any aduāce himself higher than is meet, there may be ouerseers and maisters to restraine his wilfulnes. This both hath alway bin approoued by experience, and the Lord also hath confirmed it with his authoritie, when he ordeined among the Israelites a gouernment of the best men verie neere vnto common gouernment, at such time as hee minded to haue them in best estate, till he brought foorth an image of Christ in Dauid. And as I willingly graunt that no kinde of gouernment is more blessed than this, where libertie is framed to such moderation as it ought to be, and is orderly stablished to continuance: so I compt them also most blessed, ỳ may enioy this estate: & if they stoutly and constantly trauell in preseruing and retaining it, I grant that they do nothing against their ductie. Yea & the magistrates ought with most great diligence to bend themselues hereunto, that they suffer not the libertie of the people, of which they are appointed gouernours, to be in any part minished, much lesse to be dissolued: if they be negligent and litle carefull therein, they are false Faithbreakers in their office, and betrayers of their countrie. But if they woulde bring this kinde to themselues, to whome the Lord hath appointed an other forme of gouernment, so that thereby they be moued to desire a change, the very thinking thereof shall not onely bee foolishe and superfluous, but also hurtfull. But if thou bende not thine eyes onely to one citie, but looke about or behold the whole world together, or at least spreade abroad thy sight into farther distances of coūtries, without doubt thou shalt find that this is not vnprofitably appointed by the prouidence of God, that diuerse coūtries should be ruled by diuerse kindes of gouernment. For as the elementes hang together but by an vnegall temperature, so countries also are with their certaine inequality very well kept in order. Howbeit al these things also are spoken in vaine to them whome the will of the Lorde shal satisfie. For if it be his pleasure to set kinges ouer kingdomes, Senates, or officers ouer free cities, whosoeuer he maketh rulers in the places where we are cōuersant, it is our ductie to shew our selues yeelding and obedient vnto them.

The office of the magistrate reaching vnto both tables of the lawe.

9 Now the office of Magistrates is in this place to be declared by the way, of what sort it is described by the worde of God, and in what things it consisteth. If the scripture did not teach, ỳ it extendeth to both the tables of ỳ law, we might learne it out of the prophane writers. For none hath intreated of the ductie of Magistrats, of making of lawes and of publike weale, that hath not begon at religion and the worshipping of God. And so haue they all confessed, that no policie can be happily framed, vnlesse the first care be of godlinesse: and that those lawes be preposterous which neglecting ỹ right or God, doe prouide onely for men. Sith therefore with al the Philosophers religion hath the first place, & sith the same hath alway bin obserued by the vniuersall consent of all nations, let Christian princes and magistrates bee ashamed of their slouthfulnes, if they endeuour not themselues to this care. And we haue already shewed, that this dutie is specially enioyned them of God: as it is meete, that they shoulde imploye their trauell to defende and maintaine his honour, whose vicegerentes they bee, and by whose benefite they gouerne. For this cause also cheefly are the holy kings praised in scripture, for that they restored ỹ worship of God being corrupted or ouerthrowen, or toke care of religion, that it might florish pure and safe vnder them.

Iud. 22.25. But contrariwise ỹ holy historie reckeneth states without gouernors, among faultes, saying that there was no king in Israel, and that therefore euerie mã did what pleased himselfe. Whereby their follie is confuted, which woulde haue them, neglecting the care of God, onelie to applie themselues to bee iudges of law among mẽ. As though God appointed gouernours in his name to decide controuersies, and omitted that which was of much weightier importance, that he himselfe should be worshipped according to the prescribed rule of his lawe. But a desire to innouate all thinges without punishmẽt moueth troublesome men to this point, that they wish all reuengers of the breach of peace to be taken away. As for so much as pertaineth to the secõd table, Ieremie warneth kings, to do iudgement and righteousnes, to deliuer the forceablie oppressed frõ the hãd of the false accuser, not to grieue ỹ strãger and widow, not to do wrong, and not to shed innocẽt blood. To the same purpose maketh the exhortation which is read in the 82. Psalme, that they should render right to the poore and needy, acquite the poore and needie, deliuer the poore and needy from the hand of the oppressor. And Moses giueth charge to the Princes whom he had set in his stead: let them heare the

Ier. 22.3.

Deut. 1.16. Deut. 17.16. cause of their brethrẽ, and iudge betweene a man and his brother & a strãger, and not know faces in iudgement, let them heare as wel the litle as the great, and be not afraid of any man: because it is the iudgement of God. But I speake not of these things: that kinges should not get to themselues multitudes of horses, not cast their mindes to couetousnesse, not to be lifted vp aboue their brethren: that they may be continually busied in studying vpon the law of the Lorde all the dayes of their life: that Iudges swarue not to the one side, nor receiue giftes: because in declaring here the office of magistrates, my purpose is not so much to instruct the magistrates themselues, as to teach other what Magistrates bee, and to what ende they are set of God. Wee see therefore that they be ordeined, defenders and reuengers of innocence, modestie, honestie, and quietnesse, whose onely endeuour should bee

Psal. 101. to prouide for the eõmon safety and peace of all men. Of which vertues Dauid professeth ỹ he wil be an examplar, when he shalbe aduanced to the royall seate: that is, that hee will not consent to any euill doinges, but abhorre wicked men, slaunderers, and proude men, and get to himselfe from eche where honest and faithfull men. But sith they cannot performe this, vnlesse they defend good men from the wrongs of the euil, let them helpe the good with succour and defence, let them also be armed with power whereby they may seuerally suppresse open euil doers and wicked men by whose lewdnes the common quiet is troubled or vexed. For we throughly find this by experience which Solon said, that cõmon weales consist of reward & punishmẽt, & that when those be taken away, the whole discipline of cities faileth & is dissolued. For the care of equitie, & iustice waxeth cold in the minds of many vnlesse there be due honor readie for vertue: neither can the wilfulnesse of wicked men be restrained but by seueritie and chastisement of paines.

And these two partes the prophet comprehendeth, when he biddeth kings and other gouernours to do iudgement and righteousnes. Righteosnes is, to take into charge of tuition, to embrace, to defend, to reuenge, to deliuer the innocent. Iudgement is, to withstand the boldnes of wicked men, to represse their violence, to punish their offences. Ier. 21, 12. and 22. 3.

10 But here, as it seemeth, doth arise a high and hard question. If by the law of God all Christians are forbidden to kil, and the Prophet prophecieth of the holy mount of God, that is, the Church, that in it they shall not afflict nor hurt: how many magistrates be togither both godly & blood shedders? But if we vnderstand, that the Magistrate in executing of punishments, doth nothing of himselfe, but executeth the verie selfe iudgements of God, wee shalbe nothing combred with this dout. The lawe of the Lorde forbiddeth to kill: least manslaughter should be vnpunished, the lawe maker him selfe giueth to the ministers the sworde in their hande, which they should drawe forth against all manslayers. To afflict and to hurt, is not the doing of the godly: but this is not to hurt, not to afflict, by the Lordes commaundement to reuenge the afflictions of the godly. I would to God that this were alway present before our mindes, that nothing is here done by the rashnesse of man, but all things by the authoritie of God that commaundeth, which going before vs, we neuer swarue out of the right way. Vnlesse perhaps there be a bridle put vpon the righteousnesse of God, that it may not punish wicked doings. But if it be not lawfull to appoint any law to ir, why shall we cauill against the ministers of it? They beare not the sworde in vayne, sayeth Paul: for they be the ministers of God to wrath, reuengers to euil doers. Rom. 13. 4. Therefore if Princes & other rulers know that nothing shalbe more acceptable to God than their obedience, let them applie this ministerie, if they desire to shewe their godlinesse, righteousnesse, & vncotruptnesse allowable to God. With this affection was Moses led, when knowing himselfe appointed by the power of the Lorde to bee the deliuerer of his people, hee layde his handes vpon the Aegyptian. Againe, when by slaying of three thousand men in one day, he tooke vengeance of the sacriledge of the people. Dauid also when nye to the ende of his life he gaue commaundement to Salomon his sonne to slay Ioab & Semei. Whereupon he also rehearseth this among the vertues of a king, to slay the wicked of the lande, that all workers of wickednes, may be driuen out of the city of God. To which purpose also pertaineth the praise that is giuen to Salomon. Thou hast loued righteousnes and hast hated wickednesse. How doth that milde and gentle nature of Moses burne out into so great cruelitie, that being sprinkled and embrued with the blood of his brethen, he runneth throughout the compe tonewe slaughters: How doth Dauid, a man of so great gentlenes in all his life, among his last breathings

It is an abomination with kings, ſaith Solomon, to doe iniquitie, becauſe his throne is ſtabliſhed in righteouſneſſe. Againe, The king which ſitteth in the throne of iudgement ſpreadeth his eyes vpon euerie euill man. Againe, A wiſe king ſcattereth the wicked and turneth them vpon the wheele. Againe, Take away the droſſe from the ſiluer, and there ſhall come foorth a veſſell to the melter: take away the wicked man from the ſight of the king, and his throne ſhalbe faſt ſet in righteouſnes. Againe, he that iuſtifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the righteous, both are abomination to the Lorde. Againe: A rebellious man purchaſeth euill to himſelfe, and a cruell meſſenger is ſent vnto him. Againe, who ſo ſayeth to the wicked man, thou art righteous, him peoples and nations do curſe. Now if their true righteouſnes be, with drawen ſworde to purſue guiltie and wicked men: let them put vp their ſworde, and holde their handes pure from blood, while in the meane time deſperate men do range with murthers and ſlaughters: then they ſhall make themſelues guiltie of moſt great wickedneſſe, ſo much leſſe ſhall they get thereby the praiſe of goodneſſe and righteouſneſſe. Onelie let there be no preciſe and cruell rigorouſneſſe, and that iudgement ſeate which may worthily be called the rocke of accuſed men. For I am not hee that either fauour extreeme crueltie, or do thinke that righteous iudgemẽt can be pronounced, but while clemencie the beſt and ſureſt counſeller of kings, as Salomon affirmeth, the preſeruer of the kings throne is aſſiſtent, which a certaine man in old time truely ſayd to be the principall gift of Princes. Yet a magiſtrate muſt take heede to both, that he do neither with rigorouſnes of minde, wound rather than heale, or by ſuperſtitious affectation of clemẽcie fall into a moſt cruell gentlenes, if with ſoft and looſe tendernes he bee diſſolute to the deſtruction of many men. For this was in old time not without cauſe commonly ſpoken vnder the empire of Nerua, that it is in deede euil to liue vnder a prince vnder whome nothing is lawfull, but much worſe vnder whome all thinges are lawfull.

The lawfulneſſe of warres iuſtly taken in hand.

11 But ſith ſometime kings and peoples muſt of neceſſitie take ſworde in hande to execute ſuch publique vengeance, by this reaſon wee may alſo iudge that the warres are lawfull which are ſo taken in hand. For if there be power deliuered them, whereby they may maintaine quiet to their dominion, whereby they may keepe downe the ſeditious ſtirres of vnquiet men, whereby they may helpe the forceablie oppreſſed, whereby they may puniſh euill doing: can they at fitter ſeaſõs vtter it, thã to ſuppreſſe his rage which troubleth both priuately the reſt of euery man, and the common quiet of all men, which ſeditiouſly maketh vprores, which committeth violent oppreſſions and haynous euill doings? If they ought to bee preſeruers and defenders of the lawes, they muſt alſo ouerthrowe the enterpriſes of all them by whoſe wicked doing the diſcipline of lawes is corrupted. Yea if they worthily puniſh thoſe theeues whoſe iniuries haue extended onelie to a fewe: ſhall they ſuffer a whole countrey to bee without puniſhment vexed and waſted with robberies? For it maketh no difference whether he be a king or one of the baſeſt of the commonaltie, that inuadeth an others country into which he hath no right, & ſpoileth it like an enemie: all are alike to be taken & puniſhed for robbers. This therefore both naturall equitie, & the rule of dutie teacheth that Princes are armed not onlie to reſtraine priuate duties with iudiciall puniſhments, but alſo to defend with war the dominions committed to their charge, if at anie time they be enimilike aſſailed. And ſuch wars the holie ghoſt by manie teſtimonies of ſcripture declareth to be lawfull.

12 If it be obiected againſt me, that in the newe Teſtament is neither witneſſe nor example which teacheth that war is a thing lawful for Chriſtians: firſt I anſwere, that the ſame rule of making war which was in old time remaineth alſo at this day, and ỳ on the contrary ſide there is no cauſe that may debar magiſtrates from defending of their ſubiectes. Secondlie that an expreſſe declaration of theſe matters is not to be ſought in the writings of the Apoſtles, where their purpoſe is not to frame a ciuil ſtate, but to ſtabliſh the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt. Laſt of all I ſay that in them alſo is ſhewed by the way, that Chriſt hath by his cõming changed nothing in this behalf. For if Chriſtian doctrine (ỳ I may ſpeak in Auguſtines own words) condemned al warres, this ſhould rather haue bin ſaid to ſouldiers when they asked counſell of ſaluation, that they ſhould caſt away their weapons, and vtterly withdraw themſelues from the warre. But it was ſaid to them: ſtrike no man do no man wrong, let your wages ſuffice you. Whome he taught ỳ their wages ought to ſuffice them, he did verily not forbid them to be warriers. But al magiſtrates ought here to take great heed, that they nothing at al follow their own deſires: but rather, if they muſt puniſh, let them not be born away with a headlong angrineſſe, let them not be violently caried with hatred, let them not broil with vnappeaſable rigor, yea let them (as Auguſtine ſaith) pity cõmon nature in him in whome they puniſh his priuate fault. Or if they muſt put on armor againſt the enemie, that is, the armed robber, let them not lightly ſeeke occaſion thereof, nor take it being offered vnleſſe they bee driuen to it by extreme neceſſitie. For if we ought ſo performe much more than that heathen man required, which would haue warre to ſeem a ſeeking of peace: truelie we ought firſt to attempt all things ere we ought to trie the matter by warre. Finallie in both kindes let them not ſuffer themſelues to be caried with any priuate affection, but be led onely with common feeling. Otherwiſe they do verie ill abuſe their power, which is giuen them, not for their own commoditie, but for others benefit and miniſterie. Moreouer of the ſame righteſull rule of making warre hangeth the order both of garriſons, & leagues and other ciuill fortifications. Garriſons I call thoſe that are placed in townes to defend the borders of the countrie: Leagues, which are made with Princes adioyning for this couenant ỳ if any trouble happen in their landes they may mutually help them, and ioyne their forces in cõmon together to ſuppreſſe the common enemies of mankinde: Ciuill fortificatiõ, whoſe vſe is in the arte of warre.

Cicero of duties.

The lawfulneſſe of tributes and Taxes vvith the duties of Princes in that reſpect.

13 This alſo I will laſt of all adde, that tributes & taxes are the lawfull reuenues of princes, which they may chiefly employ to ſuſtain ỳ cõmon charges of their office: which yet they may likewiſe vſe to their priuate royaltie which is after a certain manner conioined with honor of the princely state that they beare. As we see that Dauid, Ezechias, Iosias, Iosaphat, and other holie kinges, and Ioseph also and Daniel, according to the state of the person that they did beare, were without offence of godlines sumptuous of the common charge, and wee read in Ezechiel ỳ there was a verie large portion of land assigned to the kinges. Where although hee paint out the spirituall kingdome of Christ, yet he fetcheth the examplar of his similitude from the lawfull kingdome of men. But yet so that Princes againe on their behalfes should remember, that their treasure chambers are not so much their owne priuate cofers, as the treasuries of the whole people (for so Paul testifieth) which they may not without manifest wrong prodigally waste or spoyle: or rather that it is the verie bloud of the people, which not to spare, is moste cruell vnnaturalnesse: and let them thinke, that their impositions, and subsidies and other kindes of tributes, are nothing but the supportes of publike necessitie, wherwith to wearie the poore communaltie without cause, is tyrannicall extortion. These things do not encourage Princes to wastfull expence and riot, (as verily there is no neede to adde a firebrande to their lustes that are of themselues too much alreadie kindled) but sith it much behooueth that they shoulde with pure conscience before God be bould to do all that they are bould to do, least with wicked bouldnes they come into despising of God, they must be taught how much is lawfull for them. Neither is this doctrine superfluous for priuate men, that they should not rashly and stubbornly giue them selues leaue to grudge at any expenses of princes, although they exceede common and ciuill measure.

which

Ezech. 48. 21.

Rom. 13. 6.

A false and foolish opinion that a state can not bee well ordered by the cõmon lawes of nations except the ciuill lawes of Moses be obserued.

14 Next to the magistrate in ciuil states are lawes, the most strong sinewes of common wealthes, or (as Cicero calleth them according to Plato) the soules, without which the Magistrate can not stande, as they againe without the Magistrate haue no liuelie force. Therefore nothing coulde be more truelie saide, than that the lawe is a dumbe Magistrate, and that the Magistrat is a liuing law. But whereas I promised to speak, with what lawes a Christian ciuill state ought to be ordered, there is no cause why any man should look for a long discourse of the best kind of lawes, which both should be infinite, and pertained not this present purpose and place: yet in a fewe wordes, and as it were by the way, I will touch what lawes it may vse godlily before God, and be rightlie gouerned by them among men. Which selfe thing I had rather to haue vtterly passed ouer with silence, if I did not vnderstand that many do herein perillously erre. For there be some that deny that a common weale is well ordered, which neglecting the ciuill lawes of Moses is gouerned by the common lawes of nations. Howe dangerous and troublesome this sentence is, let other men consider, it shall bee enough for me to haue shewed that it is false and foolish. That common diuision is to be kept, which diuideth the whole lawe of God published into morall, ceremoniall, and iudiciall lawes: and all the partes are to be seuerally considered, that we may knowe what of them pertaineth to vs, & what not. Neither in the meane time let any man bee combred with this doubt, that iudicials and ceremonials also pertayne to the morall lawes. For although the olde writers which haue taught this diuision, were not ignoraunt that these two latter partes had their vse about maners, yet because they might be changed and abrogate, the morals remaining safe they did not call them morals. They called that first part peculiarly by that name, without which can not stand the true holinesse of manners, and the vnchangeable rule of liuing rightlie.

15 Therefore the morall lawe (that I may first begin thereat) sith it is contained in two chiefe points, of which the one commaundeth simply to worship God with pure faith and godlinesse, and the other to imbrace men with vnfained loue, is the true and eternall rule of righteousnes prescribed to the men of all ages & times that wil be willing to frame their life to the will of God. For this is his eternall and vnchangeable will, that he himselfe should be worshipped of vs al, & that we should mutually loue one another. The ceremoniall law was the schooling of the Iewes, wherewith it pleased the Lord to exercise the certaine childhood of that people, till that time of fulnes come, wherein he would to the full manifestly shew his wisedome to the earth, & deliuer the trueth of those things which then were shadowed with figures. The iudicial law giuen to them for an order of ciuil state, gaue certaine rules of equitie and righteousnesse, by which they might behaue themselues harmlesly & quietly together. And as that exercise of ceremonies properly pertained in deed to the doctrine of godlines) namely which kept the Church of the Iewes in the worshippe and religion of God) yet it might be distinguished from godlines it selfe: so this form of iudicial orders (although it tended to no other end, but how the selfe same charitie might best be kept which is commaunded by the eternall lawe of God) yet had a certaine thing differing from the verie commandement of louing. As therfore the Ceremonies might be abrogate, godlinesse remaining safe and vndestroyed: so these iudiciall ordinances also being taken away, the perpetuall duties and commaundementes of charitie may continue. If this bee true, verily there is libertie left to euery nation to make such lawes as they shall foresee to bee profitable for them: which yet must bee framed after the perpetuall rule of charitie, that they may in deede varie in forme, but haue the same reason. For I think that those barbarous and sauage lawes, as were those that gaue honor to theeues, that allowed common copulations, & other both much more filthie and more against reason, are not to be taken for lawes: forasmuch as they are not onelie against all righteousnesse, but also against natural gentlenes & kindnesse of men.

Men of all ages bound to the morall lawe of God, the ceremoniall giuen for a time, iudicial instituted of God for them not for all men to be gouerned by. Gal 4.4.

16 This which I haue said shall be plain, if in al lawes we behold these two things as wee ought, the making and the equitie of the lawe, vpon the reason whereof the making it selfe is founded and staieth. Equitie, because it is naturall, can be but one of all lawes: and therefore one lawe, according to the kinde of matter, ought to be the propounded end to al lawes. As for making of Lawes, because they haue certaine circumstances vppon which they partly hang, if so that they tend all together to one marke of equitie, though they be diuers it maketh no matter. Now sith it is certaine that the law of God which we call morall is nothing else but a testimonie of the naturall law, and of that conscience which is engrauen of God in the mindes of men, the whole rule of this equitie whereof wee nowe speake is set footh therein,

The diuersitie of lawes, & the necessitie that they should bee diuers, as times & places & occasiõs differ.

therein. Therefore it alone also must be both the marke and rule and ende of all lawes. Whatsoeuer lawes shalbe framed after that rule, directed to that marke, and limitted in that end, there is no cause why wee should disalowe them, howsoeuer they otherwise differ from the Iewish lawe or one from another. The lawe of God forbiddeth to steale. What peine was appointed for thefts in the ciuile state of the Iewes, is to be seene in Exodus. The most auncient lawes of other nations punished theft with recompence of double: the lawes that followed afterward, made difference betweene manifest theft and not manifest. Some proceeded to banishment, some to whipping, some at last to the punishment of death. False witnesse was among ỹ Iewes punished with recompence of egall paine, in some places only with greate shame, in some places with hanging, in other some with the Crosse. Manslaughter all lawes vniuersallie doe reuenge with bloude, yet with diuerse kindes of death. Against adulterers in some places were ordeined seuerer paines, in some places lighter. Yet we see how with such diuersitie all tende to the same ende. For with one mouth they altogither pronounce punishment against al the offences which haue bin condemned by the eternal law of God, as manslaughters, thefts, adulterie, false witnessings: but in the maner of punishment they agree not. Neither is the same needfull, nor yet expedient. There is some countrie, which vnlesse it shewe rigour with horrible examples against manslayers, shoulde immediatly bee destroyed with murders and robberies. There is some time that requireth the sharpnesse of paines to be encreased. If there arise any trouble in a common weale, the euils that are wont to grow thereof must be amended with newe ordinances. In time of warre all humanitie woulde in the noyse of armour fall away, vnlesse there were cast into men an vnwonted feare of punishmentes. In barennesse, in pestilence, vnlesse greater seueritie be vsed, all thinges will come to ruine. Some nation is more bent to some certaine vice, vnlesse it be most sharplie suppressed. Howe malicious and enuious shall he bee against the publike profite, that shall be offended with such diuersitie which is most fit to holde fast the obseruing of the lawe of God? For, that which some say, that the Lawe of God giuen by Moses is dishonoured, when it beeing abrogate, newe are preferred aboue it, is moste vaine. For neither are other preferred aboue it, when they are more allowed, not in simple comparison, but in respect of the estate of the times, place, and nation: neither is that abrogate which was neuer made for vs. For the Lord gaue not that law by the hand of Moses, which should be published into all nations, & flourish euerie where: but when hee had receiued the nation of the Iewes into his faith, defence, and protection, hee willed to bee a lawmaker peculiarlie to them, and like a wise lawmaker, he had in making of his lawes a certain singular consideration of them.

Exod. 22. 1.

What profite Christians receiue by lawes iudicial orders & magistrates.

17 Now remaineth that we consider that which we haue set in the last place, what profit of lawes, iudicial orders, and magistrates, commeth to the common fellowship of Christians. Wherewith also is coupled another question, how much priuate men ought to yeeld to magistrates, & how far their obedience ought to proceede. Many thought the office of Magistrate to bee superfluous among Christians, because forsooth they cannot godlily craue their ayde, namely sith they are forbidden to reuenge, to sue in the lawe, and to haue any controuersie. But whereas Paul contrariwise plainely testifieth, that he is the minister of God to vs for good: wee thereby vnderstand, that he is so ordeined of God, that we beeing defended by his hande & succours against the maliciousnes and iniuries of mischieuous men, may liue a quiet & assured life. If he be in vain giuen vs of the Lord for defence, vnlesse it be lawfull for vs to vse such benefite: it sufficiently appeareth that he may also without vngodlines be called vpon & sued vnto. But here I must haue to do with two kindes of men. For there be many men that boile with so great rage of quarelling at the law, that they neuer haue quiet with themselues vnlesse they haue strife with other. And their controuersies they exercise with deadly sharpnesse of hatred, and with mad greedines to reuenge & hurt, & do pursue them with vnappeasable stiffenesse euen to the very destruction of their aduersarie. In the meane time, that they may not bee thought to doe any thing but rightfully, they defend such peruersnes with, colour of law. But though it be graunted thee to go to law with thy brother, yet thou maist not by and by hate him, not bee caried against him with furious desire to hurt him, not stubbornly to pursue him. Rom. 13. 4.

18 Let this therefore be said to such men, that the vse of lawes is lawefull, if a man do rightly vse it. And that the right vse both for the pleintife to sue, & for the defendaunt to defend, as if the defendant being summoned do appeare at an appointed day, & doth with such exception as he can, defend his cause without bitternesse, but onely with this affection to defende that which is his owne by law: and if the pleintife being vnworthily oppressed either in his person or his goods, do resort to the defence of the magistrate, make his complaint, and require that which is equitie and conscience, but farre from all greedy will to hurt or reuenge, farre from sharpenesse and hatred, farre from burning heate of contention, but rather ready to yeeld of his owne and to suffer any thing, than to be carried with an enemilike mind against his aduersarie. Contrariwise when being filled with malice of mind, corrupted with enuie, kindled with wrath, breathing out reuenge, or finally so enflamed with the heate of the contention, they giue ouer any parte of charitie, the whole proceeding euen of a most iust cause can not but be wicked. For this ought to be a determined principle to all Christians, that a controuersie though it be neuer so righteous, can neuer be rightly pursued of any man, vnlesse hee beare as good will and loue to his aduersarie, as if the matter which is in the controuersie were already concluded and ended by composition. Some man will heere peraduenture say, that such moderation is so neuer vsed in going to law, that it should be like a miracle if any such were founde I graunt in deede, as the manners of these times bee, that there is seldome sene an example of a good contender in law, yet the thing it selfe being defiled with addition of no euill, ceaseth not to be good and pure. But when wee heare that the helpe of the Magistrate is a holie gift of God: we must so much the more diligently take heede, that it be not defiled by our fault.

A rule according vvhereunto both pleintifes and defendants may vse the help of the magistrate in a question of their right vvell and lavvfully.

19 As for them that precisely condemn all contendings at law, let thē vnderstand that they do therwithall despise the holy ordinance of God, and a gift

All contending at lavve not preciselie to be condemned.

gift of that kinde of giftes which may bee cleane to the cleane: vnleſſe perad-uenture they will accuſe Paul of wicked doing, which did both put away Act.22.1.& 24.12.& 25.10. from himſelfe the ſlanders of his accuſers with declaring alſo their deceit and maliciouſneſſe, and in iudgement claimed for himſelf the prerogatiue of the citie of Rome, and when neede was he appealed from an vnrighteous gouernour to the Emperours iudgement ſeate. Neither withſtandeth it, ỹ all Chriſtians are forbidden to deſire reuenge, which we alſo do driue farre away from Chriſtian iudgement ſeates. For, if the contention bee about a common caſe, he goeth not the right way that doth not with innocent ſimplicitie, commit his cauſe to the iudge as to a common defender, thinking nothing leſſe than to render mutuall recompence of euill, which is the affection of reuenge: or if any matter of life and death, or any great criminal action be commenced, wee require that the accuſer bee ſuch a one, as commeth in to the court being taken with no boiling heat of reuenge, and touched with no diſpleaſure of priuate iniurie, but onelie hauing in minde to withſtand the enterpriſes of a miſcheeuous man, that they may not hurt the common weale. But if thou take away a reuenging minde, there is no offence done againſt that commaundement whereby reuenge is forbidden to Chriſtians. But they are not onelie forbidden to deſire reuenge, but they are alſo commaunded to waite for the hande of the Lorde, which promiſeth that he wil be a preſent reuenger for the oppreſſed & afflicted: but they doe preuent all reuenge of the heauenly defendor, which require helpe at the magiſtrates hand either for themſelues or other. Not ſo. For wee muſt
Rom.13.4. thinke that the Magiſtrates reuenge is not the reuenge of man but of God, which (as Paul ſaith) he extendeth and exerciſeth by the miniſterie of man for our good.

The patience vvhich Chriſtians are vniowned to vſe is no let but that they may alſo vſe the magiſtrate againſt the iniuries of vnuſt men.

20 And no more do we diſagree with the wordes of Chriſt, by which he forbiddeth to reſiſt euill, and commaundeth to turne the right cheeke to him that hath giuen a blowe on the left, and to ſuffer him to take away thy cloke that taketh away thy coate. He willeth in deede there that the minds of his ſhoulde ſo much abhorre from deſire of recompenſing like for like, that they ſhould ſooner ſuffer double iniury to be done to themſelues, than deſire to reacquite it: from which patience neither do we alſo lead them away. For Chriſtians truely ought to bee a kinde of men made to beare reproches and iniuries, open to the malice, deceits, and mockeages of naughty men: and not that onelie but alſo they muſt be bearers of all theſe euilles, that is to ſay ſo framed with al their heartes, that hauing receiued one diſpleaſure they make thẽſelues ready for another, promiſing to themſelues, nothing in their whole life but ỹ bearing of a continual croſſe. In the meane time alſo they muſt doe good to them that do thẽ wrong, and wiſh well to thoſe that curſe them, and (which is their onely victorie) ſtriue to ouercome euill with good. Beeing ſo minded they will not ſeeke eye for eye tooth for tooth, as the Phariſees taught their diſciples to deſire reuenge, but (as we are taught of Chriſte) they will ſo ſuffer their body to bee mangled, and their goods to bee maliciouſly taken from them, that they will forgiue, and of their own accord pardon thoſe euils ſo ſoon as they are done to them. Yet this euenneſſe and moderation of mindes ſhall not withſtande, but that the friendship toward their enimies remaining safe, they may vse ȳ help of the magistrate to the preseruing of their goods, or for zeale of publike commoditie may sue a giltie and pestilent man to be punished, whome they know that he can not bee amended but by death. For Augustine truely expoundeth that all these commaundements tend to this end, that a righteous and godly man should be ready to beare patiently the malice of them whom he seeketh to haue made good men, that rather ȳ number of ȳ good may encrease, not that he should with like malice adde himselfe also to the number of the euil: then, that they more pertain to the preparation of the heart, which is inwardly, than to the worke which is done openly: that in secrete may be kept patience of minde with good will, but openly that may be done which we see may bee profitable to them to whome wee ought to beare good will. Epist. 5. ad Marcel.

21 But this which is wont to be obiected, that contendings in lawe are altogether condemned of Paul, is also false: It may easily bee perceiued by his wordes, that there was an innumerable rage of striuing at lawe in the Church of the Corinthians: so farre forth that they did make the Gospell of Christ and the whole religion which they professed, open to the cauillations & euil speaking of the wicked. This is the first thing that Paul blameth in them, that by their intemperance of contentions they brought the gospel in slander among the vnbeleeuers. And then this point also, that in such sort they striued among themselues brethren with brethren. For they were so farre from bearing of wrongs, that they greedily gaped one for an others goods, prouoked one another, & being vnprouoked did hurt. Therfore hee inueigheth against that rage of contending, and not simply against all controuersies. But he pronounceth that it is a fault or a weakenesse, that they did not rather suffer losse of their goods than to trauel euen to contentions for the preseruing of them: namely when they were so easily mooued with euerie damage, and for most small causes did runne to the court of lawe and to controuersies, he saith that this is a proofe that they were of a mind too readie to anger & not well framed to patience. Christians verily ought to do this, that they had alway rather to yeelde of their owne right than to go to law, from whence they cā scarcely get out again but with a mind too much moued and kindled to hatred of their brother. But when a man seeth that without losse of charitie he may defend his owne, the losse whereof shoulde be a sore hindrance vnto him: if he do so he offendeth nothing against this saying of Paul Finallie (as wee haue taught in the beginning) charitie shall giue euerie man best counsell, without which whatsoeuer controuersies are taken in hande, and beyond which whatsoeuer doe proceede, wee holde it out of controuersie that they be vniust and wicked. All contendings at lawe not condemned by the Apostle. 1. Cor. 6. 6.

22 The first dutie of subiects toward their magistrates is, to think most honourablie of their office, namelie which they acknowledge to be a iurisdiction committed of God, and therefore to esteeme them and reuerence them as the ministers & deputies of God. For a man may finde some, which yeelde themselues verie obedient to their magistrates, and would not that there were not some whom they should obey, because they so know it to be expedient for the common benefite: but the magistrates themselues they thinke The reuerend estimation which subiects ought to haue of their magistrates.

thinke no otherwise than of certaine necessarie euils. But Peter requireth somewhat more of vs, when he commaundeth that the king be honored, & Salomon, when he commaundeth God and the king to bee feared For Peter vnder the word of honoring containeth a syncere and weldeeming estimation: and Salomon ioyning the king with God, sheweth that he is full of a certaine holy reuerence & dignitie. This is also a notable commendation in Paul, that we obey not only for wrath but for conscience. Whereby he meaneth that subiects ought to be led not onelie with feare of princes & rulers to bee holden in their subiection (as they are wont to yeelde to their armed enimie, which see that vengeance shall readily be taken vpon them if they resist) but: because the obediences that are shewed to them are shewed to God himselfe, forasmuch as their power is of God. I speake not of the men, as if the visor of dignitie did couer foolishnesse, or sluggishnesse, or cruelties, or wicked manners and full of mischieuous doing: but I say that the decree it selfe is worthie of honour & reuerence: that whosoeuer bee rulers may be esteemed with vs, & haue reuerence, in respect of their being rulers.

1. Pet. 2. 17. Prou. 24. 21. Rom. 13. 5.

The obedience which we owe vnto magistrates in our outwarde actions.

23 Of this then also followeth another thing: that with minds bent to the honoring of them, they declare their obedience in profe to them: whether it be to obey their proclamations, or to pay tribute, or to take in hand publike offices and charges that serue for common defence, or to do any other of their commandements. Let euery soule (saith Paul) bee subiect to the higher powers. For he that resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. The same Paul writeth to Titus: Warne them that they be subiect to rulers and powers, that they obey the Magistrates, ỹ they be ready to euery good worke. And Peter saith, Bee ye subiect to euerie humaine creature (or rather as I translate it, Ordinance) for the Lordes sake, either to the king as moste excellent, or to the rulers that are sent by him, to the punishment in deede of euill doers, but to the praise of well doers. Moreouer ỹ they should testify that they do not faine subiection, but are syncerely and heartily subiect, Paul addeth that they should commend to God the safety and prosperitie of them vnder whom they liue. I exhort (saith he) that there bee made prayers: beseechings, intercessions, thankesgiuinges for all men, for kinges and for al that be set in superioritie, that we may liue a peaceable and quiet life with all godlinesse and honestie. Neither let any man here deceiue himselfe. For sith the Magistrate can not be resisted, but that GOD himselfe must also bee resisted: although it may bee thought that an vnarmed magistrate may freelie be despised, yet God is armed which wil strongly take vengeance on the despising of himselfe. Moreouer vnder this obedience I conteine moderation, which priuate men ought to binde themselues to keepe in cases touching the publike state, that they do not of their owne head entermedle in publike businesses, or rashly breake into the office of the Magistrate, and enterprise nothing publikely. If any thing shall in a publike ordinance be behouefull to bee amended, let not themselues raise vprores, nor put their handes to the doing of it, which they all ought to haue fast bounde in this behalfe: but lette them commit it to the judgement of the magistrate, whose hande alone is herein at libertie. I meane, that they presume to doe nothing vncommanded. For when the commandement of the ruler is adioyned, then are they also furnished with publike authoritie. For as they are wont to call the counsellers of a king, his eares and eyes: so not vnfitly a man may call them the handes of the prince, whom by his commandement he setteth in authoritie for the doing of things.

The euill dealings of magistrates the cause vvhy men thinke they may vvithdraw both reuerence and obedience from them.

24 Now forasmuch as we haue hitherto described a magistrate such as is indeede the same that he is called, namely the father of the countrey, and (as the poet calleth him) the pastor of the people, the keeper of peace, the protector of righteousnesse, the reuenger of innocence: he is worthily to be iudged a mad man, that alloweth not such a gouernment. But whereas this is in a manner the experience of all ages, that of princes some being careles of all things to the foreseeing whereof they ought to haue beene heedfully bent, do without all care slouthfully wallowe in delites: other some addicted to their gaine, doe set out to sale all lawes, priuileges, iudgementes, and graunces: othersome spoile the poore communalie of monie which they may after waste vpon mad prodigall expendings: othersome exercise meere robberies, in pilling of houses, defiling of virgins and matrones, murdering of innocentes: many cannot be perswaded that such should bee acknowledged for princes, whose authoritie they ought to obey so far as they may. For in so great hainous vnworthinesse among doings so much contrarie to the duetie not onely for a magistrate, but also of a man, they beholde no forme of the image of God which ought to shine in a magistrate: when they see no token of that minister of God, which was giuen for praise to the good & for vengeance to the euill: so neither doe they also acknowledge such a gouernour, whose dignitie and authoritie the scripture commendeth vnto vs. And truely this feeling of affection hath alway beene naturally plãted in the minds of men, no lesse to hate and abhorre tyrants, than to loue and honour lawfull kinges.

Subiection due from vs euen to those magistrates vvho towardes vs neglect their duty and abuse their authority.

25 But if wee looke to the worde of God, it will lead vs further, that wee be subiect not only to the gouernment of those princes which execute their office towarde vs well and with such faithfulnesse as they ought, but also of all them, which by what meane soeuer it be, haue the dominion in possession although they performe nothing lesse than that which pertaineth to the duetie of princes. For though the Lord testifieth that the magistrate is a speciall great gift of his liberalitie for preseruing of the safetie of men, and appointeth to magistrates themselues their bounds: yet he doth therewithall declare, that of what sort soeuer they bee, they haue not their authoritie but from him: that those in deede, which rule for benefite of the common weale, are true examplars and paternes of his bountifulnesse: that they that rule vniustly and wilfully, are raised vp by him to punishe the wickednes of the people: that all egally haue that maiestie wherewith hee hath furnished a lawfull power. I will proceede no further, till I haue added some certaine testimonies of that point. Yet we neede not much to labor to proue that a wicked king is the wrath of God vpon the earth, forasmuch as I thinke that no man will say the contrarie, and otherwise there should bee no more said of a king than of a cõmõ robber that violenly taketh away thy goods, and of an adulterer that defileth thy bed, of a murderer that seeketh to kill thee, whereas the scripture reckeneth all such calamities among the curses of God. But let vs rather tarie vpon prouing that which doeth not so easily settle in the mindes of men: that in a most naughtie man, & most vnworthie of all honour if so that he haue the publique power in possession, remaineth that noble and diuine power which the Lord hath by his word giuen to the ministers of his righteousnes and iudgement, and therefore that he ought of his subiects to bee had in as great reuerence and estimation, so much as pertaineth to publique obedience, as they woulde haue the best King if he were giuen them.

The prouidence of God in disposing kingdomes and vsing the seruice of wycked kings.

24 First I woulde haue the readers to perceiue & diligently marke that prouidence and singular doings of God, which is in the Scripture not without cause so oft rehearsed vnto vs, in distributing of kingdomes and making Kinges whome it pleaseth him. In Daniell, it is saide: The Lorde changeth times and courses of times, he casteth away and maketh kings. Againe: That ỳ liuing may know ỳ the Highest is mightie in the kingdom of mẽ, & he shal giue it to whõ he wil. With which maner of sentences wheras ỳ whole scripture aboundeth, yet ỳ same propheeie of Daniel specially swarmeth full. Now what maner of king was Nabuchadonezar, he that conquered Hierusalem, it is sufficiently knowen, namely a strong inuader and destroyer of other. Yet in Ezechiel the Lorde affirmeth that he gaue him the lande of Egypte for the seruice that hee had done to him in wasting it. And Daniel said to him. Thou king art the king of kings, to whõ the king of heauens hath giue a mightie, and strong, and glorious kingdome: to thee, I say, hee hath giuen it, and all the landes where dwel the children of men, the beasts of the wood and foules of the aire: hee hath deliuered them into thy hande, and hath made thee to beare rule ouer them. Againe hee saide to his sonne Belsasar: the highest God hath giuen to Nabuchadonezar thy Father kingdome and royaltie, honour and glorie: and by reason of the royaltie that he gaue him, all peoples, tribes, and languages were trembling and fearefull at his sighte. When we heare that a king is ordeined of God, let vs thereof call to remembrance those heauenly warnings concerning the honor and fearing of a king: then we shall not doubt to accompte, a most wicked tyraunt in the same place wherein the Lorde hath vouchsaued to set him. Samuell when he gaue warning to the people of Israel, what manner of thinges they shoulde suffer at the handes of their kinges, saide: This shalbe the right of the king that shal reigne ouer you: he shal take your sonnes and put them to his charior, to make them his horsemen, and to plowe his land, and reape his crop, and to make instrumentes of warre. He shall take your daughters, that they may be his dressers of ointmentes, his cookes and bakers. Your lands, your vineyardes, and your best Oliue plantes hee shall take away and giue to his bonde seruauntes. Hee shall take tithes of your seedes and vineyardes, and shall giue them to his eunuches and bonde seruauntes. Hee shall take away your bonde men, your bonde women and your asses, and set them to his worke. Yea and hee shall take tithes of your flockes, and ye shal be his bonde seruauntes. Verily kinges shoulde not haue done this of right, whome the lawe did verie wel instruct to al continence: but it was called a right ouer the people which it behooued them of necessitie to obey, and they might not resist it: as if Samuell had saide. The wilfulnesse of kinges shall runne to such licentiousnesse, which is shall not be your parte to resist, to whome this onely thing shalbe left, to obey their commandements and hearken to their worde.

The Iewes commaunded of God to yeelde honour vnto a proude and cruell king.

27 But cheiefly there is in Ieremie a notable place and worthy to be remembred, which although it be somewhat long, yet I will be content to rehearse, because it most plainly determineth this whole questiō. I haue made the earth and men, sayth the Lord, and the liuing creatures that are on the ouerface of the earth in my great strength and stretched out arme, and I wil deliuer it to him whome it pleaseth in mine eyes. And now therefore I haue giuen all these landes into the handes of Nabuchadnezar my seruaunt, and all nations and great kinges shall serue him, til the time thal come of that land. And it shalbe as a nation and a kingdome that hath not serued the king of Babel, I will visit that nation in sworde, famine, and pestilence. Wherefore serue ye the king of Babell and liue. We see with howe greate obedience the Lorde willed that cruel and proude tyraunt to be honored, for no other reason but because he possessed the kingdome. And the same was by the heauenly decree, that he was sette in the throne of the kingdome, and taken vp into kingly maiestie, which it was vnlawefull to violate. If wee haue this continually before our mindes and eyes, that euen the worst kings are ordeined by the same decree by which the authoritie of kinges is stablished these seditious thoughtes shall neuer come into our minde, that a king is to be handled according to his deseruings, & that it is not meet that we should shewe our selues subiects to him that doth not on his behalfe shew himselfe a king to vs.

Ier.27.5.

The reasons why the people of Israel were commaunded to honour euell kinges, do as effectually bind vs to the like duty.

28 In vaine shall any man obiect that this was a peculiar commaundement to the Israelits. For it is to be noted with what reason the Lord confirmeth it. I haue giuen (sayth he) the kingdome to Nabuchadnezar, Wherefore serue ye him and liue. To whomesoeuer therefore it shall bee certayne that the kingdome is giuen, let vs not dout that he is to be obeyed. And so soone as the Lord aduaunceth any man to the royall estate, hee therein declareth his will to vs that he will haue him reigne. For thereof are generall testimonies of the Scripture. Salomon in the xxviii. Chapter, Many Princes are because of the wickednesse of the people. Againe Iob in the xii. chap. He taketh away subiection from kings and girdeth them again with the girdle. But this being cōfessed, there remaineth nothing but that we must serue and liue. There is also in Ieremie the Prophete an other commaundement of the Lorde wherein he commaunded his people to seeke the peace of Babylon, whither they had beene ledde away captiue, and to pray to him for it, because in the peace of it should be their peace. Beholde the Israelites being spoiled of al their goods, plucked out of their houses, led away into exile, and cast into miserable bondage, are commaunded to pray for the safetie of the Conqueror: not as in other places we are commaunded to pray for our persecutors; but that the kingdome may be preserued to himselfe and quiet, that they themselues may also liue prosperously vnder him. So Dauid being alreadie appointed king by the ordinance of God, and annoynted with his holy oyle, whē he was without any his deseruing vnworthily persecuted of Saul, yet the head of him that layed waite for his life, he esteemed holy which the Lorde hath hallowed with the honour of kingdome. Farre bee it from me (saide he) that I should before the Lorde doe this thing to my Lord 1.Sam.24.7. the annointed of the Lord, that I should lay my hand vpon him, because he is the annointed of the Lord. Againe, My soule hath spared thee, and I haue

1.Sam.26.9. saide, I will not lay my hand vpon my Lorde, because hee is the annointed of the Lord. Againe, Who shall lay his hand vppon the annointed of ỹ Lord and shall bee innocent? So sure as the Lord liueth, vnlesse the Lorde strike him, or his day be come that he die, or he goe downe into battell: farre be it from me that I should lay my hand vpon the annointed of the Lord.

If princes breake their dueties, vve may not therefore transgresse ours.

29 Finally wee owe this affection of reuerence yea and deuotion to all our rulers, of what sort soeuer they be, which I do therefore the oftener repeate, that we may learne not to search what the men themselues bee, but take this for sufficient, that by the will of the Lorde they beare that personage in which the Lord himselfe hath imprinted and ingraued an inuiolable maiestie. But (thou wilt say) Rulers owe mutuall dueties to their subiectes. That I haue alreadie confessed. But if thou thereupon conclude, that obediences are to be rendred to none but to iust gouernors, thou art a foolish reasoner. For, husbandes also are bounde to their wiues and parentes to their children with mutuall dueties. Let parentes and husbands depart from their duetie: let parents shewe themselues so hard and vnpleasable to their children, whom they are forbidden to prouoke to anger, that Ephe.6.1. Ephe.5.26. 1.Pet.3.7. with their peeuishnes they do vnmeasurablie wearie them: let the husbands most despitefully vse their wiues, whome they are commaunded to loue, and to spare them as weake vessels: shall yet therefore either children be lesse obedient to their parents or wiues to their husbãds? but they are subiect both
Dan.9.7. to euill parentes and husbands and such as doe not their duetie. Yea, where as all ought rather to endeuor themselues not to looke behind them to the bagge hanging at their backe, that is, not to enquire one of anothers dueties, but euery man set before him that which is his owne duetie: this ought chiefly to haue place among those that are vnder the power of other. Wherfore if we be vnmercifully tormented of a cruell prince, if we be rauenously spoiled of a couetous or riotus Prince, if we be neglected of a slothful prince,
Pron.21.1. finally if wee be vexed for godlinesses sake of a wicked and vngodly Prince: let vs first call to minde the remembrance of our sinnes, which vndoubtedly are chastised with such scourges of the Lord. Thereby humilitie shall bridle our impatience. Let vs then also call to minde this thought, that it perteineth not to vs to remedie such euils: but this onely is left for vs, that wee craue the helpe of the Lorde in whose hande are the heartes of kinges, and the bowings of kingdoms. He is the God that shall stande in the assemblie
Psal.82.1 Psal.2.10. Esa.10.1. of gods, and shall in the middest iudge the gods, from whose face all kings shall fall, and be broken, and all the iudges of the earth that shall haue not kissed his annointed, that haue written vniust lawes to oppresse the poore in iudgement, and do violence to the cause of the humble, to make widowes a pray, and robbe the fatherlesse.

The prouident care of God to deliuer his people from their rulers tyrannie.

30 And here both his maruellous goodnes, and power, and prouidence sheweth it selfe: for sometime of his seruants he raiseth vp open reuengers, & furnisheth them with his commandement, to take vengeance of their vniust go-

gouernment, and to deliuer his people many wayes oppreſſed out of miſerable diſtreſſe: ſometime he directeth to the ſame ende the rage of men that entend and goe about an other thing. So he deliuered the people of Iſraell out of the tyrannie of Pharao by Moſes: and out of the violence of Chuſam king of Syria, by Othoniel: and out of other thraldomes, by other kinges or Iudges. So he tamed the pride of Tyrus, by the Egyptians: the inſolence of the Egyptians, by the Aſſyrians: the fiercenes of the Aſſyrians, by the Chaldees: the boldnes of Babylon, by the Medians, and by the Perſians when Cyrus had ſubdued the Medians. And the vnthankfulnos of the kinges of Iuda and Iſrael, and their wicked obſtinacie towarde his ſo many benefits, he did beat down and bring to diſtreſſe ſometime by the Aſſyrians, ſomtime by the Babyloniās, albeit not al after one maner. For the firſt ſort of mē when they were by the lawful calling of God ſent to doe ſuch actes: in taking armour againſt kinges, they did not violate that maieſtie which is planted in kings by the ordinance af God: but being armed from heauē they ſubdued the leſſer power with the greater: like as it is lawful for kings to puniſh their Lords vnder them. But theſe latter ſort, although they were directed by the hande of God whither it pleaſed him, and they vnwittingly did his worke, yet purpoſed in their minde nothing but miſcheefe. Exod. 3. 7. Iud. 3. 9. &c

The reuenge of vnbridled gouernment belongeth not to priuate men.

31 But howſoeuer the verie doings of men be iudged, yet the Lord did as well execute his worke by them, when he did breake the bloodie ſcepters of proude kings, and ouerthrewe their intolerable gouernmentes. Let Princes heare and be afraide. But we in the meane time muſt take great heede, that we do not deſpiſe or offende that authoritie of Magiſtrates full of reuerende maieſtie, which God hath ſtabliſhed with moſt weightie decrees, although it remaine with moſt vnworthie men, and which do with their wickedneſſe, ſo much as in them is, defile it. For though the correcting of vnbridled gouernment be the reuengement of the Lord, let vs not by & by thinke that it is committed to vs, to whome there is giuen no other commaundement but to obey and ſuffer. I ſpeake alway of priuate men. For if there be at this time any Magiſtrates for the behalfe of the people, (ſuch as in olde time were the Ephori, that were ſet againſt the kinges of Lacedemonia, or the Tribunes of the people, againſt ỹ Romane Conſuls: or the Demarchi, againſt the Senate of Athens: and the ſame power alſo which peraduenture, as things are now, the three eſtates haue in euerie realme, when they hold their principall aſſemblies) I doe ſo not forbid them according to their office to withſtande the outraging licentiouſneſſe of kinges: that I affirme that if they winke at kinges wilfully raging ouer and treading downe the poore communaltie, their diſſembling is not without wicked breache of faith, becauſe they deceitfully betray the libertie of the people, whereof they know themſelues to bee appointed protectors by the ordinaunce of God. Parliaments.

The duety vvhich vve owve vnto kinges muſt not leād vs from our obedience to the king of kings.

32 But in that obedience which we haue determined to bee due to the authorities of Gouernors, this is alway to be excepted, yea chiefely to bee obſerued, that it doe not leade vs away from obeying of him, to whoſe will the deſires of all kinges ought to be ſubiect, to whoſe decrees all their commaundements ought to yelde, to whose maiestie their maces ought to bee submitted. And truely howe vnorderly were it, for the satisfying of men to runne into his displeasure for whom men themselues are obeyed? The Lord therefore is the king of kinges, who when he hath opened his holy mouth, is to be heard alone for altogether and aboue all: next to him wee bee subiect to those men that are set ouer vs: but no otherwise than in him. If they commaunde any thing against him, let it haue no place and let no accompt be made of it: neither let vs herein any thing stay vpō al that dignitie wherwith ỹ Magistrats excel, to which there is no wrong done, whē it is brought into order of subiection in comparison of that singular and truly soueraigne power of God. After this reasō Daniell denieth that he had any thing offended against the king, when he obeyed not his wicked proclamation: because the king had passed his boundes, and had not onely beene a wrong doer to men, but in lifting vp his horns against God he had taken away power from himsefe, On the other side the Israelites are condemned because they were too much obedient to the wicked commaundement of the king. For when Ierobeam had made golden calues, they forsaking the Temple of God, did for his pleasure turne to newe superstitions. With like lightnesse their posteritie inclined thēselues to the ordinances of their kings. With this the Prophet sharpely reprocheth them, that they embraced the commaundements of the king: so farre is it of, that the pretence of humilitie may deserue praise wherewith the flatterers of the court doe couer themselues and deceiue the simple, while they say that it is not lawfull for them to refuse any thing that is commaunded them of their Princes: as though God had resigned his right to mortall men, giuing them the rule of mankinde: or as though the earthly power were minished, when it is made subiect to the author of it, before whom euen the heauenly powers doe humblie tremble for feare. I know how great and howe present perill hangeth ouer this constancie, because kings do most displeasantly suffer themselues to be despised, whose displeasure (saith Salomon) is the messenger of death. But sith this decree is proclamed by the heauenly harald Peter: That we ought to obey God rather than men, let vs comfort our selues with this thought, that we then performe that obedience which the Lord requireth, when we suffer any thing rather whatsoeuer it be, than swarne from godlines. And that our courages shoulde not faint. Paul putteth also an other spurre to vs: That we were therfore redeemed of Christ with so great a price as our redemption cost him, ỹ we should not yeelde our selues in thraldome to obey the peruerse desires of men, but much lesse should be bound to vngodlinesse.

Acoluthes.

AColuthes in the olde Church. Booke. 4. Chapter. 4. Section. 1. 9. & Chap. 19. Sect. 22. 23.

Adams fall.

The fall of Adam proceeded not of intemperance of glottonie, but of infidelitie: for he despising the worde and trueth of God, turned out of the way to the lyes of Sathan: which infidelity opened the gate to ambition & pride whereunto was adioyned vnthankfulnesse: and ambition was the mother of disobedience. 2. 1. 4.

By the fall of Adam sith other creatures haue bin after a sort deformed, it is no maruell, that all mankind was corrupted, that is to say: swarued out of kind from his first original, & made subiect to curse. This the old Doctors called Originall sinne, but yet did not so plainly set foorth this point of Doctrine as was conuenient. In the mean time it is prooued by reasons and testimonies of scripture, ỹ Pelagius fowly erred when he sayd that by imitation onely, not by propagation, sinne passed from the first man into all his posterity. 2. 1. 5. 6.

And though the pestilence of sinne doe principally abide in the soule, yet it doeth not therefore pertaine to the discussing of this Doctrine, to dispute whether the soule of the childe commeth of the engendring substance of the father: forasmuch as the cause of the infection is not in the substāce of the flesh or of the soule, but because it was ordeined of God, that those giftes which he at the first had giuen to mā, man should haue and loose them for him and his. Finally it maketh not against this doctrine, that the children of the faithfull are sanctified. 2. 1. 7.

That by the fall of Adam the naturall giftes in man were corrupted and the supernaturall were taken away, is a saying that many haue vsed, but few haue vnderstoode. 2. 2. 4. 16. which saying is expounded. 2. 2. 12. that is to say that the supernaturall giftes, faith, the loue of God, charity toward our neighbours, desirous endeuour of holinesse and righteousnesse were taken away, but are restored by Christ: & that the naturall gifts, namely the vnderstanding mind, and the heart are corrupted, because the soundnesse of vnderstanding and the vprightnes of heart were both taken away: Also that reason in man was not vtterly blotted out, but partly weakened and partly corrupted: & so wil, because it can not bee seuered from the nature of man, was not vtterly destroied, but made thrall to corrupt desires. 2. 2. 12.

It is prooued by the testimonies of Augustine

Auguſtine & of the ſcripture, that God not only foreſawe or ſuffered, but alſo by his will diſpoſed the fall of the firſt man, and in him the vaine of his poſteritie. 3.23.7.8.

Angels.

Angels are creatures of God althogh Moſes do not expreſſe them in the hiſtorie of the creation. 1.14.3.

Of the time or order wherein they were created, it is not expediēt to enquire, foraſmuch as ỹ ſcripture (which we ought to followe for our rule) declareth nothing thereof. 1.14.4.

Why the heauenly ſpirites are called Angels, Armies, Vertues, principalities, powers, Dominiōs, Thrones, Goddes. 1.14.5.

Concerning Angels the Scripture teacheth ſo much as is auailable for our comfort and for the confirming of our faith, namely that they are diſtributers & miniſters of Gods bountifulneſſe toward vs, and the ſame by diuers wayes. 1.14 6 9.

Not onely one Angel hath ſeuerall care of euerie one of vs, but they all with one conſent doe watch for our ſafety: and therefore it is ſuperfluous to enquire whether euerie man haue his ſeuerall angell aſſigned to bee his keeper. 1.14.7.

Of the number and degrees of Angels, it is curiouſnes to require, & raſhnes to determine: And why, whereas they be ſpirits, the Scripture painteth them with winges vnder Cherubin & Shraphin. 1.14.8.

Againſt the Sadduces & ſuch other fantaſtical men, it is proued by ſundry teſtimonies of the Scripture, that Angels are not qualities or inſpirations without ſubſtance, but very ſpirites in deede. 1.14.9.

That ſuperſtition is herein to be auoided, and that we giue not to Angels thoſe things that belong only to God and Chriſt. 1.14.10.

For auoiding of this peril, we muſt conſider that wheras God vſeth their ſeruice, hee doeth it not of neede, as though he could not be without them but for the comfort of our weakneſſe 1.14.11. And therefore whatſoeuer is ſayd of the miniſterie of angels, ought to be referred to this ende, that ouercomming all diſtruſt, our truſt in God ſhould bee thereby the more ſtrongly ſtabliſhed, & not that they ſhould lead vs away from God. 1.14.12.

That the Angels alſo were created after the likenes of God. 1.15 3.

Of the Aſcending of Chriſt into heauen.

Although Chriſt in his riſing again beganne more fully to ſhew forth his glorie and power: yet in his aſcending into heauen he firſt truely began his kingdom, becauſe he then powred out greater aboundance of his ſpirit, more roially aduanced his reigne, & ſhewed greater power both in helping thē that are his, and in ouerthrowing his enemies. And yet that he is ſo abſent according to the preſence of his fleſh, that hee is alway euerie where according to the preſence of his maieſtie and with the faithfull according to his vnſpeakable and inuiſible grace. 2.16. 14.

B.

Baptiſme.

THe definition of Baptiſme. The firſt ende thereof is to ſerue our faith before God, the other ende, to ſerue our confeſſion before men. It brin-bringeth to our faith three things, first it is a signe of our clensing, assuring vs that all our sinnes are done away 4. 15.1. which is prooued by testimonies of the scripture, and that it is not the water that cleanseth vs, but the bloud of Christ. Sect. 2.

The force of baptisme is not restrained to the time past: but we are by it washed and cleansed once for all our life: and yet that we may not hereof take a libertie to sinne from thence forward. 4.15.3.

The power of the keies (as they call it) that is to say, the ministerie of the Church, by which the forgiuenes of sinnes is daily preached vnto vs, is not to be seuered from baptisme. 4. 15.4.

The second fruite of faith by baptisme, is that it sheweth to vs our mortifying in Christ, & a new life in him. 4.15.5.

The thirde fruite is, that it testifieth that we are so vnited to Christe, that we are partakers of all his good things. For which cause Christ is called the proper obiect of baptisme, and the Apostles baptised into the name of Christ, in whome wee do so obtaine the matter both of our cleansing & of our regeneration, as wee obtaine the cause thereof in the father, & the effect in the holy Ghost. 4.15.6.

It is proued that the baptisme was all one which was ministred of Iohn and of the Apostles, although some of the olde Doctors thought otherwise. 4.15.7. and that it maketh not to the contrarie, that more aboundant graces of the Spirite are poured out, since the resurrection of Christ. But yet there is in baptisme a difference to be made of the person of Christ from Iohn, and from the Apostles and other ministers. 4.15.8.

Both our mortifying & our clensing were as by shadowe signified among the people of Israel, by the passage through the sea, and the comfortable calling of the cloude. 4.15.9.

It is false which some haue taught, that by Baptisme we are restored to the same righteousnesse & purenesse of nature which Adam had at the beginning. And there is shewed that in the children of God doe remaine yet some leauings of sinne, although the same reigne not in them: which doth whet their endeuours, and doeth not giue them occasion to flatter themselues. 4.15.10,11. the same is prooued by Paul. Sect. 12.

How baptisme serueth our confession before men. 4.15.13.

What is the order to vse Baptisme, both for confirmation of our faith, & for a confession before men. Where it is shewed that the graces of God are not enclosed in the Sacrament, so as they be giuē to vs by the vertue thereof. 4.15.14,15.

Baptisme is nothing encreased by the worthinesse of him that doth minister it, nor diminished by his vnworthinesse: against the Donatistes, and our Catabastistes which require a rebaptising, because wee haue beene baptised in the kingdom of the Pope. 4.15.16. their arguments are confuted Sect. 17,18.

Baptisme is a continual Sacrament of repentance for all our life, so that we neede no other Sacrament of penance. 4.19.17.

Of the coniuring of the water, the waxe candell, the Chresme, the blowing, the spittle, and such other trifles added to the simple ceremonie of Christ: and the order of purely ministring it in the Church is shewed 4. 15.19.

It is shewed that to minister Baptisme pertaineth to the ministers of the Church

Church & not to priuate men, much leſſe to women: and the contrarie obiections are confuted. 4.15.20.21.22.

Baptiſme of infantes.

The baptiſing of infants doth very well agree with Chriſtes inſtitution, and with the nature of the ſigne. 4. 16. &c.

Baptiſme ſucceeded in the place of Circumciſion, wherein they be like, & wherein they be vnlike. 4.16.3.4.

Infants are not to be debarred frō baptiſme, ſithe the Lorde doth make them partakers of the thing ſignified in baptiſme. 4.16.5. and that the Lord doeth regenerate infantes. Sect. 17. 18. 19.

Sith it is certain that the ſame couenant, which it pleaſed God to make with Abraham, is ſealed in infantes with the outward Sacrament, therefore ought baptiſm alſo to haue place among them. 4.16.6.

Baptiſing of infants is wel prooued by this that Chriſte embraced children and laid his handes vpon them. 4 16.7.

A confutation of certain argumēts of the enimies of infants baptiſme, 4. 16.8,22,23,25,27,28,29.

There commeth great fruit by the baptizing of infāts, both to the faithfull parentes and to the children. 4. 16.9. Which fruite Satan trauaileth by the Anabaptiſtes to take from vs. 4 16.32.

A confutation of the aduerſaries arguments, ſaying, that ther be other things ſignified in baptiſm than there are in Circumciſion: that our couenant differeth from the olde couenāt: that other are called children at this day than were at that time. 4.16.10, 11,12,13,14,15.

A confutation of their other fained differences betweene Circumciſion and baptiſme. Sect. 16. Alſo of this obiection, that baptiſme is a Sacrament of repentance and of faith: neither of which can be in tender infancie. 4.16.20.21.

In them of ripe age, faith and vnderſtanding ought to go before baptiſme: but in infantes, the baptiſme of the faithfull goeth before vnderſtanding. 4.16.24.

A confutation of their error, which condemne to eternall death all that are not baptiſed. 4.16.26.

This, that Chriſte was not baptiſed till his age of 30. yeares, was for a good cauſe, and maketh nothing for the enemies of infantes baptiſme. 4. 16.29.

Why the ſupper is not to bee miniſtred to the infantes of the faithfull, and baptiſme not to be denied them. 4.16.30.

Of baptiſing of infants. 4.8.16.

Bearing of the Croſſe.

It behoueth that wee deny our ſelues, that we may beare the croſſe, becauſe it is Gods will to exerciſe all his vnder the croſſe, beginning at Chriſt his firſt begotten ſonne. Which fellowſhip with Chriſt doth already giue vs great ground of patience and comfort. 3 8.1.

It is for many cauſes neceſſarie for vs to leade our life vnder a continuall croſſe: firſt to beate downe our arrogancie and truſt of our own ſtrength. And this remedie euen the moſt holy do neede, as is proued by the example of Dauid. 3. 8. 2. Heereby our truſt in God is confirmed, and our hope encreaſed. Sect. 3.

Secondly, that our patience may be tried, and wee may be framed to obedience, dience.3.8.4.Which is moſt needeful for vs, ſith the wantonnes of our fleſh is ſo greate to make vs ſhake off the yoke of God when he doth once handle vs gently.Sect.5.

Sometime alſo to puniſh our offences committed: wherein we acknowledge that hee doeth the office of a good father toward vs, but contrariwiſe the vnfaithfull are oftentimes made more obſtinate.3.8.6.

A ſingular comfort when we ſuffer either ſhame or loſſe,or any other calamity for righteouſnes: which croſſe moſt properly belongeth to the faithfull.3.8.7.

Howe neceſſarie it is for the faithfull,in the bitterneſſe of afflictions,to be furniſhed with this thought, that God loueth them, but is angrie with their faults.3.4.34.

Biſhops.

The name of Biſhop in the olde church was giuen to ſome one in euery ſeuerall company of miniſters, for politike order, and not that they ſhould bear a Lordlie rule ouer other. 4.4.2.

It was the office as well of the byſhop as of other prieſtes, to preach & miniſter the Sacraments.4.4.3.

How faithfully all prieſts in the papacie do execute their office,whether they bee Monkes, or ſecular, as Canons, Deanes, parſons of paroches, biſhops.&c.4.5.8.9.10.11.

The negligence of them that gouerned Churches in the time of Gregorie & Bernard.4.5.12.

The whole manner of eccleſiaſtical gouernaunce as it is at this day in the papacy, is nothing elſe but a place of ſpoyle,wherein theeues do rob without lawe and meaſure.4.5.13.

Of the diſſolute licentiouſnes in all partes of their life, which prieſts and biſhops.&c. vſe in the papacie.4.5.14.

C.

Calling.

OF the effectuall or inward calling, which is a ſure teſtimonie of election,and hangeth vpon the only free mercie of God.3.24.1.2.

Againſt them, which in predeſtination doe make man a worker with God.Alſo againſt them that hang election vpon that which followeth election.3.24.3.

The certaintie of our election is to be knowne by the worde and calling of God, & we ought not to preace into the eternall counſel of God 3.24.4.

The father hath choſen vs onely in Chriſt, in him therefore let vs behold the ſtedfaſt ground of our election.3. 24.5.and ſo,that thereof alſo wee may conceiue a ſure confidence of perſeuerance to the end.3.24.6,7,8,9.

Two kindes of calling vniuerſall,& ſpeciall.3.24.8.

It is prooued by diuers examples and teſtimonies of Scripture, that the elect before their Calling doe differ nothing from other men, and that it is falſe which ſome men doe dreame, that there is a certaine ſeede of election planted in their hearts euen frō their natiuitie.3.24.10,11.

It is ſhewed at large that as God doth by the effectualneſſe of his Calling towarde the elect, make perfect the ſaluation to which hee had by his eternall councell appointed them: ſo he hath his iudgementes againſt the reprobates, whereby hee putteth his purpoſe concerning them in execution,& maketh away for his predeſtination.3.24.12.13.14.&c.

Cardinals.

When the name of Cardinals firſt began,& howe they haue ſo ſuddenly ſtart vp to ſo great honour 4.7.30.

Ceremonies.

The olde Ceremonies are taken away,as touching their vſe onely, but not as touching their effect, for wee haue the ſame effect at this day moſt euidently and effectually in Chriſte. And this doth nothing diminiſh their holineſſe,as it is prooued. 2.7.16. & being weighed by them ſelues & without Chriſt,they are worthily called of Paul handwritings againſt vs. 2.7.17.

The ordinaunces concerning Ceremonies in the Popes lawe, do commaunde obſeruation for the moſt part vnprofitable, and ſometime alſo fooliſh although they haue a great ſeeming of wiſdome: moreouer they oppreſſe conſciences with their infinite multitude.4.10.11.12.13.

The popiſh Ceremonies can not be executed by this colour, that they be ordained for the inſtruction of the ignorant,as the ceremonies of ỹ lawe were:becauſe there appeareth in this point a manifeſt difference betwene vs & ỹ people before Chriſt. 4.10.14.

The popiſh ceremonies are beleeued to bee Sacrifices cleanſing ſins,& deſeruing eternall life: they are without doctrine,and are ſnares to catch mony.4.10.15.

Charitie toward our neighbour.

It is prooued,againſt the Sorboniſts that Charitie is the loue of our neighbour & not of our ſelues.2.8.54.

Vnder the name of neighbour is contained euery man,bee he neuer ſo much a ſtranger to vs,and our enemy 2.8.55.and therefore the Schoolemen are condemned of ignoraunce,which of the commaundements of God,not to deſire reuenge, & to loue our enimies,haue made councels, to the neceſſarie keeping whereof Monkes alone do bind themſelues: & it is prooued that the old doctors of ỹ church, yea & Gregorie himſelfe, thought otherwiſe.2.8.56 57.

We haue need of patience,that we be not wearie of doing good to other. And wee ought not to haue reſpect to the vnworthineſſe or other qualities of men which might withdrawe vs, but to God which ſo commaundeth vs.3.7.6.

To the fulfilling of all the parter of Charitie, it is not enough if wee performe all the dutifull deedes of Charitie,but we muſt doe it with a ſincere affection of heart. Wherein the cheef point is,that we take vpon our ſelues the perſon of him whome wee ſee to neede our help. So ſhall we auoid diſdainfull pride & other corruptings of Charitie.3.7.7.

Chriſt & the apoſtles in rehearſing the ſumme of the lawe do ſometime leaue out the firſt table:not for that it more auaileth to the ſumme of righteouſnes to liue innocently with men, than than to honour God with Godlineſſe: but becauſe vnfained Charitie is the proofe of true Godlines.2.8.52.53.

A confutation of the Phariſees of our time, which hold that we are iuſtified by charity, becauſe Paul ſaith that Charitie is greater than faith & hope. 3.18.3.

An expoſition of the tenth cõmandement, wherein (as in the former cõmaundements) is forbidden not only all purpoſe to hurt our neighbour, but alſo all luſt or deſire againſt Charitie. 2.8.49 58.

God doth for good cauſe and worthily require of vs ſo great feruentnes and vprighnes of loue.2. 8.50.

An expoſition of the ſixt commandement, wherein not only the ſlaughter or hatred of our neighbour is forbidden vs, but alſo the preſeruing of his life is commanded vs, becauſe mã is both our fleſhe and the Image of God.2.7.39.40.

Of the inuiſible Church: and of the viſible Church, the ſignes wherof are the pure preaching of the worde and miniſtration of Sacramentes.4.8.7.8.9 10.11.

Whereſoeuer thoſe ſignes are, wee ought not to depart from that fellowſhip.4.8.12.

There may ſome fault creepe in, either in doctrine or in miniſtratiõ of ſacraments, for ỹ which yet we ought not to caſt of the communion of that Church, & much leſſe for the imperfection of life and corruptneſſe of maners: And herein the Anabaptiſts are reproued.4.1.12,13,14,15,16.

The Church is none otherwiſe holy, but that it alway hath many faults, & yet it ceaſeth not to be the church, as is proued by teſtimonies of Scripture and the experience of all ages.4 1.17,18,19.

See Miniſterie of the Church.

Churches power as touching Articles of faith.

It is proued by the example of the Apoſtles and Prophets, and of Chriſt himſelfe, that whatſoeuer authoritie the Church hath, is properly not giuẽ to men, but to the word, the miniſtration whereof is committed to them: And therefore it was neuer lawful for the Church, to teach any other thing, than that which ſhee receiued of the Lorde.4 8.1,2,3,4,8,9.

Chriſt hath euer taught his church: and yet he hath vſed diuers maners of teaching according to ỹ diuerſity of times, ere the lawe was written, in the time of the lawe and the Prophets, & laſt of all ſince that he himſelfe was openly ſhewed in the fleſh.4.8.5,6,7.

Falſe Church.

Where lying and falſhod hath gotten the vpperhand & reigneth, there is not the Church: And this is proued to bee in the papacie, although they there boaſt of a perpetuall ſucceſſion of biſhops.4.2.1,2,3,4.

They are not heretikes or ſchiſmatikes that depart from the papacie. 4. 2.5,6.

How much ſoeuer a man make the beſt of the faults of ỹ popiſh Church, yet the ſtate thereof is no better than was in the kindome of Iſraell vnder Ieroboam.4.2.7,8,9,10.

Christ.

The Godhead of the Sonne is proued. 1.13.7.

Diuerse testimonies of Scripture, which affirme Christ to bee God, and first out of the olde testament. 1.13. 9,10. then out of the newe testament. Sect.11.

A proofe of the same Godhead, by the workes that are in the Scriptures ascribed vnto him. 1.13.12. also by his miracles and certaine other thinges. Sect.13.

A difference betwene Christs working of miracles, and the prophets or Apostles doing of the like. 1.13.13.

It is proued by many & most strong testimonies of Scripture, that Christe tooke vpon him a true substaunce of mans flesh, & not a ghost or counterfait shape of man, as the Marcionites fained, nor yet a heauenly body as the Manichees lyingly affirmed. 2.13.1.

An expositiō of the places of Scripture, which Marcion writhed to the confirmation of his error, and also of those which Manicheus wrested, and many of their disciples doe wrest at this day. 2.13 2.3. where also are confuted the new Marcionites, which to proue that Christe tooke his bodie of nothing do hold that women haue no seede: There are also certaine other thinges confuted, which are obiected as absurdities. 2.13.4.

That al the concupilcences of men are euill and guiltie of sinne, not insomuch as they are natural, but because they are all inordinate by reason of the corruption of nature. And so did Augustine thinke, if hee bee diligently weighed. 3.3.12. and this is prooued by many places of his writings. 3.3.13.

A confutation of their ſecond argument, for that the Lord commaunded his diſciples to loſe & vnwind Lazarus when he was raiſed from death. 3.4.5.

A true expoſition of two places by which they trauel to vphold their confeſſion: that is to ſay, that they which came to the Baptiſme of Iohn did confeſſe their ſinnes, & Iames willeth vs to confeſſe our ſins one to another. 3.4.6.

The vſe of cõfeſſing to a prieſt was very ancient, but yet free as a politike order, not as a law ſet by Chriſt or his Apoſtles: and afterward the ſame was abrogate by Nectarius Biſhop of the Church of Conſtantinople, becauſe of a Deacon which had vnder that pretence abuſed a womã. This tyrannous lawe was not laide vpon Churches before the time of Innocent the thirde, abour three hundred yeares paſt, & the fooliſhneſſe & barbarouſneſſe of that ordinance is declared. 3.4.7.

Witneſſes of the ſaide abrogation, out of Chryſoſtome Biſhop of Conſtantinople. 3.4.8.

An expoſition of Innocentes lawe concerning the confeſſion of al ſinnes where are rehearſed the diuers opinions of the Romiſh diuines concerning the number and vſe of keyes, and the power of binding & looſing. 3.4.15.

The lewdnes of al the particular articles of the law of confeſſing, & ſpecially of that concerning the rehearſing of al ſins. 3.4.16. & a plaine deſcriptiõ of the crueltie wherewith poore conſciences were by diuerſe circumſtances tormented therein. 3.4.17.

By a ſimilitude is deſcribed howe a great part of the worlde hath hitherto obeyed ſuch illuſions. That it is an impoſſible law, & maketh men hypocrits. And thẽ is ſhewed a moſt certain rule of confeſſion according to the example of the publicane. 3.4.18.

A confutation of this article, ỹ ſins are not forgiuẽ, & that the gate of paradiſe is ſhut, &c. vnles there be firſt firmly conceiued a vow of confeſſing, where alſo their obiection is confuted that iudgement cãnot be pronounced till the cauſe be heard, that is to ſay, that abſolution cannot be giuen til all the ſins be rehearſed. 3.4.18.

It is no maruell ỹ we condemne and aboliſh auricular confeſſion, & our aduerſaries do faſly aſſign ſo great profit vnto it, forſomuch as on ỹ otherſide it armeth mẽ to boldnes of ſinnig. 3.4.19.

They do faſly pretend ỹ they haue the power of ỹ keyes, ſith they are not the ſucceſſors of ỹ Apoſtles, nor haue the holie ghoſt, foraſmuch as they doe daily without cõſideration looſe thoſe things which the Lord hath commanded to be bound, & bind what he hath commaunded to be looſed. 3.4.20.

It is proued falſe that they ſay ỹ the power of the keies may ſomtime be vſed without knowledge, foraſmuch as by ỹ mean the abſolutiõ ſhould be vncertaine. Where alſo is ſpoken of the abſolution or condemnation which the miniſters of the goſpel or ỹ church do pronounce according to the word, & of the certaintie thereof. 3.4.21.

The abſolution of the Prieſtes in the papacie is vncertaine, as well on the behalfe of him that aſſoileth as of him that confeſſeth: but contrariwiſe it is in the abſolution of the Goſpel, which hangeth vpõ this only condition, if the ſinner ſeek his purging in the onely ſacrifice of Chriſt, & to yelde to the grace offered vnto him 3.4.22.

The Popiſh Doctors, when they alleadge for themſelues the power of looſing giuē to the Apoſtles do wrongfully wreſt to auricular cōfeſſion thoſe ſayinges which Chriſt ſpake partly of preaching of the Goſpel, and partly of excommunication. The errors of Lombard and ſuch other in this matter: & concerning the manner of remiſſion with enioyning of penance and ſatiſfaction 3.4.23.

A ſumme of all before ſpoken: and what the faithfull ought to thinke of auricular confeſſion 3.4.24.

True Confeſſion.

What kinde of confeſſion is taught vs by the worde of God, namely to cōfeſſe to God the knower of our heartes and of all our thoughts. 3.4.9.

Out of this ſecret confeſſion made to God, followeth a voluntarie confeſſion before men, ſo oft as it is behouefull for the glorie of God or the humbling of our ſelues. And of this ſecond kinde there was an ordinarie vſe in the old Church, & is alſo in the Church at this day. But yet extraordinarily it ought after a ſpeciall manner to bee vſed, whenſoeuer it ſhall happen that the people bee guiltie in any generall offence, or to be plaged with any calamitie. Of the profit of ſuch confeſſion. 3.4.10 11.

Of two other ſortes of priuate confeſſion: of which the firſt is vſed for our owne cauſe, when we require comfort of our brethren, becauſe the feeling of ſins doeth vexe & trouble vs: in which caſe we muſt chiefely reſort to our paſtors: and this remedy is warily & moderately to be vſed, that no bondage be brought in. The other ſort is to appeaſe and reconcile our neighbour, if he bee in any thing offended by our fault, vnder which kinde is conteined their Confeſſion which haue ſinned ſo farre as to the offence of the whole Church 3.4.12.13.

The power of the keyes hath place in the three kindes of Confeſſion. Of the fruite which they that confeſſe do receiue thereby, becauſe they knowe that forgiueneſſe of ſinnes is declared to them by the meſſenger of Chriſt. 3.4.14.

Of confeſſion of ſinnes one ſorte is generall another ſpecial 3.20.9.

Confirmation Popiſh.

The ceremonie of laying on of hands, when the children of the faithfull, which were baptiſed in their infancie, did yeelde an accompt of their faith. 4.19.4.

Of the popiſh ſacrament of Confirmation foiſted in place of that holy inſtitution 4.19.5.

That the example of the Apoſtles is wrongfully alleadged for defence thereof 4.19.6.

It is blaſphemie when they call it the oyle of ſaluation. 4.19.7.8. & when they ſay that none are made full Chriſtians till they bee annointed with the Biſhops Confirmation. Sect. 9 & when they ſay that this annointing is to bee had in greater reuerence than baptiſme. Sect. 10.11.

It is to be wiſhed, that the manner of the olde Church were brought in vſe againe, to call children to giue accōpt of their faith. 4.19.13.

Conſcience.

Conſciences, when they ſeeke aſſiance of their iuſtification before God ought to forget all the righteouſnes of the law. 3.19.2,3.

The Conſciences of the faithfull do not follow the lawe as conſtrained by neceſſitie of the lawe, but being free from the yoke of the law, doe voluntarily obey the wil of God. 3.19.4,5,6.

Of the fredom of conſcience in outward ward and indifferent things. 3.19.7.8.

The consciences of the faithfull being set at libertie by the benefite of Christ, are made free from the power of all men: and howe this is to be vnderstoode: where also is spoken of the spirituall and ciuill gouernement, and what difference is to be put betweene them. 3.19.14 15.

What is Conscience: and of the cõmon difference betweene the temporal court, and the court of Conscience 4.10.3.5.

Of Councels.

We must keepe a meane in honouring of Councels, that we take nothing away from Christ, and our doctrine for the most part is confirmed by auncient Councels. 4.9.1.

By the Scripture the Coũcels haue no authoritie, vnlesse they bee assembled in the name of Christ: and what that is. 4.9.2.

It is false which the Papists affirme: ỹ truth remaineth not in the Church vnlesse it be among the Pastors, and that the Church it selfe is not vnlesse it remaine to be seene in general Coũcels. 4.9.3.4.5.6.7.

What thinges are to bee weyed in searching the authority of any Councell: and that Augustine prescribeth a very good way therein. 4.9.8.

Councels one against an other. 4.9.8. and euen in those former and auncient Councels are fouud faultes and errors. 4.9.10.11.

Creation of the world.

Although God ought to bee knowen by the Creation of things, yet least the faithfull should fall away to the fained inuentions of the heathen, his will was that the historie of the Creation should remain writtẽ, & the time therof expressed in the Scripture. 1.14.1. where their vngodly scoffing is confuted, which aske why it came not sooner in Gods mind to create heauẽ & earth 1.14.1.

For the same purpose it is rehearsed that GOD ended his worke, not in a moment, but in sixe daies: and likewise the order is set forth, namely that Adã was not created til God had first furnished the world with al plentie of good thinges 1.14.2.22.

A confutation of the errour of Manicheus concerning two original beginnings. 1.14.3.

It is proued by the Scriptures ỹ the knowledge of God which appeareth in the workmanship of the worlde can not by it selfe alone bring vs into the right way. 1.5.13. and yet are we rightfully without all excuse. Sect. 14.

Although the beholding of heauen and earth and the consideration of the ordering of things pertaining to men, doe moue vs to worshippe God, yet all these thinges passed away without profite, euen from the wisest Philosophers. 1.5.10.

Hereupon came the infinite number of gods, and the contrarieties of opinion among the sectes of Philosophers concerning God. 1.5.11.

The substance of God is incomprehensible: but in his workes, by engrauing certain points of his glorie therin he hath after a certaine maner presented himselfe to be seene. 1.5.1.

The wisdom of God is testified, not only by those thinges which philosophers & learned men do find by speculation in heauen and earth, but also which cõmon men do perceiue by the onely helpe of their eies. 1.5.2.

That wee maie with true faith conceiue so much as behoueth vs to know concerning God, it is good to learne the hiſtorie of the Creation of the worlde, in ſuch ſort as Moſes hath ſet it forth, the chief points wherof are briefly rehearſed. 1.14.20.

The conſideration of the workes of God, that is to ſay, of the Creation of all things, ought to bee applied to two principall endes: firſt that we doe not with vnthankful neglecting or forgetfulnes paſſe ouer his vertues which he preſenteth apparantly to bee ſeene in his creatures. 1.14.21. ſecondly, ẏ wee may learn to apply them to our ſelues, whereby we may ſtirre vp our ſelues to the truſt, inuocation, praiſe, and loue of him. 2.14.22.

Deacons.

OF Deacons and the two ſortes of them 4.3.9.

The Papiſts haue no true Deaconry left, foraſmuch as all the diſpoſition of Church goods among them is openly turned to ſacriledge and robbery. 4. 5.16.18.19.

A confutation of the ſhameleſneſſe of certaine papiſtes, which ſay that the riotous exceſſe of prieſtes and of all the popiſh Church, is the glorioſneſſe of the kingdome of Chriſt which the holie prophetes ſpake of before. 4.5. 17.

Death of Chriſt.

Although Chriſt hath by the whole courſe of his obedience, that is to ſaye, by his whole life & al the parts therof, redeemed vs, yet the Scripture to ſet forth more plainly the manner of our ſaluation, doth aſcribe the ſame as peculiar & proper to the death of Chriſt. In the which the voluntary yeelding of Chriſt hath the firſt place, which yet was ſo voluntarie as hee gaue ouer his owne affection not without ſtrife. Alſo his condemnation is to be conſidered: Wherein two thinges are to be noted, namely that Chriſt was reputed amóg the wicked, and yet that his innocency was oftentimes teſtified euen by the iudges owne mouth. 2.1.5.

The maner of his Death is to be marked, that is to ſaie, the accurſed croſſe. And it is declared by manie teſtimonies of Eſaie & the Apoſtles, that this behoued ſo to be, that the curſe which was due to vs being caſt vpon him and ſo ouercome & taken away, we ſhoulde be deliuered. And this was figuratiuely repreſented in the ſacrifices of Moſes lawe, which at the laſt was performed in Chriſt the originall truth of all figures. 2.1.6.

Both in the Death and buriall of Chriſt a double benefit is ſet before vs, that is to ſay, deliuerance from Death wherunto we were in bondage and the mortifying of our fleſh. 2.1.6.

Deſcending of Chriſt to hell.

The Deſcending of Chriſt to Hell conteineth the myſterie of a greate thing, and is of no ſmall importance to the effect of our redemption. Diuerſe expoſitions of this article are rehearſed and confuted. 2.16.8 9.

A true, godlie, holie and comfortable expoſition thereof out of the word of of God, which is also confirmed by the testimonie of the old doctors, ỹ Christ did not onely suffer a bodily death, but also did feele the rigor of Gods vengeance, whereby hee might both appease his wrath and satisfie his iust iudgement: and therefore it behooued that he should, as it were hand to hand wrastle with the power of hell & with ỹ horror of euerlasting death, yet was God not at any time either his enemie, or angrie with him. But hee did suffer the greeuousnesse of Gods seueritie, in respect that he being striken & beaten with the hand of God, did feele all the tokens of Gods wrath & punishment. 2.16.10,11.

A confutation of certaine wicked and vnlearned men, which at this day doe find fault with this exposition crying out that the sonne of God hath wrong done to him, and that hee is charged with desperatiõ, which is cõtrarie to faith. Therefore it is prooued against thẽ with manifest testimonies, that these two things do very wel stãd together, that Christ feared, was troubled in spirit, was afraid, was tempted in euery point as we are, & yet that he is without sinne. 2.16.12.

Diuels.

Those things that the scripture teacheth cõcerning diuels, tend cõmonly to this end, that we should be carefull to beware of their deceits, & furnish our selues with those weapons which may be able to beate backe the most mightie enemies. 1.14.13.

That we should be the more stirred vp to do so, it sheweth vs that there is not one or two diuels, but great armies of euil spirits ỹ make war against vs: & in what sense it sometime speaketh of the diuel in the singular nũber. 1.14.14.

This ought to enflame vs to a continual war with the diuel, for that hee is euery where called enemie to God and vs. 1.14.15.

The Diuel is naturally wicked, a murderer, a lyer, and forger of all malitiousnes. 1.14.15. But this euilnesse of nature is not by creation, but by corruption. 1.14.16.

It is curiositie to enquire of ỹ cause, maner, time & fashion of the fal of the euil Angels, forasmuch as the scripture leaueth it vnspoken. 1.14.16.

This the Diuel hath of himselfe & of his owne naughtinesse, desirously and purposely to striue against God, but hee can doe and perfourme nothing vnlesse God be willing & graunt it. 1.14.17.

God so tempereth this gouernmẽt, that hee giueth Satan no reigne ouer the soules of the faithfull, forasmuch as in the ende they euer obteine the victorie, although in some particular doinges they bee wounded and beaten downe: but hee onely giueth the wicked to him to gouerne, and to vse his power vpon their soules and bodies. 1.14.18.

A confutation of them which saye that Diuels are nothing else but euill affections or perturbations: and it is prooued by testimonies of scripture, that they are mindes or Spirites endued with sense and vnderstanding. 1.14.19.

This power of the Church is diſtinct from the ciuil power, & the one is a helpe to the other. Therefore the opinion of ſome men is falſe, which thinke that it ought to haue no place where are Chriſtian magiſtrates.4. 11. 1,3,8.

In Excõmunication ſeueritie ought to be tempered. And in this behalfe is noted the extreme rigorouſneſſe of them in old time,4.12.8.

Euerie priuate man ought to eſteeme them that bee Excommunicate as ſtrangers from the Church, but not to accompt them paſt hope, but to endeuor to the vttermoſt of their power to bring them into the way againe.4. 12.9,10.

If the bench of elders do not ſo diligently correct faultes as they ought, or if the paſtors cannot amende all things as they would, yet priuate men ought not to depart from the church, neither ought the paſtors to ſhake off their miniſtery.4.12.11.

Againſt the preciſeneſſe of the old Donatiſtes and of the Anabaptiſtes of our dayes, which do acknowledge no congregation of Chriſt, but where ther is in euery point an Angelike perfection.4.12.12.

If the corruption of any ſinne haue infected the whole multitude, the rigorouſneſſe of diſcipline muſt be tempered with the mercie, leaſt the whole body be deſtroyed.4.12.13.

F.

Faith.

THe name of Faith otherwiſe taken among holy writers than it is among the prophane.4.12.13.

Howe it is to bee vnderſtoode that God is the obiect of Faith.2.6.4.

Of faith. And here the Sophiſters are reproued,which vnderſtande nothing elſe by this worde faith, but a common aſſent to the hiſtorie of the Goſpell, and doe ſimply call God the obiect of faith, in the meane time leauing out Chriſt,without whome there is no Faith, nor any acceſſe to God. 3.2.1.

A confutation of the Schoolemens doctrin concerning vnexpreſſed faith, wheras faith requireth an expreſſe reknowledging of the goodnes of God, in which ſtandeth our righteouſneſſe. 3.2.2.

Our

Our faith, ſo long as wee are waueringin the worlde, is enwrapped with many remnantes of ignorance, and in all thinges infidelitie is euer mingled with faith, whereof many examples are ſeen in the diſciples of Chriſt before that they came to perfecte light, yet this is ſtil moſt true, that vnderſtanding is euer ioyned with faith. 3.2.3 4.

There is a certaine obedience to Chriſt, and aptneſſe to learne, with a deſire to profite, which is called by the name of faith, whereas it is but a preparation to faith, and that ſame may be called an vnexpreſſed faith: yet it farre differeth from the papiſts inuention 3.2.5.

The true faith or knowledge of Chriſt, is when we cõceiue him in ſuch ſort as he is offered of the Father, that is to ſay, clothed with his Goſpel. And faith hath a mutual relatiõ to the word & the word to faith, becauſe the worde is the fountaine of faith, the grounde of faith, & the mirrour in which faith beholdeth God. 3.2.6.

Faith, although it aſſent to all the partes of the worde of God, yet moſt properly it hath regard therein to the good will and mercie of God, that is to ſay, the promiſes of grace grounded vpon Chriſt, for the vnderſtanding & certeintie whereof, the holy ghoſt lighteneth our mindes and ſtrengtheneth our hearts: Hereupon is gathered the definition of faith. 3.2.7.

A confutation of the Sophiſters diſtinction of faith, formed and formeleſſe: whereby it appeareth that they neuer thought of the ſingular gift of the holie Ghoſt, for as muche as faith can in no wiſe be ſeuered from a godly affection. 3.2.8.

This worde faith hath diuerſe ſignifications, and is ſomtime taken for the power to doe miracles, with which gift of God, ſometime the wicked are endued: Somtime it is figuratiuely takẽ for that knowledge of God which is in ſome wicked men, which is rather a ſhadowe and image of faith, of which faith there are diuerſe ſortes in them. 3.2 9.10.

The reprobate haue alſo ſometime ſuch a like feeling as the elect haue, yet they do not fully cõceiue the force of ſpirituall grace, but onely confuſely. Neuertheleſſe the ſame is a certain inferiour working of the holie Ghoſt. But this feeling differeth farre from the peculiar teſtimonie which he giueth to the elect 3.2.11.

Yet is not the Spirite deceitfull, which lightly ſprinkeleth the reprobate ſometime with ſuch a knowledge of the Goſpell, and feeling of the loue of God as afterward doeth vaniſhe away. Sometime alſo there is ſtirred vp in their heartes a certaine deſire of mutuall loue towarde God but ſuch a loue as is a hyred and not a harty loue. At length it is concluded that there be ſome which do not faine a faith, & yet doe lacke the true faith. Which is alſo proued by teſtimonies 3.2.12. and ſuch a feeling is in the Scripture called faith, although it be vnproperly ſo called. 3.2 13.

Faith is ſometime taken for the ſounde doctrine of religion, and the whole ſumme thereof: contrariwiſe ſometime it is reſtrained to ſome particular obiect, & ſometime it ſignifieth the miniſterie of the church. 3.2.13.

Faith is moſt rightfully called knowledge and ſcience, and yet is ſuch a knowledge as rather conſiſteth of certaine perſuaſion than of vnderſtanding, foraſmuch as that which our minde conceiueth by faith is moſt infinite. 3.2 14.

Faith is not content with a doubtful opinion or a darke conceiuing, but requireth a full & setled assuredneſſe: & hereunto are to be referred all thoſe titles of commendation wherwith the holy Ghoſt setteth forth the authoritie of the word of God.3.2.15.

Many doe ſo conceiue the mercy of God,that they receiue verie litle comfort thereof, becauſe they doubt whether he will be mercifull to themſelues or no:but there is a farre other feeling of the aboundant ſtore of Faith, the chiefe ground whereof is that wee doe not thinke the promiſes to bee true without our ſelues only,but rather that by inwardly embracing them wee may make them our owne. Hereupon is gathered,who may truly be called faithfull.3.2.15.16.

Though the faithfull in reknowledging the goodneſſe of God toward them are not onelie oftentimes tempted with vnquietneſſe, but alſo are ſometime ſhaken with moſt grieuous terrours: yet this withſtandeth not but that faith bringeth aſſuredneſſe with it, becauſe howſoeuer they bee troubled, yet they neuer fall & depart from that ſure affiãce which they haue conceiued of the mercie of God, but ſtriuing with their owne weakeneſſe they alway get the vpper hand at laſt: which is prooued by manie examples in Dauid.3.2.17.

A deſcription of the battell of the fleſhe and the ſpirite within a faithfull ſoule.3.2.18.

The aſſuredneſſe of Gods good wil. 3.2.18.

A confutation of the moſte peſtilent ſuttle reaſoning of certaine halfe papiſts, which although they confeſſe that ſo oft as we looke vpon Chriſt, we finde plentifull matter to hope well, yet will needes haue vs to wauer and doubt in conſideration of our owne vnworthineſſe. And it is proued that wee ought neuertheleſſe to looke for aſſured ſaluation, foraſmuch as Chriſt by a certaine maruelous cõmunion doth dailie grow togeether more & more into one bodie with vs.3.2.24.

So ſoone as wee haue anie one drop of faith we begin to behold God mercifull vnto vs, although a farre off in deede,yet with ſo aſſured ſight,as wee knowe we are not deceiued:Both theſe points are prooued by teſtimonies of Paul.3.2.19.20.

It is ſhewed by examples, howe Faith armeth and fortifieth it ſelfe with the worde of God to beare the violent aſſaults of tentations, and how the godlie minde neuer ſuffereth the affiance of Gods mercie to bee plucked away from it, although it be aſſailed with many remnants of vnbelefe and diſtruſt.3.2.21.

In the good will of God: which faith is ſaid to haue reſpect vnto, although faith doe chiefely looke vnto the aſſured expectation of eternall life, yet there are alſo contained promiſes of this preſent life and a perfect ſuretie of all good thinges,but the ſame ſuch as may be gathered of the worde: both theſe pointes are confirmed by teſtimonies of Scripture.3.2.28.

Faith although it embrace the word of God in euerie point, that is to ſaie, in the commaundemenes alſo and in the prohibitions and threatninges, yet hath her foundation and proper marke whereunto it is directed, in the free promiſe of mercie: and for this reaſon the Goſpell is called the worde of faith, and is ſet as contrarie to the law.3.2.29.

Yet doe we not by this diſtinction teare faith in ſunder as Pyghius ſhamefully cauilleth.3.2.30.

Faith doth no leſſe neede the word of God, than the fruite doth need the liuely roote of the tree, and with the word muſt be ioyned a conſideration of

of the power of god, without the which mens eares will either not willinglye, heare the word, or not esteeme it worthily. His power is to be considered: in that that it is effectuall, that is to saye, by the workes of God, and by his benefits either particular or auncient, and such as hee hath bestowed vppon the whole Church. 3.2.31.

The faithfull oftentimes so behaue themselues, that some errors are mingled with their faith, and they seeme to passe the boundes of the word, but yet so ỳ faith hath alway the vpper hande: This is proued by the examples of Sara and Rebecca, whome in the crooked turnings of their minde, God did by a secrete bridle hold fast in the obedience of his word. 3.2.31.

By reason of our blindnes & stiffenecknednes, the worde suffiseth not to make vs haue faith, vnlesse the spirite of God do enlighten our minde, and strengthen our heart with his power: & the same spirit is not onely the beginner of our faith, but also doeth encrease it by degrees 3.2.33.

Although it seeme to the moste parte of men a most strange doctrine, that no man can beleeue in Christe, but he to whome it is giuen, yet it is prooued to bee most true by reasons, testimonies of Scripture, and examples. 3.2 34.

Therefore faith is called the Spirite of Faith, the worke and good pleasure of God: and it is a singular gift, which hee giueth by singular priuiledge to whom hee will, as it is proued by notable sentences taken out of Augustine 3.2.35.

It is not enough that the minde bee enlightened with vnderstanding of the worde, vnlesse also the assurednes of the worde be poured into the verie heart, both which thinges the Spirite worketh, which is therefore called the seale, the pledge, & the spirite of promise. 3.2.36.

Although faith bee tossed with diuerse doutings, yet it alway at the last, escapeth out of the gulfe of tentations, and receiueth most sweete quietnesse. 3.2.37.

A confutation of the damnable doctrine of the Scoolemen, which saye that we can none otherwise determine of the grace of God towarde vs, than by morall coniecture 3.2.38.

They are prooued to bee miserablye blinde, in saying that it is rashnesse for vs to conceiue an vndouted knowledge of the will of God: A good comparison of them and Paul in this poynt of doctrine. 3.2.39.

A confutation of their trifling shift that although we may take vpon vs to iudge of the grace of God according to the present state of righteousnes, yet the knowledge of perseuering to the ende abideth in suspense. 3.2.40.

It is prooued that the definition of faith taught in this chapter, Sect. 7. agreeth with the Apostles definition: Heb. cap. 11. And the error of ỳ scholemen, that charitie is before faith and hope, is confuted by the testimonie of Bernard 3.2.41.

Hope is alway engendred of faith, & is the vndiuided cõpanion of faith, so that whosoeuer lacketh hope, is prooued also to haue no fayth. Also faith is nourished & strengthened by hope, & howe necessarie are the helpes of hope to stablishe faith, which is assailed with so manie sortes of tentations. 3.2 42.

By reason of this conioyning and alliance of faith & hope, the scripture doth many times vse those two wordes without difference, and sometime ioyneth them togither. A confutation of the errour of Peter Lombarde, whiche maketh two foundations of faith, that is Feare.

The faithfull are oftentimes troubled with Feare and distruct by reason of the feeling of their owne weakenes. 3.2.17.

Another kinde of Feare conceiued in a godly heart, either by examples of Gods vengeance against the wicked, or by consideration of his owne miserie: Such feare is so much not contrarie to faith, ỳ the faithfull are much exhorted to haue it. Neither is it anye maruell, if there be in a faithfull soule both feare & faith, sith on the otherside in the wicked there are both dul negligence and carefulnes. 3.2.22.23.

The feare of God proceedeth out of a double feeling, namely when wee honor God as our father, & feare him as our Lorde: Neither is it any maruell if one mind haue both those affections 3.2.26.

This feare differeth from the feare of the vnfaithfull, which they cõmonly call a seruile feare. 3.2.27.

Of forsaking of our selues.

The first beginning of framing our life after the rule set forth in the lawe, is to consider that wee are not at our owne libertie, but hallowed & dedicate to God. And therefore wee ought to forsake our selues, & our owne reason (which as the Philosophers thinke, ought alone to be obeyed) to the ende that we may be gouerned by the worde & Spirite of the Lorde. 3.7.1.

Also that wee ought not to seeke those thinges that are our owne, but those thinges that are according to the will of the Lorde, and doe serue to aduaunce his glorie. And that this is the forsaking of our selues, without the which there is a worlde of vices enclosed in the soule of man, and if there be any seeming of vertue at all, the same is corrupted with wicked desire of glorie 3.7.2.

The forsaking or mortifying of our selues, is partly in respect of men, and partly, yea, and chiefelye in respecte of God. Toward other men, the scripture cõmandeth vs to do two things: namelye to preferre them in honour before our selues, & with vnfained trueth to employ our selues wholy to procure their cõmodities. Howe ỳ first of these points is to be performed, is taught in the 3.7.4. & also how the Scripture leadeth vs by the hande to the seconde point is shewed in the. 3 7.5.

Free will.

Man was endued with Free will in the first estate of his creation. 1.15.8. which he lost by his fall. Of this the Phi-Philoſophers were ignoraunt, & ſo all ſuch as follow them, giuing freewill to man, are vtterly deceiued. 1. 15. 8.

The pliablenesse or weake power of freewill, which was in the firſt man, doth not excuſe his fall. 1. 15. 8.

It is as well for our profit, as for the glorie of God, to acknowledge all our ſtrength to bee but a ſtaffe made of a reede, yea, but a ſmoke. In the meane time wee muſt beware, that while wee take all vprightneſſe from man, we do not therof take occaſion of ſlouthfulneſſe. But rather wee ought thereby to be ſtirred vp to ſeeke in God all the goodneſſe whereof wee our ſelues are voide. The defenders of freewill doe rather throw it downe headlong than ſtabliſh it. 2. 2. 1.

The Philoſophers determine three powers of the ſoule, Vnderſtanding, Senſe, and Will or Appetite: and they thinke that the reaſon of mans vnderſtanding ſufficeth for his good gouernance: that will is by ſenſe moued to euill, ſo that it doth hardly yeeld it ſelf to reaſon, and ſometime is diuerſlie drawen from the one to the other, but yet that it hath a free election & can not be ſtopped, that it may follow reaſon her guide in all things: finally that vertues & vices are in our powers. 2. 2. 2, 3.

The Eccleſiaſtical writers, although they acknowledged the ſoundneſſe of vnderſtanding, & the freedome of will to haue bene ſore wounded by ſinne, yet haue ſpoken too much Philoſophically of this matter. The olde writers did it for this purpoſe, firſt bicauſe they were loth to teache a thing that ſhould be an abſurdity in the cõmune iudgement of men, and alſo ſpecially leaſt they ſhould giue a new occaſion of ſlothfulnes to the fleſh being alreadie to much dul to goodnes, as appeareth by many ſayings of Chryſoſtome & Hierome. The Greeke doctours aboue all other, & ſpecially Chryſoſtome, doe exceede meaſure in aduauncing freewill. But all the olde writers generally, except Auguſtine, doe ſo varie and wauer in this point of doctrine, ỳ there can almoſt no certaintie be gathered of their writings. They which came after thẽ, fell one after another to worſe & worſe. The definitiõs of freewil out of Origen, Auguſtine, Bernard, Anſelme, Peter Lombard, & Thomas 2. 2, 4.

In what thinges they do commonly giue freewill to man, & of the three ſorts of mans will. 2. 2. 5.

Alſo of the common diſtinction of the three ſorts of libertie. 2. 2. 5.

Whether man bee wholly depriued of power to doe good, or whether hee haue yet ſome power though it bee weake: where it is ſpoken of the common diſtinction of grace working and grace working together, & what is amiſſe in the ſame diſtinction. 2. 2. 6.

Foraſmuch as it cannot otherwiſe be ſaide that man hath freewil, but becauſe he doth euill of his own will, and not by compulſion, it had beene very good for the church ỳ this worde freewill had neuer beene vſed, which had raiſed vp men to a damnable truſt of thẽſelues. The old writers alſo do oft declare what they meane by ỳ worde, ſpecially Auguſtine, out of whome ther are many places alleaged, where hee weakeneth & mocketh the ſtrength therof, both when he calleth it Bondwill, & when he expoundeth the thing it ſelfe as it is at large. 2. 2. 7, 8.

Although ỳ olde Eccleſiaſticall writers doe ſometime to much aduaunce freewill, and haue ſpoken doutfully & diuerſly in ỳ matter: yet it appeareth by very many of their ſayinges, ỳ they litle or nothing eſteeming mans power, gaue the whole praiſe of all goodnes to the holy Ghoſt. Many ſuch ſentences tences are rehearſed out of Cyprian, Auguſtine, Eucherius, Chryſoſtome. 2. 2.9.

The power of mans will is not to be weyghed by the ſucceſſe of things, but by the choiſe of iudgement & the affection of will. 2.4.8.

It is proued againſt the defenders of freewill that ſinne is of neceſſitie, & yet neuertheleſſe ought to be imputed: alſo that it is voluntarie, and yet cannot be auoided. 2.5.1.

A ſolution of an other obiection of theirs, wher they ſay that vnleſſe both vertues & vices proceede of Free election of will, it were no reaſon that mã ſhould either bee puniſhed or rewarded. 2.5.2, Alſo another obiection, where they ſay that if this were not the power of our will, to chooſe good or euil, then of neceſſitie either all men ſhoulde be good, or all men euill. 2.5.3.

Againſt the ſame men alſo it is proued that exhortations, admonitions & rebukings are not in vain, although it be not in the power of the ſinner to obey: and there is ſhewed what effect the ſame doe worke both in the wicked & in the faithfull. 2.5 4.5.

It is not to be gathered by the cõmaundements and lawe of God, that man hath freewill & ſtrength to perfourme them, for God doth not onely commaunde what ought to bee done, but alſo promiſeth grace to obeye. 2.5. 6,7,9.

This is proued as well in the commaundements which require the firſt conuerſion to God, as alſo in thoſe which ſpeake ſimply of the obſeruing of the lawe, and thoſe which commaund men to continue in the receyued grace of God. For the ſame God which requireth thoſe things, doth teſtifie that ỹ conuerſion of a ſinner, holineſſe of life, ſtedfaſtnes of continuance, are his free gifts, and the praiſe thereof is not to be parted betweene God & man. 2.5.8,9,11.

The conditionall promiſes, as, if ye wil, if ye heare, and ſuch like, do not proue that there is in man a free power of willing or hearing: yet it is proued that God doth not mocke men in ſo bargaining with them, Alſo what is the vſe of ſuch proteſtations, both towarde the godly and toward the vngodly. 2.5.10.

The reprochinges, wherein God ſaith to his people that they were the cauſe that they receiued not all kinde of good thinges at his hande, doe not proue that it was mans power to eſcape the euils wherwith they were afflicted. And there is ſpoken of the vſe of ſuch reprochinges as well towarde them ỹ obſtinatly go forward in their faults, as toward the conformable that are conuerted to repentaunce. Alſo whereas the Scripture doth ſometime giue to vs the office of doing, it doeth ſo for no other reaſon but to awaken the ſlouthfulneſſe of the fleſh. 2.5.11.

The ſaying of Moſes, The commaundement is neere to thee, in thy mouth & in thy heart &c. maketh nothing for the defenders of free will, foraſmuch as he there ſpeaketh not of the bare commandements, but of the euangelical promiſes of the law. 1.5.12.

No more do thoſe places make for them, where it is ſaide that the Lorde looketh and watcheth to ſee what men will do. 2.5.13.

Alſo thoſe places where good works are called ours: and we are ſaide to do that which is holy and pleaſing to the Lord. And here is ſhewed that the only ſpirit of God woorketh all good motions in vs, but yet not as in ſtocks 2.5.14,15.

Chriſt, although hee were knowen to the Iewes in time of the law,was yet ſhewed in deede onely by the Goſpell: & the holy fathers taſted of that grace, which is nowe offered to vs with full aboundance, they ſaw the day of Chriſt albeit with a dim ſight, the glory wher of now ſhineth in the Goſpell,without any veile betweene vs and it.2.9.1.2.

In the ſame place alſo is ſhewed, that the Goſpell is properly & ſpecially called the publiſhing of the grace giuen in Chriſt, and not the promiſes that are written by the Propheres concerning the remiſſiō of ſinnes. Againſt the doctrin of Seruettus, which taketh away the promiſes vnder this pretēce y by the faith of the Goſpell wee haue the fulfilling of all the promiſes, it is proued that though Chriſt offer to vs in the Goſpell a preſent fulneſſe of ſpirituall good thinges, yet the enioying thereof lyeth hidden vnder the cuſtodye of hope ſo long as wee liue in this world and therefore wee muſt yet reſt vpon the promiſes.2.9.3.

Holie Ghoſt.

Teſtimonies wherby the Godhead of the holy Ghoſt is proued. 1.13.14.15.

The holy Ghoſt is the bond wherewith Chriſt doeth effectually binde vs to him,and without it, all that Chriſte hath ſuffered and done for the ſaluation of mankind doth nothing profit vs. 3.1.1.3.

Chriſt came after a ſingular maner furniſhed with the holye Ghoſt, to ſeuer vs from the world, and therfore he is called the Spirite of ſanctification. Why he is ſometime called the Spirite of the father, and ſometime the Spirit of the Sonne. He is called the Spirit of Chriſt,not only in reſpect that Chriſte is the eternal word, but alſo according to his perſon of Mediator.3.1.2.

An expoſition of the titles wherwith the Scripture ſetteth foorth the holye Ghoſt: and there is entreated of the beginning & whol reſtoring of our ſaluation: The titles be theſe the ſpirit of adoption,the earneſt & ſeale of our inheritance,life,water, oyle, oyntment, fire, fire,a fountaine, the hand of God,&c. 3.1.3.

Faith is the chiefe worke of the holy Ghoſt,and therefore to it for the moſt part are al thoſe things referred which are commonly found in the Scripture to expreſſe the force & effectual power of the holy Ghoſt.3.1.4.

Humilitie.

It is not the true Humilitie which God requireth of vs vnles we acknowledge our ſelues vtterly voyde of all goodnes and righteouſneſſe.3.12.6.

Of this humilitie there is an example ſhewed in the Publicane.3.12.7.

That we may giue place to the calling of Chriſt, both preſumption and careleſnes muſt be far away from vs.3.12.8.

There is no danger leaſt man ſhould take too much from himſelf, ſo that he learne that which wanteth in himſelfe is to be recouered in God.It is a deuiliſh worde, although it be ſweet to vs,ỹ lifteth vp man in himſelfe : for repulſing whereof, there are recited out of the Scripture many weighty ſẽtences, which do rigorouſly throw down man: & alſo there are recited certaine promiſes,which do promiſe grace to none but to them that doe pine away with feeling of their owne pouerty.2.2.10.

An expoſition of the ſeconde commaundement:where is ſpoken of Idols and Images.2.8.17.

The Scripture,to the entẽt to bring vs to the true God, doth expreſly exclude al the gods of the Gentiles,1.10.3.& ſpecially al Idols & Images.1.11.1.

God is ſeuered from Idols,not onely that he alone ſhould haue the name of God,but that he alone ſhould be wholy worſhipped, & nothing that belongeth to the Godhead ſhoulde bee conueied to any other.1.12.1.

The glorie of GOD is corrupted with falſe lying, when any forme is appointed to it.1.11.1.

It is proued by textes and reaſons, that God generally miſliketh all Portraytures & Images that are made to expreſſe a figure of him, and this prohibition pertained not to the Iewes only.1.11.2.

God did in olde time ſo ſhewe his preſence by viſible ſignes either to the whole people or to certain choſen mẽ, that the ſame ſignes admoniſhed them of the incomprehenſible ſubſtance of God.1.11.3.

It is proued euen of Iuuenals teſtimonie that the Papiſts are mad,which defend the Images of God & of Saints with the example of the Cherubs couering the propiciatorie.1.11.3.

After ſuch an inuention by and by foloweth the worſhiping of the Image, like as of God or of any other creature in the image: both which the law of God forbiddeth.1.11.8,9.

Againſt them, which for defence of abominable idolatrie, doe pretende that they doe not take the images for Gods, it is prooued that neither the Iewes did think their calfe to be God, nor the heathen when they made to themſelues images did euer thinke the ſame to be God, whom yet no man excuſe.1.11.9.

The Papiſtes are ſo perſwaded as the heathen and the Idolatrous Iewes were, that they worſhippe God himſelfe vnder images.1.11.10. Neither can they eſcape away with their diſtinction of ſeruice and worſhip.1.11.11.16. & 1.12.2.

When Idolatry is condemned, grauing and painting are not vtterly reprooued, but there is required a true and right vſe of them both, that God be not counterfaited with bodily ſhape but onely thoſe things which our eyes may behold.1.11.12.

Juſtification of faith.

The article of doctrine concerning the Iuſtification of faith is of great importance.3.11.1.

Againſt them which imagine a righteouſnes compounded of faith & workes, it is proued that when the one is ſtabliſhed, the other muſt needes be ouerthrowen.3.11.13,14,15,16,17,18.

It is prooued by ỹ Scripture againſt the Sophiſters, that this is a ſure principle, that we are iuſtified by faith only.3.11.19,20.

It is proued by teſtimonies of Scripture that the righteouſneſſe of faith is reconciliation with God, which conſiſteth onely vpon the remiſſion of ſins. 3,11.21,22.

By the onely interceſſion or meane of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſte, we obtaine to be Iuſtified before God. 3. 11.23.

That we may be throughly perſwaded of the free Iuſtification, wee muſt lift vp our mindes to the iudgement ſeate of God: before which, nothing is acceptable but that which is whole & perfect in euerie behalfe, the dreadful maieſtie whereof is deſcribed by many places of Scripture.3.12.1,2.

All godly writers doe ſhewe that when men haue to doe with God, the onely place of refuge for conſcience is in the free mercie of God, excluding all truſt of workes: And this is prooued by teſtimonies of Auguſtine and Bernarde.3.12.3.

Two thinges are to bee obſerued in free Iuſtification: the firſt, that the Lord keepe faſt his glory vnminiſhed: which is done when hee alone is acknowledged to bee righteous, for they glorie againſt God which glorie in themſelues.3.13.1,2. the ſeconde, that our conſciences may haue quietneſſe in the ſight of his iudgement. 3.13.3, 4 5.

Knowledge of God.

To knowe God, is not only to conceiue that there is ſome God, but to vnderſtande ſo much as behoueth vs to know of him, and ſo much as auaileth for his glorie, and is expedient. 1. 2.1.

The knowledge of God ought to tend to this ende, firſt to frame vs to feare and reuerence: and then that by it guiding & teaching vs we may learn to aske all good things of him, & to account the ſame receiued at his hande. 1.2.2. & 1.5.8.

The Philoſophers had no other knowledge of God than ỹ which made them vnexcuſable, but did not bring them to the truth 2.2.18.

This perſwaſion is naturally planted in all men, that there is ſome God 1.2.3. and that to this ende, that they which doe not worſhip him, may be condemned by their own iudgement. 1.3.1.

seeke Christ.2.7.1,2. and that is done, when it maketh vs vnexcusable being on euery side conuicted of our sinnes, to moue vs to seeke for pardon of our guiltines.2.7.3,4.

It is prooued by the Scripture and declared that the obseruing of the law is impossible.2.7.5.

There are three vses and offices of the morall law: The first is, that shewing vnto vs the righteousnesse which onely is acceptable vnto God, it may be as a glasse for vs, wherein wee may beholde our weakenesse, and by it our wickednesse, and finally by them both our accursednes: Neither turneth this to any dishonour of the lawe, but maketh for the glorie of the bountifulnes of God, which both with help of grace aideth vs to doe that which wee are commaunded, and by mercie putteth away our offences. Neither yet doeth this office altogether ceasse in the reprobate.2.7.6,7,8,9.

The seconde office, is to restraine the reprobate with feare of punishmẽt least they vnbridledly committe the wickednesse which inwardly they alway nourish and loue: and also to draw back the children of God before their regeneration from outwarde licentiousnesse.2.7.10,11.

The thirde office, concerneth the faithfull: for the lawe although it bee alreadie written with the finger of God in their hearts, yet profiteth thẽ two wayes: For by studying vppon it they are more confirmed in the vnderstanding of the will of the Lorde, and are stirred vp & strengthened to obedience, that they go not out of kinde by the sluggishnesse of the flesh.2.7.12. 13. For as touching the curse of the Lawe, it is taken away from the faithfull, that it can no more extende it selfe against them in damning and destroying them.2.7.14.

By the ten commandements of the Law we learne the same things which we but slenderly tast by instruction of the lawe of nature: First that wee owe to God reuerence, loue, & feare, that righteousnesse pleaseth him, and wickednesse displeaseth him: finally, that examining our life by the rule of the Lawe, wee are vnworthie to bee accompted among the creatures of god, and that our power is vnsufficient, yea no power at all to performe the lawe. Both these points engender in vs humilitie & abacing of our selues, which teacheth vs to flee to the mercie of God, & to craue the help of his grace. 2.8.1,2,3.

Forasmuch as God the Lawmaker is spirituall, that is to say, speaketh as wel to the soule as to the bodie, therefore the lawe likewise requireth not only an outwarde honestie, but also an inwarde and spirituall righteousnesse and a verie angelike pureneſſe. 2.8.6. which is prooued by Christes owne exposition, when he confuted the Pharisees wrong interpretation, which required only a certaine outward obseruation of the Law.2.8.7.

There is alway more in the commaundementes and prohibitions of the Lawe, than is expressed. Therefore for the right & true expounding of them, it behoooueth to wey what is the entent or end of euery of them: Then from that which is commaunded or forbidden, wee must drawe an argument to the contrarie, that wee may vnderstande, that not onely an euil is forbidden, but also the good is commaunded which is contrarie to that euil.2.8.8,9.

Why God spake by way of emplied comprehending, in setting foorth the forme of his commaundementes. 2. 8.10.

Of the diuiding of the Lawe into two

two tables: and howe therein wee are taught that the firſt foundation & the very ſoule of righteouſneſſe is the worſhipping of God. 2.8.11.

Of the diuiſion of the ten commandementes, and how many commandementes are to be appointed to the firſt table, and howe manie to the ſeconde. 2.8.12 50.

An expoſition of the commaundements of God: Where is declared that the Lorde is the beginning of the law, to ſtabliſhe his owne maieſtie, vſeth three arguments: Firſt by chalenging to himſelfe the ſoueraigne power and right of dominion ouer vs, he doth as it were by neceſſitie drawe vs to obey him: ſecondly hee allureth vs with the ſweetnes of the promiſe of grace: thirdly he moueth vs to obedience with rehearſal of the benefit that we haue receiued. 2.8.13.14.15.

The Law teacheth not only certain introductions and principles of righteouſnes, but the very accompliſhment thereof, the expreſſing of the image of God, and the perfection of holineſſe: which law is al contained in two points that is to ſay, the loue of God & of our neighbour. 2.8.51.

The Law of Nature. 2.2.22.

Lawes Politike.

Neither can Lawes be without the Magiſtrate, nor the Magiſtrate without Lawes. A confutation of them which ſay that a common weale is not well ordered, vnleſſe it be gouerned by the politike lawes of Moſes. For this purpoſe is rehearſed a diuiſiō of the Lawes of Moſes into morall Lawes, ceremonies, and iudiciall Lawes, and the end of euery one of them being diſcuſſed, it is proued that it is lawfull for euerie ſeuerall nation to make politike Lawes, 4 20.14.15. ſo that they agree with that naturall equitie, the reaſon whereof is ſet forth in the morall Lawe of Moſes. Therefore it is ſhewed by examples that they may alter the ordinances of penalties according to the diuerſitie of the countrey, time, and other circumſtances. 4.20.16.

Libertie.

See Chriſtian Libertie.

Lying.

An expoſition of the nienth commandement, wherein the Lord forbiddeth falſhood, wherewith we by Lying or backbyting, doe hurte anie mans good name, or hinder his comoditie. 2 8.47.

We many times ſinne againſt this commandement, although we do not Lye. But in this point there muſt be a difference wiſely made betweene the ſlaundring which is here condemned, and iudiciall accuſation or rebuking, which is vſed vpon deſire to bring to amendment. 2 8 48.

Life of a Chriſtian man.

The Lawe containeth a rule howto frame a mans Life, and diuers places alſo of the Scripture do here and there declare it, and not without an orderly maner of teaching, although not ſo exquiſite and curious as the Philoſophers doe. 3.6.1.

Heerein the Scripture doeth two thinges: it ſtirreth vs vp to the loue of righteouſneſſe & teacheth a rule how to follow the ſame. The firſt point it worketh by diuers argumentes & reaſons. 3.6.2. and heerein the Scripture layeth much better foundations, than can be founde in all the bookes of the Philoſophers. 3.6 3.

Againſt them that pretend a knowledge of Chriſt, when their life & maners reſemble not the doctrine of Chriſt. 3.6.4.

Though perfection were to be wiſhed in al men, yet we muſt alſo acknowledge for chriſtiās the moſt part of mē which haue not yet proceeded ſo farre.

We muſt alway endeuour forward, and not deſpaire for the ſmalneſſe of our profiting 3.6.5.

Out of a place of Paul theſe are gathered to be the parts of a well framed Life: cõſideration of the grace of God, forſaking of wickednes and of worldly luſtes, ſoberneſſe, righteouſnes, godlineſſe (which ſignifieth true holineſſe) and the bleſſed hope of immortalitie. 3.7.3.

Life preſent, and the helpes thereof.

The Scripture teacheth the beſt way how to vſe the goods of this Life. 3.10.4.5.

Two faultes muſt be auoyded: that we doe neither binde our conſciences with too much rigorouſneſſe nor giue loſe reignes to the intemperaunce of men. 3.10.1.3.

God both in clothing and in foode prouided not onely for our neceſſitie, but alſo for our delight. 3.10.2.

It is moſt neceſſarie, that euerie one of vs in al the doings of his life do look vpon his vocatiõ, that we attempt nothing raſhly or with doubtfull conſcience. 3.10.6.

God diſdaineth not to prouide alſo for the neceſſities of our earthly body, and in what ſenſe wee aske of him our daily bread. 3.20.44.

Life to come.

God doth by diuers myſteries teach vs the contempt of this preſent Life, that wee may earneſtly deſire Life to come. 3.9.1.2.4.

Such a cõtempt of this life is required of vs, that we neither hate it nor be vnthankfull to God, of whoſe clemency it is a teſtimony to the faithful 3.9.3.

An admonition to them which are holden with too much feare of death, that Chriſtians ought rather to deſire that day which ſhall make an ende of their continuall miſeries, and fill them with true ioy. 3.9.5.6.

Of the incomprehenſible excellencie of the eternall felicitie (which is the ende of the reſurrection) the taſte of the ſweeteneſſe whereof wee ought heere continually to take, but yet to auoide curioſity wherupon do ariſe trifling and noyſome queſtions, yea and hurtfull ſpeculations. And there ſhalbe an equall meaſure of glorie to all the children of God in heauen. 3.25.10.11. In which place alſo is an anſwer to the queſtions which ſome men doe moue concerning the ſtate of the children of God after the reſurrection.

In what ſenſe eternal Life is ſomtime called the reward of works. 3.18.24.

M.

Magiſtrates.

THe office of Magiſtrates is not onely holie and lawfull before GOD, but alſo the moſt holy and honourable degree in all the life of men, and this is proued by diuerſe titles wherewith the Scripture doth ſet it forth, and by the examples of holy men, which haue borne ciuill power. 4.20.4.

This conſideration is a pricke to godly Magiſtrates to moue thẽ to the doing of their duetie, and alſo it is a cõfort to eaſe the hard trauailers of their office 4.20.6.

A confutation of them, which ſaye that though in the old time vnder the lawe Kings & Iudges ruled ouer Gods people, yet this ſeruile kind of gouernment doth not agree with the perfection which Chriſt hath brought with his goſpel 4.20.5.7.

They erre which exclude the Magiſtrates from the charge of religion, foraſmuch as their office extendeth to both the tables of the law. It is proued by Scripture, that they are ordeyned protectors and defenders as wel of the worſhippinge of God as of common peace and honeſtie, which they can not thorowly performe without the power power of the ſword. 4.20.9.

A declaration of this queſtion by ſcripture, howe the magiſtrates may be godly, and alſo drawe their ſworde, and ſhed the bloud of men, and it is proued, that they are ſo farre from ſinning in punishing offenders, that this is one of the vertues of a King, & a proofe of their godlineſſe. Herein the Magiſtrates muſt beware of two faults namely extreme rigorouſnes, & ſuperſtitious deſire of pitie. 4.20.10.

It is the dutie of ſubiects towardes Magiſtrates, to thinke honourably of them as of the miniſters & deputies of God, foraſmuch as concerneth their degree, but not ỳ they ſhould eſteeme the vices of men for vertues. 4.20.22.

It is alſo their duetie with mindes heartily bent to the honoring of them to declare their obedience towarde them, whether it be in following their decrees or in paying of tributes, &c. to pray to God for their ſafetie & proſperitie, to raiſe no tumults and not to thruſt themſelues into the office of the Magiſtrate. 4.20.23.

Euen wicked princes of euill life, and which rule tyrannouſly (for ſomuch as pertaineth to publike obedience) ought to bee had in as great reuerence and honour as wee woulde giue to the beſt king that might bee, 4.20.24. 25. becauſe euen they alſo haue the publike power not without the prouidence and ſingular power of God. Which is prooued by diuerſe teſtimonies and examples of Scripture: and there is ſhewed with what conſiderations thoſe ſubiectes ought to bridle their own impatience which hue vnder ſuch vngodly and wicked tyrauntes. 4. 20. 26, 27, 28, 29, 31.

It is not lawfull for priuate men to riſe vp againſt tyrantes, but onely for them which by the lawes of the kingdome or of the countrie, are the defenders of the libertie of the people. 4.20.31.

The Lord by his maruellous goodneſſe and prouidence, doeth ſometime raiſe vp ſome of his ſeruaunts to puniſh tyrantes, and ſometime alſo hee directeth thereunto the rage of wicked men while they intende an other thing. 4.20.30.

In the obedience which is due to the commaundements of kinges and rulers this is alway to bee excepted, that it draw vs not away from the obedience of God: Neither is any wrong done to them when we refuſe to obey them in ſuch things as they command againſt God: And this is our duty, how great and preſent perill ſoeuer do hang vpon ſuch conſtancie. 4.20.32.

Man.

Man is by knowledge of himſelfe not onely mooued to ſeeke God, but alſo led as it were by the hand to finde him. 1.1.1.

The creation of man is a notable ſhewe of the power, wiſedome, & goodneſſe of God: wherefore Man is by ſome of the Philoſophers called a little world. 1.5.3.

The vnthankefulnes of men, which feeling tokens of the prouidence of God both in their ſoule and bodye, yet doe not giue GOD prayſe. 1. 5.4.

Two ſortes of knowledge of our ſelues, the one in our firſte originall eſtate, the other after Adams fal, & ỳ latter is not to be receiued without conſidering the firſt, leaſt we ſhould ſeeme to impute corruption to God the author of nature. 1.15 1.

The knowledge of himſelfe is moſt neceſſarie for Man, which conſiſteth in this (as the truth of God preſcribeth) that firſt conſidering to what ende he is created and endued with excellent giftes, he ſhould hang altogether vpon God, of whome hee hath all things by gift: then, that weying his own miſerable eſtate after the fall of Adam, hee ſhould truely loth himſelfe and conceiue a new deſire to ſeeke God, that in him hee may recouer theſe good things, of which he himſelfe is founde vtterly voide and emptie. Wherefore we muſt beware that in this point wee hearken not to the iudgement of the fleſhe and to the bookes of Philoſophers, which while they withholde vs in conſidering onely our good thinges, would carrie vs away into a moſt wicked ignorance of our ſelues. 2.1.1, 2,3.

Man can neuer come to the trewe knowledge of himſelfe, vnleſſe hee haue firſt beholden the face of God, that is to ſay, till hee haue begon to knowe and weigh by the word of God what and how exact is the perfection of his righteouſneſſe, wiſedome, and power, to the which wee ought to bee made of like forme. 1.1.2.

Euen the moſt holy men were ſtricken with feare & aſtoniſhment, when God did extraordinarily ſhew his preſence and glorie vnto them. 1.1.3.

That whole man is corrupted in both partes of him (that is to ſay both in vnderſtanding minde, and in hearte or will) is prooued by diuerſe titles wherewith the ſcripture deſcribeth him, ſpeciallie when it ſaith that he is fleſh: And there is declared that this word fleſh is not referred onlie to the ſenſuall part but alſo to the ſuperiour part of the ſoule. 2.3.1.

That men doe in vaine ſeeke for any good thing in their owne nature, is prooued by Paul, which intreating of the vniuerſall kindred of the children of Adam, and not rebuking the corrupted maners of ſome one age alone but accuſing the perpetuall corruption of nature, taketh from men righteouſneſſe, that is to ſay vprightneſſe, & pureneſſe, and then vnderſtanding, and laſt of all the feare of God. 2.3.2.

A confutation of the obiection concerning certaine heathen men, which foraſmuch as they were all their life long by the guiding of nature bent to the endeuour of vertue and honeſtie, doe ſeeme to warne vs, that we ſhould not eſteeme the nature of Man, altogether corrupt. Therefore it is declared that in the vnbeleuers God doth not inwardlie cleanſe the corruption of nature wherewith Man is in eche part defiled, (as he doeth in the elect) but by his prouidence ſometime hee bridleth it in them, that it breake not foorth into deedes, and reſtraineth it by diuerſe waies, ſo much as he knoweth to be expedient for preſeruing of the vniuerſall ſtate of things. 2.3.3.

Thoſe vertues which wee reade to haue beene in heathen Men, are not ſufficient proues of the purenes of nature, foraſmuch as their minde was inwardly not vpright, being corrupted with ambition or ſome other poiſon, & not directed with deſire to ſet foorth the glorie of God: and alſo foraſmuch as thoſe vertues are not the common giftes of nature, but the ſpeciall graces of God, which he diuerſly & by a certaine meaſure giueth to prophane Men, as oftentimes to kings, & ſometime to priuate Men 2.3.4.

See Image of God in Man.

Mariage.

An expoſition of the ſeuenth commaundement, wherein the Lord forbiddeth fornication & requireth chaſtitie and cleanneſſe, which we ought to keepe & preſerue both in our mind, and in our eyes, and in the apparell of our bodie, and in our tongue, and in the moderate vſe of meate and drinke. 2.8.41,44.

Continence is a ſingular gifte of God, which he giueth not to all men, but to ſome, yea and that ſomtime for a ſeaſon: As for them to whom it is not graunted, let them alway flee to Mariage, which is ordeined of the Lord for the remedie of mans neceſſitie. 2. 8.41.42.43.

Maried perſons muſt beware that they commit nothing vnbeſeeming the honeſtie & temperance of Mariage: Otherwiſe they ſeeme to be adulterers of their owne wiues, and not husbands. 2.8.44.

The Papiſtes doe wrongfully call mariage a Sacrament: And their reaſons are confuted 4.19.34 It is proued that the place of Paul, wherwith they ſeeke to cloke themſelues, maketh nothing for them 4.19.35.

In the meane they diſagree with themſelues when they exclude prieſts from this ſacrament, & do ſay that it is vncleanneſſe and defiling of the fleſhe. 4.19.36.

By this falſe colour of Sacrament, the Pope with his cleargie haue drawen to themſelues the hearing of cauſes of Matrimonie, and haue made lawes of mariage, which partly are manifeſtly wicked againſt God, & partly moſt vniuſt toward men, which lawes are rehearſed. 4.19.37.

Mediator Chriſt.

It behoued that Chriſt, to the ende that he might performe the office of Mediator, ſhould be made man, foraſmuche as God had ſo ordeyned, becauſe it was beſt for vs, ſith none other could bee the meane for reſtoring of peace betweene God and vs, none other coulde make vs the children of God, none other could aſſure vnto vs the inheritance of the heauenlie kingdome, none other coulde for remedie ſet mans obedience againſt mans diſobedience. 2.12.1.2.3.

A confutation of their fantaſticall conceite, which affirme that Chriſt ſhoulde haue become man, although there had needed no remedie for the redeeming of mankinde. And it is proued by manie reaſons and textes, that foraſmuch as the whole Scripture crieth out that hee was cloathed with fleſh, to the ende that he might be the redeemer, therfore it is too great raſhneſſe to imagine anye other cauſe or purpoſe. 2.12.4.

Neither is it lawfull to ſearche further concerning Chriſt: and thoſe that do ſearch further, do with wicked boldneſſe runne forwarde to the faining of a new Chriſt: And herein Oſiander is reproued, which hath at this time renewed this queſtion, & affirmeth that this error is confuted by no teſtimonie of Scripture. 2.12.5.

And the principle is ouerthrowen which he buildeth on, that man was create after the image of God, becauſe he was formed after the likeneſſe of Chriſt to come, that he might reſemble him whom the father had alreadie decreed to cloth with fleſh: And there is ſhewed that the image of God in Adam, was the markes of excellencie wherewith God had garniſhed him, which doeth alſo ſhine in the Angels. 2.12.6,7.

A ſolution of other obiections or abſurdities which the ſame Oſiander feareth: namely, that then Chriſt was borne & creat after the image of Adam but as it were by chaunce: & that the Angels ſhoulde haue lacked their head, and men ſhoulde haue lacked Chriſt their king. 2.12.6,7.

How the two natures do make one perſon of the mediatour in Chriſte: Which is ſhewed by a ſimilitude taken of the ioyning of the ſoule and bodie in one man: And then it is prooued by diuers places that the ſcripture doeth manie times giue vnto Christ those things which properly belõgeth to the godhead, and sometime those thinges which must bee referred onely to the manhoode, and somtime giueth to the one nature that which is proper to the other: which figuratiue manner of speache is called Communicating of properties. 2.14.1.2. and sometime also giueth to Christ those thinges which doe comprehende both natures together, but doe seuerally well agree with neither of them. Which last point the most part of the olde writers haue not sufficiently marked: Yet it is good to bee noted, for the dissoluing of manie doubtes, and for auoyding of the errours of Nestorius and Eutiches. 2.14. 3.4.

A confutation of the error of Seruettus, which had put in the steede of the sonne of God, an imagined thing made of the substance of Gods spirite, flesh, & three elements vncreate: His suttletie is discloſed, and there is proued (which thing hee denyeth) that Christ was the sonne of God, euen before that he was borne in the flesh, because he is that worde begotten of the father before all worldes 2.14 5.

Also it is proued that he is truely & properly the sonne of God in flesh, that is to saye in the nature of Man, but yet in respect of his godhead, and not of his flesh, as Seruettus babbleth. 2.14.6.

An exposition of certaine places which Seruettus and his disciples doe enforce for defence of their errour: There is also another cauillation of his discloſed, that Christ before that he appeared in the flesh, is in no place called the sonne of God but vnder a figure. 2.14 7.

Also there is opened the errour of all them which doe not acknowledge Christ the Sonne of God but in the flesh: and there are briefely rehearsed the grosse suttleties of Seruettus, wherewith he hath bewitched himself and other, ouerthrowing that which pure faith beleeueth concerning the person of the sonne of God: And thervpon is gathered that with the craftie darke suttleties of that filthie dog, the hope of saluation is vtterly extinguished. 2.14 8.

Merit of Christ.

It is truely and properly sayde that Christ merited for vs the grace of god and saluation. Where it is proued that Christ was not onely the instrument or minister of saluation, but also the author and principall doer thereof: And in so saying, the grace of God is not defaced, because the merite of Christ is not set against mercie, but hangeth vpon it. And those thinges which are Subalterna, fight not as contraries. 2.17.1.

The distinction of the Merite of Christ and of the grace of God is proued by manie places of Scripture. 2. 17 2.

There are alleadged many testimonies of Scripture, out of which it is certainely and soundly gathered, that Christ by his obedienee hath truelie purchased and deserued fauour for vs with his father. 2.17.3 4 5.

It is a foolishe curiositie to enquire, whether Christ hath deserued anye thing for himselfe: and it is rashnes to affirme it. 2.17. 6.

Merites of workes.

The boastings that are made of the Merites of workes, doe ouerthrowe as well the praise of God in giuing righteousnes, as also the certaintie of saluation. 3.15.

Whosoeuer first applied the name of Merit to good works in the sight of Gods iudgement, hee did against the purenes of faith. And though the olde fathers fathers vſed that name, yet they ſo vſed it that they haue in manye places ſhewed that they attribute nothing to workes. 3.15.2.

An expoſition of certaine places, wherewith the Sophiſters goe about to prooue that the name of Merite towarde God is found in the Scripture. 3.15.4.

It is proued by authoritie of the Apoſtles & Auguſtine, that the rewardes of righteouſneſſe doe hang vppon the meere liberalitie of God. 2.5.2.

It is prooued that this is a falſe ſaying, that Chriſt Merited for vs onelye the firſt grace, and that afterwarde we do merite by our owne workes. 3.15.6. 7.

There bee certaine thinges touching merites in the title of Iuſtification by faith.

Miniſterie of the Church.

Of the Miniſterie of the Churche, and of them which deſpiſe this maner of learning. 4.1.5.

Of the efficacie of the Miniſterie. 4. 1.6.

God, which might teach ẏ Churche either himſelfe alone or by Angels, yet doeth it by the Miniſterye of men for three cauſes. 4.3.1.

The Miniſterie of the Churche is garniſhed with many notable titles of commendation in the Scripture. 4.3. 23.

Of Apoſtles, Prophetes, Euangeliſts,, Paſtors, and Teachers: and what is the ſeuerall office of euery of them. 4.3.45.

The chiefe partes of the office of Apoſtles and paſtors are to preach the Goſpel, and Miniſter the Sacramentes. 4.3.6.

Paſtors are ſo bound to their Churches, that they may not remooue to any other place without publike authoritie. 4.3.7.

They are called in the Scripture, Biſhops, Prieſts, Paſtors and Miniſters which gouerne Churches. 4.3.8.

No man ought to thruſt in himſelfe in the Churche to teach or gouerne: But there is a calling required. 4. 3. 10.

The preaching of the worde of God is compared to ſeede whiche is ſcattered in the goounde: Whereby wee vnderſtand that the whole encreaſe proceedeth of the bleſſing of God and the effectuall working of the holy Ghoſte, 4 14.11.

What maner of men ought to be choſen Biſheps, & in what ſort and of whō they are to be choſen, and with what forme or ceremonie they are to be ordered. 4.311.12.13.14.15.16.

The olde Chnrch before the papacy, diuided al their miniſters into thre degrees, Paſtors, Elders, and Deacons. 4.4.1.

Of the cōmiſſion to remit and retaine ſinnes, or to bind & looſe, which is a part of the power of the keyes, and pertaineth to the Miniſterie of the worde. 4.11.1.

Monkerie.

Monaſteries in olde time were the ſeede plottes of eccleſiaſticall orders: And there is deſcribed out of Auguſtine the forme of the old Monkery, & howe they were wont at ẏ time to get their liuing with the labour of their handes. Whereby appeareth that at this daye the maner of popiſh Monkery is far otherwiſe. 4.13.8.9.10.

Of the proude title of perfection wherewith the Monkes do ſet out their kinde of life. 4 13.11. becauſe they bind themſelues to keepe the counſels of the Goſpell (as they call them) whereunto other Chriſtian men are not bound. Sect. 12. and becauſe they haue forſaken all their poſſeſſions. Sect. 13.

As many as go into Monasteries, do depart from the Church, sith they openly affirme that their Monkerye is a forme of second Baptisme. 4.13.14.

The Popish monkes doe in maners much differ from the olde Monkes. 4.13.15.

Some thinges are to bee misliked euen in the profession of the olde Monkerie, and they that were the authors thereof brought a perilous example into the Church. 4.13.16.

Monkes with their vowes do consecrate themselues not to God but to the Diuell. 4.13.17.

As all vowes vnlawfull & not rightly made, are of no value before God, so they ought to be voyde to vs. 4.13.20.

Therefore they which depart from Monkery to some honest trade of life, are wrongfully accused of faith breaking and periurie. 4.13.21.

Obedience of children to parentes.

Offences.

What Offences are to be auoyded, and what to be neglected: what is an Offence giuen, and what an offence taken. 3.19.11.

It is declared by the doctrine and example of Paul who be weake, to whō we must beware that we giue no offēce 3.19.12.

Whereas we are commanded to beware that wee Offende not the weake, the same is meant onely in thinges indifferent: Therefore they doe wrongfully abuse this doctrine which say that they heare masse for the weakes sake. 3.19.13.

The Sacrament of Order breedeth to the papists seuen other petie Sacramentes, of whose names and differences they themselues be not yet agreed. 4.19.22.

Their fonde and vngodly foolishnesse, forasmuch as they make Christe fellow Officer with them in euerie one of them. 4.19.23.

Of Acoluthes, Dorekepers and Readers, whom the papistes doe make Orders of the Church and Sacramentes, 4.19.24. & with what ceremonies they consecrate them. Sect. 27.

Of exorcistes or Coniurers an order of the popish Church. 4.19.24.

The orders of Psalmistes, Dorekeepers and Acoluthes, are vayne names among the papistes, forasmuch as they themselues doe not execute the Offices, but some boy, or any layman. 4.19.24.

Of the shauing of the Clergie, and the signification therof by the doctrin of the Papistes. 4.19.25.

They doe wrongfully apply it to Paules example, which shaued his head when he tooke a vowe, or to the olde Nazarites. 4.19.26.

It is shewed out of Augustin whence it is firſt began. 4.19.27.

Of the three higher orders: and firſt of Prieſthood or ſacrificerſhip: where is ſhewed that the papiſtes haue moſt wickedly peruerted ỹ order appointed by God, and do wrong to Chriſte the only and eternal ſacrificing prieſt, 4 19.28.

Of their blowing at the making of popiſh Prieſts, and howe in that ceremony they do wrongfully counterfait Chriſte: Where is declared that the Lorde did many thinges which hee would not haue to be examples for vs to follow. 4 19.29.

Of the vndelible character or vndefaceable marke of the oyle wherewith popiſh Prieſtes are annointed at their creation. And how the ſame is wrongfully applied to the children of Aaron. But theſe Prieſtes in coueting to be like the Leuites, are apoſtataes from Chriſt. 4. 19.30.31.

Originall ſinne.

A definition and expounding of Originall ſinne. 4.15.10,11,12.

A true definition of Originall and a declaration of the ſame definition: Wherein is ſhewed, that not only puniſhment came from Adam vppon vs, but alſo that the infection diſtilled from him remaineth in vs, and how it is the ſinne of another & alſo our own ſinne: Finally, that ſuch infectiõ pearced not only into the inferiour deſire, but alſo into the verie vnderſtanding minde & bottome of the heart, ſo that there is no part of the ſoule free from corruption. 2.1.8,9.

A confutation of them that dare charge God with their faults, becauſe we ſay that men are naturallie faultie: And there is proued, that man is corrupt by naturall viciouſneſſe: (to the ende that no man ſhoulde thinke it to be gotten by euill cuſtome) but yet ſuch as proceded not from nature, but is an accidentall qualitie, & not a ſubſtancial propertie from the beginning. 2.1.10.11.

Patience.

A Part of ỹ forſaking of our ſelues, in reſpect of God, is contentation of minde and ſufferaunce: Which we ſhall perfourme, if in ſeeking the commoditie or quietneſſe of this preſent life wee yeelde our ſelues wholly to the Lorde, and do not deſire, hope for, or thinke vppon any other meane of proſpering than by his bleſſing 3. 7.8.

So ſhal it come to paſſe that we ſhal neuer ſeeke our owne commodities by vnlawfull meanes or with wronging of our neighbours: alſo that wee ſhall not burne with vnmeaſurable deſire of richeſſe or of honours: finally if thinges proſper well with vs, wee ſhall yet bee holden from pride, & if they happen ill, we ſhall yet bee reſtrained frõ impatience. 3.7.9. Which extendeth to all chaunces whereunto our preſent life is ſubiect, whereof the faithfull doe alwayes acknowledge the hand of God their father, and not fortune, to be the gouernor. 3.7.10.

The Patience of the faithfull is not ſuch as is without all feeling of ſorrow, but ſuch as beeing vpholden by godly comfort, fighteth againſt the naturall feeling of ſorrow. Therefore the Patience of the Stoikes is to bee reiected: neither is it in it ſelf any fault to weep or feare. 3.8.8,9.

A deſcription of that ſtriuing which is engẽdered in the harts of the faithful by the feeling of nature, which feeling cannot be cleane done away, and by the affection of godlineſſe wherewith that ſame feeling muſt bee ſubdued & tamed. 3.8.10.

There

There is great difference between Philosophicall & Christian patience: Forasmuch as ỳ philosophers do teach vs to obey because wee so must of necessitie: but Christ teacheth it, because it is righteous, and also because it is profitable for vs. 3.8.11.

Pardons.

The so long continuing of pardons declareth in howe deepe darkenesse of errors men haue been drowned these certaine ages past. 3.5.1.

What Pardons are by the Papistes doctrine: Whereby is proued ỳ they are a dishonoring of ỳ blood of Christ: A comparison of Christ & popish pardons. 3.5.1.

A confutation of the wicked doctrine of pardons, by the notable sayings of Leo Bishop of Rome, & of Augustine. And there is shewed that the bloud of martyrs is not vnlawfull, although it haue no place in forgiuenes of sinnes. 3.5.3.4.

Either the Gospel of God must ly, or pardons must be lying deceits. And there is shewed what seemeth to haue beene the beginning of them. 3.5.5.

Penance, the Popish Sacrament.

Of the vsage of the olde Church in publike penance: and of the laying on of handes at reconciliation. Also howe in processe of time the laying on of hands was vsed in priuate absolutions. 4.19.14.

The diuerse opinions of the scholemen howe penance is a Sacrament: And there is shewed that the definition of a Sacrament doth not agree with it. 4.19.15,16.

It is a lye, and a deceitfull errour which they haue inuented concerning the Sacrament of Penance: and it is a wicked and blasphemous title wherewith they haue garnished it, a second boorde after shipwracke from Baptisme. 4.19.17.

Perseuerance.

See booke 2. Chap. 5. Sect. 3.

A confutation of the moste wicked error, that Perseuerance is giuen of God according to the Merit of men, so as euery man hath shewed himselfe not vnthankful for the first grace: and in this opinion is shewed a double error. Of the cõmon distinction of grace working, & working togither: & howe Augustine vsed it, qualifying it with an apt definition. 2.3.11.

Politike gouernement.

There is a difference to bee made betweene policie, and the inwarde gouernment of the soule. Their doctrine is to be reiected which goe about to ouerthrowe policie as a thing not necessarie for Christians, or as a thing ỳ ouerthroweth the spirituall libertie of the soule. Also those flatterers are to be reiected, which doe giue too much vnto it, & do set it in cõparison against the authoritie of God. 4.20.1,2.

Policie is the gift of God, which bringeth great commodities to mankind & no small helpe to the defence of the state of religiõ. Politike gouernment hath three partes, the magistrat, the Lawes and the people. 4.20.3.

Of three formes of Ciuile gouernement, Aristocracie the gouernment of the best chosen men, Democracie the gouernement of the people, Monarchie the gouernement of one: it can not simply bee determined which of these is the best: yet it commeth to passe by the fault of men, that it is safer & more tollerable to haue many to gouerne than one to reigne. But all these forms are of God, & diuersly disposed by him, therefore it is the duty of priuate men to obey, & not to make innouation of states after their owne will. 4.20.8.

Of the immunitie that the Romish clergy take to themselues, which was altogether vnknowen to the Bishops of the olde Church.4.11.15.

In matters of Faith, the iudgement in the olde time pertained to ỹ Church and not to Princes, although sometime Princes entermeddled their authoritie in ecclesiastical matters, but the same was donne to preserue and not to trouble the order of the church. 4.11.15.16.

Of the auhoritie of the sworde vsurped by the bishops in the papacy: and howe they haue by litle and litle from so small beginnings growen to so great encrease.4.11.9.10.

Pope.

It is proued that the supremacie of the sea of Rome is not by the institution of Christ.4.6.1.2.3.4.

Neither had Peter any principalitie in the Church or among the Apostles. 4.6.5.6.7.

Neither is it profitable nor may be, that one man shoulde beare rule ouer the whole Church.4.6.8.9.10.

Although Peter had had a supremacy in the Church, yet it foloweth not that the seat of that supremacie ought to be at Rome.4.6.11.12.13.

It is proued by many argumentes that Peter was not bishop of Rome. 4.6. 14.15.

The supremacie of the sea of Rome is not according to the vse of the olde Church.4.6.16.17.

Of the beginning & encreasinges of the Romish papacy, vntill it aduanced it selfe to that height, whereby both the libertie of the Church is oppressed and all moderate gouernement hath beene ouerthrowen.4.7.

In the most part of the councels, the Bishoppe of Rome nor his legates had not the chiefe place, but some other of the Bishoppes had it at the Councel of Chalcedon: but yet without order. 4.7. 1.2.

Gregorie pronounceth that the title of vniuersall bishop was deuised by the deuil, and published by the crier of Antichrist.4.7.4.

It is prooued by the vse of the olde church, that it is false which the bishop of Rome boasteth, that he hath iurisdiction ouer all Churches.4.7.5. Whether ye consider ỹ ordering of bishops, Sect.6. or ecclesiasticall admonitions and censures, Sect.7. or summoning of Councels, Sect.8. or authoritie of higher appeales. Sect.9.10.

The olde Bishoppes of Rome in the most part of their Epistles did ambitiously set foorth the glory of their sea, but those Epistles at that time had no credite. Also they did thrust in certayn forged things as though they had ben written in the olde time by holye men 4.7.11.20.

Although in the time of Gregorie, the authoritie of the Bishop of Rome was greatly encreased, yet it is prooued by his writinges that it was then far from vnbridled dominion and tyranny.4. 7. 12.13.22.

There was strife for the supremacie betweene the bishop of Constantinople & the bishop of Rome. 4.7.14.15.16. vntill Phocas graunted to Boniface the thirde, that Rome shoulde bee the heade of all Churches: which afterwarde Pipine confirmed, when hee gaue to the Sea of Rome iurisdiction ouer the Churches of Fraunce. 4.7. 17.

From thence forth the tyranny of the sea of Rome encreased more and more, partly by ignorance & partly by negligence of Bishops: which destruction of the whole order of the church Bernarde lamenteth and layeth to the Popes charge.4.7.18.22.

The insolence & shamelesnes of the bishops of Rome in setting foorth their owne supreme authoritie . 4.7.19 20. which is reproued by sayinges of Cyprian and Gregorie.Sect.21.

Praier.

True faith can not be idle from calling vpon God.3.20,1.

How necessarie & how manie waies profitable is the exercise of praying, 3.20.2. although the Lorde will not cease while we craue not ,nor needeth any to put him in minde,Sect.3.

The firste rule of well framing our prayer,is that we be no otherwise disposed in heart and mind than becommeth them that enter into talke with God.3.20.4.5.

The second rule is , that in praying we alway feele our owne needines, and that earnestly cõsidering ẏ we want all these thinges that we aske, wee ioyne with our prayer an earnest and feruent desire to obtaine.3.20.6.

We ought to praye at all times , and in the greatest quietnes of our estates, the onely remembrance of our sinne ought to bee no small prouocation to moue vs to that exercise.3.20.7.

The third rule of praying well , is ẏ we forsake all confidence of our owne glorie, least if we presumptuously take any thing,be it neuer so litle , vnto our selues, wee with our vaine pride , fall downe from his face 3.20.8.

The beginning of praying well, is the obtaining of pardon, with an humble and plaine confession of offence.3. 20.9.

In what sense the Prayers of certain holy men are to be taken, in which to entreat GOD , they seeme to alledge their owne righteousnesse.3.20.10.

Predeſtination.

It is proued that the doctrine of predeſtination is a doctrine of moſt ſwete fruit. There are rehearſed three principall profits thereof: and they are admoniſhed which being moued with a certaine curioſitie doe beyonde the boundes of Scripture breake into the ſecretes of the wiſedom of God.3.1.1.2 and alſo they which woulde haue all mention of Predeſtination to be buried.Sect.3.4.

What is Predeſtination, and what is the foreknowledge of God, and how the one of them is wrongfully ſet after the other. The example of Predeſtination in all the ofspring of Abraham in reſpect of other nations, is confirmed by many teſtimonies of Scripture 3.21.5.

Againſt them which ſay that this doctrine ouerthroweth all exhortations to godly life, it is proued by Auguſtine y^{t} preaching hath his courſe, and yet the knowledge of Predeſtination is not hindred thereby.3.23.13.

In this point of doctrine we muſt ſo temper our maner of teaching y^{e} truth, that ſo farre as we may, we wiſely beware of offence.3.23.14.

Whereas ſome obey the preaching of the worde of God, and other ſome deſpiſe it, or bee more blinded and hardened thereby, although this come to paſſe by their owne malice and vnthankfulneſſe, yet wee muſt therewith alſo know, that this diuerſitie hã-

geth vpon the secret counsell of God, than which it is vnlawfull for to search for any further cause. 3. 24.12, 13,14.

An exposition of certaine places, wherein God seemeth to denie that it commeth to passe by his ordinaunce that the wicked perish, but inasmuch as against his will they wilfully bring destruction vpon themselues. And there is shewed that those places make nothing against the doctrine of Predestination. 3.24.15,16.

The vniuersalnesse of the promises of saluation, maketh nothing against the doctrine of ỹ Predestination of the reprobate: and yet not without cause are they framed vniuersally. 3.24.16.

Here also are confuted certaine obiections of thé which denie this point of doctrine.

Priesthoode, Kingdome, and Propheticall office of Christ.

That wee may knowe to what ende Christ was sent of his father, and what hee brought vnto vs, three thinges are cheefely to bee considered in him, his Propheticall office, his kingdome, and his Priesthoode: and therefore is giué to him the title of Christ (or Messias which signifieth annointed) although hee be specially so called in respect of his kingdome. Albeit that God alway gaue prophetes and teachers to his Church, yet it is prooued that all the Godly looked for full light of vnderstanding, onely at the comming of Messias: and that hee when hee appeared was annointed a Prophet, not onely for himselfe, but also for all his body. 2.15.1,2.

As touching his kingdome, first wee must note the spirituall nature therof, whereupon also is gathered the eternall continuance of it, which is of two sorts: the one pertaineth to the whole bodie of the Church, the other is proper to euery member: both sortes are declared and plainly set forth by testimonies of scripture. 2.15.3.

It is declared that the profit of the kingdome of Christ cannot otherwise be perceiued of vs, but when we knowledge it to be spirituall: and the same profit consisteth in two things, namely that it inricheth vs with all good thinges necessarie to eternall saluation, secondly, that it fortifieth vs with strength and vertue against the diuell and all his assaultes. And so Christ reigneth for vs rather than for himselfe, whereupon wee are rightfully called Christians: Where it is said that at the last day he shall yelde vp his kingdom to God and his father, and such like sayinges the same maketh nothing against the eternitie of his kingdome. 2.15.4,5.

As touching his Priesthood, that the efficacie and profite thereof may come to vs, it is shewed that wee must beginne at the death of Christ. Hereupon it followeth that hee is an euerlasting intercessor, by whose mediation wee obtaine fauour, whereby ariseth to godly consciences both boldnesse to praye, and quietnesse: finally that hee is so a priest, that hee ioyneth vs in the fellowship of so great an honour, to the ende that the Sacrifices of prayers and praise which came from vs, may bee acceptable to God. 2.15.6.

Promises.

Not without cause all the Promises are concluded in Christ: forasmuch as euery promise is a testifying of the lawe of God towarde vs, and none of vs is beloued of god without Christ. Neither was Naaman the Syrian, Cornelius the captaine, nor the Eunuche to whome Philip was caried, without knowledge of Christ, although they had but a verie small taste to him, and a faith in some part vnexpressed. 3. 2. 32.

The Lord, to ỹ end to fill our hearts with loue of righteousnes & hatred of wickednesse, was not content to set foorth bare commaundements onely, but addeth promises of blessings both of this present life & of eternall blessednesse, & also threateninges both of present miseries, and of eternal death: The threateninges declare the greate pureness of God: the Promises doe shewe his great loue to righteousnesse, and his wonderfull goodnesse towarde men. 2. 8 4.

Prouidence of God.

Prophane men, by fleshly vnderstanding doe confesse God the creator, otherwise than we do by faith: forasmuch as faith doth teach that hee is also the gouernor of all thinges not by a certaine vniuersall motion, but by a singular prouidence which extendeth euen to the least sparowe. 1. 16. 1.

They which giue any thing to fortune, doe burie the Prouidence of God, by whose secrete counce all successes are gouerned. 1. 16. 2.

Things without life, although eche of them haue their propertie naturally planted in them, yet doe not put foorth their force, but so farre as they bee directed by the present hande of God: which is prooued by the sonne, before which hee woulde both light to bee, and the earth to abounde with all kinde of good thinges: which also wee reade to haue stande still by the space of two dayes, and gone backe two degrees at the commaundement of god. 1. 16. 2. also by the starres and signes of the heauen, which the vnbeleeuers do feare. Sect. 3.

The almightinesse of God is busied in continuall doing, so that it extendeth to euery particular act, & nothing happeneth but by his councel: Which who so doe not acknowledge they defraude God of his glorie and doe extenuate his goodnesse: But wee on the other side doe receiue double fruite thereof. 1. 16. 3.

It is proued that the Prouidence of God doeth not onely beholde thinges that are done, but gouerneth all successes: Whereby is ouerthrowen the fained inuention of bare foreknowledge and of vniuersall Prouidence onely: also the errour of the Epicures is confuted, and of them which giue to God a gouernaunce onely aboue the middle region of the aire. Yet there may a certaine vniuersall Prouidence bee graunted, but so, that the speciall Prouidence bee not darkened, which doeth gouerne not onely certaine but all particular doings. 1. 16. 4, 5.

That not onely the beginning of motion is in the disposing of GOD, is prooued by the plentifulnesse of one yeare and the barrennes of an other, for whereas God calleth the one his blessing, and the other his curse and vengeance. 1. 16. 5.

The Prouidence of God in gouerning the worlde, is cheefely to be considered in mankind, and in the diuerse estate of all men, and diuerse disposing of successes. 1. 16. 6, 7.

Against them which cauil, that this doctrine of the Prouidence of God, is the Stoikes doctrine of fate or destinie 1. 16. 8.

Whether any thing happen by fortune or chaunce: Where is rehearsed the saying of Basilius Magnus, that Chaunce

Chaunce and Fortune are wordes of heathen men: also the saying of Augustine, that he repented that hee had vsed the name of Fortune. Yet those thinges maie bee saide to happen by fortune in respect of vs, which beyng considered in their nature, or weighed according to our knowledge, do seeme so, although in the secrete counsell of God they be necessarie: Also al thinges that are to come, may be said to be happening, inasmuch as they be vncertain to vs. 1.16.8.9.

What thinges are to be considered, that the doctrine of the Prouidence of God may be referred to a right hand, that wee haue the profit thereof: and where the causes of those thinges that happen, appeare not vnto vs, we must beware that wee doe not thinke, that thinges are rolled by the sway of fortune: but wee must so reuerence his secrete iudgementes, that we esteeme his will the most iust cause of all things 1.17.1.

Against certaine dogges which at this daie doe barke againg the Prouidence of God, it is prooued by the Scripture that whereas God hath so reuealed his will in the lawe and the gospell that he illuminateth the minds of them that bee his with the spirite of vnderstanding, to perceiue the mysteries therein cõtained, which otherwise are incomprehensible, yet the order of gouerning the worlde is called a bottomlesse depth, becausse when we know not the causes therof, yet we ought reuerently to honour it. 1.17.2.

Such prophane men doe foolishly comber themselues, when they alleadge that if the doctrine of the Prouidence of God be true, then the prayers of the faithfull in which they aske any thing for time to come are vayne, no counsell is to bee taken for thinges to come, and then men which do anie thing against the lawe of God, do not sinne: These daungerous errours they shall auoide, which in considering the Prouidence of God, shall frame them selues to true modestie 1.17.3.

As concerning thinges to come, it is prooued that the Scripture doth wel ioyne the aduisementes of men with the Prouidence of God: becausse wee are not hindered by his eternall decrees, but that vnder his will, we may both foresee for our selues, and order our owne thinges: For the knowledge of consulting and taking heede, are inspired into men by the Lorde, whereby wee maie serue his Prouidence, in the preseruing of our owne life. 1. 17.4.

In all successes of time past the will of God doeth gouerne: and yet the doers of wicked deeds are not excused, becausse they are accused by their own conscience, and doe not obey the will of God, but their owne lust. They are indeede the instruments of Gods prouidence, but so, that they finde the whole euill in themselues, and in God is founde nothing but a lawfull vse of their euilnesse. 1.17.5. and 1. 18. 4. Where also the same thing is shewed in the election of king Ieroboam, the tenne tribes forsaking the house of Dauid, the slaughter of the sonnes of Achab, and in the betraying of the son of God.

A godly and holy meditation of the Prouidence of God, which is taught by the rule of godlinesse: first that being certainly perswaded that no thing happeneth by fortune, we alway cast our eyes to God the cheefe cause of all thinges: then that wee doubt not that his singular Prouidence watcheth for vs, whether wee haue to doe with men as well euill as good, or with his other creatures: To which vse wee must applie the promises of God in the ſcripture which teſtifie the ſame, the examples whereof are rehearſed. 1.17.6.

Wee muſt alſo adioyne thoſe teſtimonies of Scripture which teach that all men are vnder the power of God, whether wee neede to get their good wils or reſtraine the malice of our enemies: which laſt point God worketh diuerſe waies, ſometime by taking away their wit, ſometime when he granteth them wit, he frayeth them that they dare not goe about that which they haue conceiued: and ſomtime alſo when he ſuffereth them to goe about it, he breaketh their enterpriſes: Vpon which knowledge neceſſarily foloweth a thankfulnes of mind in ſo proſperous ſucceſſe of thinges. 1.17.7.

In aduerſitie when wee are hurt by men, is required patience and quiet moderation of mind: Which is ſhewed in the examples of Joſeph beeing afflicted of his brethren, Iob perſecuted of the Chaldees, and Dauid railed vpon of Semei. If wee happen to bee diſtreſſed with any miſery without the worke of men, this ſelfeſame doctrine is the beſt remedie againſt impatience becauſe the ſcripture teſtifieth, that euen aduerſities alſo do come frō God. 1.17.8.

A Godlie man principally regarding the prouidence of God, yet will not leaue inferiour cauſes vnmarked. Therefore if hee haue receiued a benefit of anie man, he will hartily know and confeſſe himſelfe to bee bounde vnto him. If he haue taken harme or done harme to any other by his negligence or want of heed, he will impute it vnto himſelfe, much leſſe will he excuſe his owne offences. In thinges to come chiefely he will haue conſideration of inferiour cauſes, but yet ſo that in determining he will not be caried away with his owne wit, but commit himſelfe to the wiſedome of God: neither ſhall his truſt ſo ſtaie vpon outwarde helpes, that hee will careleſly reſt vpon them if hee haue them, nor be diſmaied for feare if he want them. 1.17.9.

A large deſcription of the inoſtimable felicitie of a godly mind which reſteth vpon the prouidēce of God: & on the otherſide the miſerable carefulnes wherwith we muſt needs be diſtreſſed when the weakneſſe of this earthly cottage maketh vs ſubiect to ſo manie diſeaſes, ſith our life and ſafety is beſieged with infinite dangers at home, abroad, vpon the land, in the water, by men, & by diuels. 1.17.10.11.

Thoſe places of Scripture, where it is ſaid that God repented him: make nothing againſt the doctrine of Prouidence, foraſmuch as therein (like as alſo when hee is ſaid to be angrie) the ſcripture applying it ſelfe to our capacitie deſcribeth him, not ſuch as he is, but ſuch as we feele him to bee. Likewiſe, where hee ſpared the Niniuites, to whom he had threatned deſtruction within fortie dayes: whereas hee prolonged the life of Ezechias for manie yeares to whom he had declared preſēt death: becauſe ſuch threatnings containe an vnexpreſſed condition. Which is well proued by a like example in king Abimelech, which was rebuked for Abrahams wife. 1.17.12.13.14.

A confutation of them which coueting to get a praiſe of modeſtie, go about to maintain the righteouſnes of God with a lying defēce, whē they ſay: that thoſe things which Saran & al the reprobat do naughtily, are done by the ſufferance of God, & not by his prouidence and wil. And it is proued by the affliction of Iob, the deceyuing of Achab, the killing of Chriſt, the inceſtuous adulterie of Abſolon, and many other examples, that men do worke nothing thing but that which he hath alreadie decreed with himselfe, and doeth appoint so to bee by his secrete direction. 1.18.1.

And this hath place, not onely in outward doings, but also in secret motions. For it is prooued by the hardening of Pharao and other testimonies, that God worketh euen in the mindes also and hearts of the wicked. Neither maketh it any thing to the contrarie, that often times the worke of Satan is vsed therein: For God worketh neuertheless, but after his own maner, vsing a iust reuenge, 1.18.2. & therefore God is not the author of sinnes. Sect. 4.

They are prooued guiltie of intollerable pride, which refuse this doctrine vnder pretence of Modestie. A confutation of their obiectiō when they say, that if nothing happen but with ỹ will of God, then hath he in himselfe two contrary wils, forasmuch as he doth appoint those things to be don by his secret counsell, which hee hath openly forbidden by his law. And there is shewed, that God doth not disagree with himself, that the wil of God is not chāged, that he doth not faine him selfe to nil that which he willeth: but whereas there is in God but one simple wil, the same to vs appeareth diuers, because for the weakenes of our vnderstāding, we conceiue not how he diuersly both willeth not, and willeth one selfe thing to be done. Finally it is prooued by Augustine, that man sometime with good wil willeth something which God willeth not: and sometime willeth that thing with euil wil, which God willeth with good will. 1.18 3.

The consideration of Gods power in gouerning this frame of heauen and earth, & al the partes that are in them. 1.5.5.

The fellowship of men is so gouerned by the prouidence of God, that he sheweth himselfe liberall, mercifull, righteous, and seuere. 1.5.6.

Those things which in the life of men are compted chaunces, as well of prosperitie as aduersitie are so many tokens of the heauenly prouidence, 1.5.7. & ought to awaken vs to the hope of the life to come. Sect 9.

How God worketh in the hearts of them that be his, and Satan in them that be his, but yet so, that they are not excused. 2.4.1.

God worketh also in the wicked, & euen in the same worke wherin Satan worketh, and yet is not God so said to be the author of sinne, neither is Satan or the wicked excused, but there is difference betweene the one and the other, both in the end and manner of doing. 2.4.2.5.

The olde writers oftentimes referred these thinges, not to the working of God, but to his foreknowledge or sufferance, least the wicked shoulde thereby take occasion to speake irreuerently of the workes of God. But the Scripture, when it saith that God blindeth, hardeneth, and such like, declareth somewhat more than a sufferance: although God doe worke two wayes in the reprobate, namely by forsaking them, and taking his spirite from them, & also by deliuering them to Satan the minister of his wrath. 2.4.3.4.

The ministerie of Satan is vsed to stirre forward the reprobate, whensoeuer the Lord by his prouidence directeth them hither or thither. 2.4.5.

Purgatorie.

Wee ought not to winke at the doctrine of Purgatorie, forasmuch as it is a damnable inuention of Satan which maketh voide the crosse of Christ, &c. 3.5.6.

An exposition of certaine places of Scripture which the Papistes doe wrongfully wreſt to the confirmation of their Purgatorie. 3. 5 7,8,9.

An aunſwere to the obiection of the Papiſts, that it hath beene an auncient vſage of the Church that prayers ſhould be made for the dead. Where is ſhewed that this was done by them in the olde time, without the worde of God, by a certaine wrongfull imitation, leaſt Chriſtians if they were ſlow in having care of funerals & the dead, ſhould ſeem worſe than heathen men. Yet herein was a great difference betweene this ſlipping of theſe old men, and the obſtinate error of the Papiſts. 3. 5. 10.

R.

Redeemer Chriſt.

THe knowledge of God the Creator is vnprofitable vnto vs, vnleſſe faith do alſo folow, ſetting him foorth in Chriſt a father and Redeemer to vs, and this doctrine from the beginning of the worlde in all ages hath bin holden among the Children of God. 2. 6. 1.

It is prooued by diuerſe arguments and teſtimonies of ſcripture, that the happie ſtate of the Church hath alway beene grounded vpon the perſon of Chriſt. For both the firſt adoption of the choſen people, and the preſeruing of the Church, the deliuerance of them in perils, and the reſtoring after their diſſipation, did alway hang vpon the grace of the mediator. And the hope of all the Godly was neuer repoſed any other where than in Chriſt. 2. 6. 2, 3, 4.

It is to be diligently conſidered how Chriſt hath fulfilled the office of Redeemer, that wee may finde in him all things neceſſarie for vs, ſith (as Bernard ſaith) he is to vs light, meate, oyle, ſault, &c. 2. 16. 1.

An expoſition howe wee ſhould ſay that God was our enemie vntil he was reconciled to vs by Chriſt, whereas to giue Chriſt to vs, and to preuent vs with mercie, were ſignes of the loue wherewith he before embraced vs. And there is ſhewed that the ſcripture vſeth this ſpeach and ſuch other, to apply it ſelfe to our capacitie: and yet it doth not the ſame falſely. And all this is prooued by the authoritie of ſcripture and the teſtimonie of Auguſtine. 2. 16. 2, 3.

Regeneraion.

Againſt certaine Anabaptiſts which inuent a phrentike intemperance inſteede of ſpirituall Regeneration, namely that the children of God being nowe reſtored into the ſtate of innocencie, ought no more to bee carefull to bridle the luſt of the fleſh, but onely to followe the ſpirite for their guide. 3. 3. 14.

The reſt pertaining to this matter, ſee in the title of Repentance.

Religion.

Neceſſitie enforceth the reprobate to confeſſe that there is ſome GOD, 1. 4 4.

They are deceiued which ſaye that Religion was deuiſed by the ſutterie of certain men to hold the ſimple people in order. 1. 3. 2.

The verie wicked and godleſſe men are compelled, whether they will or no, to feele that there is a God. 1. 3. 2. and in what ſenſe Dauid ſaith that they thinke that there is no God. 1. 4 2.

Remiſſion of ſinnes.

Againſt them which dreame a perfection in this life, which taketh away neede of asking pardon. 3. 20. 45.

Of remiſſion of ſinnes: and in what ſenſe ſinnes are called debtes, and how we are ſaide to forgiue other that haue offended againſt vs. 3. 20. 45.

Of the diſtinction of fault & peine, where-where with moſt ſtrong teſtimonies of Scripture, the doting error of the Papiſtes is confuted, namely that when the faulte is forgiuen yet God retaineth the paine, which remaineth to be redeemed with ſatisfactions. 3. 4. 29 30. and there alſo is ſhewed ỹ they can not ſcape away with their diſtinction betweene euerlaſting peine and temporal peines.

Of certaine places of Scripture wherewith they goe about to confirme their error: where is declared ỹ there are two kinds of the iudgemẽt of God: the one of vengeãce, the other of chaſticement, which are wiſely to be diſtinguiſhed aſunder. 3.4.31.

The firſt of theſe, that is to ſaie, vengeance, the faithfull haue alway earneſtly praied to eſcape: the other that is to ſay chaſticement, they haue receiued with quiet minde, becauſe it hath a teſtimonie of loue. And where it is ſaide that God is angrie with his Saints, the ſame is not meant of his purpoſe or affection to puniſhe them, but is ſpoken of the vehement feeling of ſorowe wherewith they are ſtriken ſo ſoone as they beare anye parte of his ſeueritie: and this is profitable for them. On the other ſide the reprobate, when they are ſtriken with the ſcourges of God, do already after a certaine manner begin to feele the peines of his iudgement. All which thinges are prooued by teſtimonies of the Scripture, and alſo by the expoſitions of Chryſoſtome and Auguſtine. 3. 4. 32.33.

God when hee had forgiuen the adulterie of Dauid, chaſtiſed him both for common example, and alſo to humble him: and for this reaſon hee daylie maketh the faithfull (to whom hee is mercifull) ſubiect to the common miſeries of this life. 3.4.35.

An expoſition of the article of the Creede, concerning remiſſion of ſins. 4.1.20 21.

The keies were giuen to the church, to forgiue ſinnes, not onely to men at their firſt conuerſion to Chriſte, but to the faithfull all their life long. 4.1.22.

This doctrine is prooued by teſtimonies of Scripture againſt the Nouatians and certaine of the Anabaptiſts which fain that the people of God are by baptiſme regenerate into an angellike life, and afterward there remaineth no pardon for them that fall. 4. 1. 23.24 25.26.27.

A confutation of them which make a voluntary tranſgreſſion of the lawe a ſinne vnpardonable. 4.1.28.

Repentance.

Repentance commeth of faith, and goeth not before it. 3.3.1.

A confutation of their reaſons, which thinke otherwiſe, but heereby is not ſignified anie ſpace of time wherein faith breedeth repentance: but only is ſhewed that no man can earneſtly endeuour himſelf to Repentance vnleſſe he know himſelfe to be Gods. Of the error of certaine Anabaptiſtes, Ieſuits, and ſuch other which appoint to their nouices, certaine daies for repentance 3.3.2.

Certaine learned men long before this time, made two partes of Repentance, namely Mortification, which they commonly call contrition, & Viuification which they wrongfully expounde to bee comfort by the feeling of the mercie of God: whereas it rather ſignifieth a deſire to liue wel. 3.3.3.

They do alſo make two other ſortes of Repentance, the one of the lawe, the other of the Goſpel: where alſo are ſhewed examples of either ſort out of the Scripture. 3.3.4.

A true definition of Repentaunce taken out of the Scripture, And howe Repentance though it cannot be seuered, yet ought to be distinguished from faith 3.3.5.

A plainer declaration of the definition of Repentance: where first is shewed that there is requiring a turning to God, that is to saie, an alteration, not onelie in outward works, but also in the soule it selfe, 3.3.6. then that it proceedeth of an earnest feare of God: Where also is intreated of the sorrowfulnes that is according to God 3.3.7.

Thirdly, that saying is declared that Repentance consisteth of two partes, the mortification of the flesh, and the quickening of the spirite. 3.3.8.

Both these thinges doe wee obtaine by partaking of Christ, the first by communicating of his death, the seconde of his resurrection. Therefore Repentance is a newe forming of the image of God in vs, and a restoring into the righteousnesse of God by the benefite of Christ: And this restoring is not fulfilled in vs in one moment. 3.3.9.

But there remaineth in al the saints, while they liue in mortall bodie, matter of strife with their flesh, and so thought all the Ecclesiasticall writers that haue beene of sounde iudgement: and specially Augustine, which calleth this nourishment of euill and disease of lusting in the elect, weakenesse, and sometime sinne: And indeed it is sinne. 3.3.10.

This is confirmed by the testimonie of Paul, and by the summe of the commaundements. Whereas it is said that God cleanseth his Churche from all sinne, the same is spoken rather of the guiltines of sinne than of the matter of sinne it selfe, which ceasseth not to dwel in the regenerate (but ceasseth to reigne in them) though it be not imputed. 3.3.11.

A declaration of the seuen causes or effectes, or partes or affections of Repentance, which Paul rehearseth: Those be studie or carefulnesse, excusing, displeasure, feare, desire, zeale, reuenge. Whereunto also is added out of Paul, and declared by an excellent admonition of Bernarde, that in such reuenge we must keepe a measure 3.3.15.

The fruites of Repentance are, deuotion towarde God, charitie towarde men, holinesse and pureneſse in all our life: but all these ought to begin at the inward affection of the heart, from whence outward testimonies may afterward spring foorth: Where also is spoken of certaine outward exercises of Repentance, which the olde writers seeme to enforce somewhat too much. 3.3.16.

Turning of the heart to God, is the chiefe point of Repentance: sackcloth and ashes, weeping and fasting, were vsed of them in the olde time before Christ, as tokens of publike repentance: of which the two last may yet bee vsed to appease the wrath of God in the miserable times of the Church. 3.3.17.

The name of Repentance or penance is vnproperly drawen from his naturall sense to this outwarde profession. Publike confession is not alway necessarie in sinnes: but priuate confession to God may neuer be omitted, wherein wee ought to confesse, not onely those thinges that we haue lately committed, but the displeasure of our grieuous fall ought also to call vs backe to remembrance of our passed offences. Of speciall penance which is required of hainous offenders and certain other: and of the ordinary penance which the children of God, euē the the moſt perfect, ought to vſe all their life long.3.3.18.

God doeth therefore freely iuſtifie thē that be his, that he may alſo with the Sanctification of his ſpirite reſtore them into true righteouſnes: therefore Iohn Chriſt and the Apoſtles preached Repentance and remiſſion of ſinnes. The effect of which ſaying is declared 3.3.19.

Chriſtians ought to exerciſe themſelues in a continuall Repentance, and he hath moſt profited, that hath learned moſt to miſlike himſelfe.3.3.20.

Repentāce is a ſingular gift of God, vnto which he calleth all men, which he giueth to all them whome hee purpoſeth to ſaue, and which the Apoſtle pronounceth that it ſhall neuer be giuen to wilful apoſtataes whoſe wickednesſe is vnpardonable, ỳ is to ſaye, ſuch as haue ſinned againſt th e holy ghoſt 3.3.1.

Although fained repentanee doeth not pleaſe God, yet he ſometime for a ſeaſō ſpareth hypocrits which make a ſhew of ſome cōuerſion, which he doth not for their ſakes, but for cōmon example, that we may learn more cherefully to giue our mindes to vnfained Repentance: And this is prooued by the examples of Achab, Eſau, and the Iſraelites.3.3.25.

The Schoole ſophiſters do fowly er in thoſe definitions which they make of Repentance, and no better do they diuide it, when they part it into contrition of heart, confeſſion of mouth, and ſatisfaction of worke: Where is entreated of certaine queſtions which they moue: whereupon is eaſily gathered, that they babble of thinges which they knowe not, when they ſpeake of Repentance.3.4.1.

When they require thoſe three things in Repentāce, they muſt needes binde therunto forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: And if it be ſo, then are we moſt miſerable, foraſmuch as we can neuer haue quietnes of conſcience: which is prooued firſt in that contritiō of heart ſuch as they require.3.4.2.

There is great difference betweene the doctrine of ſuch contrition, & that contrition which the Scripture requireth of ſinners, ỳ they truly hūger and thirſt for the mercy of God.3.4.3.

In what ſenſe the old writers thought that ſolemn penance, which was then required for haynous offences, might no more be eftſoones done than Baptiſme.4.1.29.

Reaſon of Man.

Mans vnderſtanding is not ſo to bee cōdemned of perpetual blindnes, that wee leaue it no whit of vnderſtanding in any kinde of thing: but it hath ſome knowledge inaſmuch as he is naturally carried with deſire to ſearche out trueth. And yet this deſire by and by falleth into vanitie, becauſe the minde of man can not for dulneſſe, kepe the right way to ſearch out truth, and for the moſte parte he diſcerneth not of what thinges it is behouefull for him to ſeeke the true knowledge.2.2.12.

As touching earthly things it is prooued by examples ỳ the minde of man hath a ſharpe vnderſtanding, as firſt of all in ciuil policy and in gouernance of houſholdes, ſith euery man vnderſtandeth that the fellowſhips of men muſt be holden together by lawes, and cōprehendeth in minde the principles of thoſe lawes.2.2.13.

Alſo in liberal artes & handy craftes for learning whereof, yea for amplifiyng and garniſhing of the ſame, there is in man a certayne aptneſſe, although ſome bee more apt than other. But the light of Reaſon and vnderſtanding in mē, is ſo a general good qualitie in all men, that yet it is a free gift of Gods liberalitie towarde euerie man: which thing God sheweth when he createth some Idiotes and dull witted: also when hee maketh one man to excell in sharpe inuention, an other in iudgement, an other in quickenesse of minde, againe when he powreth into men singular motions according to euery mans calling, and according to the time & matter that is to bee done 2.2.14 17.

The inuention of artes, the orderlye teaching or deepe & excellent knowledge thereof, which appeare to haue bin in the old Lawyers, Philosophers, Phisitians, being prophane men, doe declare vnto vs that the minde of men howe much soeuer it bee fallen from his first vprightnesse, is yet still garnished with excellent giftes of God. 2.2. 15.

They are the gifts of the holy Ghoste which the Lorde giueth to whome hee will, euen to the vngodly for the publike benefit of mankind. Therefore we ought to vse them although they bee communicate vnto vs by the ministerie of the wicked, to whō they are but transitorie and fleeting, because they are without the sounde foundation of trueth, 2.2.16.

It is shewed in the first two poyntes, that mans Reason seeth nothing that concerneth the kingdome of God and heauenly matters, which are cōtained in three things, that is to say, to knowe God, his fatherly fauour toward vs, and the way to frame our life according to the rule of his law. 2.2.18, and to that purpose are alleaged diuerse testimonies of Scripture. Sect. 19.20.21. In the third it seemeth that he hath some more vnderstanding than in the other, forasmuch ae man is instructed by the lawe of nature to a right rule of life. But such knowledge is vnperfecte in the vnbeleeuers, and auayleth to no other ende, but to make them vnexcusable: neither doe they by that naturall light, see the trueth in euerie thing. And here is expounded the saying of Themistius, that vnderstanding in the vniuersall definition is seldom deceiued, but the errour is when it descendeth to particular causes, and there is shewed, that mans vniuersall iudgement in the difference of good and euill, is not alway sound and vpright. For it attaineth not those which are the chiefe thinges in the first table of the lawe, namely of confidence in God. &c. In the seconde table, although it haue some more vnderstanding, yet it appeareth that it sometime erreth: as when it iudgeth that it is an absurditie to suffer too imperious gouernement, and not to reuenge wronges: also it knoweth not the disease of desire in the whole obseruation of the lawe. 2.2. 22. 23 24.

It is proued by the Scripture, that the sharpnesse of our reason in all the partes of our life, is nothing before the Lord, and our mindes doe reape the grace of enlightning, not onely at the begiuning, or for one day, bnt at euerie moment 2.2.25.

See vnder the title of Freewill, certaine thinges pertayning to this matter.

Resurrection of Christ.

Without the Resurrection of Christ all is vnperfecte that wee beleeue concerning his crosse, Death, and Buriall. Thereof wee receiue three profites: forasmuche as it hath both purchased vs righteousnesse before God, and is to vs a pledge of the Resurrection to come, and by his life, wee are now regenerate into newenes of lyfe. 2.16.13.

A declaration of the historie of the Resurrection of Christ. 3.25.3.

Last

Last resurrection.

Forasmuch as the faithful, do chiefly neede hope and patience, least they should faint in the course of their calling: hee hath soundly profited in the Gospel which is accustomed to a continuall meditation of the blessed Resurrection. 3.25.1,2.

The Article concerning the last Resurrection, containeth a doctrine of great weight, graue & hard to beleeue: for the ouercomming of which hardnesse by faith, the Scripture giueth two helpes, the example of Christ and the almightinesse of GOD. 3.25. 3.4.

S.

Sabbath.

AN exposition of the fourth commandement, the end thereof, and the three causes whereupon wee must note that it consisteth. 2.8.28.

The first cause is a shadowing of spirituall rest, that is to say, of our sanctification: This is prooued by diuerse places to haue beene the chiefe thing in the Sabbath. 2.8.29.

Why the Lorde appointed the seuenth day. 2.8.30.31.

This part, forasmuch as it was ceremoniall, is taken away by the death of Christ. 2.8.31.

The two later causes, that is to say, that there shoulde bee certaine dayes appointed for assemblies in ỹ Church, and that there should be giuen to seruaunts a rest from their labor, do serue for all ages. 2.8.32.

Of dayes of meeting in the Church to heare the word of God & common prayers: Where is spoken of obseruing of the Sunday, 2.8.32.33. and of superstition to be auoided in this behalfe. 2. 8.34.

Sacraments.

What is a Sacrament 4.14.1.

For what reason the olde writers vsed this word in that sense. 4.14.2,13.

A Sacrament is neuer without a promise going before, which the Lord sealeth by that meane, wherein hee prouideth helpe for our ignorance & dulnesse, & also for our weaknes. 4.14. 3,5,6,12.

A sacrament consisteth of ỹ worde & the outwarde signe: But the Sacramentall word is to be taken otherwise than the Papistes thinke. 4.14.4.

Sacraments ceasse not to bee testimonies of the grace of God, although they bee giuen also to the wicked, whiche doe gather to them selues more grieuous damnation thereby. 4. 14.7.

Our faith is so confirmed by sacraments, that yet it hangeth vpon the inward effectuall working of the spirite, 4.14.9,10,11. and no vertue is to be put in the creatures. Sect. 12.

A confutation of the deuelish doctrine of the Sophisticall scholes, that the Sacraments of the newe lawe doe iustify and doe giue grace, so that we doe not stop it with deadly sinne. 4. 14.14.

Augustins good distinction betwene a sacrament and the thing of the Sacracrament, whereby is proued ỹ though God in Sacramentes doe truely offer Christe, yet ỹ wicked receiue nothing but the Sacrament, that is to say, the outward signe. 4.14.15.16.

Wee must not thinke that there is ioyned or fastened to the Sacraments any secrete vertue, whereby they by themselues doe giue vs the graces of the holy Ghost. 4.14 17.

In the olde time God gaue vnto his people some sacraments in miracles, and some in natural things. And there is spoken of the tree of life and of the raynebowe 4.14 18.

Sacramentes are on the Lords behalfe testimonies of grace & saluation, and on our behalfe tokens of our profession. 4 14.19.

The sacraments of the old Church vnder the Lawe, tended to the same ende that our Sacramentes doe, that is to say, Christe: whome yet our Sacraments do more plainelie represent. Wherefore the Scholemens doctrine is to be reiected, which say, that ỹ olde sacraments did shewe a shadow of the grace of God, and ours doe giue it presently. 4.14.20,21,22,23. &c.

The fiue falsely called Sacraments.

When wee denye those fiue to bee Sacramentes, which are inuented by men, wee striue not about the name but the thing: because the papistes will haue them to bee visible formes of inuisible grace. 4 19.1.

Many reasons are brought, why it is not lawfull for men to make Sacraments. Also there is a difference to bee put betweene sacraments, & other ceremonies. 4.19.2.

The number of seuen sacramentes cannot bee prooued by the authoritie of the olde Church. 4.19.3.

Although the olde Church vnder the law, had mo sacramẽts, yet at this day, the Christian church ought to be content with those two, which Christe hath ordeined: And it is not lawfull for men to make other, nor to adde vnto these any thing of their owne 4. 18.20.

Sacrifices.

A difference betweene the Sacrifices of Moses his Lawe, and the supper of the Lord in the Christiã church 4.18.12.

What the name of a sacrifice properly signifieth: and of the diuerse kindes of sacrifices vnder the lawe: which may be diuided in to two sortes, wherof some may be called of thanksgiuing, and other some propitiatory or of cleansing. 4 18.13.

Our onely propitiatory sacrifice, is the death of Christe. Sacrifices of thankesgiuing wee haue many, as all the dueties of charitie, prayers, prayses, giuing of thankes, and all that wee do to the worshipping of God. 4.18.13. 16.17.

This manner of Sacrificing is dayly vsed in the church, & in the supper of the Lorde: And thereupon all Christians are sacrificing Priests.

Satisfactions Papistical.

Of satisfaction, which they make the third thing in penaunce, of retayning the paine, the fault beeing forgiuen, and such like lies, which all are ouerthrown, by setting against the free forgiuenesse of sinnes, by the name of Christe. 3.4.25.

A confutation of the blasphemous error of the schoolemen, ỹ forgiuenes of sinnes, and reconciliation is once done in baptisme, but after baptisme, we must rise againe by satisfactions. 3. 4.26.

By such errour, Christ is spoiled of his honor, & the peace of consciences is troubled, forasmuch as they can neuer certainlye determine, that their sinnes are forgiuen them. 3.4.27.

In

In Daniel, when Nabuchadonesor is commaunded to redeeme his sinnes with righteousnesse, that same redeeming is referred to God, rather than to men, and the cause of pardon is not there set foorth, but rather the maner of true conuersion. The same is to bee sayd of certaine other places of Scripture. 3.4.36.

An exposition of that place in the Gospell, Manie sinnes are forgiuen her, because she hath loued much: Meaning that loue is not the cause, but the proofe of forgiuenesse. 3.4.37.

The olde writers of the church did not speak of satisfactions in such sense as the papists do: for they vnderstoode that the penitent do make saaisfaction to the Church, and not to God. 3.4. 38.39.

Scripture, the VVorde of God, and the authoritie thereof.

Men do not sufficiently knowe God the creator, and discerne him from fained goddes, by consideration of his creatures, vnlesse they be also holpen by the light of his worde. And God hath kept this order in teaching them that be his, not onely since that hee chose the Iewes for his peculiar people, but also from the beginning, euen towarde Adam, Noe, and the other fathers. 1.6.1.

Either by oracles, or by visions, or by the ministerie of other, the fathers had the word which they were certainly perswaded to be the worde of God, whereby they knewe the true GOD the creator and gouernor of all things which worde afterwarde, that hee might prouide for men in all ages, hee caused to be writtē in the law and the Prophetes, as it were in publike registers, 1.6.2.3. in which place also is proued by testimonies of Scripture, that the doctrine of the worde, muste bee ioyned to the consideration of creatures, least we conceiue a fickle knowledge of God.

Of them which say that the authoritie of Scripture hangeth vppon the iudgement of the church, & in how ill case we should be, if it were so. 1.7.1.

This errour is wel confuted by the place of Paul in the second chapter to the Ephesians, where hee saieth that the faithfull are builded vpon the foūdation of the Apostles and Prophetes. 1.7.2.

In what sense Augustine sayeth, that he woulde not haue beleeued the Gospell, vnlesse the authoritie of ỹ church did moue him: which place they doe cauillously wrest to the confirmation of their errour. 1.7.3.

Although there be many other argumentes, which do proue, yea, do enforce the wicked to confesse, that the Scripture came frō God, yet by none other meane, than by the secrete testimonie of the holy Ghost, our heartes are truely perswaded that it is GOD, which speaketh in the lawe, in the prophetes, and in the gospell. And this is proued by many places of Esaie. 1.7. 4.5.

The orderly disposition of the wisdome of God, the doctrine sauoring nothing of earthlinesse, the goodly agreement of all the partes among thēselues, and specially that baseneſſe of cōtemptible wordes, vttering the high mysteries of the heauenly kingdome, are seconde helpes to stablish the credit of Scripture. 1.8 1.2.11.

Also the antiquitie of the Scripture, whereas the bookes of other religions, are later than the bookes of Moses, which yet doeth not himselfe inuent a newe God, but setteth foorth to the Israelites, the God of their fathers. 1.8. 3.4.

Whereas Moses doth not hide the shame of Leui his father, nor the murmuring of Aarõ his brother, & of Mary his sister, nor doth aduaunce his own children: the same are argumentes, ỳ in his bookes is nothing fained by mã 1.8.4.

Also the miracles which happened, as well at the publishing of the lawe, as in all the rest of time. 1.8.5.

Which miracles, whẽ the prophane writers could not deny, they cauilled, that Moses did thẽ by magicall artes. Which sclander is confuted by moste strong reasons. 1.8.6.

Also wheras Moses speaking in the person of Iacob, assigneth the gouernment to the tribe of Iuda, and where he telleth before of the calling of the Gentiles, whereof the one came to passe foure hundred yeares after, and the other almost two thousand yeres: these are arguments, ỳ it is God himselfe which speaketh in the bookes of Moses. 1.8.7.

Wheras Esay telleth before of the captiuitie of the Iewes, and there restoring by Cyrus (which was borne a hundred yeares after the death of Esaie) and where Ieremie before that the people was ledde away appointeth their exile to continue threescore and tenne yeares, whereas Ieremie and Ezechiel, being farre distant in places the one from the other, doe agree in all their sayings, where Daniel telleth before of thinges to come, for sixe hundred yeres after: these are most certain proues, to stablishe the authoritie of the bookes of the Prophets. 2.8.8.

Against certaine vngodly scoffers which aske how we knowe that those are the writings of Moses & the Prophets, which are red in their names: and how we knowe that there was euer any such Moses. 1.8.9.

Also of them that aske, from whẽce the copies of the bookes of the scripture came to vs, forasmuch as Antiochus commaunded them all to bee burned. And there is spoken of the wonderfull prouidence of God in preseruing them so manye ages, among so manie enimies, and so cruell persecutions. 1.8.10.

The simplicitie of speeche of the first three Euangelistes, containing heauenlye mysteries, the phrase of Iohn thondering from on high with weighty sẽtences, the heauenly maiestie shining in the writings of Peter & Paul, the sudden calling of Matthew from the boorde, the calling of Peter and Iohn from their fisherbotes to the preaching of the Gospel, the conuersion & caling of Paul being an enemy to Apostleship, are signes of the holye Ghost speaking in them. 1.8.11.

The consent of so many ages, of so sundrie nations, & of so diuerse minds in embracing the Scripture, and the rare godlinesse of some, ought to stablish the authoritie therof among vs 1.8.12.

Also the bloud of so many martyrs which for the confession therof, haue suffered death with a constãt & sober zeale of God. 1.8.13.

Against certaine phrentike men, which forsaking the reading of scripture & learning, do boast of the spirite & do flie to reuelations. 1.9.1.2.

A confutation of their obiection, that it is not meete that the spirite of God, to whom all things ought to bee subiect, should be subiect to the scripture. 1.9.2.

Also where they say ỳ we rest vpõ the letter which slayeth. 1.9.3.

The Lord hath ioyned with a mutual knot the certaintie of his doctrin and of his spirite. 1.9.3.

Such as the beholding of the heauen & earth & other creatures doth depaint depaint out God vnto vs, ſuch doth ỹ Scripture ſet him foorth, ỹ is to ſay, eternall, ful of goodnes, clemency, mercy, righteouſnes, iudgement and truth: and alſo to the ſame end. 1.10.1,2.

What is to be thought of the power of the Church in expoſition of Scripture. 4.9 13.

The Romiſh doctours do wrongfully abuſe this colour to the confirmation of their errours and blaſphemies. 4. 9 14.

Of ſinging in the Church.

Voyice and Singing auaile nothing in prayer, without affection of the hart 3.20.31.33.

Of the vſage of Singing in Churches 3.20.32.

Single life.

Their ſhameleſneſſe which doe ſet forth the comlines of Single life for a thing neceſſarie, to the great reproche of the old church. By what degrees this tyranny crept into the Churche: and how it cannot be defended by the pretence of certaine olde canons. 4.12.26, 27.28.

Prieſtes were forbidden to marrie by wicked tyranny, and againſt the word of God, and againſt all equity. 4. 12.23.

An aunſwere to the aduerſaries obiection, that the prieſt muſt by ſome marke differ from the lay people. 4 12. 24.

The blaſphemy of the pope, ſaying that mariage is defilinge & vnclennes of the fleſh. 4.12.24.

It is fond to defend the forbidding of mariage with the examples of the Leuiticall Prieſtes, which when they ſhould go into the ſanctuary lay aſunder from their wiues. 4.12.25.

Sinne.

A confutation of Platoes ſaying, that men Sinne not but by ignorance: alſo of their opinion which ſay that in all Sinnes there is an aduiſed malice & frowardnes. 2.2.22.23.25.

Againſt the falſe imagination of the Sophiſters concerning veniall ſinnes, which they cal deſires without a determined aſſent, which doe not long reſt in the heart: it is prooued that euery ſinne, euē the lighteſt deſire deſerueth death, and is deadly, except in the ſaintes which obtaine pardon by the mercie of God. 2.8.58.59.

A confutation of their fonde diſtinction betwene deadly & venial ſinnes, and of their ſclaunder when they ſay that wee make all ſinnes equall. 3. 4.28.

Howe it is to bee expounded, that God viſiteth the iniquitie of ỹ Fathers vpon the children vnto the third and fourth generation: and whether ſuch reuengement bee vnſeemely for the righteouſneſſe of GOD. 2. 8. 19, 20.

Sinne againſt the holy ghoſt.

The true definition of Sin againſt the holy Ghoſt, and examples thereof out of the Scripture. 3.3.22.

It is not one or another particular falling, but a generall forſaking, the deſcription wherof is declared by the Apoſtle. Neither is it any maruell if God will bee alwayes vnappeaſable to them that haue ſo fallen. 3.3.23. forasmuch as he promiſeth pardon only to them that repent, which they ſhal neuer doe. And though the ſcripture doe ſay that ſome ſuch haue groned and cried, yet that was not repentaunce or conuerſion, but rather a blind torment by deſperation. 3.3.24.

Of the Soule.

That the Soule or Spirite of man is not onely a breath, but an immortall ſubſtance, although it were created, is prooued by conſcience, by the knowledge of God, and by ſo many excellent gifts wherwith the minde of man is endued, yea, and by thoſe thinges which it conceiueth in ſleepe, and alſo by many argumẽts taken out of the ſcripture.1.15.2. Finally by this that it is ſaid, that man was created after the image of God. Sect.3.

Againſt them that vnder the colour of Nature doe denie the prouidence and gouernaunce of God vttering itſelfe in the maruellous and in a manner innumerable powers of the ſoule 1.5.4,5.

A confutation of the errour of the Manichees, and of Seruetus, that the ſoule is a deriuation of the ſubſtaunce of God: alſo of the errour of Oſiander, which acknowledgeth no image of God in man without an eſſential righteouſneſſe.1.15.5.

Concerning the immortalitie of the ſoule, in a maner none of the Philoſophers hath certainly ſpoken: but they doe binde the powers thereof to this preſent life, whereas the ſcripture doth ſo giue to it the cheefe rule in gouernaunce of life, that it alſo ſtirreth vp man to the worſhipping of God. Alſo of the diuerſitie of ſoules, and of the diuiſion of the powers of the ſoule according to the Philoſophers. 1. 15. 6.

Another diuiſion more agreeable with Chriſtian doctrine, that is to ſay, that the powers of the ſoule are vnderſtanding and will: and the office & force of either of them in mans firſt eſtate.1.15.7.8.

That there yet remaineth ſomewhat of the ſeede of religion yet imprinted euen in the corruption of the ſoule.1.15.6.

Of their errour which thought that whole man periſheth by death, & that the ſoules at the laſt ſhall riſe againe with the bodies. 3.25.6.

Of the ſtate of ſoules from death to the laſt day.3.25.6.

A deſcription taken out of Bernard, of the miſeries of a faithfull ſoule, being conſidered as it is in it ſelfe and of it ſelfe: and on the other ſide, of the aſſured glorying of a faithfull ſoule in Chriſte, which blotteth out all her vnworthineſſes.3.2.25.

Superſtition.

The ſimplicity of the Superſtitious doeth not excuſe them, becauſe their blindeneſſe is founde to be mingled with vanitie, pride, and obſtinacy. 1.4.1,3.

When ſuperſtition goeth about to pleaſe God, it mocketh him with lying colours.1.4.3.

The ſuperſtitious do not approche vnto GOD but againſt their will and with ſeruile feare.1.4.4.

Whoſoeuer do corrupt the true religion, although they followe the cõſent of antiquitie or the cuſtome of any citie, yet they depart from the one & true God.1.5.12.

It is prooued by the etymologie of the wordes Superſtition, Religion, Euſebeia or godlineſſe, what difference is betweene Religion and ſuperſtition. 1.12.1.

The craft of ſuperſtition, when grãting the chiefe place to the one God, it beſetteth him with a rout of ſmaller Gods.1.12.1,3.

Supper of the Lord.

Of the bread and wine the ſignes in the holy ſupper: and it is declared by his owne words at his Supper, why the Lorde willed that wee ſhoulde vſe them.4.17.1.

Wee gather a great fruite of confidence & ſweeteneſſe out of this ſacrament, which teſtifieth that wee are ſo growne togither into one body with Chriſt, that whatſoeuer is his, wee may lawfully call it ours.4.17.2.

This is declared by the wordes of the Supper.4.17.3.

The

The chiefe office of the ſacraments is not to giue vnto vs the bodye of Chriſt without any higher conſideration, but rather to ſeale that promiſe wherein hee teſtifieth that his fleſh is verily meat. 4.17.4.

The ſupper maketh not Chriſt then firſt to beginne to be the bread of life, but that wee ſhould feele the force of y bread. He once gaue his fleſh for the life of the world, and daily giueth it to the that be his. Wee muſt beware that we do not too much abace or aduance the ſignes. The eating of the fleſh of Chriſt is not faith, but rather the effect of faith. 4.17.5.

So thought Chryſoſtome & Auguſtine: and in what ſenſe Auguſtine ſaide, that in beleeuing we eat the fleſh of Chriſt. 4.17.6.

They doe not ſay enough, which paſſing ouer the mention of fleſh and bloud, doe thinke that wee are made partakers onely of the ſpirit of Chriſt. The myſterie of the ſupper is ſo great, that neither the tongue can expreſſe with ſpeaking, nor the heart comprehend with thinking the greatnes therof. 4.17.7.

How farre the perfect communicating of Chriſt extendeth. Where is declared that Chriſt, which from the beginning was the life giuing worde of the father, made the fleſh which hee tooke vpon him to bee alſo life giuing to vs. 4.17.8,9.

The faithfull doe truely eate of the ſame fleſh how great diſtance of places ſoeuer there be betweene them and it. 4.17.10.

The myſterie of the Supper conſiſteth of two things, the bodily ſignes, and the ſpirituall trueth: Which ſpirituall trueth conteineth three things, ſignification, matter, and effect. 4.17.11.

Of the tranſubſtantiation of bread and wine into the body and bloud of Chriſt, which the craftesmen of the court of Rome haue forged. 4.17.12,13. &c. and 20.

They are without teſtimonie of antiquitie. And in what ſenſe the olde writers ſaide, that in the conſecration is made a ſecrete turning. Alſo the ſignification of the Supper agreeth not, vnleſſe the ſubſtance of the outwarde ſignes remaine. 4.17.14.

The breade is a ſacrament to none but to men to whome the worde is directed. And here are confuted certain arguments of the teachers of tranſubſtantiation. 4.17.15.

Of ſome men, which though they doe at one worde graunt that the ſubſtance of the ſignes remaineth, yet placing the bodie of Chriſt in bread and vnder bread, they fall backe into the locall preſence, & faine a being euery where. 4.17.16,17,18,20.

A confutation of their obiections 4.17.21,22,23,&c.

It is proued that this doctrine is not maintained, neither by the teſtimonies of Auguſtine, nor by authoritie of ſcripture. 4.17.28,29,30,31.

A confutation of certaine other of their obiections, and cheefely of this that they ſay, that whatſoeuer wee teache of ſpirituall eating, is againſt the true and reall eating: where alſo is declared that the bodie of Chriſte is in the Supper offered to the infidels, but they receiue it not. 4.17.33.

Neither can the ſaying of Auguſtine be drawen to this purpoſe, that the ſacraments are nothing appaired by the infidelitie of men. Which is proued by diuerſe other teſtimonies of the ſame man. 4.17.34.

How the body and bloud of Chriſt is giuen to vs in the Supper, and what maner of preſence of Chriſt we ought to holde therein.4.17.18,19,32.

Of the expoſition of the wordes of Chriſt in the ſupper.4.17.20,21.

The body of Chriſt is conteined in quantitie, and comprehended in heauen,vntil the laſt day, as it is prooued by the ſcriptures.4.17.26,27.

Of the papiſtes carnal adoration, & concomitance, & conſecration of the hoſt (as they call it) and carrying it about in pompe.4.17.35,36,37.

The myſterie of the Supper ought to ſtirre vs vp to giuing of thankes, to exerciſe vs in remembring the death of Chriſt, to kindle vs to holineſſe of life, and chiefely to charitie.4.17.37,38.

In the papacie the Supper (the true miniſtratiō whereof is not without the word) is turned into a dumme action. And here is ſpoken of the laying vp of the Sacrament to be extraordinarily diſtributed to ſicke men.4.17.39.

The doctrine of the papiſtes, when they goe about to prepare men to the worthineſſe of eating the bodie of Chriſt, doeth in cruell wiſe torment conſciences: And the diuel could not by any readier way deſtroy men. Of the beſt remedie to auoyde this deſtruction. They erre which in the ſupper doe require of the faithfull perfection of faith.4.17.41,42.

As touching the outwarde vſage of the miniſtration of the Supper, there are many things indifferent: And how it ought to be miniſtred moſt comely.4.17.43.

Of the ſmall aſſemblie at this day at the partaking of the Supper, which is a token of contempt, wherewith the holy fathers in olde time were much diſpleaſed: And howe the cuſtome which commaundeth men to communicate once euery yere, was a moſt certaine inuention of the diuell.4.17.44.45.46.

It is prooued by authoritie of the ſcripture & by ỹ vſage of the old Church, foure hundred yeres before the death of Gregorie, and by many other argumentes, that the conſtitution which tooke away from lay men the cup of the Lord, came out of the diuels workſhop.4.17.47.48,49.50.

Of the concomitance of the bloud in the fleſh of Chriſt, which is a popiſh inuention.4.17.47.

The Supper of the Lord is profanely abuſed, if it be giuen to al men without choice. Of the dutie of miniſters in reiecting the vnworthie.4.12.5.

A briefe ſum of thoſe things which we ought to know concerning the two Sacraments. And why the Supper is oftentimes miniſtred, & Baptiſme but once.4.18.19.

Swearing.

An expoſition of the thirde commaundement, in which theſe three things are conteined, that wee neither think nor ſpeake any thing of God, nor of his worde and honorable myſteries, nor yet of any of his workes, otherwiſe than reuerently.2.8.22.

A definition of Swearing: where is declared that it is a kinde of worſhipping of God: And therefore wee muſt beware that our othes conteine not any diſhonour to the name of God, which is done in Forſwearing: or any contempt of it, which is done in ſuperfluous othes, or in which ỹ name of any other than God is vſed.2.8.23,24,25.

It is prooued by Scripture againſt the Anabaptiſts: that al othes are not forbidden vs, that Chriſt in the Goſpell changed nothing as touching the rule of Swearing, ſet forth in the lawe.2.8.26. Which is prooued by his own example: and not onely publike, but alſo priuate othes are permitted, keeping the moderation which the lawe commaundeth.2.8.27.

T.

Temples.

Of Temples of Christian men for assemblies of the congregation. 3. 20. 30.

It is proued by the authoritie of the olde Church, and the reasons of Augustine, that it is not expedient, that there shoulde be any images in Christian temples. 1. 11. 13.

The preaching of the worde and the Sacramentes, are liuely images which onely are fit to be in Christian Temples. 1. 11. 7. 13.

The wickednes of the Nicene Synode which was holden by the commandement of Irene the Empresse, and the filthy follies therof in allowing images in Temples, and the woorshipping of them 1. 11. 14. 15. 16.

Of the garnishing of Temples and holy thinges in the old Church. 4 4 8. and 4. 5. 18.

Temptations.

Of diuerse kindes of Temptations: and in what sense it is saide that God tempteth vs. 3 20. 46.

Testament, olde, and new.

Of the likenesse of the old, and new Testament: Where is declared, that they are all one in substance and matter, but onely do differ in ministration. The likenes standeth chiefely in three points. 2. 10. 1. 2.

The first point is, that the old Testament did not holde the fathers in earthly felicitie, but had chiefe regard to the life to come. Which is proued by Paul, which saith that the promises of the Gospel are contained vnder it. 2. 10. 3.

The same also is proued by the law and the Prophetes: First, by considering the wordes of the couenant: I am your God. 2. 10. 7. 8.

Againe, I will be the God of your seede after you: Sect. 9. Also by the life of the holy Fathers, as Adam, Abel, Noe, Sect. 10. Abraham, Sect. 11. Isaac, Iacob, Sect. 12. 13. 14. And by many testimonies of Dauid. Sect. 15. 16. 17. 18. Of Iob, Sect 19. Generally of all the latter prophetes Sect. 20. But namely of Ezechiel. Sect. 21. Of Esaie and Daniel. Sect. 22. A conclusion of this point with rehearsing certain testimonies out of the new Testament. Sect. 23.

The second point is that the old Testament did not stande vpon the merits of men, but vpon the free mercie of God. The third point is that the couenant of the fathers with God, did then stande vpon like knowledge of Christ the mediator. 2 10 4.

Also in signification of Sacraments the Israelites vnder the lawe were equall with the Christian people. 2. 10. 5. 6.

There are foure differences of the olde Testament from the newe, whervnto we may adde a fift. The first is, that although in the olde time also the Lordes will was to direct the soules of his people to the heauenly inheritaunce: Yet to the ende that they might be the better nourished in the hope thereof, he gaue it them to be beholden, and after a certaine manner tasted vnder earthly benefites. But nowe the grace of the life to come, being more clearely reueiled by the Gospell, hee directeth our mindes the streight way to the meditation therof, leauing the inferior manner of exercising which he vsed among the Israelites. 2. 11. 1.

Therefore the olde Church is compared to an heire vnder age, which is gouerned by Gardians. 2. 11. 2.

For this reason, the fathers so much esteemed this life, and the blessinges thereof. 2. 11. 3.

The second difference is in figures wherewith the old testament did shew foorth the image and shadowe of spirituall good things. The newe testament giueth the present trueth and perfect bodie. There is also a reason shewed why the Lord kept this order: And a definition of the old testament. 2.11.4.

In this sense it is sayde, that the Iewes were by the introduction or schooling of the lawe led vnto Christ: before that hee was deliuered in the flesh: 2.11.5. which appeared in the most excellent Prophetes that were endued with singular grace of the spirit. Sect. 6.

The third difference, is taken out of the one and thirtie Chapter of Ieremie, and the third chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, that the olde testament is literall, and the newe testament is spirituall: the olde bringeth death, the new is the instrument of life 2.11.7.8.

The fourth difference is, that the Scripture calleth the olde Testament, the testament of bondage, because it engendreth feare in mens mindes: but the newe is called the Testament of liberty, because it raiseth them vp to cõfidence and surtie. The three latter differences are comparisons of the law and the Gospell. The first containeth also the promises made before the law. The fathers liued so vnder the law and the old testament, that they staied not there, but alwaies aspired to the new, yea and embraced a certaine communicating thereof. 2.11.9.10.

The fifth difference is, that before the comming of Christ, the Lorde had seuered one nation, in which he would keepe the couenant of his grace, in the meane time neglecting all other nations. So the calling of the Gentiles is a certaine signe, wherewith the excellencie of the newe Testament is set forth aboue the olde: a thing so incredible, that it seemed yet new to the Apostles themselues, being exercised in reading of the Prophets, and endued with the holie Ghost. 2.11.11.12.

A coucluſion of this matter, and an answeare to diuers obiections of some men, which saie that this variety in the Church, this diuerse maner of teaching, so great change of vsages and ceremonies, is a great absurditie. Where is declared that the constancy of God appeareth in this chaunging, and hee hath done nothing but wisely, righteously, & in mercie, when he gouerneth his Church, after one sort in childhood and after an other sort in riper age, & also when hee did keepe close in one people the shewing forth of his grace before the comming of Christ, which afterward he poured forth vpon all nations 2.11.13.14.

Theft.

An exposition of the eight Commaundement: where is intreated of diuerse kindes of thefte, and some which although men iudge otherwise, yet are accounted Thefts before God. And so hee that doeth not performe that which by the office of his calling he oweth to other, is a theefe. 2.8.45.

What wee ought to doe, that we maie obeie this commaundement, is shewed by diuers examples according to the diuersitie of persons and offices. 2.8.46.

Traditions.

Forasmuch as the Lorde, willing to teache a rule of true righteousnesse, hath drawen all the partes thereof to his owne wil, thereby it appeareth, that all the good workes which men deuise of their owne wittes, are nothing worth before him: But the true woorshipping standeth vppon obedience onlie, which is the beginning, mother, and and preſeruer of al vertues.2.8.5.

Of traditions of men, that is to ſay, ordinances proceding from men, concerning the worſhipping of God: And of the vngodlines & neceſſitie of them 4.10.1,2,5,6,7,8.

A diuiſion of Popiſh conſtitutions, which they call Traditions of the Church; into ſuch as conteine ceremonies, and other which are ſaide to pertaine to diſcipline. A confutation of ỹ pretence which ſome men vſe that defende popiſhe Traditions to be of God, becauſe the Church cannot erre, and is gouerned by the holy Ghoſt 4.10.17.

It is a meere mockerie to ſay, that the Apoſtles were authors of the Traditions, wherewith the Church hath heretofore beene oppreſſed. 4. 10.18, 19,20.

The example of the Apoſtles, when they commaunded the Gentiles to abſteine from thinges offered vnto Idols, from ſtrangled, and from bloud, is falſely alleadged to excuſe the tyrannie of the Popes lawes. 4.10.21, 22.

The Lordes kingdome is taken frō him, when hee is worſhipped with the lawes of mens Traditions: which is prooued by examples and teſtimonies of ſcripture to haue alwayes beene a moſt hainous offence in the ſight of God.4.10.23,24.

The inuentions of men cannot bee defended by the exāple of Menoha, which being a priuate man offered ſacrifice, nor of Samuel which ſacrificed in Ramath.4.10.25. nor of Chriſt which willed men to beare the burdens that the Scribes & Phariſees did binde together.4.10.26.

Of VVarres.

Warres are lawfull, when Magiſtrates are driuen of neceſſitie to take weapon in hande, to execute publike reuenge vpon thoſe that trouble the peace of their dominion, whether they bee ciuill or forreine enemies. 4. 20.11.

It maketh not to the contrary hereof, which many alleadge, that there is not in the newe Teſtament anie teſtimonie or example which prooueth that Warre is a thing lawful for Chriſtians. But Magiſtrates ought to take great heede, that in taking of weapon in hande, they nothing at all followe their owne luſtes. As Warre, ſo gariſons alſo, leagues and ciuill fortifications are thinges lawfull for Chriſtians to vſe. 4.20.12.

VVill of God.

Of the ſecret Will of God. Alſo of an other Will, whereunto anſweareth Willing obedience. 3. 20.43. and 3.24. 1.7.

VVill of Man.

Whether the Will of man bee in euery part through defiled and corrupted ſo that it bringeth foorth nothing but euill: Or whether it yet reteine ſome libertie of choiſe. Where is declared the common ſaying taken out of the Philoſophers, that al thinges by naturall diſpoſition couet that which is good. And there is ſhewed that the libertie of wil cannot be proued thereby. 2 2 26.

The ſoule hath not onely a weake power but no power at all of it ſelfe to aſpire to goodnes. And ſith the whole man is ſubiect to the dominion of ſinne, it is proued by teſtimonies of Scripture & of Auguſtine, that the will of man is bounde with moſt ſtreight bondes. 2.2.27.

Man by his fall loſt not his Will, but the ſoundneſſe of his Will, ſo that hee cannot moue, much leſſe applie himſelfe to goodneſſe, but is neceſſarily drawen or lead vnto euill, howbeit not by compulſion but voluntarily. Which is proued by Auguſtine and Bernarde. A large declaration of the difference betweene compulſion and neceſſitie. 2. 3.5.

Sith the Lord both beginneth and perfiteth good in our heartes, ſith he worketh in vs to will, that is to ſay the good will, ſith he createth a new heart, taketh awaie the ſtonie heart and giueth a fleſhly heart, it followeth, that the Will of man is vtterly corrupted and hath no goodneſſe at all. 2. 3.6.

It is cleerely proued by reaſons and diuerſe teſtimonies of Scripture, that God worketh good will in them that be his, not onely in preparing or turning them from the beginning ſo as it may afterward do ſome good of it ſelfe. But becauſe it is his onely worke that Will conceiueth a loue of goodneſſe, that it is enclined to the ſtudie thereof, that it is ſtirred and moued to an endeuour to followe it, & againe that the choiſe, ſtudie, and endeuour doe not fainr, but proceede to effect, finally that man goeth conſtantly forward in them and continueth to the ende. 2.3.7.8.9

Therefore it is proued by the authoritie of Scripture and of Auguſtine that this which hath bin taught theſe manie ages, that God ſo moueth our will, that it is afterwarde in our owne choiſe, to obey or diſobey his motion & other like ſayinges are vtterly falſe. 2.3.10 11.12.13.14.

Alſo in doings, which of themſelues are neither righteous nor vnrighteous, and belong rather to the bodily than the ſpirituall life, the will of man is not free, but by the ſpeciall motion of God is enclined to clemencie, mercie, wrath, feare, and other diuerſe affections, when it pleaſeth him to make way for his prouidence. Which is proued by Scripture, by dailie experience, and by the authoritie of Auguſtine. 2.4. 6.7.

VVorkes.

A compariſon of the pureneſſe of God with all the righteouſnes of men. 3.12.4.5.

All the ofspring of Adam beeing diuided into foure kindes of men, it is proued, that they haue no holineſſe or righteouſneſſe: Firſt in them which are endued with no knowledge of God, in whom although there doe ſometime appeare excellent qualities (which are the giftes of God) yet there is in them nothing pure. 3, 14.1. 2.3.4.5.6.

The ſame is ſhewed in them which being profeſſed by Sacramentes, are Chriſtians onelie in name, denying God in their deeds: Alſo in hypocrites which with vaine falſe colours do hide the wickedneſſe of their heart, 3.14. 7.8.

Finally, it is proued that euen the children of God truly regenerated by his ſpirite, can not ſtande by any righteouſnes of their owne workes before the iudgement of God, becauſe they can bring forth no good worke that is not ſprinkeled with ſome vncleannes of the fleſh, and therefore damnable. Moreouer although they could bring forth any ſuch worke, yet one ſinne is enough to blot out the remembrance of al former righteouſneſſe. 3.14. 9.10, 11.

A confutation of the papiſtes ſhiftes concerning the righteouſnes of works: and ſpecially of the ſame horrible mõſter of workes of ſupererogation. 3.14. 12.13.14.15.

When wee entreate of workes, wee muſt thruſt two peſtilences out of our mindes: that wee put no truſt in the righteouſnes of our owne workes, and that we aſcribe no glorie vnto them. 3.14.16.

The ſcripture ſetteth out and declareth foure kindes of cauſes in ſtabliſhing our ſaluation: And it is proued that in them all there is no regarde of works. 3.14.17.

Where ſometimes the Saintes doe bolden themſelues with remembrance of their owne innocencie & vprightneſſe: how the ſame is to be taken: and how it doth in no wiſe abate any thing from the free righteouſnes in Chriſt. 3.14.18.19 20.

Where the ſcripture ſaith that the good workes of the faithfull doe moue God to doe them good, the order is therein rather expreſſed thā the cauſe 3.14.21.

Why the Lord in the ſcripture calleth good workes oures, & promiſeth reward to them .3.15.3.

A confutation of the Sophiſters inuention, concerning morall workes, whereby men be made acceptable to God, before that they bee grafted in Chriſt.3.15.6.&.17.4.

Thoſe rewardes are giuen to the works of the faithfull, which the Lord in his law hath promiſed to the followers of righteouſneſſe : but thereof there are three cauſes to bee conſidered.3.17.3.

We may note in the ſcripture two acceptances of mā with God,of which the latter although it haue reſpecte to the good workes of the faithfull, yet is alſo the free mercy of God . 3.17. 45.

When it is ſaide that God doeth good to them that loue him, heere is not rehearſed a cauſe why hee ſhoulde doe them good, but rather the maner of what ſorte they bee by his grace. 3.17.6.

An expoſition of certayne places wherein the ſcripture giueth to good workes the name of righteouſneſſe. And there is ſhewed that thoſe places are not againſt the doctrine of iuſtification of faith.3.17.7.

One good worke or many doe not ſuffice for righteouſneſſe before God, although one ſin ſuffice to condemne. And here the principle hath no place the contraries haue all one rule . 3.18. 10.

Why the Lorde ſaide that hee rendereth to workes that which hee had freely giuen before Workes. 3.18.3. And therein hee helpeth our weakeneſſe leaſt wee ſhoulde be diſcouraged 3.18.4.6.7.

Hereupon hangeth the righteouſnes of the good workes which ỹ faith full do, that by pardon they are alloweed of God.3.18.5.

THE ENDE OF THE TABLE.

TO THE CHRISTIAN AND STVDIOVS READERS of this Booke, Auguſtine Marlorate wiſheth health.

Whoſoeuer ſhall reade and peruſe theſe two Tables following, & eſpeciallie the latter, may maruell vvhat I meane (after ſo manie impreſſions & corrections of this worke) to collect & gather al the places of holy Scripture therin alledged: & a great part of the authorities therin expounded, whereas if any fruite or profite thereof were to bee had, the ſame long before might haue been done: and eſpecially about three yeares paſt, when the author himſelfe was ſo diligent therein : who beſides the many and profitable additions (which it containeth) hee himſelfe ſetting the ſame in order, with his owne handes, and reducing it to a moſt exact perfection did then ſet and publiſh it fourth, in ſuch ſort, that in foure bookes being diuided into chapters and diuerſe ſections, he hath right worthilie and in familiar manner, compriſed the ſumme of the whole Chriſtian religion. And certainelie I cannot denie but it woulde haue beene verie good and commodious, if that anie one man would haue taken the paine, faithfullie and truelie to haue collected thoſe places: which thing I thought once to haue done by the aduiſe of the imprinter, ſauing that my charge and office did elſe where call mee, as alſo when I had peruſed and ſet it in an other order than it was before, and had euen finiſhed it, I was compelled to omit it, or at the leaſt to ſurceaſe for the time. And after that this booke being put forth both in Latine and French, was ſet to ſale in euerie place, becauſe I ſawe no man, who then did take the paine to reduce the places of Scripture to a Table, and vnderſtanding howe profitable the ſame woulde be to all men: I coulde not chooſe but after my power, and as leaſure ſerued in thoſe troubleſome times, to employ my whole care and trauell therein. And becauſe all thinges ſhould be done and come forth more certaine and in better order: I woulde not giue credite, nor truſt to the numbers which the imprinter had before ſet and made: for when I had diligentlie conferred them all, I founde manie falſe, manie omitted, and ſome diſorderlie ſet: And ſurelie that happeneth verie ſoone to ſuche as are not beſt skilfull in examining and peruſing the places of holie Scripture to be ſoone deceiued. Wherefore all thinges diligentlie reſtored, and that ſupplied which ſeemed to want, I did ſo order the places of Scripture collected out of the olde and new teſtament, that if there were anie, through forgetfulneſſe, or by anie other meanes omitted or ouerskipped: (as it cannot bee but that in a great harueſt ſome one eare of corne ſhall eſcape the readers hande) I durſt warrant ſo fewe ſhall be founde, that this Table being brought to triall you ſhall not finde one much more plentifull or larger. Neuertheleſſe I doe praie and requeſt the readers, that if they doe finde anie, they will aduertiſe the imprinter, whereby the ſame maie better bee examined and corrected. And this is to be noted, that ſuch whole verſes as I haue compriſed in this table, they were not wholie but in part alleged, much leſſe expounded in the inſtitution: which thing I did vpon good conſideration. For oftentimes it happeneth that in diuerſe places of the inſtitutions, ſome authorities are alledged, which are prooued but by ſome part of the verſe. And becauſe in noting the places and numbers, wee muſte vſe repetitions (which for the moſt part bring a lothſomneſſe to the reader) I thought it better to put in the whole verſe, than by often diuiſions, to vſe vaine and ſuperſtitious repetitions. And as concerning the commoditie which the reader maie gather by this my trauell (beſides that which by vſe and experience I am taught by thoſe Tables, which for mine owne priuate ſtudie and exerciſe I wrote vpon the inſtitutions heretofore ſet forth) I durſt to affirme this much that they which are not exerciſed in entreating the holie Scripture, and yet deſirous to ſerue the Church of God, do diligentlie endeuour themſelues thereunto, they ſhall finde a large and a plaine waie, both with dexteritie to expounde the writings of the Prophetes and Apoſtles, as alſo aptlie to applie the authorities here alleged, & ſuche like to the edifiyng of the Church, which is the verie ende of the whole. And although we wãt not good Commentaries to diſcouer vnto vs the naturall ſenſe of the Scripture, which we do now ſtudie and applie: yet becauſe they who wrote the ſame, and who with good ſucceſſe haue trauelled therein, were contented with the plaine and ſincere expoſition of the text: none could tell by the vſe of the ſaide Commentaries onelie (vnleſſe they were well practiſed in the principles of religion) howe and to what common place they ought to applie the argument then in hande. But who can ſo be contented to vſe this Table, whenſoeuer he ſhall finde the places which hee entreateth, hee ſhall ſee howe and to what ende the ſame is to be applied, whether to the confirmation of true doctrine, or to the confuting of the aduerſaries, or to the reconciling of ſuch places as ſeeme to be repugnant.

And

And this shal be verie commodious and profitable, not onelie for the amplifying of any argument, but also to satisfy them, which are desirous to be confirmed in the principal points of Christian Religion. For it is manifest howe simple and slender is their oration and speech, which bring and alleage nothing else, but as they read in the Commentaries: where the authors themselues (being most worthie and well learned) doe chiefly desire breuitie, because the readers should vse and studie the common places themselues, to the ende they should the more largelie bee applied to those things which in the Commentaries are but breefely expounded. Againe, forasmuch as we haue not alwaies in readinesse, what good authors haue written vpon the scriptures: and verie few commentaries vpon some books, and namelie vpon this Institution, are to be founde or had: This Table expounding the obscure and harde authorities, shall greatlie further and helpe the readers. For they shall either finde some readie interpretation, or some entraunce whereby to serch and finde out the true sentence. And as touching the translation, I trust it shall not seeme straunge to the reader, in that I haue rather followed the selfe same words, as they be in the Bible, than as they be alleaged by Caluin in this his institution. For he being a man most excellentlie well learned, and of great reading (as by his workes it doth appeare, how readie and familiar the Scriptures were to him) had not alwaies the bookes in readines, or lying open before him, when hee wrote: neither was it necessarie that whatsoeuer hee did auouch out of the old or newe Testament, he should expresse or write it in the self same words: for it is sufficient, that the sense be faithfullie reteined, and the true proprietie of the worde obserued, and so to eschewe the cauillinges of all men, sauing such as will finde fault in that, which in the least part cannot be followed nor obserued. Being therefore perswaded, that neither hee himselfe will be offended, nor the reader mislike, if the sentences in the Bible be translated according to the Hebrewe, as concerning the olde Testament, and according to the Greeke, as touching the newe Testament: I haue aduentured to auouch the authorities of the Scriptures in another order (as concerning the words) than they are alledged in this booke of Institutions. And therefore sometimes that which is recited in the thirde person, this Table doth expresse it in the seconde, and so contrariwise: but yet so, that the sense and meaning is alwaies reserued, which thing euerie man shall easilie perceiue, if diligentlie and without hastie iudgement, he doe conferre euerie thing together: for else curious heads doe loose that fruite, which by aduised reading they might haue and receiue. And as concerning the names and numbers of the bookes, and of the Chapters of the olde testament, we haue not followed the common translation, but that which is most agreeable to the Hebrewe. And therefore wee doe aduertise the readers, that they doe not take the first booke of the Kings, for the first of Samuel: nor the second of Kings, for the second of the same Prophet: which is so done by them, who heretofore haue quoted the Chapters in this imprinted booke, because they followed the Concordances of the Bible, called the great Concordances, which is collected according to the common translation: & by that meanes, as it maie euidentlie appeare to all men some bookes of the old Testament are not rightlie intituled, and the Psalmes otherwise and in another order diuided, than did the Hebrewes. And forasmuch as all the principall pointes of religion, are in this booke copiouslie and faithfullie expounded, we maie easilie refute the false opinions of the aduersaries. Whosoeuer shall come to the reading thereof, either with a minde to learn, or a desire to profite: there is no doubt, but hee shall verie much profite himselfe, & helpe others: whose consciences he maie so strengthen and assure, as they neede not to quaile in anie point, because they be assured, that their faith is grounded vpon the firme foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, who wrote and spake, being inspired by the holie ghost.

who hath willed and commanded his most pretious and deare worde, to bee red, heard, & handled, in all feare and reuerence, without adding thereunto, or taking from the same: least we be worthily reproued of our follie. Let vs therefore, in all simplicitie and feare of God, reade so wholesome and necessary things, and daily proceede therein, in the grace & knowledge of God, who onelie is the sauiour, heade and Doctour of the Church: To whome nowe and for euer be all glory. GENESIS.

1.1 IN the beginning God created heauen and earth. 1.14.20.
2 And the spirite of God was vppon the deepes. 1.13.14.&.1 13.22
3 And God saide, let light be made, and light was. 1.13.7.& 1.13.8.& 1. 16.2
11. Let the earth shoot foorth greene florishing herbes, and bearing seede according to his kind. 1.16 2
26 Let vs make man to our image & likenesse. 1.13.24.&.1.15.3.
27. And God created man to his image & similitude, he created them to the image of God, male & female. 1.11 14.& 1.15.3.&.2.1.1
28. And rule you ouer the fishes of the sea, and ouer the foules of the heauen, and ouer euerie beast that moueth on the earth. 1.14.22
31. And God sawe all things that he had made, and they were exceeding good. And Euening and morning was made the sixt day. 1.14 22 & 3.23.8.
2.1. Therefore heauen and earth was finished, and all the garnishing of them. 1.14 4
2. God did throughly finishe the.7. day his worke that hee had made, and he rested the seuenth day from all the worke that he had done. 1. 14.2.&2.8 30.
7. The Lord God therefore did fashion mā of the slime of the earth,& inspired into his figure the breath of life, & man was made into a liuing soule. 1.15.5.&.2.14.8
9 And the tree of life was in the middest of Paradise, and the tree of the the knowledge of good and euill. 4. 14.18.

17. In what day soeuer you shall eate thereof, you shall dye with death. 3. 2.7.
18. It is not good that man be alone, let vs make him a help like to himselfe. 4.13.3.
23. This, now bones of my bones, & flesh of my flesh, she shall be called woman, because shee was taken of man. 2.12.7. & 4.19.35.
3.4. The serpent sayde to the woman, ye shal not dye. 1.14.15.
6. Therefore the woman sawe that the tree was good to eate, & beautifull to the eye, and pleasaunt to looke vppon, and shee tooke of the fruite thereof, and did eate, and did giue to her husband which did eate. 2.1.4.
15. I will put hatred betwene thee and the woman, betwene thy seede and the seede of her, she shall bruse smal thy heade, and thou shalt lay waite to intrappe his heele. 1.14.18. & 2. 13.2.
17. In thy labors thou shalt eate thereof all the dayes of thy life. 3.14.13. & 2.10.10.
22. Nowe therefore leaste he stretch foorth his hande, and take also of the tree of life, and eate thereof and liue for euer, let vs cast him out. 4. 14.12.
4. And the Lord had regard to Abel and to his gifres. 3.14.8.
7. And her desire shall be subiect vnto thee, and thou shalt be Lorde ouer it, or thou shalt rule ouer it. 2.15. 16.
8. And when they were in the fielde, Cain rose vp against his brother Abel, and slue him. 2.10.10.
10. The voice of the bloud of thy brother, crieth vnto me from the earth. 13.7.
13. My iniquitie is greater than that I may get pardon. 3.3.4.
6.3. My spirite shall not abide in man for euer, because he is flesh, &c. 3. 14.1.
5. But the Lorde seeing that there was much wickednesse of men on the earth, and ỹ euery thought of their hearts was bent to euil at all times, 2.2.25.
6. Then it repented the Lorde that he had made man on ỹ earth. 1.17. 12.
18. I will make my couenant with thee 4.14.6.
22. Noe made all thinges that the Lord had commaunded him. 2.10.10.

6 A voice did ſay, Cry: & I ſaide, what ſhal I crie, &c. 2.9.5.& 2.10.7

11 He ſhal feede his flock as a ſhepheard. 4.19.34

12 Who hath meaſured the waters with his fiſt, and counted heauen with his ſpanne, and comprehended the duſt of the earth with his three fingers? 3.2.31

13 Who hath inſtructed the ſpirite of the Lord? or who was of his counſel and hath taught him? 4.18.19.& 4.19.2

17 All people before him bee as nothing, and they are counted to him leſſe than nothing and vanitie. 3.2.25

18 To whom therefore will you make God like? or what image will you ſet vs like him? 1.11.2.12

21 Hath not this bin ſhewed you from the beginning of thinges? haue you not bin taught by the foundations of the earth? 1.11.4.& 11.14.1

22 Who ſitteth vpon the circle of the earth, &c. 11.5.5

29 Hee giueth rather ſtrength to the wearie, and vnto him that might faileth, he doth increaſe power. 2.2.10

41.7 So the workman comforted the founder, and he that ſmote with the hammer him that ſmote by courſe ſaying, It is readie for the ſodering: and hee faſtened this image with nailes that it ſhould not be moued out of his place. 1.11.2.

9 I haue choſen thee and not caſt thee awaie. 3.21.5

29 Beholde they are al vaine, & their works be nothing, their images are winde and confuſion. 1.11.2

42.1 Beholde my ſeruaunt: I will ſtaie

Cities in the countrie of Egypt, speaking the language of the Canaanits, and shall sweare by the Lorde of hostes, &c. 2.8.23

19 In that day, the altar of the Lorde shalbe in the middest of the lande of Egypt. 4.18.4

21 The Lorde shalbe knowen of the Egyptians, and the Egyptians shall knowe the Lorde in that day and do sacrifice and oblations, & shal vowe vowes vnto the Lord, & performe them. 4.18.4

25 Whom the Lord of host hath blessed, saying: blessed be my people of Egypt and Asshur, the workes of my hands. 2.18.1

25.1 Thou hast done wonderfull things, according to thy counsell of olde, with a stable trueth. 3.24.4

8 He wil destroy death for euer, & the Lorde will wipe teares from euerye face, &c. 3.9.6

9 Loe this is our God, we haue waited for him, & he wil saue vs. 1.13.10. & 1. 13.24

26.1 We haue a strong Citie, saluation shal God set for walles & bulwarkes. 1.17.6

19 The dead shall liue, and as my body shall they rise: awake, & sing ye that dwell in dust, &c. 2.10.21. & 3.25.4

21 Beholde, the Lord commeth out of his place, to visite the iniquities of the inhabitauntes of the earth, and the earth shal shewe foorth her bloud, and shall no more hide her slaine. 3.25.8

28.16 He which beleeueth shall not make hast. 13.13

29.13 Because this people come neere mee with their mouth, and doe honour me with their lippes, but their hart is farre from mee, and their feare towardes mee was taught by the precepts of men, &c. 3.20.7.31, & 4.10.15.16.23

14 Therefore beholde, I will also adde thereto that I may worke marueilously with this people, euen maruel & wonders, that is, the wisedom of their wise men shall perish, and the vnderstanding of their prudent men shal hide it selfe. 4.10.6

30.1 Woe vnto their rebellious childrē, saith the Lord, which dare take counsel but not of me, &c. 3.20.28.

15 In being quiet and keeping silence shalbe your strength. 3.2 37

33 Topher is prepared moreouer long agone: this is also prepared for the king: O howe deepe and wide he hath made it, his inwarde parte is fire and much woode, the breath of the Lord like a riuer of brimstone doth kindle it. 3.25.12

31.1. Woe vnto them that goe downe to Egypt for aide, and stay on horses, and haue trust in chariots, because they be many. 3.20.28

7. For in that day euery man shall caste away his images of siluer, and his images of Gold, which your wicked hand did make vnto you. 1. 11.4

33.14. The sinners in Sion shal bee afraide, feare shall possesse the hypocrites, they shall say, which of vs shall abide with the consuming fire? who amongest vs shall dwell with the euerlasting burning? 3.12. 1. & 3.17.6

22. The Lorde is our iudge, the Lorde is our law giuer, the Lord is our king, he shall saue vs. 2.10.8. & 2.15.5

24. The people that dwell therein shall haue their iniquitie forgiuen them. 4.1.20

35 8. And there shall be a path, and a way, and it shall bee called the holy way and the polluted shall not passe thereby 2.6.2. & 4.1.17

37.4 Thou therefore shalt lift vp thy praier for the remnant that are left. 3.20.5

16 O Lorde of hostes, God of Israell, which dwellest betweene the Cherubins, thou art onely God ouer all the kingdomes of the earth. 2.8.15

32 Because a remnant shall goe forth of Jerusalem, and the saued out of mount Sion. 4.11.4

35 For I will defende this citie, that I may saue it for mine owne sake, and for my seruant Dauids sake. 2.17.5

36 Wherefore the Angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians one hundred foure score and fiue thousand. 1.14.6

38.1 Thus saith the Lord, put thy house in a readinesse, for thou shalt die & not liue. 1.17.12.& 3.3.4

3 O my Lord, remember I pray thee that I walked before thee in faith, & with an vpright heart, & that I haue done those things that please thee. 3.20.10

5 Beholde, I doe adde vnto thy dayes 15. yeares. 1.17.12

8 Beholde, I will bring againe the shadowe the degrees whereby it is gone downe in the diall of Achaz. 4.14.18

20 The Lorde was ready to saue me, and we wil celebrate my song al the dayes of our life in the house of the Lorde. 3.20.28

39.6 Behold, the daies come that all that is in thy house, and which thy fathers haue laide vp in store vntill this day shalbe carried to Babylon, nothing shalbe left saith the Lord. 1.8.7

7 And of thy sonnes that shall proceede out of thee, and which thou shalt beget, shall bee carried away, and they shall bee Eunuches in the place of the king of Babylon. 2.8.19

40.3 The voyce of a crier in the wilderneſſe, prepare ye the way of the Lorde make straight in the desert a path for our God. 3.3.2

6 A voice did say, Cry: & I saide, what shal I crie, &c. 2.9.5.& 2.10.7

11 He shal feede his flock as a shepeheard. 4.19.34

12 Who hath measured the waters with his fist, and counted heauen with his spanne, and comprehended the dust of the earth with his three fingers? 3.2.31

13 Who hath instructed the spirite of the Lord? or who was of his counsel and hath taught him? 4.18.19.& 4.19.2

17 All people before him bee as nothing, and they are counted to him lesse than nothing and vanitie. 3.2.25

18 To whom therefore will you make God like? or what image will you set vs like him? 1.11.2.12

21 Hath not this bin shewed you from the beginning of thinges? haue you not bin taught by the foundations of the earth? 2.11.4.& 11.4.1

22 Who sitteth vpon the circle of the earth, &c. 15.5

29 Hee giueth rather strength to the wearie, and vnto him that might faileth, he doth increase power. 2.3.10

41.7 So the workman comforted the founder, and he that smote with the hammer him that smote by course saying, It is readie for the sodering: and hee fastened this image with nailes that it should not be moued out of his place. 1.11.2.

9 I haue chosen thee and not cast thee awaie. 3.21.5

29 Beholde they are al vaine, & their works be nothing, their images are winde and confusion. 11.1.2

42.1 Beholde my seruaunt: I will staie

vpon him, &c. 2.14.2
8 I will not giue my glory to an other nor my prayers to carued images. 1. 13 9
9 Beholde, the former thinges haue come to passe, & I shew new thinges the which I declared vnto you before they happened. 1.8.7
10 Sing vnto the Lorde a newe song, sing foorth his praise euen vnto the outmost partes of the earth. 3.20. 28
13 The Lord shall goe forth as a Giant he shall stirre vp his courage like a man of warre. 4.19.34
43.1 Feare not, for I haue redeemed thee: I haue called thee by thy name, thou art mine. 3.2.31
10 You are my witnesses, saith the lord & my seruant, whom I haue chosen: therefore ye shall know & beleeue mee, and ye shall vnderstand that I am: before mee there was no God formed, neither shal there bee after me. 1.7.5
11 I, I saie I am the Lord, and besides me there is no Sauiour. 3.4.15
25 I, I my selfe am euen he which doe blot out thy transgressions, & that for mine owne sake, and I will not be mindful of thy sins. 1.13.12.& 3.4. 15.25.& 3.20.45
44.3 I will poure out waters vpon the thirstie, and flouds vppon the drie ground, that is, I wil poure out my spirite vpon thy seede, and my blessing vpon thy buddes. 2.2.10.& 3.1. 3.& 3.2.39
6 I am the first & I am y last, & besides me there is no God. 1.13.23.24
12 The smith taketh an instrument & worketh in the coales, & fashioneth it with hammers, and woorketh it with the strength of his arme: but he hungreth in the meane time, so that his strength faileth, neyther drinketh he water, so that he falleth downe wearie. 1.11 4
22 I haue put away thy transgressions as mistes, and thy sinnes as a cloud, returne therefore vnto mee, because I haue redeemed thee. 3 4. 29
45.1 Thus saith the Lord God vnto Cyrus his annointed, whose right hand I haue holden, that I might subdue nations before him: Therefore will I weaken the loynes of kings, & open the dores before him, and the gates shal not be shut. 1.8.7
7. Making light and creating darknesse, making peace and creating euil: I the Lord do al these. 1.17.8.& 1.18.3

IEREMIE.

1.6. O Lord God, beholde, I cannot speake, for I am a childe. 4.8.3.
9. Behold, I haue put my worde into thy mouth. 4.8.3
10. Behold this day haue I set thee ouer the nations & ouer kingdomes, to plucke vp & to roote out, and to destroy & scatter, that thou maist build and plant. 4.8.3.
2.13. For my people haue committed two euils, they haue forsaken mee the fountaine of liuing waters, to digge them pittes, euen broken pittes that can holde no waters. 3. 20.14
3.1. They say, if a man put away his wife, and shee go from him, and become an other mans, &c. 2.8.18. & 4. 1.25
2. Lift vp thy eyes vnto ẏ high places, & beholde where thou hast not played the harlot, &c. 2.8.18
12. Go & crie these wordes towardes the North, & say: thou disobedient Israel, returne saith the Lorde, and I will not let my wrath fall vpon you for I am mercifull, &c. 4.1.25
4.1. O Israel, if thou returne, returne vnto me, saith the lord: and if thou put away thine abhominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remoue. 2.5.10. & 3.3.6
4. Breake vp your fallow ground, and sowe not among the thornes: bee circumcised to the Lorde, and take away ẏ foreskinnes of your hearts, ye men of Iudah, and inhabitantes of Ierusalem, &c. 2.5.8. and 3.3.6.7. & 4.

& 4.16.21
9. And in that day, ſaith the Lord, the heart of the king ſhall periſh, and the heart of the princes, & ỹ prieſt ſhalbe aſtoniſhed, & the prophetes ſhal wonder. 4.9.6
11. At that time ſhall it be ſaid to this people, & to Ieruſalem, a drie winde in the high places of the wildernes, commeth toward the daughter of my people, &c. 1.16.7
14. O Ieruſalem, waſh thine heart from wickedneſſe, &c. 2.5.8
5.3. O Lord, are not thy eyes vpon the trueth? thou haſt ſtricken them but they haue not ſorrowed: thou haſt conſumed them, but they haue refuſed to receiue correction: they haue made their faces harder than a ſtone, & haue refuſed to turne. 3. 4.35. & 3.14.8
7. Howe ſhould I ſpare thee for this? thy children haue forſaken mee, & ſworne by them that are no gods, &c. 2.8.23
14. Becauſe ye ſpake ſuch words, behold, I will put my worde into thy mouth, like a fire, and this people ſhalbe as wood, and it ſhal deuoure them. 3.24.13
6.13. For from the leaſt of them, euen to the greateſt of them, euery one is giuen to couetouſnes: & from the Prophet euen to the Prieſt, they ſhal deale falſely. 4.9.3
7.4. Truſt not in lying words, ſaying, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord: this is the Temple of the Lord. 4.2.3
5. For if you amend & redreſſe your wayes, & your workes, if you execute iudgement betweene a man and his neighbour, &c. 3.17.1
13. Therefore now, becauſe ye haue done all theſe works, ſaith the lord, & I roſe vp early & ſpake vnto you: but when I ſpake you woulde not heare mee, neither when I called would ye anſwere. 2.5.11
14. I will doe vnto this houſe, whereupon my name is called, &c. as I haue done vnto Shilo. 2.5.11
22. For I ſpake not vnto your fathers, nor commaunded them, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt offrings & ſacrifices. 4.10.15
23. But this thing commaunded I them, ſaying, obey my voyce, ſo I wil be your God, &c. 4.10.15.17
27. Therefore ſhalt thou ſpeake all theſe wordes vnto them, but they will not heare thee: thou ſhalt alſo crie vnto them, but they will not anſwere thee. 2.5.11
28. This is a nation that heareth not the voice of the Lord their god, nor receiueth diſcipline. 2.5.11
9.23. Let not ỹ wiſe man glory in his wiſdome, nor the ſtrong man glory in his ſtrengeh, neither the rich mã glorie in his riches. 3.13.1
24. But let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he vnderſtandeth & knoweth mee, for I am the Lord which ſheweth mercie, and iudgement, & righteouſneſſe in the earth, &c. 1. 10.2
10.2. Be not afraide for the ſignes of heauen, though the heathen be afraide of ſuch. 2.16.3
8. But altogither they dote and are fooliſh, for the ſtocke is a doctrine of vanitie. 1.11.5
11. The gods that haue not made the heauens and the earth, ſhall periſh from the earth, & from vnder theſe heauens. 1.13.23
23. O Lorde, I know that the way of man is not in himſelfe, neither is it in man to walk and to direct his ſteps. 2.16.6
24. O Lorde correcte mee, but with iudgement, not in thine anger, leaſt thou thou bring me to nothing. 3.4.32.

11.7 For I haue protested vnto your fathers, when I brought them vp out of the lande of Aegypt, vnto this daye, rising earely, and protesting, saying: obey my voice .3.20.7. & 4.10.17.
8 Neuertheless they would not obey, nor encline their eare, &c. therefore I will bring vppon them all the wordes of this couenant, which I commaunde them to doe, &c. 3 20.7
11 Beholde I will bring a plague among them, which they shall not be able to escape, and though they crie vnto me, I wil not heare them. 3.20.7
19 Let vs destroy the tree with the frute thereof, & cut him out of the land of the liuing, &c. 4.17.15
12.16. And if they wil learne the waies of my people, to sweare by my name, the Lorde liueth, as they taught my people to sweare by Baal, &c. 2.8.23
14.7 O Lord, though our iniquities testifie against vs, deale with vs according to thy name: for our rebelliõs are many: we sinned against thee. 3.20.8
14 The Prophets prophecie lyes in my name, I haue not sent them, neither did I cõmaunde them. &c. 4.9.3
15.1 Though Moses & Samuel stoode before me, yet mine affectiõ could not be toward this people: cast thẽ out of my sight, & let them depart. 3.20.23
17.1 The sinne of Judah is written with a pen of iron, & with the point of a Diamond, & grauen vpon the table of your heart, and vpon the hornes of your altars. 3.4.29
5 Thus saith the Lord, cursed be the man ỹ trusteth in man, & maketh flesh his arme, & withdraweth his heart from the Lord. 2.2.10
9 The heart is deceitful and wicked aboue all things, who can knowe it 2.3.2
21 Take heede to your soules, and beare no burden on the Sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Ierusalem. 2.8.29
22 Neither cary foorth burdens out of your houses on the Sabbath daye, neither do you anie worke, but sanctifie the Sabbath, &c. 2.8.29
27 But if you will not heare mee to sanctifie the Sabath daye, & not to beare a burden, nor to goe through the gates, &c. 2 8.29
18.8 But if this nation, against whome I haue pronounced, turne frõ their wickednesse, I will repent of the plague that I thought to bring vpõ them. 1.17.12
18 Come and let vs imagine some deuise against Jeremias: for the lawe shal not perish from the Priest, nor counsel frõ the wise, nor the worde from the prophet. 4.9 5
20.2 Then Passur smote Jeremias the Prophet, & put him in the stocks ỹ were in the high gate of Beniamin. which was by the house of ỹ Lorde. 4.9.6
21.12. Execute iudgement in the morning, and deliuer the oppressed out of the hand of the oppressour, &c. 4 20.9
22.3 Execute ye iudgement & righteousnes, and deliuer the oppressed from the hande of the oppressour, &c. 4.20.9
23.1 Woe bee vnto the pastors that destroy & scatter the sheepe of my pasture, saith the Lord. 4.9.3
5 Beholde, the daies come, saith the Lord, that I wil raise vnto Dauid a righteous braunch, and a king shall raigne and prosper, and shall execute cute iudgement and iuſtice in the earth. 2.6.3

6 And this is the name whereby they ſhal call him, the Lord our righteouſnes. 1.13.9.& 3.11.8

16 Heare not the wordes of the propheres that prophecy vnto you and teach vou vanitie,&c. 4.9.2

24 Do not I fill heauen & earth, ſaith the Lord? 4.1.5

28 The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell a dreame, & hee ỳ hath my worde, let him ſpeake my word faithfully. 4.8.3

24.7. And I will giue them an heart to knowe me, that I am the Lord, and they ſhall bee my people, and I will be their God, for they ſhall returne vnto me with their whole heart. 2. 2.20

25.11 And this whole land ſhalbe deſolate, and aſtoniſhed, & theſe nations ſhal ſerue the king of Babell ſeuenty yeares. 1.8.7

12 And when the ſeuenty yeares are accompliſhed, I will viſite the king of Babel, and that nation, ſayth the Lord, for their iniquitie,&c. 1.8.7

29 For loe, I beginne to plague the city, where my name is called vpō, and ſhould you go free? &c. 3.4.34

27.5 I haue made the earth, the man and the beaſt that are vpon the ground,&c. 4.20.27

6. But now I haue giuen al theſe lands vnto the hande of Nabuchadonozor the king of Babylon my ſeruant,&c. 4.20.27.28

7 And all nations ſhal ſerue him, and his ſonne and his ſons ſonne vntill the verie time of his lād come alſo. &c, 4.20.27

8 And the nation & kingdome which will not ſerue the ſame Nabuchadonozor king of Babell, and that wyll not put their necke vnder the yoke of the king of Babel,&c. 4.20.27

9. Therfore heare not your prophets, nor your ſouthſaiers, nor your dreamers, nor your inchaunters, nor your ſorcerers which ſay vnto you thus, ye ſhall not ſerue the king of Babel,&c. 4.9.3

14 Therefore heare not the wordes of the propheres that ſpake vnto you, ſaying, yee ſhall not ſerue the king of Babel,&c 4.9.3

17 Heare them not, but ſerue the king of Babel, that ye may liue,&c. 4.20. 28

29.7 And ſeeke the proſperitie of the Citie, whither I haue cauſed you to be caried away captiues,& pray vnto the Lord for it, for, &c. 4.20. 28

31.18 I haue heard Ephraim lamēting thus, thou haſt corrected me, and I was chaſtiſed as an vntamed calfe: conuert thou me and I ſhalbe conuerted: for thou art the Lorde my God. 2.3.5. and 2.5.8. and 3.24. 15

19 Surely after that I conuerted, I repented, and after that I was inſtructed, I ſmote vpon my thigh,&c. 2.5 .8.

31 Behold, the daies come, ſaith the Lorde, that I will make a newe couenant with the houſe of Iſrael, & with the houſe of Iudah. 2.11.7.& 3 4.29

32 Not according to the couenant that I made with their fathers, whē I tooke them by the hand, to bring them out of the lande of Egypt, the which my couenant they brake,&c 2.5.9.& 2.11.7

33 After thoſe daies ſaith the Lord, I will put my lawe in their inwarde partes,& write it in their hearts,& will be their God,& they ſhalbe my people. 2.8.14.& 3.20.45

34 For I will forgiue their iniquitie,& wil remēber their ſinnes no more. 3.4.29.

3.4.29.& 3.20.45
35 Thus ſaith the Lord, which giueth the Sunne for a light to the day, and the courſes of the Moone & of the Starres, for a light to the night, &c. 4.17.17
32.16. Now when I had deliuered the booke of the profeſſiō vnto Baruch, the ſonne of Neriah, I prayed vnto the Lorde, ſaying. 3.20.15
18 Thou ſheweſt mercy vnto thouſandes, and recompenſeſt the iniquitie of the fathers into the boſom of their children after them, &c. 2.8 19
23 But they obeyed not thy voyce, neither walked in thy lawe: all that thou commandeſt them to do, they haue not done, therefore thou haſt cauſed this whole plague to come vpon them, &c. 2.5.11
39 And I will giue them one heart and one way, that they may feare me for euer, for the wealth of thee, and of their children after them, &c. 2.3.8
33.8. And I will clenſe them from al their iniquitie, whereby they haue ſinned againſt me: yea I wil pardon all their iniquities, whereby they haue ſinned againſt me, &c. 3.20.45 & 4.1.20
16 And in thoſe dayes ſhall Juda be ſaued, & Ieruſalem ſhall dwell ſafely, and he that ſhal call her is the lord our righteouſneſſe, &c. 1.13.9
42.2. Heare our prayer, we beſeech thee, and pray for vs vnto the lord thy God, &c. 3.20.14
9 Thus ſayth the Lord God of Iſrael vnto whom yee ſent me to preſent your prayers before him, &c. 3.20 14
48.10 Curſed be hee that doeth the worke of the Lord negligently, &c. 4.20.6
50.20. In thoſe daies, and at that time, ſaith the Lord, the iniquitie of Iſrael, ſhalbe ſought for, and there ſhalbe none: and the ſinnes of Juda, and they ſhal not be found, &c. 3.4.29
23 Howe is the hammer of the whole world, deſtroyed and broken? howe is Babel become deſolate among the nations, &c. 2.4.4
25 The Lord hath opened his treaſure and hath brought the weapons of his wrath, for this is the work of the Lord God of hoſtes, in the lande of the Chaldeans, &c. 1.18.1

31 Cast

31 Cast away from you all your trāsgressions, whereby you haue transgressed, & make you a new hearte, and a newe spirite,&c. 3.3.6
32 For I desire not the death of him that dieth,saith the Lord god:cause therefore one an other to returne, and liue ye. 4.1.25
19.12 And the easte winde dried vp her fruite,&c. 1 16 7 20.11 And I gaue them my statutes, and declared my iudgementes vnto them,which if a man do,he shal liue in them,&c. 3.17.3
12 Moreouer I gaue them also my sabbathes,to be a signe betwene me and them, that they might knowe ỳ
I am the Lorde that sanctifieth them
&c. 2.8.29
42 And yee shall knowe that I am the Lorde, when I shall bring you into the lande of Ffraell, into the lande,
&c. 3.13.1
43 And there shall you remember your waies, & al your workes wherein ye haue been defiled,&c. 3.13.1

phets in the middest thereof like a roaring lion,rauening the pray:they haue deuoured soules,&c. 4.9.3 26 Her priestes haue broken my law:
and haue defiled my holy thinges, they haue put no difference betwen
the holy,and prophane, &c. 4.9.3
23.37 And haue also caused their sons, whome they bare vnto me, to passe by the fire to be their meate. 4.16.
24
38 They haue defiled my sanctuarie in the same day, and haue propha-ned my sabathes. 2.8.29
28.10 Thou shalt die the death of the vncircumcised, by the handes of strangers: for I haue spoken it saieth
the Lord God. 2.10.18
29.4 But I will put hookes in thy chawes, and I will cause the fishe of thy riuers to sticke vnto thy scales,
&c. 1.17.11
19 Beholde, I will giue the lande of Egypt vnto Nabuchadnezar the king of Babell, and hee shal take her multitude, and spoyle her spoyle, and take her pray, & it shall be the wages of his armie. 4.20.26
20 I haue giuen him the lande of Egypt for his labor, that hee serued against it, because they wrought for me. 4.20.26
31.18 Thou shalt sleepe in the middest of the vncircumcised, with them that bee slaine by the sworde: this is Pharao, and all his multitude,&c.
2.10.18
33.8 He shall die for his iniquitie. but his bloud will I require at thy hande
&c 4.12.5

that which is lawfull and right, &c.
3.17.15
34.4 But with crueltie and with ri-gour,haue ye ruled them,&c.4.11.14
23 And I will set vp a shepherde ouer them, and he shall feede them,euen my seruant Dauid, hee shall feede them, and hee shall be their Sheep-heard. 2.6.3
36.21 But I fauoured mine holy name which the house of Ffrael had polluted among the heathē whither they went,&c. 3.4.30
22 I doe not this for your sakes, O house of Ffraell, but for mine holye names sake, which yee polluted among the heathen,&c.3.12 3.and 3.
15.2
25 Then will I poure cleane water vpon you, and yee shall bee cleane, yea from all your filthineſſe,& from all your idols will I cleanſe you, &c. 3.1.3

26 A newe heart will I giue you, and a newe ſpirite will I put within you, and I will take away the ſtonie hart out of your bodie, and will giue you a heart of fleſh.2.3.6.& 2.5 8.& 3.24. 1.& 3.24.15

27 And I will put my ſpirite with in yours,and cauſe you to walk in my ſtatutes,& ye ſhal keepe my iudgementes and doe them.1.3.10.and 2. 3.6

32 Be it knowen vnto you, that I doe not this for your ſakes, ſayth the Lord God: therefore O ye houſe of Iſrael, bee aſhamed and confounded for your owne waies. 3.4.3.& 3. 12.3.& 3.15.2

37.4 Againe he ſaide vnto mee, prophecie vppon theſe bones and ſaye vnto them, O ye drie bones, heare the worde of the Lord. 2.10.21

2.4 And an other angell went out to meete him, and saide vnto him, run speake to this young man, and saye Jerusalem shall be inhabited without walse, for the multitude of men and cattell that are therein. 1.13. 10

8 For he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of my eye. 1.13.10. & 1.17.6

11 And many nations shall be ioyned to the Lorde in that daye, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the middest of thee, & thou shalt know that the Lorde of hostes hath sent mee vnto thee. 1.13.10

12 And the Lord shal inherite Judah his portion in the holie lande, and shall chose Ierusalem againe. 3. 21.5

3.10 In that day, sayeth the Lord of hostes, shall ye call euerie man his neighbour vnder the vine, and vnder the figge tree. 3.13.4

7.13 Therefore it is come to passe, that as he cried and they could not heare, so they cried, and I would not heare, saith the Lord of hosts. 3.3. 24

9.9 Reioyce greatly, O daughter Sion, shout for ioy, O daughter Ierusalem: behold, thy king commeth vnto thee, he is iust & saued, poore, &c 2.6.3. & 2.17.6

11 Thou also shalt be saued, through the bloude of the couenant I haue loosed thy prisoners, out of the pit wherein was no water. 2.16.9

12.4 In that day I will smite, saieth the Lord, euerie horse with stonishment, and his rider with madnesse, &c. 49.5

13.9 They shall call on my name, & I wil heare them: I will say, it is my people, and they shall say, the Lorde is my God. 3.20.13

14.9 And the Lorde shall bee king ouer all the earth: in that day shall be one Lord, and his name shall bee one. 1.12 3

MALACHIAS.

1.2 WAS not Esau Jacobs brother? saith the Lorde, &c. 3.21 6

3 Yet I loued Jacob, and I hated Esau, &c. 3.21.6

6 A sonne honoureth his Father, & a seruaunt his maister. If then I bee a father, where is mine honor, and if I bee a master, where is my feare, &c. 2.8.14 & 3.2.16. & 3.6.3

11 For from the rising of the Sunne vnto the going downe of the same, my name is great among the Gentiles. And in euerie place incense shal be offered vnto my name: and a pure offering, &c. 4.18.4. and 4.18. 16

2.4 And ye shall knowe, that I haue sent this commandement vnto you that my couenant, which I made with Leuie, might stande, saieth the Lorde of hoastes. 4.2.3. and 4.8. 2

5 My couenant was with him of life and peace, and I gaue him feare, & he feared me, and was afraide before my name. 4.2.3.

6 The law of truth was in his mouth and there was no iniquitie found in his lips. 4.2.3. & 4.8.2

7 For the Priestes lips shoulde keepe knowledge, and they shoulde seeke the lawe at his mouth, for he is the messenger of the lord of hostes. 4.8. 2. & 4.8.6. & 4.9.2

8 But yee are gone out of the waye: yee haue caused many to fall by the law:

lawe: ye haue broken the couenant of Leui, &c 4.7.30

3.1 And the Lord whom ye seke, shal speedily come to his Temple: euen the messenger of the couenant whō ye desire, &c. 1.13.10.& 1.14.9

17 I will spare them, as a man spareth his owne sonne ỹ serueth him. 3.19.5

4.1 For, behold the day cōmeth that shal burne as an ouen: and all the proude, yea and all that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and the day that commeth shall burne them vp, &c. 3.24.12

2 But vnto you that feare my name, shall the sunne of righteousnesse, &c. 2.6.1.& 3.24.12

4 Remember the lawe of Moses my seruaunt, which I commaunded vnto him in Horeb for all Israel, &c. 4.8.6

5 Behold, I will sende you Eliah the prophet before the comming of the great and fearefull day of the Lord. 2.9.5

6 And he shal turne the heart of the fathers to their childrē, & the heart of the children of their fathers, &c. 4.1.6

1.5 AND Salomon begat Booz of Rachab, and Booz begatte Obed of Ruth, and Obed begate

Ieſſe. 2.13.3
16 And Iacob begate Ioſeph the huſbande of Marie, of whom was borne Ieſus which is called Chriſt. 2.13.3.
21 And ſhe ſhal bring forth a ſonne, and thou ſhalt call his name Ieſus: for he ſhall ſaue his people frō their ſinnes. 2.6.1
23 Beholde, a virgine ſhalbe with childe, and ſhall beare a ſonne, and they ſhall call his name Emanuell, which is by interpretation, God with vs. 2.11.1
2.6 And thou Bethlem in the lande of Juda, art not the leaſt among the Princes of Juda: for out of thee ſhall come the gouernor that ſhall feede my people Iſraell. 2.14.7
3.2 Iohn ſaide, repent: for the kingdome of heauen is at hande. 3.3.2.&3.3.5.&3.3.19
6 And they were baptiſed of him in Jordan, confeſſing their ſinnes. 3.4.6.&4.15.6.&4.16.24
11 In deede I baptize you with water to amendment of life, &c. 4.11.6.&4.15.8.&4.16.25
12 Which hath his fanne in his hande and will make cleane his floore, and gather his wheate into his garner, but will burne vp the chaffe with vnquenchable fire. 3.25.12.&4.1.13.&4.1.19
13 Then came Ieſus from Galile to Jordan vnto Iohn, to be baptized of him. 4.15.6.&4.16.27
15 Let be now: for thus it becōmeth vs to fulfill all righteouſnes. So hee ſuffred him. 2.16.5
16 And Iohn ſawe the ſpirite of God deſcending like a doue, & lighting vpon him. 1.11.3.&4.17.21.&4.19.20
17 And loe, a voice came from heauē ſaying: this is my beloued ſonne, in whome I am well pleaſed. 2.16.11.&3.2.32.&3.8.1.&3.24.1
4.2 And when he had faſted fourtie daies & fortie nights, he was afterward hungrie. 4.12.20
3 Then came to him the tempter, & ſaide, if thou be the ſonne of God, commaunde that theſe ſtones bee made bread. 3.20.46
4 Man ſhall not liue by bread onely, but by euerie woorde that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. 3.20.44
10 Then ſaide Ieſus vnto him, auoide Satan: for it is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lorde thy God, and him onely ſhalt thou ſerue. 1.12.3
11 Then the diuel left him: and beholde, the angels came, and miniſtred vnto him. 1.14.6
17 From that time Ieſus beganne to preach, and to ſaye, Amende your liues: for the kingdome of heauen is at haude. 2.9.2.&3.3.2.&3.3.19
19 Followe mee and I will make you fiſhers of men. 4.16.31
5.3 Bleſſed are the poore in ſpirit, for theirs is the kingdome of heauen. 3.17.10
4 Bleſſed are they that mourne, for they ſhalbe comforted. 3.8.9
8 Bleſſed are the pure in heart: for they ſhall ſee God. 3.25.6
10 Bleſſed are they which ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſſe ſake: for theirs is the kingdome of heauen. 3.8.7
12 Reioyce and be glad, for great is your rewarde in heauen, &c. 3.18.1
13 Ye are the ſalt of the earth, &c. 4.3.3.&4.5.14.&4.8.4
14 Ye are the light of the worlde, &c. 4.3.3.&4.5.14.&4.8.4 15 Neither doe men light a candell and put it vnder a buſhell, but on a cancandlestick, and it giueth light vnto all that are in the house. 3.11.14

16 Let your light so shine before mẽ that they may see your good workes and glorifie your father which is in heauen. 3.16.3

17 Thinke not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets. I am not come to destroy them, but to fulfill them. 2.7.14

19 Whosoeuer therefore shall breake one of these least cõmaundements: and teach men so, hee shalbe called the least in the kingdom of heauen: but whosoeuer shal obserue, &c. 2.8.59

21 Ye haue heard, that it was said vnto them of the olde time, thou shalt not kill: for who so euer killeth, shall be culpable of iudgement. 4.20.10

22 But I say vnto you, whosoeuer is angry with his brother vnaduisedly shalbe culpable of iudgement, &c. 2.8.7. & 2.8.39

25 Agree with thine aduersary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him least, &c. 3.5.7

26 Verily I say vnto thee, thou shalt not come out thence, till thou hast payed the vttermost farthing. 3.5.7. & 3.25.6

28 Whosoeuer looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath cõmitted adultery with her already in his hart. 2.8.7

34 Sweare not at al neither by heauen &c. 2.8.26. & 4.13.12

39 But I say vnto you, resist not euill: but whosoeuer shall smite thee on the right cheeke, turne to him the other also. 4.20.19. & 4.20.20

44 Loue your enemies: blesse thẽ that curse you, &c. 2.8.57. & 3.7.6. & 4.13.12

45 That yee may bee the children of your father which is in heauen: for he maketh his sunne to arise on the euill, and on the good, &c. 3.20.15. & 3.14.16. & 3.25.9

46 For if you loue them which loue you, what reward shall you haue? do not the publicanes cuẽ the same? 2.8.58

6.2 Therefore when thou giuest thine almes, thou shalt not make a trumpet to be blowen before thee, as the hypocrits do in the synagogues, & in the streets, to be prayed of men. Verily I say vnto you, they haue their reward. 3.7.2

6 But when thou prayest, enter into thy chamber: and when thou haste shutte the doore, pray to thy father which is in secret, &c. 3.20.29

7 Also when you pray, vse no vaine repetitions as the heathen, for they thinke to be heard, for their much babbling. 3.20.29

9 After this maner therefore pray ye, Our father which art in heauen, halowed by thy name, &c. 3.20.6. & 3.20.34

11 Giue vs this day our dailie bread. 2.5.14.

12 And forgiue vs our dets, as we also forgiue our detters. 3.4.38. & 4.1.23

21 For where your treasure is, there wil your heart be also. 3.2.25. & 3.18.6. & 3.25.1.

23 But if thine eie be wicked, then all thy body shalbe darke. Wherefore if the light which is in thee be darkenes, how great is ỹ darkenes? 3.2.25

7.7 Aske, & it shalbe giuen you: seeke, and ye shal finde: knocke, and it shal be opened vnto you. 3.20.13

11 If ye then which are euill, can giue to your children good gifts, howe much more shall your father which is in heauen, giue good thinges things to them that aske him. 3.20.36

12 Therefore, whatsoeuer ye woulde that men should doe vnto you, euen so do ye to them: For this is the law and the prophets. 2.8.53

15 Beware of false prophetes, which come to you in sheeps clothing, but inwardly they are rauening wolues. 4.9.4

8.4 Then Iesus said vnto him, see thou tell no man: but goe, and shewe thy selfe vnto the priest, & offer the gift that Moses cõmanded, for a witnesse to them. 3.4.4

10 And when Iesus hearde this, hee maruailed, and saide to them which followed him: verily I say vnto you I haue not found so great faith euen in Israell. 3.7.13

11 Many shall come from the East & from the West, and shall sit downe with Abraham, and Isaac and Iacob, in the kingdome of heauen. 2.10.23. & 4.16.13

12 And the children of the kingdom shalbe cast out into vtter darkenes: there shalbe weeping and gnashing of teeth. 3.25.12

13 Then Iesus saide vnto the Centurion go thy waies, and as thou haste beleeued, so be it vnto thee. And his seruant was healed the same houre. 3.20.11

25 Then his disciples came, & awoke him, saying: maister, saue vs we perish. 3.2.21

29 Iesus the sonne of God, what haue we to do with thee? art thou come hither to torment vs before the time? 1.14.19

9.2 And loe, they brought to him a man sick of the palsie lying on a bed and Iesus seeing their faith, saide to the sicke of the palsie, sonne, bee of good comfort: thy sinnes are forgiuen thee. 3.2.13. & 3.4.35. & 3.20.3

3 Certaine of the scribes sayde within themselues, this man blasphemeth. 1.13.12

4 But when Iesus saw their thoughtes, &c. 1.13.12

5 For whether is it easier to say, Thy sinnes are forgiuen thee, or to say, Arise and walke? 4.19.29

6 And that yee may knowe that the sonne of man hath authoritie to forgiue sinnes in earth, (then saide hee to the sicke of the palsie,) arise, take vp thy bed and go to thy house. 1.13.12

12 The whole needs not a phisicion, but they that are sicke. 2.12.4

13 For I am not come to cal the righteous, but the sinners to repentãce. 3.3.20. & 3.12.7. & 3.14.5

15 Can the children of the mariage chamber mourne, as long as the bridegrome, &c. 3.3.17. and 4.12.17

29 Then touched he their eies, saying according to your faith, bee it vnto you. 3.2.43. & 3.4.22. & 3.20.11. & 4.19.18

34 But the Pharisees said, he casteth out diuels, through the prince of diuels. 3.3.22

35 And Iesus went about all cities, and townes, preaching in their synagogues, & preaching the Gospell of the kingdome, &c. 2.9.2

10.1 And hee called his twelue disciples vnto him, and gaue them power against vncleane spirites, &c. 4.3.5

5 Go not into the way of the gentils and into the cities of the samaritãs enter ye not. 2.11.12

8 Heale the sicke: cleanse the lepers, raise vp the dead, cast out diuels, &c. 1.13.13

18 And ye shalbe brought to the gouernours and kinges for my sake, in witwiene ſſing to them and to the Gentiles. 3.4.4

20 For it is not yee that ſpeake, but the ſpirite of your father that ſpeaketh in you. 4.19.8
28 And feare ye not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoule: but rather feare him which is able to deſtroy both ſoule and body in hell. 1.15.2.& 3.25.7
29 Are not two ſparowes ſolde for a farthing, and one of them ſhall not fall on the grounde without your father? 1.16.1.& 1.16.5. & 1. 17.6
30 Yea, & al the haires of your head are numbred. 1.16.2
31 Feare ye not therefore, yee are of more value than manie ſparrowes. 1.17.6
33 But whoſoeuer ſhall deny me before men, him will I alſo denie before my father which is in heauen. 4.1.26
11.10 For this is hee of whome it is written: beholde, I ſende my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee. 3.3.19
11 Among them which are begotten of women, aroſe there not a greater than Johm Baptiſt: notwithſtanding he that is leaſt in the kingdome of heauen, is greater than hee 2.9.5
13 For all the Prophets & the lawe prophecied vnto John. 2.11.5.10
23 And thou Capernaum, which art lifted vp vnto heauen, ſhalt bee brought downe to hell: for if ſ great workes which haue ben don in thee had beene done among them of Sodome they had remained to this day. 3.24.15
25 At that time Ieſus anſwered, and ſaide: I giue thee thankes, O father, Lorde of heauen and earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe thinges from the wiſe, and men of vnderſtanding, and haſt opened them vnto babes. 3.2.34
27 Neither knoweth anie man the father, but the ſonne, and hee to whome the ſonne will reueale him. 4.8.5
28 Come vnto mee all yee that bee wearie and laden, and I will eaſe you. 3.3.20. & 3.4.3.& 3.12.7.& 3.18. 9
29 Take my yoke on you, & learne of mee that I am meeke and lowly in heart & yee ſhall find reſt vnto your ſoules. 3.18.9
30 For my yoke is eaſie, and my burden light. 4.19.3
12.24 But when the phariſees heard it, they ſaide, This man caſteth the diuels no otherwiſe out, but through Beelzebub the prince of diuels. 3.3. 22.
31 Euerie ſinne and blaſphemie ſhal be forgiuen vnto mē: but the blaſphemie againſt the holy ghoſt ſhall not be forgiuen vnto men. 1.13.15. & 3.3.21.& 3.3.22
32 And whoſoeuer ſhall ſpeake a worde againſt the ſonne of man, it ſhalbe forgiuen him: but whoſoeuer ſhall ſpeake againſt the boly Ghoſt it ſhall not be forgiuen him, neither in this worlde, nor in the worlde to come. 3.5.7
41 The men of Ninive ſhall riſe in iudgement, with this generation, and ſhall condemne it: for they repented at the preaching of Ionas &c. 3.24.15
43 Nowe when the vncleane ſpirite is gone out of the man, hee walketh throughout drye places, ſeeking reſt, and findeth none. 1.14.14 & 14.19.
13.4 And as he ſowed, ſome ſeedes fell by the way ſide, and the foules came and deuoured them vp. 3.22.10. & 4

&4.14.11.&4.17.33
5 And some fell vpon stonie ground where they had not much earth, & anon they sprong vp, because they had no depth of earth. 4.17.33
7 And some fell among thornes, and the thornes sprong vp, & choked them. 4.17.33
9 Hee that hath eares to heare, let him heare. 3.23.13
11 Because it is giuen vnto you, to knowe the secretes of the kingdom of heauen, but to them it is not giuen. 1.7.5.&3.24 13
16 But blessed are your eies, for they see: & your eares, for they heare. 2. 9.1
17 For verily I say vnto you, that many prophetes and righteous men haue desired to see those thinges which yee see, and haue not seene them, &c. 2.11.6
24 The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a man, which soweth good seed in his feelde. 4.1.13
29 But he said, nay: least while ye goe about to gather the tares, ye plucke vp also with them the wheate. 4.12. 11
31 The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a graine of mustardseed, which a man taketh & soweth in his fielde 4.19.34
33 Another parable spake hee vnto them, saying: the kingdome of heauen is like vnto leuen, which a woman taketh & hideth in three pecks of meale, till it be all leauened. 4.19. 34
39 And the enimie which soweth them, is the diuel, &c. 1.14.15
47 The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a net, ỹ was cast into the sea, & gathered of all kinde. 4.1.13. &4.16.31
14 25 And in the fourth watch of the night, Iesus went vnto them, walking on the sea. 4.17.29
15.3 Why do yee also transgresse the commaundement of God by your tradition? 4 10.16
4 For God hath commaunded, saying honour thy father and mother, and he that curseth father and mother, let him die the death. 2.8.36
8 This people draweth neere vnto mee with their mouth, and honoureth mee with their lippes, but their heart is farre off from mee. 3.10. 31
9 But in vaine they worshippe mee, teaching for doctrines, mens precepts. 4.10.15.&4.10 23
13 Euerie plant which mine heauenly father hath not planted, shall bee rooted vp. 2.3.9.&3.2.12.&3.23.1.& 3.24.6
14 Let them alone: they be the blind leaders of the blinde, & if the blind leade the blind, both shall fal in the ditch. 3.19.11. &4.9.12
24 I am not sent, but vnto the loste sheepe of the house of Ffrael. 2.11.12
16.6 Take heede and beware of the leauen of the Pharisees, & Saduces. 4.10 26
12 Then vnderstood they that he had not said that they should beware of the leuen of breade, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees, & Saduces. 4.10.26
16 Thou art Christ the sonne of the liuing God. 4.6.6
17 Blessed art thou Simon the sonne of Jonas, for flesh & bloud hath not reuealed it vnto thee, but my father which is in heauen. 2.2.19. &3. 1.4.&3.2.34
18 And I say also vnto thee that thou art Peter, & vpon this rócke I will build my church. 4 6.3.&4.6.5
19 And I will giue vnto thee the keyes of the kingdome of heauen: & what soeuer thou shalt binde vpon earth, shalbe shalbe bound in heauen: and whatsoeuer thou shalt loose, on the earth shalbe losed in heauen. 3.4.12.& 4.1.22.&4 2.10.&4.6.4.&4.11.1.& 4.12.4.

23 Get thee behinde mee, Satan: thou art an offence vnto mee,&c .4.7.28

24 If anie man will followe mee, let him forsake himselfe, and take vp his crosse, and follow mee. 3.7.2.&3.8.1

17 For the sonne of man shall come in the glorie of his father, with his angels: and then shall he giue to euerie man according to his deedes. 3.18.1

17.2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sunne, and his clothes were as white as the light. 4.17.17

5 While hee yet spake, beholde, a bright cloude shadowed them: and beholde, there came a voice out of the cloude, saying: this is my welbeloued sonne in whome I am well pleased, heare him. 2.15 2.& 3.2.32.& 3.8.1.&3.20.48.& 4.8.1.& 4.8.7

18.10 For I say vnto you, that in heauen their Angels alwaies beholde the face of my father which is in heauen. 2.14.7.& 1.14.9

11 For the sonne of man is come to saue that which was lost. 2.12.4

15 If thy brother trespasse against thee, goe, and tell him his fault betweene thee and him alone: if hee heare thee, thou hast wonne thy brother. 4.12.3

17 And if hee will not vouchsafe to heare them, tell it vnto the church: and if he refuse to heare the church also, let him be vnto thee as an heathen man, and as a publicane. 4.8.15.& 4.11.2.& 4.12.3

18 Verily I say vnto you, whatsoeuer ye binde on earth, shalbe bound in heauen, and whatsoeuer ye loose on earth shalbe losed in heauen. 3.4.12.& 3.4.20.& 4.1.22.& 4.2.10.& 4.8.4.& 4.12.4.& 4.12.9

19 Againe, verilie I say vnto you, that if two of you shall agree in earth vpon anye thing, whatsoeuer they shall desire, it shalbee giuen them of my father which is in heauen. 3.20.30

20 For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the middes among them. 4.1.9.& 4 6.4.& 4.9.2

22 I say not to thee, vnto seuē times: but vnto seuentie times seuē times. 4.1.23

29 And his fellow therfore fel down and besought him, saying, haue patience with me, & I wil pay thee all. 4.1.23

19.6 Wherefore they are no more twaine, but one flesh: let not man therefore put a sunder that which God hath coupled together. 4.15.22

11 All men cannot receiue this saying, saue them to whom it is giuen. 2.8.42.& 4.13.17

12 For there are some chast, which were so borne of their mothers belly: and there be some chaste which be made chaste by men: and there be some chaste, which haue made themselues chast for the kingdome of heauen, &c. 2.8.42

13 Then were brought vnto him litle children, that he shoulde put his hande vppon them, and praye: and the disciples rebuked them. 4.16.7

14 Suffer litle children to come vnto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdome of heauen. 4.16.7.& 4 16.17.& 4.16.26

15 And when he had put his handes on

on thé, he departed thence. 4.3.16
17 There is none good but one, euen God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keepe the commaundements. 1 13. 13.24.& 3.18 9
18 Thou shalt not kil: thou shalt not commit aduleerie: thou shalt not steale, &c. 2.8.35 36 37.38 39.&c. to the ende of the Chapter.
19 Honor thy father and thy mother, &c. 2.8.12.35
21 If thou wilt be perfecte, goe, sell that thou hast, & giue to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, &c. 4.13.13.
25 And when his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, who then can bee saued? 2.7.5
26 And Iesus beheld them and said vnto them: with men this is vnpossible, but with God all thinges are possible. 2.7.5
28 And Iesus said vnto them, verily I say to you: that when the sonne of man shall sit in the throne of his maiestie, yee which followed me in the regeneration, shal sit also vpon twelue thrones, and iudge the twelue tribes of Israel. 2.16.18.& 3.25.10
29 And whosoeuer shall forsake houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my names sake, he shall receiue an hundred folde more, & shall inherite life euerlasting. 3.25. 10
20.1 For the kingdome of heauen is like vnto a certaine housholder, which went out at the dawning of the day, to hier labourers into his vineyard. 3.18.3
25 Ye knowe that the lordes of the Gentils haue dominatiō ouer thé, and they that are great, exercise authoritie ouer them. 4.11.8 &4.11.9
26 But it shall not be so among you: but whosoeuer will be great among you, let him be your seruant. 4.11. 8
28 Euen as the sonne of man came not to be serued, but to serue, and to giue his life for the raunsome of many. 2.16.5
21.9 Moreouer, the people that went before, and they also that followed cried, saying: Hosanna the sonne of Dauid: blessed be hee that cōmeth in the name of the Lorde, &c. 2.6. 4
22 Whatsoeuer yee shall aske in prayer if ye beleue, ye shal receiue it. 3 20.11
25 The baptisme of John whence was it? frō heauen, or of men? then they reasoned among themselues saying, if we shal say from heauen, he will say vnto vs, why did yee not then beleue him. 4.19.5
31 Whether of them twayne did the will of the father? they sayde vnto him, the first. Iesus saide vnto thé, verily I say vnto you, that the Publicans and the harlots shal goe before you into the kingdome of God. 2.8.14.& 3.7.2
22.2 The kingdome of heauen is like vnto a certaine king, which maried hys sonne. 3.24.8
12 Frind how camest thou in hither, & hast not on a wedding garment? 4.17.45
13 Bind him hand & foote, take him away, and cast him into vtter darknesse: there shalbe weeping & gnashing of teeth. 3.25.12
14 For manie are called, but few are chosen. 3.24.6
23 The same day the Sadduces came to him, which say that there is no resurrection. 2.10.23
30 For in the resurrection, they neyther neither marrie wiues, nor wiues are bestowed in mariage, but are as the Angels of God in heauen. 1.14.9. & 1.15.3. & 2.12.6. & 3.25.11. & 4.1. 4

32 I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob: God is not the God of the dead, but of the liuing. 2.10.6. & 4.16.3

37 Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soule and with all thy minde. 2.8.11. & 2.8 51. & 3.3.11.

39 And the second is like vnto this, thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. 2.8.11

23.4 For they binde heauie burdens, and grecuous to be borne, and laye them on mens shoulders, but they themselues wil not moue them with one of their fingers. 4.10.1. & 4.10. 26

8 But be not ye called, Rabbi: for one is your doctor to wit, Christ, and all ye are brethren. 4.8.8

9 And call not man your father vpō the earth: for there is but one, your father which is in heauen. 3.20. 38

23 And ye leaue the weightier matters of the law, as iudgement, and mercie, and fidelitie, these ought ye haue done, and not to haue left the other. 2.8.52.

25 Woe vnto you scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye make cleane the outer side of the cup, and of the platter, but within they are full of briberie and excesse. 3.4.36

37 Ierusalem, Ierusalem, which killest the prophets, & stonest them which are sent to thee: howe often woulde I haue gathered thy children together, &c. 3.24.16

24.11 And many false Prophets shal arise and shal deceiue manie. 4.9. 4

14 And this Gospel of the kingdome shalbe preached through the whole world, for a witnesse vnto all nations: and then shall the ende come 3.4.4

24 For there shall arise false Christs, and false Prophets, and shal shewe great signes and wonders: so that if it were possible, they shoulde deceiue the verie elect. 4.9.4

30 And then shall appeare the signe of the sonne of man in heauen, and then shall all the kinredes of the earth mourne, and they shal see the sonne of man come in the cloudes of heauen with power & great glorie. 2.16.17

36 But of that day and houre knoweth no man, no not the Angels of heauen, but my Father onelie. 1. 14.9

45 Who then is a faithfull seruaunt, and wise, whome his maister hath made ruler ouer his household, to giue them meate in season? 4.16. 31

25.3 The foolish tooke their lampes, but tooke no oyle with them. 3.5. 7

21 Then his maister said vnto him, It is well done good seruaunt and faithfull: thou hast beene faithfull in litle, I wil make thee ruler ouer much: enter into thy maisters ioy. 2. 3.11

23 It is well done good seruaunt and faithfull, thou hast beene faithful in litle, &c. 2.3.11

29 For vnto euerie man that hath, it shalbe giuen, and hee shal haue abundance: and from him that hath not, euen that he hath, shalbe taken away. 2.3.11. & 3.15.4

31 And when the sonne of man commeth in his glorie, and all the holy Angels with him, then shall he sitte vpon the throne of his glorie. 2.16. 17

32 And before him shal be gathered all nations, & hee shal separate one from an other, as a shepeheard separateth the sheepe from the goats. 2.16.17. & 3.25.9

34 Come ye blessed of my father, inherite the kingdome prepared for you frō the foūdations of the world 3.18.1. & 3. 18.2. & 3. 18.3. & 3.24. 16

35 For I was an hungred, & ye gaue me meate: I thirsted, & ye gaue me drinke, &c. 3.18.1

40 Verily I say vnto you, in as much as ye haue done it vnto one of the least of these my brethren, ye haue done it to me. 3.18.6

41 Depart from me ye cursed, into euerlasting fire, which is prepared for the deuill and his angels. 1.14.14 & 1.14.19. & 3.25.5

46 And these shall go into euerlasting paine, and the righteous into life eternall. 3.25.5

26.10 Why trouble yee the woman? for she hath wrought a good worke vpon me. 3.25.8

11 For yee haue the poore alwaies with you, but me shall ye not haue with you alwaies. 4.3.1 & 4.17.26. & 4.17.28

12 For in that she powred this ointment vpon my bodie, shee did it to burie me. 3.25.8

15 And he saide to them, what wil ye giue mee, and I will deliuer him vnto you? and they appointed vnto him thyrtie peeces of siluer. 4.18. 14

26 And as they did eate, Iesus tooke the bread: and when hee had giuen thankes he brake it, and gaue it to the disciples, and saide, take, eate: this is my body. 4.14.20. and 4.16.30. and 4. 17.1. and. 4.17.20. and 4.19. 23

27 Also he toke the cup, and when he had giuen thanks he gaue it to thē, saying, drinke ye all of it. 4.9 14

38 Then said Iesus vnto thē my soule is verie heauie euen vnto the death: tarie ye here, and watch with me. 2. 16.12. & 3.8.9

39 So he went a litle further, and fel on his face, & praied, saying: O my Father, if it be possible let this cup passe from me, neuertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt. 2.16.12

53 Thinkest thou that I can not now pray to my Father, and he will giue me more thā twelue legions of Angels. 1.14.8

74 Then began he to curse himselfe and to sweare, saying, I knowe not the man. 4.1.26

75 Then Peter remembred the words of Iesus, which saide vnto him, Before the cocke crowe thou shalt deny me thrise. So hee went out, and wept bitterly. 3.3 4

27.4 I haue sinned betraying the innocent bloud, but they saide, what is that to vs? see thou to it. 3.3.4

12 And when he was accused of the chiefe Priests and elders, he answered nothing. 2.16.5

14 But he aunswered him not to one word, in so much that the gouernor maruailed greatly 2.16 5

23 Then said the gouernour, but what euill hath he done? then they cryed the more saying, let him be crucified. 2.16.5

24 When Pilate saw that he auailed nothing, but that more tumult was made, he tooke water and washed his handes before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the bloude of this iust man: looke you to it. 2. 16.5

46 And about the ninth houre Iesus cried with a loude voyce, saying, Eli, Eli, Lamasabacthani? that is, my my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? 2.16.11

50 Then Iesus cried againe with a loude voice, & yeelded vp the ghost. 4.19.23

52 And the graues did open themselues, and many bodies of ỳ saintes which slept, arose, 2.10.23. and. 3.25. 7

53 And came out of the graues after his resurrection, and went into the holy citie, and appeared to many. 2.10.23

66 And they went and made the sepulchre sure with the warch & sealed the stone. 3.25.3

28.5 But the Angell aunswered and saide to the women, feare yee not, &c. 1.14.6

6 He is not here, for he is risen, as he saide, &c. 4.17.29

7 Tell his disciples, that hee is risen from the dead, &c. 1.14.6

11 Nowe when they were gone, beholde, some of the watch came into the citie, and shewed vnto the hie priestes all the things that were done. 3.25.3

12 And they gathered themselues together with the elders, & toke cousell, & gaue large monie to the souldiers. 3.25.3

13 Saying, Say, his disciples came by night and stole him away while wee slept. 3.25.5

18 All power is giuen vnto mee in heauen and in earth. 3 15.5

19 Go therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the Sonne, and the holy ghost. 1.13.16, & 4.3.6. & 4.8.4. & 4.14.20. & 4.15.6.18.20.22. & 4.16.27. & 4.19.28

20 I am with you alwaies, vntill the ende of the world. 1.16.14. & 4.8.8. & 4.8.11. & 4.17.26. & 4.17.28. and 4.17. 30

MARKE.

1. THe beginning of the Gospell of Iesus Christ the sonne of God. 2. 9.2

4 Iohn did baptise in the wilderneſse, and preached the baptisme of amẽdement of life for remission of sins. 3.3.19. & 4.19.17

15 And saying the time is fulfilled, & the kingdome of God is at hand, repent & beleeue the gospell. 3.3.19

3.15 And that they might haue power to heale sickenesses, and to cast out diuels. 1.13.13

28 Verily, I saye vnto you, all sins shall bee forgiuen vnto the chĩldren of men, and blasphemies, wherewith they blaspheme. 3.5.7

29 But he that blasphemeth against the holy Ghost, shall neuer bee forgiuen, but is culpable of eternal dãnation. 1.13.15. & 3.3.22

6.7 And gaue them power ouer vncleane spirites. 1.13.13

13 And they cast out many diuels, & they annointed many that were sick with oyle, and healed them. 4.19.18. & 4.19.21

7.33 Then he tooke him aside from the multitude, & put his fingers in his eares, & did spit, and touched his tongue. 4.19.23

8.38 For whosoeuer shal be ashamed of mee, and of my wordes among this adulterous and sinfull generation, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed also, &c. 4.1.26

9.24 Lord, I beleeue: helpe my vnbelief. 4.14.7

43 To goe into hel, into the fire that neuer shall be quenched. 3.25.12

44 Where their worme dieth not, & the fire neuer goeth out. 3.25.12

10.9 Therefore, what God hath coupled together, let no man separate. 4.1.1.

30 But he shal receiue a hundred fold nowe at this present: houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and landes, with persecutions: and in the world to come eternall life. 3.18.3

11.24 Whatsoeuer ye desire when ye pray, beleeue that ye shall haue it and it shalbe done vnto you. 3.20.11

12.18 Then came the Saduces vnto him (which say, that there is no resurrection) and they asked him, saying. 3.25.5

13.32 But of that day & houre knoweth no mā, no not the Angels which are in heauen, neyther the sonne himselfe, saue onely the Father. 2. 14.2

14 22 And as they did eate, Iesus toke the breade, and when he had giuen thankes, hee brake it and gaue it to them, and saide, take, eate: this my body. 4.17.1.& 4.17.20

33 And hee tooke with him Peter, & Iames and John, & he began to bee afraide, and in great heauinesse 3.8. 9

34 And saide vnto them, my soule is verie heauie, euen vnto the death: tarie here and watch. 2.16.12

15 28 Thus the scripture was fulfilled, which saith. And he was counted among the wicked. 2.16.5

16.9 He appeared first to Marie Magdalene, out of whome hee had caste seuen diuels. 1.14.14

15 Goe ye into all the worlde, and preach the Gospel to euerie creature. 4.3.4 & 4.3.12. & 4.16.27. & 4. 19.28

16 He that shall beleeue and be baptised, shall bee saued. 4.15.1. & 4.16. 27

19 So after the Lord had spoken vnto them, he was receiued into heauen and sat at the right hand of God. 2. 14.3. & 4.17.2.7

LVKE.

1.6 BOth were iustified before God and walked in all the cōmandementes and ordinaunces of the Lorde, without reproofe. 3.17.7

15 And hee shall be filled with the holy ghost, euen from his mothers woombe. 4.16.17

17 For hee shall goe before him in the spirite and power of Elias: to turne the heartes of the fathers to their children, and the disobedient to the wisedome of the iust men, to make readie a people prepared for the Lord. 4.1.6

31 For loe, thou shalt conceiue in thy woombe, and beare a sonne, and shalt call his name Iesus. 2.16.1

32 He shall be great, and shall bee called the sonne of the moste high, & the Lorde shall giue vnto him the throne of his father Dauid. 2.14.4.7

33 And he shall raigne ouer the house of Jacob for euer, and of his kingdome shall bee none ende. 2.14.3.& 2.15.3

34 Then saide Marie vnto the Angell, how shall this be, seeing I know no man? 4.17.15

35 And the Angel answered, & saide vnto her, the holy Ghost shall come vpon thee, & the power of the most high shall ouershadow thee: therefore also, that holy thing which shall be borne of thee, shall be called the sonne of God. 2.14.5

43 And whence commeth this to me that the mother of my Lord should come to me? 2.14.4

54 Hee hath vpholden Israel his seruant, being mindfull of his mercie. 2.10.4

72 That he would shewe mercye towardes our fathers, and remember his holy couenant. 2.10.4

73 And

73 And the oth which hee ſware to our father Abraham. 2.10.4
74 That we being deliuered out of the handes of our enemies, ſhould ſerue him without feare. 3.16.2
77 And to giue knowledge of ſaluation vnto his people, by the remiſſion of their ſinnes. 3.11.22
79 To giue light to them that ſit in darkeneſſe, and in the ſhadowe of death, and to guide our feete into the way of peace. 2.12.4
2.11 That is, that vnto you is borne this day in the Citie of Dauid a Sauiour, which is Chriſt the Lorde. 2.15.5
13 And ſtreight way there was with the Angell a multitude of heauenly ſoldiers, prayſing God, &c. 1.14.5
37 And ſhee was a widowe about fourſcore and fourt yeeres, and went not out of the temple, & ſerued God with faſtings, and prayers, night and day. 4.12.16
52 And Ieſus increaſed in wiſedome, and ſtature, and in fauor with God and men. 2.14.2
3.3 And he came into all the coaſtes about Iordan, preaching the baptiſme of repentance for the remiſſion of ſinnes. 3.3.19. & 4.15.7. & 4.19.17
8 Bring forth therefore fruites worthy amendement of life, and begin not to ſay with your ſelues, We haue Abraham to our father: for I ſay vnto you, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe vp children vnto Abraham. 3.3.5
14 The ſouldiers likewiſe demanded of him, ſaying, and what ſhall we doe? and he ſaide vnto them, do violence to no man, neither accuſe any falſely, and be content with your wages. 4.20.12
16 Iohn anſwered, and ſaid to them all, indeed I baptize you with water, but one ſtronger than I, commeth, whoſe ſhooes latchet I am not worthy to vnlooſe: hee will baptiſe you with the holy Ghoſt, and with fire. 3.1.3.4. & 4.15.6.7
22 And the holy Ghoſt came downe in a bodily ſhape like a Doue, vpon him, and there was a voyce from heauē, ſaying, thou art my beloued ſonne: in thee I am well pleaſed. 4.17.21
23 And Ieſus himſelfe began to be about thirtie yeares of age, being as men ſuppoſed the ſonne of Ioſeph, which was the ſonne of Elie. 4.25.27.29
38 Which was the ſonne of Enos, which was the ſonne of Seth, which was the ſonne of Adam, whiche was the ſonne of God. 2.12.7. & 2.13.3
4.17 And there was deliuered vnto him the boke of the prophet Eſaias: and when he had opened the booke hee founde the place where it was written. 4.19.23
18 The ſpirite of the Lord is vpon me becauſe he hath annointed me, that I ſhould preach the Goſpell to the poore: he hath ſent me, that I ſhould heale the broken in heart. 2.15.2. & 3.20. & 3.4.3
5.13 And touched him, ſaying, I will, be thou clean. And immediatly the leproſie departed from him.
14 And he commanded him that he ſhoulde tell it to no man: but goe, ſaith hee, and ſhewe thy ſelfe to the prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſing, as Moſes hath commanded, for a witneſſe vnto them. 3.4.4
34 Can ye make the children of the wedding chamber faſte, as long as the bridegrome is with them? 4.12.17
6.13 And when it was day, he called his diſciples, and of them he choſe twelue

twelue, which also he called Apostles. 4.3.5
23 Reioyce ye in that day, and be glad, for behold, your reward is great in heauen, &c. 3.18.1
24 But woe be to you that are riche, for you haue receiued your consolation. 3.19.9
32 Be ye merciful therefore, as your father also is mercifull. 3.7.6
7.29 Then all the people that heard, and the publicanes iustified God, being baptised with the baptisme of Iohn. 3.11.3
35 But wisedome is iustified of al her children. 3.11.3
36 And one of the pharisees desired him that he woulde eate with him: and hee went into the Pharisees house, and sat downe at the table 3. 4.37
47 Wherefore I say vnto thee, many sinnes are forgiuen her: for she loued much. To whom a litle is forgiuen, he doth loue a litle. 3.4.31
8.2 And certaine women, which were healed of euill spirites, and infirmities, as Maria which was called Magdalene, out of whome went seuē diuels. 1.14.14
7 And some fell among thornes, and the thornes sprung vp with it, and choked it. 3.2.10
13 But they that are on the stones, are they which when they haue heard, receiue the word with ioy, but they haue no rootes, which for a while beleeue, but in the time of tentation goe away. 3.2.10
15 But that which fel on good ground, are they which with an honest, and good hart heare the worde, & keepe it, & bring forth fruit with pacience. 4.14.11
9.23 If any man will come after me, let him deny himselfe, and take vp his crosse daily and followe me. 3.15.8,
26 For whosoeuer shall bee ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the sonne of man be ashamed when he shall come in his glorie, & in the glorie of the father, and of the holy Angels. 1.14.9
55 But Iesus turned about, and rebuked them, and said, ye knowe not of what spirite ye are. 3.20.15
10.1 After these thinges the Lord appointed other 70. also, & sent them two and two before him, &c. 4.3.4
6 And if the sonne of peace be there your peace shall rest vpon him: if not, it shall returne to you againe. 3. 23.14
16 He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that despiseth you, despiseth me. 4.3.3. & 4.8.4
18 I sawe Sathan, like lightning, fall downe from heauen. 1.14.18
20 Neuertheless, in this reioyce not, that the spirites are subdued vnto you: but rather reioice, because your names are written in heauen. 3.24.9
21 The same houre reioyced Iesus in the spirite and saide, I confesse vnto thee father, Lorde of heauen and earth, that thou hast hidde these thinges from the wise and learned, and hast reuealed them to babes, euen so, father, because it so pleased thee. 3.2.34
22 All things are giuen me of my father: and no man knoweth who the sonne is, but the father: neither who the father is, saue the sonne: and hee to whom the son will reueale him. 3. 2.1. & 4.18.20
23 Blessed are the eies, which see that yee see. 2.9.1
24 For I tell you, that many prophets and kinges haue desired to see these thinges, which ye see, and haue not seene them, &c. 2.9.1. & 2.11.6
25 Maister, what shall I doe, to inherite

rite eternall life? 4.13.13
27. And hee answered, and saide, thou shalt loue thy Lord God, with al thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy thought, and thy neighbour as thy selfe. 2.8.11
30. And a certaine man went downe from Ierusalem to Iericho, and fell among theeues. 1.5.19
36. Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour to him that fel among the theeues? 2.8.55
11.2. And he saide vnto them when ye pray, say, Our father which art in Heauen. 3.20.6.& 3.20.34.
3 Our dayly breade giue vs for the day. 2.5.14
21. When a strong man armed, keepeth his place, the thinges that hee possesseth are in a peace. 1.14.13.& 1.14.18.
22. But when a stronger than he commeth vpon him, and ouercommeth him, he taketh from him, all his armour wherein he trusted, and deuideth his spoiles. 1.14.18.
39. And the Lorde sayde vnto him, in deed ye Pharisees make cleane the out side of the cup, & of the platter, but the inwarde part is full of rauening and wickednesse. 3.4.36.
12 5. Feare him which after hee hath killed, hath power to cast into hell, &c. 1.15.2.
10. And whosoeuer shall speake a word against the sonne of man, it shall be forgiuen him: but vnto him that shal blaspheme the holy Ghoste, it shall neuer be forgiuen. 1.13.15.& 3.3.21. 22.& 3.5.7.
14. Man, who made me a iudge, or a diuider ouer you? 4.11.9.& 4.11.11
14.21. Go out quickly into the places and streetes of the Citie, and bring in hither the poore & the maimed, and the halt, and the blinde. 4.16.

15.7. I say vnto you, that likewise ioy shall bee in heauen for one sinner ỹ conuerteth, more than for nintie & nine iust men, which neede no amendment of life. 1.14.7
20. And when he was yet a great way off, his father sawe him, and had cõpassion, and ran & fell on his necke and kissed him. 3.20.37
16.2. And he called him, and said vnto him, howe is it that I heare this of thee? giue an accoumpt of thy stewardship, for thou maist be no longer steward. 3.10.5.
9. And I say vnto you, make you frends with the riches of iniquitie, ỹ when you shall want, they may receiue you into euerlasting habitations. 3. 18.6
15. Yee are they which iustifie your selues before men, but God knoweth your harts, &c. 3.11.3.& 3.12.2
16. The lawe and the prophets endured vntill Iohn, & since that time the kingdome of God is preached, and euerie man presseth into it. 2.7. 16.
22. And it was so, that the begger died, and was caried by the Angels into Abrahams bosome, &c. 1.14.7.& 1.15. 2.& 3.25.6
17.3. If thy brother trespasse against thee, rebuke him: and if he repent, forgiue him. 3.7.6
4. And the Apostles saide vnto the Lord, increase our faith. 4.14.7
7. Who is it also of you, that hauing a seruaunt plowing or feeding cattel, would say vnto him by and by, when he were come from the field, &c. 3. 14.15.
10. So likewise ye, when ye haue done all these things which are commanded you, say, we are vnprofitable seruants, we haue done that which was our duetie to doe. 3.14.14.

3.15.3.
14. And when he saw them, he sayd vnto them, go, shew your selues to the Priestes. And it came to passe, that as they went, they were cleansed. 3.4.4
20. And when hee was demaunded of the Pharisees, when the kingdome of God should come, he aunswered them and said: the kingdom of God commeth not with obseruation. 2. 15.4
18.1. And he spake also a parable vnto them to this ende, that they ought alwayes to pray, and not to waxe faint. 3.20.7
13 But the Publicane standing a far off, would not lift vp so much as his eyes to heauen, but smote his brest, saying: O God, be mercifull to mee a sinner. 3.4.18.& 3.12.7.
14 I tell you, this man departed to his house iustified, rather than the other: for euery man that exalteth himselfe, shall be brought low, & he that humbleth himselfe, shall bee exalted. 3.4.35.& 3.11.3
42 And Iesus saide vnto him: receiue thy sight, thy fayth hath saued thee, 4.19.12
19.17 And hee saide vnto him, well, good seruaunt because thou haste bene faithfull in a very little thing, take thou authority ouer ten cities. 2.3.11.& 3.15.4
26 Vnto all them that haue, it shall be giuen, & from him that hath not euen that he hath shall be taken frō him. 2.3.11.& 3.15.4
20.27 Then came to him certaine of the Sadduces, which deny that there is any resurrection, &c. 12.10. 23.& 3.25.5
37 And that the dead shall rise again, euen Moses shewed it besides the Bush, when he saide, the Lord is the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob. 2.10.9
38 For he is not the God of the dead, but of them which liue. 4.16.3
21.15. For I wil giue you a mouth and wisedome, where against, all your aduersaties shal not be able to speak or resist. 4.3.12
28 And when these thinges begin to come to passe, then looke vp, & lift vp your heades, for your redemption draweth neere. 3.9.5
22.17 And he tooke the cup, & gaue thankes, and said, take this, and part it among you. 4.17.20.& 4.17.43. & 418.8
19 And he tooke bread, and when he had giuen thankes, he brake it, and gaue to them, saying, this is my bodie, which is giuen for you: doe this in the remembrance of me. 4.3.6.& 4.15.20.& 4.16.30. & 4.17.1.20.37
20 Likewise also after supper hee tooke the cup, saying, this cup is the newe Testament in my bloode, which is shed for you. 2.11.4.& 2. 17.4.& 4.17.6.20.
25 The kings of the Gentiles reigne ouer them, and they that beare rule ouer them: are called gratious lords. 4.11.8.9.& 4.20.7
26 But ye shall not bee so: but let the greatest among you, be as the least: and the chiefest, as he that serueth. 4.11.8
32 But I haue prayed for thee, that thy faith faile not, &c. 3.24.6.& 4.7. 27.28
43 And there appeared an Angel vnto him from heauen, comforting him. 1.14.6.& 2.16.12
44. And his sweat was like droppes of bloode, trickling downe to the ground. 2.16.12.& 3.8.9.
61 Then the Lord turned backe, and looked vpon Peter: and Peter remembred the worde of the Lorde, howe hee had saide vnto him, Before fore the cocke crowe, thou shalt denie me thrise. 3.4.35

62 And Peter went foorth, and wept bitterly. 3.3.4
23.42 And he saide vnto Iesus Lorde remember mee, when thou commest into thy kingdome. 3.24.1.&.4. 16.31
43 Then Iesus said vnto him, verily I say vnto thee, to day shalt thou bee with mee in Paradise. 3.25.6
46 And Iesus cried with a loud voice, and saide, Father, into thy handes I commend my spirit, &c. 1.15.2.&3. 25.6
24.5 They said vnto them, why seeke ye him that liueth amõg the deade? 1.14.6
6 He is not here, but is risen: remember howe he spake vnto you, when he was yet in Galilee. 3.25.3
11 But their words seemed vnto thẽ a fained thing, neither beleeued they them. 3.2.4
12 Then arose Peter, and ranne vnto the sepulchre, and looked in, and sawe the linen clothes laide by thẽselues: and departed wondring in himselfe at that which was come to passe. 3.2.4
16 But their eies were holden, that they coulde not knowe him. 4.17.29
26 Ought not Christ to haue suffered these things, & to enter into his glorie? 2.17.6.&3.18.7.&4.17.32
27 And hee began at Moses, and at all the Prophets, & interpreted vnto thẽ in al the scriptures ỹ thinges that were written of him. 1.9.3.& 3.2.34
31 But hee was taken out of their sight. 4.17.29
39 Behold mine handes & my feete: for it is my selfe: handle me and see: for a spirite hath not flesh & bones, as ye see me haue. 2.14.2.&3.25.3.&4.17.29
44 All must bee fulfilled which are written of me in the law of Moses, & in the Prophets, & in the Psalmes. 3.5.8
45 Then opened he their vnderstanding, that they might vnderstande the Scriptures. 3.2.34
46 Thus it is written, & thus it behoued Christ to suffer, and to rise againe from the dead the third day. 2.12.4.&.3.3.19
47 And that repentance, & remission of sinnes should bee preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Ierusalem. 2.12.4.&.3.3.1.&3.3.19
49 But tary ye in the citie of Ierusalem, vntill yee bee endued with power from on high. 4.3.12
51 And it came to passe, that as hee blessed them, hee departed from them, and was caried vp into heauen. 4.17.27

IOHN.

1.1 IN the beginning was the worde, & the worde was with God, & that word was God. 1.13.6.&1.13.11.&1.13.22
3 All things were made by it, &c. 1.13.7.&1.13.17
4 In it was life, and the life was the light of men. 1.13.13.&1.15.4.&2.2.19.&2.6.1.&4.17.8
5 And the light shineth in the darkenes, & the darkenes comprehended it not. 2.2.12
9 That was the true light which lighteneth euerie man that cõmeth into the world. 2.12.4
10 He was in the worlde, and the worlde was made by him, and the world knew him not. 2.12.4
12 But as many as receiue him, to them hee gaue power to be the sons of God, euen to them that beleeue in his name, 2.6.1.&3.1.4.&3.20.

36.& 3.22.10.

13 Which are borne not of bloud, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the wil of man, but of God. 2. 2.19.& 2.13.2. & 3.1.4

14. And the wotde was made flesh, and dwelt among vs, & we saw the glory thereof, as the glorie of the onely begotten sonne of the father, full of grace and trueth. 1.13.11.& 2.12 4. & 2.14.1.& 2.14 8

16. And of his fulnesse haue all we receiued, and grace for grace. 2.13.1. & 2.15.5.& 3.11.9.& 3. 20.1

17. For the law was giuen by Moses, but Grace and trueth came by Iesus Christ. 2.7.16

18. No man hath seene God at any time: the onely begotten sonne, which is in the bosom of the father, he hath declared him. 1.13.17.& 2. 2.20.& 2.9.1.& 4.17.30

23. I am the voice of him that crieth in the wildernesse, make straight the way of the Lorde, as saide the Prophet Esaias. 2.9.5

29. Behold the lamb of God, which taketh away the sinnes of the world. 2.14.3.& 2.16.5. & 2.17.4. & 3.4.26.& 4.15.7

32. So John bare witnesse, saying, I sawe the spirite come down from heauen like a doue, and it abode vpon him. 2.15.5.& 4.19.20.

33. And I knewe him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, hee saide vnto mee, vpon whome thou shalt see the spirite come down, and tarrie still on him, that is he which baptizeth with the holy Ghoste. 2. 15.5

36. Beholde the Lambe of God. 2. 9.5

40. Andrewe, Simon Peters brother, was one of the two which had hard it of John, and that followed him. 4.6.5

42. And he brought him to Iesus. &c. 4.6.5

51. Hereafter shall ye see Heauen open, & the angels of God ascending and descending vpon the sonne of man. 1.14.12.& 2.9 2

2.2. And Iesus was called also, and his disciples vnto the marriage. 4. 13.3

9. Nowe when the gouernour of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, &c. 4.13.3

15. Then hee made a scourge of small cordes, and draue them all out of the temple, with the sheepe and oxen, and powred out the changers money, and ouerthrew the Tables. 4.19.23

19. Iesus answered and said vnto them, destroy this temple, and in three dayes I will raise it vp againe. 2.14. 4.& 3.25.7

21. But he spake of the Temple of his body. 2.14.4.& 3.25.7

23. Nowe when hee was at Ierusalem, at the Passeouer in the feast, many beleeued in his name, when they sawe his miracles which hee did, 4.2.5

24. But Iesus did not commit himselfe vnto them, because he knewe them all. 3.2.12

3.3. Verily, verily, I say vnto thee, except a man be borne againe, he can not see the kingdome of God. 2.3 1.& 4.16.17

5. Except that a man be borne of water and of the spirite, hee cannot enter into the kingdome of God. 4. 16.25

6. That which is borne of the flesh, is flesh: and that which is borne of the spirite, is spirit. 2.1.6 & 2.3.1

13. For no man ascendeth vp to Heauen, but hee that hath descended from heauen, euen the sonne of mã which is in heauen. 2.14.2.& 4.17.30.

14. And

14. And as Moſes liſted vp the ſerpent in the wildernes, ſo muſt the ſonne of man bee liſt vp. 2.12.4.& 4.18. 20

16. For God ſo loued the worlde, that he gaue his onely begotten ſonne, that whoſoeuer beleeueth in him, ſhould not petiſh, but haue life euerlaſting. 2.12.4.& 2.16.4.& 2. 17.2. & 3.14.17. & 3.24.5. & 3.24. 7.

23. And Iohn alſo baptized in Enon beſides Salem, &c. 4.15.6

27. Man can receiue nothing, except it bee giuen him from heauen. 2. 2,20

33. He that hath receiued his teſtimony, hath ſealed that God is true. 3. 2.8

34. For hee whome God hath ſent, ſpeaketh the word of God: for God giueth him not the ſpirite by meaſure. 2.15.1.& 2.15.5

36. Hee that beleeueth in the Sonne, hath euerlaſting life: and he that obeyeth not the ſonne, ſhall not ſee life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. 4.16.31

4.1. Nowe when the Lorde knewe, that the Phariſees had heard, that Ieſus made and baptized moe diſciples than Iohn. 4.15.6

14. But whoſoeuer drinketh of the water that I ſhall giue him, ſhall neuer be more a thirſt: but the water that I ſhall giue him, ſhal be in him a well of water, ſpringing out into euerlaſting life. 3.1.3

22. Yee worſhip that which yee knowe not: wee worſhip that which wee know: for ſaluation is of the Iewes. 1.5.12.& 1.6.4.& 2.6.1

23. But the howre commeth, and nowe is, when the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the father in ſpirit & truth, &c. 3.20.30.& 4.10.14

24. God is a ſpirit, &c. 1.13.24

25. I know well that Meſsias ſhalll come which is called Chriſt: when hee is come, he will tell vs all things. 2.15. 1.& 4.8.7

35. Beholde, I ſay vnto you, lift vp your eyes, and looke on the regions, for they are white already vnto haruеſt. 4.16.31

42. And they ſaide vnto the woman, nowe we beleeue not becauſe of thy ſaying: for we haue heard him our ſelues, & know that this is in deede the Chriſt, that ſauiour of the world. 3.2.5

53. Then the father knewe that it was the ſame houre in the which Ieſus had ſaid vnto him, thy ſonne liueth. And he beleeued and all his houſhould. 3.2.5

5.8. Ieſus ſaid vnto him, riſe: take vp thy bed, and walke. 4.19.29

17. My father worketh hitherto, and I worke. 1.13.7. & 1.13.12.& 1.16.4.& 2.14.2

38. Therefore the Iewes ſought the more to kill him: not onely becauſe he had broken the Sabboth: but ſaid alſo that God was his father, and made himſelfe equall with God. 1. 13.12

21. For like as the father raiſeth vp the dead, and quickeneth them, ſo the ſonne quickeneth whome hee will. 2.14.3

22. For the father iudgeth no man, but hath committed all iudgement vnto the ſonne. 2.14.3.& 2. 16.18

23. Becauſe that al men ſhould honour the ſonne, as they honor the father: he that honoureth not the ſonne, the ſame honoreth not the father, which hath ſent him. 2.6.2.& 2.14. 3

34. He that heareth my worde, & beleeueth in him that ſent mee, hath euerlaſting life, and ſhall not come into into condemnation, but hath passed from death to life. 2.9.3 &3. 15.6.& 3 24 5. & 3.25.1.& 4.16.26

25 The houre shall come, and nowe is, when the dead shall heare the voice of the sonne of God, and they that heare it, shall liue. 2.5.19 &2. 12.4.& 3.14.5

26 For as the father hath life in himselfe, so likewise hath he giuen to the sonne, to haue life in himselfe. 4.17.9

28 Meruaile not at this for the houre shal come in the which all that are in the graues, shall heare his voice. 3.25.4.& 3.25.7

29 And they shall come foorth, that haue done good vnto the resurrection of life: but they that haue don euill, vnto the resurrection of condemnation. 3.18.1

32 There is an other that beareth witnesse of me, &c. 1.13.17

35 Hee was a burning, and a shining candell: and yee woulde for a season haue reioyced in his light. 2. 9.5

36 For the worke which the Father hath giuen me to finishe, the same workes that I doe, beare witnesse of mee, that the father sent mee. 1.13. 13

44 Howe can you beleeue, which receiue honour one of an other, and seeke not the honor that commeth of God alone? 3.11.9

46 For had yee beleeued Moses, yee would haue beleeued mee: for hee wrote of me. 2.9.1

6.17 Labor not for the meate which perisheth, but for the meate ỳ endureth vnto euerlasting life, which the sonne of man shall giue vnto you, &c. 3.18.1.& 4.14.25

29 This is the worke of God, that ye beleeue in him whom he hath sent. 3.19.10

35 I am the bread of life: he that commeth to me shall not hunger, & hee that beleeueth in mee shall neuer thirst. 3 24.5.& 4 17.4

37 All that the father giueth mee, shall come to me, and him ỳ commeth to me, I cast not away 3.22.7.& 3.24.6

38 For I came downe from heauen, not to doe mine owne will, but his will which sent me. 2.14.2

39 And this is the fathers will, which hath sent mee, that of all which he hath giuen mee, I shoulde loose nothing, but shoulde raise it vp againe at the last day. 3.22.7.& 3.22.10. & 3.24.6.& 3.24.7. & 3.25. 8

40 And this is the will of him that sent mee, that euerie man which seeth the sonne, & beleeueth in him should haue euerlasting life, &c. 3. 22.10.& 3.24.6

44 No man can come to me, except the father which sent mee drawe him & I will raise him vp at the last day. 2.2.20. & 2.5.5. & 3.2 34.& 3. 22.7.& 3.24.1

45 It is written in the prophets, and they shalbe all taught of God. Euery man therefore that hath hearde, and hath learned of the father cõmeth vnto mee. 1.3 .10.& 2.2.20.& 2.3.7.& 2.5.5.& 3.2.34.& 3.24.1.& 3. 24.14

46 Not that any man hath seene the father, saue he which is of God, hee hath seene the father. 3.2.34.& 3 22.10.& 3.24.1

47 He that beleeueth in me, hath euerlasting life. 1.13.13

48 I am the bread of life. 3.11.9.& 4. 17.4.& 4.17.8

49 Your fathers did eate Manna in the wildernesse, and are dead. 2.10.6

50 This is the breade which commeth downe from heauen, that hee which which eateth of it, should not die. 2. 10.6, & 4.17.34

51 I am the liuing breade, which came downe from heauen: if anye man eate of this breade: he shall liue for euer: and the breade that I will giue is my flesh, which I will giue for the life of the world. 3.11.8. & 4 17.5. & 4.17.14

53 Then Iesus said vnto them, verily, verily I say vnto you, except yee eate the flesh of the sonne of man, and drinke his bloud, ye haue no life in you. 3.11.9. & 4.17.6

54 Whosoeuer eateth my flesh and drinketh my bloud, hath eternall life, & I will raise him vp at the last day. 3.11.9. & 4.17.34

55 For my flesh is meate in deede, & my bloud is drinke in deed. 2.17.5. & 4.17.8

56 He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my bloud, dwelleth in me, and I in him. 4.17.33

57 As the liuing father hath sent mee, so liue I by the father, and hee that eateth mee, euen hee shall liue by me. 2.17.5

65 Therefore saide I vnto you, that no man can come vnto mee except it be giuen vnto him of my father. 3.23.13

70 Haue not I chosen you twelue, & one of you is a diuell? 3.12.7. & 3 24. 9

7.16 My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. 2.8.26. & 4.8 4

37 Nowe in the last and great day of the feast, Iesus stoode and cryed saying: if any man thirst, let him come vnto me and drinke. 2.16.14. & 3.1.2. & 3.1.3. & 4.19.6

39 For the holy Ghost was not yet giuen, because that Iesus was not yet glorified. 4.17.22

8.12 Then spake Iesus againe vnto them, saying, I am the light of the worlde: he that followeth mee, shall not walke in darkenes but shal haue the light of life. 2.14.3. & 3.2.1. & 3.11. 12. & 4.19.23

16 For I am not alone, but I and the father, &c. 1.13.17

29 But he that sent me, is treweand the thinges that I haue hearde of him, those speake I to the worlde. 2. 8.26

30 As he spake these thinges, manye beleeued in him. 3.2.5

31 Then saide Iesus to the Iewes which beleeued in him: if ye continue in my worde, yee are verily my disciples. 3.2.12

34 Verily, verily, I say vnto you, that whosoeuer committeth sinne, is the seruant of sinne. 2.2.27

44 Ye are of your father the Diuell, &c. 1.14.15. he hath beena murtherer from the beginning, and abode not in the trueth, because there is no truth in him: when hee speaketh a lie, then speaketh he of his owne: for he is a lier, & the father thereof. 1.14.16. & 1.14.18. & 1.14 19

47 He that is of God, heareth gods words, ye therefore heare them not because ye are not of God. 4.2.4

50 And I seeke not mine owne praise but there is one that seeketh it, and iudgeth. 2.14.2

56 Your father Abraham reioyced to see my day: and hee sawe it, and was glad. 2.9.1. & 2.10.4

58 Iesus said vnto them, verily, verily I say vnto you, before Abraham was, I am. 2.14.2

9.3 Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the workes of God shoulde bee shewed on him. 1.17.1

5 As long as I am in the worlde, I am the light of the worlde. 2.14. 3

6 As soone as hee had thus spoke he spat

ſpat on the grounde, and made clay of the ſpittle, and annoinred the eyes of the blinde with the clay. 4. 19.18

7. And ſaide anto him, go waſh thee in the poole of Siloam (which is by interpretation, ſent) hee went his way therefore, and waſhed, and came againe ſeeing. 4.19.19

24. And ſaid vnto him: giue glory vnto God, &c. 2.8.24

31. Nowe we knowe that God heareth not ſinners: but if any man be a worſhipper of God, and doth his will him heareth he. 3.10.7. & 3.20. 10

10.3. To him the porter openeth, and the ſheepe heare his voice, and hee calleth his owne ſheepe by name, and leadeth them out. 3.24.6

4. And when hee hath ſent foorth his owne ſheepe, he goeth before them and the ſheepe follow him: for they know his voice. 3.22.10. & 4. 2.4

5. And they will not followe a ſtranger but they flee from him: for they knowe not the voice of ſtraungers. 3.22.10

7. Then ſaid Ieſus vnto them againe, verily, verily I ſay vnto you, I am the doore of the ſheepe. 4. 19.13

9. I am the dore: by me if any man enter in, he ſhall be ſaued, and ſhall go in and go out, and finde paſture. 2 14.3

11. I am the good ſhepheard, the good ſhephearde giueth his life for his ſheepe. 2.14.3. & 4.19.14

14. I am the good ſhephearde, and knowe mine, &c. 4 2.4

15. As the father knoweth me, ſo know I the father, and I lay downe my life for my ſheepe. 2.16.5

16. Other ſheepe I haue alſo, which are not of this folde: them alſo muſt I bring, &c. 3.24.6

17. Therefore doth my father loue me, becauſe I lay downe my life, that I might take it againe. 2.12.4.

18. No man taketh it from mee, but I lay it downe of my ſelfe: I haue power to lay it downe, and I haue power to take it againe: this commandement haue I receiued of my father. 2.12.4. & 2.16 5

26. But ye beleeue not: for ye are not of my ſheepe, &c. 3.22 10

27. My ſheepe heare my voice, and I know them, &c. 3.24.6.

28. And I giue vnto them eternall life and they ſhall neuer periſh, neither ſhall any plucke them out of my hande. 3.15.5. & 3.21.1. & 3 22.7. & 3.24.6

29. My Father which gaue them me is greater than all, and none is able to take them out of my fathers hand. 3.22.10

30. I and my father are one. 2.8.26

34. It is not written in your lawe, I ſaid, ye are Gods? 4.26.31

35. If he called them Gods, vnto whom the vvord of God vvas giuen, and the Scripture cannot be broken. 4. 20.4

37. If I do not the vvorkes of my father beleeue me not. 1.13.13

11.25. I am the reſurrection, and the life: he that beleeueth in me, though he vvere dead, yet ſhall hee liue. 1. 13. 13. & 2.12.4. & 3.25.9. & 4.16. 17

41. Father, I thanke thee, becauſe thou haſt heard me. 1.13.13

43. As he had ſpoke theſe thinges, hee cried vvith a loude voice: Lazarus come foorth. 4.19.29.

44. Then hee that vvas deade, came foorth bound hand and foote vvith bandes, and his face vvas bounde with a napkin. Ieſus ſaid vnto them looſe him, and let him go.

47. Then

47 Then gathered the high priests,& the pharisees a councell,and sayde: what shal we do?&c. 4.9.7
12.27 Father, saue me frō this houre: but therfore came I vnto this houre. 2.12.4.& 2.16.12
28 Father glorifie thy name,&c.2.12. 4
31 Nowe is the iudgement of this worlde: now shall the prince of this world be cast out. 1.14.13
32 And I, if I were lift vp from the earth, will drawe all mine vnto me. 3.25.6
39 Therefore could they not beleeue because that Esaias saith againe.3.24 13
41 These things saide Esaias, when he sawe his glorie and spake of him. 1.13.11.& 1.13.23
43 For they loued the praise of men, more than the praise of God. 3.11. 9
49 For I haue not spoken of my selfe. &c. 4.8.13
13.4 He riseth from supper, and laieth aside his vpper garmentes,and toke a towell, and girde him selfe. 4.19. 23
15 For I haue giuen you an example that ye shoulde doe, euen as I haue done to you. 3.16.2
18 I speake not of you all: I knowe whom I haue chosen,&c.3.22.7.& 3. 24.9
34 A newe commaundement giue I vnto you, that ye loue one another as I haue loued you, that euen so ye loue one another. 3.16.2
14.1 Ye beleeue in God, beleeue also in me, 2.13.13.& 2.6.4
5 Thomas saide vnto him: Lorde wee knowe not whither thou goest: how can we then know the way? 4.17. 23
6 I am the way, and the trueth, and the life,&c.1.13 17.& 2.6.1.& 3.20.21 & 4.16.19
8 And Philip saide vnto him: Lorde, shewe vs the father, and it suffiseth vs. 4.17.23
10 Beliueest thou not, that I am in the father, and the father in mee? the wordes which I speake vnto you, I speake not of my selfe: but the father that dwelleth in mee, he doeth the workes. 2.14.2.& 4.8.13
11 Beleeue me, that I am in the father and the father in me: at the least beleeue me, for the verie workes sake. 13.13
13 And whatsoeuer yee aske in my name, that will I do, that the father may be glorified in the sonne. 3.20. 17
16 And I will pray the father, and he shall giue you an other comforter, &c. 1.13.17.& 4.8.11
17 Euen the spirite of trueth, whome the world can not receiue, because it seeth him not, neyther knoweth him: but ye knowe him, for he dwelleth with you, and shalbe in you. 3.1. 4.& 3.2.39
26 But the comforter, which is the holie Ghost whome the father will sende in my name, hee shall teache you all thinges, and bring all things to your remembrance, which I haue told you.2.2.1.& 3.24.& 4.8.8.& 4.8. 13
28 For my father is greater than I. 1. 13.26
30 Here after will I not speake many thinges vnto you: for the prince of this worlde commeth, and he hath nought in me. 1.14.18
15.1 I am the true vine, and my father is an husbandman: euerie branche that beareth not fruite in mee, hee taketh away: and euerie one that beareth fruite, he purgeth it, that is may bring forth more.2.3.9.& 2.14. 3.& 4.19.34

3 Nowe are yee cleane through the word, which I haue ſpoken vnto you 3.16.3

5 I am the vine, ye are the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit. for without me, &c. 2.2.8.& 2.3.9.& 2.5.4.& 4.19.34

10 If ye ſhall keepe my commaundements ye ſhall abide in my loue; euen as I haue kept my fathers commandements and abide in his loue. 3.16.2

16 But I haue choſen you, and ordained you, that ye go and bring foorth fruite, & that your fruite remaine, &c. 3.22.3.& 3.22.8.& 4.1.6

19 If ye were of the world, the world would loue his owne: but becauſe ye are not of the worlde, but I haue choſen you out of the world, therfore the worlde hateth you. 3. 22.7

26 Euen the ſpirite of trueth, which proceedeth of the father, &c. 1.13. 17

16.2 They ſhal excommunicate you, &c. 4.2.6

7 It is expedient for you, that I goe away, &c. 1.13.26.& 2.16.14.& 3.25.3. & 4.17.26

11 Of iudgement, becauſe the prince of the world is iudged. 1.14.13

12 I haue yet many thinges to ſaye vnto you, but ye cannot beare them away. 3.21.2.& 4.8.14

13 When hee is come which is the ſpirit of truth, he will leade you into all trueth: for he ſhall not ſpeake of him ſelfe, but whatſoeuer hee ſhall heare, that ſhall he ſpeake, &c. 1.9.1 & 3.2.34.& 4.8.8.& 4.8.13

20 Verily, verily, I ſay vnto you, that ye ſhall weepe and lament, and the worlde ſhall reioyce: and yee ſhall ſorrowe, but your ſorrowe ſhall bee turned to ioye. 3.8.9

24 Hitherto haue ye asked nothing in my name: aske and yee ſhall receiue, that your ioye may be ful. 3 20.17.

26 In that day ſhall yee aske in my name, &c. 3.20.18

28 I am come out from my father, & came into the world: againe, I leaue the worlde, and goe to my father 4. 17.26

17.3 And this is life eternal, that they knowe thee to bee the onely verie God, and whome thou haſt ſente Ieſus Chriſt. 1.13.26.& 2.6.1.& 3.2. 3

5 And now glorifie mee, thou father with thine owne ſelfe, with the glory which I had with thee, before the world was. 1.13.8.& 1.13.22.& 2.14. 2

6 I haue declared thy name vnto the men which thou gaueſt mee out of the worlde: then they were, and thou gaueſt them me. 3.24.1.& 3.24. 6

9 I pray for them: I pray not for the worlde but for them whiche thou haſt giuen me, for they are thine. 3. 22.7

12 While I was with them in the worlde, I kept them in thy name: thoſe that thou gaueſt mee, I kept, and none of them is loſte, but the childe of perditio, that the ſcripure might be fulfilled. 3.22.7.& 3.24.6 7. 9

15 I pray not that thou ſhouldeſt take them out of the worlde: but y thou keepe them from euill. 2.5.11

19 And for their ſakes ſanctifie I my ſelfe, that they alſo may be ſanctified through thy truth. 2.13.14.& 2.15. 6.& 2.17.6.& 3.11.12

21 That they all may be one, as thou father art in me, and I in thee, euen that they may be alſo one in vs: that the world may beleeue, that thou haſt

haſt ſent mee. 3.2.24
18.4 Then Ieſus knowing al thinges that ſhoulde come vnto him: went foorth, and ſaide vnto them: whom ſeeke ye? 2.16.5
36 Ieſus anſwered: my kingdome is not of this worlde, if my kingdome were of this worlde, my ſeruauntes would ſurely fight, that I ſhould not be deliuered to the Iewes: but nowe is my kingdom not from hence. 2.15. 3
37 Euerie one that is of trueth, heareth my voice. 4 2.4
38 Pilate ſaid vnto him, what is truth? and when hee had ſaide that, hee went out againe vnto the Iewes, & ſaide vnto them, I finde in him no cauſe at all. 2.16.5
19.30 Now when Ieſus had receiued of the viniger, he ſaid, it is finiſhed, &c. 4.18.3.13
34 But one of the ſouldiers, with a ſpeare, pearced his ſide, and foorthwith came there out bloud and water. 4 14.22
36 Not a bone of him ſhalbe broken. 1.16.9
20.8 Then went in alſo the other diſciple, which came firſt to the ſepulcre, and hee ſawe it and beleeued. 3 2.4
17 Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended to my father, &c. 2.12.2.& 4. 17.29
19 The ſame daye then at night, which was the firſt day of the weke, and when the doores were ſhutte where the diſciples were aſſembled for feare of the Iewes, came Ieſus & ſtoode in the middes, &c. 4.17.29
22 And when he had ſayde that, he breathed on them, and ſaide vnto them: receiue the holy Ghoſt. 4.19. 7.29
23 Whoſoeuers ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted vnto them: and whoſoeuers ſinnes ye retaine, they are retained. 3.4.10.& 4.1.22 & 4.2.10. & 4.6.3.& 4.6.4.& 4.8.4.& 4.11.1.& 4. 12.4
28 Thou art my Lord, and my God. 1.13.11
31 But theſe things are written, that ye might beleue, that Ieſus is Chriſt the ſonne of God, and that in beleeuing, ye migh haue life, &c. 3. 2.6
21.15 Simon ſonne of Joanna, loueſt thou mee more than theſe? he ſaide vnto him, yea Lord, thou knoweſt ỹ I loue thee: he ſaide vnto him, feede my lambes. 4.6.3.& 4.11.1.& 4.19 28
8 When thou waſt young, thou girdedſt thy ſelfe, & walkedſt whither thou wouldeſt, but when thou ſhalt be olde, &c. 3.8.10

ACTES.

1.3 TO whome alſo hee preſented himſelfe aliue after that hee had ſuffred by manye infallible tokens being ſeene of thé by the ſpace of fortie daies, & ſpeaking of thoſe thinges which appertained to the kingdome of God. 2.16.14.& 3.25.3. & 4.17.17
5 For John in deede baptiſed with water, but ye ſhall bee baptiſed with the holy Ghoſt, within theſe fewe daies. 4.15.18
8 But ye ſhall receiue power of the holy Ghoſt, when he ſhall come on you: and yee ſhall be witneſſes vnto me both in Ieruſalem, and in all Iudea, and in Samaria, and vnto the vttermoſt part of the earth. 4.3.12.& 4.19.28
9 And when hee had ſpoken theſe thinges while they beheld, he was taken vp, for a cloude tooke him out of their ſight. 2.16.14 & 3.25.1.& 4-

17.17.&4.17.27

10 Beholde two men ſtoode by them in white apparel. 1.14.6

11 This Ieſus which is taken vp from you into heauen, ſhall ſo come, as ye haue ſeene him go into heauen. 1.14 6.& 2.16.17.&4.17.24.27

15 And in thoſe daies Peter ſtood vp in the middes of the diſciples, and ſaid (now the number of names that were in one place, were about an hundred and twentie) 4.3.15

23 And they preſented two, Joſeph called Barſabas, whoſe ſurname was Juſtus, and Matthias. 4.3.13.&4.3. 14

26 Then they gaue forth their lotts: and the lot fel on Matthias, and hee was by a common conſent counted with the eleuen Apoſtles. 4.3.15

2.3 And there appeared vnto them clouen tongues, like fire, and it ſate vpon ech of them. 4.15.8

4 And they were all filled with the holy Ghoſt, and beganne to ſpeake with their tongues. 4.19.8

21 Whoſo euer ſhall call on the name of the Lorde, ſhalbe ſaued. 1. 13.20

23 Him, I ſay, haue ye taken by the handes of the wicked, beeing deliuered by the determinate counſell and foreknowledge of God, & haue crucified and ſlaine. 1.18.1.& 3.12. 6

24 Whom God hath raiſed vp, & loſed the ſorrowes of death, becauſe it was vnpoſſible, that he ſhoulde bee holden of it. 2.26.11.& 2.16.12

33 Since then that hee by the right hand of God hath been exalted, & hath receiued of his father the promiſe of the holy Ghoſte, hee hath ſhed foorth this which yee nowe ſee and heare. 2.16.15

37 Men, and brethren, what ſhall we doe? 3.3.4.& 4.16.23

38 Amende your liues, and be baptiſed euerie one of you in the name of Ieſus Chriſt, for the remiſſion of ſinnes: and yee ſhall receiue the gift of the holie Ghoſt. 4.15.7.& 4.16.23

39 For the promiſe is made vnto you, and your children, and to all ỳ are a farre off, euen as many as the Lord our God ſhall call. 4.16.15

41 Then they ỳ gladly receiued his worde, were baptiſed: and the ſame day, there were added to the church about three thouſande ſoules. 4.15. 7.& 4.17.6

42 And they continued in the Apoſtles doctrine, and fellowſhippe, and breaking of bread, and praiers. 4.17. 5.& 4.17.35.& 4.17.44

3.6 Then ſaide Peter: Siluer & golde haue I none, but ſuch as I haue, that giue I thee: in the name of Ieſus chriſt of Nazareth, riſe vp and walke. 1.13.13.& 4 19.18

15 And yee killed the Lorde of life, whome God hath raiſed from the deade, whereof we are witneſſes. 2. 17.1

18 But thoſe thinges which God before had ſhewed by the mouth of al his prophets, that Chriſt ſhould ſuffer, &c. 1.18.1

19 Amend your liues therefore, and turne, that your ſinnes may bee put away, &c. 3.3.20

21 Whome the heauen muſt containe vntill the time that all thinges be reſtored, which God hath ſpoké by the mouth of all his Prophetes. ſince the worlde began. 2.16.15.& 4. 17.29

25 Yee are the children of the prophets, and of the couenant, which God hath made vnto our fathers, &c. 2.10.23.& 4.16.15

26 Firſt, vnto you God hath raiſed vp his ſonne Ieſus, and him hee hath ſent to bleſſe you, in turning euerie euerie one of you from your iniquities. 3.3.20

4.12 Neither is there saluation in any other: for among men there is giuen none other name vnder heauen, whereby wee must be saued. 2. 16.1

28 To doe whatsoeuer thine hande and thy counsell had determined before to be done. 1.18.1.& 1.18. 3

32 And the multitude of them that beleeued, were of one hart & of one soule:&c. 4.1.3

5.4 Thou hast not lied vnto men, but vnto God. 1.13.15

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities rounde about vnto Jerusalem, bringing sicke folkes, and them which were vexed with vncleane spirites, who were all healed. 4.19.18

29 Wee ought rather to obey God than men. 3.3.19

31 Him hath God lift vp with his right hande, to be a prince and a sauiour, to giue repentance to Israell, and forgiuenesse of sinnes. 3.3.19

41 So they departed from the counsell, reioycing that they were counted worthie to suffer rebuke for his name. 3 8.7

6.1 And in those dayes, as the number of the Disciples grewe, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians towardes the Hebrewes, because that their widowes were neglected in the daylie ministring. 3.2.6

2 Then the twelue called the multitude of the Disciples together, & saide: It is not meete that we should leaue the word of God to serue the tables. 3.2.6. and 4.3.15. and 4. 11.9

3 Wherefore brethren, looke you out among you seuen mē of honest report, &c. 4 3 9

6 And they prayed, and laide their hands on them. 4.3.16

7 And the worde of God increased and the number of the disciples was multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, &c. 3.2.6

10 But they were not able to resiste the wisedome, and the spirit by the which he spake. 3.3.22

7.5 And hee gaue him none inheritance in it, no, not the breadth of a foote: &c. 2.10.1.3

28 Wilt thou kill mee, as thou diddest the Egyptian yesterday? 4.20. 10

44 Our fathers had the tabernacle of witnesse in the wildernesse, as he had appointed, speaking vnto Moses, that hee shoulde make it according to the fashion that hee had seene. 2.7.1

48 The most high dwelleth not in temples made with hands, &c. 3.20. 30.& 4.1.5

53 Which haue receiued the lawe by the ordinaunce of angels, and haue not kept it. 1.14 9

55 But he being ful of the holy ghost looked stedfastly into heauen, and saw the glorie of God, & Iesus standing at the right hande of God. 3. 25.3.& 4.17.17.& 4.17.29

56 And said: behold, I see ȳ heauens open, and the sonne of man stāding at the right hand of God. 2. 16.15.& 4.17.29

59 And they stoned Steuen, who called on God, and saide, Lorde Iesus receiue, &c. 1.13.13.& 1.15.2.& 3.25. 6

8.13 Then Simon himselfe beleeued also, and was baptised, and continued with Philip, and woundred when hee sawe the signes, &c. 3.2. 10

14 They sent vnto them Peter and John. 4.6.7.& 4.15.8

15 Which when they were come downe, prayed for them, that they might receiue the holye ghoſt. 4. 19.6

16 For as yet he was come downe on none of them, but they were baptiſed onely in the name of the Lord Ieſus. 4.15.6.&4.19.8

17 Then laide they their handes on them, and they receiued the holye Ghoſt. 4.15.8.&4.19.31

18 And when Simon ſawe, ẏ through laying on of the Apoſtls hands, the hol, Ghoſt was giuen, hee offered them money. 3.2.10

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedneſſe, and pray God, that if it bee poſſible, the thought of thine harte may be forgiuen thee. 4.1.26

27 And he aroſe, and went on: and behold, a certaine Eunuch of Ethiopia, Candaſes Queene of the Ethiopians chiefe gouernour, who had the rule of all her treaſure, & came to Ieruſalem to woorſhip. 3.2.32

31 And he ſaide howe can I, except I had a guide? &c. 3.2.32

37 And Philip ſaid vnto him, if thou beleeueſt with all thy hearte, thou maiſt, &c. 4.14.8.&4.16.23

38 And they went downe both of them into the water, both Philip and the Eunuche, and he baptiſed him. 4.16.22.&4.16.31

9.1 And Saul yet breathing out threatninges, and ſlaughter againſt the diſciples of the Lorde, &c. 3.2.6

3 Now as he iourneyed, it came to paſſe, that as hee was come neere to Damaſcus, ſuddenlye there ſhined rounde about him a light from heauen. 4.17.17

4 And he fel to the earth, and heard a voice, ſaying vnto him: Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou mee? 3.25.3.& 4.17.29

6 Ariſe and goe into the citie, and it ſhall bee tolde thee what thou ſhalt doe 4.3.3

10 And there was a certaine diſciple at Damaſcus named Ananias, and to him ſaide the Lorde in a viſion, Ananias, and he ſaide, beholde, I am here, Lorde. 3.2.6

13 Lorde, I haue hearde by many of this man, howe much eueil he hath done to thy ſaintes at Ieruſalem. 1. 13.13

14 Moreouer here he hath authoritie of the high prieſtes, to bind all that call on thy name, 1.13.13

15 He is a choſen veſſel vnto mee, &c, 4.3.5

17 Then Ananias went his way, and entered into the houſe, and put his handes on him, and ſaide, brother Saul, the Lorde hath ſent me (euen Ieſus that appeared vnto thee in the way as thou cameſt) ẏ thou mighteſt receiue thy ſight, &c. 4.19. 10

19 So was Saul certaine dayes with the diſciples which were at Damaſcus. 3.2.6

25 Then the diſciples tooke him by night, & put him through the wall, and let him downe in a basket. 3.2. 6

36 There was alſo at Ioppa, a certayne woman, a Diſciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called Dorcas: ſhee was full of good workes and almes which ſhee did. 3.2.6

38 Nowe foraſmuch as Lidda was neere to Ioppa, & the diſciples had heard that Peter was there, they ſent vnto him two men, &c. 3.2.6

40 But Peter put them all foorth, and kneeled downe, and prayed, &c. 4. 19.2

10.2 A deuout man, & one that feared God with all his houſholde which gaue much almes to the people, ple,&c. 3.24 10

3 He saw in a vision euidently (about the ninth houre of the day) an Angel of God comming in to him, &c. 4.3.3
15 And it came to passe as Peter came in, that Cornelius mette him, and fell downe at his feete, and worshipped him. 1.12.3
31 And said, Cornelius thy prayer is heard, & thine almes are had in remembrance in the sight of God. 3.2. 32
34 Of a truth I perceiue, that God is no accepter of persons. 3.17.4 & 3. 23.10
42 And he commanded vs to preach vnto the people, and to testifie, that it is hee that is ordained of God a iudge of quicke and dead. 2.16.17
43 To him also giue all the prophets witnesse, that through his name all that beleeue in him shal receiue remission of sinnes. 3 4.25.& 3.5.2
44 While Peter yet spak these words, ỹ holy ghost fell on all them whiche heard the word. 4.16.31
48 So he commaunded them to bee baptised in the name of the Lorde, &c. 4.15.15
11.3 Thou wentest in to men vncircumcised, & hast eaten with them. 4.6.7
4 Theu Peter begā, & expounded the thing in order to them. 4.6.7
16 Then I remembred the worde of the Lord, how he said John baptised with water, but you shalbe baptised with the holy Ghost. 4.15.18
18 When they hearde these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying: Then hath God also to the Gentiles, graunted repentance vnto life. 3.3.21
26 Insomuch, that the disciples were first called Christians in Antiochia. 3.2.6.& 4.16.31
29 Then the disciples euery man according to his abilitie, purposed to sende succour, &c. 3.2.6
12.15 Then said they, it is his Angell. 1.14.7
13.2 Separate me Barnabas, and Saul, for the worke wherunto I haue called them. 4.3.14
3 Then fasted they, and prayed, and laid their hands on them, & let thē go. 4.3.15.& 4.12.14.& 4.12.16
36 Howbeit, Dauid after he had serued his time, by the coūsell of God he slept, and was laide with his father, and sawe corruption. 3.20.23
38 Be it knowen vnto you therefore men and brethren, that through this man is preached vnto you the forgiuenes of sinnes. 3.11.3. & 3.11. 22
39 And from al things, from which ye could not be iustified by the lawe of Moses, by him euerie one that beleeueth, is iustified. 2.17.5.& 3.11. 3
43 Which spake to them, and exhorted them to continue in the grace of God. 2.5.8
48 And when the Gentiles heard it, they were glade, and glorified the word of the Lorde: and as many as were ordained vnto eternall life, beleeued. 3.2.11.& 3.14.2.13
52 And the disciples were filled with ioy, and with the holy ghost. 3.2.6
14.16 Who in times past suffered all the Gentiles to walke in their own waies. 1.5.13.& 2.11.11
20 Howbeit, as the disciples stoode rounde about him, he arose vp, and came into the citie, &c. 3.2.6
22 We must through many afflictions enter into the kingdome of God. 3. 8.1.& 3.18.7.& 3.2.8
23 And when they had ordayned them elders by election in euerie Church, and prayed, & fasted: they commended them to the Lorde, in whom they beleeued. 4.3.7.12.15.& 4.12.16

15.7 And when there had beene great disputation, Peter rose vp, and saide vnto them: Ye mē & brethren, ye knowe that a good while ago, among vs, God chose out me, &c. 4.6. 7

9 And he put not difference betweene vs and them after that by faith hee had purged, &c. 3.14.8.& 4.14.4

10 Nowe therefore why tempt yee God, and lay a yoke on the disciples neckes? &c. 3.2.6

11 But we beleeue, through the grace of the lord Iesus Christ, to be saued, euen as they do. 3.5.4

20 But that we write vnto them, that they abstaine them selues from filthinesse of idols, and fornication, and that that is strangled, &c 4.10. 17.21

29 That is, that ye abstaine frō things offered to idols, &c. 4.10.17

16.1 Then came he to Derben and to Lystra: and behold, a certaine disciple was there, named Timotheus, a womans son, which was a Ieweſſe, and beleeued, &c. 3.2.6

3 Therefore Paul woulde that hee should goe foorth with him, and hee toke and circumcised him, because of the Iewes which were in those quarters, &c. 3.19.12

14 And a certaine woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the citie of the Thyatirians, which worshipped God, &c. 3.24.13

15 And when shee was baptised, and her household, &c. 4.16.8

33 And was baptised with all that belonged vnto him straight way. 4.16. 8

37 Then saide Paule vnto them, after that they haue beatē vs openly vncondemned, which are Romanes, they haue cast vs into prison: & now would they put vs out priuily? nay verily: but let them come and bring vs out. 4.20.19

17.27 That they should seeke the lord, if so be they might haue groped after him, & found him, though doutlesse he be not farre from euery one of vs. 1.5.3.8.13

28 For in him we liue, and moue, and haue our being, as also certaine of your owne poets haue saide, for we are also his generation. 1.15.5.& 1. 16.1.4

29 Forasmuch then as we are the generatiō of god, we ought not think, that the Godhead is like vnto gold, or siluer, or stone, grauen by art and the inuention of man. 1.11.2

30 And the time of this ignoraunce God regarded not, but now hee admonisheth all men euery where to repent. 3.3.7

32 Nowe when they heard of the resurrectiō from the dead, some mocked, &c. 3.25.7

18.18 After that hee had shorne his head in Cenchrea for he had a vowe. 4.19.26

23 Strengthening all the disciples. 3. 2.6

19.1 And found certaine disciples, and saide vnto them, &c. 3.2.6

3 Vnto what were ye baptised? and they saide vnto Iohns baptisme. 4.15 8.18

4 John verily baptised with the baptisme of repentance, saying vnto the people, that they should beleeue in him which should come after him, &c. 4.15.7

5 So when they hearde it, they were baptised in the name of the Lorde Iesus. 4.15.6.8.18

6 And Paul laid his hands vpon thē, & the holy ghost came vpon them, and they spake with tongues, and prophecied

prophecied. 4.3.15
12 So that frō his body were brought vnto the sick kerchifes or handkerchifes, & the diseases departed frō them, and the euil spirites went out of them. 4.19.18
13 Then certaine of the vacabonde Iewes exorcistes, tooke in hande to name ouer them which had euil spirits, the name of the Lord Iesus, saying: we adiure you by Iesus, whome Paul preacheth. 4.19.24
20.1 Now after the tumult was ceassed, Paul called the disciples vnto him, and imbraced them, &c. 3.2.6
10 But Paul went downe, and layde himselfe vppon him, and embraced him, saying: trouble not your selues, for his life is in him. 4.19.19
17 Wherefore from Miletum he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the Church. 4.3.8
18 Ye know from the first daye that I came to Asia, after what manner I haue beene with you at all seasons. 4.3.7
20 And howe I kept backe nothing that was profitable, but haue shewed you, & taught you openly, and throughout euerie house. 4.1.22.& 4.3.6.& 4.12.2
21 Witnessing both to the Iewes & to the Grecians, the repentaunce towarde God, & faith towardes our Lorde Iesus Christ. 3.2.1.& 3.3.2.5
26 Wherefore I take you to recorde this day, that I am pure from the bloud of all men. 4.4.3.& 4.12.2
28 Take heede therefore vnto your selues, and to all the flocke, whereof the holy Ghost hath made you ouerseers, to feed the Church of god which he hath purchased with his owne blood. 2.14.2.& 3.5.2.& 3.11.8.& 3.13.11.& 4.3.8.& 4.5.8
29 For I knowe this, that after my departing, shall grieuous wolues enter in among you, not sparing the flocke. 4.19.4
30 Moreouer, of your owne selues shall men arise, speaking peruerse thinges, to draw disciples after the. 4.19.4
31 Therefore watch, and remember that by the space of three yeeres I ceased not to warne euerie one night and day with teares. 4.13.6
36 And when hee had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them al. 4.19.2
21.4 And when wee had founde disciples, wee taried there seuen daies. 3.12.6
22.1 Yee men, brethren, & fathers, heare my defence nowe towardes you. 3.20.19
16 Arise and be baptised, and washe away thy sinnes, in calling on the name of the Lord. 4.15.15
18 And I sawe him saying vnto mee: make haste and get thee quickely out of Ierusalem, for they will not receiue thy witnesse concerning me. 4.17.17.29
25 And as they bounde him with thonges, Paul saide vnto the Centurion that stoode by, is it lawful for you to scourge one y is a Romane, and not condemned? 4.20.19
23.1 And Paul beholde earnestly the councel, and said: Men & brethren, I haue in al good conscience serued God vntill this day. 3.17.14
8 For the Sadduces saide, that there is no resurrection, neither Angell, nor spirite, &c. 1.14.9.& 1.15.2.& 2.10.23.& 3.25.5
12 And when the daye was come, certaine of the Iewes made an assemblie, and bound themselues with an oth, saying, that they would neither eate nor drinke, till they had killed

Paule 4.13.5
24.12 And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man neither making vprore among the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the citie, 4.20.19
15 And haue hope towardes God, ẏ the resurrection of the dead which they themselues looke for also, shall be both of iust and vniust. 3.25.9
16 And herein I endeuour my selfe to haue alway a cleare conscience towardes God, and towardes men. 3.19.16.& 4.10.4
25.10 Then saide Paul: I stande at Cesars iudgement seate, where I ought to be iudged: To the Iewes I haue done no wrong, as thou verie well knowest. 4.20.19
11 For if I haue done wrong, or committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if ther be none of these things whereof they accuse me, no man can deliuer mee vnto them: I appeale vnto Cesar. 4.20.19
26.17 Deliuering thee from the people, & from the Gentiles, vnto whō now I send thee. 3.2.1
18 To open their eies, ẏ they may turne from darkenesse to light, and from the power of Satan vnto God that they may receiue forgiuenesse of sinnes, and inheritance among them, which are sanctified by faith in me. 3.2.1
20 But shewed first vnto them of Damascus, and at Ierusalem, & through out all the coast of Iudea, and then to the Gentiles, that they shoulde repent, and turne to God, and doe works worthie amendement of life. 3.3.5
28.15 And from thence, when the brethren hearde of vs they came to meete vs. 4.6.17
16 So when we came to Rome, the Centurion deliuered the prisoners to the generall captaine, &c 4.6.15
25 Well spake the holie Ghost by Esaias the prophet, vnto our fathers. 1.13.15

ROMANES.

1.1 Paul a seruaunt of Iesus Christe, called to bee an Apostle, put apart to preach the Gospell of God. 2.14.6.& 4.3.10
2 Which hee had promised before by his prophets in the holye scriptures. 2.10.3
3 Concerning his sonne Iesus Christ our Lord which was made of ẏ seed of Dauid, according to the flesh. 2.13.3.& 2.14.6
4 And declared mightily to bee the sonne of God, touching the spirit of sanctification by the resurrection from the deade. 2.16.13.& 4.19.22
5 By whom we haue receiued grace and Apostleship, ẏ obedience might be giuen vnto the faith in his name among all the Gentils. 3.2.6.& 3.2.8 & 3.2.29
7 Grace bee with you, & peace from God our father, and from the Lord Iesus Christ. 1.13.13
9 For God is my witnesse, whome I serue in my spirite in the Gospell of his sonne; that without ceassing I make mention of you. 2.8.27
16 For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God vnto saluation to euerie one ẏ beleeueth, to the Iewe first, & also to the Grecian. 2.9.4.& 2.10.3.& 3.2.29. & 4.1.5
17 For by it the righteousnesse of God is reuealed, from faith to faith: as it is written, the iust shall liue by faith. 3.2.19.32.& 3.11.19 19 Forasmuch as that, which may be knowen to God, is manifest in the: for for God hath shewed it vnto them. 2.5.1.13

21 Because that when they knewe God, they glorified him not as God neither were thankful, but became vaine in their imaginations, &c. 1.5.12

22 When they professed themselues to bee wise, they became fooles. 1.4.1

28 For as they regarded not to knowe God, euen so God deliuered them vp vnto a reprobate minde, to doe those thinges which are not conuenient. 1.18.2

6 Who will rewarde euerie man according to his workes. 3.16,3.& 3.18.1

11 For there is no respect of persons with God. 3.23.10

12 For as many as haue sinned without the lawe, shall perishe also without the law, & as many as haue sinned in the lawe, shalbe iudged by the lawe. 2.2.22

13 For the hearers of the law are not righteous before God, but the doers of the law shalbe iustified. 3.11.15.&3.17.13

14 For when the Gentiles which haue not the law, do by nature the things contained in the lawe, they hauing not the lawe, &c. 2.2.22

15 Which shew the effect of the law written in their harts, their conscience also bearing them witnesse, & thoughtes accusing one another, &c. 3.19.15.& 4.10.3

25 If thou bee a transgressour of the lawe, thy circumcision is made vncircumcision. 4.14.24

3.4 Yea, let God be true, & euerie mã a lier, &c. 4.15.17

9 What then? are we more excellent? no, in no wise, for we haue alreadie proued, that all, both Iewes & Gentiles are vnder sinne. 3.4.6

10 As it is written: there is none righteous, no not one. 2.1.9.& 2.3.2. & 2.5 3

12 There is none that doth good, no not one. 2.3.3

15 Their feete are swift to shedde bloud, &c. 2.3.3

19 Nowe we knowe, that whatsoeuer the lawe saith, it saieth it to thẽ that be vnder the law: that euery mouth may be stopped, & all the world bee culpable before God. 2.7.8 & 2.10.3. &3.4.6

20 Therefore by the workes of the lawe, shall no flesh be iustified in his sight: For by the lawe commeth the knowledge of sinne. 2.5.6.&2.7.7. &3.11.19

22 But now is the righteousnesse of God made manifest without the law, hauing witnesse of the lawe, & of the Prophetes. 2.9.4.& 2.10.3.&3 11.18.19

24 And are iustified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Iesus. 1.5.3.& 2.16.5.& 2.17.5. &3.4.30.& 3.11.4.19.& 3.15.6.&3. 20.45

25 Whom God hath set foorth to be a reconciliation through faith in his bloude, to declare his righteousnes, by the forgiuenesse of the sinnes, that are passed, through the pacience of God. 4.15.3

26 To shew at this time, his righteousnes, that he might be iuste, and a iustifier of him which is of the faith of Iesus. 3.11.12.& 3.13.1.& 3.13.2.& 3.14.17

27 Where is then thy reioicing? It is excluded. By what lawe? of workes? nay: but by the law of faith. 3.11.13. &3.13.2

4.2 For if Abraham were iustified by workes, hee hath wherein to reioyce, but not with God. 3.11.13.& 3.11.18

3 Abraham beleeued God, & it was counted to him for righteousnesse. 3.17.8.10

4 Now to him that worketh, the wages is not counted by fauour, but by debt, 3.11.20

5 But to him that worketh not, but beleeueth in him that iustifieth ỹ vngodly, his faith is counted for righteousnesse. 3.11.3.6

6 Euen as Dauid declareth the blessednesse of the man, vnto whome God imputeth righteousnes without workes, saying: 2.17.5.& 3.11.4. 20.22

7 Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiuen, and whose sinnes are couered, 3.11.11

10 Howe was it then imputed? when he was circumcised, or vncircumcised? &c. 4.16.3

11 After he receiued the signe of circumcision, as the seale of the righteousnes of the faith which he had, when he was vncircumcised, &c. 4. 14.5.21.23.& 4.16.20

12 And the father of circumcision, not vnto them onely which are of the circumcision, &c. 4.16.12

13 For the promise ỹ he shoulde bee the heire of the world, was not giuē to Abraham, or to his seede, through the lawe, but through the righteousnes of faith. 3.14.11

14 For if they which are of the lawe, be heires, faith is made voide, and the promise is made of none effect. 3.11.11.& 3.13.3

15 For the lawe causeth wrath: for where no lawe is, there is no transgression. 2.7.7.& 3.11.19

17 As it is written: I haue made thee a father of many nations, euen before God whome hee beleeued, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those thinges which be not as though they were. 2.10.11.& 3. 2.15.& 3.14.5

21 And being ful certified that what he had promised he was able also to performe, 3.2.31

25 Who was deliuered to death for our sinnes, and is risen againe for our iustification. 2.16.5.& 2.16.13.& 2.17.5

5.1 Then being iustified by faith, we haue peace towarde God through our Lorde Iesus Christ. 3.2.16.& 3.13.5

3 Knowing that tribulation bringeth forth pacience, &c. 3.8.3

5 And hope maketh not ashamed, because the loue of God is shed abroade in our hearres by the holye Ghost, which is giuen vnto vs. 3.1.2. & 3.2.12

8 But God setteth out his loue toward vs, seeing that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs. 2.12. 4.& 2.16.4.& 3.4.25

9 Much more then, being nowe iustified by his blood, wee shalbe saued from wrath through him. 2. 16.5

10 For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his sonne, much more being reconciled, wee shalbe saued by his life. 2.16.2.4.5.& 2.17.3.6.& 3.11. 21.& 3.14.6

12 As by one man sinne entred into the worlde, and death by sinne, and so death went ouer all men, forasmuch as al men haue sinned. 2.1.6. 8.& 2.13.4

15 But yet the gift is not so, as is the offence: for if through the offence of one many be deade, much more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which by one mā Iesus christ, &c. 3.5.4

16 Neither is the gift so, as ỹ which entred in by one that sinned: for the fault came of one offence vnto con-condemnatiō, but the gift is of many offences to iustification. 2.17.3

19 For as by one mans disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many also be made righteous. 2.1.4.& 2.16.5.& 2.17.3. and 3.11.9.12.23. and 4.14. 21
20 Moreouer, the law entred therevpō, that ỹ offence should abounde: neuertheleſſe, where sinne abounded, there grace abounded muche more. 2.5.6.& 2.7.7
6.3 Knowe ye not, that all we which haue ben baptiſed into Ieſus Christ haue beene baptiſed into his death? 4.15.5
4 Wee are buried then with him in baptiſme into his death, that like as Christ was raiſed vp from the dead by the glorie of the father, so we also ſhould walke in newneſſe of life. 2.8.31.& 2.16.7.13.& 3.3.5.& 4.16.16.21. & 4.19.8
6 Knowing this, that our olde man is crucified with him, that the body of ſinne might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerue ſin 3.3.9.11
12 Let not ſinne therefore reigne in your mortal body, that yee ſhoulde obaye in the luſtes thereof. 3.3.13
14 For ſinne ſhal not haue dominion ouer you: for ye are not vnder the lawe, but vnder grace. 3.19.6.& 4.15. 12
18 Being then made free frō ſinne, ye are made the ſeruants of righteouſneſſe. 3.6.3.& 3.16.2
19 I ſpeake after the maner of men, becauſe of the infirmity of your fleſh for as ye haue giuen your members ſeruants to vncleanneſſe, and to iniquitie, to commit iniquitie, &c. 3.24. 26.& 3.25.8
23 For the wages of ſinne is death: but the gift of God is eternall life through Ieſus Chriſt our Lorde. 2.8. 58.59.& 3.4.28.& 3.14.21
7.1 Knowe ye not brethren, for I ſpeak to them that knowe the lawe, that the lawe hath dominion ouer a man as long as hee liueth? 4.15. 12
7 What ſhall we ſay then? is the law ſinne? God forbid. Nay I knowe not ſinne but by the lawe: &c. 2.5.6.& 2. 7 6
12 Wherefore the lawe is holy, and the cōmaundement is holy, and iuſt and good. 2.9.4
14 For we knowe that the law is ſpirituall, &c. 2.8.6
15 For I allowe not that which I doe: for what I would that doe I not, but what I hate that doe I. 2.2.27
18 For I knowe, that in mee, that is, in my fleſh, dwelleth no good thing: for to will is preſent with me, &c. 2. 1.9
19 For I do not the good thing, which I woulde, but the euill, which I would not, that doe I. 2.2.27.& 3.3. 11
20 Nowe if I doe that I would not, it is no more I that doe it, but the ſin that dwelleth in me. 2.2.27
23 But I ſee an other law in my mēbers, rebelling againſt the lawe of my minde, and leading me captiue into the law of ſinne, which is in my members. 3.3.14
24 O wretched man that I am, who ſhal deliuer me frō the body of this death? 3.9.4.& 3.11.12.& 4.15. 12
8.1 Nowe then there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſte Ieſus, which walke not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirite. 3.4.28.& 4. 15.12
3 For that that was impoſſible to the law, in as much as it was weake becauſe of the fleſhe, God ſending his his owne sonne, in the similitude of sinfull flesh, and for sinne, condemned sinne in the flesh. 2.7.5. & 2.12.4. & 2.13.1.4. & 2.16.6. & 3.2.32. & 3.4. 27. & 3.11.23

6 For the wisedome of the flesh is death: but the wisedome of the spirite is life and peace. 2.3.1

7 Because the wisedome of the flesh is enmitie against God: for it is not subiect to the lawe of God, neither in deed can be. 2.1.9. & 3.9.8. & 3 20.

9 Nowe ye are not in the flesh but in the spirite, because the spirite of God dwelleth in you: but if any man hath not the spirit of Christ, the same is not his. 3.1.2. and 3.2.39. & 4.17. 12

10 And if Christ be in you, the bodye is dead because of sinne: but the spirit is life for righteousnes sake. 2.1.6. & 3.1.3. & 3.2.24. & 3.25.3. & 4.17.12.

11 But if the spirit of him that raised vp Iesus from the dead, dwel in you, hee that raised vp Christ from the dead, shal also quicken your mortall bodies, because that his spirit dwelleth in you. 1.13.18. & 3.1.2. & 3.2.39. & 3.25.3.8. & 4.17.12

14 For as many as are led by the spirite of God, they are the sonnes of God. 3.2.39

15 For ye haue not receiued the spirite of bondage, to feare againe: but ye haue receiued the spirit of adoption, &c. 2.11.9. & 2.14.5. & 3.1.3. & 3. 2.11. & 3.13.5. & 3.20.1. & 3.24.2. & 4. 19.22

16 The same spirite beareth witnesse with our spirite, that wee are the children of God. 3.2.39

17 If wee bee children, wee are also heires, euen the heires of God, and heires annexed with Christ, &c. 2. 12.2

19 For the feruent desire of the creature, waiteth when the sonnes of God shalbe reuealed. 3.9.5. & 3.25. 12

20 Because the creature is subiect to vanitie, not of it owne will, &c. 2.1. 5

22 For we know that euerie creature groneth with vs also, & traueileth in paine together vnto this present. 2.1.5. & 3.15.2

23 And not onely the creature, but we also which haue the first fruites of the spirite, euen wee doe sigh in our selues, waiting for the adoptiō, euen the redemption of our bodie. 3.18.3. & 3 25.11

24 For we are saued by hope: but hope that is seene, is no hope, &c. 2.9. 3

25 But if we hope for that we see not, we doe with patience abide for it. 3. 2.41.42. & 3.25.1

26 Likewise the spirite also helpeth our infirmities: for wee knowe not what to pray as we ought, &c. 3.20. 5

27 But he that searcheth the hearts knoweth what is the meaning of the spirit, for he maketh request for the saincts, &c. 3.20.5.34

29 For those which hee knewe before, he also predestinat to be made like to the image of his sonne, that he might bee the first borne among many brethren. 2.13.2. & 3.11.3. & 3.8.1. and 3.15.8. and 3 .18 7. and 3 . 24.1

30 Moreouer, whom he did predestinate, them also he called: And whō he called, them also he iustified: And whom he iustified, &c. 2.5.2. and 3. 14.21. and 3.18.4. and 3.24.6

32 Who spared not his owne sonne, but gaue him for vs all to death, howe shall he not with him giue vs all things also? 2.14.7. and 2.17.6. & 3.24.5

33 Who

33 Who shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods chosen? it is God that iustifieth. 3.21.3.6.11

34 Who shall condemne? it is Christ that is dead, yea or rather which is risen againe, who is also at the right hand of God, &c. 2.16.13. & 2.16.16. & 2.16.18. & 3.20.20.

35 Who shall separate vs from the loue of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or famine, or nakednesse, or peril, or sworde? 3.13.5. & 3.12.28

36 For thy sake are we killed all the day long, wee are counted as sheepe for the slaughter. 3.9.6. & 3.25.3. & 3.14.19

38 For I am perswaded, that neither death, nor life, nor Angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor thinges present, nor things to come 3.2.16. & 3.2.40. & 3.15.8. & 3.24. 6

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor anye other creature shalbe able to separate vs from the loue of god, which is in Christ Iesus our Lord. 3.2.16. 28.40

9.3 For I would wish my selfe to bee separated from Christ, for my brethren that are my kinsmen according to the flesh. 3.20.35

5 Of whom are the fathers, and of whom concerning the flesh Christ came, who is God ouer all blessed for euer, Amen. 1.13.11. & 2.13.1.3. & 2.14.6

6 For al they are not Israelites, which are of Israel. 3.22.4. & 4.2 3

7 Neither are they all children, because they are the seede of Abraham: But in Isaac shall thy seede bee called. 3.21.7. & 4.16.14

8 That is, they which are the children of the flesh, are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are accounted for the seede. 3.21.7

11 For ere the children were borne, & when they had done neither good nor euill, that the purpose of God might remaine according to election, not by works, but by him that calleth. 3.22.4

12 It was said vnto her, the elder shal serue the younger. 3.2.25

13 As it is written, I haue loued Jacob, and haue hated Esau. 3.21.7. & 3.22.11

14 What shall we say then? is there vnrighteousnesse with God? God forbid? 3.22.8

15 I will haue mercie on him to whō I will shewe mercy: & I will haue cōpassion on him to whom I will haue compassion. 3.22.6

16 So then it is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercy. 2.5.4. 17. & 3.24.1

17 For this same purpose haue I stirred thee vp, that I might shewe my power in thee, &c. 3.24.14

18 Therefore hee hath mercy on whō he will, and whom he will he hardeneth. 2.18.1. and 3.22.11

20 But, O man, who art thou that pleadest against God? & c. 3.23.1.4. & 3.24.16

21 Hath not the potter power of the clay to make of the same lump, &c. 3.17.5

22 What and if God woulde, to shewe his wrath, and to make his power knowen, suffer with long patience the vessels of wrath? &c. 2.14. 18. and 3.23.1

24 Euen vs, whom he hath called, not of the Iewes onely, but also of the gentiles. 3.24.16

32 For they haue stumbled at the stumbling stone. 1.13.23

33 Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling stone, and a rocke of offence. 1.10.11

And whosoeuer beleeueth on him, shal not be confounded. 1.13.13 10.3 For they being ignorant of the righteousnesse of God, and going about to establish their owne righteousnesse, &c. 3.11.13
4 For Christ is the ende of the law, for righteousnesse vnto euerie one that beleeueth. 1.6.2.&2.6.4.&2.7.2.&3.2.6.&4.8.13
5 That the mā that doth these things shal liue therby. 3.11.14.17.&3.17.3
6 But the righteousnesse of faith speaketh on this wise: Saye not in thy heart, who shall ascende into heauen? &c. 1.17.2
7. Or, who shal descende into the deepe? that is, to bring Christ again from the deade. 1.17.2
8 This is the worde of faith whiche we preach. 2.5.12.&3.2.29.30.&4.14.14
9 For if thou shalt confesse with thy mouth the Lorde Iesus, and shalt beleeue in, &c. 3.11.14
10 For with the heart man beleeueth vnto righteousnesse, and with the mouth man confesseth to saluation. 3.2.2.8
11 Whosoeuer beleeueth in him, shall not be ashamed. 1.13.13
14 But how shall they call on him, in whom they haue not beleeued; &c. 3.20.1.11
17 Then faith is by hearing, and hearing, &c. 3.20.27.& 4.1.5.& 4.8.31. &4.8.9.&4.16.19
11.2 God hath not cast away his people which he knewe before, &c. 3.22.6
4 But what saith the aunswere of God to him? I haue reserued vnto my selfe seuen thousand men, which haue not bowed the knee to Baal, 4.1.2
5 Euen so then at this present time, is there a remnant, through the election of grace. 3.21.1
6 And if it be of grace, it is no more of workes: or else were grace no more grace, &c. 3.14.5
16 For if the first fruits be holy, so is the whole lumpe, and if the roote be holy, so are the branches. 4.16.15
17 And though some of the branches be broken off, & thou being a wilde Oliue tree, wast graft in for them, and made partaker of the roote, & fatnesse of the Oliue tree. 3.1.1
20 Well, through vnbeleefe they are broken off, & thou stādest by faith be not high minded, but feare. 2.3.22.&3.24.6
26 And so all Israel shalbe saued, as it is written: The deliuerer shall come out of Sion, and shall turne away the vngodlinesse from Iacob. 3.3.21
29 For the giftes and calling of God are without repentance. 4.16.14
32 For God hath shut vp all in vnbeleefe, that he might haue mercie on all 2.7.8.&3.23.11.&3.24.16
33 O the deepenes of the riches both of the wisedome and knowledge of God: howe vnsearchable are his iudgementes, and his waies paste finding out? 1.17.2.&3.23.5
34 For who hath knowen the minde of the Lorde? or who was his counseller? &c. 3.2.34. &4.18.19.and 4.19.2
35 Or who hath giuen vnto him first and he shalbe recompenced? 3.14.5. &3.22.3.&3.23.11
36 For of him, & through him, and for him, are all things, &c. 2.8.13
12.1 I beseech you therfore brethrē, by the mercies of God, yee giue vp your bodies a liuing sacrifice, holy holy & acceptable vnto God which is your reasonable seruing of God. 3.7.1.& 3.16.3.& 4.18.16

2 And fashion not your selues like vnto this worlde, but be ye changed by the renewing of your minde, that yee may proue what is the will of God, good, & acceptable, and perfect. 2.1.9.& 4.16.4

3 As God hath delt to euerie man the measure of faith. 4.13.3.& 4.16.4.& 4.17.32

4 For as we haue many members in one body, and al members haue not one office. 3.16.2

Whether we haue prophcie, let vs prophecie according to the proportion of our faith. 4.16.4. and 4.17. 32

7 Or an office, let vs waite on the office, or he ỳ teacheth, on teaching. 4.3.8

8 Or he that exhorteth on exhortation: he that distributeth, let him do it with simplicitie: hee ỳ ruleth, with diligence: he that sheweth mercie, with cherefulnesse. 4.3.8.9.& 4 11.1. & 4.20.4

10 Be affectioned to loue one an other with brotherly loue: In giuing honour, goe one before an other. 3.7. 4

14 Blesse them that persecute you: blesse, I say, and curse not. 4.20. 20

19 Derely beloued, auenge not your selues, but giue place vnto wrath: for it is written: Vengeance is mine I will repay, saith the Lorde. 4.20. 19

21 Be not ouercome of euil, but ouercome euill with goodnesse. 4.20. 20

13.1 Let euerie soule be subiect vnto the higher powers: for there is no power but of God: and the powers that be, are ordained of God. 3.19. 15.& 4.10.3.5.& 4.20.4.7.13

4 For he is the minister of God for thy wealth: but if thou doe euill, feare: for he beareth not the sword for nought, for he is the minister of God, to take vẽgeance on him that doth euil. 4.20 10.& 4.20.17.& 4.20. 19

5 Wherefore ye must be subiect, not because of wrath onely, but also for conscience sake. 3.19.15.& 4.10.3.& 4.20.22

6 For, for this cause ye paye also tribute: for they are Gods ministers, applying themselues for the same thing. 4.20.13

8 Owe nothing to any man, but to loue one another: for hee ỳ loueth another, hath fulfilled the lawe. 2.8. 53

9 For this, thou shalt not committe adulterie, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not beare false witnesse, thou shalt not couet: and if there be any other commandement, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely: Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. 2.8. 57

14 But put ye on the Lord Iesus Christ, and take no thought for the flesh, to fulfil the lustes of it. 3.1.1.& 3.19. 3

14.1 Him that is weake in the faith, receiue vnto you, but not for controuersies of disputations. 3.19. 11

5 This man esteemeth one day aboue an other day, & an other man coũteth euerie day alike: let euerie man be fully perswaded in his mind. 2.8. 33

10 For we shall all appeare before the iudgement seate of Christ. 1.13.11. &3.5.8

11 For it is written I liue, sayeth the Lorde: And euerie knee shall bow to me,

And whosoeuer beleeueth on him, shal not be confounded. 1.13.13
10.3 For they being ignorant of the righteousnesse of God, and going about to establish their owne righteousnesse, &c. 3.11.13
4 For Christ is the ende of the law, for righteousnesse vnto euerie one that beleeueth. 1.6.2. & 2.6.4. & 2.7. 2. & 3.2.6. & 4.8.13
5 That the mā that doth these things shal liue therby. 3.11.14.17. & 3. 17.3

10 For we shall all appeare before the iudgement seate of Christ. 1.13.11. &3.5.8

11 For it is written I liue, sayeth the Lorde: And euerie knee shall bow to me, me, & al tongues shall confesse vnto God. 1.13.11.23.& 3.25.17

13 Let vs not therefore iudge one an other any more: but vse your iudgement rather in this, that no man put an occasiō to fal, or a stumbling blocke before his brother. 3.19. 11

14 I know, and am perswaded through the Lorde Iesus, that there is nothing vncleane of it selfe: but vnto him that iudgeth any thing to bee vncleane, to him it is vncleane. 3.19. 8

17 For the kingdome of God is not meate and drinke: but righteousnes and peace, and ioye in the holye ghost. 2.15.4

22 Hast thou faith? haue it with thy selfe before God: blessed is hee that condemneth not himselfe in that thing which he alloweth. 3.19.8

23 For he that doubteth is condemned if he eate, because hee eateth not of faith: and whatsoeuer is not of faith is sinne. 3.5.10.&.3.15.6.& 4. 13.17.& 4.15.22

15.1 We which are strong, ought to beare the infirmities of the weake and not to please our selues. 3.19. 11

5 Now the God of patience and conlation, graunt that you be like minded one towardes an other, according to Christ Iesus. 4.2.5

6 That ye with one minde and with one mouth may praise God, euen the father of our Lord Iesus Christ. 3.20.29.31

8 Now I say, that Iesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision, for the truth of God, to confirme the promises made vnto the fathers. 3.2. 32.& 4.16.15

12 There shall be a roote of Iesse, & he that shall rise to reigne ouer the Gentiles, in him shall the Gentiles, trust. 1 13.13

19 So that from Ierusalem, & rounde about vnto Illyricum, I haue caused to abounde the Gospel of Christ, 4.3.4

20 Yea, so I enforced my selfe to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, &c. 4.3.4

25 But now go I to Ierusalem, to minister vnto the Saintes. 4 6.14

30 Also brethren, I beseeche you for our Lorde Iesus Christes sake, and for the loue of the spirite that yee woulde striue with mee by prayers to God for me. 3.20.20

16.3 Greete Priscilla and Aquila my fellow helpers in Christ Iesus. 4 6. 14

7 Salute Andronicus & Iunia my cousins and fellow prisoners which are notable among the Apostles, and were in Christ before me. 4.3.5

20 The God of peace shall tread Satan vnder your feete shortly. 1.14.18. & 3.15.5

25 By the reuelation of the mysterie, which was kept secrete since the world began. 2.9.4

26 But nowe is opened, & published among al nations by the scriptures of the prophets, &c. 2.9.4

1. CORINTHIANS.

1.1 PAul called to be an Apostle of Iesus Christ, through the will of God, and our brother Sosthenes. 4 3.10

3 Grace be with you and peace from God our father, and from the Lord Iesus Christ. 1.13.13

9 God is faithful by whome ye are called vnto the fellowshippe of his sonne Iesus Christ, &c. 3.5.5

11 For it hath bin declared vnto me my brethren, of you by them y are of the house of Cloe, that there are contentions among you. 4.1. 14

12 Now this I say, that euerie one of you sayeth, I am Paules, &c. 4.13. 14

13 Is Christ deuided? was Paul crucified for you? either were ye baptised into the name of Paul? 3.5.2 & 4.15. 13

20 Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this worlde? &c. 2.2.20

21 For seeing the world by wisedom knewe not God in the wisedome of God, it pleased God by the foolishnes of preaching to saue them that beleeue. 2.6.1

23 But wee preach Christ crucified: vnto the Iewes, euen a stombling blocke and vnto the grecians, foolishnesse. 3.24.14

26 For brethren, you see your calling how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called. 3.23.10

30 But ye are of him in Christ Iesus who of God is made vnto vs wisedome and righteousnes, and sanctificatiō, &c. 2.15.2. & 2.16.19. & 3.3.19. & 3.4.30. & 3.11.6.12. & 3.14. 27. & 3 15.5. & 3.16.1

2.2 For I esteemed not to knowe any thing among you, saue Iesus Christ, and him crucified. 1.13.13. & 2.12.4. 5. & 2.15.2. & 3.2.1

4 Neither stoode my worde and my preaching in the entising speech of mans wisedome, but in playne euidence of the spirit. 1.8.1. & 4.1.6. & 4.14.11

5 That your faith should not bee in the wisedome of men, but in the power of God. 3.2.35

8 Which none of the princes of this worlde hath knowen, for had they knowen: &c. 1.5.12. & 2.14.2. & 4.17. 30

10 But God hath reuealed them vnto vs by the spirit: for the spirite searcheth al things, yea the depe things of God. 1.13.14. & 3 2.34

11 For what man knoweth the things of a man, saue the spirite of a man which is in him; euen so the thinges of God knoweth no man, but the spirite of God. 3.2.34

12 Nowe wee haue receiued not the spirite of the worlde, but the spirite which is of God, that wee might knowe the thinges that are giuen to vs of God. 3.2.39. & 4.8.11

13 Comparing thinges spiritual with spirituall things. 4.16.31

14 But the naturall man perceiueth not the things of the spirite of God: for they are foolishnesse vnto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. 2.2.20. & 3.2.34

16 For who hath knowen the minde of the Lorde, that he might instruct him? but we haue the mind of christ 1.13.14. & 3.13.4

3.2 I giue you milke to drinke, and not meate: for yee were not able to beare it: neither yet now are ye able 3.19.13

3 For where as there is among you enuying, and strife, & diuisions, are ye not carnal, and walke as men? 2. 5.4. & 4.1.14

4 For when one sayeth, I am Paules, an other, I am Appollos, are yee not carnall? 4.4.2. & 4.13.14

6 I haue planted, Appollo watered, but God gaue the encrease. 4.14. 18

7 So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth but God ỹ giueth the encrease. 2.5. 4.3.23.14. & 4.1.6

8 And euerie man shall receiue his wages according to his labour. 3.16. 3 & 3.18.1

9 For we together are gods laborers ye are gods husbandrye, and Gods building building. 2.5.17.& 4.1.6

11 For other foundation can no man lay, than that which is laide, which is Iesus Christ. 3.15.5.& 4.6.6
12 And if any man build on this foundation, golde, siluer, or precious stones, timber, hay, or stubble. 3.5.9
13 Euerie mans worke shall be made manifest: for the day shal declare it because it shalbe reuciled by the fire &c. 3.5.9
14 If any mans worke that he hath built vpon, abide, hee shall receyue wages. 3.5.9
15 If any mans worke burne, he shall lose, but he shalbe safe himselfe: neuertheless yet as it were by the fire. 3.5.9
16 Knowe ye not that ye are the temple of God, & that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? 1.3.15.& 3.6.3.& 3. 16.2.& 3 25.7.& 4.3.1
19 For the wisedome of this world is foolishnesse with God: for it is writtē. He catcheth the wise in their owne craftinesse. 1.5.7.& 2.2.20 21 Therefore let no man reioyce in men: for all thinges are yours. 4.19.

1
4.1 Let a man so thinke of vs, as of the ministers of Christ, and disposers of the secretes of God. 4.3.6.& 4.8.

4 For I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby iustified: but hee y iudgeth me, is the Lorde. 3.12.2.& 3. 17.14
5 Therefore iudge nothing before the time, vntill the Lord come, who will lighten thinges that are hid in darkenes, and make the councels of the heart manifest: &c. 3.2.4
7 For who separateth thee? and what hast thou, that thou hast not receaued? if thou hast receiued it, why reioycest thou, as though thou haddst not receiued it? 2.5.2.& 3.7.4.& 3.24

12
1.5 For in Christ Iesus I haue begotte you through the Gospell. 4.1.6
5.1 It is heard certainely that there is fornication among you, & such fornication as is not once named among the Gentiles, &c. 4 1.14
2 And ye are puffed vp and haue not rather sorrowed, that hee which hath done this deede, might be put from among you. 4.1.15
4 When ye are gathered together, and my spirite, in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that, such a one I say, by the power of our Lord Iesus Christ. 4.11.5.& 4.12.4
5 Be deliuered vnto Satan, for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirite may be saued in the day of the Lord Iesus. 4.12.5.6
6 Know ye not that a litle leauen leaueneth the whole lumpe? 4.12.5.
7 For Christ our passeouer is sacrificed for vs. 4.12.13.& 4.18.3
11 If any that is called a brother, be a fornicator, or couetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such a one eate not. 4.1.15.& 4.12.5
12 For what haue I to doe, to iudge them also, which are without? doe ye not iudge them that are within? 4.11.5
6.6. But a brother goeth to law with a brother, & that vnder the infidels. 4.20.21
7 Nowe therefore there is vtterly a fault among you, because ye goe to lawe, one with an other. 4.1.14
9 Know ye not that the vnrighteous shall not inherite the kingdome of God? &c. 3.4.21.& 3.24.10 10 Be not deceiued, neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers nor wantons, nor buggerers, nor theeues, nor couetous, nor drunkardes, nor railers, nor extortioners shall shall inherite the kingdom of God. 3 4.21

11 But ye are iustified in the name of the Lord Iesus, and by the spirite of our God. 1.13.14 & 3.1.1.& 3.6.3.& 3.14.6.& 3.24.10
13 Meates are ordained for the belly, & the belly for the meates: but God shall destroy both it, and them, &c. 3.25.8.& 4 13.9.& 4.19.7
15 Know ye not, that your bodies are members of Christ? &c. 3..6.3.& 3.25 8.& 4.17.9
19 Knowe ye not, that your bodie is the temple of the holy Ghost which is in you, whome you haue of God? &c. 1.13.15.& 3.3.9.& 3.25.7. & 3. 25.8.& 4.3.1
20 For yee are bought for a price: therefore glorifie God in your bodie, and in your spirite: for they are Gods. 2.17.5.& 3.25.7
7.2 Neuerthelesse, to auoide fornication let euerie man haue his wife, & let euerie woman haue her owne husband. 2.8.43
3 Let the husband giue vnto the wife due beneuolence, and likewise also the wife vnto the husband: 4.12. 16
5 Defraud not one another, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may giue your selues to fasting, and prayer: and againe come together that Satan tempt you not for your incontinencie. 4.12.16
7 I would that al men were euen as I my selfe am: but euerie man hath his proper gift of God, one after this maner, and an other after that. 2.8. 42
9 But if they can not abstaine, let them marry: for it is better to marry than to burne. 2.8.43,& 4.13.17
14 For the vnbeleeuing husbande is sanctified by the wife, and the vnbeleeuing wife is sanctified by the husbande, else were your children vncleane: but nowe are they holy. 2.1. 7.& 4.16.6.& 4.16.15.& 4.16.31
19 Circumcision is nothing: and vncircumcision is nothing: but the keeping of the commaundementes of God. 4.14.24
21 Art thou called being a seruaunt? care not for it: but if yet thou maist be free, vse it rather. 4.20.1
23 Ye are bought with a price: be not seruants of men. 4.20.32
31 And they that vse this worlde, as though they vsed it not: for the fashion of this worlde goeth away. 3. 10.1.4.& 4.19.7
34 The vnmaried womã careth for the things of the Lorde, that shee may be holy both in body & in spirite, &c. 3.10.1.4.& 4.19.7
35 And this I speake, for your owne commodities, not to tangle you in a snare. 4.10.2
8.1 And as touching thinges sacrificed vnto idols, wee knowe, that we haue knowledge, &c. 4.10.22
4 For though there bee that are called Gods, whether in heauen, or in earth, &c. 1.13.11
6 Yet vnto vs there is but one God, which is the father, of whome are all thinges, and we in him: and one Lord Iesus Christ, &c. 1.13.11.& 2.3. 6.& 2.14.3.& 2.15.5
9 But take heed least by any meanes this power of yours be an occasion of falling to them that are weake. 3. 19.11.& 4.10.22
9.1 Am I not an Apostle? am I not free? haue I not seene Iesus Christ our Lorde? are yee not my worke in the Lord? 3.14.15.& 4.1.14.& 4.17. 17.& 4.17.29
2 For ye are the seale of my Apostleship in the Lorde. 4.1.6
5 Or haue we not power to leade about a wife being a sister, as well as the reſt of the Apoſtles, and as the brethren of the Lorde, and Cephas? 4.12.25

12 Neuertheleſſe, we haue not vſed this power but ſuffer all things, that we ſhould not hinder the goſpel of Chriſt. 3.14.15

16 And woe is vnto mee, If I preach not the goſpel. 4.5.6

19 For though I be free from al men yet haue I made my ſelfe ſeruaunt vnto all men, that I might winne the more. 3.19.12

20 And vnto the Iewes I become as a Iewe, ỳ I might winne the Iewes, &c. 4.19.26

22 To the weake I become as weake, that I may winne the weake: I am made all thinges to all men, that I might by all meanes ſaue ſome. 3. 19.12

10.1 Moreouer, brethren I would not that ye ſhould be ignorant, that all our fathers were vnder the cloude, and all paſſed through the ſea. 2.10. 5

2 And were all baptiſed vnto Moſes in the cloude, and in the ſea. 4.15. 9

3 And did all eate the ſame ſpirituall meat. 4.14.23.&4.18.20

4 And did all drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, for they dranke of the ſpirituall rocke that followed them: and the rocke was Chriſt. 1.13.10.& 2.9.1.&4.14.26.&4.17.15.21.22.

5 But with many of them God was not pleaſed: for they were ouerthrowen in the wilderneſſe. 4.14. 24

11 And all theſe thinges came vnto them for enſamples, and were written to admoniſh vs, vpon whom the endes of the world are come. 2.10. 5.&3.2.22

12 Wherefore let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leaſt he fall. 3.2.40.&3.24.6

13 There hath no tentation taken you but ſuch as appeareth to man, &c. 3.20.46

16 The cuppe of bleſſing which wee bleſſe, is it not the communion of the bloude of Chriſt? the breade which we breake, is it not the communion of the body of Chriſt? 4.17. 10.&4.17.15.&4.17.22.&4.17.38.& 4.18.8

17 For we that are many, are one breade and one body, becauſe wee al are partakers of one bread. 4.17. 14

23 All thinges are lawful for me, but all thinges are not expedient: all thinges are lawfull for mee, but all thinges edifie not. 3.19.12

25 Whatſoeuer is ſolde in the ſhambles, eate ye, and aske no queſtion for conſcience ſake. 3.19.11

28 But if any man ſay vnto you, this is ſacrificed vnto idols, eate it not becauſe of him that ſhewed it, and for thy conſcience, &c. 3.19.6.&4. 10.4

29 And the cõſcience I ſay not thine but of that other, &c. 3.19.11.&4. 10.4

31 Whether therefore yee eate or drinke, or whatſoeuer ye doe doe all to the glory of God. 3.20.44

32 Giue none offence, neither to the Iewes nor to the Grecians, nor to the Church of God. 3.19.11

11.4 Euerie man praying or prophecying hauing any thing on his head diſhonoureth his head. 4.19.26

5 But euerie woman that prayeth or prophecieth bareheaded, diſhonoreth her head. 4.10.29

7 For a man ought not to couer his head: foraſmuch as he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man. 1.15.4

16 But if any man luſt to be contentious tious, wee haue no such custome, neither the Churches of God. 4.10. 31

20 When ye come together therefore into one place, this is not to eate the Lords supper. 4.18.12
22 Haue ye not houses to eate and drinke in? despise ye the Church of God? &c. 4.10.29
23 For I haue receiued of the Lorde that which I also deliuered vnto you, &c. 4.17.35.50
24 And when he had giuen thankes he brake it, and saide, take, eate this is my body, which is broke for you: this doe you in remembrance of me. 4.17.1.& 4.17.20
25 After the same maner also he tooke the cup, when he had supped, saying this is the newe Testament in my blood, &c. 4.17.20
26 For as often as ye shall eate this bread and drinke this cup, ye shewe the Lords death vntill hee come. 4. 16.30.& 4.17.37
28 Let a man therfore examine him selfe, & so let him eat of this breade, and drinke of this cup. 4.1.15.& 4.16 30.& 4.17.40
29 For he that eateth and drinketh vnworthily, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation, because hee discerneth not the Lords body. 4.1.15. & 4.16.30.& 4.17.33.34.40
31 For if we would iudge our selues we should not be iudged. 3.3.18
32 But when we are iudged, wee are chastened of the Lord, because wee should not be condemned with the worlde. 3.4 33.& 3.8.6
12.3 Wherefore, I declare vnto you, that no man speaking by the spirite of God calleth Iesus execrable, &c. 2.2.20
6 And there are diuersities of operations, but God is the same, which worketh all in all. 2.3.6.9
8 For to one is giuen by the spirit, the worde of wisedome, and to an other the word of knowledge, by the same spirite. 4.3.11
10 And to an other diuersities of tongues, and to an other the interpretatiō of tongues. 1.13.14.& 3.2.9
11 And all these thinges worketh euen the selfe same spirite, distributing to euery mā seuerally as he wil. 1.13.14.& 4.13.3
12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, & all the members of the body which is one, though they be many yet are but one body: euen so is Christ. 1.13.16.& 3.7.5.& 3.16.2.& 4.17.22
13 For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we are Iewes or Grecians, &c. 4.24 7.& 4. 15.15.& 4 16.22
25 Least there should bee any diuision in the body: but that the members should haue the same care one for an other. 3.20.20
28 And God hath ordeined some in the Church, as first Apostles, secōdly prophets, thirdly teachers, then them that doe miracles: after that ȳ gifts of healing, helpers, &c. 4.3.8. & 4.11.1.& 4.20.4
31 But desire you the best gifts, & I will yet shewe you a more excellent way. 3.2.9
13.1 Though I speake with the tonges of men and Angels, and haue not loue, I am as sounding brasse, or a tincling Cymball. 2.5.4
2 If I had all faith, so that I coulde remoue mountaines, and ha d not loue, I were nothing. 3.18.8
3 And though I feed the poore with all my goods, and though I giue my body that I be burned, and haue not loue, it profiteth me nothing. 4.13. 13
4 Loue suffereth long: it is bountiful:loue enuieth not: loue doth not boast it selfe:it is not puffed vp. 3.7. 5.6

9 For we knowe in part, and we prophecie in part. 3.2.20
10 But when that which is perfect, is come, then that which is in parte, shall be abolished. 3.2.13
12 For now wee see through a glasse darkely: but then shall wee see face to face, &c. 3.22.11.& 4.18.20
13 And now abideth faith: hope and loue, euen these three: but the chiefest of these is loue. 3.18.8
14.15 What is it then? I will praye with the spirite, but I will pray with the vnderstanding also, &c. 3.20.5.& 3.20.32
16 Else, when thou blessest with the spirit, howe shal hee that occupieth the roome of the vnlearned, say Amen at thy giuing of thankes, &c. 3. 20.33
29 Let the Prophets speake two or three, and let the other iudge. 4.8.9. & 4.9.13
30 And if any thing be reuealed to an other that sitteth by, let the first holde his peace. 4.1.12
34 Let your women keepe silence in the Churches, for it is not permitted vnto them to speake, &c. 4.10.29
40 Let all thinges bee done honestly and by order. 2.8.32.& 3.20.29.& 4.3. 10.& 4.10.27.30
15.6 After that, he was seene of moe than fiue hundred brethrē at once, &c. 3.25.3
10 But I labored more aboundantlye than they al, yet not I, but the grace of God which is in mee. 2 3.12.& 4. 1.6
12 Now if it be preached, that Christe is risen from the dead, how say some among you, that there is no resurrection of the deade? 3.25.7.& 4. 1.14
13 For if there be no resurrection of the dead, thē is Christ not risen. 3.25.3
14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching in vaine, & your faith is also in vaine. 3.25.3
16 For if the dead be not raised, then is Christ not raised. 2.13.2
17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vaine, &c. 2.13.2.& 2.16.13
19 If in this life onely we haue hope in Christ, we are of al men the most miserable. 3.9.6.& 3.18.4
20 But nowe is Christ risen from the deade, and was made the first fruits of them that slept. 2.16.13
21 For sith by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. 2.1.6
22 For, as in Adam al men dy euen so in Christ shall all bee made aliue. 4. 16.17
25 For he must reigne til he hath put al his enemies vnder his feete. 2.16. 16
28 And when all thinges shal be subdued vnto him, then shall the sonne also himselfe be subiecte vnto him, &c. 1.13.26.& 2.8.30.& 2.14.3.& 2.15. 5. and 3.20.42. and 3.25.12
36 Thou foole, that which thou sowest is not quickned, except it die 3. 25.4
39 Al flesh, is not the same flesh, but there is one flesh of men, &c. 3.25.8
41 There is an other glorie of the sunne, an other glory of the moone, an other glory of the starres: for one starre differeth from an other star in glorie. 4.19.34
45 The first man Adam was made a liuing soule: and the last Adam was made a quickning spirit. 1.15.4. and 3.1.2
46 Howbeit that was not first made which is spirituall, but that which is naturall, and afterwarde that which is spirituall. 4.16.31

47. The first man is of the earth, earthly: the second man is the Lord from heauen. 2.12.7.& 2.13.2.& 2.13.4.& 4.17.25.
50 Flesh and bloode cannot inherite the kingdome of God, &c. 4.16.17
51 Beholde I shewe you a secrete thing, we shall not all sleepe, but we shall all be chaunged. 2.16.17.& 3.25.8
52 In a moment, in the twinckling of an eye, at the last trumpet: for the trumpet shall blowe, and the deade shall be raised vp incorruptible, and we shall be chaunged. 2.16.17
53 For this corruption must put on incorruption, &c. 3.15.7
54 So when this corruptible hath put on incorruptible, and this mortal hath put on immortality, &c 3.25.10
16.2 Euerie first day of the weeke, let euerie one of you put aside by himselfe, and lay vp as God hath prospered him, &c. 2.8.33
7 For I will not see you nowe in my passage: but I trust to abide a while with you, if the Lord permit. 1.17.11

2 CORINTHIANS.

1.2 GRace bee with you, and peace from God our father, and from the Lorde Iesus Christ. 1.13.13
3 The father of mercy, and the God of al comfort. 3.20.37
6 And whether we be afflicted, it is for your consolation and saluation which is wrought in the induring of the same sufferings, which wee also suffer: or whether we be comforted, it is your consolation and saluation. 3.5.4
12 For our reioycing in this, the testimonie of our conscience, that in simplicitie and godly puretesse, & not in fleshly wisedome, &c. 3.2.41 & 3.17.14
19 For the sonne of God Iesus Christ who was preached among you by vs, &c. 4.17.50
20 For all the promises of God in him are yea, and are in him Amen, &c. 2.9.2.& 3.2.32 & 3.20. 17. and 4.14.20
22 Who hath also sealed vs, and hath giuen the earnest of the spirit in our hearts. 1.7.4.& 3.1.3.& 3.2.36.& 3.24.1
23 Nowe, I call God for a record vnto my soule, that to spare you, I came not as yet to Corinthus. 2.8.24.& 2.8.27
24 Not that we haue dominion ouer your faith, but that we are helpers of your ioy, &c. 4.8.9
2.6 It is sufficient vnto the same mā that he was rebuked of many. 3.4.13
7 So that nowe contrariwise, yee ought rather to forgiue him, and comfort him, least the same shoulde bee swallowed vp with ouer much heauines. 4.1.29.& 4.12.8
8 Wherefore, I pray you, that you would confirme your loue towardes him. 4.12.9
16 To the one wee are the sauour of death, vnto death: and to the other the sauour of life, vnto life, &c. 2.5.5
3.3 In that ye are manifest, to be, the epistle of Christ, ministred by vs, & written not with ynke, &c. 2.8.57
5 Not that we are sufficient of our selues, to thinke any thing, as of our selues, &c. 2.2.25.27.& 2.3.6
6 Who also hath made vs able ministers of the newe Testament, not of the letter, but of the spirite: for the letter killeth, but the spirite giueth life. 1.9.3. & 2.7.2. & 3.1.4 & 4.1.6. & 4.14.11.

7 If then the miniſtration of death written with letters and engrauen in ſtones, was glorious, ſo that the children of Iſrael could not behold the face &c. 2.7.7

8. How ſhall not the miniſtration of the ſpirite be more glorious? 1.9.3

9 For if the miniſterie of condemnation was glorious, much more doth the miniſtration of righteouſneſſe exceede in glory. 4.3.3

14 Therefore their mindes are hardened: for vntil this day remayneth the ſame couering vntaken away in the reading of the olde Teſtament, which vaile in Chriſt is put away. 2. 10.23

15 But euen vnto this day when Moſes is read, the vaile is layd ouer their hearts. 2.10.23

17 Now the Lord is the ſpirite, and where the ſpirit of the Lord is there is libertie. 2.2.8

18 But we all beholde as in a mirror, the glory of the Lorde, with open face, & are changed into the ſame Image, &c. 1.15.4. & 1.15.5. & 3.2.10. & 3.3.9

44 In whom the God of this worlde hath blinded the mindes, that is, of the Infidels, that the light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, which is the image of God, &c. 1.14.13. & 1. 14.18. & 1.18.2. & 2.4.1

6 For God that commaunded the light to ſhine out of the darkeneſſe, is hee which hath ſhined in our hearts, &c. 2.9.1. & 3.2.1. & 4 1.5 & 4. 5.3

7 But we haue this treaſure in earthen veſſels, that the excellencie of that power might be of God, and not of vs. 4.1.5. & 4.3.1

8 We are afflicted on euery ſide, yet are we not in diſtreſſe: in pouertie, but not ouercome of pouertie. 3.3. 9. & 3.15.8

9 Wee are perſecuted, but not forſaken: caſt downe, but wee periſh not. 3.15.8

10 Euery where we beare about in our body, the dying of the Lorde Ieſus, that the life of Ieſus alſo might bee made manifeſt in our mortall fleſh. 3.15.5. & 3.15.8. & 3.18.7. & 3. 25.3. & 3.25.7

13 And becauſe wee haue the ſame ſpirite of faith, according as it is written, I beleeued, and therefore haue I ſpoken, &c. 3.3.35

5.1. For we know that if our earthly houſe of this tabernacle be deſtroyed, we haue a building giuen of god, &c. 3.25.6

2 For therefore we ſigh, deſiring to be clothed with our houſe, which is from heauen. 3.9.5

4 Becauſe we would not be vncloathed, but would be cloathed vpon, that immortalitie might bee ſwallowed vp of life. 1.15.2. & 3.9.5

5 Who alſo hath giuen vnto vs the earneſt of the ſpirite. 2.9.3. & 3.2. 36

6 Therefore wee are alwaies bolde, though we know that whiles we are at home in this bodye, wee are abſent from the Lord. 1.15.2. & 3.2. 14. & 3.9.4. & 3.25.1. & 3.25.6

7 For we walke by faith and not by ſight. 3.2.14

8 Neuertheleſſe, we are bolde, and loue rather to remoue out of the body, and to dwel with the Lorde. 1.15.2

10 For wee muſt all appeare before the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt, &c. 1 13.11. & 1.15.2. & 3.18.1. & 3.25.7

18 And all things are of God, which hath reconciled vs vnto himſelfe by Ieſus Chriſt, &c. 3.2.29. & 3.5.5. & 3. 11.4. & 4.6.3

19 For God was in Christ, and reconciled the worlde to himselfe, not imputing their sinnes vnto them, &c. 2.12.4.& 2.17.2.& 3.2.32. & 3.4.25. & 3.11.22. & 3.14.11. & 4.1.22

20 Now then are we ambassadors for Christ: as though God did beseech you through vs, &c. 3.4.27.& 4.1.22 & 4.3.1

21 For he hath made him to be sinne for vs, which knew no sinne, that we shoulde be made the righteousnesse of God in him. 2.16.5.& 2.16 6.& 2.17.2.& 3.5.2.& 3.11.11. & 3.11 22.& 3.11.23

6.8 By honour and dishonour, by euil report and good report, &c. 3.8.8

16 For yee are the temple of the liuing God, &c. 1.13.15.& 3.6.3. & 3.16.2

7.1 Seeing then that we haue these promises, dearely beloued, let vs cleanse our selues from all filthines of the flesh and the spirite, &c. 1.15.2.& 2.5.11.& 2.9.3. & 3.16.2. & 3.25 7

10 For godly sorrow causeth repentance vnto saluatiō, not to be repēted of: but the worldly sorrow causeth death. 3.3.7.& 3.4.2

11 For beholde, this thing that yee haue beene godly sorie, what great care it hath wrought in you, &c. 3.3.15

8.11 Now therefore performe to doe it also, that as there was a readines to will, euen so yee may performe it of that which ye haue. 2.5.8

16 And thankes be vnto God, which hath put in the heart of Titus the same care for you. 2.5.8

17 Because we accepted the exhortation, &c. 2.5.8

9.6 That hee which soweth sparingly shall reape also sparingly, and hee that soweth liberally, shall reap also liberally. 3.18.6

7 As euery man wisheth in his heart, so let him giue, not grudgingly, or of necessitie: for God loueth a cheerefull giuer. 3.16.3

12 For the ministration of this seruice, not only supplyeth the necessitie of the saints, &c. 3.7.5

10.4 For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God, to cast &c. 4.8.9.& 4.11.5. & 4.11.10

6 And hauing ready the vengeance against all disobedience, when your obedience is fulfilled. 4.6.3

8 For though I shoulde boast somewhat more of our authoritie, which the Lord hath giuen vs for edification, &c. 4.8.1

11.14 And no maruel: for Satan himselfe is transformed into an Angell of light. 1.9.2.& 4.12.12

12.2 I knowe a man in Christ aboue fourteene yeeres agone (whether hee were in the body, I cannot tell, God knoweth) which was taken vp into the third heauen. 1.9.1.& 1.14 4.& 4.3.3

4 How that he was taken vp into paradise, and heard words which cannot be spoken, which are not possible for man to vtter. 1.14.4

7 And lest I should be exalted out of measure, through the aboundance of reuelations, there was giuen vnto me a pricke in the flesh, the messenger of Satan, &c. 1.14.18.& 3.3.14 & 4.17.34

8 For this thing I besought the Lord thrise, that it might depart frō me. 1.13.20

9 And he said vnto me, my grace is sufficient for thee: &c. that the power of Christ may dwell in me. 1.3 13.& 1.13.20. & 3.3.14

21 I feare least when I come againe, my God debase me among you, and I shall bewaile many, &c. 3.3.18. & 4. 1.27.

13 4 For though hee was crucified concerning his infirmitie, yet liueth he through the power of God. And we no doubt, are weake in him, &c. 2.13.2. & 2.14.6. & 2.16.13

5 Proue your selues whether ye are in the faith: examine your selues: know ye not your own selues, howe that Iesus Christ is in you, except ye bee reprobates? 3.2.39

10 According to the power which the Lord hath giuen me, to edification, & not to destruction. 4.8.1

13 The grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and the loue of God, & the communion of the holye Ghoste &c. 3.1.2

GALATHIANS.

1.1 PAul an Apostle not of mé, neither by man, but of Iesus Christe, &c. 4.3.13. & 43.14

2 And all the brethren that are with me, vnto the Churches of Galatia. 4.1.14

3 Grace be with you, & peace from God the father, and from the Lorde Iesus Christ. 1.13.13

6 I marueile that ye are so soone remoued away vnto an other gospell, from him that hath called you in the grace of Christ. 4.1 27

8 But though that we, or an Angell from heauen, preach vnto you otherwise than that which wee haue preached vnto you, let him bee accursed. 4.9.12

16 To reuéale his sonne in me, that I should preach him among the Gentiles, &c. 3.22.7

18 Then after three yeares, I came againe to Ierusalem to visite Peter, and abode with him fifteene dayes. 4.6.7. & 4.6.14

2.1 Then fourteene yeeres after, I went vp againe to Ierusalem with Barnabas, and tooke with me Titus also. 4.6.14

3 But neither yet Titus which was with me, though he were a Grecian, was compelled to be circumcised. 3. 19.12

6 God accepteth no mans person, &c. 3.23.10

7 When they saw the gospell of the vncircumcisiō was committed vnto me, as the gospell of the circumcision was vnto Peter. 4.6.7

8 For he that was mightie by Peter in the Apostleship ouer the circumcision, was also mighty by mee towards the Gentiles. 4.1.6. & 4.6.7

9 And when Iames, and Cephas, and John knew of the grace that was giuen vnto me, &c. 4.6.13

14 But when I sawe, that they went not the right waye to the trueth of the gospel, I said vnto Peter before al men, if thou, &c. 4.12.3

16 Knowe that a man is not iustified by the works of the lawe, but by the faith of Iesus Christ, &c. 3.17.2

19 For I through the law am dead to the lawe, & that I might liue vnto God, &c. 2.16.7

20 Thus I liue yet, not I nowe, but Christ liueth in me, &c. 4.19.35

3.1 O foolish Galathians, who hath bewitched you, that ye shoulde not obey the trueth, &c. 1.11.7. & 4.1.27. & 4.18.11

2 Receiued ye the spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of the faith preached? 3.2.33. & 4.1.6

6 Yea rather as Abraham beleeued God, and it was imputed to him for righteousnes. 3.17.8

8 For the scriptures foreseeing, that God woulde iustifie the Gentiles through faith, preached before the Gospell vnto Abraham, &c. 3.11.3

10 For as many as are of the workes of the lawe, are vnder the curse: for it is written, cursed is euerie man that continueth not in all thinges, &c. 2.7.5.& 2.7.17.& 2.16.2.& 3.11. 19

12 And the law is not of faith: but the man that shall doe those things shall liue in them. 3.11.18.& 3.11. 19

13 Christ hath redeemed vs from the curse for vs, &c. 2.7.15.& 2.8.57. and 2.16.2.& 2.16.6.& 2.16.19.& 2.17.4.& 3.4.27.& 3.11.12. & 3.19.3. & 4.13. 21

16 Now to Abraham, and to his seede were the promises made, &c. 2.6.2.& 2.13.3.& 4.14.21

17 And this I say, that the law which was foure hundreth and thirtie yeares after, can not disanull the couenant that was confirmed afore of God in respect of Christ, that it should make the promises of no effect. 3.11.20

18 For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more by the promise, but God gaue it vnto Abraham by promise. 3.11.17

19 Wherefore then serueth the law? it was added because of the transgression, &c. 1.14.9.& 2.5.6.& 2. 7.2

21 Is the lawe then against the promises of God? God forbid, &c. 3.11. 19.& 3.4.6

22 But the Scripture hath concluded all vnder sinne, that the promise by the faith of Iesus Christ should bee giuen to them that beleeue. 3.4.6

24 Wherefore the lawe was schoole master to bring vs to Christ, that we might bee made righteous by faith. 2.7.2.& 2.7.11.& 2.11.5

27 For all yee that are baptised into Christ, haue put on Christ. 2.1.3.& 3 1.3.& 4.14.7.& 4.15.6.& 4.16.21.& 4. 19.8

28 There is neither Iew nor grecian: there is neither bond nor free: there is neither male nor female: for yee are all one in Christ Iesus. 2.11.11.& 4.20.1

4.1 Then this I say, that the heire as long as he is a childe, differeth nothing from a seruant, though he bee Lorde of all. 2.11.2. & 2.11.5. & 2.11. 13

2 But is vnder tutors & gouernours, vntill the time appointed of the father. 4.10.14

3 Euen so we, when wee were children, were in bondage vnder the rudimentes of the world. 4.10.14

4 But when the fulnesse of time was come, God sent forth his son, borne of a woman, &c. 2.16.5.& 2.7.15.& 2. 11.11.& 2.12.7.& 2.13.1.& 3.13.3.& 2. 17.5.& 4.20.15

5 That he might redeeme them which were vnder the law, that we might receiue the adoption, &c. 2.7.15.& 3. 19.2

6 And because ye are the sonnes, God hath sent forth the spirite of his son into your hearts, which crieth, Abba, that is, father. 2.14.5.& 3.1.3.& 3. 2.11. and 3.13.5 & 3.20.37

7 But euen then, when ye knewe not God, ye did seruice vnto them which by nature are not Gods. 1.4.3. and 1. 12.3

8 But nowe, seeing yee knowe God, ye are rather knowen of God, &c. 4. 1.27.& 4.10.10. and 4.19.7

10 Ye obserue daies, & monethes, and times, and yeares. 2.8.33

11 I am in feare of you, least I haue bestowed on you labour in vayne. 2. 8.33

22 For it is written that Abraham had two sonnes, one by a seruant, an other by a free woman. 2.11.9.& 4. 2.3

24 By

24 By the which thinges, another thing is meant? for theſe mothers, are the two Teſtaments, &c. 2.11.9
25 For Agar or Sina is a mountain in Arabia, and it anſwereth to Ieruſalem that now is, &c. 3.2.6
26 But Ieruſalem, which is aboue, is free: and is the mother of vs all. 4.1.1
28 We are after the manner of Iſaac, children of the promiſe. 4.16.12
30 Put out the ſeruant and her ſonne, &c. 3.18.2
5.1 Stande faſt in the libertie therfore wherwith Chriſt hath made vs free &c. 3.19.2. & 3.19.14. & 4.10.8. & 4.10.9. & 4.20.1
4 Who ſo euer are iuſtified by the law, ye are fallen from grace. 3.19.14
5 For we through the ſpirite, wayte for the hope of righteouſnes through fayth. 3.2.43
6 In Chriſt Ieſus neither circumciſion auayleth any thing, nor vncircumciſion, &c. 3.11.20
13 For brethren, ye haue beene called vnto liberty: only vſe not your libertie, &c. 3.19.11
14 For all the lawe is fulfilled in one word, which is, Thou ſhalt loue thy neighbor as thy ſelfe, 2.8.53
17 For the fleſh luſteth againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh, &c. 2.7.5. & 2.2.27
19 Moreouer the workes of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are adultry, fornication, vncleanneſſe, wantonnes, 2.1.8. & 3.14.1. & 4.15.10
6.10 While wee haue therefore time, let vs doe good vnto all men, &c. 3.7.6. & 3.20.38
14 But God forbid that I ſhould reioyce, but in the croſſe of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, whereby the worlde is crucified vnto mee, and I vnto the world. 2.16.7
15 For in Chriſt Ieſus, neither circumciſion auayleth any thing, nor vncircumciſion, &c. 4.14.24
17 From hencefoorth let no man put me to buſineſſe: for I beare in my body the markes, &c. 3.18.7. & 3.25.8

EPHESIANS.

1.2 Grace be with you, and peace from God our father, and from the Lord Ieſus Chriſt. 1.13.13
3 Which hath bleſſed vs with all ſpirituall bleſſing in heauenly thinges in Chriſt. 3.22.10
4 As hee hath choſen vs in him before the foundation of the worlde, that we ſhould be holy, &c. 2.3.8. & 2.8.53. and 2.12.5. and 2.16.4. and 3.15.5. and 3.17.15. and 3.19.2. and 3.21.1. and 3.23.12. and 3.14.3. and 3.24.5
5 Who hath predeſtinate vs to bee adopted through Ieſus Chriſt vnto himſelfe, &c. 2.12.5. and 3.11.4. and 3.18.2
6 To the praiſe of the glory of his grace, wherewith he hath made vs accepted in his beloued. 2.17.2. & 3.2.32. & 3.11.4
7 By whome wee haue redemption through his bloud, &c. 3.4.30
9 And hath opened vnto vs the myſterie of his will, according to his good pleaſure, &c. 4.14.2. and 4.19.36
10 That in the diſpenſation of the fulneſſe of the times, he might gather together in one al things, both which are in heauen, and which are in earth, euen in Chriſt. 2.12.5. and 3.20.21
13 In whome alſo ye haue truſted, after that ye heard the word of truth, euen the goſpel of our ſaluation, &c 1.7.4. & 2.9.3. & 2.10.3. & 3.14.4. & 3.2.36. & 3.24.1. & 3.24.8
14 Which is the earneſt of our inheritance

heritance, vntil the redemptiō, &c. 3.14.8

17 That the God of our Lorde Iesus Christ, the Father of glory, might giue vnto you the spirit of wisdome, &c. 2.2.21

18 That ye may know, what the hope of his calling, and what the riches of his glorious inheritance is in the saints. 2.2.16.& 4.8.11

20 Which hee wrought in Christ, when he rayled him from the dead &c. 2.16.15

21 Farre aboue all principalitie and power, and might, & dominacion, & euery name that is named, &c. 1.14.5.& 2.15.5.& 3.16.15

22 And he hath appointed him ouer all thinges to bee the head to the Church. 2.15.5.& 4.6.9

23 Which is his body, euen the fulnesse of him that filleth all in all things. 2.15.5.& 3.20.3.& 4.1.10.& 4.17.9

2.1 That were dead in trespasses, and sinnes, &c. 3.24.10

2 Wherein in time past yee walked, according to the course of this worlde, & after the Prince that ruleth in the ayre, &c. 1.14.12.& 3.14. 18.& 2.4.1.& 3.24.10

3 Among whom we also had our conuersation in time past, in the lustes of our flesh, in fulfilling the will of the flesh, & of the mind, &c. 2.1.6. & 2.1.11.& 4.16.17

4 But God, which is riche in loue, through his great loue wherewith he loued vs 3.14.5

5 Euen when we were dead by sinnes he quickned vs, &c. 2.5.19

6 And hath rayled vs vp together, & made vs to sit together in the heauenly places in Christ Iesus. 2.16. 16.& 3.15.6.& 3.25.1

8 For by grace are ye saued through faith, & that not of your selues: it is the gift of God. 3.13.2.& 3.14.11

9 Not of workes, least any man should boast himselfe. 3.13.2

10 For we are his workmanship created in Christ Iesus vnto good works &c. 2.3.6.& 3.3.21.& 3.14.5.& 3.15.7 & 3.23.13

11 Wherefore remember that ye being in time past Gētiles in the flesh, and called vncircumcision, &c. 4.14 12.& 4.16.15

12 That ye were, I say, at that time without Christ, and were alienates from the common wealth of Israel, &c. 1.12.& 3.5.12.& 4.6.1.& 3.24. 10.and 4.14.12. and 4.16.3. and 4. 16.24

14 For he is our peace, which hath made of both one, &c. 2.7.17.and 2 11.11.& 3.7.28.& 3.2.32.& 3.13.4.& 4.16.13

16 And that he might reconcile both vnto God in one body by the crosse, &c. 3.17.2

19 Nowe therefore, ye are no more strangers & forciners: but Citizens &c. 3.25.1

20 And are built vpon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, &c. 1 7.2.& 4.2.1.& 4.3.4.& 4.6.6

21 In whom all the building coupled together, groweth vnto an holy Temple in the Lord. 3.15.5. and 3. 16.2

3.2 If ye haue heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is giuen me to youward. 4.14.2

7 Whereof I am made a minister by the gift of the grace of God, &c. 3. 22.7

10 To the intent that now vnto principalities, and powers in heauenly places, &c. 1.18.2 and 2.11.12.and 3. 24.16

12 By whom we haue boldnesse & entrance by confidence, &c. 3.2.15. and 3.13.5.& 3.20.12

14 For this cause, I bowe my knees vnto the father of our Lorde Iesus Christ. 3.2.15
15 Of whome is named the whole family in heauen & in earth. 2.14.7
16 That he might graunt you according to the riches of his glorie, that ye may be strengthened, &c. 2. 12.5
17 That Christ maye dwell in your heartes by faith, &c. 2.9.3. and 2.12.5. and 4.17.5
18 That ye being rooted and grounded in loue, may bee able to comprehend with all saincts. &c. 2.12.5. & 3 2.14 & 3.14.19
19 And to know the loue of Christe, which passeth knowledge, &c. 2. 12.5
4.2 With long suffering supporting one another through loue. 4.12.11. & 4 12.13
3 Indeuoring to keepe the vnitie of the spirite in the bond of peace. 4. 12.11. and 4 12.13
4 There is one body, and one spirite, &c. 4.1.3. and 4.3.1. and 4.6.10
5 There is one Lord, one faith, and one baptisme. 2.13.16. and 4 2.5
7 But vnto euery one of vs is giuen grace, &c. 2.15.5. and 3.2.2. and 4. 6.10
8 When he ascended vp on high, he ledde captiuitie captiue, &c. 1.13.11. and 2.16.16
10 He y descended, is euen the same that ascended far aboue al heauens, &c. 2.16.14. & 4.3.2. & 4.6.10
11 Hee therefore gaue some to bee Apostles, and some to be propheres, &c 4.1.1.5. & 4.3.4. & 4.6.10. & 4. 8.12
12 For the gathering togither of the saincts, that for the workes of the ministerie, &c. 4.1.5
13 Till we al meete togither, in the vnitie of faith, &c. 4.14.8
14 That we be no more henceforth children, wauering & caried awaye with euerie winde of doctrine, &c. 4.3.1
15 But let vs followe the trueth in loue, and in all thinges growe vp into him, &c. 2.16.15. & 3.1.1. & 3.1.3. & 4.3.2. & 4.6.9 & 4.17.9
16 By whom all the body being coupled and knitte togither by euerie ioynt, &c. 2.13.1. & 4.6.9
17 This I say therefore, & testifie in the Lord, that ye henceforth walke not, &c. 2.3.1
18 Hauing their cogitation darkened, and being strangers, &c, 2.3.1
20 But you haue not so learned Christ. 3.2.6. & 3.6.4
22 That is, that ye cast of, concerning the conuersation in time past, the olde man, &c. 3.3.8. & 3.6.4
23 And be renewed in the spirite of your minde. 2.1.9. & 2.3.1. & 3.3.8. and 3.7.1
24 And put on the newe man, which after God is created, &c. 1.15.4
25 Neither giue place to the diuel. 1. 14.18
28 Let him that stole, steale no more, but let him rather labour, &c. 3.24. 10
30 And grieue not the holye spirit of God by whome, &c. 2.5.8
5.1 Be ye therefore followers of God as deere children. 3.6.3
2 And walke in loue, euen as Christ hath loued vs, and hath giuen himselfe, &c. 2.17.5. & 4.19.23
6 Let no man deceiue you with vaine wordes, for such thinges, &c. 3.2.27.
8 For ye were once darkenesse, but Are now light in the Lord, &c. 3.16. 2. & 3.24.10
14 Awake thou that sleepest, & stand vp from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee light. 2.5.19

23 For the husbande is the wiues head,euen as Christ is the head of the Church,&c. 3.6.3.and 4.6.9
25 And gaue himselfe for it.4.1.17,and 4.8.12
26 That he might sanctifie it, and clense, &c.3.3.11.and 3.6.3.and 4.1. 13.and 4.15.2.and 4.16.22
27 That hee might make it vnto himselfe a glorious Church,not hauing &c. 3.3.11.and 4.1.10
28 So ought men to loue their wiues as their owne bodies,&c. 4.19. 35
29 For no man euer yet hated his owne flesh,but nourisheth: & cherisheth it, euen as the Lorde doeth the Church. 4.19.35
30 For we are members of his body. of his flesh, &c. 2.12.2.& 2.12.7.& 3. 1.3.and 4.17.9
32 This is a great mystery,but I speake concerning Christ,and concerning the Church. 4.12.24
6.1 Children obay your parentes in the Lord:&c. 2.8.36.and 2.8.38.and 4.20.29
4 And ye fathers, prouoke not your children to wrath,&c. 4.20.19
9 Neither is there respect of persons with him. 3.23.10
10 Finally my brethren be strong in the Lord.&c. 2.5.8
12 For we wrestle not against flesche and bloud,&c. 1.14 13.& 1.17.8
13 For this cause, take vnto you the whole armour of God,&c. 1.14.13. &2.5.11
16 Aboue all take the shield of faith, wherewith ye may quench all,&c. 3.2.21.& 3.20.21
18 And pray alway with all maner of prayer and supplication in the spirite,&c. 3.20.5 & 3.20.7.&3.20. 12
19 And for mee, that vtterance may be giuen vnto me: that I may open my mouth boldly,&c. 3.20.20

20 As I hartily looke for, and hope that in nothing I shalbe ashamed, but that with all confidence, &c.3. 2.43
23 For I am greatly in doubt on both sides, desiring to be loosed & to bee with Christ,&c. 3.9.4
29 For vnto you it is giuen for Christ, that not onely ye should beleeue in him,&c. 2.17.5
2.1 Fulfill my ioy, that yee be like minded, hauing the same loue,&c. 4.2.5
3 That nothing be don through cõtention, or vaine glory: but that in meekenes,&c. 3.7.4
5 Let the same minde be in you,that was euen in Christ Iesus. 4.2.5
6 Who being in the forme of God, thought it no robbery, &c. 1.13.11. and 1.13.24
7 But he made himselfe of no reputation,& toke on him the forme of a seruant, and was made like vnto men,&c.1.13.24. and 2.13.2.and 2. 16.5.and 4.17.25
8 He humbled himselfe,and became obedient vnto the death, &c. 2. 13.2.and 2.14.3. and 3.15.8. and 4. 14.12
9 Wherfore God hath also highly exalted him, & giuen him a name, &c.2.11.12.&2.13.2 &2.15,5 .and 16.15.&2.17.6

10 That at the name of Iesus should euerie knee bow, &c. 1.13.24. & 2.11. 12. & 2.14.3. & 3.5.8

12 Wherefore my beloued, as you haue alwaies obeyed, not as in my presence, &c. 1.5.11. & 3.2.23. & 3.18. 1

13 For it is God that worketh in you both the will, and the deede, &c. 2.27. and 2.3.6. & 2.3.11. & 2.5.11. & 3.2.23. & 3.11.12

15 That ye may be blameleſſe, and pure, and the ſonnes of God without rebuke, &c. 3.17.15

17 Yea and though I be offred vpon the ſacrifice, and ſeruice of our faith, I am glad & reioyce with you all. 3.2.16

20 For I haue no man like minded, who will faithfully care for your matters. 4.6.15

21 For al ſeke their own, & not that which is Iesus Chriſtes. 4.6.15

3.5 An Ebrewe of the Ebrewes, by the lawe a Phariſee. 3.24.10

6 Concerning zeale, I perſecuted the Church, &c. 3.24.10

8 Yea doubtleſſe I thinke all thinges but loſſe, for the excellent knowe-ledge ſake of Chriſt Iesus my Lord, &c. 3.11.13. & 3.25.2

10 That I may know him, & the vertue of his reſurrection, &c. 2.16.13. & 3.8.2. & 5.15.8. & 3.25.2

12 Not as though I had already attained to it, either were alreadie perfect but, &c. 4.8.11

13 But one thing I doe: I forget that which is behind, &c. 3.14.13. & 3.3. 25.1

15 Let vs therefore as many as bee perfect, bee thus minded: and if yee be otherwiſe minded: &c. 3.2.4. and 4.1.12

20 But our conuerſation is in heauen, from whence alſo we looke for the ſauiour, &c. 3.25.2. & 4.17.27 & 4.17.29

21 Who ſhall change our vile body, &c. 3.25.4. & 3.25.8. & 4.17.29

4.3 Yea, and I beſeech thee, faithfull yokefellow, help thoſe women that laboured with mee in the Goſpell, &c. 3.24.9

6 Be nothing careful, but in al things let your requeſtes bee ſhewed to God in prayer and ſupplication, &c. 3.20.28. and 3.20.40

12 And I can be abaſed: and I can abounde euerie where in all thinges I am inſtructed, &c. 3.10.5. & 3 19.9

18 I was euen filled, after that I had receiued of Epiphroditus, &c. 4.18. 16

1. THESSALONIANS.

2.18 THerefore wee woulde haue come vnto you (I Paul) &c. 1.17.11
19 For what is our hope, or ioye, or crowne of reioycing? 3.25.10
3.5 Euen for this cause, when I coulde no longer forbeare, I sent him that I might know of your faith, &c. 3.20. 46. and 4.1.6.
12 And the Lorde increase you, and make you abounde in loue one toward an other, &c. 2.5.6
13 To make your hearts stable, and vnblamable in holines before God, &c 3.17.15
4.3 For this is the will of God, euen your sanctification, &c. 3.16.2
7 For God hath not called vs vnto vncleanes, but vnto holines. 3.16.2. & 3.19.2. & 3.23.13
15 For this saye we vnto you by the word of the Lorde, that wee which liue, and are remaining in the comming of the Lord, shall not preuent those which sleepe. 3.25.8
16 For the Lorde himselfe shall descend from heauen with a shout, and with the voice of the Archangell, & with the trompet of God: and the deade in Christ shall first rise. 1.14.8. and 2.16.17
17 Then shall we which liue and remaine, be caught vp with them also in the cloudes, to meete the Lord in the ayre: & so shall we be euer with the Lord. 2.16.17
5.2 For you your selues knowe perfectly, that the day of the Lorde shall come, euen as a theefe in the night. 4.19.34
9 For God hath not appointed vs vnto wrath, but to obtaine saluation by the meanes of our Lord Iesus christ 3.16.2
17 Pray continually. 3.20.7. & 3.20. 28
18 In all thinges, giue thankes, for this is the will of God in Christ Iesus towarde you, &c. 3.20.28
19 Quench not the spirite. 1.9.3. & 2.5. 11
20 Despise not prophecying. 1.9.3
23 Nowe the verie God of peace sanctifie you throughout: & I pray God that your whole spirit and soule and body, may bee kept blameles vnto the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. 3.6.3. & 3.17.15. & 3.25.7

11. THESSALONIANS.

1.4 SO that wee our selues reioyce of you in the Churches of God because of your patience & faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye suffer. 3.2.11
5 Which is a token of the righteous iudgement of God, that ye may bee counted worthy of the kingdome of God, for the which ye also suffer. 3.2.11. & 3.18.7
6 For it is a righteous thing with God, to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you. 3.9.6. & 3.18. 7. & 3.25.4

7. And

7 And to you which are troubled, rest with vs when the Lorde Ieſus ſhall ſhewe himſelfe from heauen with his mighty Angels. 3.18.7
9 Which ſhalbe puniſhed with euerlaſting perdition, from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, 3.25.12
10 When he ſhal come to be glorified in his ſaintes, and to bee made merueilous in all them that beleeue (becauſe our teſtimonie towarde you was beleeued) in that day. 3.25.10
11 Wherefore, wee alſo pray alwaies for you, ỹ our God may make you worthie of his calling, and fulfill all the good pleaſure of his goodnes, & the worke of faith with power. 2.5.8. & 3.2.35
2.3 Let no man deceiue you by anye meanes, for that day ſhall not come except there come a departing firſt, and that that man of ſinne bee diſcloſed, euen the ſonne of perdition. 4.9.7
4 And exalteth himſelfe againſt all that is called God, or that is woorſhipped ſo that he doeth ſit as God in the temple of God, &c. 4.2.12.& 4.7.25.& 4.7.29.& 4.9.4
9 Euen him whoſe comming is by the working of Satan with all power and ſignes, and lying wonders. 1.14.17
11 And therefore God ſhal ſend thẽ ſtrong deluſion, that they ſhoulde beleeue lyes. 1.14.17.& 1.18.2.& 2.4.5
12 That all they might bee damned, which beleeue not the trueth, but had pleaſure in vnrighteouſneſſe. 1.18.2.& 2.4.5
13 But wee ought alwaies to giue thankes to God for you, brethren beloued of the Lorde, becauſe hee hath choſẽ you from the beginning to ſaluation, through ſanctification of the ſpirit, & beleefe of the truth. 3.1.2
14 Whereunto he called you by our Goſpel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt. 2.10.3
3.6 Wee doe commaunde you brethren, in the name of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt that ye withdraw your ſelues frõ euerie brother that walketh inordinately, &c. 4.1.26
10 For euen when we were with you this we warned you of, that if there were any that woulde not worke, that he ſhould not eate. 4.16.29
12 Thoſe that be ſuch maner of perſons, we commaunde, and beſeeche for our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, that they worke with quietnes, and eate their owne breade. 3.1.26
14 And if there be any that followe not our counſel, note by a letter, & haue no company with him, that he may be aſhamed. 4.12.5
15 Yet count him not as an enemie, but admoniſh him as a brother. 4.12.10

1. TIMOTHE

1.5 THe ende of the lawe, is loue out of a pure heart, and good conſcience, and of faith vnfayned 2.5.6. & 2.8.51.& 3.2.12.& 3.19.16 & 4.10.4
9 Knowing that the lawe is not put for iuſt men, but for the lawles and diſobedient, and for thoſe that will not be ruled, for the wicked, &c. 2.7.10
13 I, I ſay which was firſt a blaſphemer, and a perſecuter, and a doer of wrong: but he had mercie of mee, for I did it ignorantly, not beleuing. 3.3.12
15 Chriſt Ieſus came into the world to ſaue ſinners, of the which I am chiefest. 2.12.5

17 To the king eternall, immortal, inuisible, the onely wise God, bee honour and glorie, &c. 1.13.11.24
19 Hauing faith & a good conscience the which being put away, some haue made shipwracke of faith. 3.2. 12
2.1 I exhort therefore, that first of all prayer, supplications, intercessions, & giuing of thankes be made for all men. 3 20.19.& 4.20.23
2 For kings & for all that are in authoritie, that we may lead a quiet & peaceable life in all holinesse & honestie. 4.20.5.27
4 Who would haue all men to bee saued, & come to the knowledge of the trueth. 3.24.15
5 One God and one Mediator betweene God & man, the man Christ Iesus, 2.12.1.& 2.17.5.& 3 20.17.20. & 4.12.25
6 Who gaue himselfe a raunsom for all men, I say Christ that testimony ordeined in due time. 2.17.5.& 3.4. 30
8 I will therefore that the men pray euerie where lifting vp pure hands without wrath or doubting. 3.20.29. & 3.25.7.& 4.19.2
3.2 A Bishop ought to be vnblameable, the husband of one wife, watchfull, sober, setled, harborous, apt to teach. 4 3.12.& 4.4.7.10.& 4.5.2.& 4. 2.23.24
9 Holding the mysterie of the faith with a pure conscience. 3.2.13.& 4. 19.36
15 Which is the church of the liuing God, the piller and grounde of all trueth 4.1.10.& 4.2.1.10.& 4.8. 21
16 And without controuersie great is the mysterie of godlinesse, God was made manifest in flesh. 1.13. 11.& 4.14.2
4.1 The spirite speaketh euidently, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, and shal giue heede to spirites of errour, and to doctrine of diuels. 4.19.4
2 Teaching lies through hypocrisie, whose conscience is marked with a hote iron. 4.9.14
3 Forbidding mariage, & commaunding to abstaine from meats which God hath created to bee receiued with thankes giuing of the faithfull and of them that haue knowen the truth. 4 9.14.& 4.12 23
4 For whatsoeuer God hath created is good, nor nothing is to be refused if it be taken with thankes geuing. 3.19.8
5 For it is sanctified by the worde of God and prayer. 3.19.8.& 3.20 28
6 Being nourished vp in the wordes of faith, & in good doctrine, which thou hast continually followed. 3. 2.13
8 But godlinesse is profitable which hath promise of this life, and of the life to come. 2.9.3.& 3.2.28. & 3.20. 44
10 Therefore we labour and are reproched, because wee hope in the liuing God, which is the sauiour of all men, but most chiefely of the faithfull. 3.8.8
13 Attend vnto reading, exhortation and doctrine vntill I come. 1.9.1
14 Neglect not the gift that is in thee which was giuen thee to prophecy with laying on of the handes of the Elders. 4 3.16.& 4.19.28
5.9 Let not a widowe bee taken into the number ỳ is younger than 60. yeares olde, that hath ben the wife of one husband. 4.3.9
12 Therfore to be condéned, because they haue forsaken their first faith. 4.13.18
17 The elders that rule well, are worthy thy double honor, but moſt chiefly thoſe that doe labour in the wordes and doctrine. 2.8.35.& 4.11.1

20 Thoſe that offend, reproue openly, that the reſt may feare. 4.12.3

21 I charge thee before God & our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, & the elect Angels, that thou keepe theſe thinges without preferring one before an other, & do nothing parcially. 1.14 9.16.& 3.23.4

22 Lay hands ſodenly vpon no man, neither be partaker of other mens ſinnes. 4.3.12.15

6.4 Hee is puffed vp and knoweth nothing, but doteth about queſtions and ſtrife of wordes, of which there riſeth enuie, ſtrife, railinges, & euill ſurmiſing. 1.13.3

10 For the roote of al euill is the loue of money, the which whileſt ſome luſted after, they haue erred frō the faith, & pearced thēſelues through with many ſorrowes. 3.2.13

16 Who onely hath immortalitie dwelling in the light that none can attaine vnto, whom neuer man ſaw, neither yet can ſee, vnto whome be honor & power euerlaſting. Amen. 1.6.3.& 1.18.3.& 3.2.1

17 Charge thoſe that be ritch in this world, ỹ they bee not high minded, & that they put not truſt in vncertaine riches, but in the liuing God, who giueth all thinges aboundantly to enioy. 3.18.6

20 O Timothe, keepe that that is committed vnto thee, & auoid prophane and vaine bablings, & oppoſitions of ſcience falſely ſo called. 1.16.8

II. TIMOTHE.

1.1 PAul the apoſtle of Ieſus Chriſte, by the will of God, according to the promiſe of life which is in Chriſt Ieſus. 2.9.3

6 I do put thee in remembrance that thou ſtirre vp the gift of God which is in thee, by the laying on of my hands. 4.3.16

9 Who hath ſaued you and hath called you with an holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his owne purpoſe & grace, &c. 2.12.5.& 3.14.5.& 3.22.3.& 4.5. 26

10 But now is made manifeſt by the appearing of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who hath abolſhed death, and hath brought life & immortalitie to light through the goſpell 2.9.2.& 3.25.1

12 For the which cauſe alſo I ſuffer theſe things, neither am I aſhamed: I know whome I haue beleeued, & I am perſwaded, hee is able to keepe that I haue committed vnto him againſt that day. 3.2.31.& 3.25.4

14 That worthy thing that was committed vnto thee, kepe through the holy Ghoſt which is in vs. 3.2.33

18 The Lord grant him that he may finde mercy with the Lorde in that day. 3.25.10

2.10 Therefore I ſuffer all things for the elect ſake, that they might alſo obtaine the ſaluation ỹ is in Chriſt Ieſu, with eternall glorie. 3.5.4

12 If we be dead with him, wee ſhall alſo liue with him: and if we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reigne with him. 3.15. 8

13 If we beleeue not, yet abideth he faithfull, he can not deny himſelfe. 1.4.2.& 3.20.36

16 Stay prophane babling about vaine thinges, for they will proceede to more vngodlines. 3.2.13

19 The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, hauing this ſeale, The Lorde knoweth who be his, &c. 3.22.6.& 4. 1.2.8

20 In a great houſe there be not onely golden and ſiluer veſſels, but alſo of wood and of earth, and ſome of them be to honor, and ſome to diſ-

Honour. 3.15.8
25 Instruct them with mekenes that are contrary mindod, if ỳ God will giue them at any time repentance that they may know the truth 1.14. 18.& 3.3.21.& 3.24 15
26 And that they which be taken in the snare of the diuell, in the which they be held captiue, may, &c. 1.14. 18.& 3 3.21
3.7 Euer learning, but they can neuer come to the knowledge of the truth 3.2.5.
8 And as Jannes and Jambres withstoode Moses, so they withstand the truth, men corrupt in minde, & reprobate touching the faith. 3.2.13
16 The whole Scripture is giuen by inspiration of God, and is profitable to teach, to reproue, and to correct, &c. 1.9.1.& 2.7.14
17 That the man of God may be perfect, being perfectly instructed to euery good worke. 1 9.1
4.1 I charge thee therefore before God, & before the lord Iesus Christ, who shall iudge the quicke and the dead at his glorious cõming in his kingdome. 2.16.17
8 It remaineth, that there is a crowne laid vp for me, which the Lord that righteous iudge shal giue vnto mee in that day. 3.18.5.& 3.25.4
16 At my first answering no man assisted me, but all forsooke me. 4.6.15

TITVS.

1.1 PAul a seruant of God, and an Apostle of Iesus Christ according to the faith of the elect of God, and knowledge of the trueth, which is according to holines. 3.2.12.& 3.22. 10
5 For this cause I left thee in Creta, that thou shouldest goe forwards to amend those thinges that remaine, and ỳ thou shouldest appoint euery where Elders, as I haue cõmaunded thee. 43.7.8.15
6 If any bee blameleſſe, let it bee the husbande of one wife, hauing children that be faithful, &c. 4 3.12.& 4. 12.23
7 A bishoppe must be blameleſſe, as the steward of God, &c. not greedy of filthy luker. 4.5.19
9 A holder of that faithfull worde which serueth to teach, that he may exhort by sound doctrine, and confute them that speake there against 4.3.6
13 This witnes is true: wherefore reproue thẽ earnestly, that they may be sound in faith. 3.2.13
15 All things is pure to the pure: but to the defiled and faithles, nothing is pure, &c. 3.19.9.& 4.13.9.& 4.17. 40
2.2 That olde men be sober, shewing themselues worthy to bee reuerenced, and temperate, sound in faith, loue, and pacience. 3.2.13
11 For the grace of God that bringeth saluation to all men hath appeared. 2.12.4.& 3.7.3.& 3.16.2.& 4. 1.26
12 Teaching vs, that wickednes being forsaken and worldly lustes, wee should liue soberly, righteously, and holily, in this present life. 3.16.2.& 3. 25.1
13 Looking for that blessed hope, and for that glorious comming of the glory of that great God & sauiour euen Christ Iesus. 3.9.5.& 3.26.2
3.1 Put them in minde that they be subiect to principalities, and obey powers, that they be prepared to euerie good worke. 4.20.23
4 But when the bountifulnes & loue of God our Sauiour towardes man appeared. 2.5.17.& 3,14.5.& 4.1. 26
5 Not by the workes of righteousnes that we had done, but according to his his mercy hee ſaued vs, by the waſhing of regeneration, &c. 2.13.14. & 2.5.17. & 3.4.25. & 4.15. 2.5. & 4.16. 20. & 4.17.22

7 That being iuſtified by his grace, we ſhold be made heires according to the hope of eternall life. 3.15.6

9 But ſtay fooliſh queſtions & genealogies, & contentions, & brawlings about the law, for they are vnprofitable and vaine. 2.11.5

HEBREWES.

1.1 GOd many times and diuerſlye ſpake to the fathers by the prophets. 2.9.1. & 2.15.1. & 4.8.7

2 In theſe later daies hee ſpake to vs by his ſonne. 1.13.7. & 4.8.7. & 4.18. 20

3 Who being the brightneſſe of his glorie, and the engraued forme of his perſon, & beareth vp all thinges by his mighty worde, hath by himſelfe purged our ſinnes, &c. 1.13.2. 12. & 1.16.4. & 2.2.10. & 2 14.3

4 Being made ſo much more excellent than Angels, by howe much he hath obtained a more excellent name. 1.14.9

6 Let all the Angels of God worſhip him. 1.13.11.23

10 And thou O Lorde, in the beginning haſt laid the foũdations of the earth: & the heauens be the workes of thy handes. 1.13.11.23.26

14 Be they not all miniſtring ſpirites ſent foorth to miniſter for their ſakes that ſhalbe heires of ſaluation 1.14.9. & 3.20.23

2.5 He hath not put in ſubiection to the Angels, the worlde to come, of which we ſpeake. 1.14.9

9 But wee ſee Ieſus crowned with glorie and honor, which was made a litle while inferiour to Angels, by reaſon of ſuffering death, that by Gods grace he might taſt of death for all men. 1.13.26. & 2.16.7

11 For he that ſanctifieth, and thoſe that are ſanctified, are all of one: wherefore he is not aſhamed to cal them brethren. 2.13.2

14 That hee might deſtroy through death, him that had the empire and power of death, that is the deuill, &c. 1.14.18. and 2.13.1.2. and 3.11. 12

15 And ỹ he might deliuer all them, which for feare of death were all their life time ſubiect to bondage. 2. 16.7

16 For in no wiſe hee tooke the Angels, but he tooke the ſeede of Abraham. 1.14.9. & 2.13.1.2

17 In all thinges it became him to be made like to his brethren, that he might be mercifull, and a faithfull high prieſt in thinges concerning God. 2.13.1. & 2.16.2.19

3.14 We be made partakers of Chriſt, if we keepe ſure vnto the ende that beginning wherewith wee are vpholden. 3.2.16

4.9 There remaineth therefore a reſt to the people of God. 2.8.29

14 Hauing therefore a great highe prieſt, that hath entred into heauen, euen Ieſus the ſonne of God, let vs holde this profeſſion. 2.7.2. & 4.14. 21

15 We haue not a high prieſt that can not bee touched with the infirmitie of our fleſhe, but was in all thinges tempted in like ſorte, yet without ſin. 2.12.1.7. & 2.13.1. & 2.16.12. & 4. 17.24

16 Let vs approch therefore with boldnes vnto the throne of grace, that we may receiue mercy, & finde grace to helpe at time of neede. 3. 20.12.17

5.1 Euerie high prieſt is taken from amongſt men, & is ordained for mẽ in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts & ſacrifice for sinnes. 2.12.4

4 Neither doth any man take this honor to himselfe, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. 4.3.10.& 4.15.22.& 4.18.9.14

5 And so Christ tooke not to himselfe this honor, to be made high priest, &c. 4.14.21.& 4.18.2.

6 Thou art a priest for euer, after the order of Melchisedec. 4.19.28

7 Which in the daies of his flesh did offer vp prayers and supplications with strong criyng and teares vnto him, that was able to saue him from death, and was also heard e in that which he feared. 2.16.11

8 Although he were the sonne, notwithstanding he learned obedience by those things that he suffered 3.8.1

10 And called of God an high priest, after ỹ order of Melchisedec. 4.18.2

6.4 For it cannot be that those which were once lightened, and haue tasted of the heauenly giftes, & were made partakers of the holy Ghost. 3.2.11.& 3.3.21.23

6 If they fall, that they should be renued againe by repentance, &c. 3.3.21

10 For God is not vniust, that hee shoulde forget your workes and labour of loue, which yee shewed towards his name, &c. 3.18.7

13 For when God made the promise to Abrahã, when as he could sweare by none greater, he swore by himselfe. 2.8.25

16 For men verily sweare by him that is greater than themselues, and an oth for confirmation is an ende of strife amongest them, 2.8.27

7.3 Without father, without mother, without kinred, and hauing neither beginning of his daies, nor ende of his life, but is likened to the sonne of God, and continueth a priest for euer. 4.19.28

7 But without all controuersie, that which is the least is blessed of him that is greater. 4.18.2

11 If there had ben a full perfection by the Leuiticall priesthoode, &c. 2.11.4

12 The priesthoode therefore being chaunged, it must needes bee, that there be a change of the lawe. 3.4.4. & 4.6.2

17 Thou art a priest for euer after the order of Melchisedec. 4.18.2

19 The lawe sanctified nothing, but the bringing in of a better hope did it by the which wee come nere to God. 2.7.17.& 2.11.4

21 But this, he is made with an othe by him that saide vnto him, The Lord hath sworne and will not repent, thou art a priest for euer, &c. 4.18.2

22 Iesus is made so much greater surety of a better testament. 4.18.2

24 And he, because he abideth for euer, hath an euerlasting priesthood. 2.15.6

25 Whereby he is able to saue those which come vnto god by him. 2.16.16

8.1 But this is the sum of that which we haue spoken: that wee haue such an high priest, that sitteth on the right hand of the throne of maiesty in heauen. 2.16.15

5 See, quoth he ỹ thou make all things according to the paterne that was shewed thee in the mountaine. 2.7.1

6 But now our high priest hath obtained a more excellent office, in as much as he is the mediator of a better Testament, &c. 2.16.12

9.1 The first Testament had also ordinaunces of religion, and a worldly sanctuarie. 4.14.21

7 But into the seconde went the high priest alone once euerie yere, not without blood which he offered for himselfe and for the people. 2.7.17. and

.& 2.15.6
8 Whereby the holy Ghoſt this ſignified, that the waye into the holieſt of all, was not yet opened, whileſt as yet the firſt tabernacle was ſtanding. 2.7.17.& 2.15.6
9 Wherein were offred giftes and ſacrifices that could not make holye, concerning the conſcience of him that did ſeruice. 2.7.17.& 2.11.4 and 4.14.25
11 But Chriſt being come a hie prieſt of good thinges to come, &c. 2.16. 16.& 4.14.21.& 4.18.2
12 Neither by the bloud of goates & calues, but by his owne bloud entred he once into the holy place. 2. 17.4.& 4 18.3
13 For if the bloud of bulles & goats, and the aſhes of an heifer ſprinkling them that are vncleane, ſanctifieth as touching the purification of the fleſh: 2.17 4
14 How much more ſhall the bloud of Chriſt, which through the eternall ſpirite offered himſelfe without ſpot to God, &c. 2.16.6.& 3.16.2. and 4.14 11
15 And for this cauſe hee is the mediator of a newe Teſtament, that through death, &c. 2.7.17.& 4.17.4
16 For where a teſtament is, there muſt be the death of him that made the teſtament. 4.18.5
22 And all things almoſt according to the lawe, was purified by bloude, & without sheading of bloud there was no remiſſion. 2.15.6.& 2.17 4
26 But nowe once in the ende of the worlde hath hee appeared to put away ſinne by the ſacrifice of himſelfe. 4.18.3
27 And as it is ordained for men that they ſhall once die, and after that commeth the iudgement. 2. 16.17.& 3.25.8
28 So Chriſt was once offered to take away the ſinnes of many, and vnto thē that looke for him, ſhall he appeare the ſeconde time without ſin vnto ſaluation. 3 25.2
10.1 For the lawe hauing the ſhadowe of good things to come, & not the verie image of the thinges, can neuer with thoſe ſacrifices which they offer yearely, ſanctifie the commers thereto. 2 7.16.17.& 2.11.4.& 4.14. 23
2 For would they not then haue ceaſſed to haue ben offred becauſe that the offerers once purged, ſhoulde haue had no more conſcience of ſinne. 3.19 15.& 4 10.3.& 4.14.25
4 For the bloud of bulles and goates cannot take away ſinne. 4.14.25
7 Then I ſaide, lo, I come (in the beginning of the booke it is written of mee) that I ſhoulde doe, O God, thy will, 2.16 5
8 Aboue, when he ſaid, ſacrifice, and offerings, & burnt offerings, & ſinne offeringes, thou wouldeſt not haue, neither haſt thou pleaſure therein which are offred by the lawe, &c. 2.16.5
10 By the which will wee are ſanctified, euen by the offering of the bodie of Chriſt once made. 3.6.3.& 4. 18.3
14 For with once offering hee hath conſecrated for euer, thoſe that are ſanctified. 3.5.2.& 4.18.3
19 Wherefore brethren, ſeeing wee haue libertie to enter the holie place through the bloud of Ieſus. 3. 20.20
20 By the newe & liuing way which hee hath prepared for vs through the vaile, that is, his fleſh. 3.20. 18
26 If we ſinne willingly after that we haue receiued the knowledge of the trueth, there remayneth no more ſacrifice for ſinne. 3.3. 21.23.& 4.18.3

27 But a feareful looking for of iudgement, and violent fire which shall deuoure the aduersaries. 3.25.12

29 Of how much more sorer punishment thinke ye, shall he be worthy, which treadeth vnder foote the son of God, and counteth the bloude of the testament as an vnholy thing, wherewith he was sanctified, and doth despise the spirit of grace. 3.3.21

36 Ye haue neede of patience, that after ye haue done the will of God, ye might receiue the promises. 3.2.37

11.1 Nowe faith is the grounde of thinges that are hoped for, and the euidence of things y are not seene. 3.2.41.& 3.25 1

3 By faith we vnderstande, that the worlde was made by the worde of God, in such sorte, that the thinges that we see, were not made of things that did appeare. 1.5.13.& 1.6.1.& 1.16.1

6 Without faith it is vnpossible to please him, for he that commeth to God must beleeue that God is, and that he doth reward thé that seeke him. 3.11.15.& 3.14.4. and 3.20.40

7 By faith we being warned of God of the things which were as yet not seene, &c. 3.2.30

9 By faith he abode in the land of promise as a stranger, &c. 2.10.13

17 By faith Abraham offered vp Isaac when he was tried, and he that had receaued the promises, offered his onely begotten sonne. 3.19.6

21 He worshipped God leaning vpon his staffe. 1.11.15

12.3 Consider him therfore that indured such speaking against of sinners least ye should be wearied and faint in your mindes. 3.3.15

5 And you haue forgotten the exhortation, which speaketh vnto you as vnto chi ldré: My sonne, despise not the chastening of the Lord, neither faint in thy minde when thou art reproued of him. 3.4.32

8 For if yon be without correction, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastardes and not sonnes. 3.8.6

9 Moreouer, we haue had the fathers of our bodies, which corrected vs, and we gaue them reuerence, shold we not much rather be in subiectiō vnto the father of spirites, that wee might liue? 1.15.2

17 For ye knowe how that afterward when he would haue inherited the blessing, he was reiected, for he foūd no place to repente, although hee sought the blessing with teares. 3.3.24

18 For ye came not to the mount that might be touched, nor vnto burning fire, nor to blackneſſe, & darkneſſe, &c. 2.11.9

22 But yee came to the mount Sion, and to the Citie of the liuing God, the celestial Ierusalem, and to the company of innumerable Angels. 1.14.9

23 To the congregation of the firste borne which are written in heauen, and to God the iudge of all. 3.25.6

13.4 Mariage is honorable amongest all men, and the bed vndefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will iudge. 4.9.14.& 4.12.25.& 4.13.3

8 Iesus Christ the same yesterday, & to day, and also for euer. 2.10.4

15 By him therefore let vs daily offer vp to God the sacrifice of prayse, that is, the fruite of the lipes, which confesse his name. 3.20.28.& 4.18.16.17

16 To doe good, and to distribute forgee get not: for with ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed. 3.4 36.& 3.7.5.& 3.15.4. & 4.18.17

17 Obey your guides & be ruled by them, for they watch for the health of your ſoules, as ſuch ỳ ſhall giue account therefore. 1.15.2

IAMES

1.2 MY brethren, count it for an exceeding ioye, ſo often as you fall into diuers temptations. 3.20. 46

12 Bleſſed is the man that ſuffereth temptation, for when hee ſhall bee tried, hee ſhall receiue the crowne of life. 3.17.10

13 Let no man when hee is tempted ſay, that he is tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with euils. neither doth he tempt any man. 3. 20.46

14 But eche one is tempted when he is drawen awaye by his owne concupiſcence, and is entiſed. 3.20. 46

15 Then when luſt hath conceiued, it bringeth foorth ſinne, and ſinne when it is finiſhed, bringeth foorth death. 3.3.13

17 Euery good gift and euerie perfect gift commeth from aboue from the father of lightes, with whome there is no variableneſſe, neither ſhadow by turning. 1.13.8.& 2.2.21.& 4. 14.10

21 Wherefore lay aparte all maliciouſneſſe and ſuperfluitie of maliciouſneſſe, and receiue with meekeneſſe the worde that is ingrafted in you, which is able to ſaue your ſoules. 4.17.25

2.5 Hath not God choſen the poore of this worlde, that they ſhould bee rich in faith, & heires of the kingdome which he promiſed to thoſe of whome he is beloued. 3.23.10

10 For whoſoeuer ſhall keepe the whole lawe, and yet faileth in one point, he is guiltie of all. 3.14.10.& 3.18.10

14 What auaileth it him my brethrē, though a man ſaye hee hath faith, when he hath no workes, can the faith ſaue him? 3.2.9.12

19 Thou beleeueſt there is one God, thou doeſt wel, & the diuels beliue and tremble. 3.2.10

21 Was not Abraham our father iuſtified thorowe workes, when hee offered vp Iſaac his ſonne vpon the altar? 3.17.11

4.3 You aske & you receiue not, becauſe you aske amiſſe ỳ yee might conſume it on your luſts. 3.20.7

6 But the Scripture offereth more grace, and therefore ſaith, God reſiſteth the proude, & giueth grace to the humble. 2.2.10.& 3.12.5

8 Drawe nigh to God, and hee will draw ny to you. cleanſe your handes ye ſinners, and purge your heartes ye wauering minded. 3.3.16

11 He that ſpeaketh euill of his brother, ſpeaketh againſt the lawe, and cōdemneth it, but if thou cōdemne the lawe, &c. 4.10.7

12 There is one lawe giuer that is able to ſaue and to deſtroy. 4.10.7

14 Who can not tell what ſhalbe the next day, for what is your life? it is euen a vapor, &c. 3.20.28

15 For that ye ought to ſay, if the lord will, & if we liue, we will doe this or that. 3.20.28

5.12 Before al thinges, my brethren, ſweare not, neyther by heauen, neither by earth, neither any other oth, but let your yea be yea, & your nay nay, &c. 2.8.26

13 Is any man afflicted amongſt you? let him pray: is anie man mery? let him ſing Pſalmes. 3.20.7

14 Is any sicke amongest you? let him send for the Elders of the Church, and let them pray for him, &c. 4.19 18,21

15 And the praier for faith shall saue the sicke, & the Lord shall raise him vp, and if he haue cõmitted sinne, it shalbe forgiuen him. 3.20.11

16 Acknowledge your faultes one to another, & pray one for an other, ỹ ye may be healed: for the prayer of a righteous man auaileth much if it be feruent. 3.4 6,12.& 3.20.27

17 Elias was a man subiect to those thinges that we be, and he prayed earnestly that it might not raine, & it rained not on the earth for the space of three yeare and sixe monethes. 3.20.26

I. PETER.

1.2 TO the elect according to the foreknowledge of God the father vnto sanctification of ỹ spirit through obedience & sprinkling of the blood of Iesus Christ, grace and peace be multiplied vnto you. 3.1.1. & 3.14.6.& 3.22.6.& 4.15.2

3 Blessed be God the father of our Lord Iesu Christ, who of his greate mercy hath begot vs againe into a liuely hope, by the resurrection of Christ Iesu from death. 2.16.13

5 Who are kept by the power of God through faith to saluation, which is prepared to be declared in the last time 3.2.42. & 3.18.3

7 That the triall of your faith, being much more faithfuller thẽ the triall of golde which perisheth, although it be tried by fire. 3.8.4

9 Receiuing the ende of your faith, euen the saluation of your soules. 1. 15.2.& 3.18.3.& 3.25.1

11 Searching when or what time the spirite which testified before of Christ which was in them, shoulde declare the suffering that shoulde come vnto Christ, &c. 1.13.8. & 2. 9.1

12 Vnto whom it was reueiled, that they should not minister vnto them selues, but vnto vs the things which are now shewed vnto you by them. 2.9.1.& 2.11.6

15 But as hee which hath called you is holy, so be you holy in all maner of conuersation. 3.6.3

16 Be you holy, for I am holy. 3.6.2

18 Knowing that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as siluer and golde from your vaine conuersatiõ, receiued by the traditions of the fathers. 2.17.5.

19 But with the precious bloude of Christ, as of a lambe vndefiled and without spot. 2.17.5 & 3.6.3

20 Which was ordained before the foundation of the worlde, but was declared in the last times for your sakes. 3.22.6.& 4.18.20

21 Which by his meanes doe beleeue in God that raised him vp from the dead and gaue him glory, that your faith and hope might bee in God. 2. 16.13.& 3.2.1,43

22 Seeing your soules are purified by obeying the trueth through the spirit with brotherly loue without faining. 1.15.2.& 2.5.11

23 Being borne againe, not of mortall seede, but of immortall, by the word of the liuing God, who liueth and endureth for euer. 2,10.7.& 4.1.6.& 4.16.18,31

2.5 And ye as liuely stones, bee made a spirituall house, &c. 4.6.5.& 4.18.16

9 But ye are a chosen generation, a kingly priesthoode, a holy nation, a people that God hath chalenged to himselfe, that you shoulde shewe forth ỹ vertues of him which hath called you from darkenes into his wonderfull light. 2.7.1.& 3.13.2.& 4 18.17.& 4.19.25

11 Be-

11 Beholde, I pray you as pilgrimes and ſtrangers, that you abſtaine frō the luſtes of the fleſh, which ſtriue againſt the ſoule. 1.15.2

13 Be you ſubiect vnto euerie ordinance of man for the Lordes ſake, whether it be to the King, as to the ſuperiour. 4.20.23

17 Honor al men, loue brotherlines, feare God, honor the king. 4.20.7

21 Chriſt hath ſuffred for vs, leauing vs an example that wee ſhoulde follow his ſteps. 3.16.2

24 Who bore our ſinnes vppon his body on the Croſſe, that wee being dead to ſin, might liue to righteouſnes: by whoſe ſtripes ye are healed. 2.16.6.& 2.17.4. & 3.4.26.& 3.4.27.& 3.4.30.& 4.14.21

25 You were as ſtraied ſheepe, but now ye be turned to your ſhepherd and biſhop of your ſoules. 1.15.2.& 3.25.6

3.7 Likewiſe ye husbandes, vſe your ſelues, as it becommeth men of knowledge, giuing honor to ỹ womā as to the weaker veſſel, &c. 4.20.29

18 For Chriſt ſuffered once for ſins, the iuſt for the vniuſt, ỹ hee might bring vs to God, and was put to death concerning the fleſhe, but liued according to the ſpirit. 2.13.2

19 By the which he alſo went, and preached to the ſpirits that were in priſon. 2.16.9

21 To the which alſo the figure that now ſaueth vs, euen baptiſm agreeeth (not the putting away of the filth of the fleſh, but in that a good conſcience maketh requeſt to god) by the reſurrection of Ieſus Chriſt. 3.19.15.& 4.10.3.& 4.14.4.& 4.14.24. & 4.15.2.& 4.16.21

4.3 It is enough for vs ỹ in the forepart of our life, wee haue liued according to the luſt of the Gentiles, when we walked in, &c. 3.15.8.& 3. 24.11

8 Before all things haue feruent loue amongſt you, for loue couereth the multitude of ſinne. 3.4.31.& 3.4.36

10 Let euerie man as he hath receaued the gift, miniſter the ſame one to an other, as good diſpoſers of the manifold graces of God. 3.7.5

11 If any man ſpeake, let him ſpeake as the words of God. 3.8.8.& 4.8.9

17 For time is come, that iudgement muſt beginne at the houſe of God, if ſo be it begin firſt with vs, what ſhall be the end? &c. 3.4.34

5.1 The elders which bee amongeſt you, I beſeech alſo that am an elder &c. 4.6.7

2 Feede the flocke of God which dependeth vpon you. 4.6.3.& 4.10.17

3 Not as though ye were lords ouer Gods heritage. 4.4.9.& 4.10.7

5 God reſiſteth the proude, and giueth grace vnto the humble. 3.12.5

6 Humble your ſelues vnder the mieghtie hand of God, that hee may exalt you in due time. 3.2.40

7 Hauing all your care caſt vpon him, he careth for you. 1.17.6

8 Be ye ſober, and watch, for your aduerſarie the Deuill, as a roaring Lion walking about, ſeeketh whom he may deuoure. 1.4.18.& 1.14.13.& 3.20.46

10 And the God of all grace, which hath called vs vnto his eternal glorie in Chriſt Ieſus, after ye haue ſuffered a litle, make ye perfect, &c. 3. 20.46

II. PETER.

1.4 WHereby moſt great and pretious promiſes bee giuen vs, that by them wee ſhoulde be partakers of the godly nature, &c. 3.11.10.& 3.25.10.

5 Therefore giue euen all diligence thereunto: thereunto ioyne moreouer vertue to your faith, and with vertue,

11 vertue, knowledge. 2.5.11
10 Wherefore brethren, giue rather diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if you doe these thinges, you shall neuer fall. 3.13.8
14 Seeing I knowe the time is at hande, that I must lay downe this my tabernacle, as the Lord Iesus declared vnto me. 3.25.6
19 We haue also a most sure word of the prophetes, to the which you do well that you take heede, as vnto a light that shineth in a darke place vntill the day dawne, &c 1.9.2
21 For the prophecie came not in olde time by the wil of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moued by the holy Ghost. 1.13.7.& 1.13.18
2.1 There were false prophets amongst the people, as amongest you there shalbe false teachers, &c. 4.9.4
4 If God spared not the Angels that sinned, but cast them downe into hell, and deliuered them into the chaines of darkenes, &c. 1.14.16.& 1.14.19
9 The Lorde knoweth howe to deliuer the godly out of temptation. 3. 20.46
19 Of whome soeuer a man is ouercome, euē of the same he is brough into bondage. 2.2.8
3.4 Where is the promise of his comming? for since the fathers dyed, all things continue alike from the beginning, &c. 3.1.42
8 Dearely beloued, be not ignorant of this one thing, ỹ one day is with the Lorde as a thousande yeares, & a thousand yeres as one day. 3.2.42
9 And would haue no man to perish, but would haue all men to come to repentance. 3.24.15

I. IOHN.

1.1 THat which was from the beginning, that wee haue hearde, that wee haue seene with our eies, that we haue beholde, and that our hands haue handled of the word of life. 2.14.2.& 2.14.7.& 4.17.8
7 That if we walke in the light as he is in the light, we haue mutuall felowship & the bloud of his sonne Iesu Christ purgeth vs from all sinne. 2.17.4.& 3.5.2.& 4.14.21
9 If we confesse our sinnes, he is faithfull and iust, so that he will forgiue vs our sinnes, &c. 3.4.9.& 3.20.9
10 If we say we haue no sin, we make him a lier, &c. 3.20.45
2.1 If any man haue sinne, we haue an aduocat with the father Iesus christ the righteous. 3.4.26.& 3.20.17
2 He is the propitiation for our sins and not for ours onely, but for the sinnes of the whole worlde. 2.17.2. & 3.4.26.& 3.20.20
12 I write vnto you litle children, because your sinnes bee forgiuen you for his name sake. 2.17.5.& 3.4.26
18 Litle children, is is the last time: & as you haue heard, Antichrist shall come. 4.18.20
19 They went out from vs, but they were not of vs, for if they had ben of vs, they would haue continued with vs, &c. 3.3.23.& 3.24.6.7
20 But yee haue an ointment from him that is holy, and you knowe all thinges. 3.1.3
23 Whosoeuer denieth the sonne, the same hath not the father. 2.6.4
27 But the ointment that you haue receiued of him, abideth in you, neither neede you that any man teach you, but as the same ointment teacheth you. &c. 3.1.3
3.1 Beholde, what loue the father hath shewed on vs, that wee shoulde be called the sons of God, for this cause the worlde knoweth you not because it knoweth not him. 3.6.3. & 3.20.36

2 Dearely beloued, we are nowe the ſonnes of God, but yet it doeth not appeare what wee ſhall be: and wee know, that when he ſhall appeare, we ſhal be like him: for we ſhall ſee him as he is,&c. 2.23.& 3.2.14.& 3. 11.10.& 3.25.10.& 4.18.20

3 And euerie man ỳ hath this hope in him,purgeth himſelfe euen as he is pure. 3.16.2

8 He that committeth ſinne is of the diuell,for the diuell ſinneth form ỳ beginning, but the ſon of God, &c. 1.14.15.18.19.& 3.15.8

9 Whoſoeuer is borne of God ſinneth not,for his ſeede remaineth in him neither can he ſinne,becauſe hee is borne of God. 2.3.10.& 2.5.11

10 In this are the children of God knowen,and the children of the diuell,&c. 1.14.19.& 3.16.2

15 Who ſo hateth his brother, is a mankiller, and yee knowe that no mankiller hath eternall life abiding in him. 2.8.39

16 Hereby haue we perceiued loue, that he laide downe his life for vs, therfore we ought alſo to lay down our liues for the brethren. 2.14.2

20 For if our harts condemne vs, god is mightier than our hart, & knoweth all thinges. 3.4.18

22 And whatſoeuer we aske, we receiue of him, becauſe we keepe his commaundements,&c. 3.20.7.10

24 He that keepeth his commandementes,dwelleth in him,and hee in him:and by this we knowe,that hee dwelleth in vs, euen by the ſpirite ỳ he hath giuen vs. 3.1.4.& 3.2.39

4.1 Dearely beloued, beleeue not euery ſpirit, but prooue the ſpirites whether they be of God,&c. 4.9.12

3 What ſpirit ſoeuer confeſſeth not that chriſt Ieſus is come in the fleſh is not of God. 4.17.32

10 Herein is loue, not that we loued God,but that he loued vs,&c. 2.17. 2.& 3 14.6

11 Dearly beloued, if God ſo loued vs we ought to loue one an other.3.16. 2

13 By this wee knowe that we dwell in him and he in vs,becauſe he hath giuen vs of his ſpirite. 3.1.4.& 3.24.2

18 There is no feare in loue,but perfect loue caſteth out feare,for feare hath painfulnes, & he that feareth, &c. 3.2.27

19 We loue him, becauſe hee loued vs firſt. 2.16.3

5.4 Whatſoeuer is borne of God, ouercommeth the worlde, and this is the victorie ỳ ouercommeth the world,euen your faith.1.18 3.& 2.5. 11.& 3.2.21

6 This is that Chriſt Ieſus which came by water and blood,&c. 4.14. 22

7 There be three which beare witnes in heauen,the father,the word, and the holy ghoſt, and thoſe three be one. 3.1.1

8 And there be three that beare witnes in earth,the ſpirit,the water, & the blood: and theſe three agree in one. 3.1.1

12 He which hath the ſon, hath life, but hee that hath not the ſonne of God hath not life in him. 3.14.4.& 3.15.6

14 And this is the aſſurance that we haue in him, that if wee aske anye thing according to his will, he heareth vs.&c. 3.20.5

15 And if we know that he heareth vs,whatſoeuer wee aske,wee knowe that we haue the petition that wee haue deſired of him. 3.20.52

18 He that is borne of God,keepeth himſelfe. 2.5.11

19 We knowe we be of God.and the whole worlde lieth in wickedneſſe. 3.2.14

20 The same is verie God and life eternall. 1.13.11.26
21 Babes, keepe your selues from Idols, Amen. 1.11.13

II. IOHN.

1.7 MAny deceiuers are entred into the world, which cõfesse not that Iesus christ is come in the flesh 4.17.3

The generall Epistle of Jude.

1.6 THe Angels also which kept not their first estate but left their owne habitation, hee hath reserued in euerlasting chaines vnder darkenes, vnto the iudgemẽt of the great day, &c. 1.14.16.& 1.14.19.& 3.25.6
9 Yet Michael the Archangel, when he stroue against the deuil, and disputed about the body of Moses, durst not blame him with cursed speaking, but said, the Lord rebuke thee. 1.14.8.& 1.14.19

The Reuelation of S. John.

1.5 TO him that loued vs, and washed vs from our sinnes by his blood. 4.14.21
6 And made vs kings and priestes to God his father. 2.15.6.& 4.18.17
5.13 And al the Creatures that are in heauen, & on the earth, and vnder the earth, and in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, &c. 3.5.8
7.14 These be they that came out of great affliction, and haue washed their long robes, and haue made them white in the bloode of the Lambe. 3.5.2
13.5 And a mouth was giuen him that spake great thinges & blasphemies. 4.7.25
14.13 Blessed are the dead hereafter, those I say, that die for the Lordes sake. Euen so saieth the spirite: for they rest from their labours. 3.5.10
18.6 Reward her as she hath rewarded you, & double vnto her double according vnto her workes. 3.9.6
19.10 And I fell before his feete, ỳ I might worship him: but hee sayde vnto me, see thou doe it not, I am thy fellow seruant & one of thy brethren which hath the testimonie of Iesus: worshippe God. 1.12.3.& 1.14.10
20.4 And I sawe seates: and they sat vpon thẽ, & iudgement was giuen vnto them, and I sawe the soules of them that were beheaded for the witnesse of Iesus, & for the worde of God, and which did not worshippe the beast neither his image, neither had taken his marke vpõ their foreheades, or on their handes, & they liued, and raigned with Christ a thousand yeares. 3.25.5
21.27 And there shall enter into it no vnclean thing, neither whatsoeuer worketh abomination or lies: but they that are written in the Lambs booke of life. 4.36.17
22.8 But I, when I had heard & seene these thinges, I fell downe to worship before the feate of the Angell which shewed me these thinges. 1. 12.3.& 1.14.10
9 But he saide vnto mee, see thou do it not, for I am thy fellow seruaunt, and one of thy brethren the Prophets, &c. 1.14.10
18 If any man shall adde vnto these thinges, god shal adde vnto him the plagues that are written in this booke. 4.9.2
19 And if any man shall diminish of the words of the booke of this prophecie, God shal take away his part out of the booke of life, &c. 4.9.2
